Berenson's 'Lists', for many years past a standard work of reference indispensable to all those seriously interested in Italian Renaissance Painting, have now been revised and brought up to date. Attributions have been checked and in some cases changed, newly discovered pictures have been added, changes in ownership have been noted, and a number of less well known painters have been included. The present edition is about a third longer than the Lists of 1932 and 1936, and is the first to contain a wealth of illustrations, arranged in chronological and systematic order, thus giving the volumes an encyclopaedic character.

PREFACE

The purpose of this revised and illustrated edition of Adolfo Venturi's Florentine Lives is the same as that of the Venetian Lives published by 1936. Berenson himself set out this purpose in his own preface to the latter. Although published after his death (in 1950) the present work is based on Berenson's own changes, additions and other revisions, made in his copy of the 1936 edition, and on THIS VOLUME photographs taken at Venturi's which many are now lost.

HAS BEEN PRODUCED

The work was done between September 1950 and January 1951. The project correlating Berenson's lives with his photographs faced difficulties such as location.

Mazarini, Tommaso di Sansepolcro, Francesco di Giorgio Martini, and others, and the possibility of adding three paintings unknown up to that time to the Florentine School. These included them: the Angelico fresco of the Virgin in the Annunciation (now in the Museo del Prado), the Madonna with Child and the Virgin del Biando fragments of the Lazzaretti Crucifixion (now in the Museo del Prado).

As in the Venetian School, there are still a few gaps in the list of documented works by artists not collected, and the author has tried to answer some of the questions of attribution raised by the scholars of the school: Alyaro Portoghesi, Amelio da Pisa, the monk of the Virgin, the Master of Bonai, Lippo de' Flaviani, Mariano di Contino, the Master of the Virgin Puccio di Simone, Zanobi Strozzi.

PREFACE

THE purpose of this revised and illustrated edition of Bernard Berenson's Florentine Lists is the same as that of the Venetian Lists published in 1957. Berenson himself set out this purpose in his own preface to that edition. Although published after his death (in 1959) the present text is based on Berenson's own changes, additions and corrections, noted in his copy of the 1936 edition, and on the annotated photographic files at I Tatti, in which many additional observations and changes were made.

The work of preparing the text for publication was done between September 1959 and January 1961 by Michael Rinchart. This involved correlating B.B.'s notes, and verifying and amplifying factual information such as locations, descriptions of subject matter, etc. Luisa Vertova Nicolson has selected the illustrations and has made a number of valuable suggestions based on her intimate knowledge of the library and the photographic material. My special thanks are due to them for the care and devotion with which they fulfilled their tasks. My own contribution has consisted in taking responsibility for various decisions where B.B. had left ambiguous or conflicting instructions, and particularly for the addition of some new lists, based partly on B.B.'s annotations, partly on my personal recollections of opinions expressed by him and partly on recent publications that B.B. would certainly have taken into account during a final revision.

These new lists are Cenni di Francesco, Cristiani, Benedetto Ghirlandajo, Master of the Arte della Lana Coronation, Master of the Barberini Panels, Master of the Lathrop tondo, Master of the Rinuccini Chapel, Michelangelo's early follower, Michele di Ridolfo, Paolo Schiavo, Parri Spinelli, Pietro di Miniato, Tommaso di Stefano Lunetti. I also take the responsibility of adding three paintings unknown to B.B., as I felt sure that he would have included them: the Angelico fresco at San Domenico di Fiesole (discovered by Ugo Procacci), the homeless early Bachiacca tondo, and the Giovanni del Biondo fragments of the Liverpool Coronation (found by Zeri).

As in the Venetian School, the reader will find a few groups of signed and documented works by artists not otherwise included, where they amplify some of the questions of attribution raised by the lists. These artists are: Alvaro Portoghese, Amedeo da Pistoia, the two Antonio da Firenze, Bocchi, Bonsi, Lippo di Benivieni, Mariotto di Cristofano, Pacino di Bonaguida, Puccio di Simone, Zanobi Strozzi.

In the earlier editions of the lists B.B. could not include homeless pictures, as their identity would have remained uncertain without illustrations; for this reason he published some of the many he knew, with reproductions, in the series of articles 'Quadri senza Casa' in Dedalo 1932. In the present edition most of the homeless pictures are reproduced but in a very few cases a reference to 'Dedalo' or other publications has seemed sufficient.

When in the spring of 1958 Bernard Berenson fell seriously ill he had already gone over most of these Florentine lists adding his annotations to them. At first he fully expected to recover his health and his capacity to work for a limited number of hours each day. Gradually it became clear to us that he was losing ground and that any sustained work was no longer possible. Only now and then and especially in the mornings he enjoyed looking at new books and illustrated magazines or at photos and could be asked for his opinion on some special problem.

In the summer of 1959, a few months before his death, B.B. insisted on devoting 15 to 20 minutes every day to looking at photos of the great Quattrocento Florentines. He was no longer able to speak very clearly, but his expression of contentment while gazing at these masterpieces, especially at the Botticellis, is to me unforgettable. May those who will consult his book feel some of the joy he got to the very end of his life from his work on the Florentine painters of the Renaissance.

In B.B.'s name I express my thanks to the Samuel H. Kress Foundation for its continued generous support of this publication, to the President and Fellows of Harvard University for allowing us to use the Berenson Library and its photographic archives at I Tatti, and to the Phaidon Press for making every effort to produce and publish the work to their high standard. But above all for honouring the agreement which Bela Horovitz had made with B.B. more than ten years ago about this new and lavishly illustrated edition of the lists. I hope it will be completed, but even if that is not possible, the four volumes already published will help to keep the memory of these two men alive.

Florence, 1963.

NICKY MARIANO

PREFACE TO THE EDITION OF 1932

THE Lists comprising this book differ from those originally appended to the four volumes of my Renaissance Painters, not only by bringing all the schools together under one alphabetical order, not only by including many more artists and a great many more pictures than I knew thirty-five years ago, but in being inspired by a different principle.

The Lists in previous editions, although revised from time to time, were all based on the conviction that the hand of the artist never faltered, even if his head did occasionally nod. The execution, on this theory, tended to weigh more than the creative mental effort. The question of questions was whether a painting was autograph. If it was not, it did not count, unless indeed it betrayed the hand of another painter, in which case it was included in that painter's work. An artistic personality thus shrank to a composite of those pictures only where hand and mind were one.

Would that hand and mind were always one! that the artist himself never worked with the makeshift of an inferior self, or with the help of apprentices!

This former exclusiveness was perhaps a necessary and salutary discipline. It enabled one to reach the heart of an artistic personality before starting to put out to its limits; it made one so familiar with his ways that one became able to recognize him even in his uninspired moments.

But now, fortified with this experience of the artist at his highest, one may well afford to relax from the earlier severity, and include every work that shows the distinct trace of his creative purpose, whether largely or only in small part by his own hand, whether done in his studio on his indications, or whether mere copies of lost works.

Indeed, it now seems that to confine interest to what looks like perfect achievement is dandiacial aestheticism. One who dedicates his whole life to art, and not merely his week-ends, holidays, and leisure moments, cannot remain satisfied with such an adolescent attitude. Mature interest leads one at least as much to the mind of the artist as to his hand. An artistic personality includes not only all that the artist did in his best moments, but all that his mind conceived in the terms of his art, in whatever shape it has been recorded, no matter how inadequate, nor how unsatisfactory.

It might indeed seem that long experience has brought me back to the old days when everything that looked like Leonardo or Raphael produced the appropriate sentiment in the soul of the beholder. 'What then,' it may be asked, 'has been the use of all this business about renaming pictures, distinguishing originals from copies, and masters from pupils, if now we are invited to get once more our Raphael or Leonardo thrill from inferior works? What has become of the touchstone of Quality, if we admit that the hand of a great artist can falter, and if we insist on tracing his genius through the works of his assistants and followers, and value even the humble achievements of copyists whose hands never vibrated with the master's touch? We are once again in the old uncharted regions where no compass pointing to quality any longer guides us, and where the only clue is the familiar one of the conception, the idea, the suggestion, that led us into so many bogs. The naive sightseer and the connoisseur join hands!

True! But though they acclaim together 'the Master', it is with a difference. The plain sightseer can undoubtedly be deeply stirred by a work of art, but it is nearly always the literary, the romantic, the associative ideas that move him. The connoisseur who has learnt to distinguish between the poetry suggested by the picture and its specific qualities as painting, is affected in another way.

In my writings on Renaissance Painters I attempted to distinguish between the Illustrative and the Decorative elements in pictures, and it may be that I over-emphasized the latter, for I have been amused and sometimes distressed to find many subsequent writers dwelling only on the decorative elements in art, which, vitalizing as they are, do their noblest service only when they convey great human ideals.

The instructed lover of art, who has learnt to distinguish the individual touch of the artist he is studying, can perceive the creative intention even in his less happy achievements, but he does not stop at the mere thought, the suggestions given by the illustration; in his disciplined imagination he recreates the design as a whole in the exact decorative terms of the artist. And who shall say that the pleasures of a trained imagination thus stimulated are not genuine aesthetic pleasures?

In the Lists now published I have therefore been led to include not only pictures which the artists painted with more or less assistance, but such as were turned out in their studios from their designs, and even copies as well, providing they faithfully transcribe lost works. To distinguish such works from absolutely autograph pictures, I have adopted a series of signs which I enclose in brackets after the subject of the picture. These I must explain.

EXPLANATIONS

A question-mark does not mean that I expect the picture necessarily to turn out to be by the painter in whose list it is included. The intention is rather to provoke a discussion which might not arise if the picture were relegated to the limbo of anonymity, and to point out, as far as I can, the most fruitful line of inquiry.

It would have been easy to omit the pictures I have attributed with a question-mark, casting them out from the garden like worthless weeds, and my reputation would perhaps gain in certain circles had I done so. But it seems more generous to expose one's self to the risk of disparagement than to fail to call attention to the most likely affiliations of uncertain pictures. Abstention is safe, but sterile. Care must be taken, of course, to reject without mercy those attributions which are merely happy thoughts or bright guesses, and to admit only such as, even if not entirely satisfactory, are based on the fullest information, and on the truest idea of the artist available at the moment.

Even unquestioned attributions are not trademarks, although collectors and dealers would like them to be. They are stepping-stones rather than goals. None of my lists give me complete satisfaction. More and more work will be required for two or even three generations before this task will be adequately accomplished. And when it is, let us hope our successors will show their gratitude by using the material gathered by their forerunners as a foundation for their finished structure. Should their edifice prove impermanent, our ghosts may have the satisfaction of knowing that foundations at times outlast what is built upon them. To justify my attributions would not be possible in this volume, for it would require a running commentary on each of the lists, and long essays on certain items.

So much for actual attributions, questioned or unquestioned. For pictures in which the hand of assistants is traceable I have used the letters p. (in part by the artist) or g.p. (in great part). During the period with which we are concerned, no considerable work was likely to be carried through without assistance. It was seldom that a painter much in demand could indulge himself in executing with his own hand the minor parts of a picture, such as the walls or columns of buildings, furniture, obscurer bits of drapery and so on, but it is only when the more manifest parts of a picture betray another hand that I use a sign to indicate it.

For pictures done on a master's indications in his studio the letters st. (studio) are used, and for copies of lost works c. (copy).

It remains to explain the ominous letter r., which means ruined, repainted, or restored. This unhappy sign might indeed be placed after almost every old picture, for no work four or five, and still less six or seven centuries old, is likely to have escaped unhurt. Even the few painters who used an impeccable technique, almost as hard as enamel, could not hinder the fading of colours, the 'mellowing', as we call it, of time. Indeed, thus 'mellowed', they please our taste, as colourless sculpture, unknown in antiquity, pleases it. The pictures as they left the Old Masters' hands would horrify most people with their bright tints. But we seldom see them thus; for time and the over-zealous restorer have usually combined to reduce them in pitch. From the filling-in of cracks and of bare spots from which the paint has flaked off, to the making over of the whole picture according to the restorer's taste and fancy, there are many gradations. I have indicated with the letter r. only those restorations which actually change the character of the work in colour, types, or drawing. Even in these, a good deal of the original design persists, something of the structure of the figures and of the distribution of the masses betrays the original creation. Thorwaldsen worked his will and wreaked his taste upon the Aeginetan Marbles, but the archaic Greek artist triumphs over the conventionalizing hand. And in my depressing flock of Restored Pictures the old Masters contrive still to make their genius felt.

As to the sources upon which I have based my views of the influences that formed the painters, I need scarcely say that we have next to no information in the matter, and little reliable tradition, so that the influences given in these lists are derived almost entirely from observed resemblances between the works of a given painter and those of his predecessors. Personal contact is not necessarily implied. A man may owe almost everything to another, without ever having seen him.

Certain influences are so widespread that one wearsies of repeating them. Such are Giotto and Simone Martini and the Lorenzetti in the Trecento; the Antique in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries, not only in architecture and sculpture, but in painting as well; Donatello, who is behind so much Florentine and nearly all north Italian painting; Mantegna in all the schools of the north, and still more his brother-in-law, Giovanni Bellini, from whose influence no Venetian working between 1470 and 1520 is free; while Leonardo, Michelangelo, and Raphael, in obvious as well as subtle ways, affected all their younger contemporaries.

NOTE

A number after the name of a town means that the picture is in the principal public gallery of that town, e.g. Berlin (Staatliche Museen), Paris (Louvre), London (National Gallery), Perugia (Pinacoteca), etc. Where honours are even between public collections, as between the Ashmolean and Christ Church at Oxford, or the Pitti and the Uffizi in Florence, both are mentioned.

‘Pseudo PIER FRANCESCO FIORENTINO’

A craftsman of considerable skill, particularly as a flower painter, who made a business of copying and piecing together figures from Fra Filippo, Pesellino and their followers. It is barely conceivable that, left to his resources, he designed and painted the crude works due to the real Pier Francesco Fiorentino. (The four principal prototypes of these works were the Pesellino designs best represented at Boston, Toledo, and formerly in the Aynard collection at Lyons, and the Lippi Adoration at Berlin. These were combined in various ways. Where a relationship to one of these pictures is mentioned below, it is intended to refer only to the figures of the Madonna and Child. If more than one prototype is indicated, the first-named refers to the Madonna and Child and those which follow to subsidiary figures such as S. John Baptist and Angels).

Ajaccio (Corsica). 189. Madonna adoring the Child, with Infant S. John and two Angels. (Based on Lippi, Berlin 69 and Pesellino at Toledo).

RAFFAELLINO DEL GARBO (Raffaele dei Carli, or dei Capponi)

This list includes the two previous lists of Raffaellino del Garbo and Raffaele dei Carli. I used the two names to designate two different artistic personalities. Garbo's work betrayed the pupil of Botticelli, influenced by Filippino Lippi, Ghirlandajo, Perugino and Raphael. Carli seemed to start under the influence of Cosimo Rosselli, Ghirlandajo and Credi and later became almost Umbrian. I noticed a close contact between the two personalities in the years around 1505, which I now think marks the transition from the earlier and better to the later phase of the same artist. Documentary proof also confirms that the three names Garbo, Carlo (CROLI) and Capponi refer to the same Raffaele (1466-1524). 'E.' marks the work by the personality I used to call Garbo.

STROZZI, Zanobi

Painter and miniaturist. 1412-1468. On commission of Cosimo dei Medici, he illuminated twenty codices for the library of S. Marco between 1446 and 1453. The documents specify that he painted the figures inside the letters while the ornaments were done by Filippo di Matteo Torelli. Paintings by him on panel are documented in 1436 and in 1448. In 1463, with Francesco di Antonio del Chierico, he started illuminating antiphonaries for the Duomo of Florence.

'UTILI' (Biagio di Antonio?)

Follower of Verrocchio and Ghirlandajo, frequently active in Faenza. First identified with Andrea Utili da Faenza (1481-1502), then erroneously with Giovanni Battista Utili (doc. 1503-1515), and lately with a Biagio di Antonio da Firenze (doc. in Faenza 1476-1483 and again 1504). So far no documented picture has confirmed either hypothesis. A shadowy entity in life, his artistic personality, however, is consistent and clear.

ITALIAN PICTURES OF THE RENAISSANCE
VENETIAN SCHOOLIN TWO VOLUMES
WITH 1333 ILLUSTRATIONS

'The book presents a more true and more thorough picture of Venetian painting than any of its predecessors . . . No visual summary of any local school on such a scale has ever been attempted, and in conjunction with the lists, it transforms an invaluable vade-mecum into one of the most remarkable volumes on the history of art that have ever been produced.'

The Times Literary Supplement

BERENSON

ITALIAN PAINTERS
OF THE RENAISSANCEWITH 400 ILLUSTRATIONS
17 IN FULL COLOUR

'The book is wonderfully illustrated. That is an inadequate way of putting it, because the fact is that there are many illustrations in colour, and hundreds in black and white, which only begin to express the beauty and excellence. The heart of the matter is that the illustrations were chosen to illustrate the ideas of Berenson.'
