The illustration shown herewith represents one of the new cards in colors recently issued by the manufacturers of "Life-Buoy" Rubber Footwear. Owing to recognized improvements that have recently taken place in canvas shoes with rubber soles, lines are now made for every-day and street wear, as well as for sporting purposes. The increasing cost of leather footwear has influenced this demand to a large extent, and as a result the production in "Life-Buoy" Canvas Shoes will be trebled for the coming season.

Some of the newer lines made are intended expressly for street wear and others for every-day wear for the working man. The latter are made with unusually heavy duck and with double soles and solid rubber heels. The soles on some better grades will outwear the soles on the average leather shoes, which has been repeatedly proven by test.

Canvas shoes with rubber soles have certain advantages over leather shoes, such as the protection of the foot against dampness, and the extra comfort and elasticity in addition to their more economical price. These shoes are noiseless, and will not mar floors like the heavier grades of leather shoes sometimes do. The genuine leather insoles in "Life-Buoy" Lines prevent "drawing" of the foot, which inevitably results where only cotton insoles are used.

There is little doubt that the demand for this class of goods will keep manufacturers more than busy throughout the season, and the merchant who is wise enough to protect himself with a good stock of "Life-Buoys" now, will have reason to congratulate himself later, on his good judgment.

A TIME TO PRESS NOT FALTER

Retail Trade Inclined to Lag—Cool Weather Against Fine Trade—Only Six Weeks More for Active Selling—Clear Up Stocks for Midsummer Quiet

THE weather is blamed principally for the slackening of trade in shoes for the past two weeks. Reports say that there has not been the amount of business done by a considerable amount that there was for the month immediately following Easter.

The weather cannot be entirely responsible for this comparative quiet as it has not been such as to interfere generally with the wearing of spring apparel. Nevertheless, it is easy to understand how light shoes should not be as much in evidence as when the weather is brighter, and when people are inclined to discard heavier wear, both inside and out.

There is also a wave of economy just now passing over the country, due largely to the food scare. The high price of necessaries is leading the public to tighten the purse strings, and this involves the cutting off of expenditures that at all may be considered as luxuries. Then, too, people have been following the advice of the rubber manufacturers, and encouraged by the prevailing wet weather have delayed their footwear purchases by hiding their shoe shortcomings with rubbers. At all events dealers say that the regular trade has been slack while the rubber shoe business has been unusually good for this time of the year.

In the West business started well this spring, and for a while orders came in well, but the delay in seeding and the talk of short crops, through lack of seed, has dampened the ardor of purchasers until wholesalers report a cautiousness in buying that is making itself felt with those who have anticipated a good season's trade. Everybody seems to be feeling his way carefully.

There is no doubt that this spirit of caution is more or less permanent, and so far as it is within reason, it is a wholesome sign. But should it lead to that parsimony that ties up business, and locks pocket books, it will produce widespread disaster. Every effort should be made to promote confidence in the general situation. There is abundance or rather a super-abundance of employment in rural as well as urban centres, and this means a steady flow of currency through channels that ought to be productive of good. While extravagance should be discouraged, people should be advised to follow their usual habits of free, but sensible spending. The talk about famine may be necessary to stir the authorities to needed action, with regard to speculation in commodities that mean life to the community, but it is apt to promote panic.

The duty of the retailer is to keep his goods before the public in such a way as to insure active movement. There are only six short weeks until the summer months of quiet are upon us, and these weeks should be used to clear the shelves, especially of fancy lines of footwear. By the month of July we ought to have day-light on some of the questions that vex the public mind. The new season's produce will have begun to come in and the assurance with regard to fall crops will be possible. There is every reason to believe that the crop yield will be rather more than the average, and, although it will all be needed, the money it will set in circulation will mean good business.

The American War Tariff

The Ten Per Cent. Tariff for Loan Purposes Affects the Leather Trade in Canada as well as the United States---No Appreciable Effect upon the Shoe Trade

THE recent announcement of the war tariff of 10 per cent. ad valorem upon all articles imported into the United States created considerable excitement, both across the line and here. It was thought at first, that the Bill would apply only to manufactured articles, and it was so stated in some of the press despatches sent out when the legislation was announced. It has since transpired that the impost is to apply to all goods brought into the United States, whether previously free or subject to duty.

This, as may be readily understood, means a great deal to the tanning industry of the United States, especially as applied to the importation of hides and skins, which previously came in free of duty. As a result a large deputation of leather manufacturers waited upon the Senate Committee at Washington on May 14th, to protest against the increased cost of their raw material as involving a higher cost of finished leather which would affect the price of army shoes and other equipment, as well as the price of shoes to the general public.

As the war tax would naturally affect Canadian leather business which in the past two or three years has grown appreciably, and more especially since the removal of the tariff on leather, the "Shoe and Leather Journal" at once got in touch with some of the leading spirits in the hide and leather trade and sent a special representative to follow up the matter. In this way we have kept the leather trade here, by letter, in daily touch with the situation. With the duty applying to hides as well as leather there would be little change in the statu quo, but, of course, with the duty on leather alone a handicap would be put upon Canadian business in leather which might seriously impair its development, if it did not stop it altogether. In the meantime, Canadian contracts under way have been pushed forward, and shipments made as expeditiously as possible in order to avoid the chances of increased cost in the manufactured product.

There has been some talk of admitting leather required for army work in accoutrements, shoes and the like into the States free of duty, but no regulation of this kind has as yet been issued. No doubt arrangements will be made to make available for military purposes, not only sole leather, but other lines used by the War Department by a system of permits such as obtains in England.

The duty as applied to footwear will have little effect here as Canada has not been exporting shoes to any extent across the line, and, no doubt, if it should become necessary to help out with army footwear, arrangements will be made to have the goods reach the authorities free from the extra cost imposed by the tariff. The tariff is purely a war measure, and is being accepted as such by the trade across the line. At such a time as the present, with the two nations standing shoulder to shoulder in the same great cause, every effort should be exerted to avoid anything like friction. The proposal to put an export duty on domestic hides sent out of the United States, which fortunately was not seriously considered by the American Government, was one of those mischievous bits of commercial legislation that always leads to reprisals and consequent bad feeling. The war is drawing the two peoples together, and it would be a pity to allow anything to interfere with the co-operation and good will, so essential to success.

The Jobber as Factor in Shoe Trade

What He Furnishes in the Way of Ideas, Service and Facilities—He is the Storehouse, the Buyer, the Adviser and the Helper of Many—His Place and Purpose in the Scheme of Things—Wholesalers are now Right up to Minute and Specialize on Many Lines

“BUY from a jobber? Well, I guess not. Do you suppose that I am going to pay those fellows a large commission, in these days of high priced shoes? No, sir. I go direct to the manufacturer. No jobber for me.”

It was a Western Ontario shoeman who had spoken, as he was called upon by a representative of a leading wholesale house, whose reception was rather chilly, not to say frosty. The salesman, however, did not lose his good temper, and invited the retailer to drop into the warehouse when he was in the city, if only to have a chat and shake hands.

It was not more than five weeks after the foregoing incident, that Mr. K——, happening to be in town, sauntered into the wholesale shoe establishment one Friday afternoon. The traveler had returned from a week-end trip, and greeted his visitor cordially. They discussed affairs in general, and in walking around the sample room, the visiting shoeman happened to pick up a vici kid bal, whole quarter foxed, with matt kid, eight inch top, plain toe, flexible sole, and Louis heel. It was a shoe that they sold at $4.75. He looked at the boot and was delighted with the style and last, and said he wanted to use it as an alternative with his L— line, which he obtained from an Eastern manufacturer.

It Was More Than Substitute

“Why,” he declared, “this shoe looks equally as well as the one for which I have been paying $5.25, and I do not see why it should not work in very well as an alternative.”

“Well look here,” declared S——, the traveler, “if this shoe is good enough for a substitute, if it has the looks, the appearance, the style and the finish that the manufacturer’s line has, why not let us have your order for 120 pairs? We happen to have a large stock which we bought before the recent sharp advance went into effect.”

“Well, I did not know you had such splendid facilities in your warehouse. I thought you bought only rough and ready lines, and a few of the cheaper summer goods,” remarked the caller.

“Oh, you see, that is because you have been prejudiced to a large extent. I told you we could give you a service and a stock that are unsurpassed. I also told you the goods were here when you wanted them, that we could give you quick shipments and splendid sorting facilities. We are like a buyer for you right on the spot; we are in close touch with the markets; sense styles, and know what is selling readily, and what is likely to move. Of course, we now and then make a mistake, but on the whole, our men, visiting the leading centres of information several times a year, can pretty accurately gauge what will be the most profitable range to place on the ordinary shoeman’s shelves.”

The visitor listened for some time, and certainly had his eyes opened to the place and purpose of the jobber in the community. Before departing, he gave the traveler a generous order, not only on women’s, but in misses’ and children’s summer foot toggery. The goods were shipped and in his establishment ready to dispose of, within a couple of days.

Smart Representative Footwear

This is only one instance of many that might be enumerated, on the how and why the shoe jobber is in business to-day. The number of wholesale shoe houses is increasing each year. The tendency is for the large ones to grow larger, and the reason they do so, is by the service they render and the representative character of the goods they carry. True, at one time, jobbers carried only bread and butter lines or heavy, staple stuff. A certain style would come in—the people would be asking for it, and before the jobber could secure and offer it to his customers, the demand had ceased. When the belated goods arrived, why they had to be sacrificed, in order to find a market at all, but that day is now past. Scarcely a seasonable novelty appears, but what the jobber has his line and shows his samples, just as quickly as the manufacturer. His range, of course, does not perhaps embrace as many colors in cloths and leather combinations, but, for conservative, artistic shoes, the up-to-date wholesaler now has something very neat to offer, and can furnish the merchant with these lines in any desired quantity and sizes. He is going in more and more for specialties.

It has been stated that the jobber is a middle man, and that by the retailer purchasing direct from the manufacturer, all go-between cost is cut out. This is a far-fetched and illogical deduction or assertion for shoe manufacturers have their own travelers, who are paid liberal salaries, and, there are many other considerations which might be enumerated. It must appear to all, that the jobber can do business on as economical a basis as any manufacturing concern, and in addition, he carries stock, gives service and provides unsurpassed facilities. This is not disparaging the worth and work of the average shoe manufacturer. Where the jobber comes in is, that he supplements or is the complement of the manufacturer in many endeavors and achievements for the weal and uplift of the trade as a whole.

It is true that some shoemen get along without purchasing anything from the jobber, but not infrequently, they are very glad to apply to him for certain goods, which they want promptly and in certain specified quantities. The jobber is really a big in-stock department. He is the eyes and ears, the fore-runner of the retailer in many instances.

Trade Mark is Business Life Insurance

Advertising That Trade Mark is Paying the Premium on That Life Insurance—
When Your Order Book is Full You Do Not Put Your Trade Mark Out of Sight
—It Means Firm and Its Products Stand for Honesty, Quality and Service

“THE Value of Trade Marks” was the subject of a cogent and convincing address delivered by Mr. R. W. Ashcroft at the recent complimentary banquet in Kitchener, Ont., which was tendered by the members of the newly formed Kitchener Manufacturers’ Association to Mr. T. H. Rieder, President of the Canadian Consolidated

R. W. ASHCROFT, NEW YORK

Rubber Co., Montreal, on the occasion of his leaving his native city to take up his permanent residence in Canada’s commercial metropolis.

Mr. Ashcroft is one of the most widely known publicity experts in America, being advertising manager of the United States Rubber Co., with headquarters in New York. Previous to his removal to that city he occupied a similar position with the Canadian Consolidated Rubber Co., Montreal. His remarks aroused much enthusiasm for, as a speaker he is always bright, original and instructive.

“Let us go back a few thousand years,” said Mr. Ashcroft, “and trace forward rapidly the steps which lead us to modern merchandising methods. In the beginning there was production. Man produced what he needed—food and a little raiment, and perhaps a dwelling of one sort or another. As the sun of civilization climbed a little higher in the heavens, his needs grew more numerous and complex. In a very few generations, therefore, we find some men or groups of men producing a little more than they actually needed themselves and disposing of this excess production of food and raiment—and what were then luxuries—to other people who came to them.

“Then came caravans, galleys and sailing ships bringing from the Orient laces, spices, tea, silk, rugs, jewels, and so on. These were traded for whatever the owners desired or the buyer had to offer. Those of you who travel in isolated sections of the country know that this form of trading is still in existence. The garden truck and other natural products are traded at the general store for merchandise needed by the farmer.

Who Were the First Salesmen?

“Traveling peddlers, like traveling actors, were the next step forward in the development of distribution, but for the most part the selling of merchandise followed the spread of the fame of certain goldsmiths, silversmiths, weavers and boot makers, and to them for their wares people traveled from many distant parts. The first Bible, printed in what is now Germany, by Guttenberg, was distributed in England by zealous martyrs, who risked and often lost their lives through their zeal for Christianity. Perhaps these were the first traveling men.

“The freedom of the people from the feudal laws and barons gradually resulted in the establishing of towns and cities, and while this was going on, exploration by daring mariners and overland travelers resulted in the populating of the colonies. Then came steamboats, steam trains and a system for facilitating the distribution of merchandise, which today is termed credit. Offshoots of this arrangement are insurance and the various banking and financing means by which large enterprises are floated and maintained.

“The establishing of the cities meant larger business for those little concerns which had won their reputation for the quality of their jewelry, boots, silks and so forth, and, in some instances, one of the partners would make an occasional trip to nearby cities, or in some cases to India, America, or other points distant from England, which had become the producing centre of manufactured goods. Articles for adornment or for raiment were probably the first items sold by merchants. In many instances of course, the captain of the vessel or the supercargo was the salesman in charge of the consignment.

“Most of you are familiar with the story of the wonderful growth of the Honorable East India Company, and the Hudson’s Bay Company—the latter of which, through its posts or trading stations, dealt with the original inhabitants of this country. Out of this condition developed what is known today as the system of traveling salesmen.

The First Known Advertising

“Four or five thousand years ago a slave ran away from his owner in a region near the Red Sea. The owner of that slave is the first known advertiser. He had a full description of the slave chiseled into a clay tablet and sent broadcast by carrier. The original tablet containing this first-known advertisement is now on exhibition in the British Museum at London.

"The first advertising done in the newspapers of the United States and Canada referred to patent medicines, lotteries, real estate, boarding houses, stage coach systems, theatres, schools of penmanship, Portuguese leeches, and small merchants. With the trade-marking of merchandise, however, and the remarkable growth in the number of publications in this and other countries, advertising has developed within a generation to its present vast extent.

"The first trade mark was put on merchandise for identification purposes. Even the manufacturer of certain articles sometimes has to examine his own coat or hosiery or other product very carefully, when it is shown to him with products of other manufacturers, in order to identify any particular number of his own make. So, to enable the jobber and the dealer—and, of course, the consumer—to identify certain products, certain trade marks and containers were conceived.

"A 'Trade Mark' is a symbol—a picture, a label, a word or a combination of words—attached to the goods of a manufacturer, identifying them as his product and distinguishing them from other like goods. A simpler definition is this: A trade mark is a pride mark. It says: 'I, Mr. Manufacturer, am proud of these goods. Use them, and you will swear by them.'

"Manufacturers, generally speaking, may be divided into two classes—those whose goods are trade-marked, and those whose goods are not—those who are on top with high-grade and trade-marked merchandise, and those who are not on top with mediocre and nameless goods. Trade marks were in vogue as far back as the commencement of the seventeenth century—more than three hundred years ago.

"In the reign of James I. a clothier was fined, or maybe imprisoned, for trying to pass off his inferior product as that of a competitor who had made a name and reputation for good goods.

The Protection of Trade Marks

"Today, in this twentieth century, the British, the French, the American and other democratic governments, give as much protection to trade marks as they do to any other national obligation—whether to citizen or to alien. In these enlightened countries, if you make a good mouse-trap you can christen it and trade-mark it, and advertise it, and the world will make a beaten path to your door. Submarine manufacturers of imitation mouse-traps may try to torpedo you, but you and your business will thrive just the same.

"I don't know why your president should have asked me to talk to you about trade marks, but he is a bit of a humorist, and I suspect he is pulling your leg as well as mine. I suppose he is hoping I will unload on you a bunch of dry statistics, proving the benefits accruing to ownership of a trade mark. Well, we'll try to oblige him.

"Adolphus W. Green died the other day at the age of 74. He rose from being an obscure lawyer to the presidency of one of the largest and most utilitarian organizations in the United States—the National Biscuit Co. He did it because he believed in trade marks.

"Shortly before his death he said of the trade mark 'Uneeda': 'We would not consider its sale for less than the total capital of the company. For,' he continued, 'factories may burn down and we can replace them; but take away the trade mark of Uneeda Biscuit and the foundation of the business is gone.'

What Certain Names are Worth

"Mr. Heinz would probably want $100,000 a piece for each of his 57 varieties.

"The five letters K-O-D-A-K are probably worth $1,000,000 each.

"The Gold Dust Twins could quit dish-washing to-day, and live in luxury for the rest of their lives.

"The name 'Mark Twain' brings an income of over $50,000 a year to his sole surviving child.

"The names 'Australia,' 'New Zealand,' 'South Africa,' 'India,' 'Canada,' and what they stand for, are worth life itself to the British Empire.

"The name 'Kitchener' is the best, the proudest, the bravest, any manufacturer, any community, any association could claim.

"To be identified with the Kitchener Manufacturers' Association, as I presume most of you are, means that you and your products stand for honesty, quality, efficiency and service."

"All we manufacturers, both in Canada and the United States, are busy, very busy, to-day. We are working at full capacity. It is no trouble at all to sell goods. Our problem is one of production.

"Some of us are inclined to sit back and say, 'What's the use of soliciting business? What's the use of advertising? I have enough orders booked to keep my mill busy for months and months.'

"But the wise ones among us are more farsighted. They see their opportunity—an opportunity that will never occur again. The opportunity is this: To so establish their names, their trade marks, their community, in the minds of the buying public—not only of Canada but of other countries that, when conditions return to normal and all the factories of Canada, of the United States, of England, France, Germany and Austria commence once again to produce peaceful goods for the consumption of the world—that the buying public will recognize their product as being reliable and as being good value.

"A trade mark is business life insurance.

"Advertising that trade mark is paying the premium on that life insurance. When you are in good health, do you drop your life insurance, do you fail to pay your premium when it falls due? Certainly not!

"And, likewise, when your mill is busy, when your order-book is full to over-flowing, you do not put your trade mark out of sight and ignore it.

Safeguard for Rainy Day

"On the contrary, you treasure it and you publish it more than ever; it is your safeguard for a

Don't Give New Pair With Every Complaint

Wholesaler Says Many Merchants are Too Ready to Take Shoes Back Even When They Have Been Worn for Months and Then Forward to the House Asking for Credit Note for Full Amount—Shoes Will Go Wrong, of Course, but Not Always

“SHOE retailers should have more backbone. They seek to curry favor with their customers, even at the expense of the manufacturer and wholesaler. They are wittingly being imposed upon, and rather than adopt a firm attitude and square matters with the customer at once, they hand out a new pair of shoes, and send along the old ones which, in many cases, have been worn for weeks, to the factory or the jobber, expecting a credit note for the full amount.

“Now, of course,” declared the speaker, who is a leading wholesale shoeman, “I know there are defects, oversights and short-comings in all shoes. Stitches will rip, leather will crack, hooks will pull out, heels will come off, soles will separate, counters will break down, box toes will cave in, but such frailties are not common and in many instances the shoes must have been subjected to the severest strain in order to make them go wrong.

All Shoes Will Never be Perfect.

“But I am taking shoes under normal conditions. If there is any defect within a week, or two weeks, after they are worn, of course the retailer should make it good, and have them repaired, or, if necessary, give the complainant a new pair, and the wholesaler or manufacturer should stand the expense. What I am talking about is the return of shoes that have been worn two months to three months, and if they have developed some weakness, why should the retailer assume that the shoes have not given satisfaction, and seek to make the manufacturer pay for two or three months' wear? Why should not the consumer pay for the service given?”

“Now, the average life of a pair of shoes, without resoling, is possibly four months, and if footwear is returned at the end of two months, taken back and a new pair handed out, then the wearer gets the advantage of two months' usage, free of charge. The fairest way to deal with such cases is, if the shoes have been worn six weeks or two months, is to make the patron pay for the period of service the footwear has rendered. The consumer should bear his proportion of the loss.

“Let me explain it in this way. Many retailers owning automobiles buy a new set of tires, which, under normal conditions, are guaranteed to cover 5,000 miles. If a tire should become faulty after traveling 200, 300 or even 400 miles it could be returned to the manufacturer, and a new one would be given gratis to the owner of the car. But if that tire had gone 1,500 or 2,000 miles, and the owner sought to obtain a new one to replace the defective one, he would not get it free of charge, the same as some people do shoes, after six weeks' or two months' service. The rubber people would charge him proportionately for the 1,500 or 2,000 miles covered. In other words, he would have to pay for the use of the tire for that number of miles. And it is only fair that he should do so. Such a concession is a just and right one on both sides, and so it is with the shoe retailer. He should not be too ready to pass a complaint and hand out new pairs without making the consumer pay for the wear which the footwear afforded him.

“I am often amazed at what shoes will stand. They are subjected to strain and stress such as no other article of apparel receives. People expect altogether too much of their pedal toggery. Why, I had about a dozen shoes come in the other day from the west, and among them was a child's welt which had a hole burned right through at the ball. It looked as if the sole had been placed upon a coal, been over a fire, or been up against a red hot poker. I did not blame the proprietor for sending back these shoes and giving the customer a new pair. I think it must have been a green clerk who certainly had one put over him when he accepted them. Possibly more shoes are returned which are burned through the carelessness of the owner than for any other cause, and in a case like this should the retailer stand for any such imposition or misrepresentation? If boots are burned at any point it is the fault, pure and simple, of the wearer, who has possibly got the leather wet and placed the shoe near the oven, grate, radiator or register to dry.”

rainy day. I firmly believe in community trade marks. Such trade marks afford double-barrelled protection to the manufacturer who can use them. He has the protection of his own mark, coupled with that of his community.

“You Kitchener manufacturers are fortunate in that your Association—the Kitchener Manufacturers' Association—provides you with a supplementary trade mark which strengthens your own—which means honesty, quality, efficiency and service. Henceforth it will appear on the cartons, on the packages, on the cases, on the letter paper, on the envelopes of your best and most thriving industries—industries still yet in their infancy. Can any Kitchener manufacturer afford to fail to take advantage of making it known to the world that he belongs to a community whose name represents everything in life that is worth while? I think not!

“But to those who may be faint-hearted, who may be backward, let me try to tell a little fable. Aesop did not write it, but it is a good one.

(The moral of the fable was: “Do it now!” It related to an industrious bee and a troublesome bull. Either Mr. J. A. Connor, of Toronto, or Mr. Ashcroft will be glad to tell it to any of our readers who call upon them.)

Stray Shots From Solomon

A good deal of time is wasted by some people getting ready to get ready to do things. By the time they are in shape to start the go is all out of the enterprise and it flattens out like a stale pancake. Preparation is a good thing in its place, but it is not the whole thing. There are men who seem to think getting ready is doing things. They spend most of their time at the preface and never get to the book itself. "Do it now." "A dream cometh through the multitude of business," and many business undertakings end in dreams because of the multitude of preliminary talk. Deeds not words count. Get down to business. A real day's work with something accomplished, no matter how crude the results, is worth all the fussing and chatter of weeks of busy idleness that get one nowhere. Plenty of men are "busy here and there" like the man in Holy Writ and let duty and opportunity escape them.

* * * * *

This is an age when waste is a crime. "Gather up the fragments" is the watchword. Fortunes are made from by-products. Dust heaps are sifted. Slag piles are put through the retest to extract the very last grain of usefulness. Look about your business for the leaks that make the difference between profit and loss. Saving at the bung and wasting at the spigot is the secret of many a failure in life as well as business. "He that gathereth by labor shall increase." The man who watches the little things will make sure of the totals. Take care of your moments and hours and your days will turn to profit. The ball game and golf are all right in their place, but if some men put as much energy and care into their business as they put into a long shot or a good fishing expedition, they would be ready to retire in a short while. Watch the little things for out of them come the issues of life.

* * * * *

There are those who are ready to drop out of the race just as soon as someone hints that they are getting "too old." Professor Osler did a great thing for the race when he made the offhand claim that men might be chloroformed at forty as far as their usefulness was concerned. The statement startled the whole world and then it started people discussing whether it were true that most men had "shot their bolt" at forty. It has brought to light a good deal of information as to what men who have been considered "old" have done for their times and the race generally. Men prominent in politics, business, philanthropy, literature, and so forth, were shown to have done the best work, many of them after the age of sixty. Don't make years your excuse for being lazy or ambitionless. No doubt you are living and, particularly eating, as you used to do when you had growing pains. You have not used the common sense with which nature has furnished you to conserve your mental or physical strength. There are men at eighty who are not as old as you are at forty-five. The fault is with you, not with your years. Your best lies ahead of you, if you only rise to the occasion.

Abraham Lincoln said once that God must have loved plain, ordinary people because he made so many of them. Most of us are out of the five talent class and can only come in half way between that and the one talent man.

But the fellow with the two talents who used them got the same praise that his cleverer and more hustling five talent competitor received. "Well done," if you have done "what you could." What would the world be without the great army of "mediocrities" that help the five talent man to put his genius to proper use? This great war is not a war of military genius, as some wars have been, but is the strenuous, steady fight of two talent democracy against five talent autocracy. The heroes today are mostly in the ranks, not on the general staff. There is great comfort to the ordinary individual these days in the fact that he counts as much, practically, as the smartest of his fellows in the great fight for international freedom and truth.

Far fields look green and things nearby have a drab and common appearance. If you only had the "luck" some men have, you say, you would have made name and fame for yourself and have served your day and generation. No you wouldn't. You would do with the big things just what you have done with the little. You would have flirted, played with opportunity. There are chances under your nose now that you don't seem to see. "Wisdom is before him that hath understanding; but the eyes of the fool are in the ends of the earth." There are people who chase pleasure and happiness clear across the earth, when it is waiting for them just around the corner. There are men who plod along bemoaning their fate at having to live colorless, ineffective lives who are looking over the head of chances that their fool eyes do not see. Waken up. Get your mind on the race. Quit moaning about the lack of opportunity. Wisdom, and in that sense all that goes to make success and happiness in life lies before you, not a thousand miles away. There was a man some time ago who made a fortune out of an idea he got from a woman's hat that he was dodging in church to see the preacher.

SECTION OF THE ATTRACTIVE CHISHOLM STORE, SHOWING REAR PORTION ONLY OF GROUND FLOOR, MEZZANINE FLOOR AND OFFICES

MANY NEW FEATURES IN BRIGHT SHOE STORE

In Appointments, Facilities and Service of New Chisholm Establishment in West Toronto Nothing Has Been Overlooked—Removable Window Floors and Back, Central Show Case Aisle, Spacious Children's Department and Admirable Lighting

THE new Chisholm Shoe Store at 1680 Dundas street, West Toronto, is the latest addition to the ever increasing number of beautiful and attractive footwear establishments not only in Toronto, but in the Dominion. The appointments and conveniences are unsurpassed and embrace the last word in up-to-date retailing facilities. The formal re-opening took place recently and the event was a decided success, large numbers visiting the inviting and tastefully decorated shop.

The premises, formerly occupied by May Bros., were taken over in March and completely overhauled and refitted. The old show windows were torn out and a thoroughly modern Easy-set front installed while inside new shelving and new fixtures were placed in position. On the west side is the men's department and on the east the women's while at the rear is a splendid and spacious children's department, reached by a wide central aisle, flanked by fitted show cases of an original and very much admired type. On the mezzanine floor located at the north end are the offices, cash and wrapping desks. The proprietors are John L. and Morley S. Chisholm, brothers of Alex. Chisholm, who was engaged in the retail footwear line in West Toronto for some twenty years and retired a few weeks ago, being now purchasing secretary for Y.M.C.A. military camps in Ontario and Quebec.

Both the Chisholm boys, who bought his business, have had an extended and successful experience and insight into the trade. J. L. Chisholm, who has charge of the men's boys' and youths' selling, was connected with several leading Yonge street establishments for over eighteen years and resigned the position of manager of the Invictus Boot Shop in order to launch out in his own behalf in association with his brother, M. S. Chisholm, who for fifteen years, has been identified with the Chisholm business in West Toronto, which he helped to build. He has charge of the women's, misses' and children's branches. Chisholm Bros. bring to bear upon their undertaking a thorough knowledge of buying, fitting, merchandising and service, while each is an able and skilled window trimmer, who will make the best of the fine facilities afforded them by the new display front.

Inviting and Attractive Exterior

The alterations and refitting of the store were carried out under the direction of Smith & Wright, architects, and the contract was in the hands of T. P. Wright. The exterior base of the windows and the side panels are of Tennessee marble while the entrance is laid with red quarry tile. The front is what is known as the shallow type, the windows being only five feet at their deepest point from the street line. The side of each window and the lower section of the back, which is removable, admitting of easy entrance for purposes of trimming, are panelled in quarter-cut oak finished in Belgian grey. This is the decorative scheme throughout the store interior and is decidedly pretty and pleasing in effect. Over the panelled woodwork on the side of the interior of each window are hand painted Dutch and Belgian scenes. The top of each window is in tan beaver board. There is a transparent blue glass sign forming a separate border from the plate glass at the top of the side and front panes, bearing the name of the firm.

The exterior is all metal, marble and glass, the large plate glass being set in bronze copper standards. At the back of each show case window, the lower portion is of Belgian grey oak, easily removable as already stated, while the upper portion is of plate glass. The flooring of the windows is of oak with Belgian grey border, and is also removable. Underneath is a rough pine floor for special window trims such as water, nature and harvest scenes, landscape effects, etc., all of which can be carried out on a rough bottom without doing any damage to the oak floor used for regular displays. The top of each triangular shaped window is bordered with Normandy cloth curtains.

Over the exterior plate glass is pebble prismatic glass and at the back is chip glass toning down the strong light. The space above the show case compartments which, in many stores, is left open to collect dirt and dust is thus enclosed giving a better appearance and more finished, uniform effect.

The width of the store proper is twenty-three feet, and the depth sixty-five. Just inside on the right and left are shelved glass cabinets for findings of all kinds, polishes, etc., and also two neat display silent show cases set diagonally for the showing of fancy slippers, shoe ornaments, hosiery and other accessories.

The flooring of the store is of British Columbia fir, varnished and waxed, and the shelving is of the single carton type, extending a height of seven feet, while the top is decorated with palms, lilies and potted plants. Midway down each side of the mural fixtures is a cheval full length mirror.

Children's Department is Feature

On entering, the most striking feature of the Chisholm store, outside of the handsome Belgian grey finish of all the oak wood work, is the wide central display show case aisle entirely separating the men's and women's departments and leading directly to the superbly fitted up children's section in the rear. The width of the aisle is four and a half feet and on either side are three shelved cases, each eight feet four inches in length and thirty-eight inches high, surmounted by a four-sided glass top, ten by twelve inches, for the display of children's shoes, slippers, evening footwear. In the aisle cases are seven shelves, where is kept the staple lines handled. There is a complete barricade as it were between the men's and women's departments formed by the shelved show cases. There is a passage of two feet six inches between each case, so that one may move from the men's to the women's department and vice versa, without any roundabout tour.

The chairs and fitting stools are all of dark brown oak covered with leather and form a pleasing contrast to the solid grey effect.

At the end of the aisle is the commodious children's department. This is twenty-three by twenty-three feet, and at the back is a mural show case, flanked by pillars. The case is five feet wide by six feet high and eighteen inches deep, with glass front and admirably displays children's shoes and hosiery, while flowers adorn the brilliantly lighted interior of the case. A hidden stairway leads to the mezzanine floor where the offices, wrapping and cash desks are located and from the elevation an uninterrupted view can be had of the floor below. The rear of the store is fitted with prismatic glass. The ceiling is of cove design in cream and the side walls above the fixtures are in tan.

An Admirable Lighting System

A universal carton with uniform label of appropriate design prevails throughout. A Lamson air-line carrier system is used for conveying all parcels, cash, etc., to the wrapping and cash desks on the mezzanine floor. The rugs, in front of the fitting chairs in the adult departments, are of grey-ground Oriental pattern, while in the children's there are animal rugs which cannot fail to arouse the interest of the little shoppers. All rugs are held to the floor by handy screw fasteners so that they cannot be shifted about or curl up at the ends.

The interior of the new store is splendidly lighted, both naturally and artificially. There are no dark corners or dim reflections. Three holophone lights, each having a five hundred watt nitrogen lamp, with a drop cord switch attached, are installed in the interior. The windows are illuminated by six, one hundred watt nitrogen lamps in each, in holophone shades. The lights are automatically controlled by an eight day time switch which, when set, causes them to turn on or off at any desired hour. The lights are also equipped with snap switches. Back of the show case in the children's department is shelving for placing any goods ready to put in stock. Upstairs over the mezzanine floor is the reserve stock room for leather shoes, while the basement is used for storing rubber footwear. Radiators of an ornamental type are located at the rear of the store for heating the premises.

Music and Flowers at Opening

At the formal re-opening of the Chisholm store, which was recently held, there was flowers everywhere. Music was furnished by a new Edison concert grand gramophone, loaned for the occasion by R. S. Williams & Sons Co. Nothing has been left in the appointments, finish and decorations of the artistic establishment to make it a beautiful and pleasant place for shopping. All the latest in men's and women's stylish footwear is handled, and the stock is replete with the newest offerings of the season, thoroughly in keeping with the high class character of the environs.

FROM THE "FOREST TREE" TO SHOE "FAC-TREE"

How the Modern Shapely, Handsome Lasts are Made—The Wonderful Progress in the Industry—If a Shoe on Certain Last Sells Well it is Then the Maker Realizes the Fruits of His Work—"How the Last Shall be First," Paradoxical as it May Seem

By H. L. TOWER, United Last Co., Montreal

HOW many people realize when they go to a store to purchase a pair of shoes, that the familiar quotation "The Last shall be First" is the foundation of the shoe industry. Without the last, the shoe would be a very unshapely affair, and the first requirement of the shoe manufacturers is the last. This sounds like a paradoxical statement, but it is true, nevertheless.

To obtain this last from the stately maple—for maple is the chief material from which lasts are made—let us follow the process from the tree to the finished last. Starting with the tree as it is felled in the forest, we follow the log conveyed by auto tractor or team and rail to the block mill, where it is sawed into lengths according to the size of the block desired; for instance, a size seven block must be thirteen inches long and other sizes in proportion. These short lengths of logs, resembling the old-fashioned chopping block, are taken by automatic conveyors to a large circular splitting saw, which splits the log into wedge shaped pieces, preparatory to passing on to the rough turning lathe, which quickly turns the wedge shaped block into a form roughly resembling that of a last. Each of these rough turning lathes has a capacity of about 1,400 blocks per day.

Stacked up Like Kindling

After leaving the roughing lathe the blocks pass by endless conveyor, to the air drying shed, where they are stacked up like kindling wood, and in such a manner that the air may circulate freely around them, and the shed is so constructed that the sides and ends are partly open, allowing a free circulation of air, in and out of the building, but at the same time, keeping out rain and snow. In this shed the blocks remain for a period of from six months to a year, or even longer—the longer, the better—for the purpose of eliminating as much of the sap or moisture as possible, before going to the steam dry kiln, where the block gets the final process of drying.

A steam dry kiln is usually a solidly constructed building of brick, with flooring placed about two inches apart, and under this flooring many coils of steam pipes, so that, after the blocks have been placed in the kiln, the steam is gradually turned on and the heat rises through the flooring and circulates among the blocks. The heat gradually increases until it is a good deal more than 100 degrees, and is maintained for several weeks, after which the temperature is gradually reduced. This kiln drying occupies three or four months, and is exceedingly important. The man in charge must be an expert, and must watch the weather and all conditions, for the sudden changing of the temperature in the kiln at certain times, would result in the blocks checking—(cracking) and becoming useless for anything but firewood.

When the blocks are properly cured, the kiln is opened, the blocks are loaded into cars and shipped to the last manufacturers, where they are stored in bins, preparatory to turning them into finished lasts, and here again, in the storage bins of the last factory, extreme caution is taken to keep the temperature and degree of moisture at an exact prescribed correctness.

As stated, maple is the chief source of supply for last blocks, although some beech and persimmon are used, but very little of the latter on account of its scarcity, and the trees do not grow large enough to supply the size required for men's lasts. In Germany, a species of beech is used almost exclusively, and up to the beginning of the war, considerable maple was exported by both Canada and the United States to Germany and England for last manufacturing.

Where Style of Lasts Originate

We have followed the block from the forest to the last factory, and it is now ready to be turned into some style or other, but what style? Where does the style originate? In every modern last factory, there is an up-to-date model room, and here the designer, or as he is called in a last factory, the model maker, is constantly working on new styles and in a large sense, he is responsible for the creation of new styles, although credit must be given to some of the shoe manufacturers for the ideas and suggestions that they convey to the model maker.

Some people have an idea that the model maker simply takes a chunk of wood and whittles out a new style. The method he employs, however, is quite different to this crude performance. He takes a last that somewhat resembles the idea he has in mind, and by tacking pasteboard on here and there, changes the entire appearance of the old last. Then, taking this patched-up last to the turning lathe, he has a rough model turned, and instead of paste board he now has wood on the model, which he works down to suit his ideas.

After he finishes the new model, there are turned several "salesmen's dummies," simply plain lasts, and these are given to the salesmen, who in turn show them to the shoe manufacturer. If the last please the manufacturer, he buys a sample pair, makes a pair of shoes, tries them out for fitting qualities, and if he is satisfied, they will sell, orders a

HOW DO YOU HANDLE FUSSY SHOE BUYERS?

Good Judgment, Tact and Courtesy are Essential—Eccentric Requests and Unreasonable Demands—Wordy Squabble Never Gets the Retailer Anywhere—Individual, Personal Talks to Sales Force, if Given in Helpful Spirit, Ever Inspire Confidence

"SERVING, selling and fitting are three great essentials in the success of the retail shoe business, and too little attention is devoted to these qualifications," declared a leading Hamilton shoeman the other day, when discussing the matter of efficiency in his help.

"I do not make a practice of waiting upon customers myself, unless my services are needed, but I keep my eye on the boys on the floor, and know what they are doing, and observe how customers are received and handled. My salesmen make many mistakes, as I did myself, in years gone by, but I have never yet, no matter how big a bungle a man committed, called him down in the presence of others. This is a very short-sighted policy. I make it a custom, after the patron has gone, or, it may be some hours later, to engage in a casual conversation with the clerk who has committed an error, or oversight, and, in the course of my remarks, I bring up the incident, not reprovingly, but more in the spirit of a helpful, timely, co-operative suggestion. I find that they take it in good part, for it is not in the nature of a call down. It is as I said by way of sympathy and support, making them feel that they are receiving pointers, and that I take a personal interest in their welfare and success. If you appeal to the pride, spirit and ambition of the average young man, I feel that he will respond. To call him down 'for fair,' or to use blunt, vituperous words does not get a proprietor anywhere.

"Many of the little matters which I discuss with my men would be overlooked in the ordinary shoe shop, but what I seek to impress upon them is the highest efficiency in salesmanship. Here is just one little incident. See clerk No. 2 there, who is fitting a pair of tobacco brown bals on that black moustached, stockily built customer? I should judge the caller had never worn shoes of that color, and wanted to see how they looked. You notice that he went to the mirror some distance away in order to have a gaze at himself in his new pedal apparel. Now, that clerk stayed by the fitting stool, and did not accompany the customer to the mirror. That was a mistake—just as much as it would be for a salesman not to escort a lady to the door and open it for her, after she had made a purchase.

Do Not Argue With Patrons

"Another thing I impress upon my men is never to argue with a customer. One never gains anything by an argument, for, an old saying is, 'Convince a man against his will, he is of the same opinion still.' If you find a customer is disposed to argue, deftly switch off to some other point, or cleverly evade the issue. Sometimes I have had people come into my establishment and say: 'Your shoes are no darn good,' or 'They are rotten'; using even stronger expletives.

"Instead of flaring up or taking umbrage at a verbal assault, I smile, and say, 'Why, how is that? I am sorry they did not give you satisfaction.' By a pleasant look and genial, unruffled manner, I endeavor to convert an attitude of opposition into one of, at least tranquillity, whereby the visitor will give me some information or data, which may be helpful in my business, and enable me to render him greater service.

"Then, too, there is frequent chance for argument or dispute in the matter of customers, who bring back shoes, alleging that they have ripped here, have broken down at the toe, come loose at the heel, cracked across the vamp, buttons off, hooks pulled out, or a score of other reasons. If

I think the shoe is clearly at fault, I endeavor to remedy the defect. If the customer is a part contributor to the trouble, I try to meet him or her half way, and once in a while, the buyer is wholly to blame, and the goods not at all.

"Then it is that you have to be firm, and the customer will often do a good deal of complaining, saying the fault is with the store and the goods, and that he is perfect and long suffering in every respect. I generally keep my equanimity, listen patiently to what he has to say, and then tell him politely but firmly what I will do. Then if he is disposed to argue further, I endeavor to impress upon him that my stand is fair and just, but never do I allow my voice to be raised above its natural tone. If I did, I would feel myself giving way under the stress of passion, and a man must be master of himself at all times. Keep cool, and if the patron goes on berating me, or trying to secure further concessions, say: 'I am very sorry—you can either leave the shoes here, on the understanding that I will have them attended to, on the basis proposed, or you can take them away. The matter rests entirely with yourself. I have given you my decision and it is final. There is no use in our arguing about it, because it would not do either of us any good.' With such an ultimatum, I have no further trouble with any sane, reasonable caller.

Making Patrons Feel at Home

"I have always endeavored to be pleasant and polite with customers—to make them feel at home. I find that the frostiest and chilliest individual on earth will generally thaw out in the sunshine of friendship and geniality. I do not mean familiarity. A smile will work wonders in this poor, work-a-day age, but, of course, he is a hero who can smile all the time.

"To give you some examples. We have a young fellow who comes into the store and says he wants a pair of shoes. He would have us show him every pair in the shop, if we were willing. We know all along by his attitude that he is not going to buy, and, after fussing with him for half an hour or so, he will say: 'Well, this is the first place I have been in, and I am not buying today, only looking around. If I cannot find anything better, I will probably call back later this afternoon, or tomorrow.' We know very well that we will never see him again, yet we preserve our sweet disposition and the only satisfaction we get out of the incident is that somebody else is going to get a similar dose to what we have and you know, 'misery loves company.'

"Then there is the other fellow, who enters with a swagger or sense of personal importance. We invite him to be seated and start to remove his shoes. He says: 'Oh, no, show me what you have first.' He gives you no idea of what he wants. If this fellow is inclined to be an ordinary, good-natured chap, you can generally knock out his proposition, if you smile and say: 'Show you what we have!—that is a large proposition, since you have not indicated the nature of the shoe that you desire. We have several hundred pairs here on the shelves—it will take a good while to pull down the cartons—but if you do not mind and have a few hours to spare, why, here goes.' Generally, he will see the absurdity of his request, and then give you some indication of the style that he fancies.

Show Me What You've Got

"Another type of customer is the fellow with whom we cannot take any liberties, but who still gets off that dry, stereotyped expression: 'Show me what you have.' We sometimes walk to the window and ask him if he noticed anything at the front that particularly suited him. We tell him that if he points out a shoe, or gives us some idea of his requirements, it will assist us in catering to his needs.

"Sometimes we even have a lord of creation refuse this modest request, insisting on keeping on his shoes and repeating, 'Well, I want to see what you have first.' Under the circumstances, when a visitor strikes an attitude like that we tell him that in buying shoes there are two essentials to be taken care of. One is to please the eye, and the other is to fit the foot, and while we might please the eye all right, we cannot very well fit the foot until we have a look at his 'understandings,' in order to judge of the last that will best suit. Then we tactfully point out that if his old boot were removed, it would give us some idea of how to serve him promptly and efficiently, and would expedite matters, so that it would not take up too much of his valuable time; for generally such a chap thinks he is a very busy person, and does not want to waste many minutes in a shoe store, if he can be satisfied in a short while.

"We never fail to please the great majority of customers by adopting tactics and a liberal-minded policy such as I have outlined. Oh, yes, there are other types and characters of humans that have to be dealt with on an individual basis, and who possibly cannot be classified. On the whole, human nature runs pretty much in a general rut, and three or four groups will cover the majority of the thoughts, tendencies, actions, ideals, prejudices and predilections of most people. Salesmanship is a great study, a wonderful science, which one can follow every day with pleasure and profit if interested in his work," he concluded.

DANGLED PARTNERSHIP BAIT OVER CLERK'S HEAD

When the Hour Came Around to Give Faithful Employee an Interest in the Business He had to Make Way for Another—Rich Rewards Promised by Some Bosses Never Seem to Come Around—Duplicity, Meanness and Double Dealing Well Illustrated

"THE meanest boss that I have ever worked for," declared a Calgary salesman, "was a fellow in a Western Ontario town who kept me working at a small wage for four years, and then raised me $2.00 and promised if I would not ask him for any more money for another three years, he would take me into partnership at the end of that time, and give me a liberal share in the business.

"I was foolish enough to swallow the bait, and although I received two good offers from other firms, I turned these down, expecting that at the end of the period mentioned, I would be allowed to put some money in the business and be given so much stock for my services, for I had been working for fully eight dollars less weekly than I could have obtained in similar establishments. I had no written agreement to this effect, but naturally took the proprietor's word, and served him faithfully and well.

Wife's Relatives to Rescue

"About two months before the time limit had expired, and when I fully expected to be a partner, I was called into the office one morning and told a very pathetic story about his nephew, who hailed from New Brunswick, and had a wide experience in the shoe business, being out of a position.

afford to keep the two of us, and incidentally I had better look around for another situation. He professed to be extremely penitent at the totally unexpected turn that affairs had taken, and informed me that he would assist me to the utmost in getting a new position, and wound up by offering me a bonus of $100.

"Well, I was aroused for once and a milksop no longer, and I told him in pretty plain language what I thought of him, and the shabby, paltry treatment that he was handing out. I even accused him of merely concocting this story in order to get rid of me, now that the time had come when he was to take me into partnership. Of course, he denied any such intention, and tried to convince me that he was perfectly straightforward and sincere in the matter. I told him that he knew very well he was deceiving me with this information, that he was depriving one of a job who had served diligently and faithfully in his interests during the past seven years, and so on, but it was no go. After getting all the bile out of my system, I requested him to give me three months' wages along with the $100 bonus and I would take my departure, but he flatly refused to go one cent further.

Incompetent Had Short Regime

"True enough, there was a young fellow, who came up from the east, but he knew as much about the shoe game as I did of the jewelry manufacturing or the undertaking business. He lasted only a few weeks. I have no doubt that he was simply a stool pigeon brought up by the boss in order to get rid of me. He would not have to implement his verbal partnership agreement which he wanted to squirm out of, and was not man enough to come out flat footed on the matter.

"My object in telling this long story is merely this—do not take any man's word in a business partnership, or arrangement, but have it down in black and white, in legal form, duly witnessed, signed, sealed and delivered, and you will not be suddenly euchred out of your position, promised returns and established connection, the same as I was.

"Many bosses lead clerks on by letting them think there is a great future ahead, and after the preliminary conditions have been fulfilled and the time comes to "cash in" on the proposition, there is always a string attached to it or, hocus-pocus, some raw deal is pulled off and everything vanishes into thin air, and the earnest salesman who has been long in the service, often overworked and underpaid, finds himself summarily released and often out of a job."

SOME SUGGESTIONS FOR SUMMER SELLING

THE summer season is here. Summer lines should now be displayed prominently, and as white goods will be worn extensively this season a window trim that will show these to advantage will be very appropriate.

PLATE NO. 1, SHOWING COMPLETED FRAME

A frame work for a back ground can easily be made with seven-eighths strips about two inches wide. It is best to make the frame work in sections, and join them together. Plate 1 shows the completed frame with the manner of jointing, bracing and nailing. Plate 2 shows various methods of making joints. The braces had better be as Fig. 7 for that leaves the back of the frame flush, but not like Fig. 9 and as shown at the bottom right hand corner of the completed frame. Cover this frame with building board of which there are various types on the market. This may then be kalsomined, painted or papered to suit.

For a trim in which to show white goods, yellow is a splendid ground color. Yellow cheese cloth can be used, and tacked over the bottom and gathered or ruffled at equal points and tacked to the wall-board. The relieving or decorating colors may be pink and light blue. Ribbons always give a rich effect, but crepe tissue paper is now obtainable in various widths and serves quite nicely.

Plate No. 3 shows the completed back ground to which the cheese cloth may be fastened.

If desired, white cotton may be tacked on the bottom of the window, and given a coat of kalsomine, the correct shade. After it is dry it can be marked off into squares with a piece of crayon and straight edge. If a couple of thicknesses of paper are put under the cotton it will protect the bottom of the window from the kalsomine.

While these colors are suitable for white goods, other shoes will show to good advantage also.

What about a bride's window for June? June is the month of weddings, and it is well to time your displays to anything a month may feature. If your windows are large enough a full sized figure dressed in a bride's costume and posed in some sitting position to display the feet, will make a very attractive window. You need not be confined to wedding shoes or slippers alone; there will be the "going away" shoes, street and house shoes, shoes for the bridesmaids, for the groom and groomsman, all of which can be in the bride's window display.

The trim can be of white cheese cloth or other white material and treated the same as given above for the white goods' window. The decorating colors may be pink or light green, or light blue.

Should you desire to show white goods in this bride's window it can be done by setting them on something dark.

A little thought and planning and a little common sense ingenuity on the part of the window trimmer will be resultant in a very effective and attractive window.

TRYING TO BLUFF THE RETAILER

"Got any children's shoes?"

"Oh, yes, lots of them."

"Have you got B's?"

"No, but we have T's."

"Oh, you have, have you? Glad of that. I know Mr. T. very well.

"Is that so?" said the retailer.

"Sure I do," rejoined the big, prosperous-looking, rather tall caller. "Why he is an old friend of mine. I knew him when he first went into business. He has got on great, hasn't he. Makes a fine line of shoes—nothing better going."

To all of which the retailer assented.

The garrulous visitor asked if he had certain sizes in stock, and finding that the dealer had, said: 'I will take two pairs.' How much are they?"

"Four dollars a pair," was the response.

"Four dollars a pair! Good gracious! Do you want to rob a man? I could send down to T's factory and get them cheaper than that."

"All right, if you can get the factory to supply you, you are welcome to try. I think though that you will find I am selling them cheaper than the figure the manufacturers are asking to-day."

Finding that this bluff was of no avail, the caller, who was a traveler for a line of goods other than shoes, said: "I suppose you allow travelers a discount?"

"No, I do not," was the dealer's rejoinder, "why should they get special preference. They should be around here in these times telling us we are not getting enough profit on our shoes, in view of the high cost of footwear, the overhead outlay in doing business, the advancing scale of wages, and the rising expense of living. No, I cannot give a traveler discount, particularly as you are not a shoe representative," was the final retort of the merchant. The affair ended up by the visitor, who had evidently been working a bluff game, so far as knowing T— was concerned, handing over eight dollars for the two pairs of shoes and leaving with a pleasant "Good-day."

But here is where the second part of the narrative comes in. Many a man has not nerve enough to turn down a proposition himself, or to see a disagreeable thing through, but will call his wife to the rescue, and let her do the underhand or sneaky work. On the following Monday, the wife of the man appeared with the two pairs, at the store where he bought them, and asked if she might be refunded the money for them, on the pretext that they did not suit the children.

"I will not give you the money back on the conditions that those shoes were sold," said the shoe merchant.

"We thought we would like the children to come down and be fitted personally," was the sweet response.

"That will be all right, but I cannot return the cash for the shoes. I will give you a credit note for eight dollars, good at any time for merchandise," said the shoeman, "but I certainly will not make a refund."

"Very well," replied the woman, "I guess perhaps we will keep the shoes, after all, if you will not give back the cash. The credit note is no use to us," and out she went in a huff, to think that she too had not been successful in putting one over Mr. Retailer. Oh, these are great days for some of the retail shoemen, who have troubles all their own.

TORONTO MAN SHOWS SHOES SOLED IN NEW WAY

Says He Has Done the Work of Fastening on Soles Without Nails or Stitches for Some Years—Job Done Quickly and Neatly and Stands Severest Strain—Toronto Repair Men Will Compare Method with that Carried Out by Mr. Edwards

IS there anything new under the sun? Sometimes one thinks there is, and at other times, one imagines there is not.

Somewhat of a sensation was sprung on the Toronto Shoe Repairers' Association at their regular fortnightly meeting the last week in April, when a letter was read from George Edwards, of Medicine Hat, Alta., telling of his new way of welding on soles without the use of nails or thread, and how they would give satisfactory, efficient service.

A general discussion followed the reading of this letter, and some of the members told how the process had been known by them in the Old Country, but never heard of in the Dominion.

At the last meeting of the association on May 10th, it was expected that the shoes, which had been sent from Toronto to Mr. Edwards, to be soled by this new method, would reach the association in time. They were evidently delayed in transit, and will be on exhibit at the next session, which will be held on Tuesday, May 22nd, as the regular meeting night falls on the 24th, which is a public holiday.

Mr. Barker Does the Work

W. F. Barker, who has been in the shoe repair business in Toronto for several years, running the Reliable Shoe Repair Shop at 802 Bloor street, and the Rosedale Shoe Repair Co., at 210 Bleeker Street, was not present at the last meeting, as in fact, he recovered only recently from a severe illness.

He, however, read the report of the proceedings in the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL.

What was thought to be something entirely new in Canada, the matter of fastening on soles without nails or stitches, on any make of shoe, and using any kind of leather or substitute, is apparently not so new after all, for Mr. Barker has been doing this work for a long time, putting on several pairs of soles every week by his method.

Mr. Walter Burnill, one of the live shoe repair men of Canada, and a pioneer in the modern equipment line, who was also absent at the last meeting, told how he had made use of this process from time to time, on certain lines of work.

Other members also spoke of having done the same thing to a limited extent, but it appears that Mr. Barker is an extensive employer of the process. He showed two ladies' shoes—one a Goodyear welt, and the other a turn—to which tap soles had been attached by his own "welding." Mr. Barker is a practical boot maker and passed the shoes around, so that the members might see the character of the work that he had done that afternoon. Although the shoes were subjected to the severest strain, twisted and pulled and turned and jerked, the soles did not give way, yet there was not a stitch or a tack to cause the outer sole to adhere to the inner sole.

Mr. Barker has a secret, adhesive solution, preparation, cement or mixture, or whatever you may call it, by which this work is done, and among the shoe retailers who have had shoes re-soled by this method for some years, is Harry Russell, of 292 Yonge street, whose patrons are well pleased with the system. Naturally, Mr. Barker did not give away the nature of his preparation, or adhesive solution, but he stated that he could prepare a shoe for resoling by this "welding" in ten minutes. It required only a few minutes to make the preparation and attach the outer sole, which was first roughened, and also the inner surface to which it is attached. The shoes were then set aside to dry for a couple of hours, and a neat, clean job was effected.

It was explained that where the outer sole was being put on a slip sole it would be necessary to attach the slip sole to the boot by means of stitches or nails or else it would work loose, but Mr. Barker explained that slip soles could also be attached by his new method, and he did several pairs of shoes every week. He had been urged to put his preparation on the market, but had not done so. He had gone along in his own quiet way, until the matter had been brought to his attention through a letter from Mr. Edwards, of Medicine Hat.

A general discussion followed, in which Mr. Barker was asked a number of questions, which he answered fully. He said the new method would withstand wet, heat and cold. It was decided, before anything definite was done in the matter, to wait the return of the shoes sent by the association to Medicine Hat. It is expected that these will be on hand at the next meeting, when Mr. Barker's job will be compared with that of Mr. Edwards, and vice versa. Several members stated that they had never seen the work of attaching soles, the same as presented by Mr. Barker, and would like to buy some of the solution, or adhesive, to try out in their own shops.

Mr. Edwards Backs up His Work

Secretary A. Butterworth read a letter from George Edwards, of the New Way Shoe Store, Medicine Hat, Alta., who had offered to weld leather or composition soles on any pairs of shoes sent him by the association in order to demonstrate the success and worth of his new process. In his communication Mr. Edwards said: "I have repaired the boots and am returning them by express, together with samples of the different material used on the bottoms of the boots. You will readily see that the work can be done on winter wear as well as spring or fall wear. This surely does away with a stitcher for which you are paying a big price, and with that monotonous thing that is called royalty. You can do away with the expensive stitcher and just use a finisher with a trimmer for the edges. You can thus have a shop that is more up-to-date than anything that you have now with a lot of costly equipment. I am very busy just now and did not have the time to do the work as well as I would like. As for the test, I will leave that to you. I am sending you a piece of Rinex soling with a lap weld. A good way to test this Rinex is to give it a severe twist and a pull, or leave it in water for a week and then in the sun, and then twist and pull. You will find that none of these samples will separate where they are welded; the other goods will separate first. I am sending you an old rubber sole taken from a boot made and sewn on in the factory with a Goodyear stitcher. You will readily see what the stitcher did. My method will not do that. There are no stitches to rip or wear out and there is nothing to rip on the boots that I have repaired for you. Just take notice of the Rinex heels welded on without nails. This is a hummer for the repair man."

No definite action will be taken until the next gathering. Mr. Burnill explained how he had attached soles for several years by this method, and told of the well-known firm of Dicks, of Glasgow, who make an entire shoe by means of adhesives, without the use of a single nail or stitch. However, the subject of "welding" soles, as it is called by Mr.

Edwards, has set the trade agoing, and the interest in this new development, which may have been known for years, but has only recently been brought to light, is becoming keener all the while.

Early Closing the Year Round

Nine new members recently joined the association and, under President Chas. F. Robertson, things are kept on the move, everybody taking part in the discussions.

Another vital topic was that of early closing, and the getting up of a petition to present to the city council, asking that a bylaw be prepared, so that all shoe repair shops shall close at eight o'clock every night, the year round, except Saturday.

It was at first thought advisable to incorporate in this petition, that shoe repair establishments should close every Wednesday or every Saturday afternoon, which ever was more convenient, during the months of May, June, July, August and September. It was, however, decided to leave this reference out of the petition. The matter of closing half a day a week is optional with the members, although the majority of them are taking a half-holiday during the summer months, and are already locking their places of business at eight o'clock every night.

The movement is intended to widen the early closing operation, and it was decided that a properly worded petition should be obtained and submitted at the next meeting for the consideration of the members, who will work in their own districts in order to secure signatures. It is believed that eight o'clock in the evening is late enough for any man to work and that early closing will help better the conditions of the shoe repair man, without entailing any financial loss.

It is possible that if sufficient signatures are secured (outside the members of the association, for they have already gone on record as eight o'clock closers), that the city council may be asked to pass a bylaw. The co-operation, goodwill and unity of the trade generally will be depended upon in any event to give force and effect to this progressive step in the weal and welfare of the sons of St. Crispin.

SHOEMAKER IS REGULAR "SHERLOCK HOLMES"

Abraham Shoemaker, 429 Selkirk street, Winnipeg, need not tell his occupation. Should any one inquire regarding his means of living he can truthfully say: "I am which my name implies." Abraham is a shoemaker by profession, as well as by name, and is somewhat of a sleuth.

THE RACE AFTER THE JITNEY

In fact, his recent achievement in this respect reads like a chapter from the triumphs of Sir Arthur Conan Doyle's "Sherlock Holmes."

John Otto, 410 Mountain street, Winnipeg, is a tailor in that city, employed in the Kensington Building, and lately appeared in the police court in his stocking feet, charged with the theft of a pair of shoes from Abraham. It appears that Otto had only the one pair, and recently left them with the shoe mending man to be re-soled. Otto shuffled to work and home again in his slippers, until Saturday night, when he called at the cobbler's shop for his footwear. Mr. Shoemaker is a very busy man, and he could not locate the "understandings" that the tailor had left, so he found another pair which he offered to sell Otto for $4.00. The tailor tried on the shoes, found that they fitted perfectly, and while the cobbler was engaged waiting on another customer, the devotee of the needle and shears suddenly departed with the $4.00 boots, eluding payment for them.

Here is where the humorous part comes in—Shoemaker, in telling his story to the court, said that for several days he looked for Otto. The only information he had by which he could locate him, was that the fellow resided on Mountain avenue. The footgear healer thought his absconding customer worked in Eaton's big store, in the prairie capital, but on looking over the pay list he could not find the name. He also knew that Otto worked late, sometimes until ten o'clock, and from five o'clock in the afternoon until nine, Shoemaker stood on Main street, Winnipeg, at the corner of Mountain avenue, behind a telegraph pole, waiting for Otto to alight from the trolley at this transfer point. He took up a position there for three days, but Otto did not appear. Then one morning early, while Shoemaker was walking down Mountain avenue, he saw Otto. The tailor jumped into a jitney—and the shoemaker gave chase after the vehicle, and began to clamber in.

"Here, get out, there is no room for you in this rig," said Otto.

"All right," responded Shoemaker, "I will sit on the door." He followed his quarry down to the Kensington, saw him go in and noticed that he wore the shoes for which he had neglected to pay. The cobbler called a policeman and had the tailor arrested. In court, Otto said he was going to settle for the shoes next pay day, and the magistrate decided to allow the proceedings to drop if the boots were returned to the son of St. Crispin. This was done, and Otto was set free, but he could not leave the lockup, as he was in his stocking feet, and had to wait for half a day before he could get any footwear to accommodate him, so that he could resume his work.

It pays to settle promptly for goods received, is the moral that might well be drawn from the foregoing incident. Shoemaker lost much valuable time tracing his man and Otto wasted several hours in police headquarters.

SAYS HIS WORK WILL STAND EVERY TIME

W. F. Barker, who demonstrated the success of his method in attaching outer soles to shoes, without the use of nails or stitches before the Toronto Shoe Repairers' Association, has been a resident of Toronto for about twenty-two years, and is well-known in shoemaking circles. He was born in that centre of shoe industry, Northampton, England, and learned the shoe repairing trade thoroughly in the Old Country. Since coming to Canada, he worked for nine years in the finishing department of Minister-Myles Shoe Co., and also with R. Dack & Son. Six years ago he started a shoe repair shop at 210 Bleeker street, and three years later opened out at 802 Bloor street west. He has made a specialty for a long time of attaching soles by his patent cement, the ingredients of which are known only to him. He states that a sole fastened by this means will not come loose under any circumstances—no matter how great the strain—and will stand wet, heat and cold. No water can penetrate to the foot through the sole, as the substance between the inner and outer sole is positively wet proof.

SHOEMAKER WORKS GARDEN AT 107

Jos. Mantell, in his 107th year, the oldest shoemaker in the world and the oldest Free Mason in Canada, is doing his bit in the food production campaign. At the residence of a relative, 49 Rainsford road, Toronto, he enjoys the open air life and is busy digging and hoeing in the garden for several hours a day. That plot of ground is a source of great delight to Mr. Mantell, who is hale and hearty, his only physical ailment being a slight deafness, which, however, preceded the coming of old age. He has two sons who are now old, as the world reckons human ages nowadays. One of them, John, is in the Yukon. For 27 years the father had not heard from him, but a letter came the other day.

JOSEPH MANTELL, TORONTO

They are the children by his first wife, who died many years ago. The second wife has been dead 14 years.

Joseph Mantell was born in Endon, which was the former name for what is really Old London. Eighty years ago he started for Canada. On the voyage across the ship's flag flew half-mast in mourning for George IV., who had just died. But before the new world shore was reached a clipper passed them; she brought the news that Queen Victoria had just been crowned. For thirty years, until he reached the age of 99, Joseph Mantell followed the trade of shoe-making at Tillsonburg. Since then he has divided his time between Peterboro and the home of his grand-daughter, Mrs. Edwards, in Toronto.

THOSE GAY TORONTO REPAIRERS

Here is a tribute paid to the fraternal spirit and social qualities of the members of the Toronto Shoe Repairers' Association by the "Shoe Repair Shop" of St. Louis, which says:—

"The Shoe Repairers' Association of Toronto evidently seems to be one for co-operation not only in work, but also in play. Plans are being made to hold picnics and outings for the members and their families during the summer months as a relief of dull care which hovers over many heads. Various entertainments and instructive lectures are in consideration, with a view of making the meetings of the association so desirable that the members will feel they are attending, not merely from a sense of duty, but because of the pleasure derived in doing so. Congeniality is dominant at all meetings, for everything of a cut-and-dried nature is eliminated. Every member feels what "co-op" means, and the element of pig-headedness is being wiped out entirely.

"The early closing question is also receiving great consideration by this association. Some members have already started the plan, and found they have lost nothing by it. It is likely a petition will be prepared in proper shape in the near future and presented to the city council for enactment. The members of the association are strongly in favor of such an arrangement.

C. H. Albee, the new superintendent of the Perth Shoe Co., has entered upon his duties, while M. J. Sheehy, late superintendent of the Perth Shoe Co., has gone to Quebec, where he assumes a like position with the John Ritchie Co.

HOW HE FIGURES IT ALL OUT

Editor SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL:

Being somewhat interested in shoe repairing, and reading your articles along these lines, I am prompted to add a little from time to time to the subject as I see it. I can never understand, either from your letters or from the reports of the several association meetings, how the prices of repairing are determined, and published, or what rule of mathematics is used to arrive at the figure charged for such work. I am not convinced that the prices given out as a fair charge are right or anywhere near right.

I am not writing from the viewpoint of a city repair man, but am applying myself to the conditions of towns of 2,500 people, where probably three repair men carry on business. I am going to take such shops as are operated by the proprietor himself, with the aid of one boy, without machinery, excepting a Singer patching machine, and his own small tools. We have lots of shops, such as these, carrying on business from year to year, without knowing whether their business is paying them or not.

I am enclosing a statement of the greatest possible revenue that can possibly be made by such a business, with a fair, overhead expense. If anyone having a shop under such conditions cares to keep an account in this way for one year, he can tell whether or not his business is paying him. I have no doubt but that the overhead expenses would be greater than I allow and that the receipts from such a business would be very much less.

Yours etc.,
E. H. GULLIDGE.

Oakville, Ont.

Receipts	Overhead Expenses
A business of $25 per week for 52 weeks in the year, equals $1,300.00.	One man, $2.00 a day $624.00
My estimate for leather cost is just one-quarter of what one would receive, say for sewn half soles and heels. Basing this job at $1.60, twenty-five per cent. or one-quarter would be 40 cents for the leather used.	One boy, 50c. a day 156.00
A fourth of the year's gross receipts goes for leather, and on a business of $1,300 there would be $325 expended for leather on the average.	Rent of store, $10 per month..... 120.00
I do not believe in a town of 2,500 people a repairer can do a business of $1,300 annually or $25 per week. Deducting cost of leather ($325) leaves only $975 to cover the wages of the proprietor and a boy, rent, light, heat and all overhead expenses. NEW SHOE FACTORY FOR TORONTO

The Phillips Bros. Shoe Co., Limited, is being incorporated with headquarters in Toronto and a capital stock of forty thousand dollars. The company has secured eight thousand square feet of space in the large building of the General Leather Goods, Limited, 1191 Bathurst street, Toronto, and equipment is being installed. The premises are light and airy and well adapted for shoemaking. The firm will manufacture children's stitchdowns exclusively and when in full operation early in July will have a capacity of six hundred pairs a day.

Jasper W. Phillips, who will have charge of the office, recently resigned his position as manager of the Unique Shoe Co., Limited, Simcoe, which removed to that town last year from Toronto. His brother, James Phillips, will supervise the making room and another brother, William, will superintend the cutting department. For the last seven years the latter has been foreman of the cutting department of the Pingree Shoe Co., Detroit, and has a thorough insight into the shoemaking line, while James Phillips was for some years in Toronto with Cooper and Smith, the J. D. King Co. and the Singer Sewing Machine Co. The three brothers, who are the only members of the new firm, are all practical experienced shoemakers.

Frank Sisman, son of T. Sisman, of Aurora, who spent several years in his father's factory, and latterly has been on the road for the United Shoe Machinery Co., has been appointed superintendent of the Unique Shoe Co., Simcoe, which has amalgamated with the Sovereign Mitt, Robe and Glove Co., late of Delhi, Ont., the latter plant being removed to Simcoe. A new charter will be taken out and the name of the amalgamated concerns will be the Simcoe Shoe and Glove Co., Limited.

FORTY YEARS IN THE LEATHER GAME

(See Front Cover)

James P. Donald, manager of the historic Logan Tanneries at Lyons Brook, just outside of Pictou, N.S., has an intimate acquaintance with the leather trade. He started in the business with Daniel McLean in Toronto, with whom he stayed until 1890. He was later with Beal Bros., Toronto, and then with the R. M. Beal Leather Co., Lindsay, until his acceptance of his present post about five years ago. Always interested in civic, religious and charitable work, he also possesses the proud distinction of having three of his six sons overseas. One of his boys, after doing trench duty, recently left the hospital and is now in the Canadian Records Office at Rouen, France. Another is with the 13th Battalion at the fighting front and a third is still in England anxiously awaiting his chance to get across, being with the 92nd as drill instructor at Blighty.

Mr. Donald has developed the Logan Tanneries, founded by John Logan sixty-one years ago, to a wonderful extent, and the present output is two thousand sides a week of hemlock sole leather. Twice the industry has been visited by fire but each time it has emerged stronger than ever. An enterprising and public spirited business man, Mr. Donald was born at Whitby, Ont., and educated at the Toronto public schools, the Model school and the Jarvis street Collegiate Institute. In a connection of over forty years with the leather game he has won many friends.

few pairs on the sample sizes to make up his salesmen's samples. If the shoe sells well, then is the time the last manufacturer gets the fruits of his work, for, as the orders for shoes come in to the shoe manufacturer, he in turn has to order lasts from the last manufacturer.

When the order for lasts is received, say on four widths, B, C, D, E, a model is made for each width. On men's, seven is the model size, on women's, size four, and from these models, the lasts are turned out by the turning lathe, a wonderful machine, that simply by manipulation of gauges, turns all sizes from four to twelve, all from the size seven model, and by reversing the lathe, a left foot last may be turned from the right foot model, or vice versa. Each of these lathes has a capacity of about fifty pairs per day.

From the turning lathe, the lasts pass on through the various departments on racks, much the same as shoes. The hinge last, (as shown in the illustration) has been through between fifty and sixty distinct operations. On an order of six hundred pairs, about a week's time is necessary to complete the lasts and make shipment.

Every last must have certain measurements, for instance, a size seven, C width, in men's should measure 8½ around the ball, with 8 3-8 around the waist and 8 3-8 around the in-step. A size eight is 1-3 of an inch longer than a size seven, and a size 7 D width is 1-8 of a size longer than a size 7 C width, and 1-12 inches wide on the bottom; and constant attention must be paid to these details during the different operations.

Modern last making is well represented in Canada by the United Last Co., Limited, who have a thoroughly modern up-to-date factory in Maisonneuve, Que., with 24 turning lathes and equipment for a capacity of 1,200 pairs per day.

In the illustration on page 30 the small roughly finished last was made away back in 1862, in Halifax, by an uncle of Mr. H. L. Tower. The other last represents one of the very newest turned out by the United Last Co.

WESTERN SHOEMAN WHO HAS DONE HIS BIT

One of the most progressive wholesale and retail shoe firms of the West is Dowling & Creelman, of Brandon, Man., who started in that city nearly nineteen years ago, opening up in the retail line. In 1912 they branched out in a wholesale way as well and have worked up a splendid business. The members of the firm are R. R. Dowling and Major W. J. Creelman. Both are experienced and alert business men. Major Creelman was born in Georgetown, Ont., where he worked for some time in a general store, and then came to Toronto. Going west about twenty years ago, he became associated with Mr. Dowling in the retail shoe game two years later. While in Toronto Major Creelman was a member of the Queen's Own Rifles and, when the 99th Manitoba Rangers was organized in Brandon, he started in as Quartermaster with the rank of Captain and was with them until the war broke out. Then he joined the 79th Overseas Battalion as Captain but was later promoted to Major. He went to England with the battalion, when it was broken up, and crossed to France with the 16th Battalion. He served with them until the taking of the Regina trench, in which engagement he was wounded. He received three shrapnel bullets in the right foot and was also hit by a bomb which was thrown from a German trench, sustaining several wounds on the right leg and right arm. After lying on the ground throughout the day he managed to crawl back to the communication trench and from there was taken to the hospital and afterwards sent to England where he remained until December last. Obtaining leave of absence he came home to Brandon. Major Creelman had expected to return to the front ere this and rejoin his battalion, but he has not made as fast progress toward recovery as his many friends would like to see. It is hoped, however, that he will in time regain his former good health and strength.

The main reason, it seems, in the losing of trade, is the indifference of salespeople.

Attempts of substitution, errors, tricky sales methods, over-insistence of salespeople, insolence, unnecessary waiting, are all relating to service, and all these faults are easy to be overcome by instruction or by adherence to certain rules and regulations.

It is interesting that only one of the two hundred answers tabulated give as the reasons for quitting the stores "the poor quality of goods."

Another interesting feature brought out by these letters is that the average man, describing his experience, is very exhaustive in giving details, names, dates, places. All these were remembered with an accuracy that plainly showed how deeply the "impression of affront" had sunk.

Some of these experiences dated back several years still rankled in the customer's mind.

The average patron of a store is very sensitive and assumes that all the faults of the salespeople is due to the attitude of the merchant himself. They reason that the clerks are reflections of the employer.

Try to eliminate errors and all other faults mentioned in this article. A monthly get-together meeting is a splendid place to air certain phases of store service and suggest remedies. It is sort of a clearing house of many ideas, all directed toward the betterment and the success of the store.

TAKING HEADS OF ALL DEPARTMENTS INTO FIRM

Successful Toronto Shoe Merchant Rewards Faithful Service by Giving His Employees a Financial Interest in His Big Business—Has Progressive Ideas on Management, Co-operation and Responsibility—Large Addition Erected to Store Known as the "Big 88"

TO ensure permanency of service, and continued, active co-operation on the part of his staff, to afford them wider scope and larger monetary returns, and at the same time to take certain responsibilities off his own shoulders, and allow others to share in the management and participate to a greater extent in the successful shoe business that he has built up, Warren T. Fegan, of the "Big 88" Queen street west, Toronto, will, in a few months, adopt a new and progressive business policy.

Three of his salesmen, who have been in the service for many years will be taken into partnership. This move is entirely voluntary on the part of Mr. Fegan, who has been thirty-one years in the shoe game, and made a splendid record. Mr. Fegan has definite, progressive ideas in regard to recognition of employees, which extend further than the mere dollar mark and weekly wage. For instance, last fall, in order to give the heads of his departments an outing, and at the same time afford them an education on how business is conducted in large footwear establishments on the other side of the line, he took them on a trip, visiting Detroit, Cleveland and Buffalo. The result was that many valuable pointers and timely suggestions were picked up, and the co-operative spirit of the "Big 88" has never been as strong and active as it is at the present time.

Will Take Extended Vacation

Mr. Fegan is not only a shoeman, but the son of a shoemaker. He was born at Jordan, Ont., nearly fifty years ago, and in January next, when he will celebrate the half-century of his nativity, he purposes taking an extended holiday, along with his wife and family, and spending several months in California. He does not believe in deferring until late in life, the pleasures afforded by a modified amount of leisure and at the same time, desires to give those in his service something more to look forward to than a salary envelope.

The young men who will be taken into partnership are F. C. Henry, who is in charge of the women's department; H. O. Doran, in charge of the men's department, and E. C. Tripp, who supervises the infants', children's, boys', youths', girls' and misses' departments. Mr. Henry has been with Mr. Fegan for twenty years; Mr. Doran for seventeen years. Both started upon their careers as messenger boys, and have known no other boss. E. C. Tripp has been with Mr. Fegan for five years. As department heads they have full charge of the stock keeping, display, sorting and selling. Lately they have been assisting in the buying and from this out, will devote more attention to the purchasing end, Mr. Fegan gradually withdrawing.

Getting Started in Shoe Game

Starting in the shoe game with J. W. McAdam, in November, 1886, at the corner of Queen and Teraulay streets, where the Manning Chambers now stand, Mr. Fegan hustled parcels and swept the floors. In February the following year, Mr. McAdam moved to 88 Queen street west, where the premises had formerly been a furniture stand, and were altered and renovated to suit a footwear stock. In 1893, Mr. McAdam desired to retire. Mr. Fegan, in company with the late Ewen McDiarmid, of Toronto, took over the stock, the firm being known as Fegan & McDiarmid. This partnership continued for seven years, or until 1900, when the present proprietor assumed his partner's interest, and has since run the establishment under the registered title of the "Big 88." A large stock is carried and business has been growing to such an extent, that it has been found necessary to erect an addition. The extension is fifty-five feet long by twenty-five feet wide and will give the "Big 88" 113 feet in depth. Mr. Fegan owns eighty-three feet frontage on Queen street, the stores on either side of the "Big 88" being his property.

Selection of Store Name

"How did you happen to hit upon the name of the 'Big 88,'" was asked of Mr. Fegan.

"Well it is like this," he replied, "as a boy I used to go to St. Catharines quite frequently, and I noticed a clothing store there on St. Paul street was conducted under the name of the "Big 22." The figures were large, the somewhat unusual title caught my fancy, and I always remembered the sign. When I got into business for myself, I thought it would be suitable for my line, and accordingly I had the name, the 'Big 88' registered. It is easily pronounced, and remembered. I attribute any success that I have met with in the shoe line to industry, perseverance, and honorable dealing. I have endeavored during the thirty-one years that I have been connected with the game, to play it squarely and fairly, and the result is, that business has grown from year to year in an encouraging way.

"My father, Robert K. Fegan, who lives at Vineland, Ont., in the Niagara district, was, I think, until he had a paralytic stroke last fall, the oldest working shoemaker in Canada, having been for seventy-two years on the bench. He is to-day eighty-six years old. I remember as if it were yesterday, when I started in as a messenger for Mr. McAdam, who, I may say, is running a shoe repair establishment on East Seneca street, Buffalo, where he has been for some years. I made up my mind that if hard work and application would bring success, I would attain it. The three heads of departments—'boys' I call them—whom I propose to take into partnership, have well and worthily won any recognition that I can bestow. They are on the average, the same age as I was when I obtained exclusive control of the 'Big 88,' being then just thirty-three years. I have always felt that a man can enjoy pleasures and pastimes at fifty, which, later, may be rendered out of the question, by reason of bodily infirmity and advancing years. I believe in promotion in the service and in participation in the profits, and for this reason, as stated, intend taking 'the boys' into partnership.

"The details of the arrangement I am not prepared to give at present, but they will be settled upon in ample time. From my own view-point, the young man, who has nothing more to look forward to than a weekly wage, after years of service, will naturally base his duties and work on that limitation, but given higher and wider interests, he will develop the best and brightest that is in him.

Clean Cut and Aggressive Quartette

"One other thing that I might mention,—and I do not say this in any boastful or narrow-minded spirit,—is that neither myself nor the three young men who will become associated with me in partnership, know the taste of liquor or tobacco. Perhaps a similar quartette of shoemen in the one establishment, working together for years, as we have, cannot be found anywhere, in this day when the majority of men smoke."

It is expected the extension to the "Big 88" will be completed in a week or two, and other improvements carried out to the interior of the store, which will result in a rearrangement of the stock, and better facilities for serving the public.

"I have no doubt," concluded Mr. Fegan, "that as partners, 'the boys' and I will continue to work together just as harmoniously and smoothly as we have as employer and employees, during the last fifteen or twenty years. Our interests have been mutual, and, with added responsibility, 'the team play,' as I call it, of the 'Big 88' will be more effective and aggressive, for we are going out after bigger business than ever."

SPECIAL CHILDREN'S DEPARTMENT OPENED

The new children's department of the Walk-Over Boot Shop, Toronto, is now open and stocked with representative lines. It is located in the basement and is reached from the rear of the store by a nine-foot wide mahogany stairway of easy descent. At the landing, where the stairs turn, is a handsome plate glass wall showcase for the display of evening footwear. The dimensions of the children's department are sixty by thirty feet, and the floor is covered with an olive green linoleum, while the shelving, which extends to the ceiling, is of the single carton type, with uniform Walk-Over labels. The mahogany settees are of the low seated, high back design, with ornamental ends, and particularly suited for catering to the trade of the little folk. Women's evening slippers are also shown in this department. The ceiling is nine feet high, and the interior is brilliantly lighted with nitrogen lamps.

Among other improvements is the removal of the shoe polishing stand downstairs, to the left of the stairway leading to the children's section. A 22-foot Goodyear shoe repair outfit and stitcher have been installed on the ground floor at the rear. The store now does its own repairing, and has a competent staff. The special children's department, and the establishment of its own repair branch are further evidences of progress and expansion on the part of the Walk-Over Boot Shop.

THE "GROUND-GRIPPER" IS NEW LINE

Getty & Scott, Limited, of Galt, are putting on the market a line of specially constructed shoes which will be known by the registered name of the "Ground-Gripper." The shoe is constructed to conform to the natural lines of the human foot and is particularly adapted to growing feet. The natural formed bottom corsets the arch, causing an even distribution of weight and ensuring real comfort. The "Ground-Gripper" will be made in women's, misses', child's, boys', youths' and little gents'.

DECLARE NEW RATES ARE EXCESSIVE

At a meeting of manufacturers of Kitchener and Waterloo, held this week, at which representatives of the different shoe interests were present, the proposed increase in freight rates was discussed and a committee appointed to inquire fully into the matter. This committee will report at a general meeting of the Kitchener Manufacturers' Association, which will be held on Saturday night. The manufacturers do not object to any reasonable increase in freight rates as a war measure, but they take exception to method or principles under which an abnormal advance is likely to be put into effect by the Canadian Railway Association. The difference in the new classification, the change in rate of 15 per cent. in regular classification, and the increase in the minimum rates as proposed in clause No. 17, effect an increase of about 150 per cent. in some lines. Manufacturers declare that they are willing to bear a fair and just raise in freight rates, but cannot see their way clear to meet the exorbitant levy which, it is proposed to put into effect and the change in classification which will further add to transportation charges on all shoes, particularly those sent to the West. The manufacturers also state that if the new schedule becomes effective the retailer will have to bear the increased cost of carriage, which to distant points in the West would mean twenty-five cents a pair in some instances.

NEWSY HAPPENINGS FROM QUEBEC

Ed. Gaumont, superintendent of the Plessisville Shoe & Leather Manufacturing Co., of Plessisville, P.Q., was a visitor in the city recently. He reports that his firm received an order for 20,000 pairs of navy boots, and the factory is running to capacity at present.

Among other visitors to Quebec recently, were A. A. Deverill, of Novelties, Limited, Toronto; H. Billcliff, of Frank W. Whitcher Co., Boston, Mass.; F. J. Pirego, of the Steel Co. of Canada, Limited, Montreal; E. St. Armand, Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., Limited, Montreal; R. E. Woodward, of F. E. Woodward & Sons, Lachine, and James Boyd, representing the Nugget Polish Co., Montreal.

M. Lagace, of Lagace & Lepinay, has returned from a business trip to the West.

Shoe factories in general are quiet just at present, but the John Ritchie Co. and Gale Bros. are exceptionally busy filling orders.

Nails for shoe repair work have again raised in price, two cents a pound advance being asked. Some lines in cotton threads have advanced between ten and twenty cents a spool. The price for sole leather remains the same, and there is a great demand for Neolin and other leather substitute soles. Collections are fairly good, and not many complaints are heard from retailers regarding sales.

J. Charland, shoe retailer, is building a fine private residence.

Leon Chevalier, shoe repairer, has opened a retail shoe store on Des Fosses street, where he will carry a full stock of all the newest and most popular styles in footwear.

Pleau & Frere have opened a shoe repair shop, and have installed a Progressive shoe repair equipment purchased from Dupere & Garant.

CATTLE RAISING ON BIG SCALE

Asking for co-operation from the Ontario Government, similar to what they have received from the Alberta and Dominion Governments, the British Cattle Supply Co. interviewed the Premier, Sir William Hearst, Commissioner of Agriculture, Dr. George C. Creelman, and Deputy Minister, Bert Roadhouse, in Toronto, recently.

The company are going in for cattle raising in Ontario. At first their plans were to raise all their cattle in Alberta, but the fact that cattle can be raised in Northern Ontario came before them and they decided to ask the Government for co-operation.

The company want an area of 25,000 acres at least, and the Government has practically agreed to lease them this land for fifteen years at a nominal fee of 5 cents an acre. At the present time the company have 1,500 cattle on grass in Alberta.

Those on the deputation were: R. H. McElroy, M.P.P., of Carleton, secretary of the company, who introduced them; T. G. Good, president of the company and manager of the Union Stock Yards; Sam Hisey, president of the Live Stock Shippers' Association; D. B. Wood, of the Wood Milling Co., of Hamilton; A. C. Gordon, president Hamilton Harbor Board; C. H. Maybee, Toronto; Harry Talbot, head buyer for William Davies Co., and general manager of the company, and J. H. Fussell, of Toronto.

THE NEW MANAGER OF NEW BRANCH

A. Parks, manager of the Lethbridge branch of the Canadian Consolidated Rubber Co., Limited, which was recently opened in that city, has been with the firm for six years. He started in the Winnipeg warehouse, being transferred a few months later to the Calgary branch, and since that time he has been working South Eastern Alberta, or the territory handled by the Lethbridge branch under the company's present freight rates. The new warehouse of the Canadian Consolidated Rubber Company is located in the Bowman Block, and the building has been completely renovated and modernized. The ground floor is used as offices and warehouses, while the upper floor is fitted up as a sample room. Lethbridge is a bright, progressive city and the local press refers appreciatively to the enterprise of the Canadian Consolidated Rubber Co., and the appointment of Mr. Parks as local manager.

DEATH OF MR. GEORGE McQUAY

Geo. McQuay, president of the McQuay Tanning Co., Limited, Owen Sound, Ont., passed away on May 5th, in that town, after a long illness. Mr. McQuay, who was born at Smith's Falls, Ont., was sixty-seven years of age, and was one of the most prominent business men in the northern town. The large industry, which he founded, making harness, bridle and collar leather, has long been one of the most substantial and progressively managed factories in the province. Mr. McQuay also took a deep interest in public matters, and was a member of the town council for six years, rendering faithful and efficient service. A wife, two sons, George W. and Edward, and one daughter, Mrs. B. Dutcher, of Los Angeles, survive.

WILL RUN THROUGH TANNERY YARDS

Judgment in favor of the plaintiffs has been delivered in Toronto by Mr. Justice Britton in the action brought by the Toronto Suburban Railway against Beardmore & Co., leather manufacturers, for specific performance of an agreement, where by the plaintiffs have been granted right of way through the Acton Tanning Yards without paying compensation other than for Grand Trunk spurs and changes made to buildings. This right the plaintiffs allege was in consideration of the facilities granted the tanning company for shipping their goods.

The defence in the case was that the late Walter D. Beardmore, although managing director of the company, had no authority to make it and did not actually make it. His Lordship, however, has found to the contrary.

WANT HEMLOCK BARK EMBARGO LIFTED

A recent despatch from Washington says: An urgent appeal to Sir George Foster to bring about a suspension of the Canadian embargo on hemlock bark has been made by Richard Olney, Member of the House of Representatives from Massachusetts. In March, 1916, Canada prohibited the exportation of barks for tanning purposes, but consented to issue permits to certain tanners, permitting them to secure bark already purchased and paid for. In December of last year, however, the Canadian Government discontinued the issuance of permits. Mr. Olney pointed out to the visiting Canadian authorities that the hemlock bark was essential to New England hide and leather interests engaged in the manufacture of army shoes, and urged that in accordance with other co-operative measures between the United States and Canada that the embargo on bark be lifted.

HAS THOROUGH KNOWLEDGE OF LEATHER

As a cutter in the shoe factory of James McCready & Co., John McEntyre, of Montreal, got his first acquaintance with leather in his native city. After working six years for this firm in different departments, he joined Fisk Limited, as a leather sorter and subsequently became manager of this department, remaining with the firm for twelve years. In 1913 Mr. McEntyre branched out for himself and does an exclusive business in cotton shoe linings, rubber cements, bottom fillers and other shoe supplies. He is sole selling agent for Daoust-Lalonde side leathers and splits, and in

SECRET OF HIGH COST OF SHOES IS OUT

The story, and it is vouched for by the veracious Kansas City Star, reads like the old saying about "For want of a nail . . . the kingdom was lost." Here is how it was done:—

A local shoe dealer—a man who deals exclusively in women's shoes and the higher-priced women's shoes—divulged the secret, says the "Literary Digest."

"Women's shoes began to jump about two years ago," he said, "and a little before this jump was noted you may have observed that the women were beginning to wear high-top shoes—shoes with tops higher than they ever had been before—and in colors that presented a rainbow medley when you got enough of them on the street at the same time.

"Naturally the dealers now cry that the shortage in leather has sent up shoe prices, and, while that is true in a sense, the war has had very little to do with the leather shortage. Responsibility really rests with an enterprising retail shoe dealer out in Los Angeles!

"I think it was three summers ago that this particular Los Angeles shoe dealer, owner of the largest and smartest shoe store in the city, conceived the idea that something extraordinary would have to be done if he were to sell shoes to women who were touring in California from the East. There had always been high-topped shoes for women and always shoes in many colors, but they were the kind of shoes (or boots) that one usually saw on the stage. They looked good on the chorus girls and the prima donnas, see?

"Well, this Los Angeles man sent an agent East and he bought up all of these fancy boots that he could find. In the course of a short time there was received by the Los Angeles dealer a job lot of women's fancy shoes that looked like the dream of an opium-eater."

No specialist in futurist art, we are told, could evolve a greater variety of colors than those which tinted the wares he received. There were champagnes, ivories, Havana browns, mouse and pearl-grays, chamois, smoke-grays, pinks, and reds—and, it is whispered, no lack of the strange, exotic tones so romantically called elephant's breath, song-of-roses, pigeon-milk, negro-head, and a thousand other indescribable shades purloined from the "Arabian Nights". Then, adds the narrator:

"The dealer makes a great window display of these fancy boots and the women tourists in Los Angeles look upon them, then gasp for breath, then wonder what has happened in the East—or in Paris—and straightway start to buy.

"In the course of a few months the tourists from California, returning East, began to startle the women who had remained home and were wearing the common old blacks and tans. The stay-at-homes started a rush on the home shoe stores, the home shoe stores started a rush on the manufacturers and, as a consequence, the leather market was upset and the manufacturers were kept busy night and day making new patterns in a dozen different colors, and totally unaware all the time as to the identity of the man who had started all the excitement.

"Manufacturers, of course, don't let golden opportunities skid down the toboggan. They shot up prices and women's boots of the more than ordinary pattern now range in price from $12.00 to $25 a pair. The women would have them and the manufacturers decided that the women must pay for their fun. Not meaning, you understand, that these high-priced boots are not made of expensive material nor that they are not actually worth far more than the fancy boot of an earlier day. But that is the story. The Los Angeles man did it. If it hadn't been for that Los Angeles fellow, I dare say the women would still be wearing blacks and tans, leaving the richer and more colorful boots to the musical comedies, which, in my candid opinion, owe a large measure of their decline to the competition now offered by female pedestrians on our most frequented highways."

Manufacturers of shoe laces have advised their customers that all orders placed now will be accepted subject to ability to make deliveries with prices on an "at value" basis. Fire broke out in the shipping room of the Perth Shoe Co., of Perth, Ont., last week and some goods ready for shipment were damaged by smoke and water. Owing to the good work done by the firemen the blaze was prevented from spreading. The manufacturing equipment is in no way interfered with and the factory is running to capacity as usual.

MR. LE BLANC IS BACK IN OLD STAND AT HALIFAX

Sixteen years ago M. A. LeBlanc, proprietor of the Club Shoe Store, opened business at 69 Gottingen street, Halifax, N.S. He built up a retail trade rapidly, each year showing a gratifying gain. Mr. Le Blanc attributes much of his success in the footwear line to careful buying, industry, courteous treatment of customers, giving good values and obtaining many pointers from the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL. A fire destroyed his store on February 15th last, but the premises have been completely remodelled and renovated.

Mr. LeBlanc has just opened out for business again in the old stand. The dimensions of the establishment are seventy-five feet deep by eighteen feet wide. The accompanying illustration shows the interior of the old store. In the new one, the post, seen in the picture, has disappeared, and the ceiling is supported with steel girders, which makes a decided improvement in the appearance and adds materially to the convenience and facilities of his well managed and well stocked shop.

The store is one hundred feet deep by eighteen feet wide, and all the walls are shelved. Dan McDonald, a member of the firm, who has been in Boston for medical treatment, recently underwent an operation for appendicitis, and is rapidly recovering.

P. J. Milburn, who represents Marlatt & Armstrong Co., Montreal, and has been eighteen years with the firm, having covered all parts of Canada from coast to coast, is now calling upon his many friends in the trade, in his handsome new McLaughlin-Buick, six-cylinder car.

The St. Leger Shoe Co., who operate five stores in Toronto, some months ago inaugurated a nine o'clock closing movement on every day of the week except Saturday. They now intend to take another step in advance, and starting on June 1st, will close all their establishments at 8 o'clock each night except Saturday. They have always been advocates of shorter hours, and are the pioneers in this movement. They will also, as in years past, close all their stores every Wednesday at 12 o'clock during June, July and August, to give their employees a half holiday.

Damage to the extent of $80,000 was done May 8th by a fire which wiped out the plant of the La Duchesse Shoe Co., Desmarais and Vaillancourt, proprietors, Montreal, at Beaudry and Craig street. One fireman was injured slightly. The origin of the fire is not known. It is supposed to have started on the third floor of the four-storey brick building, which is situated in the rear of the Laurentian Baths on Beaudry street. A large quantity of the raw and finished stock of the shoe manufactory, as well as valuable machinery and accessories, were destroyed, and the two upper storeys will probably have to be rebuilt.

Maher, who represents the Reliance Shoe Co. in Toronto and Western Ontario, is now covering his territory with a splendid range of men's, boys', youths' and little gents' McKays and Standard screw, several new models being added. By gaining entrance through the coal chute a thief visited the Walk-Over Boot Shop, Yonge street, Toronto, one night recently, and made off with six pairs of men's shoes. "From time immemorial it has been an established custom in Montreal to move into a new place on May 1st. This custom has been sanctioned by law and seemingly everyone 'worth while' lives up to it," says the "Dominion." This year the Dominion Rubber System joined in the Moving Day, and as a result the Executive Offices, Montreal Branch and the Raincoat Manufacturing Department will now be located at 201 Inspector street, Montreal. The trials and tribulations incident to the removal from Notre Dame street and Papineau Square to Inspector street, were many. But good nature pervaded the whole undertaking and like the heroes at the finish of a good story book,—"every one is living happy ever after."

Just, Canadian Government Commercial Agent at Petrograd, writes to the Trade and Commerce Department, Ottawa, that some of the municipalities of Russia, including the city of Moscow, and other large cities, are arranging to import boots, shoes and rubbers on a large scale in order that their people may get them at reasonable prices. They will be resold to the city populations. Moscow is in the market for 400,000 pairs. Other cities will make purchases on the same scale. Mr. Just states that the Russians would be glad to deal with Canadians if boots, shoes and rubbers can be obtained in Canada at satisfactory prices.

BREEZY BRIEFS FROM ST. JOHN, N.B.

Captain Ralph Hayes, son of Mayor R. T. Hayes, of St. John, N.B., and president of the firm of J. M. Humphrey & Co., wholesale boot and shoe dealers and manufacturers, who is at the front in command of a siege battery unit, has had the misfortune to dislocate his shoulder. This was his first mishap since going overseas with the first Canadian contingent. At the time of the accident he was riding and a shell burst nearby. His horse was wounded and Captain Hayes, in an attempt to throw himself clear, so as to escape being caught under the falling animal, struck on his arm, dislocating the bone at the shoulder. When the member was reset he continued his duties and although suffering excruciating pain, remained with his men.

A wedding of interest took place in Halifax recently when John C. Waterbury, a well-known shoe merchant, was united in marriage with Miss Hilda Cunningham, daughter of Rev. and Mrs. H. W. Cunningham. The ceremony was performed by the father of the bride. Mr. and Mrs. Waterbury enjoyed a wedding tour through the province. Mr. Waterbury is a son of George H. Waterbury, of St. John, formerly of Waterbury & Rising, Limited.

The town council of St. Stephen have asked the New Brunswick legislature to pass an act authorizing the town to guarantee bonds proposed to be issued by Clark Bros., Ltd., shoe manufacturers, doing business at St. Stephen, to the amount of $50,000, the act to provide that the question be finally determined by a vote of the property holders of the town. The shoe company has been doing business for the last four years on a capital of $15,000 common stock and $25,000 preferred stock. The citizens of St. Stephen raised $20,000 of the preferred stock. The factory was built and the first shoes shipped in March, 1914. In December of the same year it was completely destroyed by fire, involving a loss of $16,000 (direct) and a loss of $4,000 in business. On a capital of $20,000 the firm did a business of $309,000, turning their capital stock over fifteen times.

Frank M. Merrill, who is employed with Percy J. Steel, retail boot and shoe dealer, in St. John, was recently elected vice-president of the Senior Epworth League of Portland Methodist Church.

The McRobbie Shoe Co., Limited, have reopened at their former stand in King street, which was badly damaged by fire some few weeks ago. The building has been thoroughly repaired and painted.

The True Fit Shoe Store, situated at 339 Main street, and owned by H. Garson, is holding a "going out of business sale." The store was formerly owned by Captain J. Calhoun, who sold out in 1915 and later went to sea in a large three-masted schooner. He died soon after leaving St. John.

SUDDEN DEATH OF SHOE REPAIRER

Alexander Braid, proprietor of the Park Shoe Repair business, 313 Roncesvalles avenue, Toronto, died very suddenly in his sixty-sixth year. He was seized with a weak spell a short distance from his home on Western avenue, and passed away soon after being carried into the house, his demise being due to heart failure. For many years the late Mr. Braid was employed by the John McPherson Co., Hamilton, and some months ago, came to Toronto, starting in the shoe repair line on Roncesvalles avenue. He is survived by his wife, one son, (who was associated with him in the business) and three daughters. He was a member of the A.F. & A.M., and I.O.O.F., and was a quiet, unassuming, and well-liked citizen.

following resolution was adopted:—"Whereas, all Europe is on short rations and the world is today facing a general famine, and whereas, this country can produce lots of food-stuffs, but owing to scarcity of farm labor a shortage in the coming crop is expected, and, whereas, it would relieve to a certain extent the present conditions and enable us to do our bit in the world struggle; it is moved by J. They were on board the boat two weeks before sailing, and were not even allowed to write a letter, but fortunately, were with the members of the Royal Commission, on their way to Washington, and had some talks with Rt. Hon. A. J. Balfour, and others. It will be remembered that Flight-Lieutenant Watson had the nerves of both eyes frozen, when flying his machine at a high altitude over the North Sea. A temporary loss of vision was caused, but the young aviator has now completely recovered.

WALTER C. POWELL, TORONTO

Porter shoe store, corner of Yonge and Shuter streets, Toronto, are being conducted. Both have been owned by Walter C. Powell until recently, when he took his nephew, Thomas R. Kelley into partnership, and for the present, the organization will be known as the Powell-Kelley Co. Later on letters patent will be taken out and the company incorporated.

Mr. Powell is one of the most widely known and successful shoe retailers in Ontario. He spent several years on the bench and has been identified with the footwear game since 1880. He first started out for himself in Essex, Ont., where he remained for eight years. About twenty-nine years ago, his father, the late Thomas Powell, began business in West Toronto—the subject of this reference joining him. In 1902 his father withdrew and Walter C. Powell has ever since conducted the business on a sound, progressive basis.

Thomas R. Kelley, the new general manager of the firm, is a Toronto boy, who has won his way by industry, courtesy and perseverance. He has been associated with Mr. Powell for several years and for three years was in the employ of J. C. Budreo, 1344 Queen street west, Toronto. Until recently Mr. Kelley has been manager of the Sample shoe store, West Toronto, but in his new position, will look after the large Yonge street establishment as well. The latter is being extended by taking in two vacant stores on Shuter street. This will give the Yonge street premises a depth of 150 feet and a width of 50 feet at the rear, making it one of the most spacious and well lighted shops in the Dominion. The Powell-Kelley Co. now have two splendid establishments and, under the active direction of Mr. Kelley, they will no doubt continue to prosper and expand.

Mr. Gratton was born in Hull, and after finishing his education in the public and Model Schools and the Ottawa Business College, entered the employ of the late A. W. Ault, wholesale shoes, Ottawa, as invoice clerk and stenographer. This was thirteen years ago and five years later he was made credit man. Interesting himself in the selling end of the business, he looked after the French speaking trade. Mr. Gratton resigned in 1915 to enter upon his present appointment, and, has met with a gratifying measure of success.

TWENTY-FIVE CENTS FOR LACING SHOES

"Will you please lace up my shoes—my arm is sprained," said a young lady, as she entered a Queen street west shoe store in Toronto the other morning.

The obliging clerk sat on a fitting stool, while the young lady placed her dainty number three upon the pedestal. At the task he went, although his fair caller had not bought even a pair of laces. The salesman was a new one attached to the establishment, and did not know the identity of the visitor. Coming downstairs, before the lacing up operation was finished the proprietor passed directly in front. Taking a swift glance at the female footwear, he saw that the shoes were not new, and that the visitor had not even purchased laces. When the clerk had finished, the proprietor stepped up to the young woman and remarked: "That will be a quarter, please."

"What!" she said in amazement.

"That will be just twenty-five cents."

"Charge a lady that much for lacing her shoes?"

"Yes," replied the proprietor, "you don't work for others for nothing, do you?"

"No," she answered.

"Well, neither do we, here."

Without any words the woman paid the two bits and departed in a huff.

It appears she had not bought anything in the store for years. After selling a pair of laces the ordinary shoeman, if requested to put them in the shoes, cannot very well refuse. But as no purchase was made in this case, the proprietor did not feel under any obligation or in a mood to be imposed upon in this bold and rather impertinent manner.

"I have been in the shoe business for a great many years, but this was the cheekiest and nerviest request that has ever been made of one of my salesmen. I know this woman. She resides about three blocks from the store with her mother, and could get some one in the household to lace her shoes. Instead she tramped here to get my clerk to perform this menial duty, and why she did so is more than mortal mind can understand. I do not think she will try this plan again. We have customers endeavoring to put things over us, and have to be on our guard all the while. There is no use in a shoeman being too easy a mark, especially for those people who never enter his store except to get souvenirs, secure information, use his phone, or his directory. The latest is having your shoes laced up."

SPECIAL SERVICE PAYS EVERY TIME

"Yes," said a retired grocer the other day, "I think the prices that shoeman get nowadays should enable them to earn a competence and retire within a comparatively few years."

"Oh, I do not know about that," declared a footwear retailer, who happened to be a member of the group, "I never see many former shoe dealers walking around, leading a life of ease, but I notice quite a few grocers who seem to have both money and leisure."

The first speaker winced a little at the shot, but he was not to be downed so easily, and spoke up.

"I have a pair of arch supports here which were got at a retail store the other day, and for which the price paid was $3.50. I could go to a drug store and get the same kind of pedal appliances for $2.00. Somebody is making a long profit somewhere, and apparently it is the shoeman."

"Hold on there," said the footgear dispenser; "I am not the fellow who sold you those arch props, and I do not know who did, but perhaps he is an expert in his line—gave you special service in the way of advice, adjustment, fitting, etc. You know a specialist always gets more for his line of goods than the general caterer. Perhaps you went back to this man three or four times, in order to have these supports made comfortable and satisfactory."

"Well, yes, I did," admitted the ex-grocer.

"How do they feel?" asked the shoeman.

"Fine, they give me new life and vim. I have no more backaches, and my limbs are not sore. I would not take ten dollars for the original supports if I could not get another pair."

"There you are," declared the shoeman conclusively, "you admit that you were given special service, that you would not take $10.00 for the supports, for which you only paid $3.50, and yet you are condemning some person—whom I do not know—for getting too long a profit on a certain

Tanners at Boston Warmly Discuss Proposed War Tariff

Our special representative in Boston wires us regarding meeting of Tanners held Thursday afternoon, May 17th:—

"There was a largely attended meeting of American Tanners of sole and upper leather in Boston to-day conferring on how to best co-operate with Government on leather supplies. Prices were not discussed, all being assured of Government's fairness. Immediate call for one million men is expected to require twelve million pairs army shoes in which chrome re-tanned side upper leathers will figure largely. The principal discussion centred on the proposed Government duty of ten per cent. on imported hides. Tanners unanimously opposed to tax on hides. Some argue if duty is placed on foreign hides it should also be placed on domestic hides. Many agree that tax on excess profits and on incomes would be more fair to the industry than imposing duty on raw stock. Very strong arguments were put up in favor of direct tax on leather sales, with hides on the free list. If ten per cent. duty must be paid on foreign imported hides many tanners claim same duty should be paid on domestic hides, but opinions differ. As to individual ideas all tanners willing to stand back of Government, but hope for adjustment that will be fair to trade at large. Meetings today were close group meetings of sole and upper leather tanners. Open meeting to be held Friday for all branches of the trade. War council luncheon to follow. Group meetings to continue Friday afternoon. Briefs and resolutions will be sent to Washington at end of meetings with recommendations."

We have received further advices from a prominent New York leather man, who is a member of the Senate, that the Bill will likely go through as it stands, in spite of any changes suggested, as the latter would open the door for discussion and delay in other lines.

article. I think that your statement about refusing an X for the props contrasted with your first-named remark is quite inconsistent. It is expert knowledge and superior service that count nowadays. With your special fitting of those props, what have you to kick about?"

"That is so," rather reluctantly admitted the retired dispenser of tea and sugar. "I never looked at the matter in that way. Perhaps I should be more temperate in my observations."

22-FOOT GOODYEAR SHOE REPAIRING OUTFIT

MODEL N

THIS Outfit represents the highest development in shoe repairing machinery, and meets every demand of modern shoe repairing. It embraces all the essential processes for making new shoes from old ones, giving the maximum of equipment and efficiency in the minimum space. The Outfit has the Goodyear Stitching Machine with all its improvements, including a new style steam generator which uses gas or gasolene for generating the steam, and operates automatically, thereby insuring a uniform heat for keeping the wax in proper condition and requiring little attention from the operator. The Edge Trimming Machine has the new feature of the two shafts, being operated by a single belt, and the cutter grinder is attached directly to the main shaft. This arrangement gives better results with less power.

The Buffing and Scouring Machine has a shaft 57 inches long and carries the following equipment:

- | | |
|--|----------------------------------|
| 2 Split Bottom Buffing Rolls | 2 Flat X-Ray Hee Scouring Wheels |
| 2 "C" Shape X-Ray Heel Scouring Wheels | 1 Heel Breast Scouring Wheel |
| 1 Pin Wheel Pad Complete | |

A powerful Blower System removes the dust resulting from the trimming, buffing and scouring operations, and is designed to overcome certain objectionable features of other blowers.

The Finishing Machine has a 78-inch shaft which has all the necessary equipment for black or russet work:

- | | |
|--|--|
| 2 Corrugated Rubber Shank Finishing Wheels | 1 Corrugated Rubber Heel Finishing Wheel |
| 1 Corrugated Rubber Bottom Finishing Roll | 2 Shank and Bottom Brushes |
| 2 Heel Brushes | 1 Stitch Cleaning Brush |
| 1 Levelling Roll | 1 Bead and Wheel |

At the end of the Outfit is the Oscillating Edge Setting Machine which is fitted with union irons and in its motions duplicates hand workmen with quicker and better results.

Each of the machines is operated independently by a friction drive pulley, so that it is necessary to use only those machines which the operator may require. This feature means a saving of power.

All the machines are firmly mounted on legs and driven by a countershaft with carefully adjusted bearings, so that the Outfit runs with very little vibration, and is in every way most efficient.

THE SHOE & LEATHER JOURNAL

INTERNATIONAL NUMBER

At the time of the Venezuela dispute in 1896 the Right Hon. Arthur Balfour, who was recently received by the United States Congress, made the following prophetic utterance:

"It can not but be that those whose national roots go down into the same past as ours, who share our language, our literature, our laws, our religion, everything that makes a nation great; it can not but be that a time will come when they will feel that we and they have a common duty to perform, a common office to fulfill among the nations of the world."

"WHEN YOU GET A GOOD THING, REMEMBER WHERE YOU GOT IT"

THE LION'S BROOD

Is it the sound of thunder by the salt winds borne afar?
Nay! 'tis the Mother Lion calling her brood to war!
Where the cannons roar and rattle at the gates of "Far Cathay,"
She sounds the call to battle, and the Lion's Whelps obey,
From the Cross in the Southern heavens to the Pole Star of the North,
Her children hear the rally and their answer thunders forth
In tones that ring true and steady, to the gates of "Far Cathay,"
"Mother! your sons are ready, speak! and your sons obey."

Hark to the young ones calling across to the Eldest Born.
"Is the lion-heart not in ye? Are ye of the Blood foresworn!
Are we not born blood brothers who speak the selfsame tongue?
And greatest of Earth's nations is she from where we sprung.
Shall the son stand coldly passive while the parent blood is shed?
Will the cub find friendly favor when the Mother-Lion is dead?
Is blood less thick than water? Is love less strong than hate?
Is he that harbors resentment than he that forgives is great?"

And the Eldest Born makes answer: "Peace!
young ones, have no fear,"
Is it a time for clamor when the Lion's foes are near?
Is the heart of the Lion in me? Can I strike the Lion's blow?
Go! question her who bore us, she has a right to know.
Ask of the Mother-Lion if I'm of the Blood
foresworn.
In open field she has measured the strength of her Eldest Born.
And the strength I brought against her when she roused my fierce, young wrath, Will be hurled on the wolves and jackals when they stand in the Lion's path.

They have given me courtly greeting, the Wolf,
the Fox and the Bear,
And the rest of the pack salute me with honeyed speech and fair,
They would have the quarrel endless twixt the Lion and her Eldest Born,
But I read their hearts' black purpose, and laugh in my secret scorn.
And as for their friendly favor, I hold it for what it is worth,
Based on a deathless hatred for her who gave me birth;
Shall the son stand coldly passive while the
parent blood is shed?
Will the cub find friendly favor when Mother-
Lion is dead?
I might look for courtly greeting and honied speech in vain.
Short shrift for the hated litter, when the brave old Lion is slain.

Hearken to me, my brothers, you of the Northland free!

And you of the far-off Indies! and you of the Southern Sea!
Hark to your elder brother, who fought and held his own,
Long e'er ye ceased to suckle, or your teeth or claws were grown;
They call us the Lion's Litter, is it a cause for shame
To be lords over land and ocean, whom none can subdue or tame?
Aye? we are the Lion's Litter, bred from her blood and bone,
And the Lion and the Lion's Whelps will always hold their own.

Shoulder to shoulder, my brothers, and the hostile pack takes flight, Let the hood of their slain bear witness that the Lion's Brood can fight.
Not for the lust of carnage, nor for greed of gold,
Do her sons go forth to battle like the Warrior
Kings of old,
Not for the pride of conquest danger and death
they face,
But to do the work that God entrusts to the Anglo-Saxon race.

To strike the chains from the captive, to free
the fettered mind,
And to preach the sacred gospel of Freedom to all mankind.
To foster the spark of Manhood in the breast of the hopeless clod,
And to bring more near together man and maker, God.
This is "the white man's burden," as sung by a master bard,
All other tribes have shirked it, 'tis a heavy task and hard,
But the Lion's Brood accepts it, and the horrors of war will face
To fulfil the trust that God has laid on the Anglo-Saxon race,
Shoulder to shoulder, my brothers, at the sound of the battle call,
Strong sons of a stronger mother, together we stand or fall.

And the Starry Flag of Freedom and the Flag that rules the wave Float proudly out together, twin emblems of the brave.
While the New World sends a message on the wings of the free West Wind
To the Old World nations waiting, the New World speaks her mind.
"I choose my place in battle, close to my mother's side,
Let the War God give the signal, by my choice
I will abide,
For the Lion heart is in me, fearless and strong and bold,
Ready to fight when the cause is right, and
'what we have we'll hold.'"

And the heart of the brave old Lion throbs with a wild, fierce pride,
As she waits the War God's signal, her brave
whelps by her side,
And the Lion's roar and the Eagle's scream are heard in "Far Cathay,"
"The Lion and the Lion Whelps can hold the world at bay."

—Anglo-American.

THE N.C.R. DETAIL STRIP gives you as a merchant a definite control of your business.

It gives you information you can get in no other way. It gives it easily, quickly, unerringly.

Every transaction which takes place in your store is recorded on the detail strip. This record is complete, covering every detail of every transaction. It is as safe as though locked up in your safe.

It records the amount, date and consecutive number of each transaction.

It tells you which clerk makes each sale and which clerk makes most sales.

It gives you a mechanically perfect record of all these details.

At the same time it protects your clerks against temptation.

It stops mistakes. It saves loss of money you could not otherwise save.

The result is a complete mechanical record, available at any hour of the day, of every detail of the day's business. The store is protected, so are the clerks, so are the customers. The information obtained gives absolute protection to all.

It gives you time to attend to duties more profitable than book-keeping—inside the register you will have all the totals faultlessly added.

It is of the greatest importance that you investigate our system. National Cash Registers will save time, money, and build your business.

A COMMON PERIL, A COMMON FRONT

America's Answer to Kaiserism—The Monroe Doctrine a World Policy—The "Crown of Thorns" of Autocracy Shall Not be Pressed Upon Democracy's Brow

THE entrance of the United States into the war delayed, as it was, until patience no longer seemed a virtue, has been justly hailed as the final barrier cast in the way of the modern juggernaut. To-day the struggle is more clearly defined than ever as the final stand of mediaevalism and chauvinism against the rising tide of democracy. Freedom is in the air, and when the smoke of battle has cleared the sun will shine upon a world from which the shackles of feudalism in its most galling form shall have been struck forever. When the great fight is finished, the glamor, and glory of militarism will have been so dissipated that little chance will remain for the resurrection of the issues that have created such appalling disaster and woe. This new world will see to it that its right to the enjoyment of a "place in the sun" is not again disturbed by the mad ambition of any relic, old-world dynasties of the latter should continue to exist.

In the meantime, the war, in its more recent developments, has not been without beneficial effects upon this western hemisphere. A common danger has drawn American peoples together so that from pole to pole there has been a girding of the loins, and a consolidation of interests and purpose that will mean much in the future relationships of the various countries to each other, if not to the world at large.

Canada was the first to realize that success of the programme of the German war lords, and a realization of the aims of kaiserism meant without doubt a "place in the sun" that shines on this western hemisphere, and threw in her lot with the Mother Land as a matter of practical necessity as much as national sentiment. Defeat of Great Britain meant essentially the subjugation of Canada, and the transplanting of German traditions, methods and empire to this continent. The menace to the United States and the rest of America lay in the foothold obtained upon the northern half of this northern continent. So that self interest, as well as popular democratic sentiment, made it essential that the great republic should join its neighbor in the support of these world principles for which the Allies are fighting to-day.

In the meantime, the fusion of common aims and interests has had its good influence upon both countries. While living together for over a hundred years in peace and prosperity, with no frowning forts or threatening battleships to suggest a border line, there has grown up a neighborliness that has resulted in keeping the two nations in friendly touch. Notwithstanding, however, the free co-mingling of the peoples made more easy by a common language, and mutual interest, there has hitherto been more or less of that aloofness that grows up especially amongst relations where jealousy and misunderstanding are more apt to arise than even between strangers. Business interests and national policies sometimes clashed and created antagonisms, that while not serious, produced friction and at time bitterness.

The result of the present "entente" has been to already dissipate a good deal of the coldness and indifference as well as the petty antagonism, that in spite of general good will between the countries, have occasionally been manifest. Brother Jonathan has learned that little Jack has the stuff in him that of which the Old Lion is made, little Jack has discovered that down deep in the heart of his Big Brother is the same spirit and purpose that have made Britons the world over the champions of truth and liberty. Out of this mutual respect and appreciation will come, in the future relations of these two great countries that which will enable them to work out not only their own destiny with greater freedom and success, but give the world a part in the glorious heritage of truth and freedom they enjoy.

The Shoe and Leather Situation in the U.S.

Impressions from a Visit to the Trade Centres—By a Member of the "Shoe and Leather Journal's Staff"

THERE is pronounced nervousness among the shoe and leather industries south of the Canadian border. It is the cumulative result of many causes, some inherent, others from the outside.

In attempting a diagnosis I am compelled to treat of matters, seemingly irrelevant, which yet unquestionably have been contributory.

President Wilson prides himself on personal aloofness from mere trade and commerce. He is difficult of approach on such subjects, said to be unsympathetic, and it is claimed gives scant heed to the representations of men engaged in these departments of activity: moreover, he is untrained in business, and it is rarely such men are found capable of passing sound judgment upon business matters which are after all fundamental and practical affairs of life.

The Proposed War Tariff

For the above and other reasons the leather men were apprehensive of politics in connection with the war. They were in this state of mind when the government announced a tariff of 10 per cent. on imported hides and skins. Meetings were hurriedly called and there was much agitation. The tanners were one in the desire to fall in line with legislation necessary for the production of needful revenue, but submitted that the exemption from taxation of domestic skins was playing into the hands of the packing houses, and urged it would be preferable to assess business profits. Those with strongest ground for complaint were the tanners of imported hides and skins.

Passing Through Trying Period

Disquiet in the shoe and leather trade, too, is in considerable measure a reflection of the general nervousness of the nation upon actual entry into the war after a protracted period of patience-trying uncertainty.

Habitually strenuous in all pursuits, the people of the United States are in a constant condition of high tension, sensitiveness and susceptibility, and show symptoms of hysteria under undue excitement.

It is a form of hysteria, though, that finds immediate relief in action. Flags are still seen in a profusion never before witnessed, but the emotional period is fast giving place to solid practical effort in directions best calculated for the economic utilization of the nation's vast potentialities in the interests of the country itself, and of the world at large. The government and people are really taking the war seriously. The government is moving rapidly and with decision. Hundreds of thousands of people, formerly wholly engaged in other occupations, are giving time, energy and money to the problem of greater food production. The steadying influence of settling down to work in well defined channel is coming. The prospect of panics grows less, and with it the likelihood of any serious breaks in the market.

The output of United States shoe and leather industries, long regarded as to a great extent dependent upon foreign markets, has, during the war years, been largely absorbed by the home and what other markets were available. There was reason for congratulation in this.

Surplus Stocks Will Be Cleared

True, dealers bought heavily on a rising market and are fairly well stocked at the moment. The lateness of the season also has militated against sales; travelers' orders are small. But as a corrective manufacturers are not forcing production, and in the case of Lynn, when labor trouble was fomented the situation was accepted philosophically, and the factories were closed down. There is complete confidence that surplus stocks will soon be cleaned up. It is improbable that the preaching of false economy will cause people to greatly curtail buying. I have pointed out the activity now under way which will increase production on the whole, and with increased production will come greater purchase power and the exercise of it.

Business Adjusting Itself

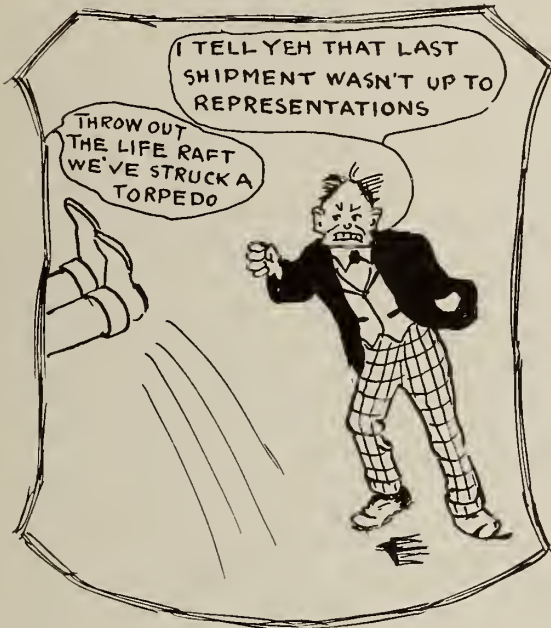

There is a considerable quantity of leather on hand, the great bulk of it produced under high cost conditions, for which a high price must be exacted. Cost of production promises to be higher. Will the tariff not add to the price of leather also?

In the meantime, business is gradually adjusting itself to altered conditions. It is a great pity that a decision has not been promptly reached on the tariff matter, as certainty whichever way the decision be made is much better than uncertainty. It is claimed that it may be a month before the Senate puts the law into effect.

General business is, however, shaping itself into more normal position. The campaign undertaken by large wholesale and retail houses to promote normal buying, as well as the recent message of the President to the people, along these lines, have both had a stimulating influence.

In the course of a few months, trade will get into its usual swing and with the tremendous money circulating in the country in connection with war supplies, there will be the same wonderful activity that existed previous to the declaration of war with considerable accentuations.

Not all Sunshine for the Shoe Travelers

The Way to Diminish Cancellations

Loss to the Manufacturer That Should be Avoided—Retail Dealers Should Co-operate with Manufacturers for this Purpose—Some Faults that Prevail on Both Sides and Should be Corrected—Mutual Interests and the Need of Co-operation

“IT is well known that one of the great disadvantages under which a shoe manufacturer labors to-day is that of countermands, or cancellations of orders obtained by the salesmen. While the percentage is considerably lower than it was years ago, yet the number of cancellations received season after season is still too large.

“It is not presumed that shoe buyers place orders with a salesman intending at some future date to follow the orders with cancellations. It is to be presumed that a buyer signs an order with his eyes open.

“The shoe manufacturer proceeds on the theory that a shoe buyer in placing orders selects styles which he expects to use. That is safe, intelligent, and judicious buying.

“Sometimes it happens, none the less, that a buyer who has started out with the best of intentions finds himself compelled to cancel certain styles which he has ordered for future delivery.

“The salesman has called on him when business has been good. The buyer's spirits have been proportionately high and the salesman has been sent away happy with a liberal order.

“Then comes a change. Business falls off somewhat, and the same buyer, running over his orders, believes he has made an error in ordering, has contracted for too many styles. Then come the cancellations.

“It is an even chance that later, when business brightens up again, this same buyer will re-order on these styles, but from some other salesman, who happens to call on him just at that time. The first salesman and his house are not likely to see this re-order.

“Now, where does this leave the manufacturer? Has he been treated fairly, or has the first order and subsequent cancellation resulted in annoyance and loss to him?

Both Have Obligations

“Comparing the manufacturer with the retailer: The manufacturer, like the retailer, has to estimate the goods which he will need every season, and has to place his orders for material in advance. He goes over the situation, estimates his sales, figures up the materials he will need, and then orders them.

“Suppose that a little later his estimates appear a little off, and he seems to have ordered too much of certain kinds of leather. Does he countermand? No.

“The tanners of leather would very soon shut down on any maker of shoes who did not accept all of the leather for which he originally contracted. Whether business conditions be good or poor, the manufacturer has to stand by his orders.

“The problems of the manufacturer are greatly lightened in the degree that he knows orders which are coming to him are dependable and will stand without countermands. His work then becomes definite and he knows that there will be no added confusion in the vast detail of shoe manufacture, which is in itself a great problem.

“How appreciative any manufacturer would be if he could feel a full degree of confidence in every order received!

“And getting back again to the buyer, how much could be accomplished towards this end if the buyers, in making their first selections, would order only those styles which they know they will need.

Safe Method to Pursue

“That is a safe and sound procedure in ordering; and any manufacturer would prefer early orders for fewer styles which will surely stand, than orders for a variety of styles, some of which are almost certain to be cancelled. Later, he would gladly take orders for additional styles—at a time when the buyer becomes certain that he will need such styles.

“Again, let it be stated that no buyer intentionally orders a larger number of styles with the deliberate idea of cancelling at a later date. They follow their best judgment.

“But if these buyers would order early the styles they MUST have for the next season, and let the additional styles go until such time as they become a necessity, there would be fewer countermands, better service, and a much better understanding between manufacturer and dealer.”

This seems entirely reasonable, and if it were carried out would help solve this vexatious question.

At a recent convention, speaking in behalf of the manufacturers, a speaker urged that manufacturers ought at least to have the courtesy of a notification before shoes were returned. This certainly seems a very small thing to ask. As a matter of fact manufacturers of good standing report that they have had dealers ship back invoices of shoes without a word of explanation!

If a dealer in an agricultural town finds that the crop prospects have certainly gone bad; or if a dealer in a manufacturing town is confronted by a bitter strike which seems likely to be very prolonged; or if a dealer anywhere, from any cause, finds that he has been over-optimistic in ordering, then he ought to promptly take the manufacturer into his confidence, and explain the situation. We believe that any manufacturer, upon receipt of a frank, square letter of this kind from a dealer with a good reputation, would be willing to meet him part way, and to make some kind of adjustment.

It cannot be insisted upon too often that the interests of the independent retail dealer and of the manufacturer, who is his source of supply, are mutual. This is true not only in a broad, general sense, but in a very personal and individual way.

The Nations in Great Common Cause

Closer Bond of Sympathy and Fellowship will Result from Entrance of United States Into the Conflict—The Defence of Democracy and the Preservation of the Right of the Individual—The Elimination of Differences, the Expansion of Industry

Better Business and Social Relations

(By Col. S. P. Colt, President U.S. Rubber Co.)

“WHATEVER may be the ultimate outcome of the present war, two results are inevitable—the bringing about of better understandings between Canada and the United States, and the establishment of trade relations that will be mutually beneficial. We are fighting in a common cause and that fact alone can but bring us into closer relationship, both socially and commercially.

“At the present time the United States exports large quantities of manufactured products, whereas a generation ago the exports from this country were derived from its grain fields, its mineral deposits and its cotton plantations. The war has clearly demonstrated to manufacturers in the United States the wonderful business opportunities in foreign fields, the result being that this condition has carried forward the export trade within a period of two years to a point it would normally have reached in twenty years. It is, therefore, only logical that in future the United States should more nearly live up to its possibilities, and cater more strongly to the extension of foreign trade.

“Last year there were produced in the United States 331,000,000 pairs of leather shoes. The export of shoes during the past three years to European countries, both for military as well as civilian purposes, has been enormous. Not only have manufacturers shown their ability to produce what was needed, but foreign purchasers have learned the strong value of this product.

“The leather shoe business in the United States is gradually getting into the hands of large operators who tan a certain percentage of the upper and sole leather which they use, thus placing them in a strong competitive position. These manufacturers, however, in shipping merchandise to Canada are greatly handicapped by the high import Canadian duty, and it is hoped that the interests which are now common to us all will later result in a revision of tariff conditions which will be mutually advantageous.

“We all earnestly hope and believe that out of this world's war will come, among other much desired results, better understandings and a permanent foundation for the establishment of closer co-operation between Canada and the United States.”

Foundation for Closer Co-operation

(By Frank W. Whitcher, Pres. of Mass. Board of Trade, Boston)

“I believe that the joining in a common cause, namely, to defend democracy and preserve for the future the liberty of the individual, cannot help creating a closer bond of sympathy and fellowship which will bring about better business and social relations between our two countries in the future.

“The present war seems to me to be the last stand of feudalism amongst civilized nations of the world, as the rights of the individual have steadily grown, so I believe there can be but one outcome to this terrible struggle, namely, that the yoke of autocracy will be thrown off, giving to the people of the old world the same right to govern themselves as we on this continent have enjoyed for so many years.

“There is no doubt in my mind of the very beneficial results which will inure to not only the shoe and leather trades of our two countries, but to all branches of industry.

“In fact, I have a strong feeling that all of the nations sharing in this war, will be brought into a closer bond of union which as the years go on, will steadily work for a betterment of world conditions.

“If as a result of this war, all of the civilized nations could be brought into one International Union, with the capitol perhaps at the Hague, which would positively insure a settlement of disputes on the basis of justice and fair treatment, what a great stride forward would be made over the old way of endeavoring to settle disputes by brute force where injustice always exists.

“Let us pray for the coming of the time when universal liberty exists, and every individual shall have the right or representation in his government.

“May the cry of ‘Up with Democracy’ and ‘Down with Autocracy’ prevail until our aim has been accomplished.

“I assure you of my appreciation of the work which you are initiating, and I believe it is in a splendid cause.”

The Levelling of all Differences

(By T. H. Rieder, President Canadian Consolidated Rubber Co.)

“I feel that democracy must win in the great struggle, and having won, the effects upon the whole world, civilized and uncivilized, but particularly upon Europe and America, will be to level our differences socially, commercially, and maybe politically. It is certain there will spring up a greater sympathetic relationship, bringing us nearer to a state of universal brotherhood of man among nations.

“Having then levelled many differences, our industries must be put into a position to compete with those of other nations. Canadians should, therefore, study economics and educate their working classes to a high degree of efficiency. The nation having reached the highest form of development of its masses will excel.”

SHOEMAN BELIEVES IN UPHOLDING HIS DIGNITY

Unreasonable Woman Suggested That He was not Acting Fairly and Squarely with Her—She had Cause to Regret Her Hasty Words—Some People do not Know When They are Well Treated by Shoe Merchant, and Have to be Taught Timely Lesson

“WHAT can you do with these shoes? See how they have broken out at the back,” demanded a lady caller, as she entered a leading city shoe store the other day. The proprietor was busy at the time, and knowing that there was possibly trouble ahead, and not having time to settle the matter just then, invited the caller to come in on the morrow, when he would give her special attention. He requested her kindly to bring the shoes with her.

“But I cannot,” she replied, “I have no other pair.”

“Well then,” he courteously rejoined, “in that event, I will send for the shoes, and have them returned to you.”

“Very well,” she declared, as out she went.

So the shoes were sent for, and on examination, it was found that, in pulling them off, the wearer had not unlaced them sufficiently to allow the foot to be withdrawn easily. The lining had broken at the back, and the back stay subjected to such a strain, that it had ripped.

Rather Proud of Neat Job

The retailer had the shoes sent to a repair man, and asked that a particularly neat job should be done. The shoemaker put an inside facing of white kid at the back and stitched it in and out, with the result that the work was so cleverly executed no one would ever notice there had been any repair made.

It was expected that as the retailer had sent for the shoes, the lady would, at least, call for them, since he was not charging her for what was really her fault, namely, carelessness in not unlacing them, and forcing the leather to give way. She phoned in, however, one morning, asking that the shoes be sent down within one hour. Although short of help, the dealer, anxious to oblige, despatched the footwear to the house at the appointed time. When the messenger arrived, he rang the bell and then knocked several times. He even went around to the back, but no one was at home, and yet this was the lady who said she could not leave the shoes because she had nothing else to wear in the way of pedal equipment. The footwear merchant surmises that she went visiting in her stocking feet. That afternoon she rang up and said the shoes had not arrived.

When a Woman is Not at Home

“Excuse me,” replied the dealer, “I sent them down, but there was no one at home.”

“Oh, yes, I was there all the while,” she persisted.

“Pardon me, but you were not,” was the equally firm response.

“Well, I know I was, and nobody ever came up the front steps.”

“But my young man says that he was at your door, and tried for several minutes to elicit a response, but no one came, and he would have no object in misrepresenting matters.”

“I do not believe you sent the shoes,” was the indignant assertion.

“Excuse me, madam, but I did, and I think that, having done so at the time appointed, the least you can do now is to come for them yourself.”

“Will you please tell me what kind of a ‘skin game’ you are running at your place?” was the next salutation, delivered in a voice quivering with anger.

The dealer was so incensed over this insult, that he could not trust himself to speak further, and hung up the receiver.

In the afternoon, Mrs. J., who had ventilated her venom on the inoffensive shoe dispenser, sent a friend, Mrs. R., up for the shoes. Mrs. R. came in and made known her mission, and the dealer told her that he had been deliberately insulted over the phone, and the charge for the work done would be fifty cents. He had gone out of his way to execute a nice job on the shoe, the broken condition of which had been brought about through the carelessness of the wearer, and he did not care to have insult added to injury.

“Well I do not know about that,” replied the caller, “I will go and see Mrs. J.”

Had the Wisdom to Apologize

A couple of hours later, back came Mrs. R., and the fifty cents was paid without a murmur. The shoeman told the friend of his lady customer, that he was anxious to please and give service, but that he had sufficient dignity and force of character not to be deliberately insulted and abused; that he would not have charged anything for the repairs if he had been treated courteously, and he thought an apology was due from Mrs. J.

The latter rang up the next morning, stating that she had been rather hasty in her remarks, and expressed her regret at the use of innuendoes to the effect that his place of business was not conducted on honorable lines or characterized by straight dealing. The footwear merchant explained his position, stating that he did not think, when he was performing a courteous service for customers, they should jump on him as if he were a highwayman or a buccaneer. In the afternoon Mrs. J. came up and apologized in person, evidently thinking discretion was the better part of valor. The fifty cents was returned by the shoeman, and now, all is pleasant sailing; and an incident, which at one time threatened to disturb a life long patronage, has been forgiven and forgotten.

OWN YOUR OWN STORE IF POSSIBLE

There are a number of points in favor of a shoe retailer owning his own premises, providing his store is located in the proper place and is likely to continue as a good business centre. One of these is that he can make what changes he desires and any improvements that he makes accrue to his benefit, whereas, when a dealer rents he generally spends considerable money in fixing up things that he receives the benefit of only as long as he remains there.

Besides this, the footwear merchant maintaining a live business at one place for years, and educating the public to frequent the spot, is creating real estate value there and he should benefit from this increase instead of allowing a landlord to get the increment.

Discussing this point not long ago with a dealer who purchased his place of business some time ago, but who had to give a mortgage for a large portion of the purchase price when he did so. Asked if he considered it advisable to purchase in this way, he said he was extremely glad he had done so. The interest and taxes were less than he would have paid in rent, he was able to make improvements from which he received permanent benefit, and the fact that he had a mortgage to pay off kept him working aggressively all the time. The value of his building has also increased considerably since he purchased it.

LEATHER MEN PLACE PATRIOTISM BEFORE ALL

While Holding that a Duty on Raw Materials is an Economic Error, the Tanners of United States will do Their Part in Keeping Wheels of Industry Going, Creating Confidence and Providing Supplies—Conditions to be Faced, Financial and Otherwise

“THE flag above the dollar,” was the sentiment which pervaded the patriotic meeting of leather manufacturers, held recently in Boston.

It was resolved by the National Association of Tanners, that they extend to the government their full co-operation in supplying the highest quality of military leathers that can be produced, at fair prices, and their further assistance in any capacity that may be of service.

Another important resolution carried was: “that we favor the custom duties as provided in the war revenue bill, although we believe that a duty on raw materials is economically and basically wrong, and should be removed as soon as in the judgment of Congress other sources of revenue can be produced.”

During the recent war tariff measure before Congress, the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL has kept all prominent leather and shoe firms in close touch with the progress of events by means of letters, and in the last issue of the paper. All the latest information regarding the development of events was obtained from our special representative on the spot, while the thanks of the publishers are also due to Schmoll Fils & Co., of New York, the widely known dealers in hides and skins, as well as Richard Young Co., the well known leather concern.

The Patriot and the Humanitarian

At the big Boston meeting President Lesh aroused much enthusiasm when he said, “With the entrance of the United States into the great war, the manufacturer and merchant were submerged in the patriot and humanitarian. To-day we are more concerned about the flag than the dollar.”

Referring to the patriotic negotiations of tanners and shoe manufacturers with the government, President Lesh said that not a pound of leather had been sold. The government was assured that leather would be provided for three to six million pairs of army and navy shoes at prices not to exceed fixed maximum rates. There was extreme danger that with the army contracts rapidly following each other, and a possible lifting of the British embargo, that competitive buying would force leather to panic prices. Some of the leather stipulated by the government will be exhausted before three million pairs of army shoes can be made. When no more calf and kip are available, side upper stock will be used.

No minimum rates were established. If contractors can buy leather below the maximum figures, there is nothing to prevent their doing so. The new revenue bill now before Congress has affected our business. Government receipts for the next fiscal year will amount to $1,500,000,000. And the new law is estimated to produce $1,800,000,000 additional revenue. Of this total, $200,000,000 will come from the new custom duties. This amount will include about $13,000,000 from the tax on imports of hides and skins.

President Lesh, while not criticising the emergency taxes, asserted that the tariff of 10 per cent. on imported hides and skins would result in increasing by 10 per cent. the value of the hides and skins originating in the United States. Since it is usually estimated that we tan about equal quantities of foreign and domestic raw material for making leather, it follows that the government will collect only half of the increase it creates.

The Glazed Kid Situation

Mr. Stout (John R. Evans & Sons) said: “The glazed kid manufacturers have not taken up the question of registering statistics and sales and prices. They rejected it because it would not work practically in our business. Some of our factories make as many as a hundred and ten grades and weights, others make thirty or forty, and we could never tell what a sale registered meant, really, in its return in price. If we could adopt some absolutely uniform selection of glazed kid and stick very rigidly to it, why, I could see where some benefit could be gotten from it, just exactly the same as our belting friends have got it.

“In regard to the situation in glazed kid, I wish to say that last year we got up to our maximum capacity, and even at that we could have sold again half as much glazed kid if we had been able to have filled our orders going to England, Russia, Holland, Italy, France, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, South America and Australia, and taken care of our home trade.

“Since the first of the year, as you all know, England has put an embargo on glazed kid as well as other leathers going into that country. Russia has declared a partial embargo, and that has cut off, temporarily at least, thirty-five per cent. of our sales, and with it we are enjoying the same relaxed condition that the other divisions of this industry feel.

“But we are in this peculiar position: There is only twenty-one per cent. of our raw material that comes from South America, and that we can really count on getting with any certainty of time. The rest of it comes from India, China, Arabia and South Africa, and shipping conditions have got in such a way that it has made it practically impossible for us to do business. In addition to that, in India the exchange arrangements are all out of gear—cannot pay for your goods—and it would make no difference if those markets were to fall one hundred per cent.—it wouldn't do us any good.

Kid Bound to be Scarce

“You take the entire glazed kid industry put together, we have an ample amount of raw stuff, stock in process, for a short period of time, but for a long period of time, glazed kid is bound to be a scarce article.

“I think that outlines the condition just exactly as it exists. We all feel that the prices of to-day are as low as we can possibly make them, for we are confronted with just exactly the same labor and chemical conditions that Mr. Vogel spoke of also. The workmen in my own factory are getting a hundred per cent. more than they did before the war, and just to-day they went out on strike, and out of 750 men, we have 99 working for us. So that condition doesn't look very good.

“There is one other thing, gentlemen, that I want to touch on before I sit down, and that is the psychology of the whole situation. The United States is in war to-day and as I look about me I think that there are very few people who have yet realized or begun to realize the seriousness of the entire situation. We have all brought out our flags with great alacrity, wore our little badges, attended meetings, thrown up our hats, made suggestions, made criticisms, telling the other fellow how he can pay the taxes and shift them yourselves for some selfish reason. That is not patriotism. In fact, it is very far from it.

“If we are going to be taxed in a way that the government can get the money, and we are going to give freely, business has got to be kept good. It is most unfortunate, to my mind, that when the advice for economy went out, it was picked up, like—well, like most everything else is in America, in a degree of hysteria. That this nation should conserve its food supplies, cease its enormous waste in food material, is absolutely correct, but that the nation, that the individuals, should start in and practice parsimony, is absolutely wrong, and will be the secret of defeat if it isn't stopped. No war can be prosecuted without immense sums of money, and you can not get it unless you keep the wheels of industry going. The very fact that that Liberty Loan is to be placed means inflation and good business. The thing is to get the psychology right, to get the thing going. It has got to start somewhere. I wrote to Washington and said it ought to start down there, but we can do our part if every leather man and every shoe manufacturer and every shoe retailer starts in and stops the frightful attack that we are having all the time on business.

"Now, gentlemen, that is the message that I want to leave with you, that every man will do his part toward getting the wheels of industry going again. You want to make good profits; you want to make better profits than ever, because you are going to turn them over to the government. You are not working selfishly, you are not working for yourself any more. You may have to sacrifice seventy-five or eighty per cent. of your profits before we get through with this war. I really believe we will; but we are all in that one common family of the union of the United States, working together to raise that money to successfully prosecute this war ourselves and supply the food and money to our half-crippled Allies, who need it; and that is the situation."

Mr. McGowin Gives His Views

President Andrew McGowin, of the National Shoe Retailers' Association, on being called upon, stated that the retail shoe business was away ahead for the year. (He has charge of the shoe department of Wanamakers', Philadelphia, and is one of the leading shoe merchants of the country.) Mr. McGowin regretted the small number of retailers who belonged to their association, although non-members benefit by the valuable work done by the members. He believed that business would be bad for a month or two, same as it was in Canada and abroad for several months, after the declaration of war. Business may be better than we imagine, and we should all go ahead and keep cheerful as usual.

"What we do try to do is to try to do business, and we have done it and it is encouraging.

"Therefore, do you men who pull the hides, who tan them into leathers, whether they are fancy leather, glazed kid or harness leather, aid and assist all national work of any sort, organization work of any sort, because it tends finally to give you gentlemen better profits in every direction."

Shoe Industry is Second Largest

Harry I. Thayer, of Thayer-Foss Co., tanners, Boston, and president of the New England Shoe and Leather Association, made a strong address, asserting that the shoe and leather industry was the second largest in the country, and very properly boasted that New England had always responded nobly and promptly when the country needed her. He spoke about the shoe and leather committee of excellent men that were working with the Council of National Defense.

Mr. Thayer emphasized the great value of all working together, and touched on the embargo conditions that have obstructed exports to Great Britain and other countries. The Government has become a great consumer of leather, and tanners and shoe manufacturers will maintain the government standards of quality.

In discussing the revenue bill, Mr. Thayer urged a patriotic attitude toward it. Railroads are inadequate for moving coal; and steamship, barges, etc., are being taken for government service. New England uses vast quantities of coal, and every buyer should obtain, without delay, his future necessities. The proposed flat increase of freight rates and changes in classification, etc., were a great handicap to the important industries of New England, and Mr. Thayer said it would be hard for them to hold their position and compete with the South and West. He hoped that the wage controversy between Massachusetts shoe manufacturers and 15,000 factory workers would soon be adjusted, and gladly offered any assistance that might help to end the trouble.

"We all hope and pray for a speedy and everlasting peace. With peace, I trust a great change will come to the whole economic structure of our beloved United States. And prompted by the highest and truest patriotic principles, profiting by the new light the war has brought to our vision, we shall build as we have never built before," concluded the speaker.

NEW LINE OF FABRIC SOFT SOLES

Philip Jacobi, specialist in infants' footwear, 5 Wellington street east, Toronto, is showing something entirely new to the trade in the line of infants' fabric soft soles. Owing to excessive cost and shortage of leather, which has prevented the firm from accepting more than half of its normal business in these goods, fabrics have come to the rescue and are being eagerly taken advantage of. Infants' fabric soft soles are light, durable, dainty and attractive and are decidedly popular. They come in button, moccasin, lace and strap slipper styles in white, black, blue, pink and tan, in sizes from 0 to 4. The lowness of the price also commends the new lines. The best range of moccasins are adorned with silk trimmings and one of the neatest creations is a button boot with tassel and pearl buttons. The goods are uniform in character and are very moderately priced, being artistic and inviting in every respect.

THE GREATEST WHITE FOOTWEAR SEASON EVER

Are You Prepared to Meet the Demand—Public Taking to Outing, Tennis and Canvas Footwear as Never Before, owing to High Cost of Leather Shoes—How to Install Special Window Displays and Create Enthusiasm Among the Staff

THE white shoe season has arrived. It has been somewhat delayed this year, owing to the rather cold, backward spring, but "all things come to him who waits," and now the white goods season is here in reality.

White has always been popular for warm weather wear, but never to such an extent as at the present time. While all cannot afford white buck and washable white kid shoes, there are many other offerings in white, which look equally as well, and should appeal to all wearers of light and graceful footwear.

White shoe week is generally observed in the United States about the second week in June. Last year many retailers featured all kinds of white goods during that period. The result was very satisfactory. Included, of course, in the display of white shoes were outing and sporting footwear which has attained such a large measure of favor, and is growing steadily, owing to the increasing cost of leather shoes. The person who wants to buy foot toggery at a medium price, can obtain in various white fabrics a very wide selection, and different styles and patterns—all at a price that is sure to meet with the ideas of economy and thrift, which so many are exercising and practising at the present time.

Now is the time for all live merchants to push sporting and outing shoes, which are big with opportunities and satisfactory with respect to profits.

The retailer should put in special windows of white shoes, and should announce the attraction, economy and comfort of white in his advertising in the press, or by means of leaflets, booklets, etc. Stylish, handsome, high cut creations, with Louis heels, leather, wood and rubber heels, and leather, ivory and Neolin soles, can be obtained, that sell from $5.00 down, and on these a good profit is made.

The reasons why the white shoe is popular—it is cool and comfortable, has a neat appearance; and is stylish and airy. It has been proved by long experience that white is the coolest of all colors. Everything in the line of dress in summer attire harmonizes with white.

Don't get away from the proper display idea in window and in store. Install a suitable background that will tend to exhibit the goods to the best advantage. Blue, green, black, rose and purple are exceptionally striking colors and bring out the white in bold relief, but possibly the most fetching are blue, green and purple, and of these, green is the first choice, because it reflects the green sward and the open fields. It will impart to all your displays a warm weather aspect and to draw more striking attention to any arrangement of the goods, it may be advisable to put in a few tennis rackets, baseball bats, golf sticks, lacrosse sticks, paddles, hammocks, hampers, lunch boxes and baskets, or anything suggestive of an outing and of sport. White footwear, as already stated, includes outing shoes, walking shoes, sport shoes—in fact, all kinds of outdoor summer pedal attire, with or without rubber, composition, fibre or leather soles. Great possibilities exist by suggesting and emphasizing the comfort and convenience, lightness and airiness of this kind of footwear.

Much more might be said in the way of effective plans and putting in an outing footwear window, and the vast possibilities there are for the sale of white and sporting shoes. The man who goes thoroughly into this proposition and gets there first, is the one who is going to reap the harvest, for white shoes are based on common sense, good appearance and comfort. It is also well to have in the windows or throughout the store, some appropriate cards, calling attention to the fact that white is the proper vogue for summer, and that for warm weather wear, nothing is quite so appropriate, economical and pleasing.

Working Up Spirit and Zest

If the proprietor will throw personal interest and enthusiasm into the selling of white shoes, he will no doubt get his sales force interested, for fervor and zeal are contagious elements. Those associated with an enterprising boss will catch something of the infection, and united effort will develop a splendid business along this line. In this connection it is important to point out that the disposal of a pair of white shoes means, if tactfully pushed, the sale of some white cleaner or polish. Those who handle hosiery may sell white stockings with every sale. The one important thing to remember in selling white shoes, is to see that they are turned over at a profit. Do not seek to create a name for yourself in cheapness, when people are educated and prepared to pay a longer price for their foot attire than they have in the past.

It is, of course, impossible to deal specifically with suitable window trims, displays, etc., that will appeal to every merchant in all centres, large and small, but it should be remembered that just now—white is right, and also that white is might, when it comes to volume of business and timely seasonable merchandising.

Each Pair Means Extra Sale

One leading retailer furnished the following as to why white shoes should be worn, and why he is selling a large number of them.

"Perhaps the principal reason why white shoes are going to be better than ever before is the fact that they can be sold at lower prices than other shoes," he pointed out.

"With white buck and kid at their present prices, only a very limited proportion of the customers of any store can afford to buy them; and other leather shoes are relatively high, as the past season has demonstrated, and as prices now quoted sufficiently indicate. For that reason alone it is safe to say that the public will take to white shoes as never before. We can offer women a handsome, serviceable white shoe at $3.50 and upward, and they can get nothing to compare with it in leather at that price, from any standpoint.

"The same is true in men's and children's lines. For children, white fabric shoes are becoming more popular every day, on account of their good looks, the ease with which they can be cleaned, and their reasonable price, as compared with white buck or with other leather shoes. We are already selling many more canvas shoes for children than in other seasons, and there seems to be no reason to doubt that the increase will continue as the season advances.

"In the men's department we are prepared for a heavy increase in the demand for fabric shoes, in white and Palm Beach, last year having given us an idea of what the extent of this business can be.

"The trend toward more comfortable and informal dress, indicated by the popularity of so-called sport garments for both sexes, gives the shoe merchant a splendid opportunity to push white shoes, not only on price, but on style. The clothier and the garment man are helping the trade wonderfully by their work in selling outing clothing, and it is up to the shoe trade to sell the white shoes that properly go with them, especially as we can at the same time perform a real service by selling these goods at very reasonable prices.

Each Sale is an Extra One

"On the other hand, a highly practical consideration is that in many cases the white shoe is an extra shoe, purchased and worn in addition to the pair of leather low-cuts which the average man or woman buys. This means that nearly every pair of white shoes sold is just that much additional business, and no matter how low the price may be, it helps just that much to roll up the volume in dollars and cents in number of pairs.

"In my opinion, the public is going to take white shoes without much urging, for the reasons which I have indicated. We shall help the thing along by featuring white shoes in our regular advertising, from time to time, as well as by devoting reasonable space in our windows to them. I have no fear but that we shall be able to move these goods in bigger volume than ever before."

THE DEMAND SETS IN EARLY

According to the wholesalers there is likely to be a decided shortage of white canvas shoes, carrying leather soles and covered or leather heels. Already many jobbers are unable to fill orders on account of delay in getting goods from the factories. Business placed months ago has, in some instances, not been filled yet, and a scarcity in the cheaper lines threatens to become pronounced. The demand for white goods has set in actively. Pumps and Mary Janes for misses and children are also declared to be lacking in sufficient numbers, and while the requisitions are just now for lines selling to the retailer, around two forty for women's, one eighty-five for misses', and one thirty-five for children's, in the more expensive ranges, there is so far quantity enough to meet the demand. Sorting business is picking up considerably of late in many lines and on the whole the jobbers report trade as fair considering the recent prolonged cold snap.

WESTERN RETAIL MERCHANTS IN SESSION

The annual meeting of the Saskatchewan Retail Merchants' Convention was held in Moose Jaw on May 8th, 9th and 10th. There was a fairly large attendance, but not as representative as in years past, owing to the scarcity of help in the stores, which makes it necessary for many members to adhere more closely to business. Ald. S. J. Mc-Micken, president of the Moose Jaw Association, and Mayor W. W. Davidson of that city, extended greetings.

Among the speakers at the convention were President C. F. Rannard, of the Manitoba Association, who is a widely known shoe merchant of Winnipeg, and Geo. A. Maybee, of Maybee's Limited, Moose Jaw, former president of the Association, who is resigning, owing to his entering the ranks of the wholesalers. A. A. Evans, of Outlook, Sask., president of the Association, gave an inspiring address, and was re-elected president for the coming year. H. D. MacPherson, Regina, was re-appointed first vice-president; J. L. A. Hutchinson, Saskatoon, second vice-president; F. A. Raymond, Regina, secretary; J. J. Polson, Regina, treasurer.

The citizens of Moose Jaw entertained the visiting business men to a banquet. Many expressions of regret were heard at the retirement of Mr. Maybee. He is called the "Grand Old Man" by the members, and was the first president of the Saskatchewan Retail Merchants' Association, which has been five years in existence.

One of the features of the gathering was the address on "Co-operation Among Merchants," by Horace Chevrier, of Winnipeg, Dominion president of the Retail Merchants' Association. H. O. Roberts, Minneapolis, gave a splendid talk on "Cash versus Credit," pointing out how to secure a larger share of the business now going to mail order houses. Mr. Roberts is secretary of the Minnesota Hardware Merchants' Association. Several interesting reports were read at the gathering, and all things being considered, the outlook for the coming year is satisfactory.

The annual meeting of the Manitoba branch of the Retail Merchants' Association of Canada, will be held in Winnipeg, June 12th, 13th and 14th. C. F. Rannard is the energetic president.

THE APPROBATION EVIL IS FAST PASSING AWAY

In the Larger Cities Retailers are Seldom Bothered with Approval Requests—How Certain Shoemen have Stamped out the Practice—The Abuses which Crept in, and the Folly that Resulted—Shoes too Costly now to be Handled Indiscriminately

“HELLO! Is that Blank & Co.? This is ‘Big Gun’ Jones speaking. Send up to the house half a dozen or more pairs of comfortable, A1 quality shoes, will you? I’m looking for satisfaction more than style. I’ll keep a pair or two if they suit, and send you a check to cover.” This ‘phone message was received the other day in a large city shoe store. If that shoe man had been of the jellyfish variety so common in all trades, he would have hurried the errand boy away with a bundle big enough for a man to carry. But did he?

Here’s what we heard him reply: “Mr. Jones, I’m very sorry I can’t oblige you, but one rule in this establishment is never broken for anyone. We cannot send out goods on approbation. If we made an exception in your case, we would have to do so for others, and we cannot ‘make fish of one and flesh of another.’ We must request you to come down and see our shoes, as in this way only will you get satisfaction.” The other man, who, by the way, is a millionaire, waxed very indignant, but when he was assured that the dealer preferred rather to lose his trade than to serve him unsatisfactorily, he changed his attitude, came down to the store and was perfectly fitted. The shoe retailer now has his respect as well as his custom.

Once Serious Menace to the Trade

This was the emphatic way this dealer spoke of the approbation habit. He further added, “The case which you have just noticed is only one of many such requests which every shoe man has to face. The worst feature of it is that many of them comply, either because they have not courage enough to refuse lest they lose actual or probable custom; or because thereby they hope to steal a march on some competitor who will not do business in this way. Here is a great evil for the various shoe retailers’ associations to deal with. The trouble is that the average dealer seems to be too selfish to join his neighbor in working for the good of the trade in general, forgetting that whatever is agreed upon for the general good is sure to be beneficial to him personally. And when, as is sometimes the case, this approbation system grows so rapidly that some retailers have one employee or more spending all their time looking after it, the thing ceases to be a business scheme at all, and becomes merely a farce. Every dealer who tacitly or openly encourages this method of doing business makes it all the harder for the rest of us who are determined to avoid it, to say nothing of the fact that he is cutting a noose which will one day strangle his business.”

What do you think about it? What is your personal position in the matter? It is very hard to see how any dealer who gives this question the serious, unselfish consideration it deserves, can fail to agree with the remarks just quoted. It is positively nonsensical for any shoeman who is now reaping the fruits of his own carelessness to blame the buying public. The latter are not the greatest transgressors. What they once requested as a privilege, they now demand as a right. Approbation could have been handled very easily at the start, but now it is a problem which must be courageously faced. It will only be faced by every retailer who is a sinner in this respect taking his own share of the blame and adopting a firm policy in regard thereto.

Some are serious, and some border on the ludicrous. Did you ever send several cartons of shoes to some fair enquirer’s house, only to have your errand boy inform you that he saw there four or five other boys from competitors’ stores on the same errand as himself? The knowledge that your shoes are being tossed about helter-skelter with a couple of dozen other pairs doesn’t help your peace of mind any. Neither is it likely to prepossess favorably your goods in the mind of the prospective purchaser. It is more than probable that she thinks of you more or less contemptuously as an “easy mark”—which under the circumstances, is a fairly correct estimate.

All-round Dissatisfaction

There is a more serious side, however. In the first place, not in one case out of a hundred can the person concerned secure in this way a shoe satisfactory in fit, style or price. Figure it out for yourself. You judge a salesman by his selling ability. But this consists very largely in his ability to fit the customer’s foot as perfectly as possible, and sometimes he has to take much time and to try on many pairs of shoes ere a suitable pair is found. There is as much individuality in feet as in personality. If he can make the customer’s feet comfortable, there is much less difficulty about the style or the price. By his advice he is often able to divert the customer’s mind from some particular style desired, which he knows would result in that customer developing a chronic grouch against the firm from which he bought the shoe.

But the sale is not always made when a satisfactory fit is secured. A battle of wills often occurs over the price, which takes every atom of selling ability possessed by the salesman to bring to a successful issue. Now if a salesman with his selling ability, experience, expert knowledge of the goods, and the whole stock of the store to draw upon, sometimes fails to make the desired sale, what likelihood is there that the prospective purchaser can fit himself or herself satisfactorily, or be satisfied with the price even when this is accomplished? Look at the first paragraph of this article, and see those three innocent little words spoken, “if they suit.” That’s always the little joker in the pack. In such cases the shoes almost invariably never suit, and all your trouble goes for nothing.

The Loss Through the Practise

This is another feature to be considered. It’s bad enough to lose a sale, and to lose it under such circumstances that the customer never thinks of blaming himself, but always you and your goods. It is even worse to find stock returned almost irreparably damaged, as has been the case times without number in the experience of shoe retailers. Buttons ripped off, shoes stretched all out of shape, seams torn, patent leather cracked, soles marred and scratched; these are some of the results of this short-sighted method of doing business. In such cases, it is practically impossible to obtain redress. Many a retailer who possibly might be able to push such claims to a successful issue, hesitates to do so because of the fear that the amount he would receive would not make up for loss of trade bound to follow. Therefore he suffers in silence, and gets rid of damaged stock as best he can.

Supposing the stock be returned undamaged, there is always the likelihood of sales being lost because of the absence in this way of some particular style of shoe just when it is wanted. And if that style is one which you do not get an opportunity to show every day, your chagrin is all the greater. Many a retailer has bemoaned sales lost in just such a manner. There would be some excuse for the existence of the habit if customers could be made to realize what a favor they ask of a dealer when requesting that goods be sent out on approval. But, the people who are most insistent on shoes being sent on approbation are the very ones who almost always have to be urged repeatedly to return samples sent them.

You may assert that these are exceptional cases. Not at all. They can be duplicated in your own experience, if you are a devotee of this pernicious system, as they have been in the experiences of hundreds of other retailers, to their sorrow. We have said nothing of parcels that never reached the addresses to which they were sent, and which never came back to the store; nor of parcels sent out, the recipients of which took the first train for parts unknown. These and other instances are by no means uncommon.

What Associations Can Accomplish

Have you a local association in your locality? If so, here is an opportunity to justify its existence. If not, you and your competitors surely ought to be able to get together on such common ground as this, and come to some definite arrangement for handling this problem. It's a case of "together we stand, divided we fall." A little concerted, red-blooded action and firmness will put this evil out of business, the same as it solved the question of early closing, in practically all localities. Remember the howl that went up everywhere about that project when it was first broached? "The public will not stand for it"; "nearly all business is done in the evenings"; these and many other excuses were urged against it. But wisdom won out; the public have become educated to daylight shopping and business has not suffered in the least; in fact, it has increased, as both employer and employee do more and better work in the shorter hours.

This result can be duplicated in dealing with the approbation evil, and if the nettle is grasped firmly and rooted up once and for all, you, your competitors, and the buying public will be everlasting gainers.

If on the other hand, you are content to endure in silence, with only the underground rumblings of protest, the evil will continue indefinitely, becoming more troublesome and expensive as it grows, while you and your competitors remain victims of the approbation habit.

The Shoe Repair Man

SOME INSTRUCTIVE POINTERS ON MAKING MONEY IN THE SHOE REPAIR BUSINESS

E. H. DIXON, who conducts a successful and progressively managed shoe repair establishment at 217 Arthur street, Port Arthur, Ont., is a live wire in the trade. He entered into business in that city in September, 1909, arriving the previous spring from Owen Sound, where he had been for some three or four years in the employ of Harry Peel, principally in the manufacture of hand-made boots and shoes. When Mr. Dixon first started for himself in Port Arthur the work was done by hand, but it was not long before he installed a finishing machine, and two years later, purchased a No. 10 Landis Stitcher, which he continued to use for some four years with entire satisfaction after he had once mastered the operation of the machine. He found it an entirely different matter to watch a machine being operated by some one else, than to run it himself, there being much to learn in order to do it properly. Last August, Mr. Dixon and staff moved from their old quarters to the present stand, and sold their Fleming Stitcher and finishing machines, together with other appliances, and installed an 18-foot Goodyear outfit and Goodyear Stitcher, finding the latter a considerable improvement. Mr. Dixon says his is the only stitcher used in Port Arthur, as all the other shoemakers in that city do their stitching by hand. Mr. Dixon, however, considers that life is too short to spend the hours in hand stitching when a machine will do the work more perfectly, and in much less time. He finds that a machine will finish in three minutes what will consume one hour's hard handwork. "In fact," said Mr. Dixon, "at the present run of price, a man stitching soles by hand can only make wages, and not a cent of profit, which is eaten up in the time it takes to complete the job."

In regard to prices, for repair work in Port Arthur, they are practically the same as those in the schedule published by the Toronto Shoe Repairers' Association. On some jobs the prices are a little higher than those in Toronto, while on turn work a slightly lower figure is obtained. Very little of this work is done, however, as the repairers of Port Arthur do not find it profitable at any price. Ten to fifteen cents a pair more is obtained for men's nailed soles and about ten cents less for ladies, which Mr. Dixon thinks is more uniform, considering the difference in quality and material required.

"As near as can be figured at the present prices of the best oak and hemlock sole," added Mr. Dixon, "men's soles should be from ten to fifteen cents higher than at present, as a shoemaker cannot buy a good sole for less than from sixty to eighty cents a pair."

Mr. Dixon considers calling for and delivering work consumes a large measure of the profit, and therefore does not make a practice of doing so, although he thinks more work could be secured by this means. He does not consider this part of the business could be successfully carried out by a boy, as a thorough knowledge is required of just what repair work will be needed on a pair of shoes, and a boy can not give an accurate estimate of the cost. To attend to this work, a person should be familiar with the trade and the make of all shoes, as frequently the customer himself cannot just decide what repairs are required, and a person more in touch with the trade, and experienced in shoe repairing should be employed to solicit.

Mr. Dixon thinks it is high time some native Canadians should wake up and get busy in the repair and shoemaking line, as otherwise he considers that, in a few years, it may pass completely out of Canadian hands into the hands of foreigners, as may be noticed in many cases at the present time, not only in Port Arthur, but in different towns and cities throughout the Dominion. Mr. Dixon instances this fact by stating that eight years ago in Port Arthur, there was one foreigner engaged in shoe repair work, while to-day, there are only two Canadians and one Britisher—three men in all working at this trade—the rest of the work being done by the foreign element, while conditions in Fort William are much the same.

Besides repairing, a large number of boots are made by Mr. Dixon and his helpers, to measure, as well as lumbermen's and cruising boots, as it is next to impossible, said Mr. Dixon, to buy a good factory boot for these purposes. He firmly believes that leather will advance much higher in price this coming summer, and accordingly he is fully protected in this respect, having purchased enough leather at right prices to supply him for the next eighteen months. He feels that any extra profits to be made in this line may as well fall to his share as enrich the manufacturer. Mr. Dixon thinks every shoe repair man should take advantage of all discounts he can get, as it must pay him if it pays a wholesaler or a manufacturer to allow 2 or 5 per cent. off, ten days, or net 30 or 60 days. "Take your discount—it is the easiest money you can make and you can thus buy at closer prices," he concluded.

Mr. Dixon buys all oak for sewn work, and does his own sole cutting, but for all the rest, he has complete sets of whole sole, insole, tap sole and heel dies, and finds it a great saving in stock and labor, many dollars of which is wasted, if cut by hand.

STILL INVESTIGATING NEW SOLING METHODS

At the last regular meeting of the Toronto Shoe Repairers' Association, an interesting discussion took place on the new method of attaching soles without stitches or nails. The sample shoes which were sent to George Edwards, of Medicine Hat, Alta., who put on several soles by his method of welding were exhibited. The job was favorably commented upon, and the shoes subjected to a severe test, but the bottoms could not be loosened by any pulling or twisting. Many views were expressed on the economy and merit of the work and it was decided to write Mr. Edwards requesting him to put his proposition in writing and to forward a sample of the solution or cement which he uses, together, with the price for the same, as many members are desirous of securing the preparation.

Walter Burnill stated that he had used a cement for years in attaching soles to turn shoes and women's light flexible McKays. His solution is made of gutta percha and bisulphate of carbon.

The opinion was generally expressed that Mr. Edwards, in writing regarding his new method and preparation, was entitled to the thanks of the Association.

W. F. Barker, of Toronto, who has been attaching soles for years with a solution, which he makes himself, showed the gathering a sample of the mixture and answered several questions. He said that he had not the time to put up his preparation in a commercial way and place it on the market as his health was not good.

Mr. Edwards has been written to by Secretary Butterworth and his proposition will be laid before the members in detail at the next meeting.

C. F. Robertson presided and there was a large attendance. The petition for closing all repair shops in the city, at 8 o'clock every night except Saturday, which will be duly gotten up in regular legal form, was referred to the committee elected for that purpose and will be presented at the next session in proper shape for signatures. Each member will then canvass the repairers in his district.

A LIVE FIRM IN ST. KITTS

William Legg & Son are an enterprising shoe repair firm, who have been actively engaged in that line for twenty-five years, in St. Catharines, Ont. Business with them has largely increased by reason of the superior work and splendid service given. Of late, however, they have been badly handicapped, due to the scarcity of help. William Legg, the senior partner, came to Canada in 1892, and located in the Garden City, at 229 St. Paul street, later purchasing the present premises at 246 St. Paul street. An Englishman by birth—he served thirty-two years in the army and navy, entering the former when but a boy, and for twenty-two years was on H.M.S. Britannia at Dartmouth, Devon.

Walter Legg, who entered into partnership with his father, ten years ago, is secretary of the St. Catharines Shoemakers' Association, and at the annual meeting, was unanimously re-elected. All repair shops in the city close at 6.30 p.m.—Saturdays at 5 p.m. and at 12.30 p.m. on Wednesday during June, July and August.

A new price list was recently adopted, owing to the steady increase of raw materials and the necessity of paying higher wages on account of the abnormal cost of living.

WHY NOT TRY THE PICNIC STUNT?

The secretary of a Shoe Repairers' Association in a Western city which shall be nameless, apparently does not think that there is much prospect of unity and co-operation as a body. He says there were twenty members enrolled at the outset, but in many cases they just sat tight once they saw what benefits would accrue, and were content to do nothing further.

“I have not the time,” declares the writer, “to go out into the highways and byways and compel the members to come in, especially after finding my efforts treated unappreciatively. You know it takes time and means losses to a man alone in his shop to undertake to carry on this kind of business, for men who do not see any reason why they should be so foolish as to render their own self-support. I might add that the notice which I am enclosing was practically ignored by the recipients. There is no use putting forth efforts and activity on behalf of men in whom you find the spirit of exploitation predominates over that of co-operation and fraternization.”

Among the subjects to have been discussed at the meeting, at which less than a quorum met, were:

- Our Relations to Other Associations.
- Date and Particulars of Banquet.
- Rubber Heel Prices and General Prices.
- Do We Need More Leisure Time.
- How to Deal with Price Cutting.

“Your committee has instructed me to inquire as to whether you intend your membership in this Association to continue.

“It should be apparent to you that each and every member must of necessity fill his place and give his support on a basis of equality in order that we may continue in existence as an Association.

"Whilst we, either as a committee appointed or as shoe repair men have no desire to interfere in your personal affairs or your private business, we at least feel that in serving this Association we have been entirely unselfish in our efforts to benefit the trade conditions through the city, and if supported in the manner which we at the outset were led to expect we are confident that much benefit would accrue, as time goes on, to each and all concerned. However, if you are satisfied that future conditions and the maintenance of standard prices do not appear to make further co-operative efforts of value to you, it is not for us to dictate but simply for you as business men and fellow-workers to release us from further duty.

"Since the Association has been formed it has been gratifying to shoe repairers to receive prices consistent with the advanced cost of materials, but we doubt if the same conditions will prevail indefinitely if the Association is permitted, through lack of unity to become extinct.

"The secretary will be glad to have your reply, giving your personal expressions relative to the foregoing; also any remarks or suggestions you feel disposed to contribute. A stamped, addressed envelope is enclosed for your convenience. Kindly use the same and reply promptly."

The topics were certainly attractive, and ones which should have invited discussion and aroused much interest.

If the forcible appeal contained in the above, and the list of timely subjects did not bestir the lethargic members, then some other means should be tried.

How would it do for the Association to try and get up a picnic of some kind? We know that the members of another trade association in this particular city, have for years held a very successful outing at which their wives and daughters, friends and relatives have gathered in large numbers. There have been games and races of various kinds, valuable prizes, music and other attractions, which have brought the affairs up to a high state of interest, so that the event is looked forward to with a great deal of expectancy.

The Toronto Shoe Repairers' Association are shortly going to have a big basket picnic and everybody is going to come along. Why could not the Association in question undertake something of this character? No doubt, it would prove a tremendous success.

QUESTION DRAWER FOR THE TRADE

Any shoemaker or repairer who has difficulties or perplexities, desires any problems solved, or is anxious for advice or assistance in any way, should write the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL and his questions will be fully and promptly answered in these columns. Such a department would be of mutual benefit, and prove a means of instruction and source of interest to those who have knotty problems that they wish cleared up. Send in your questions and they will be given mature consideration. The name of the inquirer will not be used and, therefore, any reader may write freely and frankly on any matter.

SHOE REPAIR FIRM BRANCHING OUT

D. W. Butler, proprietor of the United Shoe Repair Co., 667 Queen St. W., Toronto, has sold his business to the Practical Shoe Repair Co., 457 Yonge street. Mr. Butler has been in business for eight years, and possesses a complete equipment, consisting of a McKay Stitcher, a Goodyear Stitcher, 33 feet of buffing and finishing shafts, a twelve-inch Power Splitter and a Crowe Loose Nailer. Mr. Butler will continue to reside in Toronto, but his outside business interests for some time have claimed a large share of his attention, he being president of the Natura Chemicals Corporation, 626 Ellicott Square, Buffalo, N.Y., which company is specializing in fertilizers.

Arthur Butterworth, one of the members of the Practical Shoe Repair Co., who has made his headquarters at 457

Yonge street, will take up his abode at 667 Queen street west, which is near the corner of Bathurst street, and will be in charge of the United Shoe Repair Co. Mr. Butterworth is the energetic secretary of the Toronto Shoe Repair Association.

SHOE REPAIRER WHO CAN SHOOT

C. H. Easter, boot maker and repairer, of Napinka, Man., has been a resident of that town four and a half years, and is doing a nice little business, considering the size of the place, which has only three hundred population. Mr. Easter is a thoroughly experienced craftsman, having been born in Bermondsey, London, England, the heart of the tanning industry. He learned the trade when fourteen years of age, with his father, who was conducting a first-class shoe repair business in Surrey.

Mr. Easter expects at an early date, to install a complete repair equipment and stitcher. He makes a specialty of hand work, including new work, and has testimonials from prominent residents in the district, and the next jobs that he executes bear witness to his knowledge of the vocation in which he is engaged. The accompanying illustration shows him in hunting attire. It was taken after he shot an owl, when on a holiday. The bird measured three feet from wing to wing, and two feet from head to tail, and was shot from a distance of two hundred and sixty yards, with a 32-calibre rifle, on the outskirts of Napinka.

SHOEMAKER WHO IS A BARD

John Henley, of Belleville, Ont., who styles himself the Footbridge Gangway Shoe Repairer, writes the following interesting letter to the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL:—

"In reading your Journal I have often been benefited by articles appearing on the Shoe Repair Man's Page, especially along the advertising line. At different times you have reprinted advertisements inserted by different repair men, and they have often given me a good idea for my own use. Some time ago I got out what I considered an original advertisement, which, if you would care to print it, might possibly be of some use to some other repair man, as it is capable of being changed around quite a bit, for instance:

"Forward the boot brigade,
Give George Edwards all your trade;
Into his quick repair shop,
Go you six hundred."

"No doubt some repair man will be able to make use of this ad with a few alterations. It is not copyright, not by a long way.

"Hoping you can see your way clear to print this and assuring you that I am always keeping my eyes skinned for pointers when I read our Repair Man's Page."

PUBLIC SPIRITED SHOE MANUFACTURER

N. B. Detweiler, president and treasurer of the Hydro City Shoe Manufacturers, Limited, Kitchener, is a man with public spirit, who has always been a force and a factor for good in Kitchener. Born in Roseville, Ontario, fifty-nine years ago, he began his business career with Jacob Y. Shantz & Son, button manufacturers, Kitchener, with whom he remained four years. He then took a position on the road and was later accountant with A. O. Boehmer & Co. In 1897 he went with G. V. Oberholtzer, shoe manufacturer, with whom he remained three years, and in 1901, took over the estate of Mr. Oberholtzer by order of the executors, for one year. With his brother and nephew, he then purchased the present business, and has operated since the same, under the old name, until 1916, when the title was changed to Hydro City Shoe Manufacturers. Mr. Detweiler has found time from his active career to devote a large share of attention to public affairs. He has been chairman of the Board of Health, an alderman, member of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association and the Board of Trade, and at the recent municipal elections, in Kitchener, received the highest vote of the British League candidates for alderman.

Mr. Detweiler is a member of the United Brethren, and has always been active in Sunday School work, having been a superintendent for the past twenty-five years. He has shown his public spirit in other ways, by being secretary of Kitchener Branch, National Service Council, and chairman of the Local Committee, Waterloo County Temperance Alliance.

HAS JOB AS OFFICIAL SHOE TESTER

E. W. Burt, shoe manufacturer, of Lynn, Mass., has hired a shoe tester, in the person of "Chief" Mike Doyle, who is said to be the first salaried shoe tester in the country.

It is "Chief's" task to tramp all over the country, testing materials for boots and shoes. Last week he tramped from Portland, Me., to Mr. Burt's factory in Lynn, a distance of 100 miles. Later he will tramp through the White Mountains. He also will tramp to Chicago.

He tests shoes on all sorts of roads, from smooth paved streets to country cow paths. He walks through mud, and fords brooks, and climbs rocky hills, just to see how different materials stand up under the test of actual wear.

Every once in a while he goes to the factory, where his shoes are examined, to see how they are wearing; also his feet are examined to see what effect walking has upon their development.

RECRUITING RAILWAY DRAFT

Lieutenant B. A. Dimock, of Windsor, N.S., has been authorized to recruit a railway draft of fifty men to proceed overseas at once. Windsor is the mobilization point. Already half the number has signed up from the town and county. Lieutenant Dimock is now on a trip through the valley to Yarmouth, returning along the south shore, and will secure the required number.

Lieutenant Dimock is a son of C. Henry Dimock, a prominent shoe merchant of Windsor. An elder brother, Milford, who was on the Canadian Bank of Commerce staff, enlisted last year and is now with a Western battalion somewhere in France.

HE IS ALWAYS ON THE JOB

Percy J. Milburn, of Montreal, who represents the Marlatt & Armstrong Co., Limited, was born in the commercial metropolis, and educated at the Montreal High School. He graduated with highest honors and was awarded a medal. For seventeen years he has been in the service of Marlatt & Armstrong Co., Limited, and for the last fifteen years has called upon the trade from Lake Huron to the Atlantic Ocean, and also points in the New England States, both for buying and selling. Mr. Milburn is one of those quiet, steady-going fellows who does not say much but "saws

HOLDING UP THE VOLUME OF YOUR SHOE BUSINESS

Under Present Abnormal Conditions More Customers are Anxious to Buy Economically—Many are People who have Previously Purchased Without Giving the Subject Much Thought—The Necessity of Skill and Tact in Satisfying Patrons

OF course, the shoe retailer is simply passing on to his customers the advances in the prices of the goods he sells. The manufacturers raise the wholesale prices and the retailer is compelled to follow suit or quit.

Theoretically no apology should be necessary on the part of the shoe dealer for passing on the increase to the consumer, but old "Uncle Consumer" has recently been given a good many things to think about, and he is getting a bit sensitive on the subject of a price curve that goes continually upward.

Whatever causes the higher prices, the war, freight car shortage, increased demand, lack of leather, the retail man has to assume the responsibility of putting the increase up to the consumer. The consumer cannot get at the manufacturer or the jobber. He is not in touch with the men higher up. He can reach only the retailer, so it is at that point that the sparks must fly.

With prices steadily ascending, and the market unsettled in many ways, it behooves the shoe retailer to consider ways and means of making peace with his customers. He should take steps to make it plain that he is not responsible for higher prices, that they mean losses to him as well as inconvenience and dissatisfaction.

The question is "How can the shoe dealer cause his customers in a measure to forget that shoes are costing them more, and give more thought to the shoes themselves?"

Expert Service Better Treatment

The better an article looks and the better it is sold, the better the treatment accorded the customer, the less likely a complaint about the price. It is necessary to see that customers are given every attention that will make them feel pleased and satisfied. Politeness, courtesy, careful attention in the handling of customers in such a way as to make them understand that their interests are being looked after will help them to forget they are paying more money than ever before.

The one thing that costs no more in these times is courtesy. There is no real expense attached to politeness. If folks are coming in with their minds upset over the prospect of having to pay two prices for what they buy, make it your business to see that they are cheerfully received, tactfully handled, that their mental wrinkles are smoothed out and their purchases made to appear worth the cost.

It is difficult to do much business with people while you are rubbing them the wrong way. While tempers are upset by high prices you will have to be careful in manner and speech.

To most people the advances in prices of shoes have been exaggerated. They come in with flighty ideas of what they will have to pay for some lines. Gossip has hinted that they cannot get shoes fit to wear for less than ten dollars a pair, and that for anyone with a roll of bills a bit smaller around than a telephone pole, there is no use trying to buy anything at all with any style to it. Everyone has heard this kind of talk, supplemented with tales of instances where women have had to pay thirty dollars a pair for shoes to match certain gowns.

Make it plain that something more than the price of shoes has advanced. While shoe prices have gone up, shoes have gone up in height and in the average quality demanded. Who will buy to-day such shoes as were staple ten years ago, I mean shoes of such workmanship, such inconspicuous design, and comparatively of so much less material?

If people demand more expensive styles at a time when the normal styles would have cost enough more to suit any new-rich customer, they must be made to shoulder some of the responsibility.

After tactfully placing the responsibility for higher prices where it belongs, make it your business to show people where and how they can get better value out of their shoes.

Teach them the necessity for giving the leather a chance to wear. Encourage frequent cleansing and polishing, and the early repair of worn soles. Explain that if buttons are all kept in place shoes will look better for a longer time: also that care should be used in the lacing. Emphasize the difference in the style of a shoe well laced up, and kept clean and snug and fit. Women who may be careless about their shoes, as far as the welfare of the leather is concerned, will change their attitude for the sake of appearance.

The well informed shoe dealer can explain to a customer the way leather acts under misuse and neglect, what happens when shoes become wet and are thrown in a heap to dry into wrinkles and distortions.

The fact that the proper care of shoes calls for the use of more findings in the way of cleaners, polishes, trees, etc., ought to be of itself sufficient reason for a dealer to be interested in working along that line.

I do not know that any figures have ever been compiled to show how much the average life of a pair of shoes could be prolonged by proper care, but 25 per cent. would probably not be out of the way as an estimate. Is it not worth while for a dealer to go to a customer with such a statement as this: "You realize that shoes are costing more money, and will cost still more. Let me suggest that you can, by the exercise of proper care and without taking much time, make your shoes last 25 per cent. longer. That means that you will get the same value for your money as you got when shoes cost a quarter less."

Reduce this to figures for the customer in the case of the shoes he is buying. Tell him that if he pays six dollars for a pair of shoes and wears them out in four months, the cost is $1.50 per month, while if he makes them last five months the cost is but $1.20 per month.

Encourage the Practice of Alternating

Encourage the buying of additional pairs on the basis of the argument that two pairs worn alternately will last much more than twice as long as one pair worn steadily. There are plenty of people who are of economical trend, and have money enough to buy more extensively, if they can be shown that it is profitable to do so. Study ways you can recommend for making shoes wear longer, and bring them to the front with every sale.

It always makes the buyer better satisfied with the price if the goods are made to look their best. Great care should be shown in displaying the goods to show to full advantage, and in bringing out all the good looks when exhibiting to a customer. The best shoes in the store can be cheapened in appearance by poorly lighted display, and they can be cheapened in the mind of a customer by careless handling. Light up your stock, and handle it as if it was the best. Show your shoes the respect you want the public to show them.

Under present conditions more customers will be anxious to buy economically. Many of them will be people who have previously bought without giving the subject much thought. It is up to the shoemen to do and say everything possible to make such customers comfortable. Unfortunately there are stores where salespeople seem to feel more or less scorn for a customer who has to think about the cost of a purchase. If there was ever any excuse for that attitude, it does not exist now.

A good deal of the feeling about high prices depends on how those prices are announced. If a dealer comes out with great ado about advancing costs, thus helping to spread the feeling that everything is going up out of reach, it tends to put a stop to buying. It would be worth while for all the merchants in a town to get together and agree to apply the soft pedal to this high cost of living talk.

The Right Method of Proclamation

In "Printer's Ink" recently the following appeared which is quite suggestive of the right method in announcing higher prices:

"In the following manner Maurice L. Rothschild, of Chicago, advertised an advance in hosiery prices: 'This little advance in the price of Phoenix silk hose is interesting. It shows that the makers care more for quality than for keeping a price down. It shows, too, that most men would rather have quality, even if it costs a little more—five cents more.'"

That is a tactful, not to say shrewd, way of breaking the news of an advance. How much better it reads to a consumer than such a statement as: "We are advancing the prices on all shoes. Everything is going up and there is no sign of a halt in the advancing costs. Buy before the prices goes higher."

Trying to make people buy by throwing a scare into them has an all around bad effect. It makes people tighten their grip on their money, and buy less than they really can afford to buy.

Don't discuss higher prices and war and unsettled conditions with your customers if you can avoid it. Worried looks and anxious voices are contagious. It is an easy matter to make a man think that the time has come to sit tight and see what is going to happen before he spends any more money. It is harder to get people out of such a mental attitude than to get them into it.

If prices are higher, they are not so much higher that your customers of fair incomes need to worry or to stop buying. It is up to you to get your feeling right about the shoe situation.

WON PROMOTION AT VIMY RIDGE

Lieut. S. M. Gibson, son of D. A. Gibson, shoe retailer, Portage la Prairie, Man., after seven months in France, has been sent to England to qualify for his commission. Lieut. Gibson enlisted with the Brandon Battalion, and went overseas in 1916, later being transferred to the Highlanders in France. He was in the fight at Vimy Ridge, and two days later, was recommended for a commission. He spent his 21st birthday at Vimy, where he held the rank of Lance-Corporal.

TELL THE PEOPLE THE FACTS

The Chilliwack Shoe Co., of Chilliwack, B.C., is a live organization. They believe in keeping in close touch with their customers and giving them some timely information on why shoes have gone up in price. Recently they mailed to every one of their patrons, a neat slip containing detailed statistical information on how leather, both upper and sole stock, heels, top lifts, counters, linings, trimmings, labor, findings and manufacturing expenses had gone up during the past few years. Statistics carry conviction where any amount of stereotyped talk would have little or no effect.

Here is a copy of the leaflet which was sent out by the firm, entitled—"Why Shoes Cost More."

LONDON SHOEMEN ELECT NEW OFFICERS

At the annual meeting of the London Retail Shoe Dealers' Association, which was held on May 10th, satisfactory reports were presented for the past year, and the outlook for the coming one is regarded with satisfaction.

John Morrison, of the Morrison Shoe Co., was elected president; Philip Cook, of the Cook Shoe Co., first vice-president; Hugh Murray, of Johnston & Murray, second vice-president, and W. J. Ashplant, of Hubert Ashplant & Sons, was re-elected secretary-treasurer.

It was decided to extend Wednesday afternoon closing through the month of September, with the exception of the Wednesday falling in Fair week. This is an extension of the Wednesday afternoon closing of one month. For some years, the retailers of London have taken every Wednesday afternoon during June, July and August, and will still do so this season, with September added.

Various other matters were taken up and considered, and a profitable discussion resulted on a number of topics of mutual interest to the members, who all reported business as excellent, in spite of the unfavorable weather that had been prevailing.

The London Retail Shoe Dealers' Association was the first body of its kind organized in the Dominion. While no great flourish of trumpets has been heard, quiet and effective work has been done, and the Association is strong, active and united.

HOW CANADIAN IMPORTS AND EXPORTS OF SHOES AND LEATHER STAND

THE statement showing the imports and exports of hides, leather, boots and shoes, as furnished by the Commissioner of Customs, Ottawa, Ont., always affords an interesting study.

For the fiscal year ended March 31st, 1917, the total imports of boots, shoes, slippers, etc., into the Dominion were $3,448,448; in 1916, the importations were $2,156,196; in 1915, $3,478,951; in 1914, $4,349,958. The increase for the fiscal year ended March 31st, 1917, over the corresponding fiscal year ended March 31st, 1916, is $1,292,252, or a little over 50 per cent., and is accounted for, no doubt, by the increased value of shoes of all kinds, the advances ranging all the way from 40 to 100 per cent., and in some instances more.

The imports of upper leather, including dongola, cordovan, kangaroo, etc., during the last fiscal year into Canada were $610,528, as compared with $296,171 in 1916, $390,990 in 1915; $486,795 in 1914.

In calf, kid, goat and sheep skin leathers, the importation was $2,649,839 as compared with $83,930 in 1916; $110,749 in 1915; and $87,409 in 1914

The increase is due, no doubt, to the large importations of fancy colored kid of many hues and shades which have been brought into the Dominion, to minister to the tastes and gratify the whims of My Ladye Fair.

The commissioners' monthly statement of imports and exports for March, 1917, which contains all information in detail, is now in the hands of the King's Printer, and will be ready for distribution shortly. In the meantime, the following are the bulk figures for the imports into Canada, of all kinds of leathers and shoes, from the aggregate figures covering the imports from the United States, the United Kingdom and other countries. The exports are also given in bulk.

AN IMPROVED SHOE DEPARTMENT

Extensive and elaborate improvements have been effected in the shoe section of the J. F. Cairns' store, Saskatoon. This department now occupies one fourth of the main floor, and is attracting the favorable attention of all customers. The space utilized was formerly devoted to the grocery line, which in the scheme of extensive alterations has been moved to the basement. Formerly the shoe department was divided—the women's and children's footwear being carried on the balcony, while the men's was directly underneath. In the new footwear quarters, all lines are conveniently arranged to provide the best shopping facilities. The men's shoes are next to the north wall of the building—and the women's on the Second avenue side, affording privacy to the lady customers. In the two spacious aisles are found the misses', children's and boys' foot togegy. Traveling goods will also be handled in this department in future. The handsome fixtures, for which the J. F. Cairns' store is noted, and the splendid arrangement of the shoe stock, combine to make the new department attractive, impressive and commodious.

BREEZY BRIEFS FROM ST. JOHN

The clerks in St. John have been endeavoring to get their employers to close their stores five nights of the week at 6 o'clock, instead of remaining open until eight and nine o'clock in the evening. They feel that the public should assist by doing their shopping before six o'clock.

Sergeant Percy J. Steel, of the Machine Gun Section, under command of Lieutenant Scammell, was recently made the recipient of a pretty wrist watch, suitably engraved, from the officers and teachers of Portland Methodist Church Sunday School. Mayor R. T. Hayes, president of J. M. Humphrey & Co., wholesale dealers and manufacturers of boots and shoes, who is superintendent of the Sunday School, made the presentation and in an accompanying address paid a glowing tribute to Sergeant Steel for valuable services rendered in the past. Sergeant Steel expressed his appreciation and spoke a few words regarding his military life.

Frank Merrill, clerk for Percy J. Steel, is becoming quite a society man. Recently he was elected vice-president of the Senior Epworth League of the Portland Methodist Church, and a few days ago he was elected president of the Knights of the Round Table of the same church.

Many retail shoe merchants in the boot and shoe district have commenced the Saturday half holiday. Some will close in the afternoon, but will open again in the evening.

NO "NATIONAL SHOE" FOR THE WOMEN

A National Shoe is talked of in Paris. It will be a uniform style of economical footwear, tending to cheapen prices and save leather. According to a despatch from the French capital, it is said the government is considering a product of this kind. But it is not so comprehensive as the general public might suppose. It is proposed to adopt a standard type of cheap shoes for the benefit of refugees and persons in moderate circumstances, who are unable to pay fifty francs ($10.00) for a pair of "kicks." "Exclusive shoes, with high tops for women, will still be made for those who are able to pay for them," concludes the despatch.

The attempt to have a "National Shoe" might work out with a fair measure of success, so far as the masculine population is concerned. A shoe built on a conservative, comfortable last, of a good quality of leather, could perhaps be standardized and even popularized; but when it comes to asking My Ladye Fair to wear something just like her neighbour or a rival in society, it is a totally different proposition. One might as well ask the fair sex to don the same type of hat, the same design of dress or the same effect in blouses, as to confine her choice in pedal toggery to a hard, fast, monotonous and universal class of shoe. "Variety is the spice of life," and it is also the builder of trade, so far as the sale of women's shoes is concerned, for, if it were not the changes of color, kaleidoscopic effects, variations in style, cut, pattern, combination and contrast, out of which numerous novelties are created, there would be little activity in the making of women's boots. The trade in this line of shoes has been developed and expanded by pandering to the foibles and whims, the love of finery and desire for display, which is more or less characteristic of all the daughters of Eve.

Some years ago a wave of sentiment swept over several fashion journals, in which designers were asked to get up a pattern for a "Polly Muriel" costume. For the benefit of male readers, who may not know what a "Polly Muriel" outfit was intended for, it may be said that this dress was designed as one suitable for all occasions, one appropriate for every requirement—street wear, morning wear, afternoon receptions, evening functions, theatre-going, shopping, visiting, traveling, etc. The "Polly Muriel" type of dress was supposed to be one that could be worn by any woman anywhere and any time. It was, of course, primarily conceived for the lady of moderate means, who could perhaps afford only one new gown a season, but after a few specimens were submitted, and considerable lively discussion had taken place on this interesting theme, nothing further was heard of the proposal.

In like manner, it is believed that if any attempt were made to foist a "Polly Muriel" shoe upon the nether limbs of womankind, the movement would have only enough impetus to carry it along for a week or two. Then, after the novelty of the effort had worn away, women would still be clamoring for the newest, smartest and most pretentious creations in leather and cloth. A "National Shoe" may be feasible so far as mankind is concerned, especially with those of maturer age, but when it comes to proclaiming a "National Shoe" for women, it is safe to say that there will be a revulsion of feeling toward the promoters that would even put to shame the ante-bellum escapades of Mrs. Pankhurst's suffragettes to gain the franchise.

M. A. Issenman, representing the Walpole Rubber Co., Montreal, was in town on his return from a business trip to the lower provinces, and reports business as very good.

H. Hurtibise, representative of the Panther Rubber Manufacturing Co., Sherbrooke, was in Quebec recently on business.

George Goulet, son of O. Goulet, shoe manufacturer, and formerly foreman in the cutting room of his father's establishment, died recently at the age of thirty years. The funeral, which was largely attended, was held at the Jacques Cartier Church, and thence to St. Charles Cemetery.

M. D. Dion, formerly a shoe manufacturer of this city, passed away recently at the age of sixty-six years. The funeral took place on the 31st ult. He was the father of Art. Gosselin, of Lud. Duchaine, has returned after a business trip to Toronto and Hamilton, and reports having booked good orders.

Jos. Tanguay, shoe manufacturer, is organizing a Good-year plant. This firm is working to capacity and its business is steadily increasing.

P. Ouillet, leather and finding merchant, of Quebec, is at present suffering from a severe burn on his right hand, caused by the upsetting of boiling water.

A recent report from the front states that Major J. A. Scott, of Quebec, has been wounded in France. Full details have not yet been received.

Work on the handsome and commodious new establishment of Edgar Shee, leather commission agent of this city, on Belleau street, is now completed.

Business in Quebec shoe factories, generally, is quiet at the present time. Shoe retailers, however, report that sales are good. There is quite a demand for novelty shoes in different colors.

TOES LONGER AND TOPS HIGHER

"Business appears to be at a standstill in Lynn, Mass.," says "Hide and Leather." Fifty shops are shut down, and nothing special is doing in the shops that are running. However, there is plenty going on underneath the surface, and if a big drive in footwear does not set in along in July, or later, then some Lynners will miss a guess in which they have much confidence.

Development of style, our source of much prosperity, goes on. Boots for fall will be taller, longer and slimmer, as refined and as ladylike as styles can be. There are no signs of military or mannish shoes coming into fashion at the present moment, though they may come if women become conductresses on trolley cars, chauffeurs, postwomen and policeladies.

The new fall styles will cause some minor changes in the buying and cutting of leather. Toes of shoes will be long and slim, with extreme vamps 4 inches long against 2½ inches, the extreme in days of short vamps. The longer vamps will take up more leather, of course. As the toes are pointed, the soft leathers, like millinery kid stock, can best be handled by the shoe workers. It will be no easy task to pull over and last patent leather around the toes of sword-point lasts. The soft kid leathers can be handled more advantageously.

As toes will be long and slim, soles will be long, and stock fitters will fit up on sizes, instead of down. That will take up more sole leather, of course. Some of the solecutting dies, now being made in local forges, look half an inch longer, size for size, than the old style dies.

There is some offset to this excess in the use of leather, for when soles are slim, they are always narrow, and there is no extension on their edges. The old argument that long toes waste leather no longer holds good, because shoe clerks have a new habit of fitting shoes long and slim, thinking they look better and feel more comfortable. For example, one retailer reports he took from the feet of a customer a pair of No. 3½ E wide shoes, and put on in their place a pair No. 5 A wide, and that the long slim shoes fitted better and looked better.

When foreparts are long and slim, heels always are higher. Our manufacturers will use more wood heels than ever. They can get them, for the Haverhill wood heelers strike has been settled, and 200 workers have returned to their benches. The new wood heeling machine enables an operator to nail on 700 pairs of heels in a day, so it is now possible to provide the wholesalers with all the wood heeled shoes they require. The wood heels are more expensive than leather. A manufacturer usually figures wood heels at fifty cents a pair, for the heels, the covering and the attaching; and leather heels at fifteen cents a pair.

Patterns of boots 12 inches high were made in one local shop the other day. That's an extreme height, though salesmen tell of seeing even higher boots, the patterns were for fabric boots. More fabrics are being offered to shoe manufacturers than ever, and some of them are surprisingly good looking imitations of leather.

Supplies of leather here are more abundant than for some time. India and chrome kid are accumulating, and bargain lots are offered at prices that seem impossibly low. One lot of 150,000 feet of black kid leather was offered at 12 cents during the week.

Various rumors concerning the lifting of embargoes, the reopening of foreign trade, and of new and important developments in domestic trade were in circulation during the week. Our manufacturers of shoes, leather and factory supplies showed a disposition to sit tight, to listen to rumors, and to wait for the country to complete its readjustment to a war basis. It is figured that when this readjustment comes there will be a big drive on medium grades, more serviceable than have been many of the shoes made and sold the past year.

THREE YEARS AND SEVERAL THOUSAND DOLLARS

"It took three years and several thousand dollars for me to find out that 33 1/3 per cent. added to cost only means 25 per cent. on selling price," was the very significant statement made by a shoe dealer recently.

Turn that statement over carefully in your mind, Mr. Dealer. It may mean hundreds of dollars to you, because there is no denying the fact that a good many retailers do not realize the all-important one that a profit that gives a certain percentage on cost gives a vastly different and smaller percentage on selling price.

But let us go back to the experiences of this merchant who admits he lost several thousand dollars in finding out this fact. He had acquired about ten thousand dollars in a general business in a small centre—probably more by good luck than good management, it being during those days when expenses were smaller and competition less keen than to-day.

Then, he decided to go into the shoe business in one of our cities where he was offered the exclusive agency for a certain brand of shoe. He was told that the shoe paid a profit of 33 1/3 per cent. At the end of the year he found his expenses were about 28 per cent., and, figuring that he was making a gross profit of 33 1/3 per cent. he saw where he was making a nice net profit of 5 1/3 per cent.

But stop to consider the mistake he was making—the same mistake that dozens of other dealers are making to-day, albeit they may be all unconscious of the fact. He was figuring his expenses on the selling price of the goods, while the 33 1/3 per cent. profit that he had been told about, was figured on the cost price of the goods.

He thought he was making a profit, but an inventory at the end of three years demonstrated that there was some mistake, for the $10,000 with which he had commenced business, was dwindling. And here is the reason why. It is indeed a sad story.

He sold $16,000 worth of goods per year. He believed that he was getting a net profit of 5 1/3 per cent., which would mean about $850 a year.

Here was the truth, however. He was buying $12,000 worth of goods per year, which at a profit of 33 1/3 per cent. (figured for him by the manufacturer on the cost price) gave him a gross profit of $4,000, and a total sales figure of $16,000. His expenses, however, were 28 per cent. (but figured on the selling price), making a total of $4,480 per year.

So, he was really losing $480 per year instead of making $850, as he thought.

This is the same mistake that many others are making—failing to realize that 33 1/3 per cent. on cost, only means 25 per cent. on selling price—that 25 per cent. on cost only means 20 per cent. on selling price—and so on.

Are you making this same mistake? It is certainly worth taking time to make certain that you are on the right path. Now is the time to do so instead of waiting until you lose a good deal of money by the mistake.

UNITED SHOE MACHINERY AFFAIRS

The annual report of the United Shoe Machinery Corporation and United Shoe Machinery Co. shows combined earnings of $8,174,452 for the year ended February 28th, 1917, which compares with $6,138,433 the previous year and $4,861,091 for the year ended February 28th, 1915. The company's surplus as of March 1st last was $27,109,966, which compares with $14,919,050 on March 1st, 1916, and $17,497,772 on March 1st, 1915. This increased surplus was brought about by a revaluation of stocks of subsidiary companies as of March 1st, 1916, a foot-note relating to it in this language: "Stocks and bonds of subsidiary corporations have in previous years been carried on the books at a figure which, as noted in previous statements, was in the opinion of the directors less than their actual value. This item has now been increased by a reappraisal, as appears by the above statement of assets and in the surplus account, to an amount not exceeding their actual tangible asset value on March 1st, 1916."

The balance sheet carries the value of these securities at $37,992,360, which compares with a valuation of $30,077,805 the previous year and $29,588,450 at the end of February, 1915. The company paid cash dividends during the fiscal year of $4,996,360 and a stock distribution (T. G. Plant Co.) of $1,889,782, a total of $6,886,142. In referring to the substantial increase in the stocks and bonds of other corporations and leased machinery, S. W. Winslow, president, says: "In view of the requirements and effect of the various existing and proposed tax laws, it was deemed wise by the directors of the United Shoe Machinery Co. to re-appraise these holdings of stock in subsidiary companies and to take up upon the books of the company the appreciation in value so that the shares should be carried upon the books at figures reflecting such increase in value, but not in any case exceeding their actual tangible asset value on March 1st, 1916. This increase does not represent any actual change or addition to the capital assets but merely a reappraisal of the same assets to reflect their increased value at the beginning of the fiscal year beginning March 1st, 1916."

The combine balance sheets as of March 1st, 1917, shows as below:

Assets
Cash and receivable.....	$20,927,834
Stock finished and in process.....	8,476,419
Real estate.....	2,171,839
Machinery.....	1,403,802
Patents.....	400,000
Stocks and bonds of other corporations and leased machinery.....	37,992,360
Miscellaneous.....	27,24
Total.....	$71,399,502
Liabilities
Common stock.....	$31,506,981
Preferred stock.....	9,786,975
Accounts payable.....	860,722
Reserves.....	1,919,484
Outstanding stock United Shoe Co., and also corporation.....	215,374
Surplus.....	27,109,966
Total.....	$71,399,502

The report also says: "During the greater part of the year the increase in the business of the company which was referred to in the annual report a year ago has continued. At times more than five thousand people have been employed at our Beverly factory, a larger number than at any previous time in the company's history. At present the number employed there is 4,866. Two years ago the number was 2,887 and a year ago it was 4,450. The payroll is larger than ever before. The volume of business has been greater than at any similar period since the company was organized.

"In most instances the foreign companies in which the company is interested have continued to show a considerable increase in business. This is true, especially of the French and English companies, but our business in the Scandinavian countries has been materially affected by our inability to make shipments to our Danish company in Copenhagen upon which shoe manufacturers in Norway, Sweden and Denmark were dependent for supplies and parts."

Referring to the litigation in the courts, President

Predicts Great Activity in Leather Very Soon

"As to the outcome of this great struggle for liberty, now that the United States have joined the Allies there can be only one ending. As they are in it with all their force and energy it will certainly shorten the strife, once they have been able to get many thousand men into the field," declares a leading Ontario leather man who has just returned from a business trip to the leading New England cities.

"It will have a very substantial effect on the leather industry of the North American Continent, and within the next three months you will see great activity in all kinds of manufacturing industries, particularly in the leather trade and shoe industry.

"The United States to-day have the bulk of the money of the world and with the billions which they are loaning to the Allied nations, practically all of which is to be spent in their country for supplying the Allies, it can have only one result and that is a good prosperous effect which will last many months after the war is over. It is also drawing the English speaking nations closer together, both in relationship as well as in commercial intercourse.

"The ocean shipping facilities are handicapping the general trend of trade. But the time is not far distant when this will be all overcome, and the United States have the bulk of the interned German steamers in service. This will relieve all the congestion of freight along the Eastern ports, which is the most particular and serious thing we have to meet to-day.

"We, ourselves have many tons of freight to be shipped, but can only ship a portion, as our permit allows only a certain tonnage per month. We are sure that this will be all overcome when more steamers are available to relieve the situation.

"It is hard to say what effect the 10 per cent. duty will have on leather going into the United States, but with the 10 per cent. duty off the raw stock coming into the United States it will make some difference in our still being able to continue doing business in the American market."

Winslow says: "One unfortunate result of the litigation brought by the government against the company is that it has demanded and continues to absorb much of the time and energy of the executive and administrative officers of the company, and has deprived and will continue to deprive the business of services which, especially under present conditions in this country and abroad, are urgently needed in the administration of the company's business affairs and for the rendering of the company's greatest service in this crisis."

RINEX SOLES

RINEX is a composition fibre material, possessing ingredients that ensure the most serviceable wear. It has the advantages of both leather and rubber, yet decidedly different from either. Although developed by the world's largest rubber manufacturers, it is not a rubber product.

RINEX differs from all of the many and varied shoe sole materials of times past, in that it is manufactured solely for soles. It is not a material made for other purposes and simply used by the shoemaker for soles.

RINEX is deliberately made for the express and exacting requirements of shoe soles, and without a doubt, is the most practical and economical sole in the world.

RINEX SOLES

Fashion has changed her mind again, says a recent despatch from London, Eng. Women's boots are to be lower this summer. This statement, it should be explained, has no reference to prices. It is announced that the government proposes to economize in leather by prohibiting the manufacture of boots exceeding seven inches in height. Trade journals say manufacturers will gladly comply, hoping they will be permitted to make tall boots, provided the tops are of other material than leather. The permission, however, is not likely to be given, because fabrics appropriate for such uses are also scarce.

He states that while it is the intention to consolidate the entire plant, nothing is likely to be done until after the war, when the cost of building will have reached a normal basis again. The company has sufficiently vacant land adjoining its present Craig street premises on which to erect a building meeting all the requirements, but it is not the intention to spend a million for the purpose, half a million being nearer the mark.

Reports covering the world's total production of crude rubber indicate that the 1916 output amounted to 178,000 tons, of which 114,000 tons, or 64 per cent. were consumed in America. It is expected that this year's crop will amount to 235,000 tons. One million four hundred and twelve thousand acres are known to be under cultivation.

"I am giving my orders for men's shoes for fall subject to cancellation if conscription goes into effect," remarked a leading shoe dealer this week. "I have not a word to say against conscription—in fact, am strongly in favor of the proposed measure, but I do not intend to load up with a heavy stock of men's goods, in view of the uncertainty of the trade in the future on this line. I may be unduly cautious, but I think it only fair to put this stipulation in all my bookings for fall."

Hotel, of that city. Buyers from all parts will be in attendance, and it is expected that this event next month will be the most representative and attractive ever conducted by the shoemaking firms of the Flower City, who will gladly welcome all their friends.

A federal charter has been granted to Beckwith Box Toe, Limited, Sherbrooke, Que., with a capital stock of $100,000 to manufacture, buy, sell and deal in box toes and shoe parts and in all kinds of boots and shoes.

The Lillian Shoe Co., Limited, with a capital stock of $20,000, and headquarters at Maisonneuve, Que., have been granted a charter to manufacture, buy and sell all kinds of boots and shoes. Among the incorporators of the company are H. H. J. Gariety and George Leclerc, of Maisonneuve.

The Minister, Myles Shoe Co., Toronto, who for several years have been manufacturing men's welts and women's welts and turns exclusively, have just added women's McKays and a very attractive and snappy range of models for fall, has been turned out. They are much admired for their beauty and craftsmanship. The necessary equipment has been installed by the United Shoe Machinery Co., for making McKays which will be undertaken on a large scale. The other lines, which the company have been specializing in for many years will, of course, be continued.

Incorporated in 1867, the Amherst Boot and Shoe Co., Limited, of Amherst, N.S., celebrates this year its golden jubilee. As 1867 was Confederation year, the Amherst Boot and Shoe Co., and Canadian Confederation started their careers together, and both are going strong today. The Amherst Co., in a circular to their customers, suggest that it would be particularly gratifying if this should also be their banner year.

The T. Sisman Shoe Co., Aurora, Ont., report that the outlook for business for fall is very good, and the demand for their "Every Day" and other lines of shoes increasing all the while. The company have always given particular attention to the smallest details in shoemaking, such as sock linings which insure a perfectly smooth inside in their nailed goods. A few weeks ago the company voluntarily reduced the number of working hours of their employees from sixty to fifty-five a week, with no reduction in pay, and the action of the firm is greatly appreciated by the workers, among whom there is loyalty and esprit de corps to an extent that makes things run along smoothly and progressively for all concerned.

Wm. Chatterton who has been in the shoe business in Essex, Ont., for the past fifteen years, has worked up a splendid trade. He conducts a live repair department which is under the management of James Murray. In addition to a complete general line of footwear for men, women and children, Mr. Chatterton handles hosiery for every member of the family as well as mitts, gloves, etc. Though born in St. Mary's, Mr. Chatterton has resided in Essex County thirty-seven years.

MEN FOR COMFORT—WOMEN FOR STYLE

"When will women wear sensible sort of shoes?" asks a woman writer in one of Toronto's daily papers.

Here are her observations, which, while the reader may not agree in her opinions and conclusions, are at least readable and entertaining:—

She was buying shoes. She gave the salesman her size and the price she wished to pay for what she termed "a nice pair of walking shoes." While he was gone she began to examine a pair of men's shoes lying on the front counter. The clerk returned with a pair of women's "up-to-date" shoes in his hand, such as one might see by the hundred any day going up or down Yonge street.

She gasped at the sight of those in his hand. "I said walking shoes!" she commented.

"Yes, lady—this is one of our nicest walking shoes."

"That! Walking shoe! Why I'd about as soon think of walking on step-ladders as those—the heels must be almost three inches high!"

"But these are the fashion, lady, just now."

"But the fashion of the human foot does not change. It's the same old foot ever since I have known it—those shoes don't resemble it a mite. Haven't you something more like these?" and she held up one of the men's shoes she had been examining.

"Those? Why those are men's shoes!" laughed the clerk.

"Yes, I know; but there's not much difference between the shape of a man's foot and a woman's foot, only a little larger."

"But men go in for comfort and—and common sense in shoes; and women, usually, think of just style," said the salesman a bit apologetically.

"Humph! No wonder you didn't give up the vote—if you thought we carried that out in other things—but then, I forgot, you didn't 'give' us the vote; we 'took' it. But just look at this lovely, solid, wearable leather and these flat heels and thick soles—just think how lovely it would be for us to come down on the ground so solid and firm! Then if we wore them like this we'd scarcely ever get our feet damp, even if we were caught out in the rain without rubbers—and we'd scarcely need rubbers at all; that would be quite an economy. No wonder men's shoes wear longer. Why our men folk just put on a pair of shoes and wear the same ones day in and day out, and year in and year out—one pair lasts them for a good three years sometimes. If they want to dress up a little extra they just get—the same old shoes 'shined,' and nobody ever notices or thinks it's a bit horrid. And here we women have been talking about economy and—Why, those things in your hand look—well, like a kangaroo walking on his head!"

The clerk had to laugh, though no doubt he felt a bit rumply underneath; however, he became confidential.

"Well, lady, we don't keep the kind you want and I doubt if you find them just now in Toronto, for the simple reason that—they wouldn't sell if we had them; no demand for them; they'd be dead stock, and we're here to do business. And listen here, lady—when you want them—women, I mean—and begin asking for them you'll get them—they're made to suit the trade."

"Well, we're coming to it, mark my words. In two years' time I believe you'll see us wearing shoes about like these, and just think of the labor and leather and time and money that one simple change would free for other more helpful and necessary things. Changing the fashion in shoes means changing the last—and that's what costs money, I understand. Men's shoes rarely require a change of last. Then if our shoes were made of good, wearable leather like men's, particularly the soles, we'd only require about one pair to three of those we wear at present. As for health—why men would be lame in no time if they walked in shoes the style of those in which women walk about Toronto, and women are supposed to be more delicate than men!

CATTLE FIRM TO PROMOTE INDUSTRY

In the interests of cattle farming in Canada, and to further encourage production in that line, a company has been formed under the patronage of the National Live Stock Board with the name British Cattle Supply Company Limited, with headquarters at Toronto. The company proposes to enter upon the business of cattle ranching on a scale consistent with extraordinary world shortage and the incomparable natural advantages of the Dominion.

Under the direction of the most expert and disinterested authorities on the subject, over half a million acres of well-watered, sheltered and luxuriant pasture-land have been secured in the Vermilion River district in the Province of Alberta, and a herd of 10,000 breeding animals, of which 1,500 have already been purchased, is now being assembled, it being the plan of the company to have a permanent herd of 75,000 head upon its lands within four or five years. Other excellent grazing areas in other provinces, including tracts offered by the Ontario Government in the "clay belt," may be included in the scope of the company's operations.

BRITISH LEATHER PRICES SET

A further order, supplementary to that of January last, has been made by the British Army Council under the defense of the realm regulations, with a view to limiting the prices which may be charged for split hides, shaved hides, dressing hides, strap butts, etc., supplied for government purposes. The new order extends the control of prices to curried leather produced from rough leather of the descriptions covered by the previous order, and requires a guarantee similar to that in the former order when the leather is required for government purposes.

WHY VELVETS ARE NOT IN AGAIN

"Somebody has asked why the velvet boot is not run now same as it was some three or four years ago. It is said that all kinds of upper leather is high and now is a good time to use fabrics, including velvet and everything else in that line," says "Shoe Topics."

When one speaks of the velvet upper it is presumed that the women's boot is referred to. It was in the women's that velvet was run to such a great extent. So far as men's are concerned it was never used at all, as far as we are aware, and the only upper in men's that has been cut from this stock was the slipper. It was all right as a house slipper, but it is not as popular as it was in this class of footwear. The men will not wear it now, for some reason or other, and the slipper shops have found that out lately.

It is of no use trying to cut velvet to-day, either for a street boot for women or in a slipper for men. The shop that tried it could not sell the shoes and that is the chief difference between to-day and some three or more years ago.

At the same time it can be said that the velvet makes a good upper either in a street boot or in a slipper. At the present time they are making many men's slippers with a sheep upper, but the velvet would wear as well or better in a house slipper. It would wear better than some of the sheep uppers, at any rate, and it is cheaper than any leather at the present time.

That upper was seen in women's boots for something like two years or so. That was long enough for many manufacturers to get sick of it and when a few carloads came back it made matters all the worse. It was said that a few manufacturers lost a whole lot of money on the velvets and that others lost more or less, too.

The one big fault with the velvet upper was its tendency to spread in wear. It would spread so much that it became baggy around the ankle. That was enough to queer it with the women and as a result it went out of style. Women may like to get their footwear at as low a cost as possible, but they will not have a shoe that does not fit well, no matter how moderate the cost is.

Naturally a velvet boot would appeal to women and so it did. As a consequence many women bought these boots, but other women noticed how poorly they fitted around the ankle. These latter would not buy and those who had one pair would not buy the second pair, so that it was a matter of a very short time for the upper to go out of style altogether.

As already said, a velvet shoe or boot could be put up at a moderate cost, compared to leather, but any shoe must fit snug to keep it in style. This was demonstrated in the case of this upper and the women also demonstrated that nothing goes unless it is satisfactory to them. It is doubtful if velvets could be given away to-day, unless it was to some women who had just come to the country and who have not had time to see just what the styles are.

The company pride themselves on keeping their plant and facilities up-to-date, and in the selection of good, full, well trimmed hides which imparts to their leathers the utmost economy in cutting. There is a minimum of flanks and the manufacturer gets the largest amount of first-class usable material out of their products. The inner-soling of the company is a standard thing with the high-class shoe trade.

While the majority of shoe manufacturers are slack, we find in comparing our sales with the same period last year, that we are away ahead in volume of business.

When you recall that last year we sold over two million dollars worth of shoes, does not this mean that TETRAULT'S WELT SHOES possess some particular selling qualities to merit this continually increasing demand?

They do, and these qualities may be summed up in

A TIME FOR BUSINESS OPTIMISM

“Business As Usual” Should Be the Watchword All Along the Line—
The Surest Way to Make Hard Times is to Talk Hard Times—Plenty of Business for Everybody

JUST now we are feeling the effects of a natural hesitation following a period of unwonted business activity. Added to this has come the reflex influence of the commercial hysteria that has prevailed in the United States since their entering into the war. The soaring of prices in foodstuffs has also created more or less alarm in the minds of those who see the possibilities of the higher cost of living reaching a point where actual famine may wait at their doors. The economizing in food consumption that has resulted from unusual conditions and disturbing predictions made by newspapers, have extended to other lines, and people are more or less inclined to gather in their purse strings rather tightly.

The most certain way to bring about this very condition that everybody dreads, is the giving heed to this spirit of false and needless economy. Hard times have ever had their origin in fear of what might be. Confidence in the future gives way, people clutch their purses and put their savings in the proverbial stocking, and in a short time business is at a standstill. There is no real reason for lack of confidence in the future just now. While prices for necessities may attain a strong position there will be plenty to pay for what people need. One has only to consider the immense war expenditures being made just now in the country to realize how absolutely unnecessary alarm is with regard to the future of the country commercially. In munitions alone $50,000,000 a month is being spent, and with ship building and similar enterprises connected with the war and export trade, all the available supply of labor is being used at advancing prices. Laboring men are receiving three dollars a day and upwards, and it is impossible to get adequate help even at such prices.

The crop prospects, both East and West, are excellent, and high prices promise to make the farmer this year master of the situation. Farmer, manufacturer and artisan ought to have at the end of this season not only plenty to meet all the exigencies of changed conditions, but money to put away.

What is needed more than anything just now is to get rid of the epidemic of “cold feet.” Economy is a good thing, and especially economy in the use of foodstuffs, which without doubt, are being held at higher prices than conditions actually warrant. The only way to bring the market to a normal basis is to use less. Already with the more reassuring prospects with regard to crops there has been a drop in wheat, and if the government will only take the necessary action, stocks of other necessities will be made available at reasonable prices.

It is the stoppage of general spending that is seriously affecting retail merchants, and through them manufacturing and commercial interests throughout the country. If the factories slow down there will be less employment and therefore lower wages, and as a result less money to spend, and the influence in an undesirable way will be widespread.

People should not be extravagant in war time, but nevertheless should see to it that none of the regular industries of the country suffer through a spirit of penuriousness that is bound to be followed by a baneful reaction. “Business as usual” is a good motto just now. One can help win the war by wisely spending as well as by wisely saving.

SHOEMAN SHOULD RUN TWO CLEARANCE SALES

No Matter How Carefully the Retailer Buys, Odds and Ends Will Accumulate—Stock Must be Kept Clean and Seasonable—Sale Should be Properly Advertised, and Backed up With the Goods—Turn the Stock as You go, and Keep Up Your Volume

By A. C. CLARK, Shoe Sales Specialist

YOU ask me should a merchant run sales? You might as well ask should a merchant wash himself. Of course there are exceptions to everything under the sun, and I expect there are men who never take a bath, but the merchants who can run a shoe business successfully without sales are very few, and, to put it into plain figures, there is about one store in every large city, say of a population of 400,000 where it is advisable to do without a sale. This particular man's outlet for his odd sizes is the Jew. Of course, no merchant can help accumulating odd sizes and broken lines, and for these he must have an outlet. It is one of two things to stop these accumulations, either by buying or by selling.

I will show you how it is impossible to stop them by buying. (I am dealing with the average shoe store. As I said before, there are exceptions, but it is a hundred to one that the man who thinks his is the exception is the very man who wants a sale.) Therefore, the only way to keep a stock clean is to do it by selling. Now the thing is can a man do this without a sale? I figure, on practical experience, that he cannot. I am afraid I shall use up too much of your valuable space to demonstrate fully why, and to answer thoroughly every argument that might be put up, but I am willing to be shown and profit thereby, so if on any point you differ from me, let me know, and I will be pleased to agree if my past experience warrants it.

Now, I think you will find the man who says he does not believe in sales is either the man who does not know how to conduct a sale so that he does not injure his regular business, or the man who is trying to do a high-class trade in a neighborhood or store that does not lend itself to this particular, shall I say "Dack's trade." Now it is a foregone conclusion that a merchant cannot do without getting accumulations, as I will show later, but, dealing with this man who tries to do the high-class trade, I would like to find one such who has been in business ten years. You will find him in business say three or four years, as any man can run a shoe store successfully for three or four years, but about the fifth year he begins to feel the pressure of the odds and ends and he either dies or, if finances are low, fails and blames his finances for his failure instead of his fanatic ideas, or, if he has finances to spare he tires of the shoe game and sells out and finds that he has been a successful shoe merchant and worked hard for ten years, persuading himself all these years he had made $2,000 or $3,000 a year. He finds, however, when he has sold out, that he has not made three per cent. on the money invested, outside of his living, the $2,000 or $3,000 he made each year having gone into increased stock which, when he comes to realize on it, he finds is not worth one hundred cents on the dollar, and the $2,000 worth of lovely fixtures he has been so proud of only fetch $300 or $400.

Sales Do Not Lower Prestige

Another reason why he will not run a sale is because he has an idea that sales will lower the prestige of his business. Do sales lower the prestige of Eaton's, Simpson's, Murray-Kay's, or any other large, or shall we call them successful, businesses? Then you will hear a traveler or an unprogressive merchant say it is silly to run a sale just now while prices are advancing. Any old time is the right time for a sale, no matter what the conditions of the market are. Future market prices will take care of themselves. Shoes are not sugar, so what use is a gun metal oxford when vici pumps are in demand? You see shoes are very much like a piece of real estate. It is the demand that is the big factor as to the worth of it. As I said before, a gun metal oxford that you have in stock is not much use if vici pumps are in demand. For instance, the gun metal oxford has better stock in it by far than the vici pump, but the pump sells itself readily at $4.50 and the gun metal oxford will not sell at $1.98, but cost wholesale $3.00, and the same material today, made up into the style in demand, would cost $4.50. Therefore, which ever way you put it, it proves that the demand is a factor to be dealt with, and this illustration of gun metal oxford vs. vici kid pump is only one of many. The same thing applies to a vici button boot and a vici button boot. I mean that a vici button boot of yesterday is not the vici button boot of to-day. Going back to the gun metal oxfords, if the man had sold these odds and ends out at the end of the season at cost or moderate loss, say $2.98, he would have given good value to his patrons, advertised his business and made his profit good on what he had already sold. (See later figures.) Instead, he keeps them on the shelf until the demand has gone and then he must lose heavily on them. Then, too, there is the accumulative interest on them he has lost, as also the cash discounts and seven per cent. interest he would not have had to pay, to the amount of $2.98.

Proportion of Sizes Sold

I have worked out on five years' sales in 400 different retail stores, all in the same five years, that the proportion of sizes sold is equivalent to sizes shown in exhibit No. 1, and I cannot see any other way of ascertaining the proportion of sizes, as you cannot depend on the manufacturer because he has no idea of the sizes the retail man is carrying over from last season. You will, therefore, find these sizes fairly reliable for an average shoe. Of course different styles of shoes need a variation in sizing. For instance, you would not order the same sizes in a French heel as you would in a college girl shoe.

EXHIBIT NO. 1—135 PAIR

1	—	2	—	3	—	4	—	5	—	6	—	7	—	8
1	1	2	3	5	25	20	36	20	11	6	3	1	1

Now the ordinary merchant has to buy in twelve or fifteen pair lots in most cases, sometimes in thirty pair lots, but, for the benefit of the small merchant, we will say he deals in fifteen pair lots. To order fifteen pairs he could not do much different from the following:

EXHIBIT NO. 2

2	—	3	—	4	—	5	—	6	—	7
1	2	2	2	2	3	2	1

Sometimes he will vary this when he wants a 6½ or a 7. There are nine fifteen pair lots in 135 pairs. Therefore his ordering would work out as follows:

EXHIBIT NO. 3

1	—	2	—	3	—	4	—	5	—	6	—	7	—	8

By comparing this with Exhibit No. 1, you will see that he has ordered 7 2½, 15 3, 13 3½ more than actual experience shows it is possible for him to sell, leaving him to buy in place 7 4, 2 4½, 9 5, 2 5½ to even up.

Now, on first thoughts, you will say a merchant can regulate this by his buying. Well, I do not think so, for my experience teaches me that he cannot buy less 2½, 3 and 3½, because if there is any person more than another that insists upon the latest style in shoes, it is the person with the small foot. The same applies equally to a man with a small foot. Therefore, he must carry small sizes to supply his regular trade, and, however, a man tries, he cannot regulate his sizes with buying, that is providing he does any placing ordering.

Now for keeping them down by selling. To do this without a sale a man must continually work off these small sizes and to do this, when Mrs. Jones comes in, although he probably knows exactly what shoe she wants he cannot show it to her because he must first show her all these old styles that she had seen last season. By the time he is through showing her these old lines she has probably made up her mind that Mr. High Class Shoe Merchant has nothing but old styles. When he does show her his new styles she has decided that she will go to one of the department stores, where she is shown a variety of seasonable goods at the first asking, and, even if he does effect a sale of a pair of the old styles he is only prolonging the agony, as it were, as he is pushing his new lines back until they become old, and so it goes on. As I have already said, it is easy for the first three or four years, but after that he must get his "shelf warmers."

Why Stocks Keep Accumulating

This is only an illustration. There are a dozen other reasons why a merchant must accumulate bad stock. For instance, how can a buyer avoid buying a bad seller occasionally? The best of buyers make some very bad buys, in fact a man is no buyer unless he makes mistakes in buying, and my experience teaches me that it is by selling only that the odds and ends can be cleared. For various reasons outside of the principal one I have given, it is impossible, or shall I say not advisable, to try to regulate it in the ordinary business dealings. Therefore, you are reduced to the few dealer or to that dreaded thing "A Sale." Of course there are sales and sales. I really believe there are quite a lot of men who fail in business because they are afraid to lose a $5.00 bill.

Personally, I think a merchant cannot do without two sales a year to be successful. Space will not permit me to give many reasons why a sale helps a business, but one illustration should be sufficient, as it demonstrates exactly what I mean. Take figures in exhibit No. 2.

		1	2	2	2	2	3	2	1

These figures prove that in the ordinary run of business a merchant would sell part and leave part of this line, as follows:—

2	—	3	—	4	—	5	—	6	—	7

This leaves four pairs in stock and eleven pairs sold. Now we say we have sold eleven pairs at $5.00 and the shoe costs us $3.00, and we think we have made $22.00 profit, but have we? It is generally understood it costs 22 per cent. to do business, therefore 33 per cent., which many merchants state they work on, is not enough.

However, we are getting away from the sale question. Now, I figure the merchant has only got $22.00 above his investment and added $12.00 to his stock. Now he either lets these lie on his shelf and increases his stock so that at the end of the year he has probably, by his books, made a profit of $3,000 and increased his stock $2,000. Now my idea of the odd four pair would be to sell them in the sale at say $2.48, 50 cents less than he paid for them, thereby losing 50 cents per pair, or $2.00, but actually adding $10 profit to the $22 profit shown by his books.

Now, people die, people move away and a merchant is always losing customers from one reason or another, and I think a sale is the only thing to liven up a store. A sale will bring hundreds of people into the store who would not otherwise have come and if many of these continue to come after the sale is over, they make up for the lost customers. I have repeatedly heard customers remark when I have been conducting a sale that they had no idea there was a shoe store there, although they live in the immediate neighborhood and the store has probably been there ten years. A sale will also bring back customers who had left or lost the habit. There is a lot in habit. Get a customer coming to your store, no matter if it is by a sale, and you stand a chance of getting him regularly.

Keeps the Store Alive and Awake

Providing, of course, the sale is a properly conducted one, properly advertised, and the advertisements properly backed up with the goods in the store, good clean sale advertising will keep a store alive all the year, and properly sold goods will be the best advertisement. I really do not know of any successful merchant who can get along without sales. Of course, sales can be over-done like everything else, but two sales a year are not too much, say of four weeks each. A man with $10,000 stock should be able to sell say $15,000 worth of goods during ten months of the year, which, at a net profit of 40 per cent. would give him $6,000 profit. He should then be able to sell another $15,000 in two months' sales, say at 20 per cent., which would be $3,000. This would be $9,000 on the year. Figuring, say 22 per cent. overhead expenses (including his own salary of say $1,500) $6,600, this would leave him a net actual cash in bank profit of $2,400 on year's business. This is only possible by selling at good, fair profit during the ten months and by running two sales a year. The sales will make business better during the other ten months, as the publicity you will get from your sales will help your ordinary business.

The man who does not believe in sales is either sore on sales because the other fellow runs them or because he does not know how to conduct a successful sale, or is too lazy to do so. Of course, a sale means work, and to this man I would say get help or someone competent to run a sale. A sale campaign is so much different from the ordinary business that it is not to be expected that every man is competent to run one, any more than it is to be expected to find all the good points necessary to a business in one man. Therefore, one man must not think he can do everything successfully.

Where the Specialist Comes In

For instance, he may be a good buyer, good financier and practical shoe man, as also a good advertiser and have a good system of stock-keeping, and still be a failure in running a sale. If he finds that his sales have not been a success, let him introduce new blood into this department. I would suggest, however, that he should not take for granted what he may read about, as, for instance, what some of the so-called sales agencies have done for others in the United States of America. Most of these agencies are nothing more or less than real estate agents, and send out men who are not practical shoe men or men who cannot realize the position of a merchant, and only look to a big turnover to get their commission on same, losing sight of the fact that they are there to sell old stock and broken lines, and not to break into new or bread and butter lines that have to be repeated, any more than is possible. So before getting anyone in to help, get to know about the firm by actual inquiries from shoe merchants they have done business for, and ask them the different points you have your doubts upon. If their answers satisfy you, then go to it and run your sales, for I feel sure you cannot do without them. Of course there are hundreds who will not admit this, but, to any genuine argument which is sent to and printed in this paper with merchant's name and address, I will answer through these columns. As I said before, this is

STRAY SHOTS FROM "SOLOMON."

The little tallow dip flickers and splutters in its greasy socket in its frantic aping of the sun. The dazzling arc of light throws its cold rays into the murky darkness as though to atone for the temporary absence of the monarch of the skies.

THE LIGHT OF DAWN
But yonder comes the dawn. The cold dark grey is streaked with amber and gold, which melt into a halo of purple, amethyst and crimson from which the King of Day emerges "as a bridegroom coming out of his chamber." With a shower of shining javelins he scatters the last remnant of skulking shadows and the world is bathed in a flood of light. "The path of the righteous is as the light of dawn that shineth more and more into the perfect day." (Revised version.) How sick the little smoking taper makes us as it thrusts itself into our faces and says "I am it." How weary we become of the tinsel and show of apparel and profession as a substitute for righteousness. What a contrast is the quiet, gradual, godlike development of that righteousness that "shineth more and more into the perfect day." The people who go about with the placard "I am holy," are poor fools. The church that substitutes millinery for righteousness is a sham.

There are plenty of men too smart to get along in the world. They know too much. All their knowledge does for them is to get them into trouble. A lad was discharged from a situation some time since, and when a friend called to learn the reason he asked if he was not a smart boy. "He's too smart, that's all," replied the manager. He meant by this that the boy used his knowledge in a wrong way. There are men in business so smart that they do not know how to treat a traveler decently. There are some so clever that they "can't be bothered" with trade papers. There are others so smart that they cannot leave their neighbors alone even in their advertisements. They know plenty but they do not know enough to keep their mouths shut. A good story is told of Pope, the poet, who was more or less afflicted with this liability to misuse his talents. At a social gathering one evening, an officer was leading the conversation and made some remark about an interrogation point. "And what might an interrogation point be?" queried the wizened, deformed little man, who had previously annoyed the speaker by unwarranted interruptions. "A little crooked thing that asks impertinent questions," was the prompt though somewhat cruel retort.

Adverse rather than favorable circumstances make men. It is the rough weather not the smooth sailing that brings out all that is in the navigator. The curse of most young men today is that they have too many props. They spend more in a month than their fathers did in a year. They are pampered to death with social and commercial advantages that throttle ambition. Fathers forget that the very source of their own success was their being thrown upon their own resources, and having to fight their way through to success. It is this kind of thing that puts moral bone and sinew into a man. Be careful not to spoil your boys with advantages. Give them a chance to take care of themselves. Throw them in and let them swim. Don't fret your heart out trying to leave them "comfortable" when you die. Your legacy of ease is more likely to be a curse to them than a blessing. Give them a good, all-round education and a little experience of hard work, and they will bless your memory.

It used to be said that it took nine men to make a tailor, but if the men were the size of some that have seen the light of the twentieth century, the world would have to go back to fig leaves.

THE WIDOW'S MITE
If the widow that cast the two mites into the treasury had realized the eagerness with which misers of succeeding generations would profit by her illustrious example, she might have hesitated. Mean old screws have jabbered out this palliation for their stinginess ever since. Where you will find one man ready to follow the lead of a liberal subscriber, you will get twenty who will scan the whole list to take his cue from the smallest giver. It is astonishing how people will stand all day in line to get a good seat at a theatre and crawl under the barn when anyone is heading their way with a charity subscription list. "Lord, I care not for riches," croons some old skinflint that would with his dying fingers clutch at a copper cent with a hole in it.

Some men would make their fortunes if they could only do as well behind a counter as in church at the nat business. They can tell you to the thirty-second of an inch the head measure of every man and woman they meet, and the skill with which they can fit what they hear to their neighbor's failings is only exceeded by their calm blindness to their own sins. If people were only as generous with their contributions as they are with sermons the church would never be mortgaged to pay the preacher's salary. Where you find a man passing back a right hander to the man in the next seat you get one who nods and smiles at the collection plate, and as cheerfully hands it over his left shoulder. Some of these close-feathered, short-proof birds will take all the powder and lead you can put into them at short range, and come up smiling like a hell diver as though you were throwing bouquets at them.

The devil, so the story goes, entered a place of worship one Sabbath morning and delivered such a sermon that the congregation, who knew not that the Prince of Darkness was in their midst, were moved to the deepest admiration.

GLITTERING SHAMS

The clerk alone noticed the cloven foot protruding from beneath the gown, and at the close of the service timidly ventured to ask his Satanic Majesty how it was that he could deliver so fervent a discourse from the Word of God. "Oh," said he, "it is easy to simulate unction with earnestness." "Fervent lips and a wicked heart are like an earthen vessel overlaid with silver dross." Your life may have the appearance of a vessel of honor unto the Lord, but "ichabod" may be written upon the glittering splendor that hides worthless clay from the eyes of those that see only the surface.

MERCHANT MUST BE AN ASSET TO COMMUNITY

He is not Only the Right Medium for the Distribution of Merchandise, but Should So Impress the Public that he is Fulfilling His Position in that Respect—President Rannard in Stirring Address Before Businessmen of Manitoba Favors Conscription

“TOO many men to-day are atoms tossed by the unremitting tempest of business interests instead of being the force behind the tempest. In other words, business rules their lives. Business is the utmost limit of their horizon line. Their gaze is on the sordid rather than the supernal, the scum rather than the sky, the low rather than the lofty. Every being with whom they deal is measured by the business standard alone. The possession of dollars, or the lack of them, is all they can see. But even in business we are recognizing that there is more to the individual than just the dollar value, and the call for the public spirited business man who can realize this fact is ever insistent,” declared C. F. Rannard, of the Rannard Shoe, Limited, and President of the Retail Merchants’ Association of Manitoba, at their annual convention held recently in Winnipeg. His address was full of inspiration and high ideals on the position, power and influence of the business men of any community. Continuing he said:

“It is the man who answers this call that will feel the truth of the fact that every business transaction makes for better or for worse, in the community. Retailers must be champions—driving dishonor from business.

“The members of this Retail Merchants’ Association are nerve-ends of a great business organization reaching out and touching the people. They are the mediums between large interests and individuals. Because of this they can be the means of bringing these together as factors in the country’s upbuilding rather than factions hindering its progress. In the great work of bringing about the solidarity of the nation we, as an Association, can be a powerful influence if, in this way, we act the motto, ‘Not dollars only, but brotherhood,’ a brotherhood that would ours a great Manitoba—ours a great Canada—ours a great Empire.

Business Intended to Serve People

“It is important that we get a clear conception of the social function of selling. It must never be forgotten that business is intended to serve the people, and that the people are not to serve business. It is for customers that you and I are working. It is the customer which you and I are to please. Satisfactory service to customers is the keynote of good salesmanship.

“Efficiency is the watchword of modern merchandising.

“Scientific management is being introduced into the industrial field and because of this the cost of production will be reduced to a minimum waste. The principles which are being applied to farming and manufacturing can be successfully applied to the distribution of merchandise. Modern retailing requires careful study owing to the growth of a number of special problems. Dealers cannot afford to overlook the problems which they are facing in the competition among themselves, competition with neighboring towns, competition with distant cities, competition with the various ‘direct to the consumer’ movements being promoted here and there. Rising prices due to the increased cost of raw materials have reduced the scale of net profit.

“Every merchant should make a study of whether he can best serve his customers by cash or credit. I would urge upon you the desirability of the united effort to speed the day when retailing in our Western provinces will be on a more cash basis. Credit was necessary when the West was in the making, but it has encouraged men to assume a load of debt beyond their capacity. It has caused a heavy loading of interest—bad debts, and the indirect cost of resulting inefficiency of retail service. The banks have taken the initial act to encourage the farmer in cash buying.

“We can help solve some of these problems ourselves, but must seek assistance from other sources as well. If we find obstacles are placed in the path of our progress by any other branch of business we must make every effort to overcome them. Each part of our system of distribution will have to justify its existence on the basis of practical economy. Failing this, it will have to step aside.

“Then, again, demands of the public for greater variety and increased service call for advanced knowledge in merchandising and show our need for a system which will provide intelligent help in selling. Would it be safe to say that this problem would be solved through our public school system, the high school and the university? Salesmanship and the general principles of retailing should be taught in our educational institutes. Some provision should also be made for which men now engaged in business could attend short courses in modern merchandising.

What Merchant Should Support

“The merchant must be an asset to the community. He is not only the right medium for the distribution of merchandise, but he should so impress the public that he is fulfilling his position in that respect that they in turn will give him their support. The successful merchant will support to the best of his ability the local newspaper, churches, schools, and every good organization that helps to build up the community. We recognize to-day better than ever before, that we are to render satisfaction to our customers and obtain for ourselves that profit to which we are entitled. This means that we must buy right, advertise right, sell right, and adopt a general store policy that is right toward our customers.

“When you honored me first, two years ago, with the office of president of this Association, Canada had already been in the grip of the greatest war in human history. The first flush of war activity was over and her resource power was being called upon. But, although this was true, the past year has been a period of real testing. It speaks well for the calibre and largeness of our men that Canada has passed through this period with credit and faces the future with a determination to do all, and to bear all in the name of liberty and right. We have almost forgotten our old differences and we find that in the matters that really count at this moment—the vigorous prosecution of the war to a victorious ending. We are one in intention and desire. This unity among the people should be reflected in the Parliament at Ottawa. All party feuds and grievances should be forgotten and new issues not related to the war should be allowed to stand until we complete the task in hand. Cannot we expect that our leaders will give us a national government composed of the very best men that can be selected in Canada, with one spirit of co-operation and patriotism so that our Canada’s splendid record in the war to-day may not be blemished by any failure in the final phase of this terrible struggle?

“The policy which commends itself to the largest number of the best thinking men of this city seems to be:

1. That conscription should be put into force immediately.
2. That there must be no general election on party lines.
3. That the present Prime Minister should strengthen his government by including therein representatives of the Liberal party, as well as a larger degree of representation of the business and commercial interests, including an outstanding farmer and labor leader.

"The true men of our country have given themselves, heart and soul, to their country's need. Many have paid the supreme sacrifice in the firing line. Of those truest of all patriots we express our deepest appreciation.

"Many Canadians are not yet awake to the fact that this war has gone to the length of a grim death struggle. One speaker who came from the battlefields of France gave this advice: 'Take five minutes each day to think as hard as you can what this war means to you.' I would add to this, try to conceive, if you are not of craven heart, what defeat to Canada would mean. Think!—think hard—victory is far from certain. England and France are in a death struggle even though the United States has entered the war as their ally. In the name of all that you hold sacred do not deliberately refuse to realize that this is your war. And the Retail Merchants' Association, now assembled, must recognize this tremendous fact.

"In view of recent events our government throughout the Dominion must be urged at once to take drastic measures to the utmost limit of the law to punish all treasonable conduct of individuals or organizations. This would have a salutary effect upon the confused and hesitating attitude of certain peoples of this country in this time of crisis through which we are passing.

Concentrate on Necessary Work Only

"Again, this war demands that the nation put its shoulder to the industrial wheel and concentrate on necessary work only. The sooner the public gets over the idea that we want 'business as usual' during this great war the better for all. We must stop all unnecessary work and expenditures immediately and concentrate on the immense volume of work that has to be done. Business should get rid of any foolish fears that economy would bring on a general paralysis of industry and trade. There is no danger of not having work for everybody. The trouble is that there is more work in sight than can possibly be done, and the question is whether we shall cut off luxuries or necessities. Do you know greater production is being hampered by organized effort on the part of our pro-enemy?

"By thrift and self-sacrifice, bravery and determination, the war will be brought to the successful conclusion desired. All we want out of this war is a victory which will guarantee security and the liberty of democracy that will light the future years as a star of the first magnitude, or even as the sun lights the heavens. And we have the will to get that victory, because we have set our teeth to win, no matter at what cost."

BREEZY BRIEFS FROM ST. JOHN

William Cole was in St. John, N.B., recently representing the "Empress Shoe" of Toronto.

Robert Brittain, shoe manufacturer and repairer in Main street, has purchased a modern repair outfit.

That Captain R. St. C. Hayes, son of Mayor Hayes, president of the firm of J. M. Humphrey & Co., wholesale shoes, has been mentioned in despatches by Sir Douglas Haig recently, was the word received in the city a few days ago. Captain Hayes was formerly in charge of J. M. Humphrey & Co.'s shoe factory, but shortly after the outbreak of the war joined the 3rd Canadian Garrison Artillery under Major Magee, and crossed overseas with the First Canadian Contingent. He has had charge of a battery on the firing line in France for some time.

Lance-Sergeant Percy J. Steel, an energetic and enterprising young shoe dealer, of St. John, N.B., who is a member of a machine gun section under command of Lieut. J. K.

Scammell, is at present on a tour through the Maritime Provinces seeking recruits. Sergeant Steel is a qualified captain, but being unable to get attached to any battalion in his official capacity joined the machine gun section as a private.

Harold McCarthy, who for the last two years was employed with Francis and Vaughan, shoe dealers in King street, St. John, has joined the staff of the McRobbie Shoe Co., Limited.

BUYS MOTOR CAR JUST FOR SPITE

H. C. Parker, of Parker, Irwin Limited, Montreal, the widely known shoe manufacturers' supply house of Canada, recently completed a successful business trip through the Maritime Provinces. Mr. Parker has branched out as a motor magnate, and now possesses a fine Overland car, which is the envy of all the boys, when they see him making his rounds of the trade. It is rumored that Mr. Parker negotiated the purchase, not so much for the beauty of the car, its convenience to him in a business way, or the pleasure it will afford him—as it was to spite several other shoe supply men, who think they are the only ones that can sport around in a buzz wagon. Mr. Parker has spent his whole life in the shoe business, and when eleven years old, made a turn shoe, of which he is still proud. He is vice-president and managing director of Parker, Irwin Limited, and received his early training in such well known factories as the Thos. G. Plant Co., A. E. Little & Co., and others. Coming to Montreal sixteen years ago, from the city of Lynn, his native spot, he has ever since resided in Canada's commercial metropolis. For six years he was assistant superintendent of Ames-Holden & Co., and later, was superintendent for the James McCready Co. for four years. Then he joined his brother, G. G. Parker, (now with the Boston Last Co., Richmond, P.Q.) and established the Dominion Supply Co., eight years ago. This company was taken over in the spring of 1915 by Parker, Irwin Limited, who carry a representative line of shoe manufacturers' supplies and shoe findings, and have the agency of a number of leading concerns. Mr. Parker is the originator of "Waxol," a waterproof preparation, which is largely in use in army shoe work. No one enjoys a wider measure of popularity with the trade than the subject of this reference, who is attentive, courteous and genial, under all circumstances.

BRAND NEW CLAIMANT FOR FISHING HONORS

J. A. McLaren, of Toronto, Makes Record Haul, so Far as Numbers are Concerned —He Was Only After Morning [Mess but Pretty Nearly Drained Lake Huron of Its Miniature Finny Tribe—New Competition Opened by "Shoe and Leather Journal"

TO widen the competition, and allow of the entrance of more shoe and leather men in the struggle, the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL is offering another leather medal to the angler capturing the greatest number of fish, large or small, within a two hour time limit.

It will be remembered that some weeks ago, Hugh White, of the White Shoe Co., Toronto, captured the stencilled disc for catching the largest fish ever landed by a Canadian citizen, wresting the championship of the Dominion from Narcisse Gagnon, of Montreal, and Fred Marois, of Quebec, the former having carried off the trophy the previous year. But all representatives of the shoe and leather trades cannot be fishers for marine monsters and prodigious piscatorial prodigies. The man who can go out and catch a mess of trout, sun fish, rock bass, perch, cat fish, carp, pike or pickerel within a certain time, should not be debarred from receiving some recognition of his ability and agility. He must be expert, dispassionate, deliberate and cautious. He must have a well-poised head, an imperturbable temperament, a well balanced disposition, infinite tact and remarkable resource.

In fishing for the small fry, there is, of course, not that spirit of recklessness, abandon, speculation and daring characterizing deep sea fishing, and it is only fair that in the angling arena, there should be two divisions. With this somewhat lengthy preamble the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL now gets to business and presents the first claimant for the new leather medal in class No. 2. He is no other than J. A. McLaren, of the firm of McLaren & Dallas, Toronto, who has emerged lately, both in the role of a motorist and an angler.

The Pulling Power of Personality

It was in the town of Goderich that Mr. McLaren first saw the light of the sun, and a hankering came over him the other day, which he could not resist. The longing was to revisit the scenes of his youth, and gaze up and down the familiar streets of the lakeside community, noted far and wide for its wealthy citizens, its octagonal business centre, its pretty parks, splendid harbor and summer hotels. After arriving at the place Mr. McLaren, who was accompanied by his brother from Hamilton, yielded to another impulse, in an unguarded moment, when the latter suggested that they should go down to the Government pier and fish. Not that they were hopeful of catching any muskalonge, sharks or porpoises, but just some fine specimens of perch.

"We will get up at four o'clock," declared Mr. McLaren's companion.

"No, sir," replied the Toronto wholesale shoe merchant, "I will not take an unfair advantage of the fish. I do not want to catch them asleep, and will give them every opportunity to be wide awake before starting operations. Another thing is that I object to entering upon any pursuit before having a good breakfast."

After the morning meal at six o'clock to the pier went Mr. McLaren, not in the expectation of doing anything exceptionally spectacular, but to obtain merely a few fish. His name and fame must have preceded him, or else his prowess as a fisherman in the days of his youth came back, with all his shrewdness and ingenuity, for such a catch as he made has never been known in the waters of Lake Huron since Champlain made his famous cruise of the inland route several centuries ago.

Old timers declare his fishing feat is the marvel of the age, and that he stands before the world as a miracle man, a modern wonder worker. He sat upon the dock exactly one hour and fifty minutes, and in that time caught 295 perch, which is at the rate of nearly three a minute. His brother who accompanied him managed to get only seventeen. What kind of bait Mr. McLaren used it is impossible to learn, but truth it is that he never put in so much hard work, in such a short period, as during the two hours he was "perched" upon the pier. He certainly made a record haul and pulled off an unparalleled performance. The achievement is all the more to the credit of Mr. McLaren, for he had no thought of entering any contest for a medal.

But this is a world of surprises. Things go by contraries and genius frequently lurks unseen in many a sequestered spot. Had not Mr. McLaren's brother suggested going on a fishing trip that morning, the latent talent and piscatorial potentialities of this modern disciple of Izaak Walton might never have been revealed to the world, and he would have been like a "flower born to blush unseen." But now he typifies—as seen in the illustration—a fisherman who is in a class by himself.

The Multiplicity of Numbers

When numbers count he is right there, and landing 295 perch in a little less than two hours, is something which will require on the part of any possible rival considerable training, preparation and patience to excel, or even approach.

In the excitement and trip-hammer motion of letting down his line and drawing it up, and gazing upon the pile of perch accumulating in such abnormal proportions, Mr. McLaren could not believe his own eyes, or rather his glasses.

NARCISSE GAGNON, OF MONTREAL, AND FRED MAROIS, OF QUEBEC, ON A RECENT PRACTICE STUNT DOWN THE ST. LAWRENCE

No doubt he thought they magnified the number of fish and so, unconsciously, they slipped down to the end of his nose. But when he beheld with the naked eye, unaided by any optical delusion, there were the fish, in one ever-increasing mass! Mr. McLaren is a gentleman whose word in the shoe trade is as good as his bond, whose integrity and probity have never been questioned, and the trade is assured that the incidents connected with his fishing exploit are in no way exaggerated.

Mr. McLaren is very modest about his great achievement and it was only by the merest chance that the signal success of his angling exploit was learned.

NO HOPE OF CHEAPER LEATHER

Like almost all other industries tanning companies are experiencing difficulty in securing raw materials, particularly hides. And the prospects are that the situation will not be improved, at least not in the immediate future. There is therefore, no hope for cheaper leather, and consequently no reduction likely in the high price of shoes.

As to the reason of the difficulty in securing hides several are attributed to the same, according to a statement by L. J. Breithaupt, President of the Breithaupt Leather Co., Limited, Kitchener.

In the first place, the embargo on hides in several countries has shut off many shipments. This applies to Australia, New Zealand, South Africa, India, England, Ireland and Scotland, from all of which it is next to the impossible to get hides. The drain for the raw material therefore has been put on South America and even as regards the latter source it is almost impossible to secure shipment on account of the excessive ocean rates of carriage, which is the result of the tonnage shortage and the extremely high rate of marine and war insurance. An illustration of the soar in rates is that of marine rates which have gone up from ½ per cent. in normal times to about 5 per cent. to-day. Mr. Breithaupt quoted the instance of his own company, which in former periods has imported hundreds of thousands of hides from South America at a rate of ¼ cent. per pound to Boston or New York. To-day this rate is 4½ cents pound.

Another factor which contributes to the shortage of hides are the new conditions in the United States following that country's entry into the war. Contracts have just been awarded at Washington for 2,500,000 pairs of army shoes, which will be a big item on the market, with many more similar contracts to follow, which will mean that our neighbors to the south will require all the hides they can produce, or have comparatively few, if any, to spare.

To this must be added 7½ per cent. war tax now imposed on all hides entering Canada, as also the present high cost of labor, which latter is justified owing to the high cost of living.

In this connection it is of interest to note that a few weeks ago a big shipment of hides to the Breithaupt Leather Co., and other Canadian tanning companies from England was sent to the bottom of the waters by a torpedo from a submarine. The big shipment consisted of about 25,000 hides. It was, of course, insured but cannot now be replaced at the same price.

Besides the scarcity of hides there is that of tanning materials and extracts; the fact that so little foreign stock is arriving and the probabilities that less will be coming in the future, tend to make this market stronger.

As to the leather market there will be enough demand for all the leather produced in the future. While the export demand is not particularly active at this time it is believed that it will be fully up to the past when it gets started. And here also the drawback is lack of vessel room, which, no doubt will be overcome by the warring countries working together, to supply space where it is most needed. While general conditions throughout the country are held back somewhat owing to the new war conditions, everything points to a large and satisfactory business for the future.

In the case of the Breithaupt Leather Co., Limited, Mr. Breithaupt stated that considerable Canadian business was being done and conditions as far as demand for leather is concerned were good. It might be stated that the company now have four tanneries in continual operation. They are located in Kitchener, Penetang, Hastings and Woodstock, Ont. All are hives of industry. Further, the business of the fourth tannery, which was purchased last winter has within a remarkably short time been brought from small proportions to a big scale. At the Woodstock plant to-day the "Royal Oak Brand" of leather is being manufactured in an ever increasing volume.

Of interest will be a comparison of prices of hides to-day, and in former years, as showing one reason why leather prices are so high to-day.

Exceedingly high prices also apply to tanning extracts, which are secured from the Southern States and from South America. Tan bark which formerly sold at $6 to $18 and occasionally $10 a cord, now brings $14.50 to $15.00. The source of supply, which by the way, is Muskoka and Parry Sound Districts, is fast diminishing.

The Shoe Repair Man

HOW WINNIPEG MAN BUILT A "WHALE OF A SHOE"

SHOEMEN as a whole are a pretty ingenious family, and it would be hard to find an industry whose representatives are more to the fore in publicity matters, or varied in the methods employed to advertise their business.

The big shoe is nothing new perhaps as a form of advertising particularly among shoe repair men, although we are of the opinion that Mr. J. C. Thomas, of Winnipeg, has struck an original note in his latest addition to the footwear of the Dominion.

Mr. Thomas, who is proprietor of a successful shoe repair shop at 282 Osborne street, Winnipeg, equipped with one of the largest Goodyear repair outfits and rapid stitcher, is a great believer in publicity as a successful and necessary factor to business. During the cold days of a Winnipeg winter he began to think of a new way to arrest the attention of the ever forgetful public. The idea occurred to him of building a shoe sufficiently generous in size to make "em sit up and take notice," and he at once set about putting this idea into execution. As the shoe was to be large the undertaking appeared equally so and Mr. Thomas went in consultation with one of the up-to-date carriage and automobile body builders of his home city to get their assistance. But they were not at all enthusiastic about undertaking this commission, and told their prospective customer that in order to build such a boot, as he proposed, the constructor would have to be a combination of shoemaker, carriage builder and canoe maker all in one—and plainly that they did not have such a man in their employ or know of any concern who did. The best they could do was to offer to build an advertising sign, shoe shaped but not true in outline, for the sum of five hundred dollars, the result being that the inventor of this pedal proposition returned to the bosom of his family a sorely tried and perplexed man.

But that shoe had to be built, and built true to shape and form of a real shoe, or not at all. How to get that shape—so that it would stay—was something of a proposition, and workable ideas were not fast in coming.

One evening the worried follower of St. Crispin was presiding over the homely occupation of dissecting a large fish for the consumption of his growing family. He does not say whether that fish was tough or his knife dull, but he was struck with the manner in which a fish is held together. A backbone and a number of lighter bones joined thereto are all that hold these elusive and toothsome piscatorial products in shape. Why not build a shoe on the same principle. A backbone or groundwork and a number of lighter ribs and stays to give the many curves and bends. Sounds something like a Jonah idea, but that the conception was more than some fish stories is evident from the accompanying pictures of Winnipeg's "whale of a shoe."

Once the idea was fairly under way, Mr. Thomas again sought out his friends the carriage builders and asked them if they would bend the necessary ribs for his shoe if he supplied the patterns. This they readily consented to do, for they were interested in a man who had grit enough to tackle a job that they had virtually turned down.

In his novel and sometimes tedious task the builder was ably assisted by his eldest daughter, who is a good deal with him in his shop, and was often called into commission to recline at different angles inside the growing framework of ribs and veneer, to rivet and clinch the many rivets, screws and bolts that a creature of this size has in its body, while dad worked on the outside. And when it came to covering the framework and lasting in the material around the toe of that shoe and getting it in without "pipes" or cutting—well she does not tell us what she did then.

All winter the toilers labored, making everything they used, even to hooks and eyelets and at last the giant was ready for the public gaze.

Eight and a half feet long, size 294, and a true model of a No. 7, shoe supplied for that purpose by the Kilgour Rimer Co., wholesale shoe merchants of Winnipeg. No sir! This shoe is not responsible for the leather scarcity for it is entirely a "fabric" shoe. Canvas vamp and quarter pantosote leg and bellows tongue, canvas pull strap, metal welt, hooks and eyelets and wooden sole and heel. The interior has a seat that will accommodate two persons, while a trap door in the floor over the heel, reveals a cavity in which a large number of parcels can be stowed when the shoe is used as a delivery rig, as is intended by its owner. A small door in one side of the leg allows easy entrance and exit for the driver.

One of the accompanying illustrations shows one of Mr. Thomas's daughters having a joy ride on Winnipeg's streets and the sensation she created in her novel carriage, and amount of attraction caused and number of necks stretched in her direction, were well in keeping with the size of the shoe.

MR. EDWARDS OFFERS TO SELL HIS PROCESS TO TORONTO SHOE REPAIRMEN

The Toronto Shoe Repairers' Association are making preparations for their first annual picnic, which will more than likely be held to Niagara Falls, on Wednesday, July 18th. The date has not been definitely fixed as yet, but preliminaries are going merrily along. There will be an interesting programme of sports and games as well as a baseball match between the single and the married men, and on the boat to and from the point of destination, there will be an impromptu concert. Every repairer is asked to come and bring his wife, family and friends and a good time is assured all. The baskets will be well filled. An energetic committee has all the arrangements in hand and will report fully at an early date.

At the last regular meeting there was a large attendance, and it was decided to go on and obtain signatures from all the repair men in the city with respect to closing every Wednesday afternoon during the summer months, and to shut up their shops every evening, except Saturday, at eight o'clock throughout the year.

The Association has engaged new rooms on the first floor of the Foresters' Hall, 22 College street, and henceforth the regular fortnightly meetings will be held in this bright apartment, which is admirably suited for the purpose.

A proposition has been received from the Goodyear Rubber Co. in reference to Neolin Sole and Wing Foot Rubber Heels, whereby special co-operative terms will be offered the members of the organization. The details will be fully discussed at an early date.

Wants Big Sum for Process

George Edwards, 511A-4th Avenue S. E., Medicine Hat, Alberta, who some time ago submitted samples of his process of welding soles to shoes has sent a letter to Secretary A. Butterworth, in which he says that he received the one and a half pairs of shoes and has welded the half soles on the pair, and also the patch welt and sole on the right shoe, and there is not a stitch to be found on the welt patch or sole.

Continuing, Mr. Edwards writes: "Now as you may know the state this particular pair of shoes was in when you shipped them to me, was beyond repairing and on the odd shoe I have welded on the long sole, and you will not find a nail or stitch in it. The real art of welding soles on boots and shoes still remains with myself. I understand that you have some shoe repairmen in Toronto, who are mixing and making cements for sticking on soles. I want to say here that I do not mix or make any cements or solution of any kind; neither do I have any cement or solution to sell. I think the Shoe Repairers' Association, of Toronto, has drawn the wrong picture of the real art of welding soles on shoes. I believe, that I am the only man to-day who has this art, and I am going to sell to each shoemaker or body of shoemakers the real art of the welding process. Welding is the correct name for the process because the soles are welded and, when you buy the art from me, you will not be buying any cement or solution of any kind but simply the process of welding. I have not decided as yet what I can take in cash as I expect to retire on what I get for my method. I would like to sell my process to the shoe repair men, although I have some shoe manufacturers very keen for it. I would like to hear, as soon as possible how many shoe repair men you have in your Association, who would like to get my process and how much you could pay me as a body for the city of Toronto alone. Now it seems to me that a body of fifty good shoemakers with a fair donation each could make up a respectable figure, and I would let you have the process right away, but for Toronto only."

Will Open Eyes of World

Writing to the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL, Mr. Edwards says: "I might say that the samples that I sent to the Toronto Shoe Repairers' Association, were a very delicate affair compared with the genuine art of welding on soles on shoes. I was sure that some one would crop up with 'something just as good' and, therefore, the samples that I forwarded were not in it. I believe, that I am about to open the eyes of the world by new process of welding on soles."

THE SHOE AND THE HAT

The problem of caring for shoes is not given much attention. J. L. Thompson, of Haverhill, Mass., makes a suggestion that affords both a text and a lesson for the public, as follows:

A woman puts a C shoe on a D foot. That is abuse of the C shoe. She wears a white cloth-top shoe in the rain and mud. That is abuse of the cloth-top shoe. She pays $5 to $25 for a hat and wears it at once in the rain—with an umbrella over it! The shoe is the most abused article of merchandise on the market.

"HAVEN'T I A PERFECT RIGHT"?

It was just after a rain storm and two soldiers were walking down Yonge street in Toronto behind a young lady, who was holding her skirts rather high. After an argument as to the merits of the case, one stepped forward and remarked:

"Pardon me, Miss, but aren't you holding your skirts rather high?"

"Haven't I a perfect right," she snapped.

"You certainly have, Miss, and a peach of a left," he replied.

Another story is told of how two shoe repair men were walking along the street the other day when they met two stylishly dressed young women with somewhat abbreviated skirts and wearing white silk stockings and white high cut kid shoes.

"Here come a couple of nice looking chickens" sentimentously observed one.

"Yes," drawled his companion, "and both evidently White Leghorns."

THE CHARGE OF THE BOOT BRIGADE

Half a sole, on sir?
Then into John Henley's go
All you six hundred.
Forward the Boot Brigade
Give John Henley all your trade
Into the Foot Bridge Gangway
Go you six hundred.

Forward the Boot Brigade
The Cobbler is not dismayed,
He makes no blunder.
His not to reason why
His not to make reply
His but to do and DYE
Boots without number Tearing off sole and heel,
Quickly he works and well
Into the Foot Bridge Gangway
Next to the Ritchie Store
Go you six hundred.

Flashed both his elbows bare
Flashed as they turned in air
Fixing the uppers there, while Everybody wondered.
Shoe fixing is sure no joke
Right through the sole they'd broke Toe cap and backstrap
All torn asunder
They sure will come back
All the six hundred.

When shall his glory fade
Oh, the MODERATE charge he made
Everybody wondered.
Honor the effort made
Send him plenty of trade
Three times six hundred.

"ACME"

WAR breaks down many precedents. The Great War has made leather a scarce commodity. For hundreds of years people have worn leather-soled shoes. Any other kind of sole had to fight for recognition.

* * *

Now that is all changed. Much inferior leather is on the market, and even that demands a higher price.

* * *

People no longer are getting the same results from leather-soled shoes, unless they pay extraordinarily high prices, and complaints are becoming world-wide.

* * *

We saw the inevitable change coming. For over two years we have been turning out "Acme"—"the Sole of Perfection"—made in only one grade—the highest—hence the name "Acme."

* * *

Month by month the call for "Acme" has been getting greater; yet we waited until the present time to tell the public the story. We knew there would be a prejudice in their minds about forsaking leather.

Now we feel that leather scarcity is so widespread, and the recognition of "Acme's" superiority is so emphatic, that the public merely want sufficient facts to make them immediately give orders to "Acmetize" their shoes.

* * *

A great number of manufacturers in all the great shoe centres of Canada have been using "ACME" Soles right along.

* * *

Dealers have been re-soleing boots and shoes with "Acme" for months.

* * *

Now we have the verdict of these manufacturers and dealers, and we feel the present is the time to give you the good news.

"The Sole of Perfection"

Unanimously these men say "Acme" Soles are not only all-round better soles, but they will outserve and outwear leather soles.

* * *

Unanimously they say there is complete freedom from dampness.

* * *

Unanimously they say there is never a crack at the bending point of the sole.

* * *

Unanimously they say that in "Acme" the high cost of soleing is solved.

* * *

"Acme" Soles prevent slipping because they never get that shiney surface that leather does. This will not only mean quietness and no scratching of the floor at home, but a lightness and "giveness" to the shoes—which mean an end to feet troubles.

* * *

A tremendous feature in connection with "Acme" Soles is the fact that they are so made by the Dunlop process, that the stitches are just as positive—just as secure to the end of the wear—as those on the regular leather sole.

* * *

Everybody knows how annoying is that squeak which even gets into good boots in the re-soleing with leather. The public can banish their fears by wearing "Acme"—no squeak possible.

* * *

No "breaking-in" necessary with "Acme"—"the Sole of Perfection"—the pliability is the same from the beginning—a feature never obtainable with leather.

* * *

The very merits of "Acme" Soles would have gained them recognition anyway, but the scarcity of good leather hurried along the introduction.

"The Sole of Perfection"

GETTING THE HIGHER PRICE FROM CUSTOMERS

One of the big obstacles in the making of sales in the shoe store to-day is the high price that has to be asked for shoes as compared with a few years ago. The problem that the retailer has to study is the getting of the higher price, and doing so in such a manner that customers will not go away with any ill-feeling toward the store, or an impression that they have been charged a higher figure than they rightly should pay.

"You can get the higher price alright and without the customer going away with any ill-feeling toward the store" said a prominent shoe dealer recently, "but you have to go about it in the right way," and he proceeded to tell how he set about the work.

"I make it a rule never to ask a customer what price shoe she wants when she comes into the store. Especially have I watched this point since the higher quotations prevail. I look at the shoe she is wearing and proceed to show her something a little more attractive and snappier. When I get it fitted on she will probably ask what price it is? It may be a $9.00 shoe, and the last one she bought probably cost her about $5.00. Naturally she is surprised at the higher figure, or at least she pretends to be, but you know as well as I do that the average customer is nearly as well acquainted with the enhanced prices of leather and shoes as the dealer is, but they put on that look of surprise when a price is quoted anyway. It is here, of course, that I have to come in with my little talk on the high price of leather, and I say it as if the customer is or should be acquainted with such a generally known thing as the higher values of hides and leather. I frequently quote prices on leather to-day as compared with five years ago, and also point out that all kinds of other goods used in the manufacture of shoes have advanced as well as the cost of labor.

"Of course, I always make the point that I can give them a shoe at a lower figure, and I generally show them a lower-priced one just for the purpose of contrast. I point out the difference in finish, material, the style of heel, height of leg, last, etc. I recommend the better one to a customer because I believe that it is more than worth the difference in price.

"Here is another argument that I frequently use in getting customers to buy the better grade of shoe. There are many people who like a shoe better after it has been broken in. I point out to such that a good shoe will last much longer than a cheap one, that they will get more satisfaction and comfort out of it for the price, while its style characteristics are irresistible. There are some people to whom this argument will not appeal, but an experienced man can generally pick out the kind in whom such reasoning will arouse interest."

It is this dealer's policy to always try to sell a high quality shoe to customers, not only for the larger profit they carry as a rule, but also because they give better satisfaction, and are more likely to mean repeat business. He refers to the fact that a customer will frequently specify a rather low price for the shoe she wishes to look at, when he feels that in order to get satisfaction she should pay a higher figure. In such cases he generally puts a higher priced shoe on and then says: "Now that is a more expensive shoe than you asked for, but it is well worth the money. However, I will let you see what we have at the figure you mention," and he lets her try on the cheaper one. The difference in the feel and appearance of the two is generally so great that, except in special circumstances, she will be willing to pay the higher cost for the better one.

In these days of higher prices for footwear it should be the aim of the retailer to thoroughly convince customers that the enhanced prices are really warranted.

The records show that the price of shoes has not advanced to any extent like the figure for leather and hides. In fact, for the five years from 1910 to 1915 the index number for hides went up 57 points, leather went up 46 points, while the index number in connection with the price of shoes only advanced 30 points. This demonstrates that the public should be pleased that the price of footwear has not increased even more than it has.

SECURING BARGAINS AT FIRE SALE

The accompanying illustration shows the vast crowd in front of the Yale Shoe Store, 10079 Jasper avenue, Edmonton, during the recent fire sale. The insurance adjusters fixed the loss on the stock at $11,000. The rush was so great that it required four policemen to preserve order, and over $5,000 in cash was taken in the first day. The blaze broke out two doors away from the Yale Shoe Store, but the flames reached the latter establishment. The stock was also damaged by smoke and fire.

MAGNIFICENT SPECIMEN BOOK OF LEATHER

Pfister & Vogel, tanners and curriers of high grade leathers, Milwaukee, Wis., have just issued an elaborate and admirably illustrated leather specimen book, which affords a practical and instructive exhibit of the leather industry, prepared specially for the use of retailers, dealers in leather goods, students of leather and others. The contents show various specimens of upper leathers in process of manufacture, as well as sole, glove, book binding, heavy and light leathers. Accompanying this valuable book is a timely and helpful treatise on the tanning industry, for users of leather and leather products, and others having no knowledge or experience in the art. A short explanation is given of each process in tanning leathers. There has long been a place for such a general descriptive work, and the new specimen book should prove as useful, as it is unique, to the trade. The preparation, which involved much study and labor, was successfully carried out by F. W. La Croix, advertising manager of the Pfister & Vogel Co.

WOMEN'S HIGH HEELS ARE SAVED

Women's high heels are safe. Brutal death was administered by the Senate of Illinois, to James H. Kirby's Bill, which sought to limit the height of heels on women's shoes to one and three-eighths inches. The enacting clause was stricken out, and to make the assassination all the more painful or ludicrous, the Senate resolved itself into Committee of the Whole and gave five minutes to the Menard County farmer to talk for the measure. He declared high heels are causing more "damnation than the German submarine."

EFFICIENCY—HOW AND WHY?

"A few years ago we only occasionally heard the word efficiency, which the dictionary defines as 'the power to produce the result intended.' But to-day it is a magic word standing for the power of great nations, signifying the brains, energy and resourcefulness of millions of people. It is to efficiency the world owes its progress and to this same power we are indebted for all the crowning achievements of the twentieth century.

"It was misused in 1914 and the great war began, but in different hands, it will likewise end the war; yes, and it will even rebuild the regions devastated by the war.

"It is the great dynamo of humanity, the propeller of achievement and progress, the destroyer of the unfit and the builder of the better-than-ever.

"But what is this much talked of indispensable Efficiency—isn't it striving to do the things you have to do in the best possible manner?

"No matter what our vocation may be, soldier, sailor, tiller of the soil, factory hand or a distributor of goods—no matter if a man be a digger of drains or of brains, no matter the work or the responsibility, we must in order to be efficient strive to be the best in our line.

"The average man won't do because he does things in the average way. He sticks to the rut and the rut only grows deeper.

"The man who is successful is the man who strives and strives to do better, who sees the unusual things, who is even dissatisfied with the best he has ever done.

"At this particular time we are not free to do as we please, because the nation, our fellow men, every trait of manliness demands that we put forth our best efforts, that we be keen enough to recognize methods superior to our own and big enough to adopt them.

"I am going to add that at this particular time we must all work—but after all isn't life one endless round of work of some kind or another. Isn't it just work, work, work? But there are two kinds, crude and refined. In its crude state we call it drudgery, but properly boiled down in goodly portions of efficiency it becomes a pleasure. It becomes something we long for and live for."—H. J. Daly, General Manager of the National Cash Register Co., of Canada.

THE REPLACEMENT THEORY

There has been a growing sentiment in the retail shoe trade that shoes should be sold upon the replacement basis. That is to say, the price at retail should be whatever it would cost to replace the shoes, plus a satisfactory profit," says Superintendent and Foreman.

It seems clear that if a retail shoe dealer has shoes on his shelves costing him $3.50 per pair, and which he intended to sell for $5.00, but the shoes would now cost him $4.25 to replace them, to retail these shoes for $5.00, would mean that that in order to put new shoes on his shelves to keep up his stock, he would have to take 75 cents out of the $1.50 profit on the sales to put another pair of shoes in their place.

If a business man has to invest the cost and the profit of his sale to replace that sale with new stock, he is not making any money.

Tanners have, for some time, been working upon the basis of replacement; that is, they have been selling leather based upon what it would cost to replace it. Retail shoe dealers are gradually adopting the same policy. But it is said that shoe manufacturers are still generally pursuing the old policy of selling goods based upon the cost of materials rather than upon the replacement value.

Speaking upon the absurdity of this theory, a shoe manufacturer said that every time he sold a bill of goods he was stung, because he could not reproduce those shoes for the amount which he received for them. This puts the shoe manufacturer in a position of selling goods, and then taking the entire sale price, and perhaps more, to produce new goods.

Here is another way it works out. Suppose a shoe factory has a large buying power and has been using it for the benefit of its customers. The tanner sells this shoe factory on the basis of replacement. The tanner owns a lot of leather and sells it to the shoe manufacturer at a price based upon the hide market at that time. He can even take a large order from the shoe manufacturer and, if necessary, cover himself with hides.

Now the shoe manufacturer is passing the shoes on to the retailers, and the retailers are selling them on the basis of replacement. The shoe manufacturer is the only one that is selling goods on the basis of cost, while the market is constantly rising.

Perhaps he had a large sole leather contract. The writer heard of one such instance where a manufacturer was cutting sole leather on an old contract at 36 cents per pound. He had not finished cutting this sole leather, but was asked to cover himself beyond the old contract at 58 cents per pound, and was told that unless his order was given immediately, the price would be 66 cents per pound.

In this case the shoe manufacturer had been selling shoes based upon 36 cents sole leather, and was forced with the problem of raising his shoes to the basis of 66 cents sole leather at one jump.

Had this concern been going up with the market and selling its shoes on the replacement basis, the advance would have been gradual but in keeping with the market at all times.

There is another angle of this question that is very important. If a shoe factory sells on the replacement basis, it can go down with the market if there should be a material decline when present war conditions come to an end. But the factory that sells on the basis of cost, if loaded up with high priced leather at that time, will be confronted with a serious loss.

AN ENTHUSIAST IN THE SHOE GAME

(See Front Cover)

Enthusiasm and geniality have always gone hand in hand in the career of W. F. Martin, of the Kingsbury Footwear Co., Montreal. No doubt he inherits the latter characteristic from his Irish parentage, while the former, is the natural result of his love for the shoe game. Known among his legion of friends as "Billy," he has enjoyed a highly successful career, and has won his position at the fore-front by energy, perseverance and thoroughness. Notwithstanding that he has been a tireless worker and a consistent hustler, Mr. Martin has found time to cultivate other sides of his nature, and he is an ardent motorist and skilled curler, being a member of the Heather and St. Lawrence Curling Clubs. He also likes to play a game of golf, and is not averse to going on a fishing expedition.

After graduating from the Grammar School at Howich, Que., his native town—he came to Montreal, and took a business college course. His first position was in a leather house, in which he gained an intimate knowledge of office management, selling and buying. He was afterwards with Geo. T. Slater & Sons for many years, and then branched out for himself forming the firm of Martin Brothers, makers of infants' shoes and overgaiters. It was about this time that the Kingsbury Footwear Co. was organized, and Mr. Martin, who has always been a capable salesman, undertook handling their line as well. Later he was offered an interest in the Kingsbury Co., which he accepted, joining the organization as sales manager. Mr. Martin, not only looks after the sales, but gives considerable attention to the supervision of the factory. Of a somewhat retiring disposition, he has made good in the footwear arena, although he has generally kept himself in the background. There is no better liked or more highly thought of man in the Canadian shoe or leather arena to-day than W. F. Martin.

SHOEMEN OBJECT TO NEW FREIGHT RATES

THE petitions for early closing of the retail shoe store in Toronto is being widely signed, and it is expected that the documents will be presented to the city council at an early date. The proposal is to have a by-law passed to close on Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday nights at nine o'clock, every Wednesday night at six o'clock, and Saturday nights and nights before holidays at eleven o'clock.

The matter of the increase in railway freight rates will be taken up by the Toronto Shoe Retailers' Association, at the next meeting on Thursday, June 28th, and thoroughly considered.

A well-known rubber company recently sent out the following to their customers:

Increased Freight Rates

Some months ago the railways issued Freight Classification No. 17, which they proposed to put into effect as soon as authorized by the Railway Commission of Canada. The latter are holding hearings in the West at present, and intend to hold a number of such hearings in the East during the month of June, for the purpose of allowing the manufacturers, retailers and others interested to offer suggestions and protests, if they feel that the railways are not justified in claiming these increased charges and revisions of the former Freight Tariff No. 16.

Some of the new rulings that will work extreme hardship on our company, and our customers are as follows:

1. "Boots and shoes not otherwise indexed by name, in boxes, less than carload lot shipments will carry one and one-half first-class rate.

2. "In boxes made of wood and strapped at each end with metal straps completely encircling the box and attached thereto, first-class rate.

3. "In packages named as above in carload lots, minimum weight 24,000 pounds, will carry a rate of third class."

The meaning of the above is that we would be charged one and one-half of the first-class or present rate on all shipments of rubber and tennis shoes when packed in corrugated cases or in unstrapped wooden cases, and first-class rate where such shipments are packed in wooden cases, wire-bound. The railways are apparently endeavoring to discriminate against those shippers using corrugated cases for some reason, probably because it means a loss of weight in transit to them as against wooden cases. It will be apparent to you that you would not desire us to return to the wooden cases and wire strap all our boxes, because you would have no end of trouble in opening them. You would also be compelled to wire strap your own cases for shipment.

Kitchener Takes Prompt Action

The following notices have been sent out: The Shoe Section of the Manufacturers of Kitchener and Waterloo recommends that the following resolution be passed, published and transmitted to the Railway Commission:

Resolved—That the shoe manufacturers of Kitchener and Waterloo object to the principle of raising freight rates by means of changes in classification, packing specifications, minimum car weights and demurrage rates, because the application of this principle operates to confuse rather than to make clear the effect of any proposed freight rate changes.

Also Resolved—That the shoe manufacturers of Kitchener and Waterloo agree that reasonable increase of freight rates, if clearly outlined, and absolutely required may be warranted as a war measure at the present time. Such increase, however, should be justified by the railway companies.

According to Classification No. 17, rates on shoes would be increased on car lots through the minimum weight increase 20 per cent. To this would be added the increase that would follow by the ruling that no mixed cars can be shipped without paying the highest rate on any portion of the contents of the car; also the added 15 per cent. increase as proposed. On less than carload lots, the packing specification and classification changes would mean a raise of 50 per cent. or a heavy increased cost of packing as an alternative, plus the 15 per cent. increase on rates. This would amount to 72 per cent. increase and up, in the highest cases.

What It Means on Trunks and Bags

We wish to bring to your notice, as trunk and bag manufacturers, a few facts with regard to the proposed Classification No. 17, covering freight charges which the railway companies through the Canadian Freight Association have asked the Dominion Railway Commission to authorize and which would then go into effect.

The change in the proposed Classification No. 17 over No. 16 which is now in force, as it concerns trunks and bags, is in the lowering of the minimum car weights from 14,000 pounds to 12,000 pounds, and at the same time increasing the Classification from third to second class rate, as outlined on page 230, items No. 34 and 36.

Taking a car from Kitchener to Winnipeg, to take the shortest haul West, would mean an increase in freight charges of $10.80 with a difference in weight of 2,000 pounds less. Farther West, of course, the increase would be in the same proportion. Just what it will mean to you, you can quite easily ascertain by enquiring of your local freight agent.

The Railway Commissioners have intimated that they would conduct hearings throughout the West before coming to a decision in the matter and these hearings are to take place shortly. It has, therefore, been deemed advisable by the Kitchener Board of Trade to call your attention to changes proposed, and to ask you to take the matter up with your Board of Trade and Branch of Retail Merchants. All possible pressure should be brought to bear upon the Commissioners at these hearings not to consent to the new Classification, nor to allow any change in minimum weights or class ratings.

WOMAN WINS SUIT AGAINST RETAILER

Judge Snider, of Hamilton, some months ago gave judgment against a retail shoe dealer, in that city, for the return of the price of a pair of shoes that did not fit the customer, and recently Judge Monck gave a judgment against another footwear retailer in the Ambitious City, under similar circumstances. The plaintiff, Mrs. Jean Tansley, swore that when she bought the high top boots for $5.50 the salesperson agreed to make them right if they did not suit, either by giving her another pair or refunding the amount paid. She stated that after she took the shoes home she found that they were too loose, but she was not able to return them at once as she was ill for a couple of weeks. When she did return them she was given another pair, which she later discovered were odd ones—one being larger than the other. She then returned these, and the only thing the merchant would do was hand her back the original pair. The defense was that the shoes were not brought back within a reasonable time, and that the sales slip was not brought back with the shoes. Mrs. Tansley swore she did not get a slip, paying cash, and that no reference was made to it when she went to the store. She was given judgment for her claim, she to return the shoes.

NEW HONOR FOR MR. CANDEE

Charles N. Candee, of Toronto, President of Gutta Percha & Rubber, Limited, and a number of subsidiary enterprises, has been elected a director of the Canadian Bank of Commerce. Mr. Candee is widely known as a manufacturer, and particularly in the rubber industry, with which the name of Candee has been identified since it became a factor in modern commerce. When Charles Goodyear invented the processes which revolutionized the rubber business the first license to manufacture rubber under these patents was issued to Leverette Candee, a relative of C. N. Candee. The latter began his business career as a clerk in the wholesale rubber establishment of O. W. Clary, of Syracuse, N.Y., in 1879. He has a number of private interests outside of Gutta Percha & Rubber, Limited, but is on few other business boards.

C. N. CANDEE, TORONTO

NO LEATHER SHORTAGE IN BRITAIN

All fears of a possible shortage of boots and shoes for the civilian population in Britain will be set at rest by the reassuring announcement recently published under the signatures of the presidents of the Federated Associations of Boot and Shoe Manufacturers and of the National Union of Boot and Shoe Operatives, which says, in part:

"In order to reassure the public and remove any feeling of anxiety with regard to the sufficiency of necessary supplies for the civilian population we desire to make it known that the present stocks and the continuous home productions of footwear will prove amply sufficient to meet the anticipated needs of the public, and that whilst they may not always be able to obtain the exact character and class of boot or shoe they require, they may be confident that suitable and reliable footwear will always be available."

NEW POSITION FOR MR. GIROUX

A. A. Giroux has been appointed superintendent of the Woelfle Shoe Co., Kitchener, Ont., and has entered upon his new duties. He is a native of Montreal, and has had an extended and varied experience in both the leather and shoe game, having occupied responsible positions with leading firms in Boston, Lynn, and other New England centres. Mr. Giroux has always been identified with plants specializing in ladies' fine shoes, and is well-known in Montreal and other Canadian cities. He brings to bear upon his new position in the Woelfle Shoe Co., insight, intelligence and efficiency.

POLISHES THAT PRESERVE AND PROTECT

The extensive business of Robert Ralston & Co., manufacturers of shoe polishes, Hamilton, Ont., have been established for thirty-two years, and for the last seventeen has been under the personal direction of H. E. Ralston. The company make various lines of polishes, dressings, pastes, creams and combinations suitable for all kinds of leathers and in all colors. These polishes produce an extremely rich lustre, and are guaranteed to preserve the life of the leather, being free from all injurious ingredients. Their goods have a standard of merit which has won for them high recognition in all parts of Canada. Mr. Wm. Edwards, who has had many years experience in the shoe findings trade, represents the firm in Toronto and vicinity. The company report business as exceptionally good.

REMOVING FROM AURORA TO BARRIE

Underhills, Limited, are removing their plant from Aurora to Barrie, where they have had a fine factory for the past few years. It is the intention of the company to consolidate both businesses, and as the premises in Barrie are in every way suitable, every facility will be afforded for expansion and development.

"PARKER'S PETS" WON BOWLING HONORS

In the manufacturers' bowling league at Preston last winter, the team which won the double championship was that of the Parker Shoe Co., popularly known as "Parker's Pets." In the one division of the league 42 games were played, the victors taking 37; and in the other they captured 36 out of 42, showing that they were practically invincible at ten pins. Of course, there were one or two

"spares" and among them was Mr. Parker himself. Now and then he lent a hand to the fray and showed that he could hold his own with the best.

HE KNOWS LEATHER GAME WELL

Omer Clement, tanner, of Quebec, is a native of that city, and after graduating from the Quebec Commercial Academy some seven years ago, joined the firm of Max Clement & Sons. He is a practical tanner, having gone through every branch of the tanning industry, and during his leisure hours is an enthusiastic automobilist. His father, Max Clement, was the first tanner in Quebec to split leather, using the belt knife machine, having learned how to operate it at the old Robson & Lochrie plant in Oshawa. The tannery specializes on a number of leading lines, and enjoys a wide connection in the trade.

NEW SHOE FACTORY FOR MAISONNEUVE

The policy of giving aid to manufacturers who wish to establish industries in Maisonneuve, is to be carried out according to the sentiment expressed recently by the council of that municipality. Ald. Gelinas, leader of the council, in introducing a by-law to guarantee the bonds of a company which proposes to establish in Maisonneuve and to grant tax exemption for twenty years, referred to criticism that had been made of late as to this policy of guaranteeing the obligations of the company.

The citizens need not have any fear, said he, for the city was amply protected when giving its guarantee for bonds, and no risk was encountered whatever. First mortgages were given on the property of such companies, and this secured the city from any possible loss.

The by-law introduced lately was to guarantee bonds of the Leader Shoe Co. to the extent of $80,000, and tax exemption for twenty years. The company will be obliged to employ at least eighty employees resident of Maisonneuve. The by-law was given its first reading.

only my opinion, and I am open to be convinced to the contrary, but, until then, two sales a year for mine. I think they are indispensable to a successful merchant, and I am forming my opinion on practical experience, not gathered from one store, but from many. I have superintended the running of as many as sixty retail stores for one firm which had over four hundred branches, and have successfully run departmental store shoe departments.

The life of a going retail business is volume. A shoe dealer's books may set up the claim that he is making money hand over fist, and a man may accept it as fact, but if later on he is swamped to his eyes in stocks that can be made to move only at a loss, he'll have to go back and figure his overhead for the period of his supposed prosperity. Then he may develop that he was not nearly so prosperous as he thought.

The way to be safe is to turn the stock as you go, and keep up the volume of business, for volume is the life of a going retail shoe proposition. The only way to do this is to run two good shoe sales every year.

DEATH OF WELL KNOWN SHOE TRAVELER

Joseph Gravel, who represented the Thompson Shoe Co., Limited, for the past six years in Montreal died suddenly of heart disease on June 6th. He was well known to the trade, and his death is regretted by all. The funeral took place from his father's residence, G. Gravel, 273 Mountain street to St. James' Cathedral, on June 9th. Joseph Gravel was formerly connected with the Canadian Consolidated Rubber Co., Limited.

TWO SHOEMEN IN THIS GROUP

The handsome Brunswick-Balke trophy, emblematic of the five men bowling championship of the City of Ottawa is seen resting prominently on the table. It is now held by the Senior City League Team, as they are called, of the Mercantile Bowling League. The award was won from the Civil Service team on March 15th by 19 pins, and defended in an attack made by the Observatory Team on March 29th by 17 pins, by the Grand Trunk Team on April 11th by 106 pins, and by the Civil Service Team on April 25th by 179 pins.

SHOE RETAILER SPEAKS SIX LANGUAGES

The Correct Shoe Store, 308 James street north, Hamilton, is the centre of considerable foreign trade, as well as local patronage, owing to the proprietor, D. Goldstein, being able to speak six languages. For this reason, many foreigners in the busy, industrial city of Hamilton, like to buy shoes of him. The career of the proprietor has been an object lesson, in the way of persistency and pluck. Born in Russia Kiev, where his father is the owner of a leather factory, he came to Canada ten years ago. The first five years were the hardest of his career. In 1911 he secured a position in the shoe line with a Hamilton retailer with whom he remained two years. He then started out for himself, under the name of the

D. GOLDSTEIN, HAMILTON, ONT.

Correct Shoe Store, with a stock of less than $3,000. To-day, the value of the goods on his shelves is six times this amount, representing men's, women's and children's footwear. Mr. Goldstein is well liked by the trade in the east end, and he knows the shoe business thoroughly. He seeks to give his customers what they want and attributes any success that he has met with, not only to endeavoring to please his patrons, but buying the best lines on the market.

NEWSY BRIEFS FROM WINNIPEG

Harold French, lately of Detroit, has joined the staff of the Winnipeg Shoe Co.

R. J. K. Jenkins is doing a fine business in the old Agnew stand, Notre Dame street west. He was for some years with the W. A. Marsh Co.

Jos. Duffy & Wm. Pethick, of the Yale Shoe Store, have a fine camp at Elm Park for the summer, where they will have a great time "baching it."

W. A. Moyer, of the Moyer Shoe Co., Winnipeg, is being congratulated on the advent of a fine soldier boy at his home.

J. J. Kilgour and Geo. Wheeler, who were East, visiting Montreal and Quebec, have returned.

Alf. Pocock, of the Winnipeg Shoe Co., who has been ill, is able to attend to business again.

F. E. Kilgour, of the Kilgour, Rimer Co., has been spending some time in Mason City, Iowa, visiting friends.

Some shoe salesmen have not bought any summer suits this year, as they feel that perhaps King George will clothe them. Numerous members of the shoe and leather trade in the West have been in khaki for a long time, and it is expected that others will join them at no distant date. Business in the retail line is very good, and the prospects are that everything will move along satisfactorily during the summer months.

Wm. Beardsley, proprietor of the Belle Shoe Store, 612 Portage avenue, Winnipeg, who recently started in business, has been connected with shoe firms in the city for some time. He has a real nice establishment and reports trade as being encouraging. His location is on Portage avenue near Sherbrooke, and he has two large show windows.

Harry Stock, for many years agent for the Slater Shoe Store on Main street, Winnipeg, is moving to Portage avenue, where he will open out on July 1st. He is having a big sale at the old stand.

A. J. Taube, accused of falsifying the books of the Quebec Shoe Store, Winnipeg, was found not guilty. Judge MacDonald, who had withheld his decision since the completion of the case Thursday, gave his decision lately. The judge in giving his decision stated that he found Taube passed by-laws and altered the books with the intention of defaulting to his creditors, but that the section upon which the accusation was based did not apply to anything except the defrauding of employers. The crown has asked for a reserve case in which to argue the meaning of the act. Taube was the president and manager of the Quebec Shoe Store.

Albert Geller, who pleaded not guilty to falsifying the books of the Quebec Shoe Co., Winnipeg, will not be prosecuted further. Geller was an employe at the Quebec Shoe Store on Main street, and was accused of fraud while A. J. Taube, manager of the company, was being tried on a similar charge. A stay of proceedings was granted in Mr. Geller's case. Lack of evidence is given by A. J. Andrews, K.C., counsel for Mr. Geller, as a reason of the retraction of the charge.

MAY TAN THE HIDES OF FISH

The Department of Commerce at Washington, has contributed a good deal already to the government war conservation programme, according to a statement made by Secretary Redfield. One of the most important problems before the department, the Secretary of Commerce said, is that of the bureaus of standards and fisheries," he stated, "for the tanning of shark hides, porpoise, grayfish and grouper, with a view to making them commercially available. Some very fine leather is made from some fish hides, and if we are successful in this it will mean much to the people who must be shod, and will tend to bring the prices of footwear downward.

"Much assistance has been rendered by this department to the placing of the synthetic dye industry on its feet. Our experts have been of great help, and the United States is now making dyes successfully and in increasing volume each month."

FINDS SOME SOLID FACTS

Enclosed please find Post Office Order for $1.00 for the "Shoe and Leather Journal." I find the reading with respect to the repair trade very interesting. It enables a fellow to see the reason there is such a shortage of leather, and he can enlighten his customers on the subject when they kick as to price.

HOW ARE YOU FIGURING YOUR PROFITS?

Shoe Retailer Must Know Where He is at with Shoes at Their Present High Value—Everything Should be Computed on the Selling Price—How Some Dealers Think They are Getting Ahead of the Game, Only to be Deceived Sooner or Later

MANY a retailer has "figured" that he has made so much profit during the year, that his running expenses were so and so, and he should have a handsome difference either in the bank or in added stock. On searching investigation it has been frequently found that he has neither, that his surplus is only a myth, a figment of the imagination, and that he is really losing money, whereas, he thought he was clearing a tidy balance. He has sold so many thousand dollars' worth of shoes, and made a gross profit of so much. His running expenses were low, and in a few years he would be able to retire.

The whole trouble is he only thinks, whereas he should know—he imagines, where he should be certain. There is a wrong way and a right way to figure profits. Many a man, if he buys an article for a dollar and sells it for $1.25, thinks that he has made 25 cents clear, and that his gross profit has been 25 per cent. In reality it has only been 20 per cent., because all profit should be figured on the selling price, and not on the cost price. The cost price of an article is not a thing to be added to, but is a per cent. of the selling price. Get that into your head.

What Would You Figure?

A certain article costs $1 wholesale. What will it have to be sold for to allow a profit of 10 per cent., after allowing 22 per cent. for cost of doing business?

The answers received to this question when sent out by a leading firm ranged all the way from $1.10 to $1.60. The majority gave the selling price as $1.32 or $1.34, allowing a profit of one per cent. or less, notwithstanding an explanation at the bottom of the question that the answer was not $1.32.

One man said, "In answering your question, will say that if you had not stated that $1.32 was not correct, I would have put that price on the article, for I do not charge any profit on overhead expenses. But if you do, I cannot see any other way of figuring but to charge $1.34 on selling price."

Is there any wonder that this man was not making money? He was on the straight road to bankruptcy and going fast. But he has slowed up now, and will soon be going in the right direction.

Perhaps some of the readers of the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL will think that there would be a profit in the article at $1.34, and to make sure that they will understand this merchant's state of progress, it is well to explain why and how he was losing money instead of making 10 per cent. profit as he thought.

The Right and the Wrong Way

If the wholesale price is $1, and the cost of doing business 22 per cent., $1.34 does not allow 10 per cent., but only 1.4 per cent. profit. On a gross annual business of $15,000, he will clear $150 a year, or a little better than $12 a month. He said that if the ad. had not stated that $1.32 was incorrect, he would have put that price on the article. Selling article at $1.32, he would lose almost one per cent., instead of making 10 per cent. His trouble was that he figured his profit and the amount which he wanted to take out for the cost of doing business, or his percentages, on the cost price instead of on the selling price.

Instead of adding 32 per cent. on the wholesale cost to the wholesale cost he should have added 32 per cent. of the selling price to the wholesale cost. The wholesale cost is not something to be added to, but a portion of the selling price, in this instance, 68 per cent. of the selling price. If the wholesale cost is 68 per cent. of the selling price, then the selling price is evidently $1.47, instead of $1.34 or $1.32.

Where Difference Comes In

If the cost of doing business is figured on the selling price, that is, 22 per cent. on the gross amount of business done during the year, the cost of selling the article is not 22 cents, but 32 1-3 cents.

If 10 per cent. profit is desired on the selling price, it is not sufficient to add 10 cents to the cost price. Instead, 14.7 cents, nearly 15 cents, must be added.

To prove this, take 22 per cent. of $1.47, which is 32.34 cents, and 10 per cent. of $1.47, which is 14.7 cents. Add these to $1 and you have $1.47.

An eastern man said: "If my cost of doing business is 22 per cent., and I wish to make a sale to bear 10 per cent. profit, I should figure it this way:

Cost and cash.....	$1.22
Profit at 10 per cent.....	.12.02
<hr/>
Selling price.....	$1.34

"I would, therefore, sell for $1.34 all articles invoiced at $1 for 10 per cent. profit. Am I correct?"

He is incorrect. As stated before, instead of making 10 per cent. profit he would make a fraction over 1 per cent.

Figuring It Two Ways

If $1 is 78 per cent. of the selling price, the latter, of course, would be $1.28, which he labeled as the selling price to cover the cost of doing business.

Then he deducted 10 from 100, leaving 90, and labeled $1.28 as 90 per cent. of the selling price to cover profit. $1.28, of course, is 90 per cent. of $1.42, which he gave as the answer.

He made the mistake of taking his percentage for the cost of doing business out of the one sum and his profit out of another. He should have taken both percentages at the same time.

A northern shoe firm says:

"We always figure our profit on the selling price, which is the only proper method, as follows:

"From 100 deduct the percentage of profit desired, and divide the remainder into the wholesale cost of the goods.

"The quotient will be the selling price.

"In this case we desire to make a profit of 10 per cent. over the cost of doing business at 22 per cent.

"We take 32 per cent. from 100, leaving 68. Divide this into 100 and we get $1.47, the selling price, which will show you the desired per cent. of profit."

Result was a Revelation

Another man wrote as follows:

"Your question entitled, 'What is the Selling Price,' attracted my attention.

"I picked up my pencil to work it out, but it did not come. Then I took a sheet of paper and went at it with the result given below. It was a revelation to me.

"The figures applied to every day sellers in my own stock proved that many articles were only returning a bank interest profit. It was a surprise to me."

Then he goes on to figure it out in the following very sensible way:

Let the selling price equal.....	100%
Deduct for cost of doing business..	22%
Deduct for profit.....	10%

Cost is 68 per cent. of selling price 68%

Then 68 per cent. is.....	$1.00
1 per cent. is.....	.0147
100 per cent. is 100 times .0147, or	1.47

The cost price of an article is not a thing to be added to. It is a per cent. of the selling price.

SHOE NEWS IN SHORT SHAPE

The thirteenth annual convention of the National Leather and Shoe Finders' Association will be held in Milwaukee, Wis., on July 10th-11th, with the Hotel Pfeister as headquarters. It is expected there will be a large attendance, and a splendid programme of entertainment has been drafted.

The by-law governing the closing of all stores in St. Thomas, Ont., was passed unanimously by the city council on Wednesday evening. The by-law is to take effect June 18th. It compels every store, with the exception of cigar stores, and fruit stands, to close at 7 each evening until 5 o'clock the following morning, with the exception of fourteen days prior to Christmas, the days prior to holidays and such other occasions as shall be decided.

The Canada Last Co., Toronto, are exceptionally busy at the present time manufacturing shoe trees. "We cannot account for the rush in this department," declared Charles M. Iredale, sales manager, "unless it is that owing to the high price of footwear, more people are buying trees and using them, thereby taking better care of their shoes, and adding to the life and appearance of the same."

D. E. Cross, of Rochester, N.Y., manufacturer of shoe patterns, was in Toronto and other cities last week, calling upon the shoe manufacturers.

Alex. Playfair, of Playfair, Preston & Co., Midland, Ont., was among the business visitors to Toronto recently.

Chas. A. Davies, of Blachford, Davies & Co., Limited, wholesale shoes, has returned to Toronto after an extended business trip throughout the West. Mr. Davies visited all the principal cities of the prairie provinces, going as far as Edmonton, and reports that the prospects for fall business are bright. The crop outlook, although the season is backward, is promising, and it is expected that this year's harvest will be a good one, provided weather conditions prove favorable.

The Victor Repairing Co., Montreal, was recently registered.

The J. J. Haines shoe house in Napanee, Ont., has been widened and a handsome new front installed. The establishment is now one of the brightest and most attractive to be found in the province, and in every way a credit to the historic firm which has been in business over fifty years, and has shoe houses in Belleville, Trenton, Smith's Falls and Napanee.

Frank Slater of the Eureka Shoe Co., Three Rivers, Que., was in Toronto for a few days on business. He was accompanied by his son. Mr. Slater recently suffered from a paralytic stroke, but is now much better.

The semi-annual styles show of the Rochester, N. Y., shoe manufacturers will be held at Powers' Hotel, Rochester, from July 5th to 13th.

Fred P. Beerer, Western Canada representative of the Blachford Shoe Mfg. Co., Toronto, is home after a very successful business trip to the Coast.

James Adair, representing Joseph Tanguay, shoe manufacturer, Quebec, is spending a few days in Toronto on business.

John Agnew of John Agnew, Limited, Brantford, the largest shoe retailers in Western Ontario, whose capital stock has just been increased to three hundred thousand dollars.

B. Vaillancourt of La Duchesse Shoe Co., Montreal, whose factory has resumed operations and been restored after the serious fire that visited the plant last month.

W. V. Matthews, who for the past five years has been General Superintendent of Ames-Holden-McCreedy, Montreal, and recently resigned from that position.

FORMER CHAMPION INVITED TO THE WEST

Narcisse Gagnon, of Aird & Son, Montreal, former champion hunter and fisherman of Canada, and holder of the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL trophy in 1916, as a result of his great salmon fishing expedition down the St. Lawrence, has received a hearty invitation from J. J. Kilgour, of Winnipeg, to enter the fray next fall, and spend a few days on the shores of Lake Manitoba. Mr. Kilgour has no doubt but Mr. Gagnon will return to the East as the champion duck shooter of the Prairie Provinces, if not of the whole Dominion. Mr. Gagnon has not subsided in the competition for the premier honors of the Dominion, as some of his friends suppose. He is getting in fine fettle, and when the season is fully on, will be heard from in new and thrilling escapades, and in mammoth captures, that will put to shame any of the achievements of those now in the spotlight.

THEY KNOW HOW TO PLAY BALL IN EFFECTIVE STYLE

Here is the baseball team of the Kaufman Rubber Co., Kitchener, Ont., an active, aggressive organization in the Twin City League. If the boys can play baseball as well as they can make rubbers, their future on the diamond is assured.

The league games are all well attended, and some first-class amateur players have been developed. It is expected that this season will be the most successful of any, and the friends of the different teams are boosting for them. The race is likely to be of the keenest character.

HAMILTON'S OLDEST SHOE RETAILER DIES

Robert Wilson, Hamilton's oldest shoe retailer, passed away this week at his home in that city, in his eighty-fourth year. He had been in the footwear business in the "Ambitious City" fifty-four years, and had always enjoyed remarkably good health, until a few months ago. Two of his sons are actively connected with the business—Chas. E. Wilson, who is in charge of the women's department, and Arthur L. Wilson, who looks after the men's. Two other sons also reside in Hamilton. Mr. Wilson also leaves a widow and three daughters.

The deceased merchant was always a fine specimen of rugged manhood, and in 1913 celebrated his golden wedding. Born and educated in Belfast, Ireland, he came to Canada when a young man, and secured his first job with his brother George, who was then a shoe manufacturer in Quebec. It was there that Mr. Wilson gained his initial insight into shoes and worked hard on the bench. Leaving the Ancient Capital, he arrived in 1863 in Hamilton, which was then little more than a struggling village. He opened a small repair and custom boot shop on John street south, on the site now occupied by Buntin, Gillies & Co.'s paper warehouse. He carried a small stock of shoes. The business of made-to-order footwear was then in a lively condition, and nearly all went to the cobbler to have their feet measured for a pair of boots. At one time Mr. Wilson had twelve shoemakers engaged in his shop, but the trend of trade grew in another direction, and custom shops gave way to the modern well-equipped factories. Mr. Wilson gradually added to his stock of shoes and in time, dropped the repair end. He had occupied four different stores on King street, Hamilton, and moved to his present central and commodious stand 73 King street east, fourteen years ago. Mr. Wilson was a man of honor and integrity who believed in handling the best class of goods, and giving customers full value for their money. He never misrepresented, and told the truth about merchandise at all times. He could recall many interesting reminiscences of early days in the trade, and his departure means the severance of another link, binding the present with the development of Canada before Confederation. Mr. Wilson was a man of few hobbies. He was always fond of a good horse, and took daily drives whenever the weather was favorable. Many years ago, he spent some time on the road, as a shoe traveler and carried his samples in the back of a wagon, visiting all the small villages and towns. Receiving a kick from his horse, he had his arm broken, and this caused him to be confined to the house for several weeks. The result was he gave up his position on the road, and returned to the retail line, in which he scored such signal success.

MR. BAWDEN BECOMES BENEDICT

Alf. Bawden, city traveler for the White Shoe Co., Toronto, was married this week to Miss Marjorie Louise, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. F. H. Mannering, Toronto. The ceremony was solemnized at the Church of the Ascension, by the Rev. J. B. Anderson. The bridesmaid was Miss

SOME THINGS TO TELL YOUR CUSTOMERS

"Whereas, the replacing of shoes by the dealers, without charge, is a source of loss and an injustice to the dealer, as well as the manufacturer:

"Resolved, that the manufacturers will not give credit for any shoes, except for faulty construction—no allowance to be made for shoes made of patent or enamel leathers, or fabrics."

Colored kid skins, gray, white, brown, or other delicate shades may show, after having been worn, either light or dark streaks, for which neither the manufacturer nor the dealer is responsible. The shades of these colored kid skins often vary, making it almost impossible to match two shoes perfectly. These skins are also very fine and are apt to peel very readily. Shoes of this nature should be worn with discrimination.

Turn sole shoes are made not for their practicability, but for their lightness, and a shoe of this construction will not hold its shape as well as a heavier soled shoe.

Wood heels are also used for their lightness and because they can be worked into more beautiful and artistic lines than leather heels—but should not be expected to give the service of leather heels. They are liable to break and the covering may peel, for which neither the manufacturer nor the retailer should be held responsible.

Leather heels may often open at the base. This is on account of the shapes of the heels now in vogue, and is not a defect. The nails used to fasten the heels must on account of the shape of the heel, be placed near the centre, occasionally permitting the heel to open at the base.

Button holes are very often damaged by improper use of the button hook. In unbuttoning your shoes open one button at a time, in the same manner you would open a buttoned garment.

Do not ask your dealer to exchange shoes after the buttons have been reset.

Lace stays or eyelets may be damaged or pulled out by the wearer not unlacing the shoe sufficiently to withdraw the foot freely. This carelessness is the cause of linings tearing and the ripping of shoes at back.

Shoes that are wet or damp, when placed near heat, will burn more quickly than when dry. Keep wet shoes away from direct heat.

Resolutions sent out by the Shoe Retailers' Association of Pittsburg, Pa.

Hazel Mannering, and the best man, Chas. Saunders. The members of the White Shoe Co. remembered Mr. Bawden with suitable gifts, and many friends will extend congratulations. Mr. and Mrs. Bawden after a short trip, will spend the summer at Centre Island, Toronto.

NO SHOEMAN HAS PRIMROSE PATH TO-DAY

"Please tell your traveler not to call again, as we refuse to be held up for goods which have been ordered for weeks, and were promised long ago."

So wrote an irate footwear merchant to a wholesaler a few weeks ago. The strange part of the proceeding is that the dealer thought he could obtain the lines required elsewhere, and he started in to place his orders with other houses, but discovered that the supply was not forthcoming any more promptly from them than from the concern with which he had been buying. He then had to "take his hat in hand"; so to speak, and ask that the order which he had previously cancelled, be filled. There was an apologetic air and meekness in his written request, in contradistinction to the indignant tone and independent attitude of his first communication, all of which goes to show that it does not pay to "go off at half cock." If the business man in question had been a little more moderate and calm, he would not have indicted the dictatorial and peremptory epistle which he sent a few weeks before, without first ascertaining if he could secure the supplies elsewhere within a certain length of time. It does not pay to write when in an angry mood—better take two or three days to consider matters and be tranquil and dignified, rather than ruffled and pugnacious.

"It is not often we get letters like the one referred to," declared the wholesaler, when speaking of the matter, "but this fellow gets into an angry frame of mind, the same as we often do with manufacturers, who promising deliveries on such and such a date, fail to make good their pledges. They have received the orders early, but for some reason, shipments are not made and we are put to all sorts of inconvenience and annoyance. When we tell our customers that we are held up for goods, some will not credit the information, but think that we have lots of them in stock, and are purposely holding back, or delivering to other and favored patrons at their expense. I assure you we wish to deal impartially with all and retailers are not more incensed at delayed shipments than are we. But everything in this world seems upside down just now, in fact, nothing is normal, and the only policy we can pursue is to do the best we can, and seek to mete out justice and fairness to all. The wholesaler has his trials and vexations the same as the retailer and don't you think for one moment the jobber has any primrose path in this war-time period, with congested transportation, freight embargoes, shortage of help, rapidly rising costs and unfilled orders from the factories."

"How can a store increase its rates and net profits?" is a question asked daily.

The question might be asked, for example, "How can you increase your trade within the limits of your town?"

What means can you use for increasing your trade in the country districts surrounding your town?

Third, how can you increase your trade in small towns from which customers come to your town only occasionally?

Fourth, how can you increase your mail-order trade?

Fifth, how can you increase your trade in grades of shoes in which you have hitherto not been very strong?

Sixth, how can you increase your trade in incidentals?

Seventh, inasmuch as it is "net" that you are always working for—net results, net profits—and that increased volume is of no use to you except as it brings increased net returns, the question of efficiency applies also to better work in store service.

How can you increase the total sales of each clerk for the day, week or year?

How can you render them more efficient in the use of their time?

How can you distribute work better throughout the day, so that it will not consist of alternately tremendously rushed periods and comparatively idle periods?

Incidental to this would be investigation of the time when the rush occurs.

How can you shorten the average time required to fit and sell a pair of shoes from the time the clerk approaches the customer and learns what is wanted to the time when he has completed the sale and turns in his sales slip, or has handed the shoes to the customer to take away and is ready to turn to another customer?

Also what classes of customers are hardest to please, if there is any general difference?

What improvements can you make in the general training and developing of your store staff in order to make their services more effective, to get more shoes sold at a profit?

How can you direct the best attention of sales force to those shoes which do yield a fair margin of profit, without getting them over-balanced in zeal, or giving them the idea that they should pull too strongly against the wishes of customers, or should fail to adapt themselves to the customer's ideas to a reasonable extent?

TRIED TO GET REFUND AFTER TWO MONTHS

"No, I never exchange goods, unless they are returned within one week," declared an eastern shoeman. "This returned goods problem is getting to be a nasty one. It might very well be taken up by shoe retailers' associations throughout the country, and some definite stand adopted, and regulations drawn up, so as to protect certain weak-minded members of the trade, who would sell their mortal souls rather than lose a customer.

"I am no believer in the altruistic conception that 'the customer is always right.' If a retail shoeman went on that principle—that he was always in the wrong and a customer, no matter what he or she tried to put over, was invariably correct and should have everything granted—well, he would not be in business very long. He would be exchanging pairs most of his time, and opening his cash register to take money out more frequently than he pushed the button to deposit cash.

"A woman phoned the other day and got a pair of over-gaiters—white ones—which I sent up to the house. A month later she phoned again, stating that she had not been able to use the spats and would I please exchange them for another color. She thought she would like cream.

"I said yes, if they had not been worn, or had not been out of the store too long.

"'Oh,' she answered, 'I got them two weeks ago and have never worn them.'

"'Well, in that case I will have to take your word,' I replied, not just certain at the time when the gaiters had been purchased.'

"'It is not my custom to exchange goods after they have been off the shelves for a week, but I will make an exception in this case.'

"I happened to be out the next day when the lady called. The clerk looked at the returned goods and said that they bore evidence of being worn and of having been washed. She did not mention exchange at first to the clerk, but asked that she be refunded the purchase money. My clerk, however, told her that he could not, under any circumstances, return the purchase money, and as for an exchange, she would have to wait until the boss was in, as it looked as if the gaiters had been used.

"'Oh no,' she said, 'not at all. I have never taken them out of the original parcel.'

"'Well, perhaps not,' assented the salesman, 'but it looks very much as if you have.'

"Gathering up the goods she said she would call again when the proprietor was present, and get another pair, but evidently finding that she could not work the bluff successfully on my clerk, she stood much less chance of putting one over on me, the proprietor, and she never came back."

TALKING POINTS IN SUCCESSFUL SHOE SELLING

All of these weapons can be utilized in forming sales talks and in connection with the selling points of a shoe.

The salesman's first attempt should be to create in the customer's mind a confidence in his ability and willingness to serve him properly. By a clever salestalk on the quality of the shoe being offered the salesman shows he has a knowledge of his goods and the customer has become convinced of his ability, and allows himself to conclude he can depend upon the truthfulness of his every statement.

W. A. Corbin gives us a psychological chart of suggestive salesmanship that might be worth repeating here.

"Some faculties and sentiments of the mind susceptible to suggestion in the sale of merchandise.

I. Intellectual or Mind

(a) Faculty or judgment of

1. QUALITY (In a demonstration of the form, substance, or value of merchandise).

2. USE (In establishing the purpose or need of a certain thing).
3. PROPOSITION (Adaptability of certain merchandise as to construction, style or effect).
4. VALUE (By suggesting the advantage of price, finish, suitability, etc.).
5. CONSTRUCTION (Showing utility of particular parts, or advantage in make).
6. COMPARISON (In perceiving or indicating the relative values of merchandise).

(b) Sense of

1. IDEALITY OR BEAUTY (In illustrating the design, style, finish, etc., of merchandise).
2. IMAGINATION (In citing the history or sentimental value of an article).
3. ECONOMY (In proving value from an economical point of view.)
4. HUMOR (In the sale of quaint things or comic pictures, books, toys, etc.).

II. Emotional or Feeling

(a) Sentiment of

1. BENEVOLENCE OR FRIENDSHIP (As in the sale of gifts, etc.).
2. PRIDE OR SELF-ESTEEM (In proving gratification in the appearance of purchases of personal or home use).
3. APPROBATION OR COMPLIMENT (By giving credit to a customer for his judicious views or selection of merchandise).
4. CURIOSITY OR WONDER (By demonstrating make of merchandise or construction or working of a mechanical product).

3. ACQUISITIVENESS (In proving the advantage or need in buying certain merchandise for personal or home use).
4. CAUTIOUSNESS (In proving the need of buying the right thing).

III. Vocational or Will

1. DECISION.
2. CONVICTION.
3. EXECUTION.
4. CONCLUSION.

Resulting in a purchase by proper appeals to the customer's faculties and feelings—Suggestive Salesmanship."

This chart is, of course, far from being complete, but it is enough so to found a system of salesmanship upon.

We would suggest that each clerk in the store experiment with little selling talks. Use these enough times to demonstrate their value.

Take the new spring style tendency as the subject of one talk. When showing a customer a shoe, and that customer asks for the latest, or shows that he wants the latest, spring the little spiel about the new spring styles on him.

Try out another along the order of real worth of the shoe. Use the two sale talks given above as models.

Comfort and fit might be made the subject of another.

These salestalks must not be long or rigmarolish. Don't sing it. Don't use it except it is appropriate to do so.

AMONG THE SHOE MEN.

Fred. Underhill, of Underhills, Limited, Aurora, Ont., leaves in a few days to spend several months in California. His health has not been the best for some time and it is hoped that he will return fully restored in strength.

F. W. Knowlton, Montreal, general manager of United Shoe Machinery Co., spent the past week in Toronto and Kitchener, Ont.

Private Edgar Bell, who was formerly in the shoe business on Dufferin street, Toronto, and has a brother, Harry Bell, shoe retailer, 1192 St. Clair avenue, has returned from the front. Private Bell enlisted with the 95th Battalion, and after reaching England, was sent to France with the 3rd Battalion. He came through the Somme fight all right, but in November last, was wounded in the left arm by an explosive bullet, while out at night covering for a wiring party. The bullet entered his left arm just above the wrist. The result was that the bone in the upper portion of his limb was badly shattered. After being some time in the hospital, he spent a few weeks in England, and is now home, honorably discharged.

The Lillian Shoe Co., of Montreal, who have recently been granted a charter, have taken over the business of George Leclerc, maker of children's turn shoes and cacks, Maisonneuve.

S. Watthews, dealer in shoes and dry goods, has moved into a handsome new store at the corner of Danforth Road and Lawton avenue, Toronto.

J. Earl has opened a new shoe store at 508 Queen street east, Toronto.

The clerks employed in the various Yonge street shoe establishments, Toronto, have signed a petition, which will be presented to the proprietors, asking that the stores be closed every Wednesday afternoon during the months of July and August, in order that the employees may have a weekly half holiday. The clerks think the time asked for is too short but are willing to make concessions, in order to get the half holiday system started. They state that shoe salesmen in other parts of the city have a half holiday a week for several months in the year, and it is only the Yonge street stores that keep open day in and day out. The petition has been largely signed.

C. P. Cashman is opening a new shoe store at 850 College street, Toronto, west of Ossington.

The Rubber Regenerating Company, of Canada,

Montreal, was ordered recently by the Superior Court to pay Julius Lipsky $900 to compensate him for the complete disablement of his left hand, which was crushed, while he was working for the company.

Oliver M. Brooks, of Montreal, who is special representative of the Goodyear shoe repair department of the United Shoe Machinery Co., has returned after an extended trip to Winnipeg, and other points in the West.

THIS Outfit represents the highest development in shoe repairing machinery, and meets every demand of modern shoe repairing. It embraces all the essential processes for making new shoes from old ones, giving the maximum of equipment and efficiency in the minimum space. The Outfit has the Goodyear Stitching Machine with all its improvements, including a new style steam generator which uses gas or gasolene for generating the steam, and operates automatically, thereby insuring a uniform heat for keeping the wax in proper condition and requiring little attention from the operator. The Edge Trimming Machine has the new feature of the two shafts, being operated by a single belt, and the cutter grinder is attached directly to the main shaft. This arrangement gives better results with less power.

The Buffing and Scouring Machine has a shaft 57 inches long and carries the following equipment:

- | | |
|--|----------------------------------|
| 2 Split Bottom Buffing Rolls | 2 Flat X-Ray Hee Scouring Wheels |
| 2 "C" Shape X-Ray Heel Scouring Wheels | 1 Heel Breast Scouring Wheel |
| 1 Pin Wheel Pad Complete | |

A powerful Blower System removes the dust resulting from the trimming, buffing and scouring operations, and is designed to overcome certain objectionable features of other blowers.

The Finishing Machine has a 78-inch shaft which has all the necessary equipment for black or russet work:

- | | |
|--|--|
| 2 Corrugated Rubber Shank Finishing Wheels | 1 Corrugated Rubber Heel Finishing Wheel |
| 1 Corrugated Rubber Bottom Finishing Roll | 2 Shank and Bottom Brushes |
| 2 Heel Brushes | 1 Stitch Cleaning Brush |
| 1 Levelling Roll | 1 Bead and Wheel |

At the end of the Outfit is the Oscillating Edge Setting Machine which is fitted with union irons and in its motions duplicates hand workmen with quicker and better results.

Each of the machines is operated independently by a friction drive pulley, so that it is necessary to use only those machines which the operator may require. This feature means a saving of power.

All the machines are firmly mounted on legs and driven by a countershaft with carefully adjusted bearings, so that the Outfit runs with very little vibration, and is in every way most efficient.

Before and After Confederation and a message for to-day

Those of us who can look back to the days of Confederation, re-live as the old associations are recalled.

The store of the early days had many pleasant associations. The wooden Till could tell an interesting story—one which would perhaps reveal human weaknesses, losses to the merchant on account of mistakes, disputes with customers, forgotten charges, etc.

Doing business in an efficient or systematic way was little thought of in those days. The temptation which was placed before employees was criminal.

A merchant of Dayton, Ohio, in thinking of the dangers to himself and his employees because of no system, devised a crude mechanism for registering money. This was the first step from the old-fashioned Till to the present highly specialized Cash Register.

The story of the years of struggle and patience on the part of the founder of The National Cash Register Company, Mr. John H. Patterson, to perfect a register which would relieve the retail merchant of work and worry, remove temptation from his employees, is a most interesting one.

The story of Mr. Patterson's early struggles is told by himself in an interesting booklet—"The Troubles of a Store-Keeper and How to Correct Them." This booklet is of especial interest to every retail merchant. Send us your address and we will gladly forward you a copy.

WHY BUSINESS SHOULD REMAIN PROSPEROUS

Increased Earnings Through the War—Wide Range of Industries Stimulated by War Expenditures—High Prices Have Their Compensation in Various Ways—General Shortage of Raw Materials Promises Little Relief for a Long Period

THERE need be little fear as to the continuance of the prosperous business conditions in this country so long as the war lasts. The measure of the success and stability of domestic trade lies in the purchasing power of the people to a large extent, the returns from the natural resources of the country being, of course, the foundation which, with the emoluments of wage earners, formulates and maintains prosperity.

This year, from all appearances, there will be rather more than the average crop in all lines, and, with prices as they are, the farmers of this country will have an abundance of money to devote to their particular needs. The same may be said of our mining, fishing and lumbering interests, although the shortage of labor will undoubtedly impair to some degree the results from some of these sources.

The continued production of war materials will alone be responsible for putting in circulation vast sums of money, and when it is remembered that the making of munitions means the stimulation of iron and steel and other products, with the increased need for coal, transportation and all that these involve, it will be understood how far-reaching are the effects of the expenditure of fifty millions a month on munitions alone.

Shipbuilding is proceeding almost as feverishly as the making of munitions the number of ships turned out this year promising a larger tonnage than any ten years since Confederation. This also means the stimulation of other industries that must be kept up to the mark to keep the wheels of industry moving.

While there has been a corresponding increase in the cost of living that limits to some extent the purchasing power of the amount of wages being paid to industrial employes, this is more than offset by the tremendous increase of the number of workers. There never was a time in the history of the country when there were so many people at work. Everybody who can handle a tool or stand before a machine can earn wages that five years ago would have been considered fabulous; and the soldiers' dependents are getting and spending their allowances.

There has been a slight hesitation in business in recent months through the overstocking by merchants who thought toward the end of last year that it was a question of getting goods at any price. This Journal kept reiterating the warning that there would be enough goods to go around, nevertheless buyers bid against one another in their eagerness to cover themselves, and this brought about higher prices as well as surplus stocks which have since resulted in more or less stagnation.

But there need be no fear as to the future. There will be no drop in prices, unless amongst manufacturers who become restless and to keep their plants going, temporarily offer inducements. Goods at prices at which they were bought last spring are not only good value but a good investment, and the man who holds on will make a good profit.

The world's stock of raw materials has steadily diminished with some notable exceptions since the war and, the shortage of labor and other considerations, will help to make even these respond to the general upward tendency. There is not the slightest occasion for doubt or uncertainty as to the future so long as present large expenditures continue, for even the saving policy followed by many who are investing in government securities will mean the distribution of that savings in industrial enterprises, whether governmental or private.

VETERAN SHOEMEN RECALL "DAYS OF LONG AGO"

Conditions which Prevailed in the Dominion Away Back in 1867—The Improvements that have Marked the Retail Business and Contributed to its Expansion and Upbuild—How Boots were Made and Sold Then and Style was not a Perplexing Factor

CANADA is celebrating the fiftieth anniversary of its history as a nation. The occasion is one full of significance, association, and import. The expansion and development of the Dominion has been marvellous and there is little need to dwell upon the record of achievement and progress of the last half century.

To-day a great national event is being observed, and the future is bright with promise and hope. The jubilee of Confederation is commemorated on every side and all join heartily and unitedly in praise of the glorious past and the still greater future. The people are manifesting their patriotism and devotion in no unmistakable manner, and now Canada is a united nation of vast sweep of territory, and of radiant prospect in internal growth.

July, 1917, finds her throwing herself in to the world struggle for liberty, freedom and tolerance in a way that sets the final seal of nationhood upon her brow.

In 1867, Canada comprised four provinces, embracing a narrow strip along the Lower Lakes and the St. Lawrence, with a limited frontage on the Atlantic.

In 1917, there are nine provinces and a large unorganized territory, embracing half a continent, stretching from the Pacific to the Atlantic and from the United States to the Pole.

The greatest single factor in the progress of Canada has been the opening up of the West, which the above extension in political control made possible.

In 1867, the Dominion embraced an area of 540,000 square miles, with a population of 3,600,000.

In 1917 her area measured 3,729,665 square miles, with a population of about 7,600,000.

Fifty years is a short time in the life of a nation, but it is a long period in the career of an individual. Looking back over the past, so far as the shoe and leather business is concerned, there are not many who were engaged in that line at the birth of this great commonwealth. There are, however, a number of industries in the boot manufacturing, leather and retail arena, that were founded previous to Confederation, but few of the original heads of these historic houses still keep their hand on the wheel. They have played their part and played it well and have gone to their well merited reward. So far as the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL can learn there are half a dozen men who were retailing shoes half a century or more ago, and are still at it, and the following references and reminiscences will be read with much interest.

Fifty-five Years in the Game

Possibly the oldest shoe firm in Canada, in point of years in business, is Francis & Vaughan, King street, St. John, N.B., who have been selling shoes for fifty-five years, and John Vaughan is still at the helm. The name of Vaughan has been connected for nearly a century with the shoe trade in St. John.

John Vaughan's father was engaged in the footwear line, and the subject of this reference spent part of his time in his father's store, for even when at school, he was interested in the business. His first position, if such it can be really called—for "job" would be a more proper term—was with the late M. Francis. From him his early training was received. As an urchin in those days, his duties were quite different from those of the ordinary lad of the present.

Such a thing as delivering shoes was unheard of, while a task like answering the telephone was unknown. Starting with Mr. Francis fifty-five years ago, when he was sixteen years of age, Mr. Vaughan has seen many changes in the shoe trade. The late M. Francis, in 1862, engaged in the manufacture, as well as the selling of different lines of shoes, employing a large number of workmen, and Mr. Vaughan continued this policy when he became proprietor. Later on, he went into partnership with H. L. Francis, a brother of M. Francis, and they continued for many years, the firm being dissolved in 1893, but the business has been continued under the old reliable name of Francis & Vaughan.

Before the big fire in 1877, when whole sections of the city were wiped out, Mr. Vaughan did business on Prince William street, but afterwards a removal was made to King's Square; then the site was changed to King street, where, for forty years, the firm has done a steady, substantial and thorough-going trade.

John Vaughan, although he is past the allotted span of three score and ten, is still active and hearty, and likes to recall the days of long ago in the boot business. "Those were the times," said Mr. Vaughan, "when no cartons were placed on the shelves, all goods being sold in bulk. The finer classes were kept in drawers. When a customer entered, he was shown shoes as now and the powers of persuasion seemed as essential to a clerk as they are at the present day. If the caller took a couple or three pairs home to decide as to which he or she should keep, it was up to him or her to return what was not retained. To call for a parcel on approbation was an unheard of proceeding at the time of Confederation. Then only about sixty different lines were kept, whereas we now have over seven hundred.

"The matter," continued Mr. Vaughan, "of making a selection was not as arduous a task as it at present appears, when the style problem, new lasts and patterns, and color schemes figure so prominently. There were only seven shoe stores in St. John in 1867, and to-day there are over fifty places where boots and shoes are sold. I think the quality of many lines in the old days was just as good as now, if not better, but, of course, there is a vast improvement in workmanship, finish, appearance and skill. The introduction of the Goodyear welt process practically revolutionized the shoe trade. Tanners have improved their stocks and many new leathers have been introduced. French kid was the most popular leather in the early shoe days, but it has been practically a dead issue for nearly twenty years, because the introduction of dongola has eliminated it. Prunella shoes were a popular portion of the stock in women's fine footwear. English goods were also largely handled by us, but gradually local and Canadian manufacturers began to place their lines upon the market, and a ready demand was created for them. Prices in 1867 were a mere bagatelle as compared to what is charged for the higher grades of footwear now."

The Record of Pioneer Firm in Napanee

A house which has been in business for fifty-four years, and is still flourishing, is Wilson & Bro., of Napanee, Ont. The firm is composed of Uriah Wilson, ex-M.P., and John Wilson, the latter passing away in November last. Four years before Confederation, and before many of the readers of this article were born, three brothers started a small custom shoe shop in Napanee. The firm was then

“ THE FATHERS OF CONFEDERATION ”

This is a picture of the “Fathers of Confederation,” all of whom have joined the silent majority, the last to expire being Sir Charles Tupper. There were thirty-four statesmen who inaugurated the union of the British provinces in North America on July 1st, 1867. They all played an important part in the early and subsequent history of the Dominion. In the distinguished group are the following: H. Bernard, secretary; W. A. Henry, Nova Scotia; E. Palmer, Prince Edward Island; W. H. Steeves, New Brunswick; C. Fisher, New Brunswick; E. Whelan, Prince Edward Island; Col. T. H. Gray, Prince Edward Island; G. Coles, Prince Edward Island; S. L. Tilly, New Brunswick; F. B. I. Carter, Newfoundland; A. Shea, Newfoundland; J. Chapais, Canada known as S. B. Wilson & Co., and its members were S. B., Uriah and John Wilson.

East; E. B. Chandler, New Brunswick; A. Campbell, Canada; A. C. Archibald, Nova Scotia; Sir H. Langevin, Canada East; Sir John A. Macdonald, Canada West; Sir G. E. Cartier, Canada East; Sir E. P. Tache, Canada East; Hon. George Brown, Canada West; T. H. Haviland, Prince Edward Island; A. Galt, Canada West; P. Mitchell, New Brunswick; Hon. Oliver Mowat, Canada West; J. Cockburn, Canada West; R. B. Dickey, Nova Scotia; Sir Charles Tupper, Nova Scotia; Col. J. H. Gray, New Brunswick; W. H. Pope, Prince Edward Island; W. McDougall, Canada West; T. D'Arcy McGee, Canada; A. A. McDonald, Prince Edward Island; J. McCully, Nova Scotia; J. M. Johnston, New Brunswick.

In 1867, the former retired, and the establishment has ever since been carried on under the name of Wilson & Bro. Both Uriah and John were practical shoemakers, and served a regular apprenticeship. The yearly salaries of the two boys while hammering out sole leather on a lap stone, and working with an awl and waxed ends, was not a princely one. The first year they got twenty dollars for twelve months' labor. The second year, thirty dollars, and the third year, forty dollars. The fourth year, they received the magnificent income of sixty dollars per annum. Board, washing and boots were included in the remuneration.

Wilson and Bro. vividly recall the days when there were no shoes put in cartons, when half sizes were unknown when rubbers were made from one last, and long legged boots had a great call—copper toes decorating the boys' and youths' sizes. From 1863 to 1867, no goods other than hand-made, save a coarse class called Penitentiary shoes and made by convict labor in Kingston, were sold by the firm.

The manufacturing business grew until ten men were employed to supply the trade, but after Confederation, ready-made footwear began to displace custom-made. The firm still make boots to order, if desired, and in the past, made a specialty of custom, long kip boots. It was customary for shoemakers, in the early days, to work from early morning until nine or ten o'clock at night, in the busy season. Four men could work by the light of two candles, the candles being placed on a wire stand, and the benches grouped around them. The crimping, skiving and sewing were all done by hand, and the sole leather hammered out. After the work was cut out, the men then performed all the other operations, to the completed product. Custom shops gradually introduced sewing machines, and then came crimping machines, skivers, rolling machines and dies.

Uriah Wilson, the sole survivor of the firm, has spent many years in public life, being a former councillor and deputy reeve of Napanee, and former warden of Lennox and Addington counties. He represented Lennox in the House of Commons from 1887 till 1904, and after the re-distribution, sat for Lennox and Addington until 1911, when he retired from public life. The late John Wilson was an ardent lover of flowers, and during the time that his brother was attending to his parliamentary duties, he carefully superintended the business at home, and kept it on the solid foundation that it is at the present time.

In Toronto there are only two retail firms doing business to-day, the members of which were alive in 1867, and have been going down to work every day since that historic epoch. One of the firms is H. & C. Blachford, Limited, 286 Yonge street. Horace P. and Charles E. Blachford started in October, 1864, in a tiny shoe shop at 131 King street east. Both these gentlemen are still enjoying good health, and have established a name in the Canadian shoe world that stands for all that is highest and best in merchandising methods.

While there are some historic houses in Great Britain, United States and Canada, which have borne a family name for many decades, it will be frequently found that either a son or a grandson is to-day conducting the business, and that the head of the original establishment has long since passed to the beyond. This is not the case with the Blachford Shoe Store. The same men, who began, in a small way, before Confederation, are vigorous to-day, and as regular attendants at business as any of their employees. The Blachford firm have one of the finest and largest emporiums in Canada, and the slogan has always been "The Store that Fits the Feet." They have several customers who were doing business with them when the scattered provinces of Canada were united in the great Commonwealth, known as the Dominion. Both Horace P. and Charles E. Blachford love to talk over the olden days, and in a recent communication to the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL, said:

"When one looks back to the time of Confederation, he will find great changes in the shoe trade of this country. There are not many who can remember as far back as the early fifties, when the firm of Brown & Childs came to Toronto, and started manufacturing on King street, east of St. James' Cathedral, and a few years later removed to Montreal, making that city their headquarters. They continued their factory in Toronto for some time later Mr. Brown retiring and W. B. Hamilton taking his place, the firm then being Childs & Hamilton. They moved to Wellington street east and remained there until they built a new factory on Front street east, the institution now being W. B. Hamilton Shoe Co.

"When Brown & Childs commenced manufacturing there was very little machinery used. They made nothing but pegged work, composed of long and laced boots. Wellington boots were seamed up by hand, and only the uppers made in the factory, the bottoming being done at the shoemakers' houses. The sole leather was taken out by the side with so many pair soles, insoles, counters and heel stock chalked out; what a contrast from those days with to-day, when everything is done by machinery!

"Fifty years ago most all the fine boots were made to measure or imported from England and United States. The retail merchants did not have to carry the amount of stock they do at the present time, as there was only one width and no half sizes. The boots were all principally women's elastic, front and side lace, and one shape toe and made of calf, enamel, and prunella. Dress slippers were made without heels or trimmings. H. & C. Blachford have two pairs of such slippers at present, which are kept as souvenirs. These were only made in one width and were imported from Paris.

"When one looks back fifty years how many of the old original firms do you find in the shoe business to-day? Alas, one, and that is H. & C. Blachford; when they took the first step on the ladder and gradually worked up to the top. The name 'Blachford' is known all over and they have customers in every part of the Dominion and many states of the Union."

Belleville can boast of two veterans in the shoe game, who were doing business when the scattered provinces of Canada were welded together in a homogeneous whole. To-day these self same gentlemen are still going down to business on the fiftieth anniversary of Confederation.

These pioneers are J. J. Haines and John McKeown. Both have been in business for fifty-three years, although Mr. Haines started some months before Mr. McKeown. The former is head of the J. J. Haines Shoe Houses, who have stores in Belleville, Napanee, Trenton and Smith's Falls.

In conversation with the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL, the other day, on conditions in 1867, he said:

"Yes, sir, there have been some changes in fifty years in the shoe business. Long boots were the order of the day then and lots of them. Our shelves were crowded with them and how our arms ached on Saturday night in the fall when the head of the family had been to town and fitted all the children out, and saw to it that all the pegs had been rasped out. Everything came loose, no cartons, and for the ladies' prunella boots were the thing. These were tied together and packed in shelves and drawers and were the correct thing to wear laced, gaiter and button style, plain, and foxed with leather.

No Credit Then, Says Mr. Haines

"We did not give credit and were not troubled with approbation till later years when styles multiplied our troubles. Approbation and credit crept in and gave us all kinds of trouble, but lately we have got rid of both of these evils. We also did repairing years ago but this has been dropped in late years as it was a big expense and a source of all kinds of evil. We notice in our cash book of 1864 that we paid 50 cents a pair for half soling calf boots, and from the same book we observe that cordwood had a prominent place at $3.50 per cord and cutting same 75 cents. No coal in the good old days.

"We had only silver money which did not pass for face value and was always a loss in exchange. All merchants in the country petitioned the government when we got our dollar bills which was a great relief and saving.

"At night big wooden shutters were put on our windows outside. We always used newspaper advertising from the beginning, and large fence and barn space as well, and still find it pays to keep our name before the public. We have always given good value on the dollar, and find it pays to give our customers the very best we can get for the money.

"Fifty years ago you could get a man's good boot for $3.50; that was about the limit. We dealt with Geo. Offord & Co., Kingston; Mullarkey & Donovan, Montreal; O'Thibeadeau, Montreal; Smythe & Edminson, Montreal, and Brown & Childs, Montreal."

Mr. McKeown Closed His Shop to Fight

The other veteran in the shoe trade ranks is John McKeown, of Belleville, who has been selling shoes in that city for fifty-three years. He was in a reminiscent mood when speaking of old times.

"Yes," he said, "I closed up my shop for three weeks during the Fenian Raid in 1866, and did duty at Prescott. I was a member of the 15th Battalion at that time, and enlisted with several others. As to how many business men would close their shops now, and volunteer to go overseas, and fight I cannot say, but I know that I did it cheerfully in those anxious days. With us the protection and interest of our country came first and business afterwards."

Mr. McKeown is seventy-eight years of age, and is still active. He was born in Kingston, but it was in Picton that he got his education and learned shoemaking. Coming to Belleville in 1860, he served at the bench for four years, and then launched out for himself in 1864. For some time he conducted, in connection with his shop, a flourishing custom shoe department, employing as many as fifteen men. But factory-made goods gradually came into more general use and displaced the custom variety.

"I remember," declared Mr. McKeown, "the days before any rubber shoes came on the market. We used to make some overshoes entirely of leather, and they answered the purpose very well." The greatest change that Mr. McKeown has witnessed in the evolution of the shoe business, is the rapidly altering styles and lasts, which necessitate merchants carrying much larger stocks. To this day, Mr. McKeown says he makes a few shoes to order, "principally for cranks and cripples," he humorously added. In the old times, six dollars was a fair price for a handmade calf skin shoe. One of the first factory shoes that Mr. McKeown sold was known as the Penitentiary brand, made at Kingston by A. & C. N. Ross & Co. Mr. McKeown says that people buy a much finer and better class of footwear to-day, than ever, while business has improved in many other respects.

How the Cook Business in London was Started

One more business that has been established fifty-three years is the J. P. Cook Co., Limited, of London, Ont., which began in the "Forest City" in February, 1864. Mr. Philip Cook, who launched the enterprise, is of Irish extraction, and as a boy came to America and lived with his parents for a while in New York City. Later, they removed to Western Ontario, and Philip Cook, who had considerable acquaintance with the art of St. Crispin, secured his first job in the factory of the John McPherson Co., now of Hamilton—the industry then being located in London. In 1864, he bought out the small business of Mr. Crabbe, then located on Dundas street, London, where he started a custom shop. Shortly afterwards, he added certain lines of shoes. He foresaw that factory products in footwear were going to displace handmade goods, and thus the Cook business was inaugurated. Five different stands have been occupied, the present one at 167 Dundas street and 398 Richmond street being secured in 1899. Mr. Cook has three sons, who were actively interested in the shoe trade, and twenty-one years ago the style of the firm was changed to J. P. Cook, and some eight years later was incorporated under the name of J. P. Cook Co., Limited.

J. P. Cook, who founded the shoe factory of the Cook-Fitzgerald Co., died in 1911. The other two sons are Philip Cook, who manages the big shoe establishment in London, and Ed. Cook, proprietor of the Owl Shoe Store, Toronto, and secretary of the Toronto Shoe Retailers' Association. Mr. Cook, senior, is now in his eighty-sixth year, and is enjoying good health. Like all the other pioneers of the trade, he loves to talk over old times, and can tell many interesting stories of the development and expansion of the craft. Mr. Cook owns considerable real estate in the "Forest City," has always been a lover of a good horse, and enjoys excellent health. He attributes his success in the shoe arena to his practical acquaintance with the trade, knowing the value of shoes, and giving close study to the buying end.

Owen Cook, the father of Philip Cook, lived to be ninety years of age, and it looks as if the days of the son's life would equal those of his father. In 1897 the Cook store inaugurated the entire cash system, which has been very successful. Philip Cook is the uncle of Messrs. Philip, Stephen and Joe Pocock, of the London Shoe Co., and taught them all the rudiments in the art of shoemaking. One of his daughters married C. J. Fitzgerald, formerly of the Cook-Fitzgerald Co., who now resides in New York City.

In the course of further conversation Mr. Cook said: "We used permanent stock boxes on our shelves over forty years ago—had them made specially. We also issued a store paper at that time, and distributed it free to a mailing list. We always advertised in a different way. One year our city council refused to vote any money toward furnishing the citizens with band concerts in the park. We hired the band and gave the citizens the concerts, and derived a lot of good advertising out of this public spirited move.

"We discontinued giving credit about twenty years ago, taking the stand that running accounts with our customers was poor business. We notified our patrons and have conducted what we consider a cash business ever since. We lost some customers, but have always felt we made a big move in the right direction.

"In the early days of our business, it was a common occurrence for customers from the country to come into town only about once a year, and then the practice was to buy shoes for the whole family. These shoes would often be just placed into a big red oatmeal sack, slung over the shoulder and carried away, without wrapping paper or fancy labels and string, as to-day. Wellington boots were the 'go' at that time, and they were even sported by bridegrooms. They were worn very close fitting, and sometimes were so tight on the wearer, that for a state occasion, they would be pulled on without socks."

Some Old Established Eastern Firms

There are several historic retail shoe businesses in Montreal. One of the oldest is that of L. A. St. Louis, 179 Notre Dame street east, who has been in the trade about forty-six years. Mr. St. Louis is now about eighty years of age and, of course, does not take a very active interest in the business.

O. Bernier, 17 Notre Dame street east, Montreal, has been in the shoe line close on to forty years. The firm of Wm. Dangerfield, 15 Notre Dame street west, has been in the retail game for half a century or more. The present proprietor is P. Donnelly, who is well liked and well thought of by the trade.

Among the veterans in the shoe business, who passed away a few months ago, was Louis Bilodeau, of Quebec City, who had been in the shoe business for the remarkably long period of sixty-six years. He was probably the oldest member of the trade in Canada at his death. Mr. Bilodeau was in his eighty-seventh year. His first store was situated at the spot known as the "Break-Neck Stairs," and after ten years in that place, he removed to larger quarters at 45-47 Sous-le-Port, in the same locality, and in fifty-six years he did not make a change of premises. Until about 1880, the late Mr. Bilodeau had the largest retail shoe business in Quebec.

Did Not Live to See Confederation Jubilee

A veteran who could recall many incidents of the early days of the shoe trade, and never lost his interest in the business, was Robert Wilson, of 75 King street east, Hamilton. He passed away a few days ago, after being in poor health for some months. A sketch of Mr. Wilson's career appeared in the last issue of the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL, in which reference was made to the early days of shoe retailing, and the vast improvement that had taken place in this profession during the last quarter of a century. The Wilson business, which has always been a flourishing one, is now conducted by his sons, Charley and Arthur. Robert Wilson, Hamilton's oldest shoe retailer, left a heritage and a reputation that will always be remembered by numerous customers, friends and others having business with the firm.

A shoe house which links up the present with the past, and is an outstanding institution of the Capital City, is that of A. J. Stephens & Son, 187 Sparks street, Ottawa. The founder of the business, the late A. J. Stephens, passed away some five years ago, having been identified with the footwear game for forty-five years, and the present proprietor is his son, E. A. Stephens.

In April last, A. J. Stephens & Son celebrated their fiftieth anniversary in business, being the oldest shoe store in Ottawa.

No Cold Feet Here

The editorial, "A Time for Optimism," in the June 15th edition of the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL has called forth a number of strong endorsements from the best people in all sections of the trade. We cannot give space to all these communications, but quote the following from one of the brightest of the shoe manufacturing concerns, in extenso:—

"We have read your article on "cold feet," and presume this means in the manufacturing end of the business. Cold feet! We don't know what cold feet mean. Listen to this, and then take us off your list of 'cold feeters.'"

"We have brought our production up to the capacity of our factory, about 600 pairs every day. We have put on additional help in every department. We have installed additional equipment. We have added a number of new lasts, and augmented our supply now current. We have increased our staff materially. We have equipped our office with many modern devices. We have made additions to our traveling staff. We have made our factory the brightest, best equipped and largest women's exclusive welt factory in Canada, and we are now getting out the finest set of women's fine welted shoes the factory has ever produced."

"We have consulted our city librarian, dictionary, and modern authorities on the vernacular of the day, to satisfy ourselves as to the meaning of 'cold feet' and find there is nothing like that in our family."

"We do not pretend to be able to predict—we cannot prophesy from one season to another—but we do know that the best way to keep the wheel turning is to keep our united shoulders right on that wheel, and shove and hustle, boost and push, and keep it going all the time. Undoubtedly there may be a grade ahead, but when we come to it we will put on a little more power."

"You are to be congratulated on the manner in which you take hold of any subject that you feel is of interest to the trade, and we must say that you generally hit the nail right on the head."

"It is quite true one grouch begets another. Sometimes, however, we have found that a grouch can be cheered up and made a first-class fighting man. No doubt you have had this same experience, and if you find the grouch you may be looking for go to him good and hard."

For obvious reasons the name is withheld, but we might mention that the concern is one of the regular advertisers in the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL which realizes that one of the most fatal forms of 'cold feet' is to drop "pushing" for business.

What is Seen and Heard Amongst the Trade—Views
and News of the Leather Trade at Home and Abroad

THE leather trade continues quiet throughout the country, notwithstanding the stronger feeling created by the recent advances in the hide market. It is practically between seasons with shoe manufacturers, who naturally, are holding off for the purpose of seeing what the possibilities of the market may be in the next month or so. Shoe manufacturers are preparing their spring samples, and will have these in line early next month. It will be some time before the production of fall goods is fully under way, although some manufacturers have already commenced on those to be forwarded to a distance. Some feelers have been thrown out for large lots of leather, and it is claimed that concessions have been obtained. Offerings have been made from across the line at reductions of as much as two cents below the regular market price, but with leather prices as they are to-day, this means very little, so far as affecting the general situation is concerned. Tanners are not listening very intently to suggestions for reduction in the market price, although here and there, there may be concessions made to keep things moving. The fact is that it is so difficult to secure help for leather production, that the output of the tanneries has been kept at a very low point for some months. There is, therefore, little disposition on the part of the leather man to give away his profits. The feeling prevails that while quietness may reign for a short period, as soon as business begins to pick up, as it undoubtedly will, there will be an increased demand for leather, which will bring a firmness that has been absent now for several months.

Hide Conditions.—The market continues firm at the recent advance and, although concessions have been made, tanners do not seem to be able to pick up any quantities of hides at anything under the current rates. No doubt the arrangement between the United States Government and the packers is responsible for the stiffness that prevails throughout the market just at present. The government has been given an option on two million hides, to fill contracts for shoes, harness and leather equipment for the army and navy, at the following quotations, based on native steers:

January, February, March take off 30 cents; April take off 31 cents; May take off 32 cents; June, July, August take off 33 cents, the prices applying to No. 1 hides, all weights. This arrangement gives the government assurance that it can buy all the goods required at existing prices, instead of having the market boosted by their purchases for war needs.

Chicago packer heavy native steer hides are selling regularly for 33 cents for June, 32 cents for May, 31 cents for April, while country buffs are quoted at 26 cents for No. 1, with some special grades selling as high as 27½ cents to 28 cents. The market is weak and slow on poor quality and strong on good. Calf skin market is a trifle firmer in flesh and first solid skin, while stock for colors is neglected, 41 cents being quoted.

American Leather Conditions.—The sole leather market in the United States, while somewhat quiet, has a firmer tone than for some months past. The purchases made by United States government for war purposes have cleaned up the market on many lines, and established firmer conditions all around. Present indications seem to point to better sales and prices in sole leather than for some time past. Buyers are more frequent and more disposed to pay the price.

In upper leather conditions there is an improvement, although outside of army business, very little is reported as happening. Everybody is looking for the removal of the embargo on English shipments to relieve the situation, but there does not seem to be much hope for immediate help in this direction. The recent purchases of army requirements have helped the situation somewhat, but in light leathers there has been no appreciable effect. There is some accumulation of side leather, although leather men say there is a steady demand for the best grades. Glazed kid is quiet and export business is practically at a standstill. The same may be said of sheep.

Restricting Shoe Styles.—Elsewhere we gave an account of the meeting of manufacturers and tanners, with the Leather Equipment Committee of the Council of National Defence at Washington. The proposal made by the committee to the shoe trade, that the spring styles for 1918 should be greatly reduced and standardized, has aroused widespread concern in the United States, not only amongst shoe manufacturers, but amongst leather men and shoe dealers. The shoe dealers seem to be the most bitterly opposed to the proposition, as meaning a serious interference with the bulk of their sales. Manufacturers also claim that it will interfere seriously with their initiative and enterprise in extending their business. It is pointed out that footwear is not a luxury, but a necessity, and that any interference with its general use would bring serious results to the country at large. Nevertheless, even shoemen are open to admit that a curtailment of some of the extreme styles would be not only in the interest of the shoe trade, but of the public generally. There is no reason why there should not be a reversion to seven inch styles in women's shoes, instead of the extremes that are now found in many lines of ten and even twelve inches. It must be admitted that the fad has gone to an extreme and it has looked recently as though it would cure itself. There is always the danger, however, of governmental interference carrying matters of this kind too far.

The Guiding Ticket

Where shoes built on Neolin are ready today

Perhaps you have not known just where to buy shoes built on Neolin.

Numbers of people who desired the advantages of Neolin's qualities have had to buy from other than their usual shoe dealer.

They sought the long, long wear of Neolin soles.

They sought its protecting waterproofness, its easy flexibility, its modern style.

But they have had to depend on inquiry in identifying those stores that sell Neolin-soled shoes.

The shoes you are buying to wear this summer, your dealer ordered early last Fall or Winter. At that time our factory capacity for producing Neolin soles was limited. As a result most merchants were able to obtain only a small percentage of their stock with Neolin soles.

That condition has been overcome. Shoe manufacturers' recent orders from dealers for shipment next Fall call for Neolin on half the shoes. Realizing the superiority of Neolin, many merchants are now ordering big portions of next Fall's stock on Neolin. At that time you will be able to obtain Neolin-soled shoes at any good store.

But you want Neolin right away. So to make it easy for you to find it, we have offered shoe merchants the ticket illustrated here. They are on shoes in the windows. You can find Neolin-soled shoes by merely looking for these tickets in shoe store windows.

Neolin has been a great success. Because of distinct superiorities, it is replacing leather for shoe soles. Neolin's appearance can be imitated. But Neolin's qualities are the result of methods and materials known only to us.

Now there are other soles that look like Neolin. But there is only one Neolin—and every pair of soles is branded with the trademark shown on this ticket.

To be sure of the genuine Neolin—mark that mark, stamp it on your memory. Ask for Neolin, with the accent on the "O"—Neolin—the trade symbol for a quality product.

The Connecting Link

“WHERE can I get shoes built on Neolin?”

This question has been the burden of many letters we have received from people who have read our newspaper and magazine advertising of Neolin.

Month after month these inquiries have flowed in. People wanted to buy Neolin—wanted also to learn at what stores they could buy it.

Investigations proved to us that many—very many—shoe buyers did not know a “Neolin Store.”

The time has come when we should provide for shoe retailers a definite help in linking up their store with the Neolin advertising.

We thought of window display backgrounds and signs of good proportions. This would have meant asking you to change your window display plans materially.

Now we are convinced it can be handled otherwise. We believe the attractiveness of the Neolin price ticket solves the problem.

In order to make sure that the public are thoroughly familiar with this plan we are issuing the illustrated story, shown on the opposite page, through newspapers and magazines, beginning July 2nd.

You have now a definite chance to link up your store in the minds of shoe buyers with the Neolin advertising by writing at once for a supply of these price tickets.

If you order and use these tickets, be sure that the shoes are built on Neolin. Neolin's appearance has been imitated, but Neolin's qualities are results of methods and materials known only to us.

Now, there are other soles that look like Neolin, but there is only one Neolin and every pair of genuine Neolin soles is branded with the word “Neolin,” so that it shows plainly on the bottom of the finished shoe. In talking to your trade, your pronunciation will agree with ours if you say the word with the accent on the “o” —Ne-o'-lin.

RETAILERS WANT NO RIGID "LIMIT OF STYLES"

Object Seriously to the Standardization of Footwear which would Result as Detriment to Craft as a Whole, and Kill Individuality, Originality and Invention—Proposition of Commercial Economy Board May be Left to Intelligent Public Opinion

IS it possible, by government decree or otherwise, to limit styles and to restrain the tendency of the times in presenting novelty footwear for the consideration of the trade, and more particularly for My Ladye Faire.

Attempts have been made in the past to restrict patterns and lasts, materials and combinations, but after each effort, it would seem as if the usual bounds had been exceeded, for some one breaks away and an orgy of colors, a riot of designs, and a blare of showy effects have generally resulted. However, every effort no doubt, results in some good, and if it were not for the steady, sobering effect of reform and agitation in certain lines, there is no telling where experiment, speculation and invention would end in the shoe world.

While it may be desirable to limit styles in the interest of thrift and economy, it is thought by many that the danger may go too much in the other direction, and in the absence of attractive, seasonable and pretty novelties, which have no doubt, done much to build up and keep alive the trade in women's footwear, the shoe manufacturing business might become stagnant.

There is no doubt that if it were not for the changes in the height of tops, the new shades in leather and variations in the type of heel, vamps, perforations, toes, etc., there would be little incentive on the part of the average person to invest in extra pairs of shoes, or to keep up with the tendency of Fashion's decree. The general impression seems to be that while numerous retailers and even manufacturers decry and denounce the multiplicity and variety of styles, yet they never seem to take aggressive or concerted action in the direction of suppressing these manifestations. They appear to look upon it as a necessary evil, although professedly antagonistic to frequent style changes. The recent attempt of the Commercial Economy Board at Washington to regulate shoe styles for the coming spring and how such a move on the part of that body is viewed will be read with interest. Here is what the Board said in a letter which aroused the trade all over the United States:

Confine Business to Staple Lines

Dear Sir:—In the present emergency it is absolutely essential that the country's resources in men, materials and equipment should be conserved in order to aid in the successful prosecution of the war. The Commercial Economy Board has decided that it is clearly desirable to reduce the number of new styles of shoes to be offered for the spring season of 1918. This will result in savings of raw materials and also in manufacturing and distributing costs. Although the savings may be small in individual cases they will be large when taken altogether.

The Board, therefore, asks your co-operation as a shoe manufacturer. We desire that you should eliminate extreme styles and confine your business to staple lines for the spring season of 1918. Co-operation of the shoe wholesalers and retailers is also being requested and next spring consumers will be advised to confine their purchases to these staple lines. No action by the Board to influence buying by the public will be taken until the trade has had opportunity to dispose of the stocks that it now has on hand.

Yours very truly,

COMMERCIAL ECONOMY BOARD OF THE COUNCIL OF NATIONAL DEFENCE.

Shortly after the mailing of the above letter a conference of shoe manufacturers, shoe wholesalers, tanners, shoe retailers and last manufacturers with the Economy

Board was called for June 19th to consider a plan of action. President Kent, of the National Boot and Shoe Manufacturers' Association, has appointed a committee to represent the organization as follows: Frank R. Briggs, Milton Florsheim, Fred. B. Rice, John R. Garside, William S. McKenzie, William S. Duling, Hon. A. S. Kreider and George W. Baker. In a circular letter to the membership, President Kent says:

"Some years ago (1910) a movement in the interest of economy and for the prevention of waste was started by George E. Keith suggesting a reduction in the number of samples and an effort to be made to influence the trend of styles. These matters were considered by special committee in that year, and subsequently the subject of styles was referred to and taken up by the Conference Committee of the National Shoe Manufacturers', Wholesalers' and Retailers' Associations at several meetings.

"The conditions, however, were such during the periods that these matters were considered, that it was deemed wise not to interfere with the initiative of the enterprising and progressive manufacturer and Dame Fashion was allowed to resume her sway.

"It is thought that the war conditions and the restricted material supplies in the leather trades in their relation to general business conditions present the psychological time to reduce the number of samples, to simplify style units and that these results might be brought about without seriously jeopardizing the industry. The necessity of keeping away from extravagant styles and unnecessary cost in footwear has been apparent for some years and the present situation accentuates this condition.

No Jeopardy to the Industry

"I understand that some of the larger shoe manufacturing companies have already decided to reduce the number of style units this season, and the feeling is that such a reduction for the spring of 1918 could be brought about without seriously jeopardizing the industry.

Suggestions have been made by those who compose the Board, that manufacturers should agree on fewer styles and patterns, and extravagant leathers in order to conserve the materials that go into shoes and reduce, if possible, the cost to consumers.

"We appreciate fully the injury that might result from radical action. While we are all in agreement that nothing should be done at this time to further disturb the shoe business of the country, after the matter is thoroughly discussed, some reasonable plan for working out the solution of the problem, which would not vitally affect the volume of business or stocks on hand of manufacturers and dealers, may be reached.

"We believe, however, strongly that it is wisdom for all manufacturers in all industries to show the right disposition to secure the confidence of the members of this Board so that no action will be taken that will prove detrimental to the manufacturing, wholesaling and retailing of footwear."

Retailers Want No Such Move

The National Shoe Retailers have drawn up an elaborate brief giving the views of the members regarding the enforced limitation of shoe styles:

The National Shoe Retailers' Association, representing the shoe retailers of the United States, desires to go on record as being unqualifiedly opposed to the standardization of footwear or the regulation of shoe styles.

The Association believes that such a policy, no matter how well meant, would result in detriment to the craft as a whole and probably defeat the very purpose for which it was inaugurated.

In the shoe industry to-day, America stands far in advance of every other country in the world; mainly because American people have demanded better footwear and a greater variety of styles, and have not been held down or forced to limit their desires to meet the unprogressiveness of standardized manufacturing and retailing, as is the case in many foreign countries. In such countries, investigation has proved that, to the same degree, that standardization and curtailment of assortments is enforced—is the shoe industry backward.

We believe that the economy resulting from the institution of such a plan in America would be dearly bought. Standardization would, of course, make manufacturing a little easier and facilitate production in gross quantities; thereby reducing the cost per pair to some extent; but at a great cost to advancement in the industry.

We believe that liberty still enlightens and progresses the world, and that this proposition may safely be left to the intelligent public opinion of America, whose wishes and demands have constantly guided the country onward and upward.

Automatic Regulation of Styles

We believe that the sobering effect of the war as it continues, can be depended upon to automatically regulate the question of style to a great extent. Indeed, there is already an increasing demand for firmer, stancher and more uniform practical footwear.

Americans are notably a people who adapt themselves to circumstances. No leadership has ever failed which charted its course in accord with the judgment of American public opinion. It is commendable that the captains of the shoe industry are endeavoring to assist our country in its trying hour; but we believe that in times like these, oversolicitousness causes many mistakes to be made, and that the standardization of shoes and the regulation of their styles, would be one of the gravest of them.

The scarcity of leather is constantly becoming more acute, due to the fact that the raising of raw materials (animal life) is not keeping pace with the growth of population. It would, therefore, be a calamity if originality or invention were discouraged or stamped out by a system of regulations and standards. Such originality should, on the contrary, be more strongly encouraged now than ever before; so that all kinds of fabrics and substitutes for leather may be developed and perfected. The usage of leather substitutes will be greatly increased as various materials are found which lend themselves to certain distinct styles of shoes. A clever style idea, by popularizing a particular substitute may become a potent factor in the conservation of leather.

The successful shoe retailers of the United States, being constantly in touch with the wearers of shoes, know the public wishes better than any other class of men in the country. The manufacturer, on the other hand, does not quite understand the art of retailing, nor is he in touch with the intelligent demand of the American public.

Shoe retailing, is a much greater science from the standpoint of psychology, than shoe manufacturing with all its complications. No manufacturer has as yet successfully solved the problem of distributing his shoes directly to the consumer; and never will, until he adds to his organization a staff of thoroughly trained retail brains, whose recommendations regarding style must be followed to the letter. Shoe manufacturers, due to a peculiar talent for extreme economy,

We, therefore, say in all sincerity, and with patriotic purpose, that any standardization in the shoe trade would discourage originality or invention, which would be a calamity to the craft and ultimately work harm rather than good. A slight saving in cost and the ease that might come to manufacturers would be dearly bought at the price of inventive genius, that, who knows, if undisturbed may yet discover a leather substitute for shoes of all kinds and styles.

War or no war, we will still admire the beautiful in arts and crafts, and we protest against its elimination from the shoe industry with all fervor, and with a knowledge based upon peculiar intimacy with the American public.

We retailers stand ready and willing to co-operate with the government in every possible way, as individuals and through the concerted action of our Association work. But we sincerely pray you not to set the shoe industry back a half a century by standardization. Our organization is pledged to do everything in its power to advance the industry and promote progressiveness or the style idea.

Conference at the Capitol

Twenty-five tanners, shoe manufacturers, retailers and last manufacturers responded June 19th to the call of the Commercial Economy Board of the Council of National Defense for a conference to discuss measures of economy that might be taken in the shoe and leather industries.

Henry S. Dennison, of the Commercial Economy Board, outlined the situation. He covered the ground so well that when Andrew C. McGowin arose to present the brief of the retailers, he remarked that Mr. Dennison had made his speech for him.

For the most part, the discussion was harmonious as between the various interests who desire to work in the closest co-operation with the Board to conserve raw materials. To this end the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

WHEREAS, It is agreed that war conditions and the restricted material supplies in the leather trades in their relation to general business conditions present the psychological time when footwear manufacturers and dealers and the manufacturers of leather and other supplies can economize in the use of materials,

NOW THEREFORE, it is unanimously resolved that committees representing the allied shoe and leather trades be appointed to co-operate with the Commercial Economy Board to devise measures which will effect economies in the production and distribution of footwear to eliminate waste and loss resulting from abuses existing in business.

Shoe Manufacturers' Are Helpless

Nearly all of the delegates present spoke. They pointed out that it would be impossible to accomplish all that was desired in a short period of time, that it would require considerable active work to bring about the revolution in the shoe business contemplated under the call for the conference. It was shown that shoe manufacturers are largely helpless in the matter of regulating styles. It is up to the buying public. Shoemen must make and offer saleable merchandise.

The Board is apparently in agreement with the statement that it will take a considerable length of time to bring about the change. It was intimated that at the proper time a start would be made by appealing to the women of the country in much the same manner as the present appeal is going forth for a conservation of food. Just as soon as the women believe it to be unpatriotic to wear 10-inch shoes, just so soon will they demand 7-inch shoes or even lower ones, and oxfords.

JUMBO BLOCKS

FOR REPAIR WORK

A feature in sole leather which helps to offset the increased cost of production and practically eliminates waste in cutting Tap Soles.

ECONOMY

is a big and popular word at present, and JUMBO BLOCKS offer an opportunity for every repair man and every repair department to advantageously practice economy:

BECAUSE

ONE JUMBO will produce two pairs of large size taps and additional pieces for patches.

ONE BUNDLE OF SIX JUMBOS will produce one dozen pairs of tap soles and additional pieces for patches at less cost than one dozen tap soles of the same selection.

AND BECAUSE in many cases One Jumbo will produce five tap soles and one bundle of six Jumbos will produce three extra pairs of tap soles, which means just so much found money.

JUMBO BLOCKS are cut in our popular Kitchener Union Oak and Penetang Hemlock Tannages.

JUMBO BLOCKS are cut in Men's, Boys' and Women's sizes.

JUMBO BLOCKS warrant thorough investigation and every repair man who recognizes an opportunity will get busy immediately.

The Shoe Repair Man

ALL READY FOR THE REPAIRERS' BIG PICNIC

THE Toronto Shoe Repairers will hold their annual picnic on Wednesday, July 18th. The objective point will be Queen Victoria Park, Niagara Falls, Ont. An energetic committee has made full arrangements. There will be games and sports of all kinds, some twenty different events, a baseball match and other attractions. The Shoe Repairers' Associations of Welland, St. Catharines and Hamilton have been invited to join in the celebration, and acceptances have been received. It is expected there will be a great mingling of the members of the footgear mending fraternity and their families. As the excursion is being held on a Wednesday, which is a half-holiday in the summer time with the majority of repairers, the shops will be closed all day, and the members will have a real old-fashioned outing.

Another matter taken up was the offer of the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Co. of a special discount to the members of the Toronto Shoe Repairers' Association on Neolin soles and Wingfoot rubber heels, providing these are handled from a central point. The discount to members of the organization is 25 per cent. and to the members alone. Supplies can be obtained through Chas. F. Robertson, president of the association, 497 Queen street west. He was unanimously selected as a fit and proper party to handle the goods.

It was generally thought that the Association had scored a strong point when a large firm like the Goodyear people undertake to place the members of the organization on the jobbers list, so far as prices are concerned. It is felt that a step has now been made in the direction of co-operative buying. It is reported that other manufacturers of rubber heels may also give special discounts to members of the Association who, however, do not enter into any agreement with the Goodyear Co. to buy any stated quantity, but will be entitled to the special terms on whatever they purchase. The Goodyear Rubber Co. were thanked for their proposition and steps to co-operate with the association. A long and interesting discussion took place in which it was shown that membership now carries with it so many distinct advantages that the growth of the organization is likely to be more rapid than ever.

In reference to the proposition of Geo. Edwards, 511A 4th Avenue S.E., Medicine Hat, who some weeks ago submitted samples of his process of welding soles on shoes, and asked the Toronto Shoe Repairers' Association to make him an offer for the art, it was decided to thank Mr. Edwards for his kindness in laying the matter before the association, and in welding the soles on the shoes which were sent, but that no action be taken regarding his proposition, in view of the fact that several local members have demonstrated their ability to attach soles without stitches or nails, and that this method is only useful on certain classes of shoes.

Mr. Burnill added that he had been familiar with such a process for forty years, and that no new discovery had been made by Mr. Edwards. Most men who were practical shoemakers had known of this method of attaching soles. "To speak of doing away with nailed work and the Goodyear stitchee is ridiculous," declared Mr. Burnill, who went on to say the process that Mr. Edwards followed was known in Toronto and he had not brought any new thing to the surface. This art of attaching soles was only suitable in certain classes of work, and not profitable to undertake on an extensive scale. Mr. Burnill thought that no shoemaker throughout the country should entertain any idea of taking up this plan which, he understood, had been offered by Mr. Edwards to several associations, and to various shoe repair men. The speaker had not yet learned of one who had seen fit to take it up.

Mr. Burnill offered to demonstrate the process that he himself had used for years, of fastening soles, to any one who

My Shoe Repair Service is Mighty Different

A mighty unusual thing, you say, for a shoe-repair man to advertise his service to you in this "big business" way. It is—very unusual—just as unusual as the shoe-repair service I offer.

Four years ago a big idea dawned on me. I saw a field of opportunity opening for the man who could give broad, new service in shoe-repairing. That idea grew into my present business.

To-day "Stephens, the shoe-repair man," is known by thousands of Toronto people. All over the city are folks who appreciate my service, who have found satisfaction in dealing with me.

In the last twelve months more than 20,000 parcels left my store—on time, as promised, workmanlike jobs that returned heaping value to my customers. That's surely a big output for one year! It is the mark of the satisfaction I give. It has reached this high mark after five years of honest endeavor and real good service, of such service as makes my store what it is—a shoe-repair works mighty different from the store you have been accustomed to. I want to see this output grow. I have the quick-service machinery to double my present trade. I had the same intention to win custom by deserving custom. I can give the same good service to everyone in Toronto. I want to serve you, too.

Shoe Prices Get Higher Every Week—Save Money by Having Shoes Repaired

Food prices are up—clothing costs more—shoe-bills are higher. City folk are trying to cut down the cost of living in many ways. Particularly, no one in affluence knows away a pair of shoes when the use of them is all good.

You can get me a really nice week of wear from a pair of shoes for a usual service and advice. I can put new life, new firmness, new comfort into your shoes. If ever you think of discarding a pair, ask my advice.

It costs far less than a new pair of shoes to have your old ones made new. It costs little in time and less in trouble to let me add to your appearance, give you greater foot-comfort.

Watch your children's shoes! A repair in time will keep them waterproof, save you doctors' bills, and reduce your yearly shoe-bill.

Remember—Stephens works quickly and well, delivers promptly as promised to any part of the city.

Think of the 20,000 parcels that left my store last year. Think of the savings that meant to the people of Toronto—by giving longer life to their shoes—over 15,000 of those orders were placed with me by telephone. No matter where you live in the city, I want you to use my telephone service. Simply call Hill 2207, and tell me what you require done.

I will send for your work at once, do it quickly and well, deliver it promptly as done.

Remember, you only need to phone

Hill. 2207

Out-of-town folks who send shoe repairs to me will find their work done to their complete satisfaction. My personal guarantee goes with every job that leaves my store. Parcel post paid one way.

called at his shop. He would not charge them one cent for instructions or information.

Several other members took part in the discussion, and it was unanimously agreed that while Mr. Edwards should be thanked for his trouble, his proposition should not be entertained.

HOW SHOE REPAIRERS SAVE LEATHER

The high heels put on women's boots and shoes makes work for the shoe repairers in many ways. If a poor

THE MODERN EQUIPMENT OF MEDICINE HAT REPAIR SHOP

Here are some views of the repair shop of George Edwards, 511A 4th avenue S.E., Medicine Hat, Alta., The scene on the left shows three boys wearing shoes soled without nails or stitches by Mr. Edwards. Next are Mr. Edwards and his wife. All the others in the group are also top-lift is put on a new one will have to take its place in a few days. The poor top is sure to make more work for the repairer, and it is claimed that some of these are so poor that when a woman buys a pair on Saturday night she is liable to bring them around to be fixed before the following Saturday. Probably this is stretching it a little, but such a thing could be possible.

But the high heels help the repairers in other ways. It often happens that a woman will buy a pair of shoes and when she wears them for a day or so she finds the heels too high. In that case they are taken off and lower heels put on, or the heels themselves are made lower so that the shoes can be worn in comfort.

High heels are cut down to a far greater extent than low heels are built up, but it often happens that women desire high heels instead of common-sense heels. In that case the shoe repairer is just as ready to make a change, and more so in fact. There is a great saving of leather to the repairer when both kinds are changed, as it works to the advantage of the man who does the job.

Here is a story of how the thing works, and it shows the great saving to the cobbler in changing heels. It shows how the latter can save money in a time when money is the main thing in all branches of the leather trade.

A customer came into a cobbler shop and brought along two pairs of women's shoes. One pair had high heels, while the other pair had low heels, and he wanted the latter made high, while the high heels were to be made low. The repairer simply changed the heels from one pair to the other, and charged 75 cents for the job. The customer did not know anything about how the work was done, and he probably would not care anyway so long as the change was made as he wanted it done.

The shoe repairer who can do work like this and who understands it, can save money. There is no expense in the matter of leather. All the repairer need do is save all his high heels and work them in when he gets a chance to do so.

This method is worth while and it is something we should all keep in mind these times.

SOME NEW THINGS IN HEELS

A new heel is being placed on the market in Canada, samples of which have been shown the shoe repairers of Toronto, Montreal and other cities. It is known as the interchangeable leather and rubber heel, of which organization O. Deschamps is the general manager. The middle piece of the "Airo" heel is rubber, and the tread piece is either rubber or leather. The two-in-one heel is attached to the heel proper of the boot. The middle rubber piece is attached by ordinary nails to the heel proper, but the tread piece, be it either rubber or leather, is secured to the middle by the "Airo" patent fastening. This has a simple locking bar which when shut securely fastens the removable tread piece and can be operated by a child. No skill is required to change heels from one boot to another so as to equalize the wear of those who heel down on the outside or inside. There is a gripping plate attached to the removable tread piece and as the lugs extend into the holes in the middle piece plate, and are caught inside by the locking bar, it can easily be seen how cheaply such a piece can be made, and at what a reasonable price it can be sold. Chas. P. Maher is the patentee of the new heel, which has been well received.

KNOW EVERY EVOLUTION OF THE TRADE

Editor, SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL. Sir:—Some recent reports of meetings of the Toronto Shoe Repairers' Association, might be apt to convey the impression, amongst the trade, that the membership of our organization was composed of a few simple minded cobblers, instead of being as they are an intelligent body of practical business men, including not only almost every progressive repair man in the City of Toronto, and many who have conducted leading businesses in the United States and the Old Country, but also quite a number of skilled craftsmen of mature years, who learned their trade on the seat in the good old fashioned way, by serving an apprenticeship, and learning to "cut," "close" and "bottom" throughout, anything from a child's ankle strap to a man's jockey boot.

These men, of course, are familiar with every phase of the evolution of the repair trade, from the time when a man was satisfied to do about four pairs of half soles and heels for a day's work, to the present, when incredibly larger numbers of repairs are turned out daily by the aid of modern equipment and business methods, and what some of them don't know about boot repairing does not seem to be worth knowing.

They have recently been investigating the claims of Mr. George Edwards, of the "new way" shoe store, Medicine Hat, Alberta, to a new (?) method of affixing soles and heels, which he terms welding; an utterly absurd term as applied to a substance like leather. Whatever of truth, there may be contained in the old adage that "there's nothing new under the sun," it is certain that Mr. Edwards "New Way," is not a new way to the members of the Toronto Association, many of them having known and practised it, as many as thirty years ago. In their opinion, whatever merits, or advantages it may possess for certain kinds of light work, it is not at all likely to revolutionize the trade or supersede modern methods of repairing. At all events, the Association are not recommending the members of the trade to throw out their Goodyear stitchers, as Mr. Edwards advises them—or to invest their money in learning the new process of "welding" on soles.

Yours faithfully,
 S. BURNETT,
 Recording Secretary,
 Toronto Shoe Repairers' Association.

HOW THIS JOB SHOWS ACTUAL LOSS

Editor, SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL. Sir,—I am sending you the actual results of repairs done on a boy's No. 3 Blucher boot. The charge made for these repairs was $1.25, which is considered, in this town, a good, stiff charge. To give you an idea of the condition in which the boots were when brought in for repairs, I may say—both back straps required re-sewing—one of them being ripped away from the back quarter, had to be put back, and sewed across the back of the heels; one of the slip soles was so worn that it was necessary to put in a new one; the button fly on one of the boots had to be repaired, as three of the button holes were broken away; two new buttons were put on, and there was considerable repair work required on both boots, such as evening up the edges of both soles and heels; putting the foundation of the boot in proper shape to half sole.

The following was the estimate as made for the work:

Repairing the two backs—5 cents each.....	$0.10
One new leather for slip sole.....	.10
Repairing button fly and fixing holes.....	.25
Two new buttons, with fasteners.....	.01
Repair work, 10 cents per boot.....	.20
4½ ounce sole stock at 6 cents per ounce27
1½ ounce for heel pieces, 6 cents per ounce....	.09
Wages for half soling and heel work.....	.25

The following items of expense were not taken into account: Electric power, blacking-wax, sandpaper, buffing cloths, oils for machines, thread, nails, tacks, glue, use of nailing machines, buffing machine, jack or patching machine, leather required for wedging and filling, rent, light, heat, or unforeseen or unprovided expenses.

I claim that the proper charge for this work should be as follows: (otherwise the repairer is working for wages only, and is using his wages to pay his expenses).

Estimate.....	$1.27
50 per cent. to cover interest, overhead and loss.....	.63½
	$1.90½

Yours truly,
 E. H. GULLIDGE.

"JUMBO" IS THE LATEST FOR REPAIR MAN

Any movement that reduces cost, without any sacrifice of quality, service or satisfaction, is one that should be warmly encouraged by the shoe repair trade of Canada. Such a movement has been inaugurated by the Breithaupt Leather Co., Limited, of Kitchener, Ont., who have taken a step forward in the interests of thrift and economy, convenience and adaptability, by placing upon the market a full line of "Junbo" in their popular Kitchener Union Oak and Penetang hemlock tannages.

The question naturally arises in the mind of the shoe repairer—"What is a 'Junbo?'" It is a cut of sole leather, capable of producing two pairs of large size taps, and additional pieces for patches, according as it may be used.

"Jumbos" are done up in bundles of six and produce one dozen pairs of tap soles and additional patch pieces at less expense than one dozen tap soles of the same selection. Herein is where the economy, both in material and price comes in. This advance move on the part of the Breithaupt Leather Co. is one that is sure to be appreciated.

"Jumbos" will be sold through the leading jobbers of Canada, and the trade is asked to place a trial order for them, so that they may realize the advantages and benefits of this new method of marketing sole stock. That there may be no confusion or delay, the firm have adopted the same numbers and selections for "Jumbos" as are now in use in their regular tap sole lists. "Jumbos" are handy, ready and reliable,—just what the ordinary shoe repair man needs,—for the pieces that are left over can be used for many purposes, all of which means more profit to the repairer.

The same quality and service which have always characterized the Breithaupt Leather Co.'s operations, will govern this new and progressive feature of the firm. "Jumbos" will come in Kitchener union oak, which is a mellow, light colored leather, specially tanned for use in sewed work and rapid repair machines, and in Penetang, which is splendidly adapted for all classes of work, and is as popular with the trade as ever.

CHARTER GRANTED TO NEW COMPANY

A federal charter has been granted to the Lynn Rubber Manufacturing Co., Limited, of Montreal. The capital stock is $10,000 and the company is empowered to manufacture, sell, buy or deal in any manner in all kinds of rubber goods, wares and merchandise, either manufactured or otherwise, and to carry on a general manufacturing, wholesale and retail business.

HOW THE CANADIANS CARRIED ALL BEFORE THEM

Lieut. Cronk, of Toronto, says Hundreds of Guns Played on the German Front, and Many Germans Cried for Mercy—They Were Half Insane with the Bombardment and Paralyzed with Fear—The Canadian Infantryman is Hard to Beat

LIEUT. FRANK S. CRONK, who is a member of the 20th Battalion and a son of S. C. Cronk, wholesale shoe merchant, 60 Front street west, Toronto, is having some exacting experiences at the front. In a recent letter to his father he gives a graphic and thrilling pen picture of the recent "big drive" which will be read with interest by the many friends of the writer, who up to the time of his enlisting about two years ago, was engaged in the shoe trade.

Lieut. Cronk says in part:—

By this time I suppose you will know all about the "big drive" we were in. Our battalion moved into the front line on Sunday night. We had an awful march of eight miles, through mud that was up to our knees in some places. All we carried was our fighting equipment, no blankets, just rations and spare socks. As you know, the drive was on Monday. On Sunday at 6 p.m. we got our final orders and about 2.30 in the morning started to get into position in the trenches. We had been in for six days then, in water and mud that was never less than six inches deep and sometimes over our knees. We had not shaved since we left billets and were plastered with mud and soaked to the skin. We stood in water up to our knees until 5.30, when the "kick-off" was timed to start. About 5 o'clock we got our ration of rum (and if I ever hear any churchman talk about not giving soldiers rum, there is going to be a big argument), and it gave us the warmth and pep we needed. Our artillery were to open up at 5.30, so at 5.20 I gave the word to my platoon and we crawled up on the parapet and crouched down behind it.

One Sheet of Awful Flame

It was just breaking dawn and there wasn't a sound and there were hundreds of men doing what we were. We were not excited or nervous but anxious to start. I looked at my watch and it was 5.28. I turned to my corporal and said, "two minutes more, corporal." My watch must have been out, because just as I spoke our artillery opened. It was awful. The Somme was nothing compared to it. Hundreds of guns were playing on the German front line and all you could see was one sheet of flame running straight up in the air. I yelled "come on" to my platoon and was surprised not to hear my own voice. We jumped over the top and across No Man's Land. By the time we got to the front line, our artillery were playing on the second line and when we got to the second line they lifted to his third. It was just like a dream of the Toronto Exhibition fireworks, only a thousand times worse. There were a few Heines in his front line—pale, wild-eyed and trembling with fear. They did not wait for us but rushed to meet us crying "kamerad," and some even going down on their knees. They were half-insane with the bombardment. Those further back stuck and worked their machine guns and rifles. I kept on going in a sort of dream. The lieutenant with me suddenly flopped on his face and men were dropping all around. You don't realize the danger but just the excitement. I have a little Dago kid with me called Tony. He is one of the best scouts in the battalion and when we got up to the third line we saw a German snipe a man through the head. He thought we did not see him and called "mercy kamerad." Tony was awful mad, as the man killed was his chum. "I give you mercy all right," he said, and rammed his bayonet through him.

I could not tell you one-half of what happened if I wrote for weeks. Two things were the wounded and Red Cross men. The men bore their wounds wonderfully. It started to snow when we went across and the wounded just crawled into shell holes and waited for attention. The Red Cross men were absolutely fearless and bound up the hurt while shells were bursting all around.

Driving Heines from the Dug-outs

We finally got to our objective and had quite a fight there. Our fellows killed a machine gun crew that stuck to their guns, and then started to get the Heines out of their dug-outs. Some came quietly and others put up a fight and had to be bombed out. It was raining then and we were and are the toughest looking lot that ever wore shoes. I have a fine automatic revolver that I got from a German prisoner and also a sword bayonet.

We started to dig in and consolidate our position and check up casualties. I found I was the only officer left of B company. Six B company officers went over—one was killed and four wounded. I am certainly very lucky to be here now.

We are now in a German dug-out and have been told that we go over again tomorrow. From Sunday night until Tuesday I did not get anything to eat except two pieces of bread and some jam. The men are soaked to the skin, as there is about four inches of snow on the ground. We got into here last night, moving up from the old position and were cold and wet and hungry. I never knew people could stand so much cold, wet and lack of sleep and then carry on.

I have not had a wash or shave and I am filthy with dirt. The men are worse off than I am and yet they keep cheerful. I certainly take off my hat to the Canadian infantry man. He is pretty hard to beat.

The Germans had evidently been told, as usual, that we murdered our prisoners, as they were frightened to death. One battalion was composed of old men of about 45 to 55 years of age. We got one old man about 50 and all he did was to hang his head and tremble. We asked him through an interpreter if he was wounded and he said, no. I was not satisfied, so a Red Cross man examined him and he had a bayonet wound in his back. We fixed him up and sent him back. You would see one Tommy with about 30 Germans ambling back to the big wire cage, where we keep them.

Well, I hear we are going across tomorrow and drive Heine some more. I have been very lucky and here's hoping it will continue. After we go across again, we go out for a long rest, so by the time you get this I will be O.K. If I get wounded do not worry, as I will be all right and well looked after.

My platoon have a German maxim gun we captured and when we march back to billets, it's going to head the lot.

Never So Tired in His Life

We are now back in billets and completely exhausted. I was never so tired in my life as I am now, but two or three days will fix me up. Our company casualties were rather heavy, being the worst of the battalion.

Have just received your parcel. Do not send any sugar, as we get all we want. The troops get more than the people in England.

Since Monday we have been all over the place; sometimes sleeping in the open and if we are lucky in an old German dug-out. If the weather would only be dry and warm, we would have the Heines out of France very soon.

I am sending some things taken from a German prisoner.

HISTORIC SHOE HOUSE IN NEW GARB

"The Home of Better Shoes" Has Been Extended and Completely Remodeled—How Establishment is Laid Out and the Improvements That Have Been Effected—Good Taste and Judgment Shown in the Decorations and Fixtures—Way Big Business Has Been Built

FOR thirty-seven years Dillon & Moore have been one of the most solid progressive shoe firms in Ontario. Their place of business is at 87 St. Paul street, St Catharines, Ont., and the slogan of the store is "The Home of Better Shoes."

Recently a new brick addition was built by Dillon & Moore, and the enlarged home of the firm is one of the brightest, handsomest and best equipped to be found in any Canadian city.

The store is centrally located right in the heart of the business district. With the new extension, the premises have a depth of one hundred and twenty feet, and a frontage of about thirty feet. It is the intention of the house to install in the future a thoroughly modern front. The firm held the formal opening of its inviting and pleasing quarters, recently, and the event was a decided success. With the added space and improved fittings and facilities the house is in a better position than ever to cater to a constantly growing clientele. Always to the forefront in the matter of styles, stock, service and values this old established St. Paul street shoe shop has maintained throughout its history a policy of rigid honesty, dependable dealing and fair, courteous treatment. The exclusive agency of leading Canadian and American firms is controlled and whatever is smart and fashionable in the footwear arena, is always found on the shelves and displayed in the shoe cases and windows. Dillon & Moore are liberal users of printer's ink. By newspaper announcements and artistic booklets, the establishment has kept its lines well to the forefront and made its name a household word throughout the Niagara Peninsula.

Single Shelf System Prevails

In the alterations which have just been effected, good taste and judgment has been shown and the effect on entering is decidedly favorable. The ceiling is a metal cove design set in squares, with centre panels for electrical fixtures. To assist the lighting, the color of the metal finish is cream. The fixtures, which are entirely new, have been made from double to single shelving, running ten feet high, with an ornamental cornice one foot from the ceiling.

The store is finished in natural oak, the fitting chairs being solid golden oak (manufactured by Burton & Baldwin Manufacturing Co., Hamilton, Ont.) These are placed in groups of three, with two chair spaces between each trio. One side of the store is devoted to the ladies', misses' and children's stock, while the men's, boys', youths', etc., are on the other side.

As will be noted from the accompanying cut, a spacious five foot aisle separates the ladies' and gentlemen's seats, extending from the entrance to the office. A raised cashier's office is at the extreme rear, the basement approach being under this raise. Rubber-rolled, non-track ladders, which flatten against the wall, when not used, have been installed, as well as a "Gipe" carrier system, which places the store on as well-equipped basis as any retail store in the province.

Excellent System of Illumination

The lighting system is remarkably efficient, seven large dome globes of 500 watts each, being hung, while natural light is furnished by a six by ten sky-light, in the centre of the new addition. An attractive store front is in prospect, which, when added, will make the establishment, which is St. Catharine's oldest store, one of the handsomest and finest equipped to be found anywhere.

JOY AND GLOOM BEFORE THE CAMERA

Here is a picture of Harvey E. Graham and his juvenile son, Master Fred. R. Graham, the latter in baseball attire, and just delivering the spheroid to the batter. The snapshot is as bright and clever a piece of work as has been captured by a kodak in a long time. To the right is his father, Harvey E. Graham, of Ottawa, who represents the Hartt Boot & Shoe Co. in Eastern Ontario. Just what this usually genial and jubilant traveler was thinking of when sitting before the camera, it is hard to imagine, for the gloom that has come over his countenance and the grouch that has developed on his features would lead one to the conclusion that he had lost all his relatives, or had just been arrested for murder. His friends have called this photo "Graham's Great Grouch," and judging by the stern, relentless expression, the title is not a misnomer. The picture is only presented as a means of contrast to show Graham Senior and Graham Junior in different moods, and under different surroundings—the son in the heyday of delight in his baseball togs, and the father in the unfathomable depths of despair.

BRITISH ARMY SHOES FOR CIVILIAN WEAR

"It is not generally understood that present conditions have made it possible for a large number of working people to obtain good shoes at low cost second hand," says the Leicester, Eng., correspondent of the Shoe and Leather Reporter. Army shoes with new taps and top lifts can be bought for $1.30 a pair, and are quite sound and capable of giving a long period of service. As nothing but the best of leather has been used in their construction originally they will stand new taps four or five times before the insoles or vamps begin to break up, and the wearer could not hope to get the same value in footwear bought new from a store. Worn army shoes are not always repaired and re-issued to the fighting men. An accumulation of footwear is often separated into four grades and sold on the "auction" system to the highest bidder. He then sells them by advertising in the shoe trade papers, and the prices are graded according to the condition of the shoes. The best grade is that where the only repairs needed are half-soles and top lifts (or horseshoe heel plates if required) and these repairs are usually done before the shoes are sold by the original purchaser. The lowest-priced shoes are those with all of the bottom stock worn and broken away, and these are sold for clog-making purposes, a wooden sole being put on the upper.

A new industry has developed through this method of utilizing discarded army shoes, and with the scarcity of footwear now making itself felt it is certain that thousands of working men eagerly grasp the chance of obtaining reliable all-leather shoes at a minimum cost. The man who does hard work neither expects nor gets style in his shoes, and for this reason the army shoe is eminently suitable for him.

PUSH AND PERSEVERANCE WIN

(See Front Cover)

C. S. Corson, general manager of the Regal Shoe Co., Limited, Toronto, has won his way from messenger boy to the direction of a large shoe factory, by aggressiveness, determination and perseverance. Nine years ago, he obtained the agency of the Regal Shoe in Canada. The sales then reached only a few thousand dollars, but when they attained a certain sum, Mr. Corson had secured a promise from the company, that they would operate a factory in the Dominion. The amount named was reached long before the Regal people expected it, and Mr. Corson, with the tenacity of purpose, which has been characteristic of his whole career, stuck to his proposition. The result was that the Regal was the first American shoemaking concern to establish a plant in Canada. The wisdom of this course has been shown by the fact, that, whereas, six years ago, Mr. Corson sold the entire output of the company in the Dominion, there are to-day, five travelers covering all portions of Canada, and Regal Shoes are seen, and worn in every city, town and hamlet of the country.

In the new factory on Bathurst street, over two hundred employees are engaged, and the output is seven hundred pairs a day. The subject of this reference, who is a Toronto boy, began his career as a messenger—with Garside & White, staying with them for four years. When the South African War broke out, he was one of the first to enlist, serving as a private in the Second C.M.R., under Colonel T. B. D. Evans. He was one of the twenty-one men who made a stand with Captain Bruce Carruthers, of Kingston, at Hart's River, on March 31st, 1902, in which engagement he was wounded four times. On his return to Canada, he was with the J. D. King Co. for five years, and then secured the Regal Agency for the Dominion. Mr. Corson is a young man who has made good in the shoe game, and is widely known in the trade, particularly in Ontario and the Western provinces. Fond of bowling and motoring—he has a summer home at Rosebank, where he spends June, July and August week ends, which is about the only holiday he ever takes.

A Time For Business Aggressiveness

Retailers Should Do Some Real Boosting—People Need Encouragement to Buy—Reason Them Into Optimism—Co-operate with Your Local Paper

THESE are days when sensible, cheerful optimism should be encouraged. People have become a little timid about buying. What with prices for necessities and the general urging of economy and thrift, the retailer and through him the manufacturer, is likely to suffer. People have been buttoning up their pockets for some time and will continue to do so unless they are made to feel that this is a mistaken and hurtful policy.

The Watchword of the Day

Just now "Business as Usual" should be the watchword. If through fear of stringency or growing costs of articles of daily need everybody curtails his regular purchases there is bound to come a pinch which will react upon those who are thus seeking to avoid it. There is really no reason for the alarm that has been created by the rising markets in foodstuffs. If governments will do their part to stop speculation and if the people will do theirs in maintaining regularity in purchasing there will be no trouble providing amply for the needs of all people in all lines. Reasonable economy and saving in foodstuffs particularly will mean lessened prices, and at the same time provide a surplus to supply the usual war needs. There is enough food and clothing wasted annually in most families to take care of a large army. A slice of bread a day in the garbage pail or overeaten would help to feed many. This is a time when the people need information and above all should be encouraged to live soberly and sensibly, without being frightened into extravagances of saving as well as spending. They need beds and shoes as well as bread and butter, and when they are driven to torture their bodies or go about imperfectly clad through fear that their stomachs may be empty, it is going to mean not only suffering to themselves but misfortune to others.

Retailers have to-day an opportunity to educate the public in sane buying. They can do this best by co-operation with their local paper, which in turn must just now feel the stress of unnecessary economy as much as the producer and handler of merchandise. It is a time for advertising of a character that will restore confidence and co-operation on the part of the public. Devote sufficient space in your local paper to hammer away at the idea that by everybody keeping up the ordinary reasonable pace in buying the country will continue to enjoy a prosperity that will mean plenty of everything for everybody.

Good Means to Promote Trade

This journal has through its columns from time to time advocated this co-operation with the local paper as the best means of promoting the general trade of the country and has consistently urged dealers to do their part along this line toward increasing the consumption of native products. Too many retailers are content to sit down and take what Providence sends them in the way of trade. The manufacturer or jobber who did this would soon be without a business. At this time it is particularly necessary to tell people what to buy.

This policy of using the local paper is also the best means of counteracting the competition of departmental and mail order houses who are able through their huge announcements in the city papers to create the trade to which they are justly entitled. If local merchants did more advertising and less whining about departmental stores there would be less to whine about. This journal, as well as other trade journals, has always sought to encourage active co-operation between the local merchant and his paper, both by preparing special advertising matter for local use and reproducing specimens of the best work along this line by live retail merchants throughout the country. The brightest and most successful men in the business to-day are those who have built up their trade through local advertising.

Use Good, Sound Arguments

It is a time to get together. Let the local paper implement the advertising of its patrons by sound, convincing arguments upon the hopefulness of the business outlook and above all encourage the idea that every article bought at home means a brick in the building up, not only of local prosperity, but of national development. It is a time for boosting.

DEATH OF MR. S. W. WINSLOW

Sidney W. Winslow, President of the United Shoe Machinery Co., passed away on June 18th, at his summer home in Beverly, Mass., at the age of sixty-two years. His death was caused by heart disease and he had been ill about a week.

Born in Brewster, Mass., on Cape Cod, in 1854, the deceased was a descendant on both sides of his family from the early settlers of Massachusetts. One of his ancestors came from England on the Mayflower in 1620.

When he was a boy his family moved to Salem, where he attended grammar and high school and afterwards entered his father's shoe shop, where he learned thoroughly the manufacturing business.

One of his early very profitable ventures was the Beverly Gas Co. Later he turned his attention to the shoe machinery business, first with the Naumkeag Buffing Machine, then with the Consolidated and McKay Hand

THE LATE S. W. WINSLOW, PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED SHOE MACHINERY CO.

Method Lasting Machine Co. He was one of the powerful influences in the forming of the United Shoe Machinery Co. in 1899, and was elected president soon after the incorporation. This office he held until his death. In addition, he was connected with many manufacturing companies, banks, mines, and railroads. He took an active interest in newspaper publishing, politics, and his entire efforts extended over an unusually broad field.

As an example of personal power he stands out probably without an equal who has ever been connected with the shoe and leather industries. His work as a liberal and humane employer of labor deserves special mention.

Some years ago it was Mr. Winslow's purpose to retire from the conduct of the company. He had other interests. He believed his shoe machinery work well done and resting on a secure foundation. But just as he was about ready to do this, the attitude of the administration in Washington, challenging the system by which the company disposed of its machines, and in particular the so-called "tying clause," kept Mr. Winslow in the harness. He was not a man to leave his army in the face of hostile shots, and so he took up the battle for the defence of the combination. In fact, he came back from the south this spring only in season to attend the hearing before the supreme court of the appeal from the decision favorable to the company, which had been made by the three United States judges who sat on the case.

Throughout his life he avoided publicity, preferring to devote his time and energies to his business and home affairs.

BOUGHT ARMY BOOTS LOW

A recent despatch from London, Eng., says: "A defendant, charged with having Canadian army boots in unlawful possession, said he bought them in large quantities from government auctioneers and paid as little as sevenpence a pair, and sometimes as much as two shillings."

Chairman—"No wonder the country's expenditure rises." While dismissing the case he urged the government to enquire into statements regarding price.

Officials of the Militia Department at Ottawa said that the boots in question must have been condemned, in which case the practice is to sell them at so much a pound for the leather in them. The same principle applies in disposing of condemned army boots in Canada.

SECURES EXCLUSIVE LEATHER AGENCY

A few days ago, Mr. Fred. N. Moore, president and treasurer of the Benjamin N. Moore & Son, of Boston, and Mr. D. W. Poor, vice-president, motored to Montreal, and completed arrangements with Mr. Harry E. Thompson and Mr. George E. Parker for the exclusive sale for Canada for Benjamin N. Moore & Son's leather.

Mr. Thompson and Mr. Parker intend carrying a complete range of samples of all the different kinds of leathers manufactured by Messrs. Benjamin N. Moore & Son, at their offices, 36 St. Genevieve street, Montreal. They will be pleased to have any manufacturers call at any time to look over the samples of leather.

CLAIM THAT WILSON WAS JAILED FOR SPITE

A despatch to the London Free Press from Ottawa states that while Paul Guay, alias William E. Wilson, sentenced in March, 1916, to two years for bigamy, has not as yet been released, there is a strong likelihood that he will be.

The grounds on which action is requested by those who have moved in his behalf are that a large part of his sentence has already been served, and that his prosecution was instigated by fellow workmen "for spite," and again that his former employees speak well of him.

His prosecution, as the story was revealed at the time, came about through a visit to Boston of Edward S. Hunt, with whom Wilson, as he was then known, was associated in business in the C. N. W. Shoe Co. in East London. Hunt claimed that Wilson had not been honorable in all his dealings, and counter allegations were made against members of the firm by Wilson.

However, Mr. Hunt explained that when in Boston, conversation came up in a shoe factory about Wilson. A trade magazine was produced showing Wilson's picture and was at once recognized as the picture of Paul E. Guay, who some years before had deserted his wife and child in Lynn, Mass. Mr. Hunt proceeded to Lynn, where he saw Mrs. Guay, who meanwhile had made her home with her mother. When she heard the story and saw the picture she took the first train for London and laid the charge of bigamy against Wilson. The latter had, after leaving Lynn, lived in Montreal and Galt, Ont., where he was employed by the Getty & Scott Co. There he married Miss Aitken, a Galt lady, who believed him to be William Wilson, whose parents had been killed in a St. Louis cyclone when he was a child.

She still believed in him even after he registered a plea of guilty and received his sentence, and some months later circulated a petition for his pardon. It is on this petition that action is now being taken by the clemency branch at Ottawa.

WESTERN SHOEMAN IN GERMAN PRISON

Lieut. Arthur Carr Lumsden, of the 72nd Battalion, Seaforth Highlanders, of Vancouver, who is the eldest son of F. J. Lumsden, of Damer, Lumsden & Co., wholesale shoes, Vancouver, was reported on March 1st as wounded and missing. He was located in a prisoner of war camp on May 1st, the interval being spent in a German hospital. No particulars of his wounds have yet been received. When the war broke out, Lieut. Lumsden enlisted with the British Columbia Horse and trained with them some months. At the time the 72nd Battalion was formed, he secured a commission and left for overseas in April, 1916. The battalion reached France in August of that year, and saw service on several fronts, spending last winter on the Somme. The corps was engaged in the early action at Vimy Ridge.

Lieut. Lumsden was born in Toronto about twenty-five years ago, and has lived in Vancouver for nearly twenty years. Previous to going overseas, he represented the Williams Shoe Co., of Brampton, in British Columbia, and was well and favorably known to the trade.

JUDGMENT GIVEN IN SUIT OVER NAME

The following is a memorandum of the judgment delivered by the Supreme Court of New Brunswick on June 22nd, 1917, in the case of John Palmer Co., Limited vs. Palmer-McLellan Shoepack Co., Limited.

Briefly the facts are as follows: The plaintiff, John Palmer Co., Limited, was incorporated in 1901 and took over the business which had been carried on for many years prior to 1901 by the late John Palmer. The business consisted of the manufacture of oil tanned "shoepacks," moccasins and shoes, and the goods manufactured by the John Palmer Co., Limited, were claimed to have a special excellence and were known to the trade as "Palmer's Shoepacks," and were generally sold and purchased as such.

The defendant company was incorporated in 1912 under the name Palmer-McLellan Shoepack Co., Limited, for the purpose of carrying on the same class of business. The new company erected a factory at Fredericton, N.B., where the John Palmer Company's factory was and is located, and commenced business.

The plaintiff company complained that by reason of the use by the defendant company of the name "Palmer" upon trade marks, in its corporate name, and by calling its goods "Palmer's," confusion had arisen and mistakes had been made, etc.

The action was tried before Chief Justice (now Sir Ezekiel) McLeod, of the Chancery Division of the Supreme Court in July, 1916, and judgment was given in the following October in favor of the John Palmer Co., Limited, restrain-ing the defendant company from using the name "Palmer" as a trade mark or part of a trade mark and from in any way representing the defendant's goods to be "Palmer's" or "Palmer's" manufacture.

The defendant company appealed from this decision to the Appeal Division of the Supreme Court and judgment was given on June 22nd, 1917, sustaining the judgment of Sir Ezekiel McLeod, but varying the phraseology of his decree so as to make clear that the use of the defendant's corporate name was not enjoined.

The effect of the judgment is that the defendant company is not allowed to use the name "Palmer" as a trade-mark or part of a trade-mark, or for the purpose of representing the goods manufactured by it as "Palmer's" goods, nor is it allowed to advertise or sell its goods as "Palmer's" or "Palmer's" make of goods.

NEW FACTORY FOR STAR SHOE CO.

Plans are now being drawn up for considerable building in and about Montreal, for which building permits have not yet been taken out. Among these is a concrete four storey factory, 175 x 50 feet, to be built for the Star Shoe Company at the corner of Girard and Aird streets, Maisonneuve, at a cost of $100,000. The Star Shoe Company, of which J. I. Chouinard holds the controlling interest, has purchased at the corner of these two streets a plot with an area of 55,000 square feet. He holds the controlling interest in the Regina Shoe Co. of Notre Dame street east also, and plans to move that company out to Maisonneuve within the next two years and build another factory to cost $150,000. The excavation work will start on the first plant for the Star Shoe Co. in July, and it is expected the factory will be in operation by October or November. It will give employment to nearly 400 hands.

BIG SHOE CONCERN HAD GOOD YEAR

The net profits of Ames-Holden-McCreedy, Limited, Montreal, for the year ended April 30th were $720,242, an increase over the previous year of $398,450. From the net profits have been deducted $61,245 for interest on bonds, $22,500 for interest on debentures, $118,885 interest to banks, $57,758 for bad debts and reserve, $237,549 for depreciation and balance of organization expenses, and $25,000 for contingencies, leaving a net profit for the year of $197,303., equal to about 8 per cent. on the preferred stock.

The balance of $9,038 brought forward from last year, added to the above, makes a total of $206,342, at the credit of profit and loss account.

The total sales for the year were $5,880,840, an increase of 14 per cent. over the previous year, of which $1,094,111 was army business. The domestic business of the company showed an increase of $978,465, or 30 per cent. over the previous year. Net current assets at $3,319,246 show an increase over the previous year of $1,192,182; bank loans show a decrease of $778,500, being reduced from $2,046,000 to $1,267,500. The total current assets are $3,319,246, against $3,394,042 last year, but the total current liabilities are down from $2,843,288 to $1,576,310.

WHOLESALE FIRM BUYS BUILDING

The Crookshank Block, one of the leading buildings in the wholesale district of London, Ont., has been sold to the London Shoe Co. The block comprises three large structures at the corner of Dundas and York streets, adjoining the G.T.R. station property. One of the warehouses is occupied by the London Shoe Co. The sale was directed by order of the court, being conducted by public auction, and the price paid was $65,000.

Rubber Footwear Notes

A Great Season for Rubber Goods—Spring Weather Prevails in Summer—A Great Demand for Outing Shoes Just the Same—Manufacturers Busy, Rubber Market Quiet

JUST now manufacturers are completing their summer goods production, and getting ready to switch their operations to the manufacture of regular lines. We mean, of course, winter goods for in the past two or three years sporting and outing shoes have become as much staple lines as those which for so many years have been understood as rubbers. This year the season has been unusually active for this class of goods, and it looks as though they would seriously encroach upon the older lines. Notwithstanding the war it seems impossible to keep up with the demand for tennis, yachting, golfing and other lines. Of course, the high prices prevailing for leather goods may account to some extent for the rapid growth of this branch of the trade, but it is not the real basis for the popularity of this class of goods. The natty styles and the skill in their production have had much to do with creating a taste and therefore demand for light footwear, and added to this has undoubtedly been the immense trend of popular, and particularly feminine taste toward fancy footwear of any kind. Sufficient to say that this season's record far exceeds and excels that of any of its predecessors in this line.

Trade in Regular Lines.—The season so far indicates a volume of business even in excess of that of last year, which was noted as the largest in the history of the trade. This year there has been no difficulty in getting retailers to place their orders, which have all been in hand in good time. There has been some holding back, however, and now, dealers who have not had their full requirements placed, are beginning to be a little anxious in regard to getting what they want in the way of rubber footwear. Manufacturers claim that they have now about all that they can handle for the coming season, and are not seeking to add, to any extent, to their production. From what we can gather from most of the mills, it will keep them busy completing the requirements of their customers from now until well on into the season. The reliability of all the Canadian makes to-day is responsible for the removal of a good deal of the uncertainty which was formerly associated with placing orders in this line. Thoroughly up-to-date in style, manufacture, finish and fit, the product of our Canadian rubber shoe factories can be placed side by side with any in the world.

Leather Substitutes.—With the continued high price of leather, there has been an increased demand for products of the rubber mill, in the way of soles, heels, etc. As these products have been perfected, and have become better known, the demand for their use has increased from natural causes. The suitability of compositions, with rubber in them, for shoe bottoms, can easily be understood. Resiliency is one of the desirable requirements of shoe soling, and where this can be combined with durability, there is no difficulty in convincing the majority of people of the advantage of so-called substitutes in uses of this kind. Most of the factories producing this class of goods, find it impossible to keep up with the demand. There have been some set back in connection with cracking and cutting, but there are now on the market, lines that vie with the best sole leather, in standing the hardest usage to which they can be put in ordinary footwear.

The Raw Rubber Market.—In spite of the largely increased use of rubber, in various ways, as, for instance, in shoes, as well as automobile tires and other mechanical purposes, the price of raw rubber continues comparatively low. The present quotation for pale crepe latex is 78 cents, with fine Para quoted at 74 cents, and this, in spite of the prospect of a 10 per cent. duty by the United States, upon raw rubber. A deputation of manufacturers waited upon the authorities at Washington, and endeavored to impress them with the idea that more revenue would be secured by imposing a 5 per cent. duty on manufactured rubber goods, than by putting the 10 per cent. on the raw material. The proposition has been seriously considered by the Senate Committee, and some seemed to think that this alternative will be followed.

The notable feature of the situation is the fact that in spite of the moderate tone of the raw rubber market, scrap rubber keeps up to a remarkably strong point.

AMHERST BOOT & SHOE CO'S GOLDEN JUBLIEE

Historic Footwear Manufacturing Firm Began in Small Way in 1867—Has Kept Pace With Times and Built up Large Trade in the East and West—Its Officers have Grown up with the Institution which Stands for Stability, Progress and Expansion

THIS is the Golden Jubilee year of the Amherst Boot & Shoe Co., Amherst, N.S., and the inception of the company is recalled by its interesting and closely linked-up association with Confederation. Just fifty years ago next month the scattered provinces of Canada were welded together into a Dominion, which has since grown and expanded to a degree never dreamed of by the fathers of Confederation, all of whom have joined the great, silent majority.

It was about the same time the Amherst Boot & Shoe Co. started manufacturing footwear, in a very small way, and thus the career of this progressive firm has been closely identified with the history of the commonwealth of Canada. In a notice recently sent to customers, the Amherst Boot & Shoe Co. suggested that it would be particularly gratifying if this year would also be made a banner year for the concern. Like the record of Canada, the career of the Amherst Boot & Shoe Co. has been one of prosperity and progress.

This old and historic firm is one whose affairs have been conservatively managed and ably administered, keeping pace with the trend of the times. Its success has been well deserved, and to-day the Amherst Boot & Shoe Co. stands out as a solid, substantial business institution, in every way a credit to the Maritime Provinces. The plant and equipment are thoroughly modern, and from the outset the company set themselves to perfect the heavier grades of solid leather shoes. The organization has won its prestige and pre-eminence by following closely this policy.

Turn Out Wide Range

The company won the gold medal at the Dominion Exhibition, eleven years ago, for this class of footwear. Shoes are made for the farmer, the harvester, the prospector, the miner, the engineer, the mechanic, as well as every day working shoes for women, misses and children, boys and youths. The range turned out is suitable for all members of the family in every kind of weather and at every season of the year, and the company have branches in Halifax, Charlottetown and Regina, doing a large business in every portion of the Dominion. In the branches large stocks are carried and the service furnished patrons is prompt and efficient. The factory, plant and warehouse of the company occupy a square 210 by 220 feet on Station street in Amherst. The volume of business exceeds the million dollar mark, which is certainly a tribute not only to the merit and excellence of the various lines produced—some four hundred in all—but also to the facilities, development and consistent, thorough-going administration of the company.

The officers of the Amherst Boot & Shoe Co. have all been with the organization for many years, and in its remarkable record of success and achievement they deserve no small credit on this, the Jubilee year of the organization.

Percy C. Black is president of the company, T. N. Campbell, vice-president and secretary-treasurer; C. S. Sutherland, general manager, and J. E. Pipes, superintendent.

A Veteran in the Service

Mr. Campbell has been thirty-seven years secretary-treasurer of the company, which is certainly a remarkable record of service and faithfulness. He has presented the financial statement to the shareholders for thirty-seven consecutive years; is a native of Colchester County, Nova Scotia, where he was born in 1854. Mr. Campbell has found it congenial in being associated for the period of nearly two score years with an organization whose advancement has been so steady and satisfactory.

C. S. Sutherland, general manager, has been connected with the firm for twenty-eight years, entering the service as bookkeeper in 1889. Previous to that he had been employed as a telegraph operator for five years on the Halifax-St. John division of the Intercolonial Railway. Mr. Sutherland has worked in various departments, office, salesroom and factory, and for several years sold the lines throughout the Maritime Provinces and Newfoundland. He has a practical acquaintance with all branches, and the thoroughness of his methods and the earnestness of his work were such as to commend him favorably to the directors, so that when the late Mr. Pride retired from business in 1907, Mr. Sutherland was promoted to the position of general manager, which position he fills ably and aggressively. He has many friends in the shoe trade and is a well-known visitor to all the leather centres.

The Officers are Progressive

Percy C. Black, president of the Amherst Boot & Shoe Co., Amherst, N.S., has occupied that responsible position for the past six years, and has been a member of the Board of Directors since 1911. His father, Hon. Hiram Black, was a shareholder in the company in its early days and was a director and also acted as president for a long period. Percy C. Black, who succeeded his father, is an able and progressive resident of Amherst who is well thought of and well spoken of by his numerous friends and business associates in the Maritime Provinces. He is connected with a number of prosperous and progressive industrial and financial enterprises.

J. E. Pipes, superintendent of the Amherst Boot & Shoe Co., has been thirty-eight years in the service. He began working for them as an apprentice in 1879, and with the exception of a few years spent in Haverhill, Mass., and Gardiner, Maine, has been associated with them for this long period. So far as his experience and insight in the trade are concerned, Mr. Pipes says that he has been like Topsy in "Uncle Tom's Cabin"—simply "grewed up" with the company in all its departments.

The Branches and Retail End

Fred. O. Mumford, manager for the past seven years of the Halifax branch of the Amherst Boot & Shoe Co., has been connected with the organization for some eighteen years, and is a "live wire."

G. H. Anderson, manager of the Western branch at Regina, which is known as the Amherst Central Shoe Co., is an alert and progressive shoeman, who has built up a splendid business in his division.

W. G. Miller, manager of the retail department of the Amherst Boot & Shoe Co., Amherst, N.S., has been identified with the footwear game since 1902, starting at Fredericton, N.B. Four years ago Mr. Miller removed to Amherst to assume his duties as manager of the retail department of the Amherst Boot & Shoe Co. He is an enthusiastic and energetic salesman and a capable manager. Under his direction the retail business of this historic shoe manufacturing firm, which is now celebrating the fiftieth anniversary of its career, is keeping pace with the times, and each year is showing a gratifying gain in turnover. Mr. Miller has always been a thorough believer in attractive and specialized window trims.

NEW FACTORY TO SPECIALIZE IN WHITES

A federal charter has been granted to the J. F. Clark, Limited, with a capital stock of $200,000 divided into 2,000 shares of $100 each. The headquarters of the new company will be in Montreal East, and they are empowered to manufacture, buy, sell, etc., boots and shoes. It is understood that the company will specialize in white footwear of all kinds, making practically everything in this line.

James F. Clark, head of the new organization is a member of the firm of Clark Bros., Limited. The present business in the busy plant at St. Stephen, N.B., will be continued and the same lines turned out there as formerly.

JAS. F. CLARK, HEAD OF THE NEW FIRM

Their creations in ladies' high grade McKay novelty shoes have won a national reputation.

It is understood that construction work will start on the new factory at once. The building will be three storeys high and of the latest type, with every modern convenience. James F. Clark is taking up his residence in Montreal East, and it is expected the plant will begin operations early this fall. The ultimate capacity will be 2,000 pairs a day of white canvas and cloth shoes in men's, women's and children's. The municipality of Montreal East has guaranteed the bonds of the company to the extent of $90,000 for twenty years, and granted exemption from taxation.

The factory of Clark Bros. at St. Stephen, N.B., will still be continued as in the past on women's high grade novelty shoes.

SOLE LEATHER CO. WINS SUIT

The King Shoe Co., Limited, Toronto, recently brought action against the Anglo-Canadian Leather Co., Toronto, to recover $6,600 damages, for alleged failure to deliver 3,000 sides of sole leather. In the non-jury sittings Mr. Justice Middleton, after hearing the evidence, dismissed the action, with costs. The case arose out of a claim made by the King Shoe Co. for the specific delivery of 3,000 sides of leather, which the plaintiffs claim were definitely contracted for in March, 1916. The Anglo-Canadian Leather Co.'s defence was that it was not a specific contract for 3,000 sides of sole leather, but that they agreed to deliver to the King Shoe Co. sufficient ten iron sole leather to enable them to complete a certain army shoe contract, providing that the leather called for did not exceed 3,000 sides. It appears that only 1,570 sides were delivered on this contract, and on the completion of the army contract, the Anglo-Canadian Leather Co. were notified that no further leather was required, nor was any more called for until some two and a half months later. Sole leather had advanced considerably in the meantime, and the Anglo-Canadian Leather Co. were notified to complete the delivery of the full 3,000 sides. His Lordship held that the contract for the supply of leather was for a quantity sufficient to enable the King Shoe Co. to fill respectively army contracts and these requirements the defendants had fulfilled.

TWO HUSTLERS IN RUBBER GAME

Fred. H. Meinzer, sales manager of the Miner Rubber Co., Limited, Granby, Que., has been connected with the rubber footwear game for over ten years. Coming to Toronto from Cleveland, Ohio, he was in the service of

FRED H. MEINZER, MONTREAL

Gutta Percha & Rubber, Limited, Toronto, occupying various responsible positions at the factory. When the Miner Rubber Co. opened a warehouse in Toronto some six years ago he joined forces with that organization, and was manager of the Toronto branch for about a year and a half when he was transferred to Montreal as assistant general sales manager. Since then he has held responsible posts and, on his elevation to his present office, he brought to bear upon his new duties a thorough knowledge of detail and good executive ability. Mr. Meinzer is also familiar with the leather footwear business, having been engaged in the retail shoe trade at one time.

T. Y. O'Neill assistant sales manager of the Miner Rubber Co., has had an extended business training and since entering upon his duties some months ago, has made many friends in the trade. Mr. O'Neill is an Ottawa boy born and bred, and was for seventeen years with the E. B. Eddy Co., rising steadily in the service until he became branch manager for the company in Montreal, which post he ably filled for four years.

PATENT SEEN ON MOST EXCLUSIVE MODELS

Word comes from leading style centres in the United States that patent leather is once more to be in vogue in some of the classiest presentations being shown in many of the best footwear establishments. Patent leather is particularly attractive and smart and in combination with various shades of brown, white, ivory, cream, gray and other tints, makes a very effective creation. There is every indication that before many months elapse patent will be the leading leather in all high-class shoes, and, by the way, it has never lost its distinctiveness and dressiness, even amid the swirl of changing styles and the alterations of patterns and colors. It has kept in the race, possibly not to the same extent as a couple of years ago, but never has it lost its footing. Though the pendulum of fashion may swing from one extreme to the other, patent leather has always been the most dignified and impressive. In all novelty footwear, it has proved a happy medium and for vamps, foxings, collars, lace stays and ornamentation has held its own.

A leading shoe manufacturer who has recently returned from a visit to the style centres of New England, says that several of the highest class establishments are showing distinctive and snappy offerings in patent leather which, he thinks, will to a large extent replace kid before many months are over. Patent leather seems to be returning to its own in popularity and esteem.

FOUR FIRMS UNITED IN BIG PICNIC

The big picnic of the Columbus Rubber Co., Montreal, the firm of J. I. Chouinard, the Regina Shoe Co., Limited, and the Star Shoe Co., Limited, which took place on Saturday, June 30th, by the steamer Trois Rivières to Lavaltrie, Que., was an enjoyable, pleasant and successful event. The boat left at 8.30 and reached the picnic grounds in a couple of hours. There all kinds of sports and games were held for which valuable prizes were offered. The various committees in charge of the events certainly carried out everything in splendid style. There was not a hitch to mar the proceedings, and the day will long be remembered for its delightful associations.

A neat programme was issued showing about thirty odd events in the line of athletics, as well as attractive dance features for those who liked to engage in this pastime. The management of the different firms voiced their appreciation of the services which all had rendered during the past year. Hope was expressed that as they worked well, they would also enjoy themselves to the fullest extent. It was also pointed out that many prizes, generously offered by supply houses and others, would be presented to stimulate interest and arouse enthusiasm in a series of contests. The management of the companies expressed thanks to everyone for splendid service rendered in the past and trusted that all their employees would be true and faithful in the future.

The boat left Lavaltrie on the return trip about 5 p.m. and when Point aux Trembles was reached a short stop was made. A number disembarked at the Club Champetre to have dinner, and, after the generous repast, brief congratulatory addresses were given by Messrs. J. I. Chouinard, A. Gauthier, H. F. Lauzon, Peter Doig and others. Dancing was indulged in for several hours, and the jolly party returned to Montreal about midnight.

J. I. Chouinard was honorary president of the picnic committee and the committee of arrangements was composed of A. Gauthier, P. Doig and P. Chouinard. The other members of the other committees were:—

Refreshment Committee—E. Bouchard, J. H. Goyette, Jos. Beauchamp, H. Blanchette, A. Dion, H. F. Pellerin, Geo. Cauchon, Geo. Heavy, A. Meunier.

QUEBEC ANGLERS SAY THEY CAN BEAT THE WORLD

Many Parties Return Laden With Great Catches—Narcisse Gagnon and Friends go on Another Fishing Expedition—Some New Claimants for the Leather Medal—More Marvellous Feats by Eastern Men Who are now Getting into the Competition

The publication in last issue of the picture of Fred Marois, and others, fishing in the lower reaches of the St. Lawrence with the fish jumping, not only at the bait, but at the doughty fishers themselves, has been taken by the members of the trade as a facetious thrust at their prowess as disciples of Izaak Walton. Evidently the western men do not take the efforts of those down east seriously, so, at the beginning of the month, to wit, June 2nd, Mr. F. M. Davis, of Kingston, and Mr. Carter, of Montreal, were taken on a ship to one of the favorite haunts of the shoe trade, Riviere a Pierre Club House, where they were entertained for three or four days. If it is a question of numbers and quality of fish, Fred Marois says Quebec can beat the world. He and Lucien Borne had charge of the party, and, by the way, Lucien is admitted to be not only a connoisseur of fish in Quebec, but an expert chef as well. They returned with just a few short of one thousand trout, ranging from half a pound to a pound and a half.

On St. Jean Baptiste day another party, consisting of Lucien Borne, Luc Routhier, F. Marois, A. Richard and three others, spent four days at the St. Antoine Club, about fifty miles from Quebec, and bagged an average of about a hundred and fifty each. The SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL took the trouble to verify the statements of those concerned, by sending a representative to Quebec last week, who interviewed not only the fishermen themselves, but others who shared in the sport and, all joking aside, the feat is very conservatively stated.

Mr. Routhier says these western fellows can spin all the yarns they like about porpoises, sharks and other kinds of amphibious denizens of southern waters, but if they want to know what fishing is, they can learn more in Quebec in a couple of days, than they have seen or heard in a lifetime, about fishing. No doubt a large number of jobbers will visit

Quebec in the next week or two and will have ample opportunity to learn that when it comes to the "gentle sport" the Quebec trade can give them something to think of as well as shoes.

They Have New Fishing Resort

The fishing mania has entered largely into the constitution of more exponents of the shoe and leather trades. The accompanying cut shows what a jolly party of four recently accomplished in a new fishing place which at present is being kept a state secret. In the group are Narcisse Gagnon, of Montreal, former champion fisherman of the Dominion; F. X. LeBlanc, Percy J. Milburn and Dr. O. Noel, of Montreal. They had rare good luck, the largest salmon weighing 25 pounds, but the details have not as yet been disclosed.

Another gentleman, who has been taking a hand in the angling pastime is the genial Paul Roy, of Montreal. He is a very enthusiastic disciple of Izaak Walton, and spends every week end that he possibly can in his favorite pursuit. Recently he took a trip to Valleyfield, and had rare good fortune, landing a select assortment of bass.

While Mr. Roy was on his journey, somebody took his grip by mistake and when he arrived at his destination he found that he had to buy a pair of overalls. Instead of donning his long rubber boots he had to put on a pair of slippers, but little set backs like these do not bother him, for he landed fish in abundance. When he has time, or is on a vacation, Mr. Roy likes to sojourn north of Three Rivers going up the St. Maurice River quite a distance.

25 Years before Confederation

In the days when ocean shipping was carried on by the old "Square Rigger," the original organization of the present firm of McArthur, Irwin, Limited, started the manufacture and importation of Chemicals, Tanners' Supplies, Paints and Aniline Dyes for the manufacturers of Canada.

That the firm has continued to serve three generations is but indicative of the satisfaction and reliability of the products that have been offered.

The policy of honest products, with a business built on fair dealings to all is the same to-day as it was 75 years ago and while we are young in ideas our Old-Fashioned Honor is still retained.

SHOE STYLES FOR FALL AND WINTER 1917-18

WHAT effect will the participation of the United States in the war have on the shoe style trend for fall and winter? For several months this question has been in the minds of shoe retailers, says the 'Shoe Economist.'

They have remembered that for several years this paper has maintained that retailers could not with safety purchase footwear too far in advance of the retail selling season. In deference to this policy, this paper has deferred the publication of its views on fall shoe styles until information, sufficiently definite, authoritative and accurate for retailers to follow it in their fall buying, could be obtained.

That this policy is the only safe one to be followed is again clearly shown by the fact that governmental influences have operated during the last ten days to bring about a vital change in the fall shoe styles trend—a change which places it along lines entirely different from those on which fall buying has heretofore been conducted.

These governmental suggestions, with our comments on them, are presented in the another article. They point very conclusively to the 7-inch limit placed upon the height of the woman's boot tops as the outstanding feature of the fall style trend.

It is fortunate that the length of skirts in the fall garment styles are such as to call for the 7-inch height in boots.

Until the present time fall shoe styles have been predicated on the assumption that skirts more or less extreme in their shortness would again be worn during the coming fall and winter.

Boot With Seven-Inch Top

The appearance of youthfulness is best afforded by a dress that has the short, full skirt; if greater length is given to the skirt, it must, in order to retain the youthful effect, be narrow, or, in other words, must outline the figure. The present tendency is toward straight-line effects, but with a certain degree of fullness—sufficient to allow a woman to wear the length of skirt that best suits her. The average length of the skirts of tailored suits and dresses is 6 to 8 inches from the ground. Dressy gowns often extend to within 5 inches of the ground and are sometimes longer.

Generally speaking Paris is giving what may be termed "service" fashions and is designing women's clothing with an eye to practical use.

American styles in women's wear will, undoubtedly, accord with this idea, for every American woman is now doing her patriotic "bit," or getting ready to do it.

The footwear styles illustrated fit in well with the garment styles that will be worn during the coming fall and winter. When it is remembered that garment fashions for the coming fall and winter will prescribe a slightly longer skirt than the recent average, it will be seen that the 7-inch top boot is not only extremely practical from the standpoint of conservation of material, but is also dictated by fashion as the high style boot, and will therefore be demanded by consumers the country over.

Another feature common to garment and shoe styles for fall and in which the retailer therefore is much interested, is color.

Women's garments will show a general use of dark shades, largely of a staple character. These dark shades, moreover, will be employed in garments for house as well as street wear and without regard to the wearer's age. Black will be prominent.

The principal colors, in their order of preference, are:

navy and other dark blues; browns, including khaki and tan; such shades of gray as taupe and oxford; a few dull reds and purples, and a sparing use of dark greens.

Leading Colors for Tops

Inasmuch as the woman this fall will, as heretofore, buy her footwear from a style as well as a wear standpoint, tops with colors that harmonize or contrast will be favored. Naturally the colors which lead in women's garment styles will be the ones on which the keynote of the shoe color vogue for the coming season will be based.

The two leading shoe top colors, however, will be gray and brown, in the various shades, in combination with black and tan vamps.

All Materials Good

Two years ago it was a matter of choice with every retailer whether he purchased kid, cloth, buck, or suede footwear. Now he has no choice in the matter; he is compelled, through necessity, to purchase shoes made of all materials that are suitable and available for making footwear. Furthermore, the consumer has been so educated that the present-day retailer needs a variety of patterns and designs in all shoe materials in order to satisfy the various desires.

In purchasing footwear the retailer should ever keep in mind the outstanding fact that it is not so much a question with the consumer as to what material is employed in making a shoe, as of whether the shoe is "pretty"—whether it presents as attractive an appearance in one material as in another. Footwear turned out by American manufacturers from all the kinds of materials suitable for making shoes during the past few months proves that "pretty" and "attractive" footwear, possessing all the elements required by fashion or high style, can be manufactured and will be acceptable to the consumer.

The General Pattern Tendency

The subject of patterns is one which will receive unusual attention from each purchaser of fall footwear. For the last two years the vogue has been for lace shoes, and fall purchases made up to this time have been made in the belief that lace shoes will continue to lead in the demand for the coming fall and winter.

Under normal conditions the adoption of the 7-inch top boot as the high-style height for my fair lady for the coming season's footwear would bring about a natural vogue for button pattern shoes. At this time, however, conditions are not normal, and military influences on garments and on footwear seem to require the continued use of the lace pattern in the service type of footwear such as we have referred to.

Buttons Real High Style

Retailers who have studied the subject of style in footwear during a period of years will feel, however, that the button boot is due again—first, because the lace shoe has had the call for two years and the consumer is ready for a change to something different, provided that something is just as nifty and pretty as its predecessor, and, second, because a 7-inch top boot carries with it more real high style in the button pattern than it does in the lace.

Both pumps and oxfords will be worn with overgaiters and, judging from the demand for overgaiters this spring, there is promise of more overgaiters being worn during the coming fall and winter than during any previous season.

SAYS COLORS WILL CONTINUE ACTIVE

A. Brandon, of the Brandon Shoe Co., Brantford, Ont., has returned from Boston, where he has been looking over styles and going through the leather market. He finds that colors are still selling very heavily in the United States, and will continue to be in good demand for the next season in men's fine footwear. New shades are being introduced, especially khaki and royal purple, and these will likely be in active requisition. Mr. Brandon reports that the styles will not be changed much, and that the tendency is toward a medium round toe, not running to the extreme narrow toe, although there are a few of them shown. In his opinion, the medium is taking the lead.

"From information I could gather, both in the United States and Canada," declared Mr. Brandon, "merchants are keeping clear of new lasts, and are using the ones that have been tried out, and are good fitters. They are keeping to the latter lines and this evidences good judgment on the part of the dealers. Manufacturers much prefer adhering to the old lasts, and we believe we have the best range that has been on the market for years. The only reason for introducing new ones is to keep advancing, and owing to the fact that merchants have a tendency to ask for new shapes. At present the shoe business in United States is very slow. Firms making army shoes are busy, but the general trend of trade is quiet, and will not revive materially until about October 1st."

SHOE POLISHES GO UP IN PRICE

The price of paste polishes has lately been increased by all the manufacturers from five to fifteen per cent. owing to the high price and scarcity of tin as well as the raw materials consisting of waxes, shellacs, dyes, etc. Not a few retailers are selling the boxes of paste, which formerly brought ten cents, at fifteen cents. Owing to the increased outlay there is only a small profit in stocking the various lines, and disposing of them at the former figure. It is likely that the question of advancing the retail figure will be taken up by various shoe retailers' association in the near future. Already bootblacks in different towns and cities are charging ten cents for a shine on all black shoes, where formerly a nickel paid the bill.

acquisition of the large factory premises. Just what use they will make of the structure has not yet been determined.

A short time ago the management of the store became suspicious and communicated with the police department, who searched the apartments and discovered numerous pairs of boots and shoes. The accused were remanded for sentence.

The premises of Louis McNulty, wholesale and retail shoes, St. John's, Que., were damaged recently by fire.

A. R. Angus, of Miner Shoe Co., Montreal, lost one of his sisters on Friday, June 29th. She was drowned while enjoying a holiday at Lake Maniteau, Que. The opinion is that she took a weak turn while standing on edge of the lake and fell in.

Wm. Lindsley, of St. Catharines, Ont., Western Canada representative of E. T. Wright & Co., has returned after an extended and successful business trip throughout the West.

There is reported by the various jobbing houses a pronounced shortage in children's, boy's and misses' tennis shoes and in some lines of colored stock particularly for youths. The present season has been an exceptionally active one for white footwear of all kinds and there has been some lively scurrying for white canvas shoes for women. Many shoe dealers are entirely sold out and it is impossible to obtain any more goods in time for this season's wear.

E. A. Chalk, of Toronto, Northern Ontario representative of the Kaufman Rubber Co., Kitchener, and Daoust, Lalonde & Co., of Montreal, is spending the summer with his wife and family at Bass Lake, Ont.

Walter Brown, business agent for the Boot and Shoe Workers' Union, Toronto, and president of the District Trades and Labor Council, and F. C. Cribben, Toronto, have returned from attending the biennial convention of the Boot and Shoe Workers of America, which was held in Philadelphia. Mr. Brown was elected a delegate to the American Federation of Labor, which meets in Buffalo, N.Y., in November.

While the perpetual injunction is not to be enforced until September 20th, Mr. Justice Ferguson, of Toronto, has restrained the Robson Leather Co., Limited, of Ottawa, from discharging tannery waste and effluents into the Oshawa creeks, and the company will endeavor to abate the nuisance by installing a filtration plant, etc. Such is the outcome of four actions brought by Dewart, Harding, Maw and Hodgson, on behalf of Mayor Conant, of Oshawa, and three farmers. The creek is said to have been polluted and infected with anthrax organisms, and cows have died. As to damages, Master-in-Chambers Cameron will take a reference.

The F. Blumenthal Co., of Delaware, some two months ago completed large additions to their tanneries at Wilmington, Del., which they have been constructing for the past eight months, especially for making heavy leather for army purposes. These large additions, with all the newest improved machinery, are already turning out army leather on a large scale. It is expected that ultimately further large plants will be built and the operations in heavy leather will compare favorably with the production of goatskins, of which the daily output varies between three and four thousand dozen, and is the largest of any in the world. While at the present moment the company are concentrating efforts upon the heavy leather plant, it is understood that shortly they intend to extend operations to include calf, horse and kip.

A. R. Burris, shoe merchant, Victoria, B.C., recently made an assignment.

Oliver M. Brooks, who is special representative of the Goodyear shoe repair department of the United Shoe Machinery Co., Montreal, and was recently in Winnipeg and Edmonton, is now on his way to Vancouver calling upon the trade, by whom he is well and favorably known. Mr. Brooks will not return to the East for some weeks yet.

Shane Bros., dealers in high-grade footwear, have a very attractive store in the Studio Block, Yarmouth, N.S. Their store is 85 feet deep by 18 feet wide, and they specialize in men's, women's and children's footwear. They have been in business for eight years, and have met with a large measure of success.

C. F. Rannard, of Winnipeg, Man., past president of the Retail Merchants of Manitoba, was at the recent annual convention elected a member of the Dominion Board and also of the Advisory Board.

NEWSY BRIEFS FROM QUEBEC

Edmond Tremblay, shoe manufacturer, was in Montreal recently on a business trip.

M. Leclerc, manager of the firm of Jos. Tanguay has put on the market a very popular Dongola shoe in all colors.

Albert Racine, tanner, is putting a new concrete flooring to the basement of his building, and a cement floor in the cellar.

Messrs. Dugal & Matte, tanners, are making large repairs to their building, and have installed a new sprinkler system.

P. Daigle, shoe dealer, of Quebec, has sold out his entire stock, and will shortly open up a modern shoe shine parlor and repair shop.

Lud. Duchaine, shoe manufacturer, and Messrs. Brown & Rochette, shoe jobbers, have installed in their respective buildings, the newest system of automatic sprinklers.

Bertrand & Thibault, shoe manufacturers, of Quebec, have installed a rapid Standard screw machine. This firm are making steady progress, and are very busy at the present time.

John Ritchie, who has not been as well as usual, was down to meet his son, who has returned from the front. The latter has lost both legs, but is none the less enthusiastic and optimistic about the outcome of the war.

Within the next couple of months, the trade may expect to hear of some wonderful exploits in the fishing line from the neighborhood of Quebec. When Quebec men are aroused on a subject they are bound to be heard from.

The following visitors were in town recently: L. V. Morel, representing Japan Import Co., Montreal; O. H. Hymmen, manager Walpole Rubber Co., Montreal, and W. D. Fox, representing Philip Jacobi, Toronto.

Joe. Tanguay, shoe manufacturer, has slipped quietly away on a solitary fishing expedition. His object is to secure the largest fish ever caught by any shoe manufacturer. He left without giving any hint as to his destination.

L. J. Alexandre Dery, son of Jas. S. Dery, representative of the Kaufman Rubber Co., of Quebec, died a few days ago. The deceased was for some years an employee of Louis Gauthier Co., and also of Louis Deschenes, shoe dealer, of St. Sauveur.

Manufacturers are completing fall orders, and making up spring samples, and are busier than they have been. The factories worked Dominion Day, as the previous Monday was a holiday, devoted to the festival of St. Jean Baptiste. The prevalence of religious and other holidays is a feature Quebec manufacturers have to contend with.

A few jobbers have visited the market already, including Messrs. White, Sterling, Ault and Johnson. They have only bought sparingly, feeling out the market. Jobbers always, of course, seek concessions, and seem to think prices will be lower, but manufacturers say that they will hope in vain. The leather market has settled down to a firm basis and indications point to stronger conditions.

Spring samples for jobbers are about ready and show little variation in styles or materials from last year. There may be fewer novelties, but the chances are that the high cuts in colors and combinations will still find great favor. Wholesalers claim that retailers have been buying only in a conservative way, and will continue to do so. It is thought the season will be later and there will not be the amount of buying there was last year for spring. A good fall trade, however, will make a difference, as it is believed stocks of staples are somewhat low.

Mr. Justice Dorion recently gave judgment in La Cie. J. B. Drolet, Ltee., vs. Tousignant. Plaintiff claimed from defendant $335.88 in reimbursement of commissions that said defendant had received on sales done by him, the whole according to the account annexed to the action; that the defendant was engaged for plaintiff as a commercial traveler and that he was to be paid by a commission of 6 per cent. on the amount of the sales effected by him, but subject to the condition that those sales should be ratified by the company. Defendant pleaded that plaintiff had no right to refuse him the commission on certain sales mentioned in an account annexed to his plea. Judgment against defendant for $299, with interest and costs.

The new samples shown in Quebec reveal that the modes for spring will not show a great deal of change. The eight and nine-inch boot for women will be very popular in gray, ivory and various shades of Havana brown, while in men's, darker shades of tan will prevail, along with Toney red, khaki, and other manifestations of the brown family. It is stated that overgaiters will be worn to a larger extent than ever during the coming season.

Capt. J. A. Scott, with his usual push and enterprise, went through the fight at Vimy Ridge, and was the only man in his battalion who was successful in getting to the trenches in time to be in the engagement. Capt. Scott is as enthusiastic in the fighting ranks as he was in the leather arena and would be pleased to hear from any of his Canadian friends. His address is c-o 87th Battalion, 4th Division, C.E.F., France.

JUST WHY THEIR PRICES ARE ADVANCED

In a recent letter to their Canadian customers, Sir H. W. Trickett, Limited, of Waterfoot, Eng., of which O. Eatough is managing director, say:

In our last circular letter which we addressed to you on July 10th, 1916, we stated that we could not hold any prices as fixed for unexecuted orders then on our books.

Since that date we have not accepted any orders at definite prices on account of the ever-increasing difficulties in securing materials at standard prices.

Our method of business during these times when prices of raw material are ever on the increase, is to charge up the manufactured article accordingly, and we claim to have carried out this method up to the present, as we are of opinion that to take advantage of the situation as we find it to-day, by making huge profits, is, to say the least, unpatriotic.

So you may rest assured that no advance in prices will be made over and above the extra called for as a result of the continual advance in materials, as well as advance in wages.

From this date, we are compelled by the daily changing circumstances to charge up any goods you may have now on order calculated on the present day price for raw material.

At first sight, the advanced prices which we shall ask for all goods now on order, may appear somewhat out of proportion to what you consider reasonable. Still, we can assure you that no inflated prices are being charged. One reason for the somewhat serious advance in prices is the fact that up to the present we have been working on contracts placed some long time back, which are now completed. The policy we have carried out during the present war has been to charge our goods on the basis of the prices paid for material, thereby giving our customers the advantage of any foresight in our buying which we may have exercised.

To-day prices are so much higher than when we placed our last contracts that there will naturally be a large corresponding advance on shoes and slippers.

Now having made this frank statement of the position we find ourselves placed in to-day, and feeling that we have had your confidence in the past, we trust that we may do nothing to forfeit that confidence which we value more highly than we can find words to express.

OUTLOOK IN SHOES AND LEATHER

No Chance for Cheaper Shoes—Business
Quiet but Tone Good—Leather Man Not Anxious—Cool Season Against Sport Goods

THE summer season is not very far this year from the usual and, although there has been a good deal of disappointment with regard to the weather, and some claim that fancy footwear, and especially outing shoes, have been neglected, when the volume of trade is made up for June and July, sales will not fall short of the regular amount. In fact, some dealers claim that their June sales were considerably in excess of last year, and if anything like seasonable weather prevails for the next few weeks mid-summer stocks will be tolerably well cleaned up.

Those who have visited the shoe markets have found a surprising firmness in spite of the quietness prevailing. Manufacturers seem to realize that there is no hope of securing concessions from leather men, and are not offering inducements to either jobber or retailer to anticipate their needs. Some reports of close prices have been traced to small orders taken to keep plants going, and following a reduction in the price of certain classes and grades of leather. Tanners are not much in evidence, and seem to be content to stay at home just now and await developments.

There is no doubt but that there are considerable stocks of shoes in the hands of jobbers who rather over-anticipated their requirements last spring, but as a large amount of these are staples and have been bought at figures that are not considered by any means high, they will find a ready outlet this fall. At all events there seems to be no fear in the part of wholesale shoe distributors that they will have to take less for them than the full market price.

Retailers report a healthy feeling throughout the country. Word comes from the West that the outlook is encouraging. The crop is coming along satisfactorily, and while there is an absence of any boom, there is a noticeable buoyancy in the general situation. Travelers who have recently returned from the West report a decided inclination on the part of dealers to order freely for fall and say this is in marked contrast to the situation a few months ago. In Ontario the crop outlook is eminently satisfactory, although the prevalence of wet, cool weather has created anxiety in some quarters. The outlook so far in all lines is most encouraging. The industrial situation is beginning to give evidence of increased activity in spite of the fact that the holiday season is on. There is not anything like the slackness noticeable in July in the factories, and the chances seem to be good for a summer of profitable activity in most lines.

The consensus of opinion in the shoe trade seems to be that as soon as business settles down to its regular gait the market will become firmer in both leather and shoes, and dealers are beginning to realize that the alarm which led them to curtail their buying in the past couple of months was largely unwarranted.

Rochester Style Show Splendid Success

Double the Exhibits of Last Year—Large Attendance of Visitors—Canada Well Represented—A Great Array of Fine Shoes—Shoe Style Notes, and Some Comment on the Trend of Fashion for the Coming Fall and Winter Seasons

OVER fifty exhibits of shoes were in line at Powers' Hotel, Rochester, when the Third Semi-annual Shoe Style Show was opened by E. P. Reed, the veteran shoe manufacturer, on Thursday, July 5th.

The weather for the opening was all that could be desired, both visitors and exhibitors being satisfied to see it cool and refreshing instead of blustering, as it was last year.

The number of concerns represented was more than double that of 1916, and altogether the exhibits, arrangements, decorations and so forth evidenced the fact that the shoe has settled down to business as an established institution. The entire fifth and sixth floors of Rochester's celebrated hostelry were given over to the affair and were decorated in green and white with a profuse display of the national emblem. Some of the Canadians present rather expected to see the Union Jack and the Tri-Color stretching out somewhere, but probably the management thought it wise to avoid the suggestion of war in connection with the exposition.

Made Everybody Welcome

One thing is certain, the Rochester trade know how to make people feel at home, and those from this side of the line who went over to the Flower City to see what was doing in shoes, are loud in their praises of the goodwill and courtesy extended them on all hands. They were made to feel at home from start to finish, and although in many cases they could hardly be considered as buyers in the largest sense, they were given the glad hand at every turn.

Pretty Shoes on Pretty Women

A feature of the exhibition was the presence of living models, and the city must have been ransacked to provide the array of pretty girls who displayed the newest footgear in a way that gave added attraction even to those who are accustomed to look upon this article of apparel from the most prosaic standpoint. The display at Ontario Beach Park in this line was something of which the Rochester shoe trade may justly feel proud.

General Impressions

The styles shown were, for the most part, those of the present fall and winter season. There was a sprinkling of spring models for 1918. The display, while not profuse, being confined to leaders in the several lines, was thoroughly represented. A point that at once seemed to strike the visitor was the absence of fussiness or extravagant effects in the shoes. Shoemaking seemed to have been made paramount to millinery effort and everybody remarked the tendency towards simplicity in both design and garnishment. While there were, of course, a number of novelties, there was an absence as a whole of startling combinations and effects.

Shoe Traveler's Day

The annual outing of the Rochester Association of Traveling Shoe Salesmen held at Newport House, on Irondequoit Bay on Saturday, July 14th, was a fitting climax to the shoe show. A great many visitors remained for this event, and, from what we have heard, they had no occasion to regret their stay. The Rochester travelers gave them the time of their lives. It may here be stated that these enterprising gentlemen are really responsible for bringing about the Rochester Shoe Style Show.

As to Color Effects

As already stated there was a decided tendency towards plainer effects. Colors are decidedly darker, the dark shades of brown such as "khaki" and "pecan" predominating. In grays the "battle-ship" or "navy" seemed to have the largest call, the latter a deep toned color that either alone or in combination with other shades of gray or navy yielded handsome results. Two-tone effects seem still popular. Blacks are more in evidence than ever, and a decided tendency is toward patent.

Style Standards

The attempt to get the trade back to the seven inch top does not seem to have met with the approval of the Rochester makers of women's footwear. Most of the models are shown in from eight and a half to nine inch tops with the predominance in the latter height. The difference in the height of women's shoes will not cut much figure in the actual saving of leather, and as the measurement in the English regulation is from the heel seat up, and presumably the same will be the American, it will mean at least an eight and a half inch top from the ground. The laced shoe still maintains its ascendancy, but there is a decided sprinkling of buttoned boots in the spring samples seen. There seems to be now no doubt that the buttoned shoe has come back to stay. Lasts continue narrow although some styles of the sports nature in "military" shapes with twelve-eighth heel is popular.

Other Style Features

Vamps are about the same length, although the tendency is to shorten them a little, but three and a half to four inches length represent the general run in women's shoes. Heels are considerably lower, running from eleven to fifteen eights. The straight Cuban heel is favored in leather, and the covered French heel in wood. A large proportion of the shoes are shown with the square throat which gives a nattier appearance than the round. Vamps and quarters are becoming plainer, when a toe cap of fancy design is effected, perforations being used. Quite a number of models in cloth tops are shown in grays and browns mostly plain, with here and there some attractive if not startling combinations. An outstanding feature is the increased use of white welts which are found even in other lines than those with white tops.

Style Show Notes

In the exhibit of the Moore-Schafer Co., was a shoe worthy of particular mention, namely, a khaki calf and khaki suede combination, a perfect match in colors, that produced an exceedingly pleasing effect. The showing, by the same firm, of different shades of brown in the newest styles were very fine, and should take well in this country.

The showing of grays and browns by Utz & Dunn Co., was worthy of particular note. One example of extremely good taste was seen in a "battleship" gray calf vamp and light gray cloth top, somewhat in the nature of a semi-sport last.

The John Foster Co., of Beloit, Wis., has some very startling shoes on exhibition. This firm specializes in fancy shoes, having made special shoes for actresses, etc., all over the world, and their "Ballet" shoes shown were simply beyond description.

E. P. Reed & Co., had a very fine exhibit of high grade novelty shoes, as well as some very fine but plainer shoes for fall and winter. They have just brought their travelers in from all over the continent, and are now working on some still newer ideas for next spring.

W. B. Coon Co., of Rochester, were showing their "Aunt Polly's" out sizes. This firm make a shoe to fit any woman's foot. It would be well for the Canadian trade to remember this when dealing with a large woman who requires larger than ordinary shoes.

Those from the Dominion

Leather Trade Jottings

What is Seen and Heard Amongst the Trade—Views
and News of the Leather Trade at Home and Abroad

THE leather trade has been comparatively quiet of late, although there has been evidence of a shaking in the mulberry trees, so to speak. Manufacturers have been looking about not only for stock to complete fall goods, but for supplies upon which to base prices of spring samples. The result has been that no one seems inclined to bite at the attractive bait represented by substantial orders. It is true that some concessions have been secured but of such a nature that the situation as a whole remains unaltered. A couple of cents on side or sole leather just now is neither here nor there. There have been some substantial reductions offered by American kid concerns in limited lots to clean up and to keep the market over there on an even keel and the same may be said of certain lines of other leather, but it is recognized that the market conditions over there as here are only temporary, caused by the embargo on leather and the uncertainty of war operations.

Leather Men Stand Pat. "One thing the past six months have taught tanners is patience and confidence in the future," said a prominent member of the leather industry to the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL. "Time was when leather producers would have been swept off their feet by a lull such as has taken place in the last three months. But we all realize that there is absolutely no sense in giving away profits on our goods when we find it difficult not only to turn them out at the price but to supply the demand at all. We have been at our wit's end to get hides, workmen and other necessities of production and are paying to-day such prices as absolutely forbid any shading of the market. Besides there is not enough leather to go around if anything like the demand starts that occurred a year ago. Should the embargo on English shipments be lifted and should the demand for Canadian leathers become pressing for war purposes in the United States as already seems likely, there will be a scramble on the part of manufacturers here for supplies. I am not a bull by any means but I see conditions coming within the next month or so that will mean stronger prices for leather in Canada."

American Conditions. Business is still quiet in the United States but the feeling prevails that the trade is on the verge of a decidedly upward movement. The second call for army shoes has been made and arrangements already made for the supply of leather cover prices, but when the manufacturers get into the market for certain supplies there is sure to be some excitement that will involve higher prices in spite of the efforts of the government to prevent a scramble. Tanners are patiently waiting. It is between seasons and some concessions are always made at this time, this year being no exception to the rule. The feeling prevails generally, however, that the lull is but the precursor of the storm to follow and that as soon as the present uncertainty and fear which prevail amongst all sections of the shoe trade is dissipated there will be such a demand for shoes that not only will equilibrium be restored but the market will take on a decidedly bullish tone. Prices, as it is, remain firm and unchanged and quotations on large lots are not readily obtained. Kid seems to be the weak sister at the moment. In the meantime the export trade in leather continues to be largely in excess of last year, while the imports of hides are considerably less.

Hide and Skin Markets. The hide market, after the sudden activity of last month, has been comparatively dead. The United States government secured an extension of its option with the packers for fifteen days, bringing the expiration date to July 15th. This has been done to give an opportunity for the placing of war orders on the basis provided by the hide prices. Outside of the demand of tanners who have war orders, the hide situation has been exceptionally quiet both east and west. Cattle receipts show a large increase at the principal centres, being considerably in excess of the volume for the same period last year. Heavy native packer steers have sold at Chicago at 33c. for June to August take off, with cows about the same. In butcher hides buffs and cows are selling at 26c. to 26½c. for latest take off of good quality. The South American market has developed a weaker tone, especially in salted, on which concessions have been made. The dry hide market is firm though quiet at 43½c. for Orinocos and Bogotas, with a cent less for Central Americans. The raw calfskin market shows a finer tone with a stronger demand for all selections. It is thought that as soon as the government requirements are fully met and the market is free of restraint there will be a much greater buoyancy.

No Change in Embargo. Regarding the British shoe and leather embargo placed prohibiting imports of shoes and leather into England it has been hoped, says the Recorder, that the embargo would be modified by the British authorities issuing permits to British buyers to import certain quantities of shoes and leather under special license.

The position of the American tanner and shoe manufacturer has been clearly placed before the proper authorities.

Nevertheless, nothing to accomplish the desired result has been achieved to date.

It is said that the British embargo was put on after long consideration as a military and economic necessity, and it is thought that it will remain in force as long as these necessities continue to exist. The fact that the British shoe or leather factory has ordered the goods or says he needs them has no weight whatever if the British Government authorities do not think them necessary for military use.

Shoe Trade Gossip

What Manufacturers and Jobbers are Doing and Saying—The Outlook for Fall and Spring Trade—What About Shoe Prices

IN staple shoes trade has been undoubtedly slow and various reasons have been advanced.

The general attitude seems to be that retailers as well as jobbers bought heavily last fall and winter in the fear of the fact that the market would go up "out of sight." This has resulted in the shelves of the retail stores throughout the country carrying an unusual volume of heavy goods, as well as finer staples, and in the orders for fall requirements being lighter than usual, which has left a considerable quantity of goods in the hands of jobbers who anticipated a fair season's trade. Jobbers are undoubtedly disappointed at the outcome of the season just closed and manifest it in a lack of disposition to add to their orders or anticipate their needs for spring goods months in advance.

Visiting the Market. During the past two weeks most of the wholesale shoe distributors have been to Montreal, Quebec and other shoe manufacturing centres, but manufacturers claim that they have only been "shopping," trying out the market on prices and so forth. No orders of any account have been given as manufacturers are not in a position to quote definite prices. One large manufacturer said, "I would not take an order of any size if it were offered me at a price based upon the present leather market." Most manufacturers, in fact, we might say that all the manufacturers with whom the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL has spoken, take the position that any easiness that exists in the leather market at present is but temporary and just as soon as anything like active buying begins there will be an advance in staple and high-grade leathers. These men have been trying out the leather market just as jobbers have been nibbling at shoe prices and are thoroughly convinced that they will have to pay more for their raw material in the near future. "We use large quantities of sole of a certain class and are absolutely cash buyers. We were given a tip the other day to cover our requirements for the coming season if we wanted to get in right. We have taken the tip. We are sure that in all high-grade leathers prices will stiffen up inside the next few weeks." So said a big manufacturer last week.

Spring Season Later? Manufacturers hardly see how they can be ready with spring prices until the market becomes more stable and wholesale handlers do not expect to have their spring offerings in shape for a month later than usual this year. As to styles there will be few and unimportant changes in the samples. Everybody seems to be convinced that high shoes for women are here to stay for some time and all the talk about seven-inch shoes is moonshine. "Women won't look at seven-inch shoes, even if skirts are made two inches shorter. You will find that nine, ten inch and even higher tops will be in demand for the coming season. There may not be the same hysteria with regard to fancy combinations, although I think that even here the women are going to disappoint the critics and prophets. They have not had enough of the abandonment to feet decoration yet and before they are through footwear will be where millinery used to be. Women thought nothing of paying from $25.00 to $50.00 for a hat. Why should they not devote the same attention to their feet?" A shoman said the other day. There is no doubt that there will be considerable expectancy amongst women, as to the next season's footwear, and with the money flying as it did last winter, price will not cut much figure.

Men's Lines Moving. Notwithstanding the fact that women had the floor most decidedly last year, makers of high-class men's footwear claim that their sales were not only much better than they anticipated, but far beyond the average for the fall season. In spite of the large number of men taken out of the country by the war and with salaries practically cut in two by the high cost of living, makers of fine shoes for men have been able to hold their own.

For the coming season an effort is being made to get all the trade that is going by modeling the new goods on such lines as to appeal to the pocket as well as the eye of the well-dressed man. The new shades of tan which tend towards the darker effects and the combinations of browns and reds with lighter and contrasting materials are bound to keep the men interested. Some very dressy effects are to be found not only in laced but in buttoned boots which in men's as well as women's are winning their way back into popular appreciation. The feeling prevails that with the continued flow of money through agricultural and industrial channels the fit of economy which in the past two or three months has made itself felt will soon disappear.

The Business Outlook. "I was a little inclined to think for a while that we had overshot the mark and that a period of permanent economy was upon us," said one of the foremost captains of the shoe industry to the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL last week. "I have come to the conclusion, however, that present conditions are but temporary and have recently been convinced by frequently recurring indications that as soon as people have gotten over the shock of high prices in staple commodities and have had time to forget the warnings heard in the press and elsewhere with regard to economy and thrift they will spend their substance as readily as ever. With the large expenditures being made, even outside munitions, there will be an unusual amount of money in circulation this fall, which will mean business in shoes as well as all other requisites in apparel. Unless something unforeseen happens I think there will be a good business in shoes."

RETAILERS FEATURE WHITE SHOES AND PUMPS

Shoemen Present Live Announcements on the Fact that White is Correct for Summer and Emphasize the Popularity, Comfort and Economy of Sporting Footwear—Range of Prices Indicated in Most Cases, Imparting Punch to the Appeal and an Incentive to Buy

THAT the present season is an unusually active one in the demand for white footwear and outing shoes of all kinds, and for pumps and large tab Colonials, is demonstrated by the announcements of retail shoe firms which appear in the press in the various centres of the Dominion.

Illustrating the effective manner in which dealers are drawing the attention of the public to the lightness, daintiness, economy, comfort and coolness of white and other lines of footwear, the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL presents in this issue excerpts from a number of excellent ads. The points brought out in the space at the disposal of the various firms, the way in which the subject matter is displayed, the instructive character of the selling talks and the various pointers given on styles cannot help but appeal strongly to the buyers of summer foot toggery.

One distinct advantage is that the trade has taken time by the forelock, and has called the notice of their customers to the fact that it is advisable to buy summer shoes early, while stocks are complete and there is a good selection in the various styles as well as in widths and sizes. Nearly all the announcements are appropriately illustrated, good cuts being used. Prices are given in the majority of instances. This is both prudent and pertinent. There are some ads, however, which might be a little more dignified and not savor quite so much of cheapness and bargains—particularly at this time of the year, when it is not necessary to present the argument of low prices in order to clear out a seasonable stock.

The time for this kind of "talk" will be during the latter end of July or the beginning of August, when it is customary to hold a midsummer sale.

A study of the expressions used, the catchy captions, the introductory paragraphs, selling talk and other features in the sub-joined references may prove interesting and profitable to many readers, who wish to get some fresh suggestions from the other fellow, from whom we all can learn something.

Leather, Shoe Manufacturing, Last and Other Industries Which Were Doing business in Canada When the Dominion was Formed—How Progress has been Made on All Sides and Great Improvements Effected—What Was Doing Fifty Years Ago

KINGSTON is an ancient city, and there J. H. Sutherland & Bro., do a thriving business, which was established nearly seventy years ago—when the late Alexander Sutherland started making custom made shoes. He had at one time twenty-five skilled workmen, and enjoyed a splendid reputation for the excellence of his patterns, the quality of his goods, and the superiority of his workmanship. With the advent of the McKay and Goodyear welt machines, the custom shoemakers were compelled to adapt themselves to new conditions, and the late Mr. Sutherland stocked his store with a splendid range of the best factory goods available, continuing, however, for many years, to keep his widely-known custom made footwear to the front. He won first prize at many Canadian and American fall fairs, besides being specially honored in capturing the gold medal at Ottawa, offered by H.R.H. Princess Louise, in 1879.

His sons had the hereditary gifts and instincts of their father, and the store is now conducted by J. H. Sutherland, under the name of J. H. Sutherland & Bro. Captain James T. Sutherland, the widely known shoe traveler and hockey enthusiast, who is now overseas, is a son of the late Alexander Sutherland.

How Selling Conditions Have Improved

Among other pioneer houses in the footwear line is that of D. McCaw & Son, of Welland, which place has just been created a city. The founder was D. McCaw, and the business is now successfully carried on by his son, J. McCaw. In 1855 the late D. McCaw, who passed away in 1902, at the advanced age of ninety-two years, started a custom shoe shop in Welland, and put in a stock of pedal equipment about 1870, buying his first bill of goods from George Forbes, of Montreal. One of the characteristics of the late Mr. McCaw's method of doing business was his aversion to signing notes for goods. He always insisted when ordering that the sheet should be marked "no note," preferring to pay the bill in cash when due. In 1869 the late Mr. McCaw visited Ireland for a couple of months, closing his shop during his absence.

Recalling old associations, J. McCaw said: "The trade conditions of to-day present a very marked contrast to those in existence half a century ago. As a house in business for fifty years we have been in touch with most all the varied conditions affecting the trade up to the present time. In some ways it was easier to do business in those days than now; the buying public were not so particular or rather 'parnickity,' for if the shoe fitted properly it didn't matter much about the shape of the toe or style of the heel, etc. The present day multiplicity of styles and variation in colors is bewildering to the customer and necessitates the dealer carrying a much larger stock than he would if there were fewer styles.

"Shoes in those days came from the manufacturer in bulk, each pair being tied together with cord, the retailer placing them in drawers or on his shelves in boxes holding from a half to a dozen pairs, presenting anything but an inviting appearance when handled over a few times.

"The leathers in fine shoes were mostly French kid, wax calf, patent calf and goatskin. Prunella was also used, both in men's and women's shoes for summer wear. A fine prunella laced boot with patent facing and rosette on vamp was considered dressy footwear for a lady. Elastic side prunella was also a popular boot with women and misses'.

"The credit system was much in vogue in the early days. Money was not very plentiful and much bartering was done. Cordwood, pork, beef, flour, etc., were exchanged for goods. This, of course, was a mutual benefit. All welted goods were hand sewn, but the sale of this class was confined mostly to the larger places. The price was about the same as welts with the Goodyear process three or four years ago. Heavier lines such as splits and grains could be bought very cheap. A man's split bunkim cost 75 cents, and a long boot $1.50.

"The condition under which retailing is carried on in these days is certainly a decided improvement over those of half a century ago. The store was dimly lighted with coal oil lamps and had to be kept open till 9 or 10 o'clock every night for the two or three customers who might happen in, and for the accommodation of the loungers to sit around the stove and discuss the questions of the day."

Bell Shoe Firm is 103 Years Old

The oldest shoe manufacturing establishment in Canada is that of J. & T. Bell, which has been 103 years in business. The business was started by two brothers right in the heart of old Montreal, close to where the St. Lawrence Boulevard begins to-day. Two brothers, Joshua and Thomas Bell, started in a tiny shop to turn out women's turn prunella cloth buskins. At the death of Thomas, the business passed into the hands of Samuel Bell, another brother, by whom it was in time sold to the latter's nephews, the late John T. Hagar and the late John Stevens. The partnership between these two was dissolved after a year or two, Mr. Hagar continuing the business as sole proprietor. In the meantime, the plant had been moved to the present stand on Inspector street, and housed in a splendid building. John T. Hagar died in 1909, and the business was formed into a joint stock company, with H. E. Moles, who has been connected with it for many years, as vice-president and managing director. Under his efficient guidance the historic firm is flourishing to-day.

Other Institutions of Very Long Records

Other historic shoe and leather firms in the Dominion which antedate Confederation and to whom extended reference has been made in these columns during the past few months, are the Breithaupt Leather Co., of Kitchener, founded in 1857; Charles Parsons & Son, leather and shoe findings dealers, 79 Front street east, Toronto, was founded in 1845; the W. B. Hamilton Shoe Co., 15 Front street east, Toronto in 1848. The firm of A. Davis & Son, leather manufacturers, Kingston, had its inception in 1856. The John McPherson Co., shoe manufacturers, Hamilton, was founded in London in 1855. The C. S. Hyman Co., of London, has been in existence since 1834. The late Ellis W. Hyman, the founder of the business, who died some years since, established with the late John McPherson the first shoe factory in London. When John McPherson moved to Hamilton, the business at London was continued on Carling street, and the firm name changed to C. S. Hyman & Co. The Marlatt & Armstrong Co., of Oakville, was launched in 1854, by the late S. D. Marlatt. E. Leadley & Co., 87 Front street east, Toronto, dealers in hides, skins, wool, etc., have been in existence fifty-three years, and many other firms might be named.

The founders in each instance have departed to their long home, but the businesses that they launched long before Confederation, go on and prosper, gaining strength and stability with the onward sweep of the years.

The Amherst Boot & Shoe Co., of Amherst, N.S., had its inception just half a century ago, and an extended reference to the golden jubilee of the company was made in our last issue.

The Man Who First Used Shoe Cartons

The first man in Canada to place his shoes in cartons was E. H. Gullidge, of Oakville. His father was a harness maker in that village, as far back as 1835, passing away at the ripe age of eighty-seven. The son learned the harness business, and worked for a number of years in various cities across the line. Mr. Gullidge has one of the finest retail shoe stores to be found in any of the smaller centres in Ontario. He has been in the retail business since the early seventies. As already stated, he was the first merchant to put shoes in cartons, and he has the original boxes to-day. They are substantially built. How the proprietor happened to conceive the idea of enclosing his shoes in some kind of a container is rather an interesting story.

There were no water carts in Oakville in those days. The main street was composed largely of sand, and on windy days it blew into the store, large quantities getting upon the shoes and upon the shelves. One day, there had been a great wind storm and the proprietor was dusting boots until he was weary in body. It was nearly twelve o'clock and his wife shouted that it was about time for him to go to bed. He replied that he did not think he would be able to get any sleep that night if he wiped the dust off all the footwear in stock.

"It was then," continued Mr. Gullidge, "that an idea came to me and I conceived the plan that small boxes might be made for enclosing the shoes. I measured the length, width and height of a pair of men's gaiter shoes, No. 10, which I took down from the shelf, placing them side by side, as pairs are now deposited in a carton. I sent to a wooden box manufacturer and found out what it would cost to make the ends, bottoms and sides of 1,200 boxes. Then I took the parts to a paper box manufacturer in Toronto, and asked

BELIEVES IN SALES AND GOOD WINDOWS

"I am a great believer in sales," declared W. G. Miller, who is manager of the retail department of the Amherst Boot and Shoe Co., Amherst, N.S. "We have two large clearing sales—one in February and the other in August, and smaller special priced sales for all holidays or any special season's opening or particular event in town. We find that they bring a class of people into our store who will only come at sales time, and in fact, they are the other fellow's regular customers. The approbation evil is being overcome, and is to-day only about one per cent. of what it was three years ago."

The firm carries a full range of widths from A to E, in many styles, and therefore can advertise proper fitting. A repair department was conducted for years, until recently, when it was done away with. The store does as much work, but distributes it among the small repairers in the town, and finds it just as satisfactory. The Amherst Boot and Shoe Co's store has a staff of seven, and there is always a big rush on Saturday when three extra clerks are employed.

The entire fixtures are mahogany, the ceiling being a light green and white. For fitting there are three large squares in the centre of the store, about eight by eight feet, each holding four or more chairs. The children's department at the rear has special little chairs on raised platforms.

The firm has possibly the best trimmed windows in the Maritime Provinces, and the accompanying illustration shows a recent effort in that direction. The colors used were purple and white, with background of purple sateen. The streamers were of gold and white crepe. From the top of the window were hung garlands of roses while clusters of roses contained small eight-candle power, frosted, electric bulbs. Artificial flowers were also used, with purple and white lilacs and yellow daffodils.

GOOD SHOES AND COMMON SENSE

"Shoe men deplore the sentiment which causes so many women and girls to refuse to buy attractive and durable shoes simply because they are shy a button or two, or because the vamp is too long or too short, or the toe slightly different from the very latest toe, and possibly the heel not exactly the same as heels on the high-priced shoes," says

"Hide and Leather." "Women could undoubtedly get better shoes at much lower prices than the extreme figures demanded to-day at the retail stores if they used more common sense and were less insistent about getting the latest tricks in fashion. As a result of concentrated demand for latest fashions in shoes, they must bring enough to compensate shoe men for being compelled to carry less fashionable shoes as dead stock. There is less risk in handling men's shoes. Fashions come along more slowly. Most men are satisfied more with comfort than show. Of course, a man's shoe is about the least conspicuous part of his dress. Short skirts make women's shoes just as conspicuous today as hats and bonnets used to be, but which now seem to have suffered from competition with fashionable shoes. Meanwhile, women and girls should understand that the shoes that are not strictly the latest fashion are handsome, shapely and durable, and can be sold at much less than fancy fashions, which are risky to carry in stock and still worse to hold when eclipsed by newer fads."

HOW RETURNED GOODS EVIL EATS UP PROFITS

It is Getting to a Point Where in the Shoe Business it is not Only Costly, but Decidedly Aggravating—Campaign Inaugurated to Restrict the Return of Merchandise Sold—Flagrant Abuses on the Part of Customers, and the Way Dealers are Victimized

THE return goods privilege and other wasteful practices in retailing is about to receive a very severe jolt as a result of a countrywide investigation just completed by the Commercial Economy Board of the Council of National Defence at Washington. This investigation is one of many that the Board is undertaking to see what can be done towards the elimination of the waste that has been going on unrestricted in the commercial life of the country for many years. The return goods evil, unnecessary delivery and cartage, poor credits, and similar matters with which shoe merchants and others of the country have to contend are all under observation, says the "Shoe Retailer."

In a statement prepared for the press, the Board declares that the inquiry has shown not only that the return goods privilege is maintained at an enormous unnecessary cost, but that many of the stores themselves favor limiting it, or eliminating it altogether, as a war measure. A. W. Shaw, chairman of the Board, states that it is of the opinion that action should be taken throughout the United States similar to that taken in some few cities where the stores, on their own initiative, have restricted the costly practice of taking back merchandise that has already been sold and delivered. This is one of the ways by which the stores can release men and equipment for government service, or for more essential work elsewhere.

Return Privilege Greatly Abused by Shoe Customers

In Washington, Joseph Strasburger, proprietor of The Family Shoe Store, has been working for a number of years to bring about the results advocated by the Commercial Economy Board of the Council of National Defence, and he was very enthusiastic over the proposition when a copy of the statement issued by the Economy Board was submitted to him.

"I would be glad to see all of the shoemen of the city, as well as all the other merchants, that the plan might become unanimous, adopt the suggestions of the government and do away with the return goods evil. It is getting to a point in the shoe business where to some extent it is not only costly but decidedly aggravating. I could cite a number of instances where the stores, my own included, have acted in a very unbusinesslike way in humoring the customer.

"Few people realize the cost of the system which allows them to have goods sent from shoe stores to their homes and then taken back to the stores, and it is amazing when you consider it. For instance, I doubt very much if the minimum cost of a salesman is less than five per cent. But take it at 5 per cent. A customer buys the shoes and brings them back and they have to be sold again, and that means a sales outlay of 10 per cent. There are cases, and many of them, where the second customer, for some reason or other, probably not a good one, also returns the shoes and a third sale is necessary. That means that it costs us 15 per cent. to sell that pair of shoes, of which only 5 per cent. is accounted for in the cost of doing business.

How Customers Impose Upon Dealers

"As you know, we have had this question put up at our meetings on a number of occasions and, in fact, the matter is still pending. The Retail Merchants' Association have also been at work to make the plan universal with respect to Washington. I think that the acceptance of returned goods and the refunding of the price paid should be stopped. Why, it has become a regular habit to-day with the ladies to go from store to store, take up the time of the salesman who try the shoes on them, and then after picking out such as they think they would like, perhaps after wasting an hour's time, ask the salesman to send them home on approval, C. O. D., or charge. Then the ladies go to the next store, where the same process is repeated, and it may be that in the course of a day they will go to six or seven stores. This has been brought out at our meetings when the question was discussed. The next day six out of the seven stores will receive their goods back with the request that credit be given for their return.

"Another flagrant abuse of this privilege is where a customer, after making her purchase, goes into another store, and sees a pair of shoes that she thinks she likes better. She tries them on and then tells the salesman that she had already made her purchase and did not feel like buying the second pair. He confidentially tells her that if she takes the shoes that she has just purchased back to the store she can get her money back, and can then buy the pair which she likes better.

"I do not know of any abuse that will eat up profits quicker than this return-goods evil. I hope that business men all over the country will profit by the advice of the government and cut this privilege out."

HOW SHOEMAN OUTWITTED WILY CUSTOMER

"How much are these?"

"Seven-fifty, madam."

The size was seven and the width AA and the shoes were high cut, black kid bals.

After the woman had been fitted, she started to try on pumps and the dealer, scenting danger, opined:—

"Now, before I show this woman too many low cuts, I am going to get her money for this high cut pair, or I will be out my time and the sale also."

Knowing that the inquiry for low cuts was simply one of a temporizing character, or that curiosity was her motive for looking at them, the merchant told the young lady, who was employed in the whitewear branch of a department store, that she had a very difficult foot to fit with a pump, and he did not think he had anything in stock that would suit her. So she paid him the $7.50 and went away with the black kid high cuts.

Four days later she reappeared with the shoes and asked that she be given the money back. In a terrible hurry she must be waited upon at once. She said they had chipped on the heel and she wanted the cash.

The retailer, whom we will call Brown, had had similar nervy requests to refund money, and told her frankly that under no circumstances would he hand her back the purchase price, but would give her another pair of the same kind in which there was no defect.

No, that would not answer, she must have the money. Then she went on with a long lingo to the effect that she had many friends who patronized his store, that it was on their recommendation she had come to him—Brown—for her footwear, etc.

"Well, I would not exchange shoes for your friends, whom I know very well, and I am certainly not going to do it for you, a comparative stranger," he replied.

"Oh, well," spoke up Miss T—, "they need never know anything about it."

"But that would be deception," declared Brown, "and I believe in being open and fair in my dealings, and treating all alike."

Finding that this argument did not avail, she declared that she was moving and must have the money right away. If Brown would hand her back the purchase price she would be in the following Saturday for sure and take a pair exactly the same kind.

"Are you sure of that?" inquired Brown.

"Do you think I would break my word?" she retorted.

"Well," quoth the dealer, "I will tell you what I will do. You leave the shoes with me, and I will allow you five dollars on them, on the understanding that you return on Saturday next and take them. I will hold this offer open only for two days, and loan you the money on the distinct stipulation that you are back again on Saturday."

Finding no other course open to her, and evidently needing the money right away, the woman accepted the five-dollar loan. She left the shoes as security, and true to her promise, appeared the next Saturday, handed over the five dollars and took away the pair with which there was really nothing wrong.

The moral of this story is that, if the fair caller had succeeded in wheedling the whole purchase price of the shoes from the dealer, on the understanding that she would be back on the day appointed, and take possession of them, she would never have kept her promise. When she had $2.50 at stake and had to forfeit that sum, in case she did not carry out her agreement, it put a different complexion on the whole affair, and she had to redeem the shoes or lose this sum.

Business is often a battle and in this particular case the shoeman would certainly have never effected a sale, if he had weakly yielded to the request for money back. Let a dealer once start the practice of refunding cash (unless in very unusual cases or circumstances), at once he opens a door that will lead to all kinds of trouble, annoyance, delay and losses. Shoes once sold should stay sold.

THE FURY OF ONE FEMALE SHOPPER

A woman entered a north end store in Toronto the other day and asked for a two-tone effect in a white fabric shoe. She tried on several pairs, and finally selected one at $4.00, paid the money and departed. Fifteen minutes after she had gone, another lady, evidently an unmarried sister of the wedded customer, bustled in. In a breezy and perky manner, going up to the boss, she said:

"I brought these shoes back. Sadie was in here just a few minutes ago and got them. I do not see what she wants them for; she has three pairs at home just now, and that is all she requires. Will you please give back the money?"

The dealer explained that it was not the practice of the store to refund the cash; that if he did so, he would never know when a sale was made, and there would be returns all the while. Reading between the lines, it looked as if Mrs. Sadie had gone home and, evidently not liking the shoes, was seized with that fatal disease, changing her mind. Apparently she had not sufficient courage to return and demand her money, and her sister had probably said: "Oh, well, give me the shoes; I will take them back to the store and get the cash all right." And she of the presumptuous nature had started off with that object in view.

The request was renewed by the caller, but the footwear merchant impressed upon her that he would not mind exchanging the shoes for any other pair in the shop, but so far as giving the money back, that was entirely out of the question. Finding that artifice, strategy and persuasion were of no avail, the young lady spoke up:—

"Oh, well, Sadie was looking at an all-white pair here. I think she would like them better than this two-tone effect."

"All right, I will let you have the pair that she was trying on," was the response.

The young woman said: "I want size 6½, please."

"Well, that is not the size I fitted on your sister," declared the dealer; "the boot was a seven and it fitted her perfectly."

It happened that the carton was marked $3.50. The young woman had evidently noticed this, but did not take prompt action. She had the all-white shoes done up and had left, when she returned in a hurry.

"By the way, those were marked $3.50, were they not?"

"Yes," said the retailer.

"There is fifty cents coming to me," she replied; "I want that balance in cash."

"Well, you cannot get it here," rejoined the footwear dispenser.

"Then if I cannot get it in cash, give me a polishing outfit."

"All right," was the ready reply, and with the pair of all-white shoes (for which only $3.50 had been asked of the first caller) and the polishing outfit, the sister started off once more, evidently not any too well pleased with the result of her mission or brazen attempt to have the dealer refund the cash.

Once more she came back, opened the door—the retailer having accompanied her to the front—and declared, with considerable emphasis:—"You're a h— of a business man."

NEWSY BRIEFS FROM QUEBEC

E. Tremblay, shoe manufacturer, has returned from a business trip to Montreal and Ottawa.

F. Blouin, of J. A. Scott, leather merchant, and Alfred Marois, of Tourigny & Marois, were in New York recently on a business trip.

Alfred Dupere, of Dupere & Garant, spent a few days recently in Montreal on business.

Many shoe jobbers were in town last week looking up samples. They report that they are well pleased with the various styles displayed and the attractive lines on which the new models are built.

Sole leather is still firm at the old price, and there are no recent changes in other lines of leather. Shoe nails and tacks have made another advance, the increase in some instances being two cents a pound.

White shoes of all kinds have been in exceptionally strong demand, and retailers report a very brisk trade during the past few weeks. The darker shades of brown are also popular, and will likely continue to be good sellers for fall.

A. Daigle, shoe repairer, has purchased a Progressive repair outfit from Dupere & Garant. P. Paquet, salesman of the staff of the latter firm, is back from an extended trip through the St. John district, where he booked a large number of orders.

Mr. and Mrs. L. J. Breithaupt, of Kitchener, are spending a few days in Quebec, and are guests at the Chateau Laurier.

Some of the factories are very busy in finishing their orders, among them being the John Ritchie Co., J. E. Samson and Gale Bros.

J. A. Belanger, of Robin Bros. last manufacturers, Montreal; Alfred Lambert, Montreal; J. E. Woods, of Cotton Threads, Limited, Montreal; L. E. Dupre, of the Independent Box Toe Co., Montreal; Ernest Dupre, of the Dominion Dye Co., Montreal, and R. E. Woodward, of F. E. Woodward & Son, Lachine, were among the recent callers on the trade in Quebec.

PROGRESSIVE "ISLAND" SHOE HOUSE

The firm of Morris & Smith, Charlottetown, P.E.I., has been in business about fifteen years. The original partners were Mr. W. F. Morris and Mr. A. E. Smith, who, as they succeeded from year to year, increased their stock and their trade until five or six years ago, they moved into the present building, which has an attractive and imposing new front. Early in 1915, Mr. E. H. Beer, who had been successively in the retail and wholesale line in Charlottetown for many years, and who, in 1911, had severed his connection with Beer & Weeks, purchased an interest in the Morris & Smith firm, with the object of enlarging their retail trade, and adding the wholesale end. Both of these purposes have been successfully accomplished. The firm now occupy practically the entire three storey building, with annex behind, and are conducting one of the largest and most satisfactory footwear houses in the province. Among the recent improvements are the handsome new Kawneer front as shown in the accompanying cut, the entire refurnishing of interior of the retail store, and the addition of an elevator. Mr. Beer attends to the wholesale end of the business and Messrs. Morris and Smith supervise the requirements of the retail trade. The members of the firm are always right on the job, and ready for business.

The Shoe Repair Man

STANDING UP TO A MACHINE

Step up to your machine and stand close to it and hold the work firmly. The more space covered by your hands the firmer the grip. Small hands, says the "Shoe Repairer and Dealer," do not hold so firmly as larger hands. Work which is well gripped will be passed through easier and quicker and the machine will give better results, the same as work solidly supported during any operation. If you are using the edge-setting machine, as you should, if you are to set edges to compare with edges of brand new shoes, do not rely on the rubbing of the iron against the edge, but on the lifting up of the work against the iron to shape the edge. The edge setting machine is intended for shaping the sole edge to the shape of the iron first and in the second place for smoothing and shining up the surface of the edges.

The lifting up is then of prime import and calls for the operator standing as near to the machine as possible and underneath the work, as it were, so as to have additional strength in lifting up against the work. Take edges that have been tempered the day before and that are set while still in temper and you will note that a far better edge in every way will result.

Brush off the ink and brush off the heel edges after scouring to take away all the fine dirt before setting. Try a pair that have been brushed and another that have not and note the difference in smoothness and in gloss. The outsole stitcher calls for standing up close and, as a matter of fact, all machines can be better and easier operated by standing near the work and holding firmly. If you have noticed, those who are sure, they are not efficient operators, they stand away and hold the work at arms' length. You will feel less tired out at night. Why is the welt sewing machine, for example, set on such a high post? Simply because the rule is to lift up on the work and the height of the post allows the operator to stand under the work by standing near the machine. Wearing gloves does not allow for so firm a grip upon the work and bare hands have a better grip every time. The above notes are written by one who has heard experts talk on the subject in different shoe factories, and although it is rather hard to change one's accustomed position at a machine, it is often worth while to persist and do so.

THE NEW GOODYEAR STITCHER

A new model Goodyear stitcher for repair work contains some new features that are claimed to be of great advantage to shoe repairers.

One of the most important of these advantages is the application of electric heat so that, by a turn of the switch, in a few minutes the wax pot, bobbin, and other parts are heated to just the right temperature to keep the wax in proper condition for stitching. When the machine is once warmed up, but is remaining idle for the time being, and it is desired to keep the machine warm, this can be done by cutting down the amount of electric heat through the rheostat control. This rheostat control enables the repair shop to keep the machine and the wax warm without a degree of heat necessary when using, and which would tend to over-heat or cook the wax if the full degree of heat is left on while the machine is idle.

To assist the low degree of heat in keeping the machine warm while the machine is idle, the entire top of the machine is covered with a hood, the effect of which is to retain the heat and to exclude the dirt. This hood keeps the heated parts at uniform temperature and protects the machine from cold draughts, thus preventing thread breaking.

Another effect of this heat retaining hood is to prevent the oil from dripping down to the lowest point through preventing the cooling and condensation process. This hood enables the machine to be kept warm so as to be in condition

BIG SHOE BOOMS REPAIR BUSINESS

This is a photograph of a giant shoe, $8\frac{1}{2}$ feet long, size 294, and a true model of a No. 7 boot. It is not built of leather but of canvas, with canvas vamp, pantosote quarters, pantosote bellows tongue, canvas pull-strap, metal welt, hooks and eyelets and wooden sole and heel. A seat is provided in the interior of the shoe which will accommodate two persons, while a trap-door over the heel reveals a space in which a large number of parcels can be stored. The shoe is used for a delivery rig as well as for advertising purposes.

The builder and owner is J. C. Thomas, shoe repairer, 282 Osborne street, Winnipeg, and the picture shows his daughter driving the unique outfit. A small door on one side of the leg allows easy entrance for the driver. This is an enterprising feat in advertising that Mr. Thomas has adopted and naturally the novel conveyance attracts a great deal of favorable attention, and shows the inventor to be a man of initiative and progressive ideas.

KEEPING ABREAST OF THE TIMES

Editor, SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL.

In your last issue I noticed a letter from Mr. S. Burnett, recording secretary of the Toronto Shoe Repairers' Association.

The first paragraph of his communication would naturally lead anyone to believe that quite a number of repairers in Toronto were old fashioned cobblers.

In his second paragraph he says, "What they don't know isn't worth knowing," and in the third paragraph he adds, "They have recently been investigating the claims of Mr. Geo. Edwards, of the New Way Shoe Store, of Medicine Hat, Alta., to a new method of affixing soles and heels which he terms 'welding'—an utterly absurd term as applied to a substance like leather."

Is it possible that Mr. Burnett does not know yet that two leathers can be welded together, and made in a belt? These belts are being used in some of the largest factories in the world, and are made to produce millions of horse power. Let Mr. Burnett write to some of the leather belt manufacturers in Canada or the United States and "get wise."

If such is not a "welding" process, what is it? Mr. Burnett would advise all shoemakers to stick to the old rut. The old cobbler always earned his bread by the sweat of his brow, but this is the age of progress, expansion and specialization. Ancient methods will not keep the repairer in the forefront of the procession.

Yours truly,
GEO. EDWARDS.

SHOE REPAIRING COURSE IS POPULAR

The course in shoe repairing at the Military Convalescent Hospital in Saskatoon is proving popular with the returned men. This course also has the distinction of turning out the first student. James Ballindine has learned the trade and has opened a shop in North Battleford. There are now seven students in the department. Three of these will soon finish the training. The course, which is under the direction of A. Johnson, teaches how to make shoes as well as repair them. The men are also taught to do both machine and hand work. The students do the shoe repairing for the men in the hospital. The other boots for their experimental work are donated by the people of Saskatoon. The shoes donated are repaired and then sold. The money is divided among the men in the department.

HELPFUL HINTS FOR THE REPAIRER

"Replacing buttons with a hand tool gives the desired results, but the process is a slow one and machines to do the work are now available at low figure and should be installed," says "The Shoe Repairer and Dealer." One reason why shoe manufacturers are using thread instead of wire to fasten on buttons is from the fact that in nearly all cases the buttons have to be removed and thread is easily cut off and then the wire is inserted.

Some repairers buy cheap slippers, such as the ten-cent store slippers, and while a customer waits for his shoes to be repaired the slippers are put on, so that he suffers no ill effect from the cold. Some repairers go farther and have a lot of magazines on a shelf next to the waiting settee, and customers find the time less tiresome and the repairer works more at ease. Some have signs reading "Shoe resoled and heeled in twenty minutes."

When the inseam shows through the button at the inside, do not try to remedy this by overfilling, as the foot will then rest on too hard a foundation for comfort. The ridge caused by the inseam is sometimes quite prominent, due to the heft of the insole. In a turn shoe the inseam ridge can be overcome by inserting a heavy filler, and that is proper, as the filler sets directly against the foot and is not under the sole, as in the case of welt shoes.

Racks are needed to some extent in the repairing business to hold old shoes and shoes that have been repaired, etc. Do not buy old racks, but new ones, and thereby save time and money, because a new rack will be easily rolled about. Shellac new racks and keep them clean by washing, say, once a month. A nice looking place attracts people and is a paying policy in due time.

Repairers will often insert nails, fine nails, along the edge of the new top, so that once outsole stitched the metal shows next the stitches, and then customers are liable to say that the shoes are not repaired properly since the Good-year System (so-called) means no metal inside the shoe. The fine nails hold the sole solidly during the stitching operation, but should not be numerous and none at all is still better. With a very heavy sole the fine nails are needed to hold the sole firmly in place during the stitching and nails are used in such cases only.

When the insole is quite thin the steel shank piece will show through and act against the foot, and to overcome this objectionable feature the shoe support is about the only means, or a sole leather extension of some kind. This happens in women's shoes more than in men's shoes, and the nails in the heel also protrude, so that this extra piece of sole leather should be quite thin and of first quality and should start at the heel end up to the ball, but below the ball. There again "two birds killed with one stone."

CANADIAN ARMY BOOT IS O.K.

Somewhere Overseas, June 26th, 1917.

Editor, SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL,

Sir,—It might be interesting for you to know that the "despised" Canadian army boot is now being worn throughout England by the British Tommy.

"British War Office, Order No. 1345, under date of June 4th, 1917, states that boots (ankle) Canadian, are now available at ordnance and indents may be forwarded for same."

Rather a blow to those who did not believe the Canadian boot a worthy article, especially as the British War Office connects itself only with substantial articles of merit.

As an old shoe traveler I thought this would be interesting news to the Canadian trade.

With kindest regards, I remain,

"Ex-Shoe Traveler on Duty with the forces overseas."

P.S.—The "Tommys" all prefer the Canadian last, as it is a nice fitter and suits them O.K.

BIG CONTRACT FOR AMERICAN ARMY SHOES

The United States Government has placed orders for 2,200,000 pairs of army shoes, and the average price is $4.73 per pair for field and marching shoes. The total contracts to date amount to more than 7,000,000 pairs. Side leather is to be used in the uppers and hemlock and union sole in the bottoms. Deliveries must be completed by the end of 1917.

ABOUT THE PRICE OF RUBBER HEELS

Editor, SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL,

At the last meeting of the St. Catharines Shoe Repairers' Association, I was instructed to write you regarding the different companies advertising "Rubber Heels Attached, 50 cents." Now, sir, we think that as the price of rubber heels has been increased to us, we have the right to charge accordingly. Therefore, we now get 55 cents for men's, and 50 cents for women's. One agent was here during the past week with advertising cards and large posters, "50 cents attached." We will welcome their advertising, also all the other companies, but wish they would eliminate the price. One of our members rents a shop, has his price list 55 cents for rubber heels (men's), and on the outside of the building there is a big ad, "50 cents put on." Look what a position he is in. Could you advise us as to how to act in this matter?

Yours very truly,

St. Catharines, Ont.

(See Front Cover)

George P. Beal has seen the leather business of Canada grow. When Beal Bros. came from Ottawa to Toronto, some thirty odd years ago, the Queen City was laying its present secure foundation as a shoe and leather centre of importance in the Dominion.

Beal Bros. have always had the ambition to be the headquarters for all new and good things in these lines, and the expression "Beal Has It" originated in the ceaseless energy of the head of the concern to keep it absolutely in the front rank in this respect.

Geo. P. Beal has the satisfaction of seeing the business pass largely to younger, if not more active hands, nevertheless he keeps his watchful eye on the organization, and is as keen as ever in his interest in its success. Although one of the "boys of the old brigade," he is as competent as ever to do his bit, either in office, warehouse or tannery. His geniality and general bonhomme, as well as his keen business ability, have made him a personal factor in all leather movements. He is a farmer, by the way, as well as a leather man and takes a deep interest in agricultural matters, both theoretically and practically.

The various board and paper parts were then sent to Mr. Gullidge. He and an assistant set to work to make the cartons, and while they are a little bulkier and heavier than the cardboard receptacles used to-day, they have stood the wear and test of time, and many years ago attracted visitors to see the neat and new arrangement for keeping stock.

Referring to the golden jubilee of Confederation, the last issue of the "Dominion," which is published by the Canadian Consolidated Rubber Co., Montreal, makes the following interesting reference: "More than a decade before Confederation was effected in 1867, the rubber industry had become established in Canada. In a factory along the banks of the St. Lawrence, in the city of Montreal, the first Canadian rubber shoes were made. As this factory was located on the present site of our Canadian Rubber Factory, the Dominion Rubber System can trace a direct lineage to Canada's first rubber factory. From that small beginning has developed the present Dominion Rubber System, an organization comprising eight large factories, twentieth-eight service branches throughout Canada, a working organization of over four thousand people and doing a $12,000,000 volume of business in 1916. System is analogous with that of Canada and the same energy and enterprise that established the greatness of our system have helped to make Canada prominent in the eyes of the whole world. The Dominion Rubber System is the largest rubber manufacturing organization in the British Empire, which fact is a splendid tribute to the industrial progress and stability of our fair young Dominion."

Another historic institution is the Canada Last Co., Limited, which has been in business in Toronto for fifty-six years. The industry was started by Selwyn, Iredale & Ward, on Adelaide street, a short distance west of Yonge street. After a while it was transferred to the corner of Sheppard street and Richmond, where it was located until ten years ago, when a removal was made to the company's own building on Van Horne street. Wm. Iredale, one of the founders, passed away about five years ago at the ripe age of eighty-four. His son, J. C. Iredale, is president, and Charles M. Iredale, a grandson, is sales manager.

HARTT'S MAY ERECT SPECIALTY FACTORY

The annual general meeting of the Hartt Boot & Shoe Co., Limited, Fredericton, N.B., was held last week.

The major portion of the stock of the company was represented at the meeting. John D. Palmer, the president of the company, on behalf of the directors submitted the annual report which was a satisfactory one considering the many difficulties resulting from war conditions in the way of securing proper materials, as well as skilled labor which it was necessary to secure, owing to the many enlistments.

The matter of further development also was referred to in the president's report and discussed. Nothing definite was arrived at as to location, but the hope was expressed by some of the stockholders present that the directors may consider favorably the locating in Fredericton of the proposed new specialty factory which, it is understood, will not conflict in any way with the present product which is exclusively of men's footwear of a high class.

The usual dividend of 6 per cent. was declared and the directors elected were John D. Palmer, John A. Reid, John Kilburn, Edward Moore and Chas. F. Roberts, the latter replacing the late J. W. McCready.

A meeting of the directors was held June 28th, when the following officers were re-elected: J. D. Palmer, president; J. A. Reid, vice-president; Chas. F. Roberts, secretary.

NEW SHOE FACTORY STARTS OPERATIONS

Phillips Bros. Shoe Co., Limited, have begun operations at 1191 Bathurst street, Toronto, where they have over five thousand feet of floor space in well-lighted and well-located premises. Composed of Jasper W., William and James Phillips, all of whom have had long experience in the manufacturing end of the footwear game, the new firm should make good. Children's and misses' stitchdown welts will be manufactured and marketed through the jobbing trade exclusively. The output will be about four hundred pairs a day in patent, box calf, gun metal and kid leathers. Ladies' boudoir slippers in leather and fabric will also be turned out.

J. W. Phillips first started making stitchdown welts in Toronto a few years ago and has perfected the line in many respects. No nails, tacks or thread are used inside the shoe. The lining is held firm by being stitched in with the outer welt so that it cannot become loose during the wear of the shoe. The insole being stitched to the welt outside prevents the upper drawing away when the outer sole is worn out and the shoe can easily be repaired and resoled. William Phillips, for many years foreman in the cutting room of the Pingree Shoe Co., Detroit, will have charge of the cutting department; James Phillips will supervise the making branch, while the executive end will be looked after by Jasper W. Phillips, formerly of the Unique Shoe Co., Toronto, and the Solid Leather Shoe Co., Preston.

THE AMBITIOUS CITY IN 1867

Editor SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL:

In speaking in your last edition of the death of an old resident of Hamilton who had resided in that city before Confederation, you refer to Hamilton as being "little more than a struggling village" at that time. This statement is perfectly absurd. Hamilton was then no struggling village; it was a handsome city; called then as now the Ambitious City. The chief officers of the Great Western Railway, its workshops, rolling mills, grain elevators, in which hundreds of men found employment, were then located in Hamilton. In addition to the extensive works of the Great Western Railway, Hamilton could then boast of other large mercantile and manufacturing establishments. The buildings were chiefly of stone and brick, and many presented an imposing appearance. The chief business streets then, as now, were King, James, John York and McNab. The Bank of British North America, Bank of Montreal, Canadian Bank of Commerce, Merchants Bank and Royal Canadian Bank had branches in Hamilton in Confederation year, and they, as well as the public buildings, churches and many of the stores, were handsome and costly structures. The city was well lighted with gas (of course electricity was then not well known), and had an excellent system of drainage. It possessed magnificent waterworks, the supply to the reservoir being brought from Lake Ontario, a distance of nine miles. On the rising ground approaching the mountain were numbers of elegant residences. The city had eight or ten clubs, including football, baseball, bowling and curling clubs. There was a ladies' college, a convent, public schools, lodges, churches, societies, institutions, asylums, and a Young Men's Christian Association, and half a dozen wholesale dry goods establishments. The population was over 25,000. The same splendid market where the citizens of the Ambitious City purchased their food supplies occupied at that time the same central position that it does today, and daily and weekly newspapers were published, the Times and Spectator being the dailies.

I would ask you, Mr. Editor, does this look like a struggling village?

I would display in my window a pair of the smallest baby size beside the largest man's footwear in stock. Then scattered around in the window, and attached to the baby shoes with ribbon, I would have numerous popular styles and sizes of youth's shoes. Attached to the big man's size I would have similar lines of adult's shoes in the smaller sizes. Over all, I would have a card: "From This to This, And All Between." I feel sure that a display of this kind would bring customers in, and would make every passerby remember my store for a long while.—T. R. Robson in "System."

NEWSY BRIEFS FROM ST. JOHN

William H. McConnell, a former well-known shoe dealer of St. John, N.B., died in the general public hospital recently from shock and injuries sustained as a result of a fall over a wharf into the harbor. He was rescued and rushed to the hospital, where everything possible was done to prolong life, but his advanced years nullified their efforts and he succumbed after a hard battle for life. In 1877, when the terrible conflagration visited this city, Mr. McConnell was associated with his brother in the boot and shoe business in King street. The fire destroyed their large establishment. Mr. McConnell passed away on the fortieth anniversary of the great St. John fire. Following his loss of business in the fire Mr. McConnell reopened a shoe store in Main street, which he conducted until a few years ago, when he retired to private life. He is survived by five sons and three daughters.

Private William O'Connor, of the 236th Kilties Battalion, who was formerly junior clerk in Waterbury & Rising's retail shoe store in King street, is with the officers who are in the United States on a recruiting trip.

Sergeant Percy Steel, a well-known and popular young shoe merchant in St. John North, left recently for a Canadian port to embark for England. He is a member of a machine gun section under command of Lieut. Scammell, and although only acting in the capacity of sergeant, holds qualifying certificates for captaincy in infantry and lieutenant in cavalry and machine gun section uni's.

CANADIANS SHOULD GO AFTER FOREIGN BUSINESS

Writing to the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL, a leading leather firm says:—

"We feel that after July conditions will materially improve, but on the other hand Canadian manufacturers will have to stir themselves, and not sit and wait for the business to come to them. For instance, today Great Britain is declining to allow the export of boots and shoes, except army boots for shipment to the Allies. What steps are the Canadian manufacturers taking to get some of this business in other parts of the Empire, such as South Africa, India, Australasia, etc.? United States manufacturers are going hard after this business, and there is no reason in the world why Canadian manufacturers should not get a good share of it if they go after it, but of course it will not come to them unsolicited."

WHAT effect will the participation of the United States in the war have on the shoe style trend for fall and winter? For several months this question has been in the minds of shoe retailers, says the 'Shoe Economist.'

They have remembered that for several years this paper has maintained that retailers could not with safety purchase footwear too far in advance of the retail selling season. In deference to this policy, this paper has deferred the publication of its views on fall shoe styles until information, sufficiently definite, authoritative and accurate for retailers to follow it in their fall buying, could be obtained.

That this policy is the only safe one to be followed is again clearly shown by the fact that governmental influences have operated during the last ten days to bring about a vital change in the fall shoe styles trend—a change which places it along lines entirely different from those on which fall buying has heretofore been conducted.

These governmental suggestions, with our comments on them, are presented in the another article. They point very conclusively to the 7-inch limit placed upon the height of the woman's boot tops as the outstanding feature of the fall style trend.

It is fortunate that the length of skirts in the fall garment styles are such as to call for the 7-inch height in boots.

Until the present time fall shoe styles have been predicated on the assumption that skirts more or less extreme in their shortness would again be worn during the coming fall and winter.

Boot With Seven-Inch Top

The appearance of youthfulness is best afforded by a dress that has the short, full skirt; if greater length is given to the skirt, it must, in order to retain the youthful effect, be narrow, or, in other words, must outline the figure. The present tendency is toward straight-line effects, but with a certain degree of fullness—sufficient to allow a woman to wear the length of skirt that best suits her. The average length of the skirts of tailored suits and dresses is 6 to 8 inches from the ground. Dressy gowns often extend to within 5 inches of the ground and are sometimes longer.

Generally speaking Paris is giving what may be termed "service" fashions and is designing women's clothing with an eye to practical use.

American styles in women's wear will, undoubtedly, accord with this idea, for every American woman is now doing her patriotic "bit," or getting ready to do it.

The footwear styles illustrated fit in well with the garment styles that will be worn during the coming fall and winter. When it is remembered that garment fashions for the coming fall and winter will prescribe a slightly longer skirt than the recent average, it will be seen that the 7-inch top boot is not only extremely practical from the standpoint of conservation of material, but is also dictated by fashion as the high style boot, and will therefore be demanded by consumers the country over.

Another feature common to garment and shoe styles for fall and in which the retailer therefore is much interested, is color.

Women's garments will show a general use of dark shades, largely of a staple character. These dark shades, moreover, will be employed in garments for house as well as street wear and without regard to the wearer's age. Black will be prominent.

The principal colors, in their order of preference, are:

navy and other dark blues; browns, including khaki and tan; such shades of gray as taupe and oxford; a few dull reds and purples, and a sparing use of dark greens.

Leading Colors for Tops

Inasmuch as the woman this fall will, as heretofore, buy her footwear from a style as well as a wear standpoint, tops with colors that harmonize or contrast will be favored. Naturally the colors which lead in women's garment styles will be the ones on which the keynote of the shoe color vogue for the coming season will be based.

The two leading shoe top colors, however, will be gray and brown, in the various shades, in combination with black and tan vamps.

All Materials Good

Two years ago it was a matter of choice with every retailer whether he purchased kid, cloth, buck or suede footwear. Now he has no choice in the matter; he is compelled, through necessity, to purchase shoes made of all materials that are suitable and available for making footwear. Furthermore, the consumer has been so educated that the present-day retailer needs a variety of patterns and designs in all shoe materials in order to satisfy the various desires.

In purchasing footwear the retailer should ever keep in mind the outstanding fact that it is not so much a question with the consumer as to what material is employed in making a shoe, as of whether the shoe is "pretty"—whether it presents as attractive an appearance in one material as in another. Footwear turned out by American manufacturers from all the kinds of materials suitable for making shoes during the past few months proves that "pretty" and "attractive" footwear, possessing all the elements required by fashion or high style, can be manufactured and will be acceptable to the consumer.

The subject of patterns is one which will receive unusual attention from each purchaser of fall footwear. For the last two years the vogue has been for lace shoes, and fall purchases made up to this time have been made in the belief that lace shoes will continue to lead in the demand for the coming fall and winter.

Under normal conditions the adoption of the 7-inch top boot as the high-style height for my fair lady for the coming season's footwear would bring about a natural vogue for button pattern shoes. At this time, however, conditions are not normal, and military influences on garments and on footwear seem to require the continued use of the lace pattern in the service type of footwear such as we have referred to.

Buttons Real High Style

Retailers who have studied the subject of style in footwear during a period of years will feel, however, that the button boot is due again—first, because the lace shoe has had the call for two years and the consumer is ready for a change to something different, provided that something is just as nifty and pretty as its predecessor, and, second, because a 7-inch top boot carries with it more real high style in the button pattern than it does in the lace.

Both pumps and oxfords will be worn with overgaiters and, judging from the demand for overgaiters this spring, there is promise of more overgaiters being worn during the coming fall and winter than during any previous season.

"SHOW ME" SAY LEADERS IN FISHING CONTEST

"Porpoise is not a Fish," Declares one Antagonist—"Bonsecours Market Catch Don't Count," Asserts Another—Hon. E. J. Davis Gets Into the Game and Pulls off no Mean Performance—The Competition Grows Hotter as Weather Gets Warmer

FOR the championship silver cup offered by the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL for the fishing season of 1917, competition is growing more acute and keener interest is being aroused all the while.

Letters of protest against certain entries and asking that some competitors be ruled out on various scores have come to hand.

Narcisse Gagnon, of Montreal, who won the honor last year is a formidable antagonist this season and, in a recent interview, said: "As for the catch of Mr. J. A. McLaren, of Toronto, while it may seem very large, still the fish which he captured were small perch—little bits of things—scarcely worth carrying home. Anyone can land this kind of fish in any nearby water. When I speak of fish I mean those of some size and not mere pigmies. As for Hugh White, of Toronto, I do not think that he has any real claim to the distinction of being the champion angler. A porpoise is not a fish and the one captured by Mr. White was after appears as if the fish were caught on the Bonsecours market in Montreal early one fine morning in June. If the angling performance was a genuine one why are the members attired in starched shirts and collars with a nice carpet on the floor and a photographer's beautiful background in the rear, along with other accessories of the studio. The surroundings do not look natural. The picture is certainly not a snapshot taken in the wilds of nature or with the members garbed in regulation fishing costume. The disguise is altogether too thin to deceive any but a novice in the art. Further bona fide evidence will have to be submitted. No weight or size, except for one of the fish, is given. The whole scene savors too much of a deliberately prearranged plan. I still contend that I have won the title openly and above board and not by visiting a market or going to a photographer's with purchased piscatorial products. Deeds count and I will welcome any achievement that equals mine. The more who enter the race the merrier. Messrs. Gagnon, Marois, Routhier, Borne, LeBlanc, Roy, Davis, Milburn, McLaren and others will have to indulge in a good many expeditions and practice stunts before they can convince the trade that they are in the running for 1917. With all modesty let me say that I consider I am in a class by myself and in the words of the average Missourian they will have to "show me."

Western Man Has Good Luck

J. C. Sabin, of the Vancouver branch of the Canadian Consolidated Rubber Co., was recently on a fishing trip up the Squamish River. The accompanying snapshot taken at the camp gives some idea of the good fortune that he had. The little girl seen in the picture is his daughter. Mr. Sabin is an ardent angler.

Took Thirty Minutes to Land One

Hon. E. J. Davis, President of A. Davis & Son, Limited, Kingston, Ont., left his home in Newmarket on June 25th, arriving in Kingston on the morning of the 26th, to spend several days there. At gray dawn on the 27th Elmer Davis, vice-president, suggested that they spend the day salmon fishing. This was a pleasing suggestion and the twain left for Buck Lake, about twenty-five miles from Kingston. Ten o'clock found them at the lake. A few minutes after they were in their boat with their guide rowing, and using Bristol rods and three to four hundred feet of fine copper wire, trolling for salmon. It was a love'y day and like all fishermen they had strong hopes of a successful catch. A nice shore dinner between twelve and one added to the enjoyment of the occasion and the appetite one develops under those conditions is simply remarkable.

When the shore was reached at the conclusion of the day's fishing and the catch was counted up, it was found that they had secured 13 nice salmon trout. The event of the outing happened just before noon when the President hooked a very large salmon which took 30 minutes to land. When weighed it tipped the scales at 18½ pounds. It is seldom one hooks a fish of that size and it is an experience that lingers long in the memory.

The Davis party returned to Kingston about 9.00 p.m. having thoroughly enjoyed the day.

Mr. Elmer Davis, of Kingston, is willing to take all the honors that belong to him in the fishing line as well as in leather but establishes an alibi in favor of his brother in the fishing trip of June 2nd at Riviere a Pierre, Quebec, all not such a monster. If he wants to see a big porpoise I will go down to the lower St. Lawrence and there, on the banks of the Saugenay, will bring home a specimen that will put to shame the one which he killed. Let him equal my performance when I was down the St. Lawrence last fall with Fred Marois, of Quebec, and then he has a right to enter the contest. Until he has shown some genuine members of the finny tribe larger than I corralled, he should not take so much credit for what he has done.

"Again, I say that a porpoise is not a fish and never was. I maintain that, when it comes to weight and size, my achievement has not yet been equalled and before the season closes I will demonstrate to Messrs. McLaren and White that they are a long way behind in the race. They will have to go some before they are in my class."

Good Fishing on Bonsecours Market

Hugh White, of Toronto, writes the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL: "I notice that Mr. Gagnon and others figuring in a picture in the last edition of your paper and they are represented as holding up four large salmon. They are alleged to have captured these at some unknown resort, the identity of which they all not or rather, I should say, dare not disclose. No wonder, for, on a close examination of the illustration, it as reported in our last issue. It was Mr. Andrew Davis, of Newmarket, who was the central figure in the trout catching record, as evidenced by his large and pleasing person in the accompanying camp photo. Mr. Davis claims that the experience transcended all his early dreams of trout fishing. He says it is hard to say what the catch would have been had they really tried to fish. He and Carter claim that Borne and Marois could quit the leather and shoe business and make a fortune at running a resort at any time.

We understand that jobbers who recently returned from Quebec say that most of their time was devoted to fishing talk rather than buying shoes. Even the conscription question was lost sight of in the excitement in the discussions that took place through the day and during the evenings with regard to monster fish and fabulous catches. In one of these animated arguments some Ontario jobbers were accused of working catfish and chub into their piscatorial adventures.

Salmon Fishing in Quebec

Mr. Chas. N. Candee, of the Gutta Percha and Rubber Co., Limited, has just returned from his annual visit to the salmon grounds of far Quebec, with abundant evidences of the annual outing upon his person, as well as in his luggage. The season was a little late this year, and Western people will hardly believe that back in the wilds snow shoes were still being used in some cases. The cold weather kept the salmon back two or three weeks, and Mr. Candee had to leave just as things were getting lively. The sport was good, however, and the bag satisfactory, although his largest fish this year was only twenty-eight pounds as against twenty-nine last year. He had the unusual experience of having one frisky salmon land in his canoe in a fight which only lasted a few seconds.

W. G. Parsons, president of C. Parsons & Son, leather merchants, Front street east, Toronto, and Jas. McMillan, secretary-treasurer of the company, took a few days off last week and went down to Rice Lake on a fishing expedition. They had rare good luck and captured a number of lunge, the largest specimen weighing sixteen pounds. Mr. Parsons remembered a large number of his friends with generous slices of the piscatorial prodigy, and they all found that it was good eating, and say "come again."

MILITARY STYLES TO THE FRONT

New conditions, consequent upon the war, are coming upon the women's shoe trade, and manufacturers of Lynn, Mass., are wondering just how far they will go. Military styles already are strong in the men's trade, and there is speculation as to how much they will prevail in the women's trade. The men's trade is fitting shoes a little broader, and a little longer, as army shoes are fitted, and the manufacturers are wondering if women's shoes will likewise be fitted wider and longer. The factories are showing the Munson last shoe, also the dress shoe with its sword point toe and $2\frac{1}{4}$ inch heel, the semi-dress shoe, with its dime toe and its 14-8 heel, and the walking boot, with its round toe, and low flat heel; also the skating boot.

A lot of thinking is being done by the manufacturers of Lynn these days about economy in style and efficiency in the production of shoes. They have, it might as well be stated first as last, no intention of hamstringing styles. But they foresee opportunities to bring about new styles, of an economical nature, that will provide for efficiency in the production of shoes, and profit in the sale of shoes.

SHOE & LEATHER JOURNAL FISHING COMPETITION

In order to encourage the friendly rivalry that has been developed in the Shoe and Leather Trades in the past few months through these columns on the subject of FISHING, the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL has decided to offer

TWO SILVER TROPHIES

As set forth in the following specifications and arrangements, to be competed for during the next two months by the members of these trades.

SILVER CUP for the largest Black Bass, small mouth, not less than five pounds in weight, or the largest Speckled Trout, not less than two pounds in weight.

SILVER CUP for the largest Mackalonge, Salmon or Salmon Trout, not less than fifteen pounds in weight.

1. The fish must be caught in Canadian waters with an ordinary rod and line.

2. Mounted specimen or photograph must be submitted, giving size, weight, locality and how caught, and attested to by at least two reputable eyewitnesses or by notary public.

3. Competition to be closed September 10th, and decision to be announced September 15th.

4. Competition open to anyone connected directly with the Shoe and Leather Trades.

5. Decision and award to be made by committee of three consisting of The Editor of Shoe and Leather Journal, James Robinson, of Montreal, and one other to be appointed jointly by these two.

This competition will give a fair chance to fishing enthusiasts in all parts of Canada, and will afford an opportunity to demonstrate the claim of this country to be the greatest on the globe for game fish as well as the piscatorial abilities of the Shoe and Leather Trades.

MADE SALESMEN FEEL GOOD BY SMOOTH TALKS

The Way That Saucy Boss Induced Them to Remain in the Service—Flattery and Promises Cheaper than Increases in Pay, and in Many Instances Worked as Effectively—The Opening that was Just Ready Never Seemed to Materialize

"I WORKED for a very smooth, unctuous, saucy boss," remarked a city traveler the other day, "when I was selling shoes in D—. His name was Chatton, and he certainly had the art of making a man feel that identification with his establishment was one of the rare and golden opportunities that come to anybody in the course of his career. He was short on salary, but long on praise, and made many a young fellow think that it was worth while to be identified with a prosperous, time-honored and dignified establishment such as he conducted.

"We were always going to get a raise or a promotion, and if a fellow were offered another job, and went to Chatton to speak about it, and asked for a raise, he would fill the interviewer with pride by saying: 'Now, I have just been which Chatton spoke of so volubly and with such confidence that kept his underpaid staff in high hope, and fond anticipation, just like many an individual goes through life, feeling that some day, by a sudden turn in the wheel of fortune, he will meet with an unusual measure of good luck, and will have plenty of money, easy times, and happy days.

"Another favorite pastime of Chatton's, when any of the boys, who had left him, would return to the city on a visit, and come into the store, was to take the opportunity of parading the returned wanderers before the members of his staff."

"Oh, by the way, Mr. Jones, or Mr. Smith," he would say, after the effusive greeting was over, "I have several new boys on the staff now. I would like you to come down considering the matter of raising your salary, but have not come to a definite conclusion as yet, but I have something good in view for you. Of course, I know you can get positions elsewhere, some at more money than I am paying, but you will not have the opportunities for advance, service and insight that you get here.'

"And thus he would speak in pleasant, persuasive tones, making one feel as if it would be a crime to leave just at the point when prospects were looming up so brilliantly.

His Persuasive Powers Prevailed

"Well, sir, it became a joke in time, the way that Chatton was deluding a lot of earnest-minded young men, by always dangling the bait of such posts as assistant buyer, head of the children's department, the men's department, or the women's department, window trimmer, advertising manager, etc. Then when anyone did actually leave him, he would express the profoundest regret at the decision they had reached, and while he would not discourage them in their new sphere of labor, still he was extremely sorry to see them depart, and always felt that they were going at the wrong time, for if they had only waited, something big was looming up just around the corner. There was always that mysterious, elusive, speculative good thing, and meet them." So down the store any former servant would be paraded. On arriving at the department Chatton would get off a speech like this:

Every One Looked Good to Him

"Mr. Jones, this is our new man, Mr. Brown. He has been with us for some months now, and I have been watching him with considerable interest. I feel sure that he is going to make good, and has a promising future ahead of him."

"Of course, Brown would straighten up and look pleased at the compliments of the boss, and in order to incite him still further, Chatton would add, turning to the salesman:

"And, Mr. Brown, I want to tell you, that Mr. Jones was with us for several years, getting a splendid training here. He now enjoys a very comfortable and responsible position with the Acme Manufacturing Co. In fact, we have many of our graduates holding the most lucrative posts in Toronto, Montreal, Winnipeg, and other cities."

"In time, however, Mr. Brown would get "wise" to Chatton's method of jolly and promises, unction and bluff, and would waken up to the fact that he was in the hands of one who knew how to play to distinct advantage the weakness which most mortals have for praise, flattery, or eulogy—call it whatever you like,—if only administered by such an adroit boss as Chatton."

"THE WORST ENEMY OF THE RETAIL BUSINESS"

Is the Bargain Sale—The Net Profits are not Nearly as Large as Many Think—So Says F. A. Black, Advertising Manager for the Department Store of Wm. Filene's Sons Co., Boston, Mass.—Stirring Address Before World's Salesmanship Congress

MUCH of the store advertising that we read seems to rest its pulling power on the basis of small cost rather than a more solid foundation of high quality. How seemingly foolish to put price in type very much larger than the name or the description of the article which you are trying to sell. Price alone cannot mean anything; ten cents may be a very high price for one article; ten dollars may be a very low price for another.

In much of the advertising we see there seems to be a disposition to try to make people forget that there is such a thing as the law of compensation. We are taught in school that action must equal reaction, that we reap what we sow; that if taxes are too high they produce no revenue; that if the laws of the country are made too severe there will be made no convictions under those laws; that if one pays too much attention to the accumulation of wealth one is apt to repay for this in the loss of health or something equally valuable. We all know that something for nothing is an impossibility, although much of the retail advertising would seem to be trying to prove that this is not true.

I believe that bargain sales are to-day the worst enemy of the retail business. Bargain sales on close analysis appear to be illogical as good advertising, because they must leave the thought in the minds of the customers that the ordinary, every-day values of a store advertising are not 100 per cent. values. Every merchant would prefer to have his business more evenly distributed. Bargain sale advertising is one of the biggest obstacles in the way of securing this condition.

Should Feature Low-Price Purchases

There are any number of arguments against the bargain sale. Figures taken in stores which are especially keen on statistics indicate that the net profit from such sales are not nearly as large as some people think. At least one good store in this country has decided that it can conduct a more profitable business with almost every semblance of the bargain-sale thought eliminated.

People buy two things—merchandise and service. The bargain sale is a sworn enemy to good service.

When a merchant goes to market, and because of his knowledge of business, because of his industry, secures value in merchandise better than the ordinary, he is only doing what he is supposed to do, fulfilling his function as a merchant. How much better then to present the results of this work to his public as his regular everyday standard of achievement rather than to spend much money on large type to drive home the fact that he has done something much better than he is in the habit of doing and that only a limited few are able to take advantage of this extraordinary achievement and to get the full benefit of his ability as a merchant.

It is unnecessary for me to point out the evils of bargain sales composed of job-lot merchandise. I know of only one store that really has a system enabling it to deal in this kind of merchandise extensively at a profit, and the feature of that system is an automatic clearance plan which positively makes it impossible for odds and ends to accumulate and eat up profits as they will do in an ordinary store.

To Increase the Store's Following

In closing, permit me to present my own pet theory of retail advertising, which is:

"That every reliable store has its own following.

"That it is a store's duty and privilege to keep that following informed as to style, value and other merchandise features and changes.

"That the store doing this the most thoroughly will soon have the largest following.

"That from this permanent following, every store secures a very large, perhaps the largest part of its response to daily advertising.

"That violent display and startling headlines are more annoying than gratifying to that following which can be trained to follow the advertising of its favorite store in almost any readable form in which that store chooses to present it. (This is my way for accounting for the uniform success of widely different styles of store publicity.)

"That this faithfulness does not give any store license to make its publicity dry as dust or lacking in interest or information.

"That failure to recognize this last fact will soon result in a dwindling audience.

"That the store discharging its news-telling duty most carefully and conscientiously will gradually add to its following by recruiting from former adherents of less diligent stores.

"And that this store will in this way build up a following larger and more permanent in character than any that it is possible to build up by sensational display advertising.

"It is my personal belief that the big, broad, profitable view to take of retail advertising is to look upon it as a service owed by a store to its friends—to consider it a duty to provide those friends with the information necessary to enable them to shop in haste, comfort and with satisfaction—(not an easy task in these days of stores that are two blocks square and fourteen storeys high)."

THE QUALITIES OF A SALESMAN

By A. W. Donovan

A salesman, in the highest signification of the term, is a noble animal. Viewed as furnished with all those qualities which should unite to complete the impression, he may be considered as the image of a perfect man.

Employing, in the strictest regulation of his own conduct, the strictest standard of propriety, and in his expectations of that of others the most lenient; cautious in accepting quarrel, more cautious in giving cause for it; lending to virtue the forms of courtesy, and borrowing from her the substance of sincerity; forming his opinions boldly, expressing them gracefully. In resolution firm, in action brave, in conference gentle; always anxious to please and always willing to be pleased; expecting from none what he would not be inclined to yield to all; giving interest to all things, whenever small things cannot be avoided, and gaining elevation for great, whenever great can be attained; valuing his own esteem too highly to be guilty of dishonor, and the esteem of others too considerably to be guilty of incivility; never violating decency, and respecting even the prejudices of honesty; yielding with an air of strength and opposing with an appearance of submission; full of courage, but free from ostentation; without assumption, without servility; too wise to despise trifles, but too noble ever to be degraded by them; dignified but not haughty; firm but not impracticable; learned but not pedantic; to his superiors respectful, to his equals courteous; kind to his inferiors and wishing well to all. Such are the qualities of a salesman. Is there anything here wanting to complete the portrait of a man as he ought to be?

FRED E. JENNER, MONTREAL

LIEUT. C. P. SLATER, MONTREAL

W. J. DRYSDALE, KINGSTON

AN EFFICIENT SHOE MANAGER

Fred. E. Jenner, manager of the shoe department of Goodwins' Limited, Montreal, is regarded as one of the brightest and most progressive of the younger men identified with the footwear line. He is courteous, affable and broad-minded, qualities which have served him in good stead in his career. Born in Toronto, he first started in the shoe game by going to work for C. A. McKimm, of Smith's Falls, with whom he remained over six years. He then entered the service of W. E. Halpin, shoe retailer, of Smith's Falls, and stayed there three and a half years. When Gales & Co. opened their new establishment in Ottawa, he took a position with them and a few months ago he was engaged as manager of the shoe department of Goodwin's Limited, in which he is making a name for himself as an efficient and alert head.

AN ENTHUSIAST IN MATTERS MILITARY

Lieut. C. P. Slater, son of George A. Slater, Montreal, who accepted a commission with the overseas forces and last fall left for England, where he has since been stationed, is now acting as adjutant. He is an enthusiastic military man and graduated from the Royal Military College, Kingston, a few years ago. At the commencement of the war he took an active part with the Army Service Corps at Valcartier, Que. Ill health prevented him from going overseas then but he persisted in his endeavors to enter into active service on the other side of the water and finally succeeded. Previous to accepting a commission Lieut. Slater held the position of executive in charge of the mechanical end of the shoe factory of George A. Slater, Limited.

AN ADEPT IN TWO LINES

W. J. Drysdale, of Kingston, who represents Ames-Holden-McCreedy, Limited, on the territory between Napanee and Toronto, which ground he has been covering for the past five years, is not only an enthusiastic and successful salesman, but is also an ardent curler. He has taken part in the national winter pastime ever since he was sixteen years old and played twice in Montreal for the famous Quebec Challenge Cup. He has also attended bonspiels in many places. Mr. Drysdale was born in Lanark thirty-two years ago and obtained his education there and at the Central Business College, Toronto. He then served several years as a clerk in stores in Perth, Vankleek Hill and Kingston, after which he went on the road for a while. Next he went into the general store business with his father, R. R. Drysdale, in Lanark, and when a shoe factory was started in Perth he took a position as traveler for the firm. Early in 1912 he formed his present connection. His experience has been well rounded and he is well liked by the trade.

SAND SHOES FOR BRITISH TOMMIES

Next time you walk across a wood-block pavement and stick in the tar-ooze think of the British army in Egypt, says the Providence Journal. The contrast will make you happier. For one thing, the British Tommy would give $1,000 for wood-blocks.

But not having pavement, Mr. Atkins is compelled to find a way to walk on dry shifting sand. His latest method is the sand-shoe, which is made of steel and looks something like a flat bird-cage. Mr. Atkins attaches the cage to his shoes, and then can walk along some 10 inches above sand level, while the sand sifts through the meshes of his under-shoes. So Tommy can go on walking with comparative comfort.

SOME NEW EFFECTS IN SHOES

Cloth tops are quite prominent in some displays for fall. It is the opinion of some manufacturers that for women's medium priced boots, cloth tops must be used to a considerable extent in order to offset the high prices of leather. Tips on these boots are both straight and wing, many of the latter having perforated effects. A military boot with wave top has patent vamp and quarter, black cloth top with white braid design around lace-piece and top. Another military boot has top of blue cloth with gold cord around top and lace-piece, perforated vamp and tip. This boot has a wood heel. Another boot, a very smart style, has patent leather vamp and quarter, with perforations on vamp, also perforated wing tip. An effective contrast is afforded by a top of canary buck. This boot is on the straight top pattern, has perforated lace-piece and leather military heel. An eight inch bal of cherry colored kid has perforated wing tip and vamp; is made with a gray buck top, cherry facings. This is a straight top pattern with military leather heel. Another eight inch boot is a khaki-colored bal with straight top, wing tip, perforated, also perforated lacc-stay. This boot carries a military leather heel.

"ME LIKEE SINGSONG BOOT"

John Chinaman often has peculiar ideas about the wearing apparel that he buys in America. For one thing, he always wants boots that are several sizes too large, for he believes that in that way he gets more value for his money. In addition to excessive size, boots may have to possess other peculiar characteristics before they meet his full approval, as the following story from "The Youth's Companion" indicates.

A California merchant offered a pair of fine boots that he had long kept in stock to a Chinese for three dollars. The Oriental finally took them, but two days later he brought them back.

"What's the trouble, John?" inquired the merchant. "Him good boots."

"Him no good," declared John. "Him no singsong boot. Velly soon wear out. Me likee singsong boot or me catchee back t'ree dolla."

"Singsong boot!" exclaimed the merchant. "Me no sabe."

"Me t'ink you sabe, all lite," replied John. "Wha' fo' him boot no singee squeak! squeak! when Chinaman walkee, alle samee good boot?"

When the merchant had given him in exchange for the fine boots a pair of coarse, cheap ones that squeaked loudly, John Chinaman departed highly satisfied.

GIVE CASH SYSTEM FAIR TRIAL

Clapp's Quality Shoe Shop has started business in the Clapp block, Picton, Ont., and is conducted on the cash basis. In an opening announcement the proprietor says: "We saved as high as fifteen per cent. by paying cash for this stock and, for one year, in order to see if there are enough people in Picton and Prince Edward county to support this kind of a store, we have marked our goods with this cash discount deducted. A fair trial is all we ask. Just compare our qualities and then our prices and see if a store of this kind is not a money saver for you. We are in business to stay, and stand behind every pair of shoes sold out of this store, and anything sold here not as represented will be replaced. Our idea of business is not only to sell shoes but to sell goods that fit, wear and please."

PLAIN SHOE BEGINNING TO COME BACK

If the manufacturers of Lynn, Mass., the largest shoe manufacturing centre in the world, have their way, women's shoes will not only be simpler in design and fewer in pattern this fall than in any season for years, but lower in price, says John J. Leary, in reviewing the style and price situation. The impelling reason for the change is a request from the national council of defence that the manufacturers simplify styles generally, reduce the number of lasts and patterns so that the national supply of leather may be conserved, labor freed for other industries and prices lowered to the public.

The request comes at a time when the manufacturers are in a highly nervous frame of mind, conditions, thanks to the competition for the more varied lines, having shown manufacturers little of the comfortable profits that were possible when lines were staple and before the craze for fancy shoes had developed.

It was then possible with a comparatively small line of samples to place orders so that factories could be operated on reasonably full time. This has been impossible with styles changing overnight, and overhead expenses have mounted to prices that would have been unbelievable a few years ago. Added to this the constant changing of patterns and lasts, the cancellation of orders after they had been placed because of some change in demand, and the manufacturers' lot has not been altogether a happy one.

More recently men in off the road have reported a tendency on the part of women to rebel against high prices for shoes. So strong have these reports been that many manufacturers have been seriously considering ways and means of cutting costs prior to the action of the national council. The demand for plain pumps and oxfords, costing less than the high-cut shoes, has emphasized this demand for something less-expensive, and demonstrated to the satisfaction of many that the plain shoe is beginning to come into its own again.

Lynn manufacturers, however, insist that they are in no way responsible for the high prices charged in some centres for women's footwear, insisting that it is not possible to get more than a fair manufacturing profit on the fanciest of shoes no matter what price they may retail for. They declare that the jobber or the retailer, who may buy direct, insists on rock bottom prices here, and then boosts his own prices as high as the traffic will bear.

In this connection the story is told of a manufacturer who has been specializing in fancy shoes, seeing some in a New York show window that looked familiar; he asked to be allowed to look at a pair marked to sell at $6.50.

"And you sell that shoe for $6.50 and are not locked up?" he asked the manager of the store.

"Why," asked the manager, "what's wrong with that?"

"Nothing," replied the maker, "except that I made that shoe and delivered it in Boston for $2.85. If that is not larceny, I do not know what is."

"Well," said the manager, "we have to live. And, anyway, we can sell more of those shoes at $6.50 than we could at $3.50. If we offered them at $3.50 the women would think there was something wrong with them and refuse to buy."

MODEL N

THIS Outfit represents the highest development in shoe repairing machinery, and meets every demand of modern shoe repairing. It embraces all the essential processes for making new shoes from old ones, giving the maximum of equipment and efficiency in the minimum space. The Outfit has the Goodyear Stitching Machine with all its improvements, including a new style steam generator which uses gas or gasoline for generating the steam, and operates automatically, thereby insuring a uniform heat for keeping the wax in proper condition and requiring little attention from the operator. The Edge Trimming Machine has the new feature of the two shafts, being operated by a single belt, and the cutter grinder is attached directly to the main shaft. This arrangement gives better results with less power.

The Buffing and Scouring Machine has a shaft 57 inches long and carries the following equipment:

- | | |
|--|----------------------------------|
| 2 Split Bottom Buffing Rolls | 2 Flat X-Ray Hee Scouring Wheels |
| 2 "C" Shape X-Ray Heel Scouring Wheels | 1 Heel Breast Scouring Wheel |
| 1 Pin Wheel Pad Complete | |

A powerful Blower System removes the dust resulting from the trimming, buffing and scouring operations, and is designed to overcome certain objectionable features of other blowers.

The Finishing Machine has a 78-inch shaft which has all the necessary equipment for black or russet work:

- | | |
|--|--|
| 2 Corrugated Rubber Shank Finishing Wheels | 1 Corrugated Rubber Heel Finishing Wheel |
| 1 Corrugated Rubber Bottom Finishing Roll | 2 Shank and Bottom Brushes |
| 2 Heel Brushes | 1 Stitch Cleaning Brush |
| 1 Levelling Roll | 1 Bead and Wheel |

At the end of the Outfit is the Oscillating Edge Setting Machine which is fitted with union irons and in its motions duplicates hand workmen with quicker and better results.

Each of the machines is operated independently by a friction drive pulley, so that it is necessary to use only those machines which the operator may require. This feature means a saving of power.

All the machines are firmly mounted on legs and driven by a countershaft with carefully adjusted bearings, so that the Outfit runs with very little vibration, and is in every way most efficient.

A TIME OF WATCHFUL WAITING

All Eyes on the Crops—Everybody Hopeful of Good Fall Season—Farmers and Mechanics Will Have the Money—Thoughtful Economy Will Not Seriously Affect the Situation—“Win the War” by Prudence and “Push”

THE business outlook, while unchanged in many respects, improves as the weeks pass. Our great hope this year lies in a good crop, and that seems fairly well assured now, both East and West. Evidently buyers in the West have regained confidence and are expressing their views in their orders. All who have recently returned from that district report better business than for a considerable time past. Furniture and jewellery have particularly responded which means that people can see a fair surplus ahead of actual necessities.

In Eastern Canada there is every reason to expect a bumper crop in grain, hay, roots and fruit, the only difficulty in sight being the gathering in of these products. But the cities and towns are responding in such a way that will prevent unfortunate loss in this respect. In Ontario business has picked up in most lines since the advent of hot weather, and merchants who thought they would have to carry over a large amount of unsalable goods till next spring have had an opportunity to turn them into money, which will undoubtedly have the effect of stimulating trade in other lines.

In the cities and towns the circulation of money has been such that vast quantities are finding their way into channels that are not doing permanent good to the country. Instead of saving their money where they can, the majority are spending more than ever in picture shows, outings and luxuries that are anything but in keeping with war time. The efforts of the government to get people to save money for the war do not seem to be productive of the results they merit. After all, this war is going to be won by money even more than men and the expense of conducting it must in the end come out of the savings of the people. It cannot be permanently shifted to any other foundation. It becomes the people, therefore, to save—that is save the dollars squandered on needless luxury and pleasure—and place them in the hands of the government to prosecute the war to a successful end. Every dollar thus saved is a shell dropped on the Huns.

If a lot of the talk directed at economizing on food, clothing, furniture and other staple necessities were devoted to cutting out needless waste and extravagance in living, and the money thus saved directed into war channels, we would soon see the end of the conflict. “Win the War” should be the slogan in every trade, but let us be careful not to kill the goose that lays the golden egg—cripple industries that are to provide the sinews of war. Every man, woman and child should respond to the command to tighten the belt and put every ounce of not only our manhood, but money into the conflict.

Capitalizing Customers' Gratitude

How a Country Merchant Cashes In on the Policy of Obliging Customers—Nothing Too Much Trouble

By FREDERICK C. KUHN, in American Magazine

"NEVER travel on the X. Y. & Z. again," growled the customer, as he leaned against the counter to light up. "They soaked me good and plenty!"

"What's wrong?" asked the proprietor. "I always thought they were pretty decent people."

"Then you've got another think coming!" snapped back the customer. "Pirates! That's what I call 'em. Remember last March when I went South? Well, they overcharged me seven dollars. That's what's wrong!"

"Too bad," said the proprietor sympathetically. "Why don't you apply for a refund?"

"Apply? I'm going to hire a secretary to pen my notes. I've got writer's cramp already."

The storekeeper looked thoughtfully a moment. "Don't worry, Bill, he said at last. "I'll get your money."

And he did—in exactly three days.

From this little incident has grown the amazing career of W. H. Ellis, of Vandalia, Missouri. Right away things began to happen. People with problems of all sorts got the habit of bringing them to the genial storekeeper. They found him as ready and able to tell them the best railroad route and rate from Vandalia to Wypitlock, Maine, as to advise some old lady the best way to pack a set of dishes she was sending to her niece in St. Louis.

As the result of his desire to help people, his vision of service plus, Ellis has built up in this town of only seventeen hundred inhabitants a spanking big business that has flowed over the whole country round about.

Ellis's emporium seems more like a public service station than a regular store. Yet by watching closely one may see that folks who come to be served seldom go away without buying. If they do, they are likely to come back the next day, on shopping bent.

One of the features of the Vandalia store is a travel bureau. Passenger agents of all lines call on Ellis frequently, and he has all kinds of railroad data at his mental finger tips. One of the railroads wrote Ellis some time ago to thank him for the great amount of business he has sent over its line. Ellis's reply asked the railroad to look after his customers. If a Vandalia man or woman, returning from a trip, has any discourtesy en route to complain of, Ellis takes the matter up with the railroad people and gets a quick adjustment.

Some years ago a woman came into the store with a crocheted bureau cover. Half timidly she inquired if the clerk would not wrap it for mailing. He was so cheerful about it she almost wanted to pay him.

At the next meeting of the sewing circle, Mrs. Crosby related the incident. No one said very much. But toward evening first one, then a second, and then a third housewife entered the Ellis store and asked, "Wouldn't the clerk be so kind as to wrap up a gift she was sending away?"

Quick to sense the trend of things, Ellis called his store family into consultation. How long did it take to wrap those packages? Did it interfere with waiting on other customers? What was the cost of paper and string? How many people had made similar requests?

"Why can't we make the wrapping of packages a permanent feature in our store?" he asked suddenly.

And then in a flash it all became clear. Each of the women had stopped to buy before departing!

So a bundle-wrapping department was equipped, free for patrons whether they purchased the articles at the store or not. Two weeks before Christmas the idea was launched in the newspaper advertisements. Neatly typewritten letters on lavender-tinted note paper were addressed to the ladies.

Next day the store looked like a millinery sale. It was deluged with bundles. Hundreds of them came to be wrapped. The Ellis Store furnished the tags, stickers, twine, Christmas seals and other necessary fixings.

Again experience repeated itself. Once inside, people took the opportunity to browse around the counters and inspect the variety of seasonable merchandise on display. Then most of them bought.

This was back in 1908. The store is still at it. "The bundle-wrapping department," confided Ellis, "is full of odd and funny experiences. Following an ad of ours in the local paper one day a man came in and said, 'I see that you advertise to wrap bundles for customers.' We replied 'Yes.' 'Well, here's one,' he chuckled; 'when you get it wrapped, I'll bet a cooky that you take that ad out of the paper next week.'

"He had his parcel all junked in a gunny sack; it weighed about twenty pounds. When we opened it we found a complete skeleton of a horse. There were bones of all shapes, sizes and descriptions. He said that his boy went away to a veterinary school and had written home for the old horse.

"Although rather staggered at first, we told him that we were game. We gathered the carcass together and packed it neatly in a strawboard box, many of the pieces being wrapped separately in paper. After we had finished the job, he exclaimed, 'Boys, I appreciate this; my son appreciates it, and am sure if old Maud were living she would appreciate it! (Maud was the horse.)"

The travel bureau and bundle-wrapping counter are only two of the many unusual accommodations you will find at the Ellis Store. For instance, they sell stamps; they change your bills; they cash your checks. Two telephone systems are subscribed to, so messages for customers can be transferred. They have a mail box in the store, and letters are personally delivered to late night trains. Any emergency, merely call them. They tell what to do. People telephone to the store for the time of day and often for the day of the week.

Understand, this a genuine service. It is rendered in a sincere and straightforward manner. There is no lingering suspicion that you are expected to buy. There is no embarrassment if you don't. The merchandise is sold on its merits alone—the service is the thirteen of a baker's dozen.

One day a quietly dressed woman entered. She was not a customer. She wanted an empty box, and had visited all other stores in vain. The clerk brought up three, clean, and with solid lids on them. Was this one strong enough? Was it wide enough? To what address would she have it sent? No trouble, the boy would be around that way after dinner.

"How much is it?" the woman asked.

"Nothing, ma'am," came the courteous response. "It's a pleasure to be of service."

This little attention had a surprising aftermath. The woman turned out to be the wife of the leading attorney. The first month her purchases totalled twenty-six dollars.

"For the coming harvest season," Ellis said the other day, "we shall start a new service. Farmers have a hard time to get help at that time. With the amount of literature we send out every month we might as well assist them. We shall allow them to advertise for help in our monthly store magazine and, perhaps, also arrange to use a bulletin or a register.

"We keep a copy of each of the leading fashion magazines in our store. We advertise that they are for the convenience of our patrons and that we want them to use them. It is surprising how many women come in each month to look over them. We handle a full line of general and fashion magazines also, and don't see that our free inspection plan interferes in any way with their sale. It lets people see them all, and without having to buy; but in many cases they see interesting things in them and buy more than they would without the display."

No big firm with its guaranteed, money-back advertisements has anything on Ellis. He will advertise, for instance, a cake of soap at ten cents. The text will read somewhat as follows:

If you don't think it the best value you ever saw, we will apologize. If you are not satisfied, we will refund your money.

Suppose you approach the clerk for an article temporarily out of stock. This does not happen often, but the effect of the war has been to deplete seriously supplies of many things.

"Just as good," will not be foisted upon you. The clerk will explain, and note your name. Then later you receive a neatly written card:

Several days ago, you called for Blank's Laundry Soap (or whatever it may be), which we did not have in stock at the time, and advised that we would procure same. We now have this item, and will be pleased to mail it to you; or you can call for it the first time you are in the store.

Ellis has been known to telegraph at his own expense for a pint of gold paint when a customer was in a hurry to fix up his radiators.

The catalogue houses are hot on the trail for business around Vandalia. But I'll wager it is not very fertile territory for the merchandise Ellis sells. He believes in playing their own game, and has built up a comfortable mail trade himself. His selling radius extends into neighboring towns. Every month he mails out fifteen hundred copies of his store magazine, which contains bright, snappy articles sandwiched between advertisements chock-full of special bargains.

In the small towns, election returns usually don't straggle in until the morning after. Even then, they are incomplete.

At the time of the recent Presidential election, Ellis took the opportunity to hold open-house. He invited the citizens of Vandalia and the surrounding countryside to the store to obtain first-hand election reports. Arrangements were made weeks in advance with the Associated Press, Western Union Service, and other news-gathering bureaus, and bulletins were posted at frequent intervals on election night.

People came from miles around—farmers hitched up their "flivvers" and flocked to town like ants to a pot of honey. During the evening and far into the night over nine hundred people visited the store. A phonograph discoursed the latest "raggy" stuff. Telephone calls were too numerous to count—but each received a courteous answer.

"Come and make yourself at home," read the advertisements. "Telephone us early and often. You will not bother us. Open all night if the result is in doubt."

And then, here is the "incidentally!" The cash receipts for November were the biggest in seven years!

"Not only do we bulletin election news," said Ellis, "but anything of consequence goes into our window bulletins. If Bill Jones falls into the well here, we give it to the county papers and they in turn remember us if any scoop comes off.

"We mail night letters, sell as many stamps as the post-office and advertise the fact that we have them. We also advertise that, if necessary, we will lick the stamp. Because customers fail to thank you is no argument that they don't appreciate the courtesy. They get it as a part of our good service; we have always had it tacked on as a part of our general business and they expect it."

If you imagine the possibilities of the small town merchant are limited—go talk with Ellis. You'll come away with a new light.

Leather Trade Jottings

What is Seen and Heard Amongst the Trade—Views
and News of the Leather Trade at Home and Abroad

NOTHING new has transpired in the past couple of weeks to materially alter the situation which, remains practically quiet, although the tone of the market is firmer all along the line. It is true that slight concessions have been reported in some special lines but these are not considered as affecting the situation generally. Shoe manufacturers have been feeling the market and have been buying in small lots, hoping to secure offers from leather men on larger requirements. The attitude taken by the leather men is that should any acceleration take place in the buying present stocks will be cleaned up in a short time, and as tanners have been only wetting down a moderate amount of hides in the past six months there is very little leather coming through. Leather producers seem confident that the situation will become decidedly stronger just so soon as an increased demand for shoes and shoe materials sets in. All the better selections of well-known tannages are well cleaned up and any accumulations that exist are in less desirable lines.

The Hide Market.—There has been considerable activity in hides during the past ten days and prices are firmer in tone. There has been great activity especially in packer native steers of which sales last week amounted to nearly 100,000. Late hides are, of course, principally in demand, back salting lots being very slow. Packers rather expected a more pronounced movement than has taken place on account of the government orders going through. It was expected that tanners would endeavor to cover their requirements with this in view, but there has been comparatively little movement along this line. The government option, which expired on July 15th, was not renewed and it is thought that the figures will be fairly well adhered to. Receipts of cattle are improving the demand for beef at the prices paid bringing out supplies from all over the country. Heavy native packer steers for summer take off are selling at 34c. at Chicago, with country buffs and heavy cows quoted 27c. for strictly short-haired grades. Calfskins are a trifle easier with less doing. Dry hides are easier at 42c. for heavy and 45c. for light weights. Sheepskins are easy with shearlings quoted $1.50 to $1.75 for late packer take off. Foreign hides are dull, although the partial lifting of the British embargo has produced a better feeling.

American Leather Trade.—Business in leather is quiet. Whatever has been doing is connected with army contracts, and regular lines are neglected. It is estimated that one-tenth of the shoe production of the United States this year will be devoted to government business. A good many shoe buyers have visited the shoe market in the past month but have largely confined their purchases to samples and seem unwilling to anticipate their future needs. There seems to be large stocks of shoes still in the hands of wholesalers although the prevailing warm weather during the latter part of July has cleared out a good deal of the accumulation. In side leather the demand has been more active than in some other lines and it is believed that August will see an improvement in all light leathers. Business in calfskins is improving, especially in lighter tones and notably colors. Raw stock is a little more plentiful and this has improved the outlook for calf to a considerable extent. Leather men are confident that the situation will be much stronger as soon as fall business gets fairly under way and from the present indications of shoe business for the coming spring samples there will be a demand for every ounce or foot of leather made.

Government War Economies.—In discussing a report of the Committee of Public Accounts recently issued in England, the Leather World devotes some space to commenting upon the work of this committee as affecting the leather trades. It quotes the report in part as follows:

"The Army requirements of leather, which even in 1915 amounted in value to £15,000,000 for a period of nine months, made the prices of manufactured articles so heavy, owing to competition for raw material, that some form of control was inevitable. The price which the Department allows for British hides is 5d. per pound below the corresponding world prices, and since two and a half million hides (averaging 60 pounds) are purchased per annum, the saving here is over £3,000,000. Without counting the receipts from the sale of by-products, it is estimated that the control of the Indian kips alone has resulted in an economy of £1,125,000."

Concerning saving in shoes the report says:

"A saving of 3d. (6c.) a pair has been effected by using a double sole for boots, instead of the single sole previously insisted on."

A new method for selling condemned boots has produced a profit of £10,000 over the old method, whilst £350,000 per annum is saved by the re-issue of boots prematurely condemned.

Enquiries have been made, various authorities consulted, and experiments instituted with a view to finding uses for old boots—for example, the production of ammonium sulphate, extraction of metal and grease, road making, etc.

Multiply the figures above by five and an approximate idea of the values quoted will be reached in dollars.

Your Money Back if Dissatisfied

Does it Pay to Exchange Goods?—Is the Modern Retail Policy Right?—Does the Abuse of it Warrant its Discontinuance

THERE has been a good deal of discussion of late, on two important phases of retailing, namely, "Bargain-Sales" and "Returning Goods," and it would seem as though opinions with regard to methods of cleaning up stocks, as well as the encouragement of the utmost freedom between seller and purchaser in regard to returning goods, were undergoing radical changes. It is, of course, abuse that spoils most of the good things of life. There are always people who, when given a free horse, will ride it to death. Storekeepers find daily that they are deterred from extending privileges to the public that would be materially beneficial on account of those who so use them, that they became a detriment to business generally as well as the merchant in particular. Give them an inch and they take a yard and a half, and snap it out of your hands at that.

How Shoppers Run Up Cost

At a recent meeting of departmental store managers the question of receiving back goods and returning the customers' money was discussed. Time was when this was considered a remarkable, if not a dangerous, innovation in retailing, whereas to-day it is rather generally accepted as a regular business policy. It was shown at the conference referred to that some women were in the habit of purchasing goods and having them delivered at the house. They made the rounds of four or five establishments, and when they got home, either refused the goods they thought least desirable or paid for the parcels compared the goods and returned what did not suit. The subject was discussed not so much from the standpoint of exchanging the goods for money, but the increased cost of delivery occasioned by the large and growing army of "shoppers" who follow this and similar methods and consume the time of salesmen, stock-keepers, delivery men and others for which they do not pay.

Must Satisfy Customer

On the other hand, the concern that refuses to exchange goods or place the dissatisfied customer in a position to begin his or her purchase over again is under modern conditions leaving itself open to serious criticism and antagonism. The average customer buying shoes is apt to take from a salesman that which does not fully meet or satisfy his taste or needs, and in many cases the fit of a shoe, for instance, is not quite the same in the quiet of the home as in the store. Allowances should be made for these and similar circumstances, as well as the natural timidity of women customers when considering the general tendency on the part of customers to change their minds with regard to shoe purchases.

The principle flamboyantly enunciated by some establishments that "the customer is always right" may be all right for advertising purposes, but every retailer knows that the customer is very often and very seriously wrong; and when the dealer gives in it is only to avoid losing more money by not doing so. It pays to humor customers, no doubt, but the question often comes up how far should patience, courtesy and liberality be extended to those to whom it is so often as pearls cast before swine.

Make a Virtue of Necessity

It is a mistake to be too liberal as it is to be too narrow, although the chances for business are better with the good natured man than the churl. When a customer is genuinely dissatisfied with a purchase, and cannot be suited with anything else in the store, it is far better to let him have his money back freely and cheerfully than to refuse or do it with such bad grace that he leaves the premises sore. One of the most successful shoe dealers in Ontario says that he keeps fairly well posted on his competitor's lines, and when he finds a customer he cannot suit with goods, he suggests his going to one of these other shops. The other day a gentleman whom he directed to another store expressed some surprise at such a course as unusual in business. "It is our policy, sir, to help our customers in any way we can," was the reply. It is little wonder that this shoe merchant is not only prosperous, but happy, for he is undoubtedly as popular with his fellow merchants as he is with those who patronize his store.

Getting Back Doesn't Pay

This telling people what you think of them and putting a "twist" in female shoppers may be all right, but the retailer who is looking for this kind of trouble will get plenty. The man who gives everybody a square deal, backed by courtesy and liberality, may be taken in now and then, but he will be taken into the hearts and appreciation of an army of customers that are worth while.

Retailing shoes is no "cinch," but there is no doubt that many men allow it to not only get on their "nerves" but into their morals. There is nothing in business that yields such a dividend as patience unless it be cheerfulness. Combine these two with a genuine desire to serve and you will not be able to keep people out of your store. You may now and then be "done," but you will more than make up for any loss through "shoppers" and "shysters" on those who appreciate an honest desire to give them a good square dollar's worth of goods and service.

Stray Shots From Solomon

Take no chances on the fellow who proclaims his virtues in "sounding brass." Do business with him in "black and white." The man whose word is as good as his bond does not need a brass band to help his reputation. The reason some people are so anxious to impress people with their goodness, is that they know if they were rated at their true worth they would be hanged to the nearest lamp post. To hear one of these smooth fellows talk you would think a seraph had strayed earthwards; but give him a good square chance and he will walk off with a whole saw mill, dam and all, and sing a hymn while he covers up his tracks. If accomplished scientific scoundrelism were confined to the gentlemen that the police periodically round up, society would be comparatively safe. It is the slick unctious children of the Devil that array themselves in the garb of virtue that play such havoc in business, and work such ruin in society. There are men sitting on church boards that if they were put where they belong would be doing the lock step.

* * * * *

When the books of account are opened in the next world there will be some strange transpositions from debit to credit. A man died the other day in a Canadian city leaving assets of over a million dollars to his relatives, and a few paltry thousands to what people are pleased to call "charity." He made his colossal fortune largely in the city where he resided. Will any one dare to say that he did not owe a large share of this accumulation to the people who afforded him the opportunity and helped him to gather his harvest? Can a man make a million dollars or more out of a community, and not owe his fellow citizens a cent? Fortunately succession duties step in and enforce this idea to some extent, but as effectually as should be. The percentage is too low on large amounts. The grasping and greed of those who build up these fortunes at the expense of the community should be tapped to yield an adequate recognition of the principle that "no man liveth unto himself, and no man dieth unto himself."

* * * * *

Another case illustrates the bearing of this question upon those most intimately associated with individual fortune building. The head of an establishment died recently, leaving a comfortable estate and a prosperous business to pass to his heirs. It is a well known fact that the success of the concern was due largely to the staff of employees that have been with it, some of them for over a generation, and who have given quite as much thought and effort to the building up of its connection as the proprietor. That such services should not be suitably recognized by a share in the proceeds or recognition in the reorganization of the establishment, is the flat denial of an obligation as reprehensible as the repudiation of a just debt. A man should be just to his fellows in these matters. Think you the books are allowed to stand in this way by the Judge of all flesh? The golden rule if not applied here will be the instrument of adjustment yonder. How much owest thou?

A man may offer the Pharisee's prayer, "God, I thank thee that I am not as other men," with a spirit of devotion and gratitude pleasing to the Almighty. It is well for a man when he sees a human hog, to lift up his hands and thank heaven for what little of God he may have within him. There are some men whose days are spent on the lowest possible plane of being. There is a man not a hundred miles from this city, who has prospered in business to an extent that has placed him in rather comfortable circumstances. He was originally a "bog trotter," but that is no disgrace, and should be no hindrance to development. He has however remained and forever will remain a "bog trotter" with all his wealth. Ignorant, self-opinionated, selfish, arrogant, narrow, intolerant, jealous, spiteful, mean, are a few of the adjectives that might quite appropriately qualify his character. He is the same man as when he kept a little shop and made his own goods. Wealth, a fine house, association with men, and even an intelligent wife have failed to groom the pork out of him. To make money seems to be his passion, and all his money has done for him is to put him in a place where his total unfitness for human society is made so plain that those may read who run. A man with only a crust of bread and a cup of water and a soul the size of a mosquito is as far above this human grunter as the remotest fixed star is distant from our little planet. Be a man, if it means to throw away all that is keeping your nose in the dirt.

"Because I have called, and ye refused; I have stretched out my hand and no man regarded; but ye have set at naught all my counsel, and would none of my reproof; I also will laugh in the day of your calamity; I will mock when your fear cometh; when your fear cometh as a storm, and your calamity cometh as a whirlwind; when distress and anguish come upon you. Then shall they call upon me but I will not answer; they shall seek me diligently but they shall not find me." Look out!

HE GOT EXCLUSIVE AGENCIES BY UNFAIR MEANS

How Wily Shoe Merchant Kept Himself Solid with Travelers by Various Pretences and Sent Them Away Feeling Fine, but Minus Orders—Playing One Firm Against the Other and Securing Special Discount by Clever Ruses—Controlled all Brands

By G. W. BROCK

“WHEN I first went into the shoe game and called upon all kinds of retailers, good, bad and indifferent, some open and outspoken, others plausible and pretentious, and still others deceptive and hypocritical, I thought that Octon, who was doing business in G—, was my greatest friend.

“He was in possession of a fine trade and had even opened branch establishments. After he had been in the shoe trade for some years he began to be a tight-wad, look out too much for No. 1 and evince a disposition to hog every good thing in footwear. He thought that he could buy a little cheaper than anybody else and, not caring to reveal the characteristics of a close-fisted individual, he adopted a smooth, effusive and insinuating sort of style and made every man feel that he—the traveler—was all right, that his goods were all right, that trade was all right and the future was all right, and prices were all right, but he rarely ever bought.

“I remember Jack Steen, a popular young traveler who had been calling upon Octon for a couple of years, and doing very well with him. One fall trip Steen came in, after notifying Octon that he would be around with a fine line of samples in ladies’ artistic welts, and was given the usual cordial welcome. Invited into the office, Octon inquired about his health, how he had spent the intervening time since he was last in G—, and reviewed the prospects of the crops and the trend of styles and trade conditions generally.

“But what about some lines of mine for fall?” inquired Steen finally. “You had better come over and see them.”

Your Goods are O.K., But—

“Well, I would certainly like to,” replied Octon, very pleasantly, “but you see I sent a man down east the other day and he managed to pick up some very nice, snappy women’s welts—neat, shapely and smart—for a little less than we have been paying you, and we have those on our shelves just now. It was a chance my man could not afford to pass up and we are trying this competing line. I have no doubt that your goods will win out, as they have always given good satisfaction, and when you come around again I will be in a better position than ever to place a nice order; but, just at present and under the somewhat unusual circumstances, you can see just how I am fixed.

“But your shoes are all right old man and I am awfully sorry not to be able to book something with you. Now if you will go to F—, you are going there anyway, of course,—and call on Peppin, the manager of my branch in that city, who is doing his own buying in women’s fine shoes, no doubt he will give you an order. I think very probably he is in need of some stuff both for immediate and this fall and I wish you every success and good luck,” and with a bow and shake of the hand, Steen was ushered out and felt good even although he had not actually sold Octon.

“He had scarcely left when Peppin was called up over the long distance phone by his chief, Octon, who started in direct: “Say Peppin, I have had Steen here this morning, wanting to sell me some of the Alton line. Guess you do not want any this time, do you? Pretty well stocked, eh?”

“Of course, Peppin, under this lead, could only answer ‘Yes, Mr. Octon,’ and then the latter would tell Peppin, his branch manager, that Steen was going to F— by the next train. When the misguided and hopeful traveler landed there, under what he conceived favorable circumstances, he would be turned down cold, without possibly realizing how he had been ingeniously sidetracked.

Putting an Extra Discount Over

“Here is one experience I had with the smooth Mr. Octon, who personally attempted to put one over me and my house. He told me one day that if I gave him a special discount he would buy seven thousand dollars’ worth of shoes from me in a year. I consulted the house, for I did not know Octon as well then as I learned to know him after, and finally, on my representations, the sales manager consented to give him an extra five per cent. I was not aware that Octon had tried to work the same game which he put over on us with others and had not got away with it. I was tickled to death on my next trip that I could offer him special inducements if he would buy seven thousand dollars worth of shoes during the year and he gave me a placing order of two thousand three hundred that spring. When the draft came in a few months later for this sum, he returned it and told the firm that it was not right, that he was to receive a special discount of five in addition to the usual two. They immediately deducted that five per cent. and Octon accepted the draft and paid for the goods.

How He Was Tripped Up

“But here is where he came out ahead. He did not purchase any more from me that year, and thus secured the extra concession without completing his share of the agreement. He tried the same game with the Kennon Manufacturing Co. and, in their case, had all arrangements made, I understand, to get seven per cent. extra in consideration of taking nine thousand dollars worth of footwear within a year. He gave an order for eighteen hundred in the spring and made a bold stand for the seven per cent. to be taken off then, but they told him plump and plain that he could not get the rebate until he had bought nine thousand dollars worth and then they would give him a rebate for the six hundred and thirty dollars that would be coming to him on the amount of merchandise specified, but not until then.

"Octon stormed and raved and protested in vain, but the Kennon Co. had been put wise to his methods and he had to pay for the first bill of goods. He never got that extra discount and, having failed in his game, did not order any more. They were just as shrewd as Octon, who thought that he could get ahead of every firm in his quiet, smooth way, but he was tripped up on this occasion.

Piling Up Shelves With Empties

"Here is a story of what Teny, a buyer with Octon, once told me, after he had left his employ. Teny said that his boss handled both the S. and Q. lines and did a big business in each. When Octon got word that the Q. traveler would be around he had all the S. lines, which had been kept at the front of the store in the ladies' department, removed to the back or down cellar and all the Q. goods brought up and placed on the shelves. Many of the cartons would be empty, for he always kept them for a certain purpose and when Thomas, the representative of the Q. brand, would arrive, he would be greeted warmly. The preliminaries over, and getting down to business, Octon would take Thomas down to the front and tell him that the Q. line was not moving as fast as it might. The representative would be shown several sections filled with Q. goods, perhaps half of the boxes empty. Thomas could see for himself that business with his range had been slow, and would depart without an order, but fully convinced that if Octon had not such a heavy stock on his hands, he would surely have received big business.

"Thomas gone, perhaps a week or two later Judge, the alert and aggressive man for the S. line would be coming around. He had, of course, sent a forewarning to Octon, in the shape of an advance notice and the latter was ready for him for, in the meantime, the Q. goods had been nearly all removed from the front of the store and the S. cartons, both the reserve stock and all the empties, had been trotted out to do duty. When Judge would walk in he would see a great many of his goods on the shelves and practically no other shoes of the same class. He had no doubt that Octon was pushing the S. line for all it was worth. Was not there before his own eyes the visible evidence of it? Judge would naturally feel proud that his wares were given such a commanding position. Everything would go well until he wanted an order and then he would be told in a pleasant, seemingly sincere way, that for some reason, although they had been well displayed, the S. brand was not going as freely of late as it should and, of course, Octon could not see his way clear just then and there to take aboard any more. With assurances that things would likely be better next time, Judge would depart, feeling that luck had been against him and not the deception and subterfuge of Mr. Octon, who, in his mind was, like Caesar's wife, above suspicion.

"Teny also told me another tale which is too good to keep. Octon had been trying to corral every line himself that he thought might prove interesting or helpful to his competitors in the city. He would always insist that, in consideration of purchase, he be given control for G—. Most all the boys fell for it, as he was financially all right and met his bills promptly. He took the underhand course outlined above merely to stave off manufacturers placing their shoes with other dealers in the town, for he wanted to gather in every good thing from season to season and buy as little from each house as possible, but still have control of everything, particularly trade-marked shoes. He resorted to the schemes, some of which I have told you and to others, which it would take too long to narrate, in order to keep down his stock, which was very large, and retain his numerous exclusive agencies. If he had refused direct to give an order the manufacturers might think that his account with them should be closed, but when their travelers would return with some harrowing recital of the unusual position in which Octon was placed so that he could not buy this season, they naturally felt they would get business next time, and so no new customers would be looked for in G—. Perhaps Octon could get away with a new device or excuse the next time and perhaps not. Anyway he did not believe in crossing a bridge until he came to it, and he secretly prided himself that he was the sole selling agent in G— for eight leading and widely advertised lines of women's shoes and seven brands of men's. He did not care to have any more, as that was enough. Naturally, buying from so many houses, he could not place any decent sized order twice a year and his inventive mind set to work as soon as a traveler sent him an advance card, on how could he turn down the road representative shrewdly, smoothly and without a suspicion in the mind of the commercial man that he was being duped or hoodwinked. Thus Octon kept the other dealers from getting a look-in on some of the nationally known lines of shoes, although several had written away making inquiries from time to time.

Could Not Get Away With It

"Well, to make a long story short, Octon had been handling the Premier shoe for a number of years, but his orders had grown smaller and fewer. Tyson, their representative, felt that the time had come for him to open a new account in the city, but said nothing to Octon about it. The latter had been called upon for his spring placing business and had given an order for nine hundred and sixty dollars whereas in the past it had run from sixteen hundred up to twenty-five hundred and even three thousand one year. Octon had given Tyson some very ingenious excuses for not buying more than nine hundred and sixty dollars worth, on the ground that many of the well paid mechanics, who wore the Premier line, had been out of work or on short time during the past few weeks and he still had a very large, representation of that boot on his shelves.

"Tyson did not dispute the word of the dealer and set out to make a few quiet inquiries. He strolled up the street and called on Haig, a very decent retailer who, considering the chances that he had, was doing nicely. Tyson asked him if he would come down to the hotel and see some of the new models and patterns in "Premiers."

"'Sure,' said Haig, tickled with the opportunity to get a look in on a range of goods which his competitor down the street had corralled for years. Tyson had made up his mind that Octon could do as he pleased, that he was in G—to sell goods for his firm and a nine hundred dollar order was altogether too small to be satisfied with. Haig came

REPAIRERS' BIG PICNIC WAS A HUMMER

WHATEVER the Toronto Shoe Repairers' Association undertakes is always a pronounced success. The first annual picnic and sports held at Queen Victoria Park, Niagara Falls, Ont., on Wednesday, July 18th, will live long in the minds of the six hundred persons who attended. Nearly every member of the Association closed his shop for the day and took his wife, sweetheart, family, relatives or intimate friends for a jaunt by steamer across the lake and a trolley trip on the Canadian side to the Park.

The day was perfect, the sports well contested and the facilities for all that goes to make an outing ideal were unsurpassed. Whether at labor or play the members of the Association go at it full of spirit and vim. To show that they work hard in season and out of season it may be stated that not a few sold as high as forty, fifty and some even sixty tickets. The event was well advertised and everyone was invited to come along.

The occasion was also made a sort of social reunion for the members of the trade from other cities and there was a liberal representation of shoe repairers from Hamilton, St. Catharines, Welland and Niagara Falls.

The repair men in the latter city have no separate organization, as yet, but are uniting with the St. Catharines body. Many matters of interest were informally talked over. The sons of St. Crispin engaged in conversation on topics of mutual interest and compared notes on hours, prices, labor conditions, help problem and other things. After dinner had been enjoyed, a stroll taken around the park and the glories of the Falls viewed from many angles, a splendid programme of sports was carried out. The prizes were attractive and valuable. Among them were cut glass dishes, salad bowl, silver casserole, silver tea set, club bag, set of carvers, silk umbrella, salad servers, military hair brushes, baseball bats, safety razors, silver spoons, polishing outfits, bed room slippers, handkerchiefs, purses, atomizers, etc., and other premiums donated by various firms or purchased by the Association.

Special Race, 100 Yards—Mrs. Arthur Holmes.

The baseball game was very exciting, and was won by Toronto representatives by a score of 11 to 10. The contest lasted five innings and aroused great enthusiasm. The umpires were Alex. Brodie, of Dundas street, and W. Stewart, of Roncesvalles avenue. Each team was given a box of cigars by the Toronto organization. J. Ozard did the twirling for the Toronto men and J. A. Ross, of Hamilton, for the fellows representing the other associations. The errors were too numerous to tell, and the positions of the players changed so often that no tabulation could be kept.

C. J. Wren was starter in the races, which were warmly contested and aroused liveliest enthusiasm. The judges were Alex. Brodie and H. K. Hayward.

worked exceptionally hard to insure the success of the picnic. These gentlemen were here, there and everywhere, and deserve a hearty vote of thanks for their splendid efforts.

There were representatives present from the Shoe Repairers' Associations of Hamilton, St. Catharines, Welland and Niagara. Those present from Hamilton were: J. A. Ross, President of the Association; F. C. Tebbs, secretary; T. Grayson, F. H. Revell, G. Revell, J. Jarvis, W. Jarvis, H. Wood, Geo. Webster, D. Surrige, R. Jackson, F. Clark, Alf. Gent, A. E. Williams and J. Thornton. From St.

Catharines came Wm. Legg, President of the Association; Walter Legg, secretary; W. Ingils, J. Shaw, F. Pople and Wm. McCance. From Thorold: B. Pappainni. From Welland: Geo. Arthur. From Niagara Falls: L. Katzman.

They all took great interest in the sports, and had several conferences with Toronto representatives in which they congratulated the latter association upon the success of its first annual outing. It was decided that steps should be taken to form an affiliation of Shoe Repairers' Associations in Ontario. The trade-mark which has been adopted by the Toronto organization will be the emblem of the fraternity throughout the province.

The St. Catharines' Association is the pioneer one in Ontario. It was formed two years ago, and has been a complete success. The shoemakers of that city believe in early closing. They lock their doors at 6.30 o'clock every night, except Saturday, when they close at 5.30 p.m. During June, July and August all shops are shut at 12.30 on Wednesday. "We would not go back to the old state of affairs for any consideration you might offer," declared President Wm. Legg. "We are now doing more business than ever, and have plenty of leisure time to improve ourselves mentally and physically. It is wonderful the change that has been brought about. Everybody is well pleased with what our Association has accomplished. We are all doing more business than ever, even when we worked half the night."

Chas. Tilley & Son, P. B. Wallace & Son, Joseph King & Son, Nugget Polish Co., Nonsuch Polish Co., Beal Bros., United Shoe Machinery Co., Goodyear Rubber Co. (Neolin and Wingfoot Heel Department), Philip Jacobi, Chas. Parsons & Son, Dunlop Rubber Co., Miner Rubber Co., all of Toronto, contributed valuable prizes as well as C. S. Hyman & Co., London; Robt. Ralston & Co., Toronto and Hamilton, and F. F. Dally Corporations, Hamilton.

Some Notes by the Way

One member returned without his wife. He found it impossible to look after himself and her at the same time.

* * *

Walter Burnill is some sprinter, and showed up to splendid advantage. He offered to run any man on the grounds his own age, but his proposition was not taken up.

* * *

The prizes were presented after the races by President C. F. Robertson and Vice-President H. K. Hayward. The former is some spieler.

* * *

The two Bills—Young and Edwards—were on the job all the time and were much in evidence in the baseball game.

* * *

Wm. Angus, of Hamilton, who represents C. Tilley & Son, came over with the jovial bunch from the Ambitious City.

* * *

President Robertson's wife won a prize in a running race, and the President was as pleased in handing over the sugar urn as if he had captured it himself. "It's all in the family," he remarked.

* * *

What is the matter with the Toronto Shoe Retailers' Association getting up a picnic? It is not too late yet.

* * *

Arthur Canning is now a professional sprinter. He defeated J. W. Hendry, and pocketed a five dollar bank note.

* * *

"Everything is going splendidly in our association," said Secretary Tebbs, of Hamilton, "and our membership is growing nicely."

* * *

Secretary Butterworth is some dancer. He moves around as blithely in the mazy waltz and entrancing two-step as if he weighed 100 pounds less than he really does.

* * *

The picnic was certainly an outstanding success and will be remembered for many a long day. There was nothing to mar the pleasant associations of the gathering, and the jolly reunions of the occasion.

* * *

Among the city travelers who helped make the occasion pleasant by their presence and cheery words were: H. S. King, A. E. Wallace, W. E. Young, P. R. Corson, H. A. Mahaffy, Wm. Edwards, G. A. McLellen and others.

* * *

One leading member was left by the boat. He was on hand, but not his wife and friends. She came rushing up fifteen minutes after the steamer had set sail, "Am I late?" she breathlessly queried. "Not at all," responded her resigned hubby. "You are simply an hour and a quarter early for the next boat."

SOME LIVE POINTERS FOR THE TRADE

One of our large stores has recently installed a shoe repair department, and is advertising extensively in the daily papers. Their advertisement reads, "Our 'Remade' process saves your old shoes; saves you a lot of money, too. Old shoes when 'Remade,' look like new and are good for months of wear and comfort. Our 'Remade' process is not merely the mending of old shoes; it provides perfect construction work in half-soleing and whole-soleing; really rebuilding old shoes into new. Whole-soleing by our 'Remade' process restores the original shape and arch to the shoe. Our autos cover the city. No job too small for us to send for. Parcel post orders given prompt attention." Here is an advertising suggestion for every shoe repair shop. Catch on the term "Remade," and notice how they use it in their talk to the trade. Put an advertisement in your local paper using this same argument, says the "Shoe Repair Shop."

* * *

Most shoe repair shops are using printed stationery, both letterheads and envelopes, but because there are so many that do not, we are prompted to mention it and to urge that every shoe repair shop have printed stationery. We are reminded of the importance of it today by the receipt of two letters from repair shops in large cities, both written in long hand, and both forgetting to give their street number.

It has happened in shoe repair shops that shoes have "gone astray" and when the rightful owner came for them they were not to be found, no doubt having been given to the wrong party. Children are often sent for their mother's shoes, or sometimes for neighbor's shoes, and in this way a mistake can be made. The best system to avoid mistakes of this kind is the tag and claim check. In this way it is not absolutely necessary to ask the customer's name. Each pair of shoes that is brought in is tagged with a number, the customer being given the claim check of corresponding number, and on the tag is written the date, time and work to be done. This not only avoids mistakes as to the owner of the shoes, but it enables the repairer to take up his work in rotation, and to see that he gets each pair of shoes done at the requisite time.

We believe, however, in a more comprehensive policy. Once in a while there will be some confusion with this check system. A customer will lose the check and you will not want to offend him by refusing to give him his shoes. We would use a check system that did call for a place for the name and address, and it would be very easy to have a blank line to insert something to indicate by whom the shoes were left at the shop. You would not necessarily need to have the name of the party that left the shoes unless it was the owner. You could insert the word boy, girl, or colored man. We would extend this system to the keeping of an index book, and whenever you got the name of the customer and his address, record it in this book, and you will have a good book for future reference which might be of service to you in other ways. You may make a mistake by changing your tags. A child calls with a tag number and gets the wrong package. You might later want to follow up and recover the package. The name and address of a customer is a valuable thing.

All kinds of inducements are made to catch the passer-by. Some very progressive "While-you-wait" establishments have attractive waiting rooms for ladies and gentlemen, which are fitted up with comfortable chairs, newspapers, magazines, and slippers for customers. These, together with speedy and good work, have proven to be a good "drawing card," for within a short time a customer can step in and be re-shod, and the time passes so quickly that he is scarcely conscious that he is being detained.

HOW CAN I WRITE MY ADS?

By O. G. Torrance

The daily and weekly newspapers are being used more and more by shoemen in various villages, towns and cities of Ontario to draw attention to what these retailers have, in the way of pedal equipment for all members of the family.

Nearly every trade paper that one picks up contains more or less learned and pointed articles on what constitutes good publicity—the proper way to lay out an ad; the balance and display of face and body type; the timeliness and appropriateness of the caption; the subject matter of the announcement and the interest, the appeal and the pulling power, the impressiveness and strength of the whole advertisement; its value from the standpoint of quality, construction, imagination, ideality, dignity, curiosity, decision, effectiveness, expression, and dear knows what all.

The result is that the average merchant is so bewildered and befuddled in what he reads that he possibly thinks there is some mysterious art or special gift required, in order to indite an ordinary store announcement.

Some ad. writers and advertising concerns would seek to impress upon the guileless advertiser that no one but those having served a long preliminary training, studied means and methods, systems and references, could perform the task satisfactorily. One would think there was an initiation and several degrees required to be taken before 100 per cent. efficiency could be acquired.

While not disparaging the art or wisdom which comes from the learned few, the coterie of idealists, or cabal of theorists, it may be stated in plain words that any ad is good which "brings home the bacon," or in other words, develops trade. The main considerations in the advertisement are that the statements in it should be truthful; the reader should not be wearied with a lot of useless details; the space should not be too much crowded; prices generally should be given, and a short description of the article. These constitute the cardinal virtues of ad-writing, and so far as layout is concerned, the average country printer will arrange that for the advertiser without the latter bothering his head about the style and size of type, the width of borders, the kind of rule, etc., to be employed.

In a word, it may be emphasized that you should state directly, and plainly, what you have to offer. Have something to tell the people, and use your advertising space to sell your goods, very much the same as you would dispose of the same in your own store. Be honest, frank and instructive. Do not forget to change your advertisement frequently, and be sure that you employ profitable mediums. While all kinds of publicity may, to a certain extent, be desirable, there is a great deal of waste in expenditure. Using lodge and picnic programmes, fall fair announcements, carnival booklets, horse show programmes, etc., is only so much money wasted, as the advertising is generally given on the score of personal friendship, future patronage, or social influence. The retailer possibly has not the backbone to say no to some good customer. Then he is afraid if he does not take space that Smith up the street will beat him to it. He thinks that he will lose a little patronage or prestige, or some one will accuse him of being mean and miserly. He spends anywhere from five to twenty-five dollars on something that cannot possibly be of any use to him.

There are, of course, various other means of advertising, outside the daily and weekly newspapers, although the writer is of the opinion that a newspaper, well established, with a recognized circulation—one that is read in the household by every member of the family, is the most profitable medium. There are booklets, leaflets, illustrated cards, metallic signs and other means. In the belief of the writer, the most useless are the picnic or sports programme; "dodgers," which, by the way, are well named, for every sensible person dodges them, by reason of their multiplicity, and lastly, the premium plan. There may be value in some premiums, but not in the great majority. They are here today and forgotten tomorrow.

SHOE FIRM WIN LEGAL ACTION

The following recently appeared in the legal reports at Osgoode Hall, Toronto.

Getty & Scott vs. the C. P. Ry. Co.—M. A. Secord, K.C., for plaintiffs. W. N. Tilley, K.C., and J. D. Spence for defendants. Action to recover $2,344.03, price of glazed kid leather, alleged to be the property of plaintiffs and to have been sold by defendant.

Judgment: I find against claim of plaintiffs that defendant entered into an agreement with plaintiffs by which defendant was to retain said leather until settlement of litigation between plaintiff and its vendor. I find that on January 18th plaintiff company requested Sanderson, chief agent of defendant company at Galt, to re-deliver the three cases and three bundles in question, and undertook to pay the charges thereon, that such undertaking was accepted by Sanderson on behalf of defendant company, and that prepayment or tender of tolls and charges were thereby effectually waived, and that defendants are under these circumstances liable. Plaintiffs are therefore entitled to recover for 9,015½ square feet at 16½ cents, or $1,487.56. If there is any question as to the number of square feet I may be spoken to. Judgment for plaintiffs for $1,487.56, with costs.

LANDS BOTH BUSINESS AND FISH

One of the younger travelers in Montreal is Harry F. Taylor, who is well known to the trade in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec. He was for some time with L. H. Packard Co., and afterwards with G. J. Trudeau & Co.

HARRY F. TAYLOR, MONTREAL

Mr. Taylor who is now with the Perfection Counter Co., Limited, covering Quebec and Ontario, is twenty-five years of age, and is a genial fellow, well liked by everyone. He enjoys the unique distinction of catching the biggest fish that was ever captured during the last decade in Lake St. Joseph, at St. Adolphe de Howard, in the Laurentians. The spot is where the Y.M.C.A. have their senior camp, and is a very beautiful locality. Mr. Taylor was born in Montreal, and has a very wide acquaintance.

THE man, the window and the cup won in the recent contest conducted in Winnipeg. The award went to H. J. Rayworth, of Rannard Shoe, Limited.

"HOW I PLANNED MY WINDOW"

BY H. J. RAYWORTH

"As soon as I heard the Winnipeg Free Press was putting on a competition and offering a cup for the best dressed window, open to all members of the Retail Merchants' Association, I decided that, if it were possible, I would put in the very best window and, if possible, win the prize for my firm.

"First of all I gave the matter deep and careful thought, and a good deal of time, after which I made my drawings and specifications as to measurement. I then procured the materials, lumber, flowers, plush, enamel paint, etc., and carefully carried out the details of my plans. Of course, I had the assistance of the other clerks in the store putting forms into the shoes, etc.

"There were times when I felt in doubt as to whether my display would be good enough, but when the windows were fully dressed many customers cheered me with favorable remarks. After inspecting them carefully I felt confident my efforts would be successful, and so they were.

"I wish to compliment the Free Press for starting this competition, which, I understand, is an annual affair, and I believe it will do a great deal to encourage the best in window dressing, which is of great importance to a retail store."

H. J. Rayworth joined the Rannard Shoe, Limited, last February. He formerly resided in St. Paul and Minneapolis where he dressed his first show windows.

The cup won was on display at Rannard No. 2 store. It stands 18 inches high, and has an ebony base and is much admired by all.

NEW POST FOR CAPTAIN SUTHERLAND

Announcement was made in a letter received recently in Kingston, Ont., that Capt. Jas. T. Sutherland, president of the O.H.A., who went overseas with the 146th Battalion, and who has been serving for some time as Quarter-Master of the 1st Canadian Training Battalion, had been appointed to the position of Ordnance Inspector on the staff of the Director of Ordnance, London, England. His new position will necessitate his traveling over an area in England, and later on in France.

Capt. Sutherland comes of an historic shoe family, and previous to going overseas was one of the most widely known travelers in the Dominion. His many old friends will be pleased to hear of his well deserved promotion.

TRUSTED EMPLOYEE PLACED UNDER ARREST

Stanley Verrat, for eight years a trusted employee of the United Shoe Machinery Co., was committed for voluntary statement by Judge Bazin in the Police Court, Montreal, recently. He is charged with having stolen hundreds of dollars' worth of sole leather from his firm.

Mr. F. W. Knowlton, manager of the company, said that Verrat had charge of the order department. It was his duty to issue an order to the stock room and send duplicates to the customer and to the accounting department. The practice was for a bill to be mailed the customer as soon as he had signed the receipt for the goods.

A short time ago, it was noticed that the class of sole leather handled in Montreal by the United Shoe Machinery Co. alone, was being sold by retailers at less than the usual price. An investigation was made and a large quantity of sole leather was found in the store of Nathan Goldberg, shoemaker, 672 Ontario street east. Goldberg, it is alleged, said he had bought from Verrat. Manager Knowlton produced samples of these goods in court, identified them as having come from the company, and said that the accounting department had no record of the shipment of these goods and had, therefore, never received any money for them. The witness produced the orders for the goods sent Goldberg and said that Verrat had made out duplicate orders only, instead of triplicate, sending one to the stock room for the goods, one to Goldberg to be signed by him as receipt, but none was sent to the accounting department, so that a bill could be sent to the customer.

Goldberg identified the goods produced in court as those bought by him from Verrat.

"COME ON IN; THE FISHING IS FINE," SAY ALL

Trade Grows Enthusiastic Over the Silver Cup Competition Launched by The Shoe and Leather Journal—Time for Making Record Catches Has Been Extended to October 1st—A Number of Devoted Anglers are Already in Training

EVERYONE is talking about the fishing competition, which has been inaugurated by the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL among the members of the trade for the two handsome and imposing silver trophies, illustrations of which appear in this issue.

Owing to requests from various sources it has been decided to extend the time limit and to make the closing date

A day's catch near Parry Sound, by four ardent anglers. On the right is Fred Rogers, former Manager of the Toronto Branch of the Canadian Rubber Co.; next to him is W. E. Wing, Sales-Manager of the Kaufman Rubber Co., Kitchener, Ont.; L. B. Hutchison, Toronto Manager, and W. S. Wood, of St. Catharines, Representative of the firm until October 1st, instead of September 10th, as previously announced. Here is a grand opportunity for a lot of so-called wonder workers in the angling game to furnish some concrete example of what they can do. No longer will the stories of amazing catches be accepted as proof unless mounted specimens or photographs of the piscatorial prodigies are shown, giving size, weight, locality, how caught, etc., and attested to by two reputable eye witnesses or by a notary public.

Those Who Are Eligible

Any proprietor, superintendent, foreman or employee of a shoe or leather factory, any sales manager or traveler, or any wholesale or retail footwear merchant or clerk is allowed to enter this spirited competition. There are many able exponents of the art of Izaak Walton and they will now have a chance to display their skill and prowess to the best possible advantage.

The beautiful silver cups are worth striving for and will become absolutely the property of the winners in the two classes.

In order that there may be a fair opportunity for all, the competition is in two divisions. One cup is being given for the largest black bass, small mouth, not less than five pounds in weight, or the largest speckled trout, not less than two pounds in weight. Then for the deep sea fishers, the men who have been doing stupendous things—catching maskalonge, salmon and salmon trout—the silver trophy will be a prized possession for the victor. No fish can be submitted in this competition unless weighing fifteen pounds or more.

Writing from Montreal, a leading shoe manufacturer says: "You are to be commended on starting a fishing competition among the many enthusiastic votaries, some of whom have been doing a great deal of talking. They will all now have to get down to brass tacks, as deeds, not hot air, will tally. I am going down early in September and will show you what I can do, and until then I am going to be an onlooker. Depend upon it you can count me in this affair up till the last moment. From what I hear of others, they too declare that they will have one of the cups adorning their mantle before the cold weather sets in, but not if I know it. I will be accused of talking too much if I say any more, and will close right here."

It may be whispered that Bert Parker, of Parker-Irwin, Limited, Montreal, is a most enthusiastic contestant in the race. He was out on a preliminary canter down the St. Lawrence a few days ago and caught what his friends say was a "whale" of a maskalonge. It was so big that he did not succeed in corraling it, and had it not been for the timely arrival of Mr. Patrick O'Shea, he might not have landed it at all.

Throwing the Line Way Out

Now, another man who is in dead earnest in this struggle is Paul Roy, of Canada's commercial metropolis. He says that the trade must remember that he is the champion bass fisherman of Quebec, and just to show his proficiency, he went down last Saturday to Lanoraie on the St. Lawrence, between Montreal and Three Rivers. He put on his bathing suit and waded out up to his armpits and then, by a mighty whirl and a skilful throw, his line was cast out about 150 feet. This is some achievement on his part.

In view of the time being extended to October 1st, Mr. Roy is in this contest in real earnest and is bound to demonstrate to the people what he can do. Mr. Roy has already got in several effective practices, which will no doubt tell in the long run. Well liked by the members of the trade for the many good turns he has done them, Paul is having the hearty endorsement of many admirers.

Another gentleman who is not saying much, but has his eye on the cup is "Billy" Martin, of the Kingsbury Footwear Co. He has not been widely known as an angler, but his friends affirm that when final exhibits are made the specimens produced by Mr. Martin will open the eyes of the trade. They will cause Messrs. White, McLaren, Gagnon, Marois and Borne to inspect his piscatorial proclivities and potentialities.

F. Rogers, of St. Catharines, W. E. Wing, of Kitchener, W. S. Wood, St. Catharines, and L. B. Hutchison, of Toronto, the latter three being identified with the Kaufman Rubber Co., are no inconsequential fishermen. They spent a few days recently at Ojibway, Georgian Bay district, and landed fourteen pickerel whose combined weight was 71 pounds. Mr. Hutchison claims to be the man who secured the bulk of the goods.

J. E. Warrington, of the John Ritchie Co., Quebec, has optics on the "cup." He has pulled off some good performances in the angling line in the past, but these stunts have been known only to his most intimate friends. Now that there is an open competition he does not care who learns of his entry, and as he has always succeeded in everything that he has ever undertaken, he is confident that he will have no difficulty in annexing the silverware.

J. A. McLaren, of Toronto, is, it is reported, taking frequent trips to Goderich in his motor car. The object of these visits is to test out the waters of Lake Huron, in a fishing sense. He is mum as to the good fortune that has awaited him on these periodical jaunts, wears a smile that will not come off, even in the hottest weather, but says nothing.

A GREAT STRING

A Manitoba retailer who says he does not want to "get mixed up" in the fishing scrap that is on between Ontario and Quebec in the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL sends us the annexed photo of a "string" of fish caught in the Rainy River District last month. He says he has no 160 Lake Trout, weighing over 800 pounds, caught in Dryberry Lake, Lake of the Woods. Who can beat this?

big fish stories, but he would like to know what Alex. McLaren and Fred. Marois think of a hundred and sixty lake trout that weighed over eight hundred pounds. Incidentally he says that if Luc Routhier and Lucien Borne will take a run up to Lake of the Woods they will get over the idea that the little trout ponds stocked by Quebec so-called "sports" represent the real fishing grounds of Canada.

SUMMER AND FISHING

Here is a quaint, pleasing poem on "Summer and Fishing" which has been sent in by one of the participants in the fray. He says the words exactly picture his feelings when afishing.

Ain't got no time for foolin'—just meet me at the gate
With a little willer basket an' some flies an' lines an' bait.
The sun is jest a-risin', the lake is mighty fine,
An' all the fish are bitin' an' waitin' fer my line.

Squirrels an' chipmunks chatterin' watchin' me have fun;
Woodchuck peekin' from his hole, blinkin' in the sun;
Bob-o-link an' bluejays laughin' in the trees;
Little waves a-dancin' playin' with the breeze.

There ain't no medicine I know fer the appetite
Like a good Summer mornin' waitin' fer a bite.
Balmy warm days are here—ain't you kind o' wishin'
That you had your old clothes on an' was goin' fishin'?

BRITISH SHOE TRADE CONDITIONS

The Leeds letter in the Leather Trades' Review, London, says that the output of army footgear continues satisfactory and deliveries are coming to hand at the time fixed. At least one fairly large order has been placed here for women's leggings for use in connection with the women's land boots. These are made of leather and a special kind of rubberized cloth. There are extensive orders on hand for boots for women engaged, not only in agriculture, but in other occupations in which they have replaced men. The demand is being satisfactorily coped with so far, but how long this will continue to be the case is another matter, for requirements are going up. There is a very keen demand also for the special boot being turned out for workers in munition factories, and this has become quite a feature of the local trade. In regard to the purely civilian side the output has been helped up a trifle in consequence of several firms who have finished their army orders turning their attention in this direction. Despite this, however, the production of ladies' boots and shoes for summer wear is severely tested, while it is impossible to meet the demands for children's footwear. This department has always been the worst off in this respect, and time does little or nothing to ease the situation. In men's boots it is the higher qualities that are mostly required.

FRENCH HIDES AND SKINS

At a recent meeting of the Syndical Chamber of French hide and skin dealers in Paris, the president of the association warned the members not to put too much hope in the granting of further export permits for raw hides and skins. He stated that, on the contrary, chances for obtaining such export permits were becoming more and more problematical. The civilian requirements of the country are increasing, and the Ministry of Commerce is showing a tendency to follow the ideas of the military authorities in refusing further export licenses for raw material.

AUSTRALIAN LEATHER REGULATIONS

The Commonwealth Government has assumed control of the leather industry. An advisory committee is to control the inspection of hides and leather, and to be responsible for recommending the issues of permits to export. The object is stated to be the making of Australia a self-contained country so far as hides and leather manufacturers are concerned. One of the first decisions of the Government in this matter is that the prices of boots and shoes for everyday wear for men, women and children, excluding fancy kinds, are not to be increased beyond the level of prices prevailing on December 1st last. A fixed price is made at which tanners must supply the manufacturers, 1s. 9d. a pound for sole leather, 1s. 3½d. a foot for box hide, less the usual trade discount for prompt payment. The price for all other standard hide upper leathers is to be the relative value to box hide as on December 1st, 1916. Tanners must meet the requirements of local civilian and military manufacturers and in the event of refusing to do so the Customs department may withhold permission to export.

SOME THINGS WORTH KNOWING ABOUT LEATHER

Simple and Practical Information for Footwear Dealers—The Different Kinds of Skins and the Various Methods of Tannage—Object of Tanning is to Coat the Fibres of the Leather with Some Insoluble Materials so as to Prevent Their Decay

“THE great variety in leathers that is met with in beginning the study of this subject,” says the Leather Specimen Book, recently published by Pfister & Vogel Leather Co., Milwaukee, “is very confusing until it is realized that most of this difference exists only in the treatment of the surface by embossing, coloring or finishing. The kinds of skins available are restricted within a small range and the methods of tanning follow along a few general lines.

“Leather may for the purpose of this discussion be classified in four different ways: by the kind of skin; by the tannage; by the method of finishing, and by the use for which it is intended.

“Most of the leather in common use is made from the hides and skins of domestic animals, those of cattle being by far the most important, followed by goatskins, sheepskins, horsehides, pigskins, and in a small measure dogskins. Many skins of wild animals, principally those of the kangaroo, deer, peccary, alligator, seal walrus, and buffalo are in fairly general use. Cattle hides are used chiefly for shoe upper and sole leathers, harness, belting, upholstery, bag and case leathers, and to some degree in bookbinding. Goatskins are used for shoes, gloves, bookbinding, and fancy leathers. Sheepskins are used for shoe linings, gloves, and the greater part of the fancy leathers. Horsehides are used for shoes and utility gloves. Pigskins are used for the inner parts of shoes, utility gloves, bookbinding, fancy leathers, and saddle seats. Dogskins find limited application in glove leathers. Kangaroo is used for fine shoe leathers. Deerskins, known as buckskins, are used for both shoes and gloves. Peccary for utility gloves. Alligator for bag and fancy leathers. Seal for bags, bookbinding, and fancy leathers. Walrus for jewelers’ polishing wheels and buffalo for heavy soles.

The Mineral and the Vegetable

“Tannages are divided into two main classes, the mineral and the vegetable. The mineral tannages are subdivided into the chrome and alum. In the former the leather is tanned with basic chromic sulphate and the tannage set with soda ash. The chrome tannage is used for the majority of shoe leathers, for utility and some dress gloves, and in a limited way for sole and belting leather. Alum-tanning, also known as tawing, is done with sulphate of alumina and common salt. This is the principal tannage for fine glove leathers.

“The vegetable tannages are limited only by the number of plants, barks, and other vegetable substances which yield tannins in sufficient quantities for commercial use. In practice only a few tannins offering the advantages of cheapness, large supply, and greater suitability are used. Hemlock and oak bark liquors and extracts separately or in combination are used more than any other vegetable tannins. Most sole and belting leather, practically all upholstery, harness, bag, strap and case leathers, and some shoe and bookbinding leathers are tanned with hemlock or oak or both. Sumac is the principal tanning material for bookbinding leathers, on account of its giving a light-colored leather that is resistant to light and decay. Gall-nuts, myrobalans, divi-divi, and oakwood are also used in bookbinding leathers. Valonia, and chestnut oak extract are used for sole leather in connection with oak and hemlock. Quebracho is used in various leathers, often with hemlock and oak. Gambier and palmetto are used in many of the softer leathers for shoes, gloves, etc. Some leathers are tanned with a mixture of three or four different vegetable materials as may be necessary to give the color, firmness and other properties desired.

“A distinct tannage of limited use is the oil tannage used for making some glove leathers, particularly chamois and buckskin. Cod oil is the oil commonly used. Its oxidation tans the leather.

“The object of tanning is to coat the fibers of the leather with some insoluble material, so as to prevent their decay. The mineral and vegetable materials and oils used for tanning are made to permeate the leather and coat each fiber to accomplish this purpose.

May be Finished on Either Side

“Leather may be finished on the grain or hair side, on the flesh side, or on a split surface made by splitting the leather into two thicknesses. These three primary methods are given as follows with subdivisions and examples from the specimens.

1. Grain Finish.
 - a. Full or natural grain.
 - a. Natural color of the tannage. Russet color.
 - b. Colored both sides by drum dyeing. Chrome veals, capeskins.
 - c. Table or brush colored—one side. Colored glaze glove leathers.
 - d. Drum dyed, seasoned and glazed. Glazed leathers.
 - e. Hand-boarded after process, b, c, or d. Boarded veals, morocco.
 - f. Embossed after process b or c. Bag leathers.
 - g. Enameled or japanned. Patent shoe leathers.
2. Grain Buffed (snuffed).
 - a. Smooth finish. Snuffed chrome kip, kangaroo sides, harness.
 - b. Velvet finish. Mocha, buckskin, buffed horse.
 - c. Enameled. Grain shaved off. Hand buffed upholstery.
3. Flesh Finish.
 - a. Smooth. Cordovan. Wax calf.
 - b. Velvet finish. Chamois, chrome side splits.
 - c. Enameled and embossed. Machine and deep buffed upholstery.

“Embossing by flat plate or steel roller allows of great variety and imitation in the surface appearance of leather. Sheepskin, for example, may be made to look like seal or alligator by photographing the seal or alligator grain and etching it by chemicals on the embossing plate or roller which is passed over the skin and prints the etched grain on it with the aid of heat and pressure.

“Shoes are the most important use for leather, and after them, gloves, harness, bags, cases, belting, upholstery, bookbinding, straps and various novelties and articles in common use. The purpose for which a leather is intended will determine the raw material, tannage, and method of finishing.

How the Hides are Split

“The manner in which hides are split into thicknesses to make several pieces of leather deserves some explanation. For sole, harness and belting the whole thickness of the cowhide is used. The lighter skins as goatskins and coltskins are not split, but are shaved down to an even thickness all over. The heavier calfskins have a light split taken off the thicker parts by a knife blade splitting machine. Sheepskins are used full thickness or split into two thicknesses for gloves and bookbinding. Cowhides for shoe upper, bookbinding, upholstery, bag leathers, etc., are split into two or more thicknesses. The belt-knife splitting machine used is regulated to make the grain or upper split any desired thickness from the thin paper-like buffing, to the heavy waterproof shoe leather. Shoe leathers are usually split into two thicknesses only.

"Upholstery leathers are split into three to five thicknesses. Successive splits fall short of the original area of the hide because the hide is thickest in the centre and lightest along the flanks. The buffing is a very thin grain split used for bookbinding. The 'slab' makes a very cheap leather for various uses. The thickness of the splits varies according to the demands of the trade."

HE SPECIALIZES IN WOMEN'S SHOES

Nathan Cummings, who has embarked in the wholesale shoe business in Montreal, has a thorough insight into the footwear game, having been connected with it for ten years. When fourteen years old he began in Boston, and afterwards went to the Dry Goods Economist in New York, in the publicity department. Later he was with Sheinwald Department Shoe Store in Boston. Coming to Montreal he took the management of the Manufacturers Shoe Syndicate, at a time when the turn-over was only $60,000 a year. Mr. Cummings succeeded in developing the business within three years until it was $200,000 annually. Due to his excellent connection, the subject of this reference thoroughly understands the jobbers' and buyers' wants. He is exclusively a ladies' shoe man and predicts African brown and battleship gray are the two big bets this coming fall, and also the sport last with a 1½ inch heel. Another color which is fast coming to the front in the United States is khaki calf and kid. Mr. Cummings says the novelty footwear is a line of merchandise that swells up the credit side of the ledger. He visits the leading American shoe centres every three weeks, and invites all Canadian shoe buyers, when coming to Montreal, to make his office and warehouse, at 153 Windsor street, Windsor Arcade, their headquarters. The location is only a half a minute walk from the Windsor Hotel, and all the facilities of his establishment will be placed at the disposal of callers. Mr. Cummings, who was born in St. John, N.B., is fond of motoring, and loses no time in getting to any desired point in his six-cylinder Lozier racing car.

THE BOOTS HE WORE AS A BOY

The accompanying illustration shows a pair of long leather boots, which were worn by Fred R. Foley, shoe merchant, of Bowmanville, Ont., two score of years ago. The size is four and they have copper toes and bright red sheepskin adornment at the front of the leg. Mr. Foley has kept the "kicks" all these years. They are in a good state of preservation and naturally arouse curiosity and interest when shown to friends and customers. Top boots were regarded as quite the proper thing for all lads at the time. There was often rivalry among boys to measure the height and see whose footwear came farthest up on the leg. He who could boast of an inch or two of leather more than his companions occupied a rather enviable position.

AN ENTHUSIAST IN SEVERAL LINES

(See Front Cover)

Oscar Brunet, President of the Eagle Shoe Co., Montreal, is a gentleman who would rather talk about the widely known product of his factory than about himself. He is heart and soul in the shoe game, and is enthusiastic in anything which he undertakes. Previous to organizing, along with others, the Eagle Shoe Co., some fourteen years ago, he was a general merchant at Coteau Landing, Quebec, where he did a thriving business and handled lots of shoes. The Eagle Shoe Factory was first located at 360 Providence street, but about ten years ago was removed to its present site at 587 Beaudry street. The company make men's and women's fine Goodyear welts, and about two years ago added women's McKays. Outside of business activities Mr. Brunet is fond of automobiling, enjoys a good pipe and is a diligent reader. If there is any form of discussion in which he likes to participate, beyond the trend of styles and the manufacturing costs of shoes, it is politics, of which he has a knowledge far beyond the average. Mr. Brunet, however, is a quiet man, and no matter how warm the discussion may grow, never raises his voice in triumphant accents or in indignant tones, for he is genial and affable under all circumstances.

NEW ENGLISH LEATHER CENSUS

England is compiling another leather census from manufacturers and dealers, which it is believed will show the necessity of importing more leather.

DO RETAILERS DODGE WHEN TRAVELERS CALL?

Should a traveler send out advance cards when he makes two trips a year with spring and fall samples, and calls upon a regular line of customers? This is a moot question, and has its supporters and opponents.

"No sir, you don't catch me sending out advance notices," remarked one road representative. "I take chances on my man, and find that I do a good deal better at the end of my trip than if I had heralded my coming through-out the Eastern provinces which I cover. In these days, when men are stocked up with goods some of them who have not the backbone or stamina to say no, knowing their weakness for over-buying, will, if they get notice, find it very convenient to be out of town on the day you are supposed to arrive. Previous advices of arrival afford shoemen every excuse to drag out all the cartons of your lines that he may be carrying—possibly half of them being empties, and pointing to rows on the shelves, say—'Look here, I have all these goods I bought from you last season left yet. They really are not moving at all.'

"I would far rather take chances on catching a man just by casually dropping in, than I would to announce that I was on the way, and would see him on or about such a date."

"I do not agree with you," spoke up another traveler, who was standing near by. "I have sent out advance cards for years, and think that most members of the trade like to get them. They feel that you have their interests at

"I am very pleased with your Journal, and think it should be in the hands of every shoe repairer, as there are always lots of pointers that a man in the trade can pick up by a perusal of its columns. You certainly get out a bright and readable publication."

heart, and when you take the trouble to notify a customer that you are on the way, he is very apt to hold himself free. In some cases, I have had them have their orders on stock goods made up, and waiting. Now and then, of course, there may be some weak-minded, shilly-shallying sort of a chap, who cannot say no, and resorts to all kinds of deception rather than come out with a plain refusal to purchase. This fellow may purposely be out of town, or go fishing or adopt some other means to avoid me, but retailers who practice this sort of thing are not worth much to you in the long run. A traveler likes a business man who is open, courteous and frank, and not the one who has recourse to petty, tricky or false pretences, and tells you that he is full up, that he is not buying this season, that he is not continuing the line, that your goods are not moving, have not come up to the mark, or he can buy cheaper elsewhere, etc., when all of these excuses are nothing more or less than white fabrications.

"No, I fully believe in sending out advance cards. They establish a more personal connection between you and your customers, than dropping in on them by some chance; In case of any delay on the trip, which makes it impossible for me to reach town on the appointed time, I usually wire or phone. I want to keep faith with the friends of the firm, and not break any engagement. I endeavored now and then to have some humorous device or timely illustration on my card, and at other times a cut of one of our latest models.

This serves as a pleasant reminder of the styles for the coming season, and gives the F—— brand well-directed publicity."

WHERE PEOPLE MUST GO BAREFOOTED

A telegram to the State Department at Washington says that "The Kreuz Zeitung states that the city council of Ziitau has issued an appeal to the entire population to go barefooted, emphasizing the fact that leather and shoes will be scarce during the coming winter. All attempts of the city council to lay up the essential stock of shoes for winter have failed. The Wuerzburger student body has demanded of all male and female students that they go barefooted or without stockings in wooden shoes from June 28th onward.

A cable from Germany to a news agency says: "Berlin's bank clerks to-day set an example in patriotic self-sacrifice. To aid the movement in economy of leather the clerks discarded their shoes. Scores of bare-footed individuals were seen on the principal streets gingerly stepping along and saving their tender feet as much as possible. Berlin's shoe stores are now selling wooden sandals, the only leather being in the toe guards.

down to the sample room in the evening and was inspecting the line when an obsequious clerk from Octon's place, who had been sent down on some mission to find out if Tyson had left the city, walked right into the apartment without knocking. The intruder could scarcely believe his optics when he saw Haig, the dreaded rival of his boss, there buying shoes. He soon made an exit and the news of his discovery was too good to keep. It was not long before Octon had been informed that Tyson, the traveler, had not left town as he had been supposed to do, but was endeavoring to dispose of the Premier line to Haig, while Octon was presumably in control of it for G——. It had been confined to him for years and here was a new turn of affairs which must be promptly and effectively met.

Octon walked down to the hotel in a towering fit of rage, for his usual urbanity and self-poise had deserted him and he was in no mood to be trifled with. He gave a loud knock at the door and Tyson answered it. Octon was invited in, although Haig was in the room. Tyson felt that matters, which had long been unsatisfactory to him and his firm, should come to a head at once.

"'What do you mean,' broke in Octon, 'by selling to another shoeman in the city? You know I have dealt with you for years and pushed your line, on the ground that no one else was to have it here. I find now that you are not living up to the understanding. I will not brook such work on your part, no sir, not for one moment.'

"Thus, he went on, growing warmer all the time. He started to tell Tyson, who had kept silent in order that Octon might have his say, just how a traveler should run his business.

"Finally Tyson, who had kept himself well in hand, remarked in icy tones, 'See here, Octon, I have stood enough abuse from you. I have been told how to run my own business, but I have never told you how to run yours, and I don't intend to. That is your own affair. Here is your order and there is the duplicate and you can cancel just as soon as you d— please. I will tear them up now if you say so,' and he made a move to rip up the sheets.

"'Hold,' said the alarmed Octon, 'I will let the thing go through this time but never again.'

"'All right,' concluded Tyson. Octon departed. Tyson sold Haig several thousand dollars worth and the regime of Octon was over, for he naturally did not buy the Premier line any longer, but Tyson was happy for he secured in Haig a much more profitable account.

NEW SHOE FACTORY FOR PETERBORO

B. F. Ackerman, Son & Co., who, for twenty-five years have been manufacturing harness and saddlery in Peterboro, are one of the most progressive and widely known leather concerns in Canada. They are branching out into the shoe business, and intend to start at an early date the making of men's, boys' and youths' heavy and medium staples. It is understood they will market their output with the wholesale trade. Frank W. McKeen, for the past two and a half years superintendent of Underhills, Limited, Barrie, has been appointed superintendent of the new Ackerman plant in Peterboro, and is looking after the installing of the necessary equipment. He will also have complete charge of the manufacturing end. The most modern shoe machinery on the market is being placed in position by the United Shoe Machinery Co., and it is expected that operations will start during the latter end of the month. Mr. McKeen is a thoroughly experienced shoemaker, and has judgment, insight and skill which, in every way, qualify him for his new post in Peterboro's newest industry.

HAVE MOVED IN NEW HOME

Eugene Guay, Reg., have removed from their temporary quarters, 1870 St. James street, Montreal, to the new building which they have erected on the site of the old one which was destroyed by fire in January last. Their new premises are situated at 230 Marguerite street. They have a three-storey building, 40 x 50 feet, equipped with the very latest machinery for the manufacturing of fibre board, leather board, counters, etc. The firm also carry a large quantity of inner soles of all kinds.

BRITISH LEATHER EMBARGO

The New England Shoe and Leather Association sent out the following notice last week to the members of the Association:—

There has been much uncertainty regarding the meaning of the partial lifting of the British Leather Embargo, as set forth in the press dispatch, quoting Consul-General Robert P. Skinner, of London, published July 20th.

This cablegram stated that manufactures of leather up to 25 per cent. of the imports admitted into the United Kingdom in 1916 might be shipped, but there has been much doubt as to whether or not "manufactures of leather" included boots and shoes, the general presumption being that these were included.

This question has been definitely settled through receipt of a cablegram by the Boston office of Hide and Leather, reading as follows:

"London, July 24th, 1917.

"Concessions include manufactures of leather, such as fancy goods, toilet articles only; leather itself and shoes excluded.

(Signed) SKINNER,
Consul-General."

On account of the general uncertainty surrounding this matter, we have refrained until now from sending any official notification to our members.

SAYS PRICES WILL BE HIGHER

Any retailer who delays buying footwear that he will need during the next six months because he expects to see lower prices, will wait in vain, says the July issue of "Shoe Facts," which is published by Ames-Holden-McCready, Limited, Montreal, and has given much thought and study to the trend of prices.

Continuing this interesting and splendidly illustrated publication says:—Prices may be lower some time, but they will be higher first, and the merchant who waits 30 to 60 days more to cover his requirements for fall and winter will be very lucky if he buys at to-day's prices.

There has been so much speculation and misleading information given out about the leather market that few retailers know the actual facts or have a clear knowledge of what they mean.

The prices of leather and other materials that go into shoes advanced very rapidly during the past two years, until about January 1st, 1917, when it seemed that the top level had been reached. At any rate since that time the market has been rather inactive, with comparatively few advances and even slight reductions on some materials.

While tanners and manufacturers are very much interested in the future course of the leather market it is not of immediate interest to retailers whether the price of leather continues to advance or not, because further advances in leather would not materially affect the price of shoes for several months.

As a matter of fact, very few shoes have, as yet, been made of materials purchased by manufacturers on to-day's market.

Manufacturers and jobbers still have on hand shoes made on the costs of six months and even a year ago. These goods are being sold to retailers today at prices based on the leather market of six months ago, or nearly so.

Manufacturers also still have more or less material bought or contracted for during the past year and they are still accepting factory orders at comparatively low prices as long as the materials last.

When old stocks of manufactured goods and materials are cleaned up, and manufacturers are forced to produce shoes on to-day's market, retailers are going to get another severe jolt in regard to prices.

$10,287,750 SHOE ORDER

A $10,000,000 shoe contract was let lately by U.S. government. Twenty-one concerns shared in the agreement to furnish 2,175,000 pairs of marching and field shoes for the army to cost a total of $10,287,750.

Among the successful bidders were the Brown and the International Shoe Companies, St. Louis; Albert H. Weinbrenner, Milwaukee; J. E. Dayton, Williamsport, Pa.; T. D. Barry Co., Charles A. Eaton Co., Fred. F. Field, Churchill and Alden Co., E. E. Taylor Co., all of Brockton, Mass.; and French, Shriner & Urner, Boston.

The price per pair averaged $4.73, which is slightly lower than the previous contract, although let through the defense council's committee on supplies, headed by Julius Rosenwald.

A SHOE SALE THAT BROUGHT RESULTS

Knechtel & Co., shoe merchants, of Woodstock, Ont., recently ran a shoe sale that was unique in character and brought excellent results. This company has a store in Stratford, one in London and one in Woodstock. The goods in the London and Woodstock stores are all shown on racks with a price ticket on every pair.

It is significant that at this, the quiet season of the kind to be seen in Woodstock, now adorns the front of the Knechtel Shoe Store, announcing their big War-Economy Shoe Sale which starts Friday morning. The entire front of the store, windows, doors and all, are covered by the red, white and blue sign, which is divided off into panels on which appear brief announcements of the specials and their prices. Friday morning a door will be cut through year, Mr. Knechtel had sufficient enterprise to make trade come his way. He closed the store up tight for two days before the opening day of sale. On the door he had a sign, "Closed while we mark down prices for our big sale."

He covered the entire front of his store with a cotton sign divided into squares and quoted prices in each square of the various lines on sale.

The Woodstock Sentinel-Review made the following comment about this sign:

"Something new in the line of signs and the first of its kind to allow the people into the store. Full particulars of the sale will be found in the full page advertisement in this issue."

Then he was not afraid to use liberal advertising space. We reproduce a full-page advertisement that is exceedingly effective. It is free from "hot air," stating the facts plainly describing each line briefly and quoting the prices. The "layout" is excellent and the results proved that the ad had great pulling powers.

Mr. Knechtel informs us that the financial results far exceeded his best hopes.

STYLE FEATURES IN NEXT SEASON'S OFFERINGS

Leading Characteristics of Women's Footwear for Spring and Summer are the Continuance of High Cuts, Popularity of Covered Wood Heel, Predominance of the Bal., with Long, Slender Toe, the Call for Brown and Gray, and Light, Airy Effects

WHAT FIRST SPRING MODELS SHOW

Leading colors—brown and gray in different shades, the darker tones predominating.

Long, pointed slender forepart and eight-inch tops, with some nine, ten and eleven inches.

Strong showing in covered wood heels, both in Louis and half-Louis, from 14-8 to 18-8.

Popularity of the sport last or English walking shoe as great as ever.

White footwear of all kinds more strongly in evidence than any previous season.

Plain pumps with entire absence of ornaments or buckles and with square, round and heart-shaped throats.

New features are the long, circular vamp extending back to the heel, perforated straight tip, and round breasted Louis heel.

Fancy foxing and ornamental eyelet stays and collars are on several models.

Tops for most part straight but wave slant and crescent cut are also seen.

BROWN and gray, in various shades, appear to be the favorite colors in women's footwear this coming season. They are seen in abundance in the new models for spring, which are already being presented to the trade. Nearly all the shoe factories have their samples for next season under way, and a few firms have them completed.

Among the organizations showing their 1918 spring and summer styles in Toronto during the past week were the Regina Shoe Co., Montreal, represented by H. Frechette, the Canadian Footwear Co., Montreal, represented by Emil Larose, sales manager, and the Star Shoe Co., Montreal, represented by P. A. Doig, sales manager.

According to the new creations shown, there is very little change in the forepart of ladies' shoes, the long, pointed, recede effect still having the call. Vamps are about the same length as last season, from $3\frac{1}{2}$ to $3\frac{3}{4}$ inches, and the popular height of tops is eight inches, although there are a few offerings with nine, ten and even eleven-inch uppers. There does not appear to be any great predominance of all fabric shoes or cloth tops, but a fair representation in different hues is observed. Prices, on the whole, are about the same as last season, although, in the medium grades, there is a slight reduction on some lines. The imitation wing tip is not seen as much as last season, and either the plain toe, or the imitation straight tip, apparently has the call.

In the samples of the Canadian Footwear Co., which are more representative than ever in women's, misses' and children's McKays, there is a strong showing in black and white effects. A patent shoe with white buck top, three-quarter foxing and perforated vamp, half-Louis leather heel, is an artistic one. The display in white is decidedly attractive both in canvas and poplins, and embraces bals, pumps, oxfords and strap slippers in pleasing variety. An all-white oxford, with long pointed toe and covered half Louis heel, is a winner, and an all-white oxford, on a sport last, also captures admiration. Enamelled leather heels are strong in the various lines, with the heels in each case matching the quarters. The popular height of top is eight inches. Three and four strap shoes in white are also having a fair call.

Extended Circular Vamp Seen

One new effect is a long, circular vamp, which extends back to the forepart of the heel. In height, pedestals are about the same as last year, from 14-8 to 18-8, and are seen in Louis, half-Louis and Cuban. The covered wood heel is decidedly popular.

Among the smart offerings shown is a patent, tuxedo, eight-inch bal, with dull calf top, and another inviting presentation is a bal, with gray cloth vamp and top and cafe-au-lait cloth foxing, extending around the throat, and enamelled leather heel to match foxing; a briar brown vamp and top, white cloth foxing and white enamelled heel; a cafe-au-lait vamp and top, pearl gray foxing, gray enamelled heel; a nine-inch wave top, dull kid, circular vamp, eyelet stay and collar, and white cloth quarters, and white cloth-covered wood heel; a pearl gray kid, circular vamp, eyelet stay and collar, pearl gray cloth quarters and covered wood heel to match; a patent, long circular vamp, ivory kid quarters, and covered half-Louis wood heel.

There is a nice array of pumps, with square and heart-shaped throats, and an entire absence of ornaments. French cord is noticed around the tops of the pumps. A unique showing is a one-button blucher effect, whole quarter pump, in both patent and kid.

There is also a good showing in kid, patent and gunmetal, in misses', children's and infants', the high tops taking particularly well. The whole range of the Canadian Footwear line is imposing and effective.

Attractive Lines for Misses and Children

The Star Shoe Co. have some enterprising and pretentious showings in McKays and turns for growing girls, misses children and infants, and in stitchdowns for infants, girls and misses. The leading leathers are patent, kid and gunmetal—gunmetal and kid predominating. One of the features of the line is the Aunt Mathilda, a new, full-fitting shoe, stylish enough for the young, and comfortable and dressy for older women. It is made on a turn last, triple E width, in one and two strap "theo," lace oxford and bal. in fat ankle model. The company are also displaying flexible stitch-downs in Mary Janes, pumps, bals, etc., while the white canvas lines are more representative and attractive than ever. The offerings in white and black and brown are right up to the minute in style, fit and craftsmanship, and the neatness and dressiness of the whole for the coming season is superior to any other ever turned out by this well-known organization.

In the Regina Shoe Co's models wave and scalloped tops are featured to some extent and long, plain, pointed toes predominate, although some have imitation straight tips. In heels, the leather Louis, the half-Louis and the round breasted half-Louis are seen. The latter is a novel style of

HIGH HONOR FOR SHOE RETAILER

William O. Adams, shoe merchant, of Belleville, Ont., has been elected Grand Senior Warden of the Grand Lodge, A. F. & A. M., which met recently in Belleville. He has been in the retail shoe game in that city for the last sixteen years, his father being a veteran shoemaker, who passed away some fourteen years ago. Previous to his starting out in his own behalf, Mr. Adams was in the employ of John McKeown, veteran footwear merchant, of Belleville, who has been fifty-four years in the business. The new Grand Senior Warden of the Masonic Order will receive hearty congratulations on his elevation to his present responsible and influential position in the craft. He was W. M. of Belleville Lodge, No. 123, in 1912, and belongs to Moira Chapter, Belleville, and King Baldwin Preceptory No. 7, where he fills a high office. R. W. Bro. Adams was appointed a Grand Steward by Grand Lodge in 1913, a position at one time held by his father.

HALF-SOLING OF SHOES URGED

The repair man with modern machinery is the individual who will do the most to conserve the leather supply of the nation, according to J. H. Martin, president of the National Leather and Shoe Finders' Association, which met in Milwaukee recently. Mr. Martin said that general half-soling of shoes would mean a saving of thousands of tons of hides annually. The cost of shoes, he added, would remain high indefinitely.

AGGRESSIVE SHOEMAN PAYS VISIT TO EAST

Charles Newton, manager of the shoe department of Robinson & Co., Limited, Winnipeg, has been spending a few weeks in the east, visiting New York, Boston, Montreal, Toronto and other shoe centres. His many friends were pleased to greet him on the occasion of his long trip, for "Charley," as he is popularly known, is acquainted with the trade in all parts of Canada. He reports that business with his firm during the past few weeks has been good and the outlook is exceptionally promising. Previous to going with Robinson & Co, several years ago, Mr. Newton was with the Rannard Shoe, Limited, and before that he resided in Toronto, where he was employed by the T. Eaton Co. He was also in business for several years on College street. Mr.

Newton is a thorough student of styles and a shrewd buyer, and believes in giving customers service, value and satisfaction. Under no circumstances is the slightest misrepresentation permitted, and every patron knows what is said about the stock is reliable and complete. The Robinson shoe department is one of the largest and best conducted of any in the west, owing to the initiative and aggressiveness of its manager.

NEWSY BRIEFS FROM ST. JOHN

James Hurley, for many years connected with the boot and shoe business in Fredericton, N.B., died recently after a lingering illness. He was seventy-five years of age and was a native of County Cork, Ireland. For the greater part of his life he resided in Fredericton. He is survived by two sons and three daughters.

Ralph D. Hartford, son of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Hartford, of Calais, was drowned in the St. Croix River, Saturday, July 21st. After dinner he went to the river to have a swim and while diving from a high wharf landed on his stomach with such force that he was knocked unconscious and sank immediately. Despite every effort the body was not found for nearly an hour. He was employed in the Calais shoe factory.

Arthur E. Hardiman, a former boot and shoe manufacturer and repairer in St. John, N.B., who crossed to France with a well-known New Brunswick infantry unit, was married in England on June 11th, to Miss Florence Nellie Francis. Sergeant Hardiman was married in Tunbridge Wells, England, while on leave from the trenches. He is sergeant shoemaker for the unit.

Harold W. Rising, secretary-treasurer for the firm of Waterbury & Rising, Limited, wholesale and retail shoe dealers, is on a visit to the United States, where he will look over the markets with a view to securing a supply of boots and shoes for the spring of 1918.

Levi Jackson, of Lynn, Mass., recently paid a visit to St. John to renew old acquaintances. Mr. Jackson, who formerly resided there, is at present employed in the boot and shoe business in Lynn.

STIMULUS FOR THE SHOE SELLER

At a recent gathering of retail shoemen, a leading speaker said: "Gentlemen, you have no competition! Each man has his own individual problem to work out. Let him do so without bothering about what his neighbor is doing. His neighbor's problem is different. To ape another man's method invites failure. Find what it costs you to do business and base profits accordingly, regardless of what the other fellow is charging. If he is cheaper, probably the difference in price means lack of service. Most dealers are selling too close, anyway. People do not want cheap shoes—they want good service and reasonable prices."

Regarding clerks, he said that most salespeople are indifferent. "If that is your trouble, get better ones and pay them good salaries. You will profit by it in the end. Develop your backbone, get out of the rut and you will succeed."

ANOTHER FACTORY IN MAISONNEUVE

The Leda Shoe Co., Limited, will begin in a few days the erection of their new factory which is to be situated on Ernest street, Maisonneuve, between 2nd and 3rd avenues. It will be a four-storey cement and brick building, 40 x 100 feet, and will be equipped with the very latest machinery for the manufacture of McKays and turns for women, misses, children and infants. This firm will also make a high-grade turn slipper, dongola kid, for men. This will be one of their specialties. Mr. J. P. Cote will be president and general manager. They will have the factory completed about the 1st of October.

WOMAN DRIVES DELIVERY TRUCK

"I took this job so that some healthy, physically fit man could go overseas and fight alongside my husband and brothers in the trenches," said little Mrs. Eva Crane, Winnipeg's first motor truck driver.

Mrs. Crane drives one of the big delivery trucks for the Consolidated Rubber Co. She went to work Monday. She loads and unloads her own truck, gets her orders from the office, delivers the goods to the customers of the firm, and to the railways, working alongside the warehousemen in the shipping department of the firm, asking and accepting no assistance other than is ordinarily accorded to a man on the job.

"No, I am not an Englishwoman," she said, "I come from Sidney, Manitoba, and I was born in Lindsay, Ontario. Both father and mother were Canadians. I don't find it extraordinarily hard work," she continued. "Handling heavy cases is not much a question of strength, it's the knack of swinging them around right."

pedestal. and is something strikingly new. Wood heels with aluminum plates are very popular. Some of the models have fancy foxings and carry the new circular vamp, which extends back to the heel and is a pleasing innovation. Havana brown and military gray are leading shades. Chocolate kid is also quite a favorite and the square throat and circular vamp are also noticed on several lines. An eleven-inch wave top, glazed kid bal, with leather Louis heel is decidedly snappy. Among other showings for the season is a black kid fancy scalloped vamp, with collar or insertion of gray kid around the vamp. Other feature shoes are a Havana brown kid bal, with brown kid eyelet stay and collar and champagne cloth top; a Havana brown kid bal with fancy foxing and collar and cafe-au-lait cloth top; a patent vamp and fancy foxing, waved top, covered wooden heel and olive gray cloth top; a Havana brown kid vamp, eleven-inch champagne cloth, wave cut top, brown kid backstay and covered Louis heel; a Havana brown kid bal, with round Blucher effect forepart and ivory kid top; a square throat, circular vamp of patent leather with backstay to match and covered wood heel and top of pearl gray cloth. More attractive models are an all-nigger brown calf bal and an all-mahogany calf bal.

In pumps there is a very pretentious array. For the most part they are plain, with square, round or heart-shaped throat; perforations are seen around the tops of a number of low cuts, while all ornaments are eliminated. The new creations for spring in women's wels, McKays and turns of the Regina Shoe Co. reflect credit in every way upon the facilities and progressiveness of the firm.

GET THE HARVEST IN

Everybody Should Help—It's as Important to Get in the Crop as to Send Men to the Front—Do Your Part—Give Your Customers a Hand

SOME one has said that it takes five men at home to properly support a man at the front. The food question is undoubtedly as important, if not more so than munitions. The fighting power at the front must be kept up with the steady supply of good, wholesome food for men and horses.

We are confronted in Canada with the most crucial period in our history. We have within our reach the greatest harvest it has ever been our good fortune to produce. We are face to face with a situation, however, that calls for self-denial on the part of those at home which, while not as great as that shown by those who have gone to the front, is none the less worthy of effort. Farmers are short handed and unless the necessary help is given them just now a good deal of nature's bounty will be lost.

All over the country a response is being made to the appeal for help, but so far it is nothing like adequate to the extremely pressing requirements. Manufacturers and others are letting their employees off for periods of one to two weeks to lend a hand in gathering in the grain. The pity is that more do not see it to their individual interests, as well as that of the country at large, to shut down and give immediate attention to this pressing problem.

A month or so ago the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL made the suggestion to the retail store trade that it would be a good thing to close up their shops for two or three days a week and give their employees as well as themselves the opportunity to take a hand in harvesting operations. Some have taken hold of the idea to a certain extent, especially on Wednesdays, but there has not been the movement that might be expected.

Retailers throughout the country are in a better position than any one else to understand the seriousness of the situation, and also better situated to render help than many others. We believe, that not only would they not lose trade through closing their premises for two or three days a week, but would gain popularity with those who are their customers and who are in such dire straits for help.

All the talk about the farmer and cheap wages is aside from the question. The country needs the foodstuffs, and everybody will profit by its salvage. Let everybody in the shoe and leather trades do his "bit" right now.

How to Inaugurate the Cash System

The Shoe Retailer Must Convince Customers That He is Acting in Their Benefit as Well as His Own—The Fear of Incurring the Enmity of Certain People—All Who have Long Hesitated and Finally made the Change are now Glad They Did It

“YES! I would like to do a strictly cash business, but how can I? There is altogether too much credit extended to the people of this place and I lose heavily every year by allowing shoes to leave the shop which are not paid for. I have several hundred dollars on my books now on which I will not be able to realize ten cents on the dollar.”

So spoke a Montreal shoeman last week and his experience is not dissimilar from that which has been undergone by retailers in other towns and cities.

The cash system is an ideal one. If every wearer of shoes handed over the price for them at the time the purchase was made what a revolution would be wrought on business methods generally.

Educate Trade the Other Way

The shoe retailer is in most of the smaller centres, and in some of the larger ones too, constantly asked for credit. His trade has, perhaps, been educated to it.

The man who considers his credit good or who has worked up a reputation for being “good pay” looks upon it practically as a personal affront in many cases if he is refused credit. He forgets, apparently, about the extra expense for book-keeping and collecting to which the shoeman is put, as well as the loss of interest on outstanding money, not to mention the fact that it cripples the dealer in his own business transactions and is often the means of preventing him from taking cash discounts on the goods he purchases. A great deal could evidently be said against the granting of credit and very little in its favor.

The granting of credit presupposes a certain percentage of loss by bad debts. This is a practical certainty, but may be reduced to a minimum, no doubt, by the exercise of care in the selection of credits.

Very often the purchaser could pay cash, but prefers to withhold it for other purposes when he can stand the dealer off. Many amusing stories are told of the schemes and trickery resorted to in order to accomplish this. One customer, of whom we have been told, pleaded inability to pay his bill without drawing upon his bank account, but at the same time offered to lend the dealer money at a good rate of interest.

Fears That Are Groundless

On the retailer's side, he is afraid to talk cash for fear of offending customers and driving trade away from the store. He fears that unless all the merchants in the town adopt the same system he would meet with disaster, so that it is no wonder that he frequently hesitates.

The very fact that the dealer must exercise discretion in granting credit seems to do away with the argument that customers are likely to be antagonized if credit is refused. No shoe merchant can afford to grant credit indiscriminately and must, of necessity, refuse credit in many instances. People to whom favors of this kind are denied often remain very good customers of the store. In any case, he must decide which is the more profitable, to take a chance on the trade of such people or to lose the total amount of the account which they might run at the store. Credit can be refused in a firm, kindly manner. Merchants can also do much by holding together and profiting from one another's experience.

In any case, it is something of an undertaking to convert a credit business to a cash basis, and many shoemen who have tried it have lost their nerve and gone back to the old system. Probably if they had gone about the business in a different, more diplomatic way, they might have got through with it successfully.

Change is for Public Benefit

The first thing to be done is to convince, as nearly as possible, the general public with the idea that the change is to be made for the benefit of the public as well as the store. There are plenty of plausible arguments to support the contention that a store can sell for cash cheaper than for credit. It cuts off expensive book-keeping, loss through bad accounts, cost of collection, enables the merchant to take his discounts, etc. These facts should be explained to all old credit customers in a letter.

The next thing to do is to convince the public that the new system is really to be a cash one—cash for all and every one, without exception—that it is never to be violated no matter what the financial standing of the customer may be. If everyone knows that the merchant is absolutely impartial and that all are on an equal basis, most of them will be satisfied. But, of course, it is impossible that a change of this sort can be made without creating dissatisfaction among a few cranky customers who will probably quit trading at the store temporarily. Most of them, however, will go back sooner or later.

Send Out Notices of the Change

In addition to writing letters to the credit customers, those who buy for cash should also receive an announcement of the proposed change with the reasons for making it. It may be stated in this letter that in the future it will be possible to sell at lower prices than formerly, owing to the fact that the cash customers will not have to make up the deficiencies caused by the loss on uncollectable accounts.

They are the Easiest Articles to Sell, but are not Proof Against the Slip-Shod Treatment which they get in some Stores, and then the Retailer will have the Nerve to Say, "Oh there is no Money in Small Articles"—Hints on Booming Live Department

FEATURE your findings! Get into the game as if you meant it, not in a half-apologetic, we-keep-them-because-they're-asked-for sort of manner. Findings are the easiest articles on earth for the shoeman to sell, but even they are not proof against the indifferent sort of treatment they so often receive in otherwise up-to-date shoe stores.

We wonder why it is many a man who is an enthusiastic and successful shoe salesman, and who backs up his salesmanship by telling displays, goes to some drawer or table in an obscure corner of the store to get the laces or polishes desired by the customer. The only reason we can see is that because the articles are small they are therefore despised. Never was a greater mistake made!

If for no other reason than the profit to be made in handling them, you should push your findings sales to the limit. As has been previously stated in these columns, the average net profit on shoes is about 20 per cent., and on findings it is anywhere from 35 to 125 per cent. Is not a trade like that worth getting after hot-foot, especially when these articles are easily handled and sales quickly made?

But it is not only in financial returns that findings prove their worth. They are the greatest feeders for the shoe departments proper that can be placed in any store. If properly located and displayed many people who come for findings alone will stay to buy shoes when under the skilful guidance of a good salesman. A findings display can be made most attractive and compelling.

The Initial Investment is Small

If laces and polishes were the only items included in the term "findings," one could understand perhaps, the indifference displayed by so many retailers toward them. But when you look over a list of the articles more commonly called for, the extent of the trade is evident. Here are a few of them: laces, polishes, blackings of all kinds, white canvas cleaners, shoe-trees, rubber heels, insoles, heel-cushions, overgaiters and leggings, arch and ankle supports, brushes, shoe-lifts, button-hooks, ice-creepers, and heel-plates. There are items in this list and items not mentioned here, which appeal strongly to both young and old of either sex. Surely the salesman does not lack opportunity to exercise his talents with such materials to work on!

Any retailer desirous of adding findings to his general stock is always surprised at the small amount of capital required to make a creditable beginning. It should be remembered that this capital is very quickly turned over and thus the stock can always be kept new and complete with little subsequent extra outlay. From $150 to $200 is quite ample to start with. The smaller figure will do for retailers in close touch with findings manufacturers; the larger for those whose stocks can not be replenished so readily. When you consider that many hustling shoe men have turned over a capital of this size in less than a month, there is absolutely no risk in the proposition, nor any reason for hesitation, in view of the undoubted benefits to be derived therefrom. A catalogue from a good findings establishment will give you all needed information.

How to Start Operations

To ensure success from the start, you should open a findings department and keep it entirely separate from the other departments. This should be located just inside the door, and will take up very little floor-space, as a great deal of the stock is kept in a show case, and the remainder can be shelved within easy reach. This show case should not be a cheap, second-hand affair. Far from it! The success of your department will depend considerably on its appearance. For no heavy outlay you can secure a handsomely finished case of quarter-cut oak, with plate glass top and shelves, mirrored doors, plated adjustable shelf brackets, from 6 to 10 feet long. This will attract instant attention if its contents are carefully arranged and tastefully displayed. Customers entering the store cannot miss it, and while waiting to be served, will view the contents with interest. When leaving the competent salesman will always bring it to the customer's notice, with the usual result of adding perhaps 50 cents or $1 to a $5 order. This not only increases gross sales, but also net profits.

Proper Methods of Management

There are two in common use. In one, each clerk is instructed as to the proper way to sell findings, and is supposed to push this department as thoroughly as he can. Some proprietors judge the worth of their clerks largely by the amount of findings they sell, and reward or admonish them accordingly. This is because findings sales are largely an index to the initiative and ability of the salesman. In other cases, the salesmen are given a certain percentage on all sales above a certain total. This would seem to be the better method, as it appeals powerfully to that motive so strong in everyone—self-interest. An enterprising salesman can add several dollars per week to his salary in this way.

Still other shoemen run this as an entirely separate department, and place it entirely in charge of one clerk. The latter is responsible for results and any customer desiring findings is turned over to him for attention. This has its advantages and its drawbacks as well. If one person is responsible for the appearance of the department, it will probably be kept in better condition than if several were interested in its upkeep. "Too many cooks spoil the broth." It will also be easier to keep accurate record of sales, as this record will be in one sales-book rather than in several, and mixed with other sales at that. Again, there is less likelihood of stock running short or any line becoming shopworn if one man is responsible, and keeps in intimate touch with it day by day. On the other hand, when a customer has been successfully handled by a certain salesman, it is often annoying to the customer, and harmful to the interests of the store, to turn him over to another salesman for attention. It breaks that personal relationship, which is a strong feature in successful salesmanship. This is a matter which must be decided according to the judgment of the retailer. In any case, careful record must be kept of all findings, so that the department may receive due credit.

Put in Special Findings Window

Give up your best window to the findings department periodically. It will not only sell findings, but draw people into the store for the other departments. You can make a very neat, attractive display if you study out a plan before dressing the window. For instance, display a line of polishing and mud brushes and daubers close to the shoe polishes. Passers-by will see the point much quicker than if the articles were dumped into the window helter-skelter. With button-hooks, shoe-lifts, overgaiters and leggings, all sorts and colors of fancy laces, arch-supports, insoles and other articles, the window will not lack for contrast and can be arranged in very telling combinations. With laces alone, a good window-trimmer can make an effective and unusual display. These remarks apply to the inside show-case as well.

Displays should consist of seasonable articles. Don't show ice-creepers in summer or cricket and golf spikes in winter. There are enough all-the-year-round staples to fill a window at any season. Occasionally, for the sake of variety, you could make a strong effect by dressing a window with one article alone. This is always an instant eye-catcher, when carefully done.

Give the findings department a fair share of the advertising space. Let people know that your lines are complete, and that you are in earnest in your efforts to give them the best goods obtainable. But don't cut prices, except on rare occasions. You would be very foolish to do this just because you make a large profit. Why shouldn't you? There is enough dead timber in any business without throwing away any advantage you possess. Besides, if you boom the department in the proper way, you'll never have to cut prices. That has been the experience of many of the most successful retailers in this line.

Where Tact and Judgment Come In

There is one undoubted advantage in expecting each salesman to boost the sale of findings, and that lies in the opportunity he has of suggesting findings which are needed by the customers on whom he waits. If a man comes in for a pair of rubbers and the salesman notices that the heels of his shoes are so run over that an accurate fit at the heel is impossible, there is his chance to suggest having the heels trimmed and a pair of rubber heels put on. When selling a pair of shoes, he can suggest the value of a pair of trees in keeping the shape and also in allowing perfect ventilation. If he is fitting a lady whose instep has fallen, he can urge the necessity and the comfort of arch-supports; to a lady with a high instep he can sell inside heel cushions to absorb the shock and add to the comfort and fit. These instances can be multiplied indefinitely; in fact, the salesman with initiative and resolution can materially increase his own value and the firm's profits by training himself to act upon hints suggested by accurate observation.

Tact is Always Necessary

Of course, in profiting by observation as outlined above, great tact must be used in making these suggestions, so that no offence will be taken. This would do vastly more harm than good, and the salesman must study the question from all sides, profit by past mistakes, and strive by force of personality and genuine courtesy to make such sales and still have the customer's good-will. In fact, quite often the latter will thank the salesman for some hint thrown out which means much added comfort.

Keep your stock up to par; display and advertise it well; exact courtesy and powers of observation from your salesmen; and above all, boom your findings department in and out of season. You'll find that the net profits will pay your minor expenses, and still leave you with a substantial balance to the good at the end of the year. It will also be a factor in many shoe sales which would otherwise have gone elsewhere.

Both letters can be got out in the form of a neat circular that can be sent under one-cent postage and will probably answer the purpose as well as if they were mimeographed. There will be a few credit customers who should be sent personal letters, and the matter should be explained to them personally if that is possible. All of this should be done considerable time before the change is to go into effect, so there will be no misunderstanding.

When the time arrives to make the change, it should be announced prominently in the newspapers and the store may be thereafter advertised as Blank's Cash Shoe Store, if that is considered advisable. On the day of the change a big sale can be held. In addition to unusually attractive values, some souvenir or other inducement should be offered in order to draw as many people as possible into the store, and to impress upon them the purpose of the occasion. In this way their impression of the change will be made favorable rather than otherwise.

and News of the Leather Trade at Home and Abroad

LEATHER business continues on the quiet side, although there has been rather more enquiry during the past couple of weeks. Tanners are playing a waiting game, and as most of the factories are quiet and have not yet made up their requirements for the coming season, there is little interest not to say excitement in the leather situation. Until the present stocks in retail hands begin to move, jobbers will not feel much like placing orders, and as no movement is likely to take place until September is well under way, the trade seems to think that business will remain in statu quo for another month at least. There is nothing new in the foreign situation as far as the leather trade is concerned. The embargo still remains unchanged on leather and shoes, notwithstanding the efforts made to secure modifications.

Trade in the States.—The large army orders given out last month and supplemented since by further orders for shoes have had the effect of shortening the supplies somewhat, and manufacturers of lines for general use have manifested some interest. But the situation as reported from Boston and other centres of the shoe and leather industries indicate a listlessness that finds expression in a comparatively weak market. A slightly better tone is noticed in sole, however, and in the heavier and more desirable grades of side leather there has been increased activity. The leather for marching shoes has been sold on a basis of 50 cents, and business in black chrome sides has been done at 46 cents for prime selections. Calfskins are selling well in small quantities and boarded leather seems to be in good demand. Patent leather seems to be holding its own, and in glazed kid, although manufacturers are endeavoring to maintain prices, reports are numerous of concessions made, especially in the lower grades. Stock quoted at 75 cents has sold as low as 63 cents, and the demand is principally for grades from 40 cents to 50 cents. The export trade has improved somewhat and this may help.

Glazed Kid Situation.—Concerning the market and prospects of glazed kid, the SHOE AND LEATHER report says:

The demand for colors, which was moderately good during the last sixty days, has dropped off through the possibility of an economy wave disturbing stylish footwear. As this is the season when thought is generally centered upon the evolution of spring novelty footwear, it is to be hoped that an early mutual understanding will be reached between the government and the trade representatives. As the object of the Commercial Economy Board's project for style curtailment is proper economy of shoe materials, it naturally should follow that unnecessary hardships will not be laid either upon the glazed kid tanners who have scoured the ends of the earth for raw stock suitable for colors or upon the manufacturers who have made American style shoes famous in all countries. Regulation, to be logical, should be constructive and it is difficult to try to standardize the artistic trend which has been the keynote of progress in American shoe manufacturing without handicapping the industry.

Since selected raw skins are available to the tanner and the American woman has the purchasing power to satisfy her desire for footwear to harmonize with the color scheme of her gowns, it is unthinkable that legitimate business should be in any way restricted. The first thing to receive the consideration of the Economy Board should be the conservation of the future meat supply of the nation. Therefore, should investigation show the necessity of placing restrictions on the slaughter of young calves, as is being done in various foreign countries, a rational shoe style policy should dictate a safe balance in favor of kid models. It must be borne in mind that so long as the Russian source of supply remains closed the domestic demand for calfskins must be met to a large extent by the product from native calves.

The usual diversity of opinion exists as to what colors will be popular for spring. Field mouse, steel grey, battleship grey, ivory cream, golden brown, rust, plum and navy blue are the colors chiefly under consideration. Black is always good for stylish cuts and will probably be stronger than last year for ultra fashionable models.

Hide and Skin Conditions.—The market has been dead and devoid of interest in packer hides, except for one or two large sales of heavy native packer steers which sold at the rate of 34 cents. In all other lines the supply has been greater than the demand, except in heavier grades. The situation is decidedly in the buyers favor. Country hides are in somewhat better demand on account of improved quality. For good short haired hides as high as 27 cents has been obtained. Dealers are carrying larger supplies and it is expected that prices will have to be shaded to move them. Calfskins are slow with plenty offering. Packer calfskins have sold at 45 cents in a large way, although 50 cents is asked for select lots. The foreign dry hide market remains dull, buyers being few and unwilling to buy except at cut prices. Wet salted hides are also slow.

Shoe Salvage.—Few people at home, writes a correspondent for an exchange, have any idea of the amazing work of salvaging the wreckage of battle that is going on behind the allied lines in France—work that is saving millions of dollars a year; and yet there are a few things in the conduct of the war more wonderful.

"Only a few days ago," he says, "I visited a trim his ears and groom him until he shines like a thoroughbred, but the first chance he gets to give tongue, the qualities of the born ass will come out. We have known men go through a university and receive every advantage of education and association, who have put back their ears and brayed when an opportunity came to show what was in them. "Though thou shouldst bray a fool in a mortar among wheat with a pestle, yet will not his foolishness depart from him." The calamity wrought by fools, learned and unlearned, in this world makes the angels weep. The crop never seems to diminish, notwithstanding the number killed off regularly. What is needed in the world to-day more than ever is common horse sense. No matter how much money, education, influence, good looks, or even religion you have, if you lack "gumption" you will be classed with the rough coated, long eared, loud voiced kicker whose only use to society is to afford a comparison with a larger and better species. When you meet a genuine ass leave him alone. Abuse and entreaty are lost alike on his tough hide and dull sensibility. Advice and suggestion are worse than wasted on the man who thinks he knows more than seven men that can render a reason.

* * * * *

When a man gets restive under truth it is a pretty good sign that some of it is getting under his hide. We heard of a party the other day who went to a preacher and told him he was creating suspicion and distrust between the men of his congregation and their wives by his pointed remarks on the social evil, and at the very time this old villain was keeping a mistress at a down-town hotel. You can always tell which one is hit when you throw a stone into a crowd of dogs. Honest men do not squirm when thieves are called by their right name, nor decent people become scandalized when swindlers are taken by the throat and brought to law. If you are hit get under the barn and say nothing, and take the first opportunity to quit.

A man's wisdom is discounted by his willingness to talk. As a rule men who know are men who are backward with their opinions. It is not the men who hear spouting in parliament or on the floor of an assembly who direct its affairs. After the uproar the "still small voice" is the order in these matters as in nature. Keep your mouth shut and you will be considered worth spending a dollar to hear. "A fool uttereth all his mind, but a wise man keepeth it in till afterwards." Enough wisdom has been spilt into space in the last two years and a half to end up a conflict of ten times the dimensions of the present European struggle. But the war has gone on and will go on until those who sit and patiently wait for the time for real wisdom to speak. One of the hardest things in the world is to keep the mouth shut, especially when every tongue is on the wag.

* * * * *

Some people accuse Solomon of being pessimistic. It is not with any love for the job that we

COME

open up the sewers of social and business depravity, but for the purpose of flushing them out with a good dose of cold truth.

It is much nicer to pat people on the back than to crack them on the head, but the fact is the world is going plumb to the devil with so much patting. Thousands upon thousands of people are traveling the "broad road" with little idea where they will round up. To soothe a man who sits down in a stupor to freeze were a crime, to lash him into consciousness of his danger is pure love. We are not after the hardened unreclaimable scoundrels who are set in their roguery, but those who are drifting with the tide of sin, and who will soon be out of reach of warning or help. We have been accused of hitting little evils as hard as big ones. Well, we are like the Irishman who hit a head whenever he saw one; we hit out at the small failings because they are just as fatal to righteousness and truth as the large, perhaps more so, and are more common. If some of those who are being hit will run up the white flag and get on the side of truth, they will find the shots going over their heads. When you hear a man complaining of the way the enemy are handling their guns you may be sure things are coming his way. If some of the people who accuse Solomon of running amuck will quit some of their dirty ways, they will not need to complain of being made uncomfortable by his "shots." Quit your mean tricks, let booze alone, give up your adulterous life, drop that gambling, cease running down your neighbor and settle down to mind your own business and your conscience will give you a rest. It all depends where you are standing when the gun goes off how your nerves work.

HOW LIVE SHOE FIRM HAS COME TO THE FRONT

Bedard Bros., of Tilbury, Ont., Have One of the Brightest and Best Laid Out Stores—How They Keep Their Stock and Themselves on the Move—Conduct Aggressive Repair Department—Policy of Stability and Reliability Which Has Widened Trade

“OUR motto is style, fit and quality. We believe in keeping our stock alive and working, rather than allow a lot of dead ends and shelf warmers to accumulate. We handle some of the best makes, and think it is good business to confine our purchases to firms of recognized reputation, rather than opening too many accounts.

Philip Bedard

Laurence Bedard

Business with us has been good this season, and the outlook is encouraging. We conduct a repair department in connection with our store and find it a helpful and valuable adjunct.”

So declared Laurence Bedard, of Bedard Bros., Tilbury, Ont., who have one of the finest shoe establishments in Western Ontario. It is said that no centre of similar size possesses quite so neat and attractive a footwear establishment as Bedard Bros do in Tilbury, which is a thriving village of 1,500 population, in Kent County.

In the fall of 1915 the firm's stock was visited by smoke and water, a fire breaking out in a neighboring store. All the damaged stock was cleared out and the firm finding business growing so rapidly, it was absolutely necessary to move into larger quarters. The adjoining lot was purchased and thereon was erected, two years ago, the present handsome premises. The building is a two-storey one, of pressed brick, and is divided into two parts. The portion occupied by Bedard Bros. is 18 feet by 88 feet deep. The imposing modern front was installed by the Kawneer Mfg. Co. The vestibule entrance is tiled—hexagon—and metal forms the bulkheads of the windows, which are set in copper brackets, making a very striking exterior.

The interior is nicely laid out with fifty feet of shelving on each side.

In the centre of either wall there is a mirror, five by two feet wide, set in a door, and the back is made like a cabinet, for holding laces, insoles, polishes and other lines of findings. At the bottom of the cabinet there are compartments with sliding doors for keeping rubbers, moccasins, etc. There are silent salesmen showcases, wrapping tables, settees, and all other up-to-date equipment. The store is remarkably well lighted with prism glass transepts, and there is a fine workshop at the rear.

During the past winter, owing to the increase in the shoe repairing end, the firm installed a Progressive finishing outfit, which is giving the best results.

The members of Bedard Bros. are Laurence and Philip. Both are energetic and aggressive. It was in December, 1913, that the former started as a shoe repairer in the employ of E. T. Chauvin, going to Tilbury from Parkhill, where he had learned the trade with his uncle, William Bedard. After a few months' service with Mr. Chauvin, the subject of this reference, although only seventeen years of age, decided that he would like to open out under his own name, which he did. His enterprise at once attracted notice by his having a large boot erected in front of his premises containing the following words: "Shoe repairing—all guaranteed—Laurence Bedard."

THE attractive and artistic front of a live shoe house in Tilbury, Ont., who believe that an inviting store exterior as well as interior pays handsomely.

He was also the first to draw attention to the comfort, service and satisfaction of rubber heels and advertised a well-known brand until it grew into such universal favor that there were very few in the village who did not wear this heel. He bought Chauvin's shop and fixtures later and started with $1,500 worth of shoes in the retail line. Requiring more help Laurence Bedard invited his brother Philip to come into the business, and a partnership was formed under the name of Bedard Bros., which has met with a large measure of success. Previous to coming to Tilbury, Philip Bedard was employed in a large retail establishment in Chatham.

By strict, faithful attention to business, by being courteous and obliging and seeking to give patrons square and reliable treatment and full value for their money, Bedard Bros. have demonstrated that a fine, growing business can be built up in any local town. The attachment of customers is all the stronger when retailing is conducted in such clean, bright and well-laid-out premises as are possessed by this go-ahead firm.

AN ENTHUSIAST IN FINDINGS GAME

Samuel L. McCracken, manager of the shoe findings department of the Calgary Saddlery Co., Limited, Calgary, is both a practical and progressive member of the trade, who is developing a splendid business for his firm, by close attention to detail and a thorough grasp of the wants of his customers.

Born in Scotland, he received a training as a practical shoemaker and tanner, and being desirous of learning the wholesale findings business, he went to the city of Glasgow, where he was employed with the Co-operative Wholesale Society. There he heard some favorable reports of the prospects in Canada, and the splendid future awaiting young men of the right type. Seven years ago, Mr. Mc-Cracken arrived in Toronto, with an introduction to Messrs. Beardmore & Co. Anxious to know something of Canadian tannage, he was sent to the company's plant at Acton. After working there for a few months, he spent some time at the Bracebridge tannery, then returned to Acton, where he remained until he decided to go West.

Being away from the findings trade for over two years, the fascination for the business again asserted itself, and he entered the service of the Great West Saddlery Co., in Calgary, working in their findings department. Later he was made assistant manager, and next was given a position on the road. After four years' service with this organization, Mr. McCracken took a position with the Calgary Saddlery Co., Limited, in April last, opening up and managing a shoe findings department for them. A complete up-to-date stock is carried, and Mr. McCracken enjoys a very close connection with the shoe trade.

USE PRICE CARDS AND TABLE DISPLAYS

"Shoes lend themselves particularly to easy display. In some lines it requires complicated fixtures, fancy settings, expensive trimmings and endless work to bring out the features of merchandise displayed," says J. & K. Shoe News.

But footwear can be displayed very easily in a simple manner with the use of a little judgment. For example, why not try a few neat table displays in various parts of your store? Right near the entrance you could have a small table with a few shoes tastefully arranged. In your aisles you could have tables with a limited number of pairs on display.

But don't forget that simply to show a shoe is not enough. The customer wants to know first of all what the shoes cost, so here is where the question of display cards comes in. We recommend neatly lettered, plain cards, showing the price in such a way that it can be read at a glance.

Stick these cards in the shoes on display. Your trade is interested in footwear, of course, but they do not care to ask the salesman a lot of questions. It costs money to get people into your store and it's up to you to take advantage of every foot of space and every idea which can help your store pay every possible penny on the investment.

These displays need not be elaborate. The simpler the better. But you should show the newest style, because instead of pleasing the eye and causing the desire to buy, quite the opposite will be the result if "has beens" are displayed.

SEEKING SUBSTITUTES FOR LEATHER SHOES

The historic material of ages for footwear—leather—seems compelled to make a fight for itself. Many substitutes have been tried, we dare say, for centuries, but whatever has been used has always had to give way to leather. The latest arrival is a combination of fibre and cloth. A maker of medium-priced shoes says that fibre soles, counters, top lifts and fibre tap soles are really excellent.

It is also said that a fibre insole with a leather surface is even better than leather. The demand began about three years ago and goods of high quality quickly became popular. However, as usual, cheap imitations immediately crept in and headway was retarded.

The advantages of fibre are as follows: Easier to the foot; walking easier, as fibre soles conform to foot; waterproof; do not burn the feet; are a non-conductor of heat and cold. At present fibre soles are made up of about 10 per cent. rubber, new and reclaimed; 20 per cent. ground rags; leather buckings and the remainder in various other materials. One large munition manufacturer says he can turn out as many as 500,000 soles a day as soon as war orders cease. With practically 50 per cent. of the calfskin supply cut off in the United States at the outbreak of the war and freight rates tremendously high, some means must soon be taken to perfect a substitute for leather.

HOW TO MAKE YOUR ADVERTISEMENTS BRING "BIZ"

Keeping Everlastingly at it is a Cardinal Necessity—Cumulative Power of Steady Publicity—Small Ads. Regularly Inserted Sure to Win Trade—Be Frank, Candid and Instructive—Some New Thoughts are Presented on an Old Subject

ONE of the hardest things for the average retail advertiser to understand is the value of steady, persistent advertising. Why this should be the case is hard to fathom. Smith will screw up his courage to the point where he will take a half-page, or even a page, in the local newspaper, and will then retire into seclusion for perhaps a month or more, when he will again be heard from in perhaps the same manner. Or perhaps he will use 6 or 8-inch double-column space in a daily newspaper once a week, and spend the rest of the week wondering why he is not securing results.

Look at it in this way. If such a merchant were to open his store doors one day each week and on the other five days were to keep the doors locked and the blinds down, he could not blame the public for giving him the go-by—and he would not. But this same man will remind the public that he is still in business once or twice a fortnight, and expect results. You will invariably find such a man decidedly pessimistic as to the value of publicity in any form.

A Long, Steady, Even Pull

Now look across the street for a moment. While Smith has gone at the advertising proposition in a "steady-by-jerks" manner, Jones has laid aside probably about the same amount of money to be expended in advertising. Note how he does it? He starts off with a little six-inch, single-column announcement, carefully thought out, well written, and typographically attractive. He follows this up with the same space used daily in the same manner, each day, however, specializing on one special article or feature of his business. Now, Jones is not a quitter. Good results or bad, he is convinced of the ultimate value of his scheme, and daily, week in and week out, he keeps hammering into the public concrete facts about his business.

What is the result? Just the same as when you start a little snowball rolling down hill on a mild day. It gathers weight and momentum with every turn. After a while, people begin to say: "That man Jones is certainly progressive and wide-awake." And when something is wanted in his line, they go to him almost as unconsciously as a duck takes to water. Now, does Jones ease off any when he gets trade coming his way? Not that you could notice. He keeps up his steady gait day after day, until one day the goodwill of his business is a mighty valuable asset. You could burn down his store and contents, but he could start up again in a week without the slightest loss of trade. Why? Because the name Jones and what it stand for is known favorably by everyone. He is considered up-to-date and energetic, and one of the town's representative men.

Now, Smith made a big splash occasionally and promptly dozed off again. You can throw a big stone into a millpond, and everyone will gape at the noise, but the occurrence is forgotten a minute after. Smith made people rub their eyes occasionally, but he was promptly consigned to oblivion. They forgot that he was alive. And the remarkable part of the whole affair is that Jones spent not a dollar more for advertising in the year than Smith.

Does this seem like the product of fancy? Probably so, if you are one of the Smiths. Smith is rubbing his eyes yet, and wondering how Jones gets the business. But men like Jones are growing more common every day, and are living, progressive examples of the value—nay, the necessity—of steady, strong advertising. The cumulative power of such advertising is marvellous. Every piece of copy, good, indifferent or poor, is thus aided by something over and above its own inherent value. It is the most valuable thing any advertiser can acquire, and when once secured, no higher kind of success can be attained—it can simply grow in quantity.

Persistency Wins Every Time

The mercantile field to-day is dotted with firms who, having once decided upon an advertising plan, have stuck to it through thick and thin, and by virtue of sheer persistency have come out on top. From a technical standpoint sometimes the plan was good, sometimes poor; but sooner or later, persistent effort has turned the trick, and created trade and good-will that nothing short of absolute cessation of effort can finally wipe out. Of course, the better the advertising, the sooner the results desired are achieved, but the main point is the determined, steady effort involved. Just remember the story of water dropping on the rock. Do you know what happened. A few drops wouldn't have done the job.

Now, how can this persistency be made even more powerful? First, the retailer should, as far as possible, select some particular style of typography and border, and use these in and out of season. Add to this a distinctive copy style, and you have a combination hard to improve. Whenever possible, this display style should be unique, as well as constant, even if it has to be specially ordered from a type foundry for the purpose. The same applies to the border used. The resultant added attracting power will return the money spent, many times over. Then as above stated, a certain style can be adhered to in writing copy as, for example, the use of short, terse paragraphs, or snappy sentences, and the use of much white space. Such distinctive features cause people to look for the ad., which is readily found, for the same reason. They soon acquire a tremendous value to the firm employing them.

Specialize in Your Announcements

Another thing is the habit of using a certain fixed space in each insertion, and mentioning one article or merchandizing feature in each ad. Leave the department-store-style, pot-pourri, for the man who does not know better. This is just on the same principle as you would adopt, if trying to make a bull's-eye at 600 yards. You would use a rifle, not a shot-gun, and as you want to make your suggestions hit a definite mark, by the same token you must taboo absolutely the department-store style. Like the shot-gun, the charge scatters too much to hit anything. If your advertising style becomes noted for the single-feature-each-insertion idea, your persistency will be rewarded all the sooner.

It is not to be inferred from the above remarks that you, as an advertiser, must use space daily to succeed. You must use it regularly and at stated intervals.

REPORTS BUSINESS VERY GOOD

L. C. van Geel, of the Tillsonburg Shoe Co., Tillsonburg, Ont., was in Toronto last week on business. He has just returned from an extended selling tour throughout the Maritime Provinces and reports that he found business very good. The plant of the Tillsonburg Shoe Co. is busy and the annual picnic of the employees was held on August 11th at Vienna Hill and was attended by a large number. An interesting programme of races and sports was run off and every picnicker had a most enjoyable outing.

FORCEFUL FACTORS IN LEATHER ARENA

(See Front Cover)

In several respects the careers of L. J. Breithaupt, president, and J. C. Breithaupt, secretary-treasurer, of the Breithaupt Leather Co., Limited, Kitchener, have been identical. Both have spent all their lives in the leather game, both have been members of the city council and occupied the mayor's chair in Kitchener. Both have public spirit and have devoted much time and thought to affairs outside of their own business. The wise advice given by Apelles to the shoemaker—"Stick to your last"—has been demonstrated in the careers of these gentlemen.

The sons of Louis Breithaupt, a pioneer in the leather game in Canada, who established a tannery in the county town of Waterloo some sixty years ago, they have brought to bear upon their life calling, intelligence, perseverance, industry and efficiency. L. J. Breithaupt has looked principally after the business and sales end of the organization, while J. C. Breithaupt has given his attention mainly to the manufacturing department.

The result is a strong combination for the upbuild and expansion of the activities of the company, who have now large and well equipped tanneries in Kitchener, Penetang, Woodstock and Hastings. The Breithaupt Leather Co. is an historic and progressive concern, which has kept pace with the march of events, and occupies an enviable position in the sole leather arena.

STRATFORD SHOE FIRM INSTALLS NEW FRONT

One of the handsomest store fronts in Western Canada is that of Fletcher, Johnston, Limited, of Stratford, Ont. Mr. Johnston has been in the shoe business for many years in the "Classic City," and has always made a specialty of his orthopedic department, in which he has developed a large business, by his close study of foot troubles, and appliances for their relief and cure.

Some time ago a new front was installed, of which the accompanying illustration affords some conception of its beauty and attractiveness. The width of the store from wall to wall is 13 feet and from the sidewalk to the under side of I beam is 12 feet, 6 inches. The floor of the show windows is 2 feet above the sidewalk, and the height of the plate glass is 80 inches. The transom light is 8-inch square prism glass, set in copper, with two ventilators, and at the back of the show windows are artistic mirrors.

All the woodwork is quarter-cut oak finished in a light grey wax finish. The store front was installed with what is known as Easaset Metal Store Front Construction, and the metal is finished in what is called Statuary Copper. The bulkheads are Verde Tenos Marble, and the entrance is laid with 1-inch hexagon tiling, with 6-inch Grecian border.

J. P. Hepburn, of Stratford, was the architect of the building, and the alterations were carried out by the H. J. St. Clair Co., Limited, Toronto.

NEW POSITION FOR MR. LINDSLEY

W. W. Lindsley, of St. Catharines, has joined the staff of the Minister-Myles Shoe Co., Toronto, and will cover Quebec and the Maritime provinces. He expects to start out on his spring selling tour about September 1st, and will carry the finest line of samples which the company have ever turned out. Mr. Lindsley is an experienced and popular shoe traveler, who is thoroughly familiar with the Eastern ground, which he has visited for many years. For seven years he was on the staff of Getty & Scott, Limited, of Galt, and for the last five years has been a member of the traveling force of E. T. Wright & Co., of St. Thomas.

BIG LEATHER FIRM OPENS IN CANADA

The John R. Evans Leather Co., Limited, of Philadelphia, have opened a new warehouse at 214 Lemoine street, Montreal, in order to keep in close touch with the Canadian trade and to cater more efficiently and promptly to the wants of their customers in the Dominion. The inauguration of the Canadian branch on the part of this progressive firm is another evidence of their enterprise and go-ahead spirit, and all Canadian patrons will secure the same excellent service which has so long characterized the business in the United States. The John R. Evans Co. deal in everything in upper leathers, and among their well-known brands are "Maximus" patent kip and sides; "Peerless" glazed and matt kid; "Peerless" white and grey kid, and "Ruby" glazed kid. Their warehouse is centrally located and everything about the premises is neat, attractive and well appointed. The firm carry a large stock in all the various lines which they handle. R. L. Stiles is the efficient manager of the Canadian branch.

NURSERY SHOE HOLD FIRST PICNIC

The first annual picnic of the Nursery Shoe Co., St. Thomas, was held on Saturday, August 11th, at Port Bruce, and was a decided success. Some seventy employees and as many more of their families enjoyed a splendid day's outing and sports were provided by the committee in charge. A baseball game was played between the lasting and finishing rooms, the former winning by a score of ten to five. A unique event was a tug-of-war between six men and twelve women. The latter won easily, much to the amusement of the on-lookers. After the sports, the remainder of the afternoon was spent in boating, fishing, etc. E. Townsend was accorded the fishing honors, capturing six large black bass, the biggest weighing 2½ pounds. The day was brought to a close by a gathering in the ballroom of the King George Hotel. After a full course fish dinner, speeches were made and a musical programme carried out. Much credit for the success of the outing is due to the efforts of the committee—E. Lloyd, P. Whiting, C. Daly, T. Simpson, Mrs. Sutton, Miss K. McKechnie. A hearty vote of thanks was tendered A. E. Medcalf for his assistance in making the affair such a signal one.

HUNDREDS OF SHOEMEN COMING TO BIG FAIR

Jubilee of Canadian Confederation will be Reflected in all Departments from August 25th to September 10th—The Wholesale Trade Will Have Many Special Offerings for Visitors—What the Greatest Annual Exposition in the World Typifies

ONCE more the time for the Canadian National Exhibition rolls around and reminds us that the summer season is almost gone, and the days are near at hand when Toronto will be visited by hundreds of thousands of persons from all over the Dominion and the United States.

The greatest annual fair on earth, the most stupendous undertaking of its kind in the world, is the big institution which will hold sway from August 25th to September 10th. This is the year of Jubilee of Canadian Confederation, and the event will be brought home and recognized in many practical ways in connection with the forthcoming demonstration of the arts, industry, science and development of the country.

It is fully expected that the attendance this year at the great Canadian National Exposition will reach over a million persons and reports received by the management from all parts indicate that this estimate is a modest one. There is no more propitious period of the year for a furlough than the last week in August and the first week in September, and hundreds of shoe retailers will visit Toronto. Many of them never take an annual vacation other than spending a few days at the Exhibition and among the manufacturers and wholesale establishments.

Combining Business with Pleasure to their bow, one for purchasing and sorting for the coming season and the other of being entertained and instructed by the revelations and achievements at the thirty-ninth annual consecutive show at Exhibition Park. All the wholesale footwear houses are making special preparations for the reception of numerous callers. All the travelers of the various firms will be on hand to greet customers and friends and there will be many rare inducements and snaps, which cannot be picked up at any other season.

The wholesalers know what the trade want and make every effort to cater to their needs. With complete and representative stocks, admirable displays, competent staffs, and every desire to render the best possible service, there is no time like the two weeks of Exhibition to visit Toronto, not only from a business standpoint, but from the vantage ground of a holiday and pleasant outing. Every member of the trade will be accorded a warm welcome whether he buys or not and he is at perfect liberty to make his headquarters at any of the wholesale establishments, which will have every facility placed at his disposal.

During the past few months many lines of footwear in the stock of the average dealer have become depleted and there is no more favorable opportunity to replenish requirements for the fall and winter period and put in some new ranges and special offerings than during the progress of the Canadian National Exhibition. It is not only an occasion for the proprietor to take a few days off but he can, with profit to himself and appreciation for services rendered, allow the members of his staff to come to Toronto and spend a few days. The clerks of to-day will be the buyers and heads of departments to-morrow. The more any one in your employ can learn and master the more valuable he becomes to you from the standpoint of efficiency, skill and duty.

This year the shoe factories and warehouses will be the centre of more than usual interest and activity and, if any advice can be tendered the trade by the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL, it is that in addition to paying a worth-while visit to the Exhibition itself that the merchant come the first week of the Fair. Then all departments are in just as full operation and just as attractive as during the second week.

Some beauty spots on the grounds.

There is an added advantage, the same as there is about early shopping at Christmas time, in that better attention can be given at the marts of footwear, with less rush and crush, wider selections and more freedom and leisure. "First come first served" is an old adage which might on the present occasion be interpreted to mean first come best pleased and satisfied.

The Proper Thing at Proper Time

Success is knowing and doing the proper thing at the proper time and the proper time is during the progress of the big annual fair. If you cannot come the first week get to Toronto as soon as you can. Come anyway, and from a business, social, economic and educational standpoint, every visitor will be repaid many times over.

And now a word about the Canadian National Exhibition. It is the province of the modern exhibition to entertain as well as to instruct, and the organization which neglects that highly important function is not completely fulfilling its mission. The properly balanced life, the one that represents the acme of efficiency, includes a certain amount of recreation and relaxation from toil, that the brain and physical machinery may recover and recuperate from the tension of extreme effort.

It has long been the aim here to offer the visitor a happy combination of instruction and entertainment, and it is the belief of the Directors that no better balanced programme has previously been presented than that arranged for this year. The management has labored with more than usual care and discrimination and there can be no reward greater than the stamp of your approval.

Statistics generally make dry reading, but not these, and they are worth remembering.

HOW BRANCH MANAGER "TOUCHED" ME FOR $3,465

Shoe Store Proprietor who was too Trustful and Indulgent Found out Some Things After Three Years Bitter Experience—Thought His System was Perfect and Set Too High an Estimate on His Business Ability and Judgment—Ingenious Methods

By G. W. BROCK

A LITTLE young and inexperienced but well meaning and willing, was the way I sized up Harding when I appointed him manager of my branch shoe store in S—. He had been on our headquarters staff for a few years, starting in as a parcel boy and seemed anxious to get along and make his way in the world.

He was not afraid of work and when he was given a chance on the floor he made good from the start. He soon got onto the fitting game, learned the stock quickly and could gauge easily what a customer required. His manner was pleasant and winning and he was tall, and of good appearance, keeping himself neat and trim. He was just twenty-two years old when Proctor, manager of our store in S— died suddenly. I always select the men for heads of any one of my branches from the staff at the chief store so as to have them thoroughly familiar with our system and methods, policy and principles. Harding was the next in line, although he was the youngest fellow that I had ever attempted to select as a manager. In baseball language, I thought that it would do him a world of good to stay under my eye a little longer until he had been well seasoned before going in the Major League of managers, but he was anxious that I should give him a trial and so he began. Six months after he was in S— he fell in love and was married to a prepossessing young lady, who was extravagant in the extreme. Her parents were proud but poor and had been great in affecting dignity and keeping up what the world calls superior airs.

Got a Wife and Increase in Salary

She was a Miss Alice Knode and the wedding was faithfully chronicled in the papers of how Leslie T. Harding, manager of the — shoe store and one of the most popular and highly esteemed young men of S—, had been successful in capturing the hand of Miss Alice Knode and a fashionable church nuptials was the centre of interest one morning in June. It was an elaborate affair. I did not like the idea of Harding tying up so soon after getting his new position, and he had given me no intimation that he intended joining the ranks of the benedicts. After the social affair he applied for a raise in salary and I gave him a substantial increase. Harding told me how that, with all love affairs settled, he could place his mind and energy entirely on the business and I would get the best results from him as his weekly and monthly reports would demonstrate.

I am not going into a long labored account of how Harding did me up in the next three years for thirty-four hundred and sixty-five dollars, but he did just the same. The last year he must have gathered in the most of the pile, as it was only when reports reached my ears from outsiders, for S— was only visited regularly by myself or a member of my staff about once in six months or three times a year. I got a weekly report from Harding which was filled in very nicely and neatly, and at the end of the first six months when I went up to take stock, although I notified him that I would arrive on a certain day, he was not in. As I entered the store, Miss Greening, one of his assistants greeted my query with the information that Harding had just stepped out a few minutes to go to the bank and pay the water rates of the store. This seemed a good excuse and when he returned he apologized for his absence.

We began to go over the stock and check it off with the stock book and I had a perfect system whereby I knew that so many pairs of such and such a kind or style of shoe were sent to the store, and the weekly reports compiled from the sales slips showed exactly how many pairs had been disposed of. The remainder should be on the shelves or in the reserve stock downstairs. In a certain line of men's patent button with cloth top, on last 1004 (for we number all lasts by figures just like many factories) there were six pairs missing. In a men's gun metal calf blucher, with mat calf top, on the 989 last there were three pairs unaccounted for. In a tan calf colonial pump, seamless, with plain toe, on which we had had a big run that summer, there were eight pairs missing and in a seven inch dongloa kid bluchette button with imitation straight tip, there were five pairs which could not be dug up.

Thought It Was Just Carelessness

I had no suspicion that anything had gone wrong and Harding was so unaffectedly worried about it that I concluded there had been a little carelessness somewhere or our stock-keeping system was at fault. I was of the opinion that these few errors had been due to lack of insight on our part or on the part of Harding. He ventured the assertion that he had changed clerks and perhaps one former lady, Miss Talling, had made a mistake in the records. There was not the breath of a suspicion that anything wrong or dishonest could be laid at the door of the manager. The next inventory showed a few lapses, but only seven or eight pairs gone in all, and I thought that matters were on the mend. Then at the end of a year and half there were several little things which I did not like. I told Harding that there were too many high cut, ivory kid bals and two-tone stuff on the 517 and 583 lasts missing, and he should exercise more caution. He had some excuse ready and promised to do better.

The reader may ask why I did not get rid of my manager then and there but I have always been a considerate and obliging boss, some may call me "an easy mark" after reading this, and was only too willing to go out of my way to aid any one along in the world. I had a hard uphill fight in early life with no encouragement from those whom I served and I naturally wanted to see others, in whom I believed, get a chance. At the end of two years, matters were running along about the same and during the third year, having got away with minor discrepancies for such a long time, Harding evidently grew bolder and more reckless. All accounts were supposed to be paid by check, but on going over the statement of expenditures, I found that entries had been made under cash paid out as follows: Taxes, $137; electric light, $48; water rates, $17; insurance, $97, and several other like entries.

I called Harding into the office and said "I see you have paid the taxes, water rates, electric bill, etc., in cash. Why did you not pay by check?"

"Oh I had the money in the till after a big day's receipts on that sale we conducted and thought it was all right to settle these things right there and then," he explained.

"But you know that the system of this store is to always pay out such accounts by check—everything except petty cash expenditures," I added.

"I know," he rejoined evasively, "but what is the difference so long as they are paid and the entries made."

"Have you receipted bills for the taxes, electric light, etc.?"

"No, I regret to say that I have not," he added meekly, "I had them in my overcoat pocket where I had shoved them along with my gloves. On trying to locate the bills, I found that they had fallen out along with my gloves. But you need not worry. Everything is all right and so long as the bills are adjusted, what is the difference?"

A further examination of the receipts and expenditures showed me that evidently several other apparently fictitious entries had been made. I did not say any more just then, but went away without further questioning Harding.

Dropped Around When Not Expected

Ten days later I slipped in S— without announcing my arrival. I went to the store and Harding was not there. He had been out a great deal of late, I learned, and presumably was attending to everything else except business. I was informed that he had gone over to R— with the lawn bowling club of which he was a member and a skip of one of the rinks. Having little to do I went to the City Treasurer and inquired in a casual way if the taxes on our store had been paid. He told me, after looking matters up, that they had not. I visited the waterworks department and was informed that we owed back rates for several quarters, and the electric light officials declared that they had not been paid for some weeks, and I thought everything had been settled by cash. At the electric light office I learned that Harding had settled his own household bill for the last five months with a check from our office.

My eyes were opened wide. I then sought to make some inquiries about the city regarding the habits of Harding and found he was looked upon as rather flighty and irresponsible. One hardware merchant at first informed me that he would say nothing. I told him that I was not a detective nor did I have any detective system or sleuths, but I wanted to know if my business was being conducted fairly and squarely and that any information he gave would be held in the strictest confidence. I was only seeking a business courtesy and was not an interloper or a Sherlock Holmes. He then related several incidents which confirmed my worst suspicions. He told me that Harding was bowling all the afternoons and going horse back riding with his wife in the morning and that he put on a great deal of style, and I must pay him a very remunerative salary. Harding was most liberal in his personal expenditure and allowed no one to outdo him when away from home with the members of the bowling or curling teams.

I thanked him heartily, and when Harding came back that evening I told him quietly what I had found out on my visit to the civic offices and that too many shoes had been missing from stock, and I would like his resignation at once, as I had already appointed Mr. Tonton to take charge. He would arrive at the end of the week.

Knew That the Game Was Up

Harding had nothing to say. He knew the game was up and asked as a last request that nothing be said to his wife, that she had been kept in perfect innocence of what he had done. But matters soon leaked out, as they will in a small city, that Harding had been fired and there were some nasty rumors going abroad. His wife came down to H— to see me and said that if I did not prosecute her husband she would raise eleven hundred dollars from her father and relatives to make good the deficit and hoped to pay it all off in the next two years. I knew her people had no money and told her to go home and help her husband to run his house economically and do her best to support him in the matter of getting another job.

After searching around for some weeks, Harding finally succeeded in securing a position as assistant manager of the men's shoe department in a large store in Alberta, and sold part of his household effects to help finance the trip. The dwelling was rented and the next tenant, who knew that Harding had been in the shoe business and was our manager, came down to the store one afternoon and asked Mr. Tonton to come up as he had something interesting to show him. There in the attic were thirteen pairs of ladies' colored kid and fancy fabric shoes and nine pairs of mens' high grade lines, some of which had been worn very little. It looked as if Harding had helped himself or his wife to a new pair of boots almost every week, and nothing new and effective came in the shop but a pair was taken home. I was also told later that he had been very kind to three or four lady friends.

Did we prosecute him? Well, I saw a lawyer about the matter and he went exhaustively into the case in a quiet way. In response to my interrogation if he could get the money back he told me that he thought he could not, and the only thing was prosecution and the penitentiary for a term of years, for we had indubitable proof of the crookedness of Harding. After considering the matter for ten days, I told Linton, my solicitor, that he had better drop the case for the sake of Harding's wife and two children, one two years old and the other seven months, as I did not care to blast their future. Another thing, I blamed myself for not being stiffer and more severe in my administration, trusting too much to human nature and letting softness of heart and disposition run away with my better judgment and business sense. Harding's escapade gingered both me and my methods up and I had to learn by bitter experience, which is often a very costly lesson.

BOTH THOROUGH AND PROGRESSIVE

Frank W. McKeen, who has been appointed superintendent of the new shoe factory of B. F. Ackerman, Son & Co., in Peterboro, Ont., has gone to that city to take up his new duties. For the past two and a half years he has been superintendent for Underhills, Limited, in Barrie, and is both competent and progressive in the craft of St. Crispin. Mr. McKeen has been connected with the manufacturing of shoes for twenty years, having started with his father, C. E. McKeen, in Quebec, in 1897, and has had experience and insight in all departments, from the cutting room to the packing room, and from split buskins to patent colt pumps. The many friends of Mr. McKeen—and they are legion—are confident that he will score an unusual measure of success in his new sphere of activity.

THE FATHERS OF INDIVIDUAL CARTONS

In a recent issue of the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL, it was pointed out that E. H. Gullidge, of Oakville, Ont., was the first man in Canada to place shoes in cartons. The story of how he happened to conceive of the idea proved a very interesting one, and recalled the fact that about the same time Mr. Gullidge thought of placing footwear in individual receptacles, W. F. Alexander, former retail shoe dealer of Jackson, Tenn., who is now retired from business, was the merchant with whom the plan originated on the other side of the line. In recalling the story of the individual carton, Mr. Alexander said that in ordering some square box toes, the idea of permanent shelving boxes occurred to him. He found that he could not patent the box or control the trade, so the idea went to the world. Mr. Alexander increased the trade with the box makers for multiplied millions. The manufacturers were benefited, the jobbers pleased and the dealers delighted, and their customers could get a clean pair of new shoes, wrapped in a neat bundle, which they were not ashamed to carry to their homes. The only difference between the cartons that were first made for Mr. Alexander and those that were made for Mr. Gullidge is that the former had an all-paper carton, while the latter had the sides and bottom of wood, and the cover was of cardboard.

NEW HIGH RECORD IN PROFITS

In six months of operation ended June 30th, the Central Leather Co., ran over $5,000,000 in net earnings ahead of the corresponding period of 1916. In these six months the company earned $24.40 a share on its common stock.

The record indicates that the Central Leather Co., will make a new high record in profits in 1917. The last half of the year in the leather business is usually better than the first half, and the placing of large Government contracts should make a marked difference.

In connection with the strength of Central Leather shares it develops that interests who have recently been heavy buyers of Central Leather, have also been acquiring considerable holdings of American Hide and Leather.

With large contracts for shoes being placed by the United States Government and also by Russia, both concerns are in a position to benefit greatly. Hide and Leather is a big factor in the upper leather trade, while Central Leather has the bulk of the sole leather business, and with its newly acquired upper leather plants will also become a factor in the upper leather business.

Closing of negotiations with Russia for 2,000,000 pairs of army shoes will mean a large amount of business for both companies. It is said in the leather trade that negotiations have been renewed by Russia for 4,000,000 additional pairs of shoes.

MANY THRILLING EXPERIENCES OF AIRMAN

Flight-Lieut. J. Curtis Watson, R.N., who is the only son of Robt. Watson, shoe retailer, 633-35 Yates street, Victoria, B.C., recently returned to England, after spending several months at his home. A few weeks ago he was joined in matrimony to Miss Dorothy Woodward, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Woodward, North Quadra street, Victoria.

Lieut. Watson is a war hero. While in his plane at a high altitude over the North Sea, with the Royal Naval Air Service, he suffered a painful injury, having the nerves of both eyes frozen, which temporarily caused loss of sight, and the young aviator was afterwards invalided home to Canada. In November last, he made one of the longest flights ever made out of Dover, being in the air for five hours, and last fall, he intercepted a Zeppelin in the North Sea, and after a single-handed fight, was forced to give up, owing to engine trouble, his machine dropping into the water. He was picked up about fifteen hours later, after drifting about most of the time through mine fields.

Flight-Lieut. Watson has also made several raids on the foes' aerodromes in Belgium, which resulted in the destruction of considerable property, including one air ship. It is interesting to know that the subject of this reference, who left the Dominion a little over two years ago, was one of the first hundred to take up aviation in Canada, for overseas service. He started training in Toronto, but that season—1915—being such a wet one, he could not get on with his training fast enough to suit him, so he went to the Wright Bros' Aviation School, Dayton, Ohio, and finished in a few weeks' time, when he was sent to Eastbourne, England, where he took his course in land machine flying. On the completion of this he was sent to Calshot, England, for his course in sea plane work. After finishing his training there, Lieut. Watson was dispatched by the Admiralty to Dover, England, with full authority to inaugurate a new system for training observers, which he himself, had worked out. When he had successfully accomplished this, he was transferred to Dunkirk, France.

It is understood that he was one of the most successful pilots in that station, having had more experience of active work than any of the others, although the lieutenant will not speak to his performances in this respect.

Before the war broke out, Flight-Lieut. Watson was associated with his father for some months in the shoe business, but had chosen surveying as a profession, and spent the summer in the northern wilds of British Columbia. After his marriage in May last, the lieutenant and his wife left immediately for England, where he was due to report to the Admiralty on June 28th. Word received by his father states that the Medical Board does not consider one of his eyes well enough yet for active service, but it is believed that it will be all right in a month or two.

MOST gratifying were the results from the first annual picnic held by the Toronto Shoe Repairers' Association. Complete returns show that over $500.00 worth of tickets were sold to Niagara Falls, Ont., and that the net profit to the Association is $64.00. The Toronto Shoe Repairers' Association certainly know how to manage any event which they undertake, and its success is always assured.

At the last regular meeting it was reported that arrangements had been completed for handling Neolin soles and Wing Foot Rubber Heels, from the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., through the president, C. F. Robertson, 497 Queen Street West, whom the Association some time ago appointed as their agent for these lines. The new lodge room at No. 3 Foresters' Hall (which is located at 22 College street) was crowded with where they spent a pleasant holiday. They found that help was very scarce in the Flower City, and many shops were unable to turn out all the jobs which came their way, owing to lack of competent workman.

It was also stated that, owing to the excellent organization and unanimity of interest of the members of the trade, better prices were being obtained for work in Toronto than in Rochester, where there formerly was an organization, but that body had fallen through. Mr. Robertson reported that the trade in Rochester was buying an excellent cement for laying soles and rubber heels at 90 cents a gallon. It is known as Weld-Weld Cement. In Toronto, the cheapest cement that can be procured is sold at $1.50 per gallon.

W. Barker, who recently returned from Buffalo, reported that shops were in a bad way there, owing to lack of labor, and the prices prevailing were not as good as those in Toronto. He found that the Toronto Association was widely known, and the Buffalo brethren were greatly interested in its work and prosperity.

Several other matters were taken up, and it was reported that the prospects for an active fall campaign are exceptionally bright. Addresses were made by members on various topics, including forming a co-operative buying association, which proposition has been deferred for a while.

G. Barreca, 682 Bloor street west, Toronto, has composed a jolly song which he rendered for the first time. It is called the "Toronto Shoe Repairers' Song," and all joined heartily in the chorus.

HE TELLS HOW HE DOES THE WORK

George Edwards, 511A 4th Avenue S. E., Medicine Hat, Alta., writes the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL as follows:

"Everything is going fine with me, and I am getting a number of letters from all quarters for my recipe for attaching soles. Several have come through with the ten dollars on my sixty-day special offer, and I at once forwarded them the recipe, as per my agreement.

"Now I do not guarantee to any shoemaker or shoe repairer that he can make a success of this method of welding bottoms on boots and shoes, for it is a safe bet that 75 per cent. of the shoe repair men have not the patience to clean a shoe before commencing repair work upon it, and that is part of the work of welding on soles. I have been asked by a number of correspondents to guarantee this process. I might say here, as I say to all of them—'Show me the shoe manufacturer who will guarantee any part of a boot or shoe,—then why should I guarantee my process?'

"I say to my customers: 'I will put you on a pair of half soles and heels, or full length soles and heels of leather, or any kind of substitute for leather, and I will not use a stitch or a nail, and if you find at any time, that this work is not better in every way than any sewed job, come back, and I will do the job your way, free of charge.'

"Now, my customers come back and say: 'Edwards, will you freeze on another pair of soles while I wait—it takes

President C. F. Robertson and C. J. Wren of the Toronto Shoe Repairers' Association, "snapped" in Rochester on a recent visit to that City

members. The quarters are very pleasant, and a piano is at the disposal of the boys, several of whom are good vocalists and instrumentalists.

It was reported that the membership of the Association is now 104, which is the largest of any period since it was organized, over a year ago. Chas. F. Robertson and C. J. Wren reported upon a recent visit to the trade in Rochester, too long the old way, and the beauty of freezing them on is that there are no stitches to rip. You know that I am switcher down here in the yard, and it is a hard job on boots.'

"Business with me is very good—my wife and I handle it all—she looks after the shoe findings, and the wants of the customers; and I attend to all the repair work—the receipts for which amount to from $15.00 to $25.00 per day. I have done no stitching since substitutes for leather came on the market, for, as everyone knows, substitutes cannot be stitched by hand. I still do a considerable amount of nailing, but this cannot, of course, be avoided, seeing that so many boots are still built and bottoms attached with nails, as well as with wooden pegs and Standard screws. Now the shoe repair men don't sew soles on these kind of boots, and these are the only boots in the repairing of which I use nails—all others must be welded, no matter how heavy the goods, up to ½ inch, so long as the material is flexible. And you might just note this, no shoemaker, if he knows his business, will ever attempt to even stitch on soles, if the leather is not flexible.

"You can readily see, therefore, that the manufacturers of all substitutes were wise enough to make their goods flexible, as they knew these bottoming materials could not be nailed, and be satisfactory. Neither can rubber.

"I would like to ask through your valuable Journal what constitutes a heavy sole. Are the substitutes, such as Tenax, Neolin, Rinex, Acme, etc., heavy or light? Now, if these are considered light, why I am only welding light soles on Goodyear boots and shoes. If this is the case, kindly send me a sample of the heavy goods, as I have not seen it yet. I bought all my machinery through the Great West Saddlery Co., Calgary, and if you write to Mr. Eastwood, shoe findings department, he will tell you I have no stitchee, and can also tell you the amount of substitutes I buy from him. (The Gutta Percha & Rubber Co., of Calgary, Tenax; The Dunlop Rubber Co., of Calgary, Acme, etc.) Now I do not let those goods lie around my shop, I cannot sew them on and I cannot nail them on, and I believe there are more people wearing substitutes that I put on, than those attached by any other shoe repair man west of Winnipeg. But perhaps I am getting all light stuff, or is the Neolin we get here different?

"As for the slip sole, I don't find it much trouble—I strip the outsole, run my knife between slip sole and the welt, sandpaper both sides and dip it in my preparation. I also sandpaper the welt and the bottom of the shoe and plaster with my solution three or four times, let dry for five minutes, roll them together with a gaspipe loaded with lead, trim the soles, and set the edges. There is no trouble—you can then put on the shoes and wear them. You will find a great number of the so-called shoe repairers complain that it takes too much time, and do not believe the work can be done as expeditiously as I have described, and they still continue in the same old rut."

SHOEMAKING FOR RETURNED SOLDIERS

The problem of the returned soldier, possibly one of the greatest after-war problems that we have to face, is being met to some small degree by the different vocational instruction schools that are being opened up all over the Dominion.

Here returned men who are unable from injuries or other reasons to follow their pre-war occupations are given a technical and practical instruction course in various crafts and trades best suited to the condition and ability. One of these courses embraces shoemaking and repairing and the accompanying illustrations show part of the class for shoemaking at the Y.M.C.A. building in Saskatoon, which has been converted into a home for disabled and returned soldiers.

This class is under the very able instruction of Mr. A.

Johnson, who formerly conducted a shoe repair business at 302 Twenty-third street west, Saskatoon, which he sold out in order to be able to undertake the instruction of returned heroes in Crispin craft.

A good deal more practical work is being done in these classes than in some vocational and industrial schools, the Shoemaking school for returned soldiers at the Y.M.C.A. Building, Saskatoon, showing the class in the workshop and their instructor, A. Johnson, in the background pupils being given every encouragement to "take hold" of the actual work as well as plenty of material to practice on, in addition to the usual school theory courses. Both hand and machine work is taught, it being the object to equip each man so that he will have sufficient knowledge and experience to start up in business for himself if he so wishes. In this Instructor Johnson's own personal experience in running a repair business is most valuable and in a personal manner he takes an interest in conveying to each man under his charge many of those little fragments of knowledge so valuable in running a business of this sort, that are not shown in any text or manual instruction book, but which usually have to be learned from actual contact with the great public over a store counter.

Returned shoemaking soldiers at Saskatoon Y.M.C.A. enjoying a recess. Seated at the front on the left is A. Johnson, instructor, and next to him is Mr. Hewitt who has charge of the vocational instruction schools for returned soldiers for Western Canada

Mr. Johnson says that the men are for the most part eager and quick to learn and for this reason their progress is rapid in comparison with the time usually taken to learn any trade or craft.

These vocational schools are under the personal supervision of Mr. Hewitt, who was a Dominion inspector of manual instruction schools before he took up this special work.

CALGARY SHOE REPAIR MEN HOLD PICNIC

The annual picnic of the Calgary Shoemakers' and Repairers' Association, of Calgary, Alta., was held on Wednesday, July 18th, to Bowness Park, which is one of the scenic spots of Western beauty, ten miles from the city, and within a short distance from the Rocky Mountains. There was a large number of the craft, with their wives and families, who turned out to spend an afternoon of real enjoyment. A lengthy programme of sports, commencing with a football game, brought out the latent talent of many. The followers of Isaak Walton whiled away a short hour competing for prizes given respectively for the largest and smallest fish caught. Men, women and children enjoyed themselves to the utmost at the old-time races, both comic and regular. The biggest event of the day was the tug-of-war between men of the east and west sides of the city, the former being victorious. After a pleasant supper, served on the grounds, a member of the trade, renowned as a ventriloquist, gave a very interesting thirty minutes' of entertainment by the exercise of his talents in that direction. A return to the city was then made, all being highly delighted with the day's pleasure.

YEAR OF PROGRESS FOR ODD FELLOWS

Odd Fellows from all parts of Ontario gathered in Toronto on August 8th, 9th and 10th, to attend the annual meeting of the Grand Lodge. About five hundred Triple Link Brethren were present, a somewhat smaller number than usual owing to the various lodges agreeing to reduce their representation during the war. S. C. Parks, shoe retailer, 1224 Yonge street, Toronto, who filled the position of Grand Master for the past year, ably and faithfully, presided at the sessions, and during his regime, affairs in the Order have moved along smoothly and prosperously. There are 402 lodges in the province, with a membership of about 55,000, being a gain of 1,100 during the past year. The finances of the various lodges are also in excellent shape and some 4,000 members in the I.O.O.F. ranks are either overseas fighting for King and Country, or have enlisted for military service.

One feature of the gathering was the visit of F. C. Goudy, Denver, Col., Grand Sire of the Sovereign Grand Lodge, who came on the personal invitation of Grand Master Parks, and a reception was tendered the distinguished guest on August 8th, in the Odd Fellows' Temple, College street. During the past year, Grand Master Parks paid a visit to over one hundred lodges, and reported every one in excellent condition. It was decided to change the date of the annual meeting to the third Thursday in June, and the next Grand Lodge Session will be held in Hamilton.

H. R. Scott, of Seaforth, who is a leading shoeman, was appointed Grand Councillor, and other representatives of the shoe trade who were in attendance were W. J. Bartlett, of Brampton, and F. S. Evanson, of Prescott, who is chairman of the Committee of Laws for Subordinate Lodges.

Expressions of satisfaction were heard on the excellent record of Grand Master Parks, who is never weary in well doing in the interests of the Order. Charles H. Mann, of Hamilton, was elected Grand Master for the coming year, and Dr. G. M. Hermiston, of Toronto, elected Grand Warden.

OF INTEREST AND PROFIT

I wish you to know that I appreciate your paper very much, and find it exceptionally interesting. It contains many items of interest and profit to the repair man and the trade in general.

Cobalt, Ont.

PERCY RIDLEY.

THAT DAY IS DRAWING CLOSE

It is now perfectly evident that the next six months will bring higher prices for shoes whether the cost of materials and labor increases any more or not. This would still be true even if the price of materials declined considerably, but all indications point in the other direction, says an exchange.

For example, a man's Goodyear welt calf shoe made of materials bought on to-day's market would cost to produce at least a dollar more than most manufacturers are selling such a shoe for to-day.

It would take a very strong reaction in the market, brought about only by some event of world-wide importance, such as the end of the war, to create materially lower prices for materials.

Even the end of the war is not likely to bring any immediate relief in the price of necessities, as the world would still require food and clothing and it will take years to overcome the economic waste and shortage of these materials that the war has caused.

It is the time now for retailers to buy what they can purchase intelligently to cover their requirements for the next few months.

On the other hand it is not safe to speculate in excessive purchases that will tie up more capital than the volume of a business warrants or to incur obligations that it may be difficult to meet.

Compare for yourself the wearing qualities of Neolin Soles as against Leather Soles. And be sure to read the story below

A pair of shoes with one Leather Sole and one Neolin Sole—thirty-three days' wear—Leather worn through—Neolin one-sixth through

It is not a question of whether you or your customers can save by wearing Neolin soles. The question is simply: HOW MUCH CAN YOU SAVE? We have made some tests to determine this. The whole story is briefly told by the photograph and few words above.

We took for our experiment a single pair of shoes. On one shoe was a Neolin sole. On the other a good, average leather sole—as good as most Canadians can afford to-day.

To make the test severe we put the shoes on a workman in the Goodyear factory, where shoe-life is short. Note the result.

In thirty-three days the leather sole was worn through. The Neolin sole was worn one-sixth through in its thinnest place. They looked just as you see them in the photograph. Neolin showed six times greater wearing quality.

Neolin soles do not always last six times longer than leather. Sometimes they last only four times as long. In another test, made with a grade of leather more expensive than the majority of Canadians use, Neolin wore just three times as long.

In yet other grades of leather—quite out of the reach of the average purse—there are instances where Neolin has worn twice as long.

Such tests should convince you of Neolin's complete superiority over leather. It only remains for you to order Neolin-soled shoes.

—And insist on genuine Neolin. See that every pair is stamped with the trade mark shown below.

WHAT RUBBER FACTORIES ARE UP AGAINST

Charles N. Candee, President of Gutta Percha & Rubber, Limited, Toronto, speaking of the difficulties which the factories have to contend with in the matter of supplies, shipments and rising costs, in a recent interview, clearly outlined the present perplexing situation brought about by the war.

Mr. Candee said: "Ever since war broke out, a large element of uncertainty has crept into the industry. Our raw material supplies have been minimized, and since sixty or seventy per cent. of our raw rubber comes from Ceylon and the Malay States, via Britain, you can readily see what difficulties are imposed upon the industry. There is such a scarcity of 'bottoms,' entailed by the commandeering of ships for allied use and also through the submarine warfare, that delivery, even delayed, can never be assured, and when you couple with this the contract condition of 'no arrival, no sale' you see what we are up against. When a cargo does not arrive it is more than a loss to the consignee, it is a direct loss to the buyer, because he loses business on account of the inability to replace the order. But, fortunately, the British Government has been taking all precautions with a view to minimizing the loss, and we have been very successful under these particular circumstances.

"Since the commencement of hostilities in Africa the supplies of rubber from the Congo and elsewhere have been practically eliminated, while a big source of supply, South America, has had to reduce its shipments, through reduction of shipping facilities. The British authorities, who practically controlled the biggest portion of the world's shipping, were forced to commandeer ships that were engaged in the South American trade, so that now we have only one boat a month engaged in this work. We are also subjected to delays extending to three and four months.

"Then there are increased risks and insurance rates, and the cost of transportation, which has gone up enormously during the past two years. Furthermore, the costs of the chemical ingredients used in the manufacture of all kinds and textures of rubber have greatly increased. The prices of a few of these have not quite doubled, but the majority of them have gone up three and four hundred per cent.

"The condition in the cotton market also plays a prominent part in changing the many conditions which effect the rubber industry. Cotton is one of the principal raw materials used in the manufacture of belts, hose and footwear, and the price of cotton duck, which before the war was approximately 20 to 23 cents a pound is 60 cents a pound today, and we have no idea where the price is going to break to next."

Mr. Candee pointed out that all merchants engaged in the rubber industry have been busy during the past months. "When other industries are busy," he declared, "the rubber industry is busy. The demands of the mills and the factories and the workshops always influence conditions in the rubber factories, because they depend upon them so much for many things. But very often the difficulty is this: No manufacturer or private citizen purchases any supplies from a manufacturer or rubber goods dealer until he is in absolute need of them, and we must fit our business into the alternately narrowing and widening demand created for our goods. We cannot create a demand for rubber goods by having bargain days, etc., like people in other lines can, so we have to be ready to meet an emergent demand when it is created. For instance, our mechanical business depends absolutely upon the needs of the railroads and industrial concerns from time to time.

"But where the rubber industry has benefited to a more or less extent is the demand augmented by the high price and scarcity of leather. This summer there has been a particularly big demand for canvas shoes with rubber soles. Fibre soles have also very largely taken the place of leather soles. An increased demand for rubbers is also anticipated.

With the increased cost of footwear the general public is practising more thrift, and instead of throwing their shoes away when the soles are worn down they are having them resoled, and are buying rubbers for use in wet weather and during the winter months.

"All these conditions have their bearing upon conditions in the rubber trade with more or less effect. But despite all this, I can safely state that no rubber company in Canada can complete its orders for rubber footwear for this fall's

WILL MAKE STANDARD SHOE

In view of the great increase in the price of footwear, the Italian government has decided to manufacture a standard shoe of stout make and at a reasonable price. Three hundred thousand pairs will be turned out monthly in Italy and another 200,000 pairs will be imported.

"ACME" SOLES

"Within two years leather has advanced in price about 120 per cent., and genuine oak-tanned leather is hard to get at any figure. As a substitute, rubber is being found more than satisfactory. With comparatively little effort, rubber manufacturers have been able to turn out soles in every way equal, and in many ways superior, to any leather sole ever made. But since the type of rubber sole found in the cheap tennis shoe is the one familiar to the public, a campaign of education has been necessary.

"The rubber sole properly made will last anywhere from two to three times as long as the leather one. This consideration is by far the most important. Theoretically, for good shoes the uppers and the soles should wear out at about the same time. Ordinarily a shoe will stand at least two more sets of leather half-soles and heels. Consequently with a good rubber sole this theoretical condition is more nearly approached."—Literary Digest, August 11th, 1917.

Emil Larose, vice-president and sales manager of the Canadian Footwear Co., Montreal, is active in any line that he undertakes, and one of the best-liked shoemen in Canada's commercial metropolis. Whether it is selling footwear, or taking part in athletics, he is equally enthusiastic and aggressive. After completing his education in Montreal, he spent nine years in the jewelry business, and then launched Later, he joined James Linton & Co., Montreal, being city representative. When that firm retired from business, Mr. Larose became identified with Gagnon, Lachapelle & Lecours, with whom he remained one year. In 1915, in association with Mr. Lecours and others, the Canadian Footwear Co. was organized, and a modern, well-appointed factory erected at Point Aux Trembles, with a capacity of 1,000 pairs a day, in women's, misses' and children's McKays. The firm maintain fine sample rooms at 44 St. Antoine street, where Mr. Larose's headquarters are.

The subject of this reference has always taken a deep interest in athletics, and for many years was secretary of La Nationale Amateur Athletic Association, Montreal. He particularly excelled in field sports and was a sprinter of no mean ability, while he has some snowshoeing records to his credit. As president of the Montreal Shoe Manufacturers' Bowling Association Mr. Larose has done much to maintain the interest in this popular pastime. Only thirty-one years of age, he has a bright future ahead in the footwear arena, and possesses the happy faculty of creating and retaining friendships, in both business and athletic circles.

CONTROL OF AUSTRALIAN LEATHER INDUSTRY

The attempt made some months ago by the Australian Commonwealth Prices Adjustment Board to fix the prices of boots and shoes was abandoned through the difficulties in adjusting the selling prices for the varied grades and styles of footwear. It was considered more simple to regulate the prices of leather according to the grade and kind. Hence, the Commonwealth Leather Industries Board has been formed by representatives of the tanners and boot manufacturers and two nominees of the Government, viz.: The prices commissioner and the hides and leather expert. In each State, there is also a local advisory committee.

It is obligatory for each firm or holder of not less than 100 hides to furnish a return each month showing:—

- (1) Number of hides taken off during the month.
- (2) Number of hides sold by auction.
- (3) Number of hides sold by private sale.
- (4) Number of hides exported during the month.

In this way full knowledge will be gained of the operations in hides within the Commonwealth.

The powers of the Board are to:—

(a) Determine the quantities of hides that are required for the purposes of the tanning industry of the Commonwealth.

(b) Determine the classes of leather into which hides may be manufactured.

(c) Determine the quantities of leather which are required for the purposes of the leather manufacturing industries of the Commonwealth.

(d) Determine the quota of the output of leather of each tannery which shall be made available for manufacturing purposes within the Commonwealth.

(e) Determine the quantities of hides available for export from the Commonwealth.

(f) Determine the quantities of leather available for export from the Commonwealth.

(g) Determine standard for the various grades of leather of the classes to which these regulations apply.

(h) Prohibit any person, firm, or company either absolutely or subject to any specified condition or restriction from buying or selling hides or leather.

(i) Require producers, manufacturers and dealers to furnish such returns as to hides and leather, and boots and shoes made from hide leathers, as are specified by the Board.

STANDARD BOOT FOR CIVILIANS

The Minister of Commerce in France is empowered to requisition the stocks of leather necessary to create a type of boot suitable for wear during the coming winter. It is reported that there are large quantities of leather available which are not stout enough for Army boots, and a committee composed of officials, boot manufacturers, and representatives of labor has been formed, who will work on the necessary details for supplying working-class wearers with sound boots at a reasonable figure. It is also stated that a "national cloth" is to be manufactured from a mixture of wool and cotton, from which clothing will be made and supplied to wearers under a similar arrangement.

BIG RUSSIAN ARMY SHOE ORDER

Bids for 3,000,000 Russian Army shoes were opened lately in the United States.

This order, which had been closed about June 1st by the representatives of the Russian Government, according to detailed specifications compiled in Russia at a price impartially admitted to be fair and reasonable, but lacking the endorsement of the Council of National Defense, has been again thrown open to competition.

Judges say that the cost is about 50 cents per pair more than the American Army shoe.

The finances of India are said by importers of hides and skins to be in such a state as to alone restrict the purchases of hides and skins 75%. No one wants to buy by drafts. One very large house is reported to be getting its hides and skins through the Standard Oil Co. We assume that such an arrangement could be made by firms shipping a large amount of products to countries in the Orient.

MANUFACTURER SECURES MORE PATENTS

J. T. Tebbutt, of the Tebbutt Shoe & Leather Co., Three Rivers, Que., spent a few days in Toronto last week showing several new models in his offerings for the coming season. The widely-known brand of the Professor Gold Cross Shoe has been issued on a new orthopedic last gotten out by Mr. Tebbutt, while the Doctor's Anti-septic shoe has been produced on a new last carrying a pointed toe and close trim edges, making it very smart and suitable for young men and the dressy trade. Another feature is that, although there is a double row of stitching around the welt, as on all Doctor's lines, only one row shows. The boot also has a new indestructible lining and new top band facing. It, of course, carries the usual special features, which are so well known, to make it absolutely waterproof. It also has the Acme sole as well as leather. There is an asbestos centre sole, while the lining and inner sole are treated antiseptically. The shoe comes in khaki, tony red, cherry, black and box calf. The Professor on the new orthopedic last is much admired and has a patent cushion inner sole and cushion heel. It also carries a patent asbestos centre sole. A new tool for edge setting and edge trimming for which a patent has been secured is now in use in the Three Rivers factory. It finishes the edge in two colors and puts a groove between the middle and outer sole, which is quite a novelty, making the edge a double one. Mr. Tebbutt, who is an inventor of note, having eight Canadian patents and four United States patents to his credit, is also getting out a new cushion sole which is a perfect covering where the foot rests. There are three bandages attached to the sole and sewn in with the welt and the upper preventing ripping and spreading of the cushion sole. Acme fibre soles are observed on a large number of the models and the new double stitching system on the welt by which only one row is seen is also an invention of Mr. Tebbutt. The Doctor's shoe now comes in orthopedic, fit-right, London and pointed lasts with white and tan fibre bottoms and in all the leading shades of leather.

DEATH OF ESTEEMED SHOE TRAVELER

James E. Moore passed away on August 15th at his residence, 144a Sorauen avenue, Toronto, after an illness of several months. He was in his 49th year, and was favorably and widely known by the shoe trade, with which he was identified all his life. The remains were taken to St. Catharines for internment. Mr. Moore was at one time manager of the shoe department of the Robert Simpson Co., and was later in business for himself for a short while. He then joined the staff of Geo. E. Boulter & Co., with whom he was connected for some fifteen years. Mr. Moore then formed a partnership with D. G. Hardie, the firm name being Hardie & Moore, and for the past four years he had been city traveler for S. C. Cronk & Co., wholesale shoes, Toronto. Of a quiet, unassuming disposition, he made numerous warm, friends by his courtesy, faithfulness and efficiency. Mr. Moore is survived by his wife, who will have the sympathy of many in the trade in her bereavement.

NEW POST FOR MR. GUINIVAN

R. O. Dunhill, for the last ten years connected with Geo. E. Keith Co., and for nearly two years past, assistant manager of the Walk Over Boot Shops in Chicago, has been appointed manager of the Walk Over Boot Shop in Toronto, and entered upon his new duties. He succeeds F. A. Guinivan, who has accepted a new and responsible post with the organization. The duties of Mr. Guinivan will be the promotion of sales in the orthopedic department of the Geo. E. Keith Co. in the United States and Canada. Mr. Guinivan has for many years taken a deep interest in the correct fitting of shoes and in the giving of comfort and ease in all lines of footwear made by his firm. His headquarters will be at Campello, Mass. Many friends will regret to learn of his departure from Toronto, as he was an aggressive shoeman and took a lively concern in the affairs of the Toronto Shoe Retailers' Association, being a former member of the executive. Mr. Dunhill, the new manager of the Walk Over Boot Shop, has already created a most favorable impression. The management of the Walk Over Boot Shops in Montreal and Quebec will continue under the same heads, S. E. Wygant being manager at Montreal and R. J. G. Gore at Quebec.

MEET DEATH DOING HIS PART

Harry Richardson, who enlisted with the 61st Battalion, and later was transferred to the Signallers of a Highland Battalion, was killed in action recently in France. Harry lived in Canada for six years, and his parents reside at Hull, England. Many friends will regret to hear of his death. Before joining the colors he was manager of the Lightning Shoe Repair Shop, Winnipeg.

BREEZY NEWS FROM ST. JOHN

E. L. Rising, president of the firm of Waterbury & Rising, wholesale and retail boot and shoe dealers in St. John, N.B., will leave in a few days for a three months' holiday trip to the Pacific Coast. He will be accompanied by his wife.

Sergt. Percy Steel, a well-known young shoe dealer of this city, who is a member of a machine gun section of the Canadian Expeditionary Forces in England, writing to a friend says that he arrived safely in the Old Country and is down to routine training. Sergeant Steel is a qualified Captain, but being unable to secure an appointment, volunteered in the ranks and was soon promoted to the post of sergeant. He has a brother in a hospital in England convalescent from wounds sustained in action.

Frank Merrill, senior clerk in Percy Steel's shoe store, is on a week's vacation along the St. John river. During his absence the store is in charge of Miss Josephine Armstrong.

Mayor R. T. Hayes, president of the firm of J. M. Humphrey & Co., Limited, will not attend the annual meeting of the Union of Canadian Municipalities to be held in London, Ont., on August 27th, 28th and 29th. His worship is of the opinion that in matters of this kind it is not elective officials who should represent the city, but the permanent officials.

Local shoe travelers are at present enjoying their vacations. They expect to go out on the road about the first of September.

Harold Rising, secretary-treasurer of the firm of Waterbury & Rising, Limited, has returned home from a visit to Boston, where he purchased several lines of spring goods.

CANADIAN FIRMS WIN PRIZES

In the recent contest for valuable prizes for the best trimmed window, conducted by the Scholl Manufacturing Co., of Toronto and Chicago, three premiums were captured by Canadian firms. These were Bryson-Graham, Limited, Ottawa, Fred Ashfield being the window trimmer; the 2 Macs Limited, Ottawa, J. L. Beaudry being the trimmer, and H. Grey Hodges, of Chatham, Ont. Speaking of the competition the "Foot Specialist" says: It was not alone the vast number of photos submitted that made the judging difficult, but rather the fact that all sent in were so good, and seemed so deserving of recognition, that it seemed a pity to discard any. It was much like being placed in the centre of a vast garden of beautiful flowers and instructed to pick out the fifty-four most beautiful ones, when each fresh flower examined seemed to have some special claim to greater beauty than any of the others. It was a hard job but the judges finally made their selections.

The artistic Silver Trophy for the champion in the 'Lunge and Salmon Competition

MANY FISHING CANDIDATES ARE IN TRAINING

Some More Contestants for the Journal Trophies—How Several Aspirants Put in Practice Stunts—The Air is Thick with Rumor and Speculation—Some Heretofore Unknown in the Angling Arena May Wake up Any Fine Morn Champions

THE interest in the fishing competition of the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL is growing keener all the while, and the extension of the closing date until October 1st, is bringing out many new competitors, both in the black bass and speckled trout race and in the maskalonge and salmon contest.

Men in the trade who have never fished before are visiting establishments which deal in tackle of all kinds, and are looking up railway maps and folders, and consulting various authorities, in order to get into this interesting game. Where two of three members of the trade meet to discuss holiday pursuits, there you will hear the Journal's competition referred to, and speculation is rife as to who will secure the beautiful and artistic silverwear. The trophies are handsome ones, very attractive and chaste in design, and will adorn any mantlepiece or library. They will be suitably engraved, and will prove a memento of lasting pleasure, and happy association to the winners.

Calls Catch "Pot Hunting"

In the last issue of the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL, there was a picture presented of 160 lake trout weighing over eight hundred pounds, which were caught in the Lake of the Woods District by a clever candidate, who prefers to remain incognito. The publication of the undoubted evidence of the prowess of the angler has called for a protest from a reader who, enclosing the picture in a letter, says: "Such a catch as this is Pot Hunting, and should be so labelled. The caption, 'A Great String,' is a misnomer. Let us know what you think about this yourself." The writer signs himself "one who enjoys fishing as a sport." All the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL can say is—the more the merrier, and all who can get into the fray should have all the fun they can extract, so long as they observe the law. Send either mounted specimens or photographs of your catch to the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL, giving size, weight, locality, and how caught, and have the same attested to by two reputable eye witnesses, or a notary public.

Cleaned the Lake of Fish

Harry Lewis, manager for P. Jacobi, Toronto, who spent a few days at Chicopee Island, Stoney Lake District, has returned, happy as a big sunflower, and bronzed like a Siwash Indian. He declares that he practically caught all the maskalonge and bass within a mile of the island. While he did not have a tape measure with him, he took some of the longest shoe strings sold by his firm. Not one of them was sufficiently elongated to measure the scaly denizens of the lake which came his way. Mr. Lewis' friends, however, think he succeeded in either stretching the measurement of the fish or shortening some of the shoe laces, before using them as a tape line.

John A. Walker, of Walker, Parker & Co., Limited, Toronto, who has an attractive summer home just west of Port Credit, has, it is rumored, been haunting the Credit River of late, and his movements have been somewhat mysterious. When asked if he had any luck in the angling art, he remarked that it was "a fine day," an evidence that he is keeping his plans carefully secreted.

The Biblical injunction that "the last shall be first" is going to come true in the fishing competition of the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL, according to M. L. Sturgis, sales manager of the United Last Co., Limited, Montreal, who was in Toronto and Kitchener last week on business. Mr. Sturgis reports that his plant is very busy and while he has been busy himself, yet he found time to do a little fishing lately when on a trip to Perth. He took a few hours off and visited the Rideau Lakes. His amazing success on this expedition warrants him in the belief that he can capture one of the silver trophies. At any rate he is going to try. His inscription on his quarry will be "and the last man shall be first."

B. Vaillancourt and F. X. Charbonneau, of Montreal, returning from a fishing ramble.

Will Help Food Production

"What is the use of Bill Hanna, Food Controller, sending to the Atlantic Coast and bringing in cod and haddock," remarked a leading shoe manufacturer the other day. "I think that he is a little premature and could well afford to wait until the catches by the many contestants in the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL competition arrive. There will then be fish for everybody in Canada, and all of the home brewed variety, too."

It is said that Paul Roy, of Montreal, received a parcel by express the other day marked "C.O.D." He has been thinking so much along angling lines of late that, in his pre-occupation, he remarked it was absolutely useless to send him any "cod" as he could catch all that he required. He would not miss the fun of doing his own fishing—not for a king's ransom.

B. Vaillancourt, of the La Duchesse Shoe Co., Montreal, and F. X. Charbonneau, of Charbonneau and DeGuise, Montreal, are already in training for one of the trophies. The accompanying sketch, which is not as clear as it might be, shows what they corralled in one day's fishing. They do not claim that it is the largest ever, but as a fair sample of an afternoon's sport in the angling game it is not a bad representation. Successive trial in the gentle art of Izaak Walton will make them more proficient.

W. A. Hamilton, of the W. B. Hamilton Shoe Co., Toronto, who spends his week ends at Roche's Point, has been taking a few days extra recently. His long absences from the cottage at times, and his familiarity with certain districts of Lake Simcoe have not been taken to increase his geographical knowledge, but to discover the best fishing spots. Mr. Hamilton has a large private office at 15 Front street east, Toronto, where the door is always open, and everybody welcome—there some curios and historic pictures adorn his sanctum. He has tacked up a page of the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL and gazes wistfully and longingly at the silver cups, one of which may yet be his.

C. Mather, manager of the footwear division of Gutta Percha & Rubber for Ontario, is making some extensive preparations to get into the contest. He modestly admits that he has done a little fishing in the past, and knows something about the finer points of the pursuit, which he intends to put to good purpose in the next few weeks.

W. J. Bartlett, of Brampton, Past Grand Herald of the I. O. O. F., who was in Toronto last week attending the Grand Lodge, says he is going to annex the cup for bass fishing. Mr. Bartlett is a leading shoeman, poultry fancier and triple-linked brother and expects to qualify for angling honors.

There is a danger of "Bill" Chamberlain, of Galt, deserting motoring for angling. He now spends about three evenings a week on the Grand River and returned the other evening with a fine string—of shoe laces.

When Three Fellows Get Together

Commodore John P. O'Shea, Louis Daoust, of Daoust, Lalonde & Co., and H. C. Parker, of Parker-Irwin, Limited, Montreal, went on a fishing jaunt recently to the Ottawa River above St. Anne de Bellevue. This is supposed to have been the spot where Thomas Moore wrote his famous song, "Row, brothers, row." It happened that John and Louis were singing that song, when all at once Mr. Parker sent up a cry that he had caught a whale. After considerable difficulty, and getting Mr. O'Shea, who is a man of no small proportions, to steady the craft, Mr. Parker succeeded in landing a maskalonge weighing 44½ lbs. It will also be noticed by the illustration that a smaller fish was corralled, but in the excitement of the occasion over the larger one, the anglers forgot to have the lesser specimen of the finny tribe weighed. Mr. Parker claims that this catch more than makes him eligible for the cup which the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL is offering. Certainly he has made the best capture up to date, and will give the others an interesting race. It will take some maskalonge, and then some more, to equal the prodigious quarry of the genial Mr. Parker.

F. E. Woodward, of F. E. Woodward & Son., Lachine, Que., is taking much interest in the fishing contest. He is a fisherman himself of no mean accomplishments. A friend of forth full of hope. When the day is far spent he returneth and the truth is not in him."

W. Alfred Moore, of Beardmore & Co., Toronto, who has a summer cottage at Maple Beach, Lake Simcoe, and spends the week ends there with his wife and family, is devoting some of his spare time, as well as his meal hours, to catching everything under the surface of the water. He has not yet met with a tremendous amount of good luck, but is serenely confident that as September draws near, he will succeed in catching a specimen of the finny tribe that will weigh more than a heavy roll of sole leather.

"And with both our husbands enterin' into The Shoe Journal's fishin' contest, we'll make Hanah's haddock, and the slow cost of livin' look like a pair o' sandles without a vamp."

French town some distance behind our front, one of several towns in which this work is proceeding day and night, silently and almost unnoticed by the world. Thousands of French women and girls, whose menfolk are fighting or have fallen, are employed on it; and I confess I was simply staggered at what I saw.

"To this hive of industry is brought all the jetsam of battle, from a broken rifle or bicycle to tattered tunics and derelict shoes and boots—all to be renovated and made serviceable again in ways that seem almost like magic. In one place I saw shed after shed piled to the roof with discarded shoes, most of them in such a deplorable condition that it seemed nothing short of a miracle could restore them. In former years they would all have been consigned to the rubbish heap as utterly worthless. Not so now.

"Stage after stage I saw these shoes, 'broken in the war,' converted again into splendid boots, soft and strong. I watched these clever and industrious French women soak them in some mixture and pass them from hand to hand until the leather became as pliable as ever it was. They were then scrubbed and rubbed and patched, and soles or heels were put on where required.

"They were next immersed in a bath of boiling oil, straightened and shaped; and when the last process was finished, I assure you, you could scarcely have distinguished them from shoes newly bought. This repairing shop turns out 2,000 pairs every day; and I was told the output soon will be 5,000 pairs."

Mr. Woodward has sent him the following which he passes on to the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL:—"Behold the fisherman. He riseth up early in the morning and disturbeth the whole household. Mighty are his preparations. He goeth

HOW THIS SHOE SALE WAS LOST

"I walked into a shoe store the other day and, while waiting for the proprietor, a middle-aged, well-dressed man and his wife entered," declared a well-known traveler recently. "A bright, alert clerk stepped up to the callers, and learning that the woman wanted a pair of mahogany calf high-cut bals, he was not long in setting about the task of fitting her. The one point upon which there was some hesitancy was that of price. The salesman was doing his utmost to convince the woman that the figure asked for the shoe was only fair, when the quality and make were taken into consideration.

"After some discussion, which practically ended in the sale being closed, the lady thought she would try on the shoe again. It was a 4½D. She decided that perhaps a 5E would fit her with greater ease and comfort.

"Very well," declared the salesman, 'I can get it for you, as we carry it in all widths.'

"He turned to locate the shoe on the shelves, but found that the size was upstairs in the stock room. Excusing himself, he went to get it.

"As soon as he had departed, the woman remarked to her husband: 'Would you take it or would you not?' and the man informed her that she could suit herself, but if he were buying he would look around and see if he could not get something equally suitable at a less figure. When the salesman returned with the 5E, the woman had firmly made up her mind she would offer some trifling excuse for not taking the boots, and declared that, after all, the new size did not fit her quite as well as she thought it would. Regarding the 4½D, she was afraid to try it, and offered the specious plea that she would call around again when not so tired and fit on the particular shoe which the salesman had brought down.

"Half an hour later," added the traveler, "I happened to drop into another store up the street. I found the woman customer there, and before she left, she had purchased a pair of shoes at a higher figure than she had been asked in the store she first visited.

"The mistake which the salesman made in the first establishment was leaving the lady when he went upstairs to get the larger size. There were two other salesmen in the store. Had he asked one of them to have the shoe brought down, and the customer not been neglected or afforded an opportunity of having a private conversation with her husband, who appeared to think all women's shoes were too high in price, the sale would no doubt have been effected without any trouble.

"It is a serious mistake to go searching around for shoes. Before suggesting another size or width to any customer, it is good policy to be sure that you have that size or width right at hand, on the shelf, and no time should be lost in finding the proper shoe. Many a sale is lost by some little hitch, in way of interruption of the service, waste time in locating the right shoe and in not keeping up the interest of the customer. Steady, quiet and polite attention is what tells most in the making of shoe sales, especially when a patron is in doubt, and not quite decided what size, last or style he or she will wear."

EIGHT HOUR DAY FOR SLIPPER WORKERS

The Rossendale Free Press in a recent issue says:

"The proposal which has been put forward by Sir H. W. Trickett, Limited, of Waterfoot—and which in fact may become a proposal general to the slipper manufacturing firms of Rossendale—to institute a 48 hours' working week instead of the present 55½ hour week, will create no little interest in the district. Trickett's proposal is that the experiment should be made for a month, and that at the end of that time the workpeople, by ballot, shall say whether they desire it to continue, or that they prefer to revert to the former and longer working period. No one, of course, will object to working fewer hours; the factor that will turn the balance either in favor or against, will be a financial one. If having tried it for a month, the operatives find they can earn as much in 48 hours as they could by working 7½ hours per week longer, they will undoubtedly vote for the continuance of the new scheme."

BLACK, BROWN AND GREY LEAD

Mr. Wm. Chamberlain, of Getty & Scott, Limited, Galt, has returned from an extended visit to New York, Boston and other shoe centres of New England. He states that he found black kid in women's shoes were the strongest sellers, Havanna brown second, and Field Mouse Grey third, in eight-inch bals with various fancy patterns. Mr. Chamberlain remarks that military effects will be featured very strongly during the fall and coming spring. The military boot will be of calf skin, particularly colored calf. One of the most popular leathers will be patent, with colored tops.

JOINS STAFF OF PERTH SHOE CO.

J. H. Moore (Andy), who for the past three years has been on the selling force of the Minister-Myles Shoe Co., Limited, Toronto, covering Quebec and the Maritime Provinces, has joined the Perth Shoe Co., Limited, Perth, Ont., and will look after Ontario, west and north of Toronto. He is an experienced and aggressive salesman, who has had eighteen years insight into the footwear game. His first position was in the Neill shoe store, Woodstock, and later he was with John Agnew, Brantford, for a long period. After spending ten years in the retail end, he took a job on the road for a Montreal firm, covering Eastern and

J. H. Moore, Toronto

Northern Ontario, and subsequently joined the staff of Gourlay & Fogelberg, of Kitchener, and the Galt Shoe Co., of Galt, Ont., supervising the Maritime provinces. He was with these firms until his association with the Minister-Myles Shoe Co. "Andy" is an old-time lacrosse enthusiast, playing with the teams of Brantford, Woodstock, and his native town of Cornwall. He will continue to reside in Toronto, and many friends will wish him every success in his new position

AMONG THE SHOE MEN.

The annual picnic of the employes of the Adams' Shoe Co., Toronto, was held last week at Bond Lake, and was largely attended. An interesting programme of sports and games was run off and every one had a delightful time.

E. G. Stuebing representing the Canadian Consolidated Felt Co., Limited, of Kitchener, Ont., spent a few days in Toronto last week showing a representative line of canvas footwear for the coming season.

Foster Fraser, of Regina, a former member of the staff of Thomas Ryan & Co., Winnipeg, has joined the selling force of Blachford, Davies & Co., Limited, Toronto, and will cover the Province of Saskatchewan for that firm.

The plant of Underhills, Limited, at Aurora, Ont., has been closed and much of the equipment moved to the company's factory at Barrie, Ont., the two plants being consolidated. The capacity of the enlarged industry at Barrie will be twelve hundred pairs per day. The interest of Charles Webster, who was until recently secretary-treasurer of the company, has been taken over by Underhills, Limited, of which organization Fred Underhill is president, Ross H. Underhill, vice-president and Stanley G. Underhill, secretary-treasurer. Fred Underhill, whose health has not been of the best for some time, will leave in a few weeks, accompanied by his wife, for Los Angeles, California, where he expects to spend many months. A number of the old hands employed in the Aurora factory have already removed to Barrie and others will follow in the near future.

L. Brandon who is a member of the Royal Flying Corps, and is a son of A. Brandon, of the Brandon Shoe Co., Brantford, recently left for England, and will do his bit in the present struggle.

J. W. Jupp, shoe retailer, wife and family, Toronto, have been on an extended trip to Dayton, Ohio, and other points.

Harry Bell, shoe retailer, St. Clair avenue, Toronto, has been spending a holiday at Orchard Beach, Ont.

James C. Bryant, representing the Kaufman Rubber Co., who has been spending a few weeks with his family at Keswick, Ont., has returned to Toronto.

H. R. Scott, shoe retailer, of Seaforth, Ont., spent a few days in Toronto recently, attending the Grand Lodge meeting of the Independent Order of Oddfellows, of which organization he is a prominent member.

R. J. Orr, of Toronto, who represents the Arrowsmith Mfg. Co., has gone on an extended selling trip through Wisconsin, Minnesota and North and South Dakota. He will be away for several weeks.

John Dunbar, of Scott-Chamberlain, Limited, London, was in Toronto recently on business.

Z. Anchin, shoe repairer, Roncesvalles avenue, has installed a new Goodyear equipment and has thoroughly remodelled his shop. It is now one of the brightest and best laid out that can be found anywhere.

A recent despatch from New York says: There is rather an interesting story in connection with the recent Russian contract for 2,000,000 pairs of army shoes placed in the United States. It appears that Russian representatives had practically made agreement with a certain New England shoe manufacturing company for 3,000,000 pairs of army shoes at $5.20 per pair. This manufacturer in turn expected to farm out part of this big contract among several other concerns. Since this purchase had to be financed through a credit extended by the United States Government to Russia, it was necessary to get the government's "O.K." on the contract. As chairman of the committee on supplies of the Council of National Defence, Julius Rosenwald declared that this price of $5.20 was too high and that the contract should be thrown on the open market subject to bidding. The result was the placing of the bulk of the contract reduced to 2,000,000 pairs at prices of $4.82 to $4.83 per pair.

R. B. Chalue, of Toronto, who represents several shoe firms throughout the Western Provinces, left last week on an extended selling trip. He will go as far as the Coast.

Arthur, the fifteen-year-old son of Joseph Greenwood, dealer in shoes and hardware at 1293 Danforth avenue, Toronto, was drowned recently at Rosebank while swimming. Many friends will extend sympathy to the grief-stricken parents.

Harry Thompson, of the Thompson Shoe Co., Montreal, spent a few days in Toronto lately calling upon the trade.

Its first western branch is to be opened here in a few days or as soon as the heavy shipment of shoes reaches Edmonton. The decision to locate its first branch in Edmonton was not made by the management of the Carey Shoe Company until a thorough investigation had and the two events were fittingly celebrated. The afternoon was spent in bathing, dancing and sports, and the festivities were brought to a close by a splendid supper. Everyone reported the outing a distinct success.

Ackerman, Son & Co., Limited, for ten years in consideration of the company starting a shoe factory in that city for the making of men's, boys' and youths' staple shoes. The output will be about three hundred pairs a day and there is no doubt that the by-law will carry by a large majority. For the past twenty-five years the Ackerman firm have been large manufacturers of harness and saddlery, which lines will be continued and the shoemaking plant is a new departure. The new proposition has been well received by the citizens of Peterborough.

The Sample Shoe Store has opened out in rooms 2, 3 and 4, Edward Building, 325 Portage avenue, Winnipeg.

Many eastern friends are pleased to meet him.

There is another claimant for the fishing trophies being offered by the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL. L. C. van Geel, of the Tillsonburg Shoe Co., Tillsonburg, took a holiday recently and went down to Port Rowan on Lake Erie, where, in company with his brother-in-law, S. S. Woodward, of Sadler & Haworth, Montreal, he caught over one hundred pounds of bass in three hours. The average weight was about a pound and a half each.

A. Brandon, of the Brandon Shoe Co., Brantford, was in Toronto last week. He has closed his factory for a few days in order that the employes may assist in harvesting the abundant yield of grain in Brant county. Many other industries in the Telephone City have allowed their staffs off for some time to help in the fields. Some months ago Mr. Brandon made the offer in response to a request of the local National Resources Committee and it was promptly accepted. Galt industries are also doing their part to aid the farmers, and among those which have been very active in this respect is the shoe manufacturing firm of Getty & Scott, Limited, several men having gone to the country for a few days.

Better Business

In 1916 there were 1785 failures among retail merchants in Canada. Most of these failures were due directly to one cause—unsystematic business. Most of the merchants who failed were apparently doing a big business. But they didn't know the details of their business. They had no system. They lost money through mistakes, through forgotten charges. They lost customers through disputes. A store with an annual turnover of $40,000 should net at least $4,000 profit, on a conservative estimate, yet that profit is easily eaten up by such losses.

A National Cash Register System insures against loss due to mistakes, forgotten charges, etc., and ensures each retail merchant that he will get all his profit all the time—whether he is in the store or not.

The price of a National Cash Register is insignificant when the amount of information it gives is considered.

Write us to-day for full particulars which we will gladly furnish.

RINEX SOLES

Nothing can impress a customer more favorably toward RINEX than the assurance that it will wear as long, if not longer, than the choicest sole leather.

Then, when you explain that RINEX is leak proof, something true of no leather sole, you have a real sale-clinching argument.

Here's another way in which RINEX beats leather:

RINEX Soles of Oak Color

are the latest and greatest improvement in fibre soles. Their color is a perfect match for that of sole leather—and, being of a very tough and firm consistency, may be channeled and stitched exactly like a leather sole. Specify "RINEX SOLES OF OAK COLOR" if you would sell your customers the very latest improvement in shoe-bottoming.

CANADIAN SHOES FOR CANADIAN SOLDIERS

Canadian Shoe and Leather Trade and Army Contracts—Manufacturers Asked to Tender for Small Shoe Order—Canadian Overseas Forces Supplied With British Boots—Canada Foots the Bill

CANADIAN shoe manufacturers have recently been invited to tender for twenty-five thousand pairs of ankle boots for use of overseas forces and are naturally anxious to know why they are asked to bid for this trifling order. It may be that the authorities hope to get a lower price through competition and at the same time hold down the leather market by not making a demand for a large quantity of shoes at one time.

Since the first shoes were made in this country for Canadian soldiers manufacturers here have not been very enthusiastic with regard to army orders. They were vilified and made contemptible in the eyes of the whole world by a political investigation that revealed nothing more than the fact that a few greedy outsiders had made an effort to use the opportunity to bleed the shoe trade. Following this unfortunate development and from the fact that shoe manufacturers have been busy since and could make more money on their regular lines, the army shoe business here, as far as supplying the needs of the men in Canada is concerned, was left to a few establishments that were willing to take chances on coming out even.

With conditions as they are to-day in Great Britain, there ought to be need for Canada looking after the footwear and leather requirements of her own men. Now that the experimental stage is past and standards have been thoroughly established it ought to be possible to get down to business. It seems a ridiculous proposition that the country that provides the men should not be given the opportunity to furnish their needs when on the field. Of course the excuse is made that it simplifies matters to have the Canadian soldiers transferred to British control when they cross the sea, and there may be something in the claim that there is not sufficient transportation accommodation, but if the same reasoning were applied throughout there would be no munitions or other supplies sent from Canada. Moreover, something will have to be done to meet the situation that is arising out of the limitation of munitions production. There is bound also to be a reaction from the unwonted activity in shoe manufacturing that has characterized the past year, and while the supply of footwear for two or three hundred thousand soldiers will not make or break a country like this, it will mean much in maintaining the industry upon a stable footing. These men were all regular consumers of footwear before the war and their removal from the country involves a distinct loss to the shoe trade. The industry should not be made to suffer because these men have gone forth to fight their country's battles abroad. If the shoes may not be ordered by the Canadian Government for Canadian soldiers surely it can be arranged by the War Office that they should be ordered from Canadian factories, especially as Canada is literally "footing the bill."

Will Hold Children's Week Every Month

Enterprising Toronto Establishment Inaugurates New Plan to Minister to Juvenile Requirements in the Shoe Line—Exclusive Displays for the Little Ones—Importance of Kiddies' Business Cannot be Overestimated—What Return of School Days Mean

THE children of to-day are the adult customers of to-morrow, and the little ones in the home are forceful factors in influencing the trade of father and mother in the matter of shoes as well as other articles of apparel.

Recognizing the importance of children's trade, and believing in catering to their wants, J. L. and M. S. Chisholm, proprietors of Chisholm's Shoe Store, West Toronto, are inaugurating something entirely new in the matter of attending to juvenile requirements. The store, which is an exceptionally attractive one, has a specially fitted up children's department.

Starting the first week in September, Chisholm's will hold a special children's week at their store. The event will become a monthly institution. A card announcement in diamond shape with "Children's Week at Chisholm's," decorates the windows, awning and other vantage points in the store. Special window displays have been put in showing infants' and children's and misses' shoes and hosiery on one side and little gents', youths' and boys' on the other. The interior show cases are also filled with the latest styles of pedal coverings for the young, and special tables reveal the newest offerings in "kicks" of all kinds for the coming generation. In order to add interest to the event, a guessing contest will be conducted each children's week—which will be observed the first week in every month—and to the boy and also to the girl coming nearest the solution, suitable prizes will be given. The management of the store will impress upon the public that requirements of the younger ones will have first attention during children's week in each month. The store will be given over largely to their service. While this does not mean the suspension of sales to the adult members of the family, the latter, however, will quietly realize that their kiddies are to be given particular attention and care during children's week—which is expected to prove exceptionally interesting and attractive to the future men and maidens of West Toronto.

The importance of the children's shoe business to any store can hardly be over-rated. One-third of the population of every city is made up of children. What is more, a youngster can kick out a pair of shoes quicker than a grown man can wear out a pair of socks.

They Are Frequent Customers

Selling to children means that they come to your department perhaps six or seven times a year, and in the majority of cases mother or father, or both, come along. Do not overlook for one minute the value of the hold which the children's trade gives you on that of the parents.

But the successful children's department must be run by a man or woman who understands, appreciates and sympathizes with the children.

If you have not a good head for the department, perhaps it would be well to look up some school teacher who is courting nervous prostration for a mighty small sum per week and convince her that there is better money and less ragged nerves in running a children's shoe department than in teaching.

In the first place remember that school opening is also the opening of the fall season.

Do not misunderstand the word "sale" to mean "cut-price offerings." Advertising specials to any extent right at the beginning of the season, when you should be developing the business normally brought about by conditions, is merely cutting down your profits and your future business.

Presents For Young Folks

In the old days it was customary to give the youngsters all kinds of school supplies—pencil boxes, slates, etc.—as a means of pushing school shoe sales, and some such thing can be done to-day to advantage, though, as a rule, the present should be of only nominal value. There are a hundred and one things dear to the heart of the boy and girl which can be made to pull business for you without great cost.

For instance, a toy balloon is always a great advertisement. There is nothing new about giving out balloons, but the time has not yet come when youngsters are tired of playing with them. Also there can be a new way applied to the distribution.

As a case in point, the shoe buyer of a store in one of the medium-sized cities, a year or so ago, bought a couple of lots of balloons for his school trade. One lot of these balloons carried an ad for the store's shoe department. These cost him a fraction of a cent apiece. The other lot was not printed at all.

An Effective Distribution

But the buyer did not hand these balloons out as if the customer was entitled to one with every sale. Neither did he mention the fact that they were to be given away. Instead, he carried a lot of the uninflated balloons in his pocket and proceeded to circulate around the department. As he saw a salesman closing a sale of children's shoes he walked over for a moment and talked with the youngster. Then he fished in his pocket for one of the balloons, blew it up, tied a string to it and handed it to the youngster.

Before ten o'clock these balloons were circulating all through the store, and inquiries as to where the balloons were being given out were telephoned to the central office from practically every department. The scheme was a great success.

Leather Trade Jottings

What is Seen and Heard Amongst the Trade—Views
and News of the Leather Trade at Home and Abroad

BUSINESS in leather continues quiet and devoid of any feature of practical interest. There is no movement amongst shoe manufacturers further than feeling out the market. Jobbers have been east and have ordered samples but have given little encouragement to shoe manufacturers to hope for better things in the immediate future. It will take a week or two, however, to develop sorting trade when it is expected that there will be a little increased activity. Some shoe manufacturers are already out with spring samples and claim to have booked fair orders, so that it does not look as though dealers had lost confidence in the future of the shoe trade. Both jobbers and dealers seem, however, to be well stocked up with lines for immediate use and until these goods begin to move there will not be any noticeable change in the situation. Leather men report a few fairly large sales, but most of the trading is of the hand to mouth character.

Hide and Skin Conditions.—All the markets are dull and void of any activity. Tanners are holding back on account of the dullness of leather and are continuing to play the waiting game. They are following a policy of curtailing operations. Stocks of hides are accumulating, but packers and dealers do not seem to encourage offers for less than market prices. In Chicago native packer steers are quieter than usual, but are fairly well held at 34c. for late take off. Light native cows are in good supply at 32c. Country hides are in large supply and find few takers at the prices asked. Mixed haired lots have been selling at 24½c: but 26c. is asked for late take off for buffis. Heavy cows are quoted 26c. for the same grade, with 28c. for heavy steers. Calfskins are weak and neglected. For fresh salted skins as high as 40c. is asked without takers, the price offered being about 35c. Quite a few sales have been made at 38c. Sheepskins are selling better, packer shearlings bringing $1.85 and lambs $2.80. Business in imported dry hides is dull, prices ranging from 37c. to 40c. Goatskins are unchanged, although there has been a little more doing in West India skins. In eastern skins there is very little doing.

American Leather Conditions.—Business in leather is pronounced slow and disappointing. Reports come of some large plants either shutting down temporarily or working on half time. In spite of the fresh orders for army shoes and shoe repair requirements the leather situation remains quite inactive. In sole leather business in oak continues very good, while in hemlock and union there is practically nothing doing. There is a little better feeling in upper, particularly in side leathers needed for army shoes, which have shown considerable activity at 46c. for black and 50c. for colors. Calfskins are moving, especially in the heavier grades with lighter weights in call for certain classes of women's shoes. Heavy is quoted at 67c., with 60c. for light in black. Stocks seem to be accumulating. The glazed kid market is very quiet with the demand principally for stock in the neighborhood of 40c. In the higher grades of blacks quotations are 60c. to 65c. for Patnas and about five cents higher for Brazils. There is not much prospect of any increased interest until spring buying is fairly under way.

Economizing in Manufacture.—At a meeting of the executive of the National Boot and Shoe Manufacturers' Association, held August 16th, at Narragansett Pier, R.I., the following resolution was passed:—

Resolved, that as manufacturers we sincerely and loyally offer to support the Government and public-spirited men who are engaged in patriotic service and assist in co-ordinating the efforts for the conservation of men and materials.

We approve the suggestions relative to the modifications of styles, reduction of samples and other economies, and recommend that manufacturers furnish salesmen fewer samples and restrict variety, using simpler styles and colors, assuming that present styles in patterns and lasts will be acceptable another season at least.

We should endeavor to popularize oxfords and all low-cut shoes, thus conserving material and labor.

We recommend the use of materials other than leather of known merit whenever practical, standardizing colors and confining efforts to sell leather now made and in the hands of tanners and manufacturers and shoes now on shelves of wholesalers and retailers.

We recommend that manufacturers concentrate on the particular lines for which they are best equipped to produce, in order to accomplish most economical manufacture and give best possible values for consumers.

We should arrange by a conference of tanners, manufacturers and dealers to limit the use of expensive cutting leathers which can be replaced by leather that will be as good for service and cost less.

In order to increase the supply of hides, leather and beef, we urge that the killing of calves and veals be restricted.

We welcome the suggestion of the Commercial Economy Board to co-operate with retailers, wholesalers and manufacturers in eliminating the unnecessary and burdensome expense of returned goods and cancellations and for the adoption of standard cartons and containers.

We pledge ourselves to co-operate to the fullest

SATISFIED SALESMEN ALWAYS GIVE BEST SERVICE

The Cause of Many Failures Can be Traced to Poor Service—Your Salesmen Are Worthy of Their Hire—Views of Retailers on Clerk Question—The Benefit of Weekly Conferences by the Staff—Every Promise Made Should be Kept

"I do not think I am doing the business I should," said a shoe merchant in an Western Ontario town recently. "Why, what's the matter?" replied the other shoeman, to whom the remark was addressed.

"Well, in the first place, I have always got to keep prodding up my clerks, and even then they don't seem to extend themselves."

"What are you paying your clerks?" said number two, who was intimate enough to ask such a question.

"Oh, I'm giving them an average wage of $12 per week," was the answer.

"Well, said the other, "it's no wonder that your business isn't going ahead as it should. Where do you expect to find a clerk who will give you all that is in him for $12 a week?"

The foregoing merely illustrates the case of hundreds of Canadian shoemen who find that things aren't going to suit them.

Are you a shoeman of this type? If you are, a little thought over the question of your policy with the store help, is liable to change your present views to a considerable extent.

Curiously enough, the dealer to whom the remarks at the opening of this article were addressed was not bothered in the least with poor service on the part of his clerks. Of course, he had the usual number of stereotyped grievances to deal with, but not to the extent of their being a nightmare to him, as was the case with his friend.

Good Wages—Good Service

Neither did they affect his business. The reason of this, he attributed to the fact that he had always believed in paying his help a fair living wage, and expected his clerks in return to do all in their power toward increasing the store's custom. This man is a student of human nature. He has studied his clerks, and at the present time they feel certain that their employer is their best friend, and are as faithful to his business as they would be to their own.

This same shoeman, who is an old timer himself, says, "Yes, I realize that I have got to pay my clerks a liberal salary, if I am to get the best that is in them. I have studied the conditions which face the young man of to-day, and know that it takes more money to support him now, than it ever did.

"We all want our employes to make a neat, respectable appearance, yet some shoemen expect this on an allowance of ten or twelve dollars a week, as is the situation with my friend whose complaint I just mentioned.

"When comparing the two classes of work, the clerk believes himself the intellectual superior of the man who cleans the street. We expect him to live on a higher plane, yet in some of the towns, you will find that the shoe clerk is receiving the smaller reward of the two. This is the reason that I pay my clerks higher wages. Why shouldn't I? I have the best selling staff in the country. Naturally, they will go where their services are best appreciated financially.

"Of course, you will strike a fellow now and again who would feel underpaid on a $60 per week salary, but you can easily distinguish the difference between this order and the young man who makes only a reasonable demand for his services. A good clerk will not sell his services for half their worth, any more than I would a popular shoe for half its selling price.

"As I said before, I expect results from my salesforce, but I also realize that I must take a more than passing interest in the methods used by my employes for the promotion of sales. When engaging a clerk, I hold a genuine heart-to-heart talk with him. I begin by telling him that he has not been engaged to hold down a 'job,' but that he is selling his services as salesman to a progressive business house that would rather pay him double a low salary for superior service than to return his mere 'service of time' for the lower wage.

"I also tell him that the house is even more anxious than the salesman that he should be able to materially increase his monetary return for high-grade service rendered, that I believe that the ultimate success of the entire turnover of the business necessarily rests in the efficiency of my selling staff, and that, accordingly, as he makes good, in that measure will the house make good to him.

"I go on to tell him in as nice a manner as possible that I am not after a 'time server,' a 'clock watcher,' or a 'sulker,' and that if he does not feel like stretching himself in an earnest endeavor toward increasing the welfare of my establishment, he is not the man I want.

"This talk nearly always creates a perfect understanding between the clerk and myself. He knows just what I expect of him, and if he has got the proper metal in him, he will 'come across.'

"Moreover, if I find a clerk is making good, I make good to him myself. I have frequently heard clerks complain of this subject, alleging that their former employer made promises which he failed to keep. There is nothing which will give the clerk more cause for grievance than this.

"Supposing you were clerking yourself and your employer refused a promised increase or put you off until some future date, after you had shown him substantial increase of sales, would your services improve any? Naturally, you would be disgusted with his action, and would not be inclined to put yourself out in the furtherance of a sale. Now, although this is not the right view to take, it is the one taken by the average clerk, and one can hardly blame him for not over extending himself. I feel that when I honor a promise made to one of my clerks, I am spurring him on to renewed efforts. My experience as to the truth of this satisfies me perfectly."

Holds Weekly Conference

"I have reaped numerous benefits," said a well-known Winnipeg dealer, "through weekly conferences which we hold. We devote an hour or so every week to discussing sales methods, as well as problems which we are called upon to face frequently. These talks arouse all the worth-while spirits in the store. They let the staff know what the store is doing and intends to do. In fact, I am doing everything possible to increase the efficiency of my employes, and to help my men make money for themselves. At the end of the season I regularly consider each employe's services in view of recognizing good work, and have in many cases voluntarily increased salaries in mid-season in order to give the employes their just dues. The p. m. system counts for nothing in determining salaries with me. I pay my salesmen to treat the store's customers right, and expect and encourage them to build up personal trade and to win the confidence of every customer they serve. Every salesman is given a handicap based upon his salary. Whenever his sales exceed the handicap, a two per cent. bonus is paid on the amount in excess of the handicap."

PETERBORO WILL HAVE WELL EQUIPPED FACTORY

Those Behind the Enterprise Have Had Long and Successful Experience in the Leather Arena—Men's and Boys' Staples Will be Made Under Trade-Mark Name—The Equipment will be the Latest Extant, While the Premises are Spacious

THE ratepayers of Peterboro will vote upon a by-law on September 6th, to continue the present assessment of $23,790, for the term of ten years, on the manufacturing plant and property of B. F. Ackerman, Son & Co., Limited, on condition of the firm starting a shoe factory.

B. F. Ackerman, President, Peterboro, Ont.

There is not the slightest doubt but that the by-law will carry by a large majority, as the Ackerman plant has, for the past quarter of a century, been one of the most progressive and enterprising industries in the Electric City.

Another evidence of the go-ahead character of the firm is their intention to branch out into the making of staple footwear for men, and the personnel of those behind the project is such as to insure its success and expansion.

It was away back in 1871 that B. F. Ackerman started to make harness in an unpretentious shop in Port Perry. Trade grew as the years passed by, and in 1892, the facilities at Port Perry became too small for the developing harness business, and it was necessary to move to a larger centre, possessing better shipping facilities and having competitive railway lines. Peterboro was selected as an eligible location, and the wisdom of the choice is evidenced by the fact, that within seven years, after moving to that city, the present large factory on George street was built by the firm.

Well Appointed, Spacious Premises

The building is 90 feet frontage and has a depth of 172 feet, consisting of three storeys and a basement. In 1915, the firm of B. F. Ackerman, Son & Co. became incorporated under the title of B. F. Ackerman, Son & Co., Limited, with a capital stock of $500,000. B. F. Ackerman is president, E. W. Borbridge, vice-president; W. C. Ackerman, secretary-treasurer, and Geo. Robertson, director and accountant. The firm make light and heavy harness, horse collars, horse blankets and other allied lines, and have for years maintained a large five-storey warehouse in Regina, which is used for distributing purposes throughout the Prairie Provinces. The building is 50 by 110 feet, and one of the most imposing structures in the capital city of Saskatchewan. The possession of such facilities in the West, ensures the shipping of all goods in car load lots, and the most expeditious transportation arrangements. About 100 hands are employed by the company in Peterboro, and this number will be materially increased, as soon as the new shoe department is under way.

E. W. Borbridge, Vice-President, Peterboro

W. C. Ackerman, Secretary-Treasurer, Peterboro

Geo. Robertson, Accountant and Director, Peterboro

The second and part of the third floors of the commodious building will at present be used for shoemaking purposes. Frank W. McKeen, who has been appointed superintendent for the firm, and is a thoroughly practical and progressive shoemaker, states that the space, ventilation and lighting facilities meet every desired requirement.

The output will be about 300 pairs per day, in men's, boys' and youths' medium and high grade staples, but just how the output will be marketed, has not yet been decided. The firm will turn out a trademark shoe, and will keep their footwear products up to the same high standard of excellence, quality and merit which has characterized their Horse Head brand of harness for the past forty-six years.

The heads of the new shoe factory are practical leather men, who have grasped all details of the leather business. B. F. Ackerman, has been a public spirited resident of Peterboro for the last quarter of a century, and served for many years on the Board of Education, and at the same time took a deep interest in the Board of Trade and other public bodies. E. W. Borbridge, vice-president and sales manager, has had a long acquaintance with the leather game, having been associated with the Hugh Carson Co., Limited, Ottawa, for many years, while the name of Borbridge is synonymous with leather throughout the whole Ottawa Valley. W. C. Ackerman has been connected with his father's business all his life, and has done much to ensure its up-build and success. Lieut.-Col. Charles Ackerman is another son, who returned home some time ago after doing service at the front, where he sustained several wounds in upholding the prestige and honor of the cause which he has so dearly at heart.

Mr. Ackerman's youngest son, Lieut. Arthur Ross Ackerman, who has been in continuous service overseas since 1914, was mortally wounded September 23rd, 1916, at Courcellette and died in London Hospital, October 11th, and was interred at Peterboro. Lieut. Ackerman had won the Military Cross for bravery on the field.

B. F. Ackerman, Son & Co., Limited, sell their products all over Canada and have a staff of seven traveling salesmen, who are thoroughly familiar with the trade. In branching out in the shoe manufacturing arena, many friends of the company feel they will meet with the same measure of success and achievement that they have in their other lines, which will be continued with the same energy and vigor.

IT IS THE TURNOVER THAT TELLS

The more often you turn your stock the more profit you make. The less end-of-the-season close outs you have the greater your average profit. Now, profits depend fully as much on frequent turnovers with no leftovers as they do on marking your goods when they come in at a figure which represents a reasonable percentage above the cost.

To-day more merchants than ever before are marking goods at more liberal margins. This must be done whenever possible, due care being taken not to overprice any line. It is essential to that future welfare of the trade. Also it is very necessary that retailers carefully study the problem of turnovers and leftovers.

We are convinced by careful investigations that the average men's shoe department, like most other departments in any store, has altogether too many different lines. So many are carried that no real enthusiasm can be stirred up on any particular brand. When special co-operation of a manufacturer is needed, it is hard to get because the volume of business on any one line is not large enough. Your advertising is scattered and cannot be expected to bring the same returns that would come from a clean, intensive campaign concentrated on two or three brands.

The kindest advice that a retailer's friend can give him to-day is—"Select a few reliable makers of shoes—the best that you can find in the respective grades—and buy only from them. Keep your purchases among the fewest possible firms. Do the same thing with your women's and children's lines."

Which would you rather do, handle a line that will net you 10 per cent. profit with two turnovers a year and a shrinkage of 5 per cent. for end-of-the-season closeouts (annual profit 15 per cent.), or sell a brand which with the same net profit of 10 per cent., make possible four turnovers a year with a loss of only 2 per cent. from closeouts (annual profit 38 per cent.)? The store that gets more turnovers with fewer leftovers is the store that's on the road to success.

NEW SELLING ARRANGEMENTS IN WEST

E. T. Wright & Co., St. Thomas, Ont., report that they have made new selling arrangements in the Western Provinces, and that G. W. McFarland, of Regina, will look after the territory from Winnipeg to the Coast, and the various provinces will be covered by his staff of salesmen. Mr. McFarland and staff have been representing E. T. Wright & Co. for the past two years or more in the West, but have visited only the smaller towns while W. W. Lindsley, who has been going through to the Coast has looked after the larger places. Mr. Lindsley has joined the Minister-Myles Shoe Co., and will visit the Eastern provinces for that firm. E. T. Wright & Co. will still be represented in Ontario east to Kingston by A. A. Orendorff, while Alfred Winn will take the line east from Kingston through the Maritime Provinces as for the past two seasons.

G. W. McFarland, Regina

HOW HE GETS RID OF ODDMENTS

"No sir, I do not believe in sales," remarked a leading Toronto shoe retailer, who has been in business for thirty years. "I have never held a sale yet and I do not think that I ever will. I clear out all shelf warmers and odd sizes by going over my stock periodically and when the whole assortment is complete, I call in a dealer and have him make me an offer for the lot. I generally get a fair figure and take any loss there may result right then and there as it is better to take such a loss first than carry the goods over season after season. I think that sales demoralize regular trade and interrupt the ordinary channels of business. Of course, I am giving you merely my own opinion. I know that a large number will not agree with me. Every shoe business has to be conducted according to the local conditions that prevail and the class of trade that a store caters to."

SHOULD FIGHT THE MAIL ORDER HOUSES TO FINISH

Declares Shoe Merchant of Summerland, B.C.—He Says These Firms are Doing More to Depopulate Small Towns Than Any Other Agency—The Abolition of the Smaller Places and Elimination of the Country Merchant Would be a Catastrophe

Editor, SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL,—

AS a subscriber to your valuable paper I am taking the liberty of sending you a letter which recently appeared in the Vancouver "Retail Grocers' Review" from A. D. Hardie & Co., general merchants, of Metchosin, B.C., and copy of a letter from me commenting upon the matter referred to.

As this subject is of particular interest to the retail shoe trade, in which line I am engaged, as well as to the general merchant I hope you can find space for the publication of these letters in the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL. Thanking you, I am,

Yours sincerely,

Summerland, B.C.

Want Fair Price Officer Appointed

Dear Sir,—Please mail us a copy of the bulletin you are having printed concerning the report of the delegation to the Dominion Government in respect to matters relating to trade.

We are entirely with you in all your articles relating to price-cutting, etc.

For the past two years Victoria has experienced an orgy of price-cutting. The ones who started it have mostly gone broke and quit, but others have followed it up, and it has been possible to buy flour, sugar, and many other staples cheaper at retail than from the manufacturers. We ourselves have had the stage-driver procure us B. C. milk at 50 cents a case less than wholesale price, at a retail store. We have also occasionally bought flour at retail cheaper, by 30 cents a sack, than the milling company was asking for it.

These conditions have resulted in a great many of the smaller inside and outside stores having had to go broke, and many others, like ourselves, have been losing money for the last two years.

What good does it all do in the end? The public are not entitled to a price that breaks the storekeeper. We are located 16 miles out of town, and the farmers expect us to meet the prices quoted in the scare ads in the papers.

The ultimate end of things will be that instead of protecting the price-cutters, as Mr. Crothers is trying to do, the government will make it a criminal act to cut prices. If a fair wage officer, why not a fair price officer?

We understand that in France there was before the war a law against selling any staples below a certain price, and that in certain of the states the same law was in use, and that the American Congress was considering a federal law along the same lines.

The writer has been nearly twenty years in the retail business and has never seen or even heard of business conditions, from the retailer's viewpoint, being in such an absolutely anarchical condition as exists at the present time in Victoria.

When the biggest stores are out, not to make money, but to cut one another's throats, it is up to all the small men to fall into line and get so strong collectively that they will be able to force the big men to keep selling prices so the retailer can clear savings bank interest over working expenses, at the least, which he cannot do to-day.

Our idea has been for years that once the merchants are organized, that the government should appoint a member of the merchant's executive, called a fair price officer, and that he should attend every meeting of the Board and assist towards fixing the selling prices as the markets changed.

Every merchant should be made by law to belong to the association, and a nominal fee charged, as a license fee, to help to pay the fair price officer's salary. The public would be protected by knowing that the prices charged were under government supervision. The officer appointed would have to be a man who understands the retail business, and not a man like the Hon. Crothers. If the honorable gentleman had the honor to be the proud possessor of this business, we predict that his late rulings would have been diametrically opposite to what they have been.

Our idea is to sell the public as cheaply as possible, but at the same time we feel that we are entitled to a living out of the process.

You have our sympathy in your fight to get the merchants to co-operate, for if they are the same all through the province as they are in Victoria and vicinity, you are fighting a losing game.

We heartily commend all the sentiments in your paper.

Believe us, yours truly,

A. D. HARDIE & Co.

Metchosin P.O., B.C.

per A. D. Hardie.

Ed.—Everything is ready for the merchants to get what they want. The Association executive is ready to go ahead and carry out instructions. It will cost a few dollars. There's the rub. Who's going to pay?

Mr. Beer's Pertinent Comment

Dear Sirs,—This morning I picked up a recent copy of the Retail Grocers' Review, and was much interested in A. D. Hardie's letter, and I endorse very heartily his sentiments; it is as he says. Our idea is to sell to the public as cheaply as possible, but at the same time we feel that we are entitled to a living out of the process. Perhaps I ought to mind my own business (not being a grocer) but I think the matter is vital for all retailers; without the co-operation of all, nothing will be accomplished; it will take strength and rests with retailers in the country to combat the interests successfully. Our friend Hardie speaking of the price cutting in Victoria, asks the question—what good does it all do in the end—and answers the question in a previous paragraph by saying, these conditions have resulted in a great many of the smaller inside and outside stores having had to go broke, and many others like ourselves have been losing money for the last two years. The big stores of Victoria wanted the little fellow's connections, and so the "price cutting" and the loss they suffered in the process represented the price of the victims' goodwill (or bad will). They got what they went after, but they hit below the belt to do it.

Price cutting did not begin in Victoria, it first assumed its present proportions of abuse with the mail order houses. They have built up tremendous concerns by this unfair process. They ran "leader lines" at a profit that is not 3 per cent. on investment and do it for months together apart altogether from price slashing sales. On two separate occasions I worked for one of the largest mail order houses of Canada, first in their dry goods department and later in their mail order department and I saw something of their methods. I well remember selling "silence cloth" at 75 cents per yard for months together, and then selling the same silence cloth in a sale at 25 cents per yard; to clear they said. To clear what? The small merchant. I guess yes, and how do I know? When we were selling flannelette, for instance, "to clear" at prices which cut the wholesaler, did not our manager come the round of us salesmen instructing us that when any man or woman wanted to buy quantities which suggested that they were dealers we were to let him know that he might turn them down? These fellows were what the mail order house wanted to clear, they had their knife in them, not in the flannelette.

These concerns, gentlemen, that are now threatening, very seriously, to abolish the small merchant, and with him the small towns, are what we have to fight; from the standpoint of the farmer, merchant, wholesaler, who you will, in fact, except the mail order houses; the abolition of the small towns would be a catastrophe, the end of which we would not live to see. Our present representatives in the Provincial House "stumped the country" telling stories of isolated settlers and describing the hardship of this isolation. We heard of men going crazy from isolation, of the dullness and ignorance through lack of proper schooling and companionship, and these things they attributed to bad management of the land question; be that as it may, the mail order business to-day is doing more to depopulate small towns and increase already overcrowded centres (thereby still more isolating the settler) than any other influence at work on the case.

We ought to fight this thing not merely because we are small retailers and thereby the most directly affected but as a principle; it is the wrong social development, and we don't want to let this world go backwards, Germans or no Germans. Mr. Hardie says: "If a fair wage officer, why not a fair price officer?" I think the idea is a good one, and if fair prices were extended to the wholesalers also it would be a good thing. I have no objection to the wholesaler giving special discounts for large quantities so that he may manufacture more economically, but I do object to him making more profit out of the gross business of the small purchaser than he does out of the gross business of the big purchaser. The big purchaser is strong and the small purchaser is weak, therefore the big purchaser applies pressure on the wholesaler to give him discounts which are not merely the difference between the cost of manufacture in "great gross" as against gross lots, but a concession to the pressure applied, and the small man is charged higher to make up for it. We need the protection of the government as well as we need government restriction.

There are other matters which we have not space to discuss, but which we ought to deal with; for instance, the mail order houses ought to pay a business tax in all the towns they do business in, or we ought to be freed from that tax. Beneath Mr. Hardie's letter there was an editorial footnote, "Everything is ready for the merchants to get what they want. The Association executive is ready to go ahead and carry out instructions. It will cost a few dollars, there's the rub. Who's going to pay?" What association does the editor refer to, and why not extend your association to all the merchants through the province in all lines, excepting only mail order concerns?

Re those few dollars mentioned, why not assess each retailer a nominal amount pro rata to his financial rating and send round a collector who is well versed in the cause? I think he would be welcomed by most of us, and let him work for the whole province.

Yours sincerely,

Summerland, B.C.

RETURN TO BLACK WOULD BE FATAL

If plain black shoes became the rule the consumption of all kinds of black leather would greatly increase. And, due to the preference which would undoubtedly be given to kid, the advance on this material would be greater than on any other kind of black leather, says the "Shoe Economist."

It is high time, then, for shoe manufacturers and distributors alike to unite their efforts for the starting and maintenance of a country-wide movement for the discarding of the customary mourning during the war. It will be a common-sense movement, as said, a patriotic one and one that is wholly sound and advisable from the economic standpoint.

There is no need for the production of unnecessary styles in footwear. Waste, of course, must be avoided. But the other extreme—a general return to the black, staple shoe—would be fatal to shoe manufacturers and to shoe distributors.

The value and efficiency of style as a factor in demand must be conserved and fostered. We look with the fullest confidence to the shoe trade and industry not only for indorsement, but for active co-operation and effective work in the campaign for the abandonment by the American people of the customary mourning during the further duration of the war.

HANDSOME NEW FRONT INSTALLED

The accompanying illustration shows the front of the new store of the Lyon Shoe Co., 429 St. Catherine street west, Montreal. The exterior is decidedly striking and attractive, and is the only one of its kind in the Dominion of Canada, being an exact replica of John Ward's, New York. It is all framework of polished brass, the base being marble verdi antique. The plate between the frame and the base is oxidized copper and the firm name is in solid brass letters. The floor of the window is of quartered oak and the back is of solid mahogany, panelled. The framework was imported direct from New York and the entire cost of the imposing front was $3,000.

PICNIC OF SISMAN SHOE COMPANY WAS BEST EVER

Seventh Annual Event at Bond Lake Provided Many Attractions and Was Largely Attended—The Races Were Keenly Contested and Social Features Were Much Enjoyed—How Toronto Nine Sought to Trim the Sons of St. Crispin in Ball Game

THE seventh annual picnic of the employees of the T. Sisman Shoe Co., of Aurora, Ont., was held on Saturday, August 18th, at Bond Lake, and was attended by over three hundred happy persons, and marked by perfect weather as it always is. Young and old mingled in the fun, and there was not a dull moment from the beginning of the races to the conclusion of the dance in the evening.

Bond Lake is admirably adapted for picnic purposes, and everyone entered heartily into the various sports. There were all varieties of amusements and athletics, and about six o'clock a generous supper was provided. Valuable prizes were given by a number of firms, and this made all the contests worth while.

A feature of the day was the baseball battle between the nine of the White Shoe Co., Toronto, and the Sisman factory team, who wore white shirts with "The Best Everday Shoe" in bold letters across the front.

Each picnicker was handed a miniature "Everyday" shoe setting forth the merits of this brand of footwear, and thus everybody was properly tagged. In the baseball contest the score was thirteen to thirteen after three innings, and the fierce rivalry would have been kept up yet had not the dinner bell rang with such force and effect that the tired players could not resist the call of the inner man.

Hugh White, in his Hudson Super-Six drove out from Toronto to the picnic in proper style, accompanied by R. B. Gravlin, Harry Braun, E. L. Williamson and E. A. Edmonds, of the traveling staff, T. W. Scott, of the office staff, Gordon Hayes, of the warehouse staff and a representative of the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL. Among others who were present from Toronto was L. W. Hanson, manager of the United Shoe Machinery Co., who lined up with the White Shoe Co. in the ball game and knocked out the longest hit of the day. The spheroid lodged in a tree, where it will probably remain until next year's picnic. The game was umpired by E. Bush, whose decisions were often criticised.

Mr. Sisman was here, there and everywhere welcoming all the visitors, and wore the smile that could not be eradicated, while his two sons, Wm. J. and Herbert, ably looked after a large amount of detail. Other leading members of the organization who were present were: H. Filkins, foreman of the bottoming room; F. Griffiths, foreman of the lasting room; D. Guihan, foreman of the sole stock-room; H. McGirr, foreman of the cutting room and E. Harman, foreman of the treeing room. Hugh White took out several boxes of candies for the girls and dozens of tin horns for the boys. When the latter were handed out the welkin was made to ring with the siren notes of a volunteer orchestra; so much so that a member of the Royal Aviation Corps came sailing over the grounds, evidently thinking that a Zeppelin attack was under way.

The T. Sisman Shoe Co. employ 150 men, and have an output of 1,200 pairs a day, and the seventh annual picnic was unanimously voted as the best and most enjoyable yet held. The dance in the evening was thoroughly appreciated and the scene presented was an attractive one.

The members of the White Shoe Co. party left about seven o'clock for home, returning by King City and Maple. At the former place a call was made on C. H. Hall, and son, Victor, shoe merchant, who has one of the finest, largest and best assorted gardens in the province. The flowers were all in bloom and all the visitors were generously remembered. Among other specimens, Mr. Hall has an orange tree now in its ninth year, which will yield quite a crop of the juicy fruit this season. At Maple another stop was voluntarily made at the general store of W. T. Robinson & Son, which is run by Austin Robinson. The firm have a well-equipped footwear department and exceptionally attractive premises. Toronto was reached in good time, after one of the finest drives that the jolly company had ever taken. A hearty vote of thanks was accorded Mr. White for his kindness in taking the boys to Bond Lake, and giving them such an enjoyable ride through the most prosperous towns and villages to the north of Toronto.

LARGER QUARTERS FOR PROGRESSIVE FIRM

The Blachford Shoe Manufacturing Co., 92 Sherbourne street, Toronto, have secured additional floor space by taking in another flat which has been fitted up for the sole leather, lasting and assembling rooms, while the quarters formerly occupied by these branches of the business, are utilized by the redistribution of the other departments. The extra accommodation gives the firm one-third more space than was formerly at their disposal, and makes the third extension within the past three years, which is a gratifying mark of expansion. The new turn department has been fully equipped and the new spring samples of the firm will embrace both welts and turns in women's high grade shoes. F. J. Murphy, who has special qualifications for turn work, and has charge of the new branch, was for some years at the head of the turn department of Utz & Dunn Co., of Rochester, and recently took up his residence in Toronto. J. C. Souter is the efficient superintendent of the factory, the capacity of which is now about six hundred pairs a day.

AN ENTHUSIASTIC MEMBER OF FLYING CORPS

Flight-Lieut. J. Lamont Brandon, son of Mr. A. Brandon, of the Brandon Shoe Co., Brantford, is 21 years of age, and was educated in Brantford Public Schools, and passed his matriculation at the Collegiate Institute in the Telephone City. On completion of his education he became associated with his father in the Brandon Shoe Co., his intention being to learn the business from the ground up. This was in 1914. In 1915, "Monty," as he is familiarly known to his friends, arrived at the conclusion that winning the war was of very much more importance than shoe making, and so came to Toronto and took a course at Stanley Barracks, qualifying for a Lieutenant of cavalry.

As the demand for mounted troops was limited, and there was not any great possibility of getting to the front, he joined the Imperial Aviation in 1916, and was instructed to leave for England. This was just about the time that the Imperial Government decided to train the Flying Corps in Canada, so the subject of this reference was then instructed to train in Toronto and finish his course at Camp Borden. This he did, qualifying for Flight-Lieutenant, and in July was ordered overseas, arriving at Liverpool early in August. He was presented with his wings before leaving Canada.

"Monty" is an excellent specimen of Canadian manhood, being very fond of athletics, particularly rugby and basketball, and will no doubt give a good account of himself.

EXTRA DISCOUNT SCHEME FAILED

"I have a customer in the East who is all the time trying sharp practices," declared a Montreal traveler the other day. "I sold him a nice bill of goods last spring and we got along famously, and I thought that everything was adjusted satisfactorily.

"Just as the retailer was leaving my sample room he remarked in a quiet, suggestive tone. 'Of course, you will allow me 5 per cent. discount off that order.'

"'Nothing doing,' I replied. 'I could not possibly do so.'

"'Oh I guess you will all right,'" he answered insinuatingly as he departed and I once more told him that his proposition was an impossible one.

"Well, sir, when I got back to the house, I told them that Mr. T—— would probably ask for 5 per cent. discount but that I had not given it to him and to be on the look out.

"When a draft was sent in for the goods some weeks later, T—— wrote that it was not correct as I had promised him 5 off. The firm replied that they understood positively that I had not and they must insist upon full payment of the amount minus the usual 2 per cent., our regular terms. T—— then sent another letter making more extravagant claims and maintaining that I had promised not only 5 off but also the 2 per cent. His effrontery availed him nothing and after putting up an awful noise, he finally settled for the goods less the 2 per cent.

"When I met T—— some weeks later I went for him in lively style and told him in pretty plain language what I thought of his sinister game. He started to make some nasty remarks and I closed him up at once by telling him that his two-faced attitude towards travelers and firms was getting to be pretty well known and, that while he might put one across on a gullible greenhorn, I was too old a bird to be caught with such chaff, that I treated all customers alike, not making flesh out of one and fish out of another. When I got through with him he knew exactly where he got off at with me and my house and I will warrant he has a more wholesome respect for us. I don't care if he never buys another dollar's worth of goods. There are too many decent, honorable men in the footwear business to-day to crawl after the trade of those who will not play fair and square."

NEW LINE IN MEN'S FOOTWEAR

E. T. Wright & Co., of St. Thomas, are featuring a new line this fall, known as the "Arch-Preserver." The "Arch-Preserver" is a patented construction which has been very successfully produced by E. T. Wright & Co., of Rockland. The Selby Shoe Co. are also making use of the idea in women's shoes. Dr. C. H. Brown, who is the originator of the shoe has been spending a few days at the St. Thomas' factory in company with Mr. Harry Wright, of Rockland, Mass., going over the line of spring styles with the sales force.

WORE SHOES MADE OF CORNSTALKS

According to the discovery of an Iowa man who landed in New York recently, every amateur farmer can raise his own shoes in the back yard garden, and there really isn't any reason why shoes for a small family can't be raised in a large window box.

This distressing news for the gentlemen who are getting $10 a pair for the footwear for which men used to pay $5 in the days before kings and emperors and such got to pulling one another's hair over in Europe, comes East through J. M. Dinman, of Storm Lake, Iowa.

When Mr. Dinman put one foot on the brass rail at the Majestic Hotel, New York, said foot was encased in a shoe made of a combination of plain cornstalk and glucose. It was a nifty tan shoe that looked like the sort one sees in the show windows along Broadway.

He said he had been experimenting with his process for six years, and had finally made it work. The cornstalk composition shoes can be made for $2.50 a pair.

MILLINERY SHOE HAS BEEN LIFE OF THE BUSINESS

If You Are Losing Money on This Kind of Footwear it is not the Fault of the Shoes
—Buy Often and With Good Judgment, Study Styles Carefully—Get a Generous Profit and Turn Your Stock Over Frequently—Something Attractive Always Pulls

“Just a few years back millinery shoes were looked upon as freaks and not as a selling proposition. Little did the rank and file of shoe men dream that in so short a time the millinery shoe would revolutionize the business, both in buying and selling.

“The millinery shoe game is not a hit-or-miss one. It is a game that requires thought and planning. Buy your millinery shoes with care and judgment. Mark them a profit on the cost, plus, if you please, a profit on the style feature, for style certainly is deserving of a profit. In other lines of ready-to-wear, it is not so much what an article actually costs, but what it is worth to the customer. Why not sell shoes along the same lines?”

“THE women of to-day want something different. If you, as a merchant, can supply that demand, you will profit by their business,” said F. H. Spargur, of Peoria, Ill., in a recent address before the shoe retailers of that State. “To merchandise millinery shoes at a profit it is necessary to know your customers, know what they will pay, and be able to judge in about what quantities they will buy certain modes; that is, in proportion to the more staple styles.

“It is also necessary to understand the fashions in ready-to-wear and millinery, as to colors, length of skirts, and general style tendencies, as these have great effect upon shoe styles. To be successful millinery footwear must have an excuse for its being.

“I firmly believe in giving the customer honest merchandise, even in millinery shoes. It seems to me that in a great many instances this has been overlooked. Shoes have been built for looks, and there has been taken out practically everything possible in order to build a shoe at a price. When the shoe came in ‘looking well’ the merchant put on a price suited to an honest shoe, which frequently caused much dissatisfaction to the customer and the condemning of the shoe merchant.

Quick Delivery is Essential

“In handling millinery shoes, the retailer must have quick delivery, or the goods may be dead before they are placed upon the selling shelves. A manufacturer should not submit samples to the retail trade unless he is absolutely certain that he can deliver the goods at about the time specified. He does an injustice to the retailer by giving him goods from four to six weeks late. Many times such delayed goods are placed in stock with the feeling that possibly they may be sold, but finally disposed of below cost. If the goods had been received in the time specified, they could have been sold at a profit.

“Millinery shoes cannot be bought six months in advance of the season, for we do not know what will sell. We may have ideas, think we know, but usually find that on goods ordered long in advance it is hard even to get the first cost out of them.

“If we are going to play the novelty game and play it right, we must play it from hand to mouth, play it across the board. We must make a good profit, because we are all going to pick some lemon; we are only human, and if we could pick winners at all times we would not need to be in the shoe retail business. Then we must get our money out of millinery shoes as quickly as we can, and put it in salable merchandise, keeping our stock turning. If we cannot turn a stock of novelty shoes, it is a losing proposition.

“At this time we are wondering what will sell in millinery shoes for fall of 1917. Many military boots of the army type are being sold in some high grade lines and if their sales provide any criterion, they surely must be a good ^{season} proposition for fall. I do not necessarily mean the Mun-^{ing} last, such as used in men's, but a conservative custom walk-^{ing} boot with medium heels, in both tans and blacks, some w^{ith} cloth tops.

Why Should Novelty Shoes Die

“There seems to be a question in many retailers' minds as to what extent novelty shoes will sell during the fall. I have talked with a number of merchants who felt that it would be a matter of only black and tan shoes. I feel that if the public is allowed to go back to these staple shoes, the retailers who have built their business on the novelty proposition will be up against the real thing. I do not doubt for one minute but novelty shoes will sell just as strong this fall as they have the past few seasons, perhaps not as loud in colors, perhaps not as gaudy in pattern, but more conservative, high-grade, ‘tailored’ shoes.

“The millinery shoe has been the life of the shoe business, so why let it die? If we do, our volume is gone, and so is our profit to a certain extent.

“If you are losing money on millinery shoes, it is not the fault of the footwear. You have not given it proper study, you have not bought right, or there is something radically wrong. Study yourself, get in the game, and you'll see more profit in the shoe business—especially this fall. Women are working at a better wage than ever.

“If we, as retailers, can present merchandise that appeals to the average woman as being something different, something extra stylish, at a reasonable price, I believe we have nothing to fear in the next six months.

“Many manufacturers complain that retailers are not placing their business for fall, and the factory capacity is away down, but when they consider that for the past few seasons the retailer has plunged on shoes, has bought more than he had reason to expect that he would sell in a given time, they will see that the time has come when the retailer must unload and play close to shore.

“We have arrived at a critical time in the shoe industry, and it behooves retailers to get together, work with each other that we may ride through the storm safely and come out on the right side of the ledger when things become normal again.”

NEW SHOE FACTORY FOR TORONTO

George L. Williams & Sons, have leased premises at 427½ Queen street west, Toronto, and have installed the necessary equipment for the making of stitch-downs and welts for children, boys, girls and misses. For the past two years Mr. Williams has been superintendent of the King Shoe Co., Toronto, and for eighteen years previous he was with the Williams Shoe Co., Brampton. His sons, George C. and Frank A., who have occupied responsible positions with the King Shoe Co., are identified with the new firm, which is composed of thoroughly practical shoemakers, who have a very wide insight into the business. J. W. Williams will be sales manager for the new factory, which starts off with good prospects.

MR. DESMOND COMES TO MONTREAL

A. Buerger, for the past five years Canadian representative for the Newcastle Leather Co., Montreal, died in July last at Saranac Lake from congestion of the lungs. Mr. Buerger contracted a cold while on a business trip which eventually developed into lung trouble. Five years ago he opened up the Montreal office for the Newcastle Leather Co. Mr. Buerger was well liked and highly esteemed by the trade. Previous to joining the Newcastle Leather Co. he was connected with Richard Young, New York. Mr. Buerger was born in Alsace and his demise is widely deplored.

M. A. Desmond has been appointed Canadian representative for the Newcastle Leather Co., Montreal, succeeding

M. A. Desmond, Montreal

Mr. Buerger. Mr. Desmond was born at Newton, Mass., and after leaving school started as a boy to work for the Newcastle Leather Co. in their Boston office. After spending four years there he was transferred to their New York office and for five years held the position of stock-sorter as well as attending to other duties. He afterwards came to their Montreal branch as assistant to the late Mr. Buerger. Mr. Desmond is a genial gentleman and is a noted baseball exponent, having played for a number of years on the old Boston College team. He also takes considerable interest in golf. Mr. Desmond will have as his assistant J. S. Scully, who was formerly connected with the New York office of the Newcastle Leather Co.

The Newcastle Leather Co., Montreal, have been appointed selling agents for the Province of Quebec and the Maritime Provinces for a line of sheepskins manufactured by Donnell, Carman & Mudge, Boston, Mass.

INTERESTING ITEMS FROM ST. JOHN

In a recent issue of the London Times, an article appeared giving an unofficial account of the awarding of the Military Cross to Captain Ralph St. Clair Hayes, son of Mayor R. T. Hayes, president of the firm of J. M. Humphrey & Co., Limited, wholesale dealers and manufacturers of boots and shoes in St. John, N.B. The article was as follows: "Military Cross—Captain Ralph St. Clair Hayes, Field Artillery. For conspicuous gallantry and devotion to duty in extinguishing burning ammunition pits under heavy hostile shell fire. He has on numerous occasions shown great gallantry and coolness under the most trying conditions, setting a splendid example to his men." Captain Hayes is now in England recovering from an attack of fever.

Lance-Corporal William O'Connor, of the 236th Kilties Battalion, received word lately that his brother Frank had been admitted to a hospital in England suffering from a gunshot wound in his right hand. The injury was sustained during the recent big drive of the Canadian forces. It will be recalled that Corporal O'Connor sustained a severe injury in his left hip a little over a year ago and only recently returned to active service. Lance-Corporal William O'Connor was junior clerk in Waterbury & Rising's retail shoe store on King street.

R. J. Walsh, manager of the King street store of Waterbury & Rising, who has been seriously ill for several months, is still confined to his home. His many friends throughout the city are hoping for his speedy recovery.

Miss Josephine Armstrong, of the staff of Percy J. Steel, has gone on a two weeks' vacation to the Narrows, on the St. John river. Frank Merrill, who was at Martinon, on the St. John river, has returned and is taking charge of the store.

POPULAR SHOE RETAILER WEDS

Edgar Vaisey, shoe retailer at 518 Bloor street west, Toronto, has joined the ranks of the benedicts. He was married on August 20th to Miss Alice Verna Appleton, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harvey Appleton, of Unionville. The ceremony was performed at the Bathurst street Methodist Church Parsonage by Rev. G. S. Faircloth. Mr. and Mrs. Vaisey, who left on an extended motor trip through New York State, have returned to Toronto and taken up residence at 349 Roxton road. Mr. Vaisey has been in the retail shoe business for eleven years and previous to that was a well-known worker in several shoe plants in both Canada and the United States. Many friends will join in wishing him and his bride every happiness and prosperity.

BIG BASS BUT SMALL 'LUNGE

James Watt, of Ames-Holden-McCreedy, Limited, Toronto, returned recently from South Beach, where he enjoyed some excellent fishing. Mr. Watt got a 4½ pound black bass and is very proud of his capture. He also distinguished himself by landing the smallest maskalonge ever taken from the waters of Clear Lake; it weighed exactly one pound and is scarcely large enough to enter in the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL fishing competition.

CONSOLIDATED STAFF HAD FINE OUTING

The third annual picnic of the Toronto Branch of the Canadian Consolidated Rubber Co. was held at Scarborough Heights on August 22nd and was an event of interest and delight. Over one hundred persons were present, the picnickers going out by special cars. There were several games and races and not the least important episode during the afternoon was a baseball match between the "Nobbies" and the "Fleetfoots." The score stood 13-12 in favor of the "Nobbies," J. A. Connor, manager of the Ontario Division, knocking out a long dazzling fly and scoring the winning run amid the plaudits of the spectators. Many valuable prizes were given by the company for the different contests and a sumptuous supper was provided for all. The table service in the pavilion was unrivalled, W. G. Martin, city representative of the firm in the shoe department, making an admirable head waiter. The committee in charge of the arrangements was composed of H. E. Dane, E. F. Hick and others. All the picnickers returned to the city early in the evening unanimously voting the annual re-union the most pleasant and successful ever held. The weather was perfect and all the arrangements passed off without a hitch.

WHY PAY CARTAGE AT BOTH ENDS

"I think it is high time that the retail merchants should get together and have some understanding with the shoe manufacturers," declared a leading footwear dealer last week, "in the matter of having to pay cartage at both ends on all shipments. I contend, and so do many others, that it is sufficient for us to pay freight charges and cartage at the delivery end without having to settle for the cartage at the forwarding point. Why should a retailer have to put up the cost of taking the goods from the factory or warehouse to the station? Surely the wholesalers should bear this part of the outlay. The retailer pays, as I have stated, the freight, the cartage at the delivery end and also the cost of sending the shoes to customers, making as it were, three separate items for conveyance and when cartage at the shipping point is added, it is a quadruple outlay. If the manufacturers cannot come to some arrangement among themselves to pay the cartage from their warehouses to the station, they should have this cost figured in the price of the shoes and not have it bobbing up as a separate item added to the retailer's bill and swelling the incidentals in total expense. Another peculiar thing is that a wholesaler will send goods to any part of his own city, sometimes as far as five, six or seven miles and pay for the delivery, but if any merchandise is forwarded out of town, it may be only to the next station, the consignee has to pay freight and cartage at his end and also cartage at the other end. We do not object to the freight and cartage fee at the termination, but certainly do at the point of dispatch. This is a question which has been brought up many times. The day has arrived when it should be adjusted once and forever. The retailer should not be asked to assume so many burdens in this era of the high cost of doing business and the tremendous advance in quotations for all lines of footwear. In paying freight and cartage at one end he is more than meeting the wholesaler half way, but he should not be expected to go the whole road in the matter of transportation charges."

MR. POYER JOINS THE COLORS

Elmer Poyer, manager of the Canadian-Arrowsmith Manufacturing Co., Limited, of Niagara Falls, Ont., recently paid a visit to his home in Newark, New Jersey. When he arrived there, he was handed an official notice to appear for military service examination in Newark the following morning, which he passed successfully. He has now received notice of certification and a summons to go to camp, where it will be necessary to pass another physical examination. Mr. Poyer is anxious to go to the front and do his share in the present struggle for freedom, liberty and right and will likely file an application for service in the Aviation Corps. The business of the Canadian-Arrowsmith Co. will be continued at Niagara Falls, Mr. Poyer still keeping in close touch with affairs. Miss Henderson, who has been with the firm a number of years, will have charge of the office and Mr. Perkins, an experienced man, will remain in control of the factory.

SALESMAN COULD TELL HIM NOTHING

"I was in an Eastern city a few months ago," declared a representative for a Montreal shoe house, "and, going along one of the principal streets, I noticed a sign to the effect that 'Mr. H—— will open a new, up-to-date shoe store here, on or about ——.' I went in, in the hope of opening a new account, and said:

"Is Mr. H—— in?"

"I am the gentleman," came the reply.

"I notice that you are starting a new store here, and have very nice premises."

"Yes," was the response, "Things should look pretty well when we get in shape."

"Continuing the conversation, I remarked upon the eligibility of the location and told the new proprietor that I represented the S—— Shoe Co., and was showing samples down at the hotel, and would like him to look over my line if he could possibly spare the time.

"You intend to handle high-grade shoes?" I remarked.

"Oh yes," was the answer, "that is the only kind which I will stock."

"Well," I remarked, "our samples are the very acme of style, craftsmanship and finish, and have an established reputation, and I would be very much pleased to have you come down. Perhaps I can show you something that will interest you."

"Oh no," came the response, "I have no intention of buying anything for spring."

"You hope to be in business then, do you not?" I inquired.

"Yes," he replied, "and a great many springs, for that matter."

"In that event," I asserted, "I would like to show you what I have."

"No, not at all," was the unequivocal rejoinder, "there have been at least half a dozen travelers in here, wanting me to go down and inspect their goods, and buy something for spring, but I have all the shoes that I intend to stock just now."

"You have not a great many on the shelves, I notice," I remarked, as I looked around, "and surely you intend to add to your stock."

"I am not going to buy more I told you," quoth the proprietor in a rather blustering manner.

"Don't you think that you are rather foolish, in declining to look at samples, especially when travelers can, perhaps, give you some pointers, and special values. Anyway, you are under no obligation to buy."

"Young man," he declared, "I notice that you said I was foolish, and I will not have any one apply that term to me."

"Excuse me," I replied, "I do not mean foolish in a physical or personal sense, but foolish in a shoe-purchasing interpretation. Perhaps the word "shortsighted" will convey my meaning better. One has to look ahead in these days of changing values and styles."

"I think I told you already that I did not want to buy anything for spring. You are the third man who has told me that I am foolish, and I will not allow any one to apply that term to me," was his ultimatum.

"Probably all the men who have called upon you have sought to tender you some good advice in the matter of buying, and that several should happen to use the same term, shows that there must be wisdom in the remark," I ventured.

"Wisdom or no wisdom, I do not care—no man is a-going to cast any reflections upon my purchasing ability or business sense. I certainly will not look over any samples."

"Very well," I answered, "I do not think I want to sell you anything. I have tried to give you some advice, as the result of my experience and insight in calling upon the trade. You apparently are not disposed to treat a man courteously, and I will not bother you any more, sir."

"Very well," was the curt reply, "no man can reflect upon my judgment, and I will neither look or buy."

"Just as I was leaving the premises, I took a parting shot at him: 'If this is the attitude you are going to adopt in the matter of purchasing and in your treatment of travelers, I may say, sir, I not only think you are foolish, but that you are crazy.' With this remark, I took my departure, leaving the new footwear proprietor in a state of righteous indignation.

"Going down the street, I called upon a friend of mine, told him the experience I had had with Mr. H—— and I thought he would laugh his head off.

"Oh," he said, "that arrogant, conceited fellow. His wife had four or five hundred dollars, and he had two or three hundred, and they have spent all this money in buying a stock. Now H—— declares that he will not spend another cent, and you know eight hundred dollars will scarcely buy a windowful of shoes at present prices, let alone, stock a store. You are not the first one who has told me of the indifferent, not to say offensive manner adopted by this man."

"A few months later, when visiting the same city, on my fall selling expedition, I looked around in vain for the store of Mr. H—— as he told me he expected to be in business for several seasons. I could not locate the place, and going again to my friend, I said:

"What has become of our mutual acquaintance up the street?"

"Oh," was the merry rejoinder, "he lasted about as long as we thought he would, and three weeks ago, we bought his stock. Perhaps he is now a wiser and a saner man, and will know how to treat travelers properly if he ever goes into business again."

THE PROGRESSIVE HEAD OF BIG LEATHER FIRM

(See Front Cover)

The head of the largest manufacturers of patent leather in the British Empire is only twenty-seven years of age, demonstrating that youth is no barrier to advancement and responsibility in this progressive age. Griffith B. Clarke, president of A. R. Clarke & Co., Limited, Toronto, comes of a family which have spent their lives in the leather game, and by his ability and aggressiveness, bids fair to carry out the best traditions of his father and grandfather in keeping the name, quality and service of the firm to the forefront in all its varied activities. It will be remembered that his father, the late A. R. Clarke, lost his life as a result of the torpedoing of the Lusitania by a German submarine in 1915. His son was soon called to manage the affairs of the organization, with which he had been associated since 1906, when he started as a clerk in the office and five years later was made vice-president of the company. That he enjoys a wide measure of esteem and confidence in the leather trade is evidenced by his election early this year as President of the Tanners' Section of the Toronto Board of Trade. Mr. Clarke is also a member of the executive committee of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association and of the Riverdale Business Men's Association. A young man who has always taken an interest in a number of pursuits outside of business and been an ardent supporter of athletics, his favorite recreations are golf and motoring. He is a director of the Ontario Motor League. Mr. Clarke has also evidenced a lively concern in military affairs and in patriotic work, being an executive member of the Toronto and York Patriotic Fund. The "A. R. C." brand of patent leather is known all over the British dominions and across the border, while the various other lines manufactured by the firm in the way of gloves, mitts, moccasins and clothing are marketed in every part of Canada. The company maintains branches in Montreal and Quebec and its representatives cover all portions of the Dominion.

The Shoe Repair Man

WILL DEVELOP THE FEDERATION PLAN

"When You and I Were Young Maggie," "The Sunshine of Your Smile," "Turn Back the Universe," "My Mother's Rosary," and other songs of a delightful nature and well rendered, marked the proceedings of the last semi-monthly meeting of the Toronto Shoe Repairers' Association. Among those taking part in the impromptu programme were Messrs. Butterworth, Smallwood, Mason and Wren. The musical features will be increasingly interesting during the fall and winter months. It is planned in the near future to hold a smoker and a whist drive, while other entertainments are being planned.

It is also the intention of the association to further the federation idea of the various associations in Ontario. Information will be sent regularly to sister bodies who will be given the fullest details of what decision the Toronto organization has reached or what action has been taken on certain questions which come up. In this way it is expected that the interest of the shoe repairing fraternity as a whole will be sustained and closer co operation and fellowship result.

The Association will send out to all the shoe repair men in Toronto a letter telling what has been done during the past fifteen months and pointing out the advantages of belonging. It is expected by this means that the membership, which is now one hundred and eight, will be increased very materially. The Toronto organization has an active, aggressive outline of work for the winter, and the semi-monthly meetings, which are attended by from forty to fifty members, will be made more instructive, varied and stimulating than ever in the new quarters, which are very comfortable and inviting.

HOW REPAIR TRADE IS BOOMING

Repair work which has for some years been given over by the average dealer to the small cobbler or the "fix-'em-while-you-wait" foreigner, is making its reappearance in a great many shoe stores. In view of the high cost of shoes and the wave of economy that has passed over the country, it is natural that thousands of pairs of shoes which under ordinary circumstances would be thrown away are now being made serviceable by the resoling and reheeling process.

"Persons who have never before worn repaired shoes," said a shoe retailer recently, "are bringing in their shoes for repairs. Heels, soles and invisible patches keep two of my men busy all the time. In fact, so great has the repair trade become that I have had to refuse to take any but the shoes sold in my own store.

"Leather is not stationary, and the grade is not what we have been getting. Economy is certainly being practiced. But a great deal of complaint against the poor leather is not that it is any worse than it has been for three years, but because so many men and women are purchasing shoes for comfort, and are walking more than ever before. Naturally so much walking means that the boots wear out quicker. The high-priced shoes have just as good leather to-day as in previous years, but the cheaper grades are proving expensive because they do not wear."

SHOE REPAIR NOTES FROM THE WEST

G. H. Aaron, 130A 8th avenue west, Calgary, has installed a Champion Stitcher. Attached to this is a finishing machine. He is going to revolutionize shoe repairing.

D. Gass, 4th street East, Calgary, has installed a new finishing machine. This is another step towards progress.

Sandy Higgins, is going to make things hum around Medicine Hat, as he has installed an up-to-date finisher and Landis stitcher. He is a son of Scotland, and a practical man.

Wm. Stock, of Olds, has installed a new finishing machine. He moved from Red Deer, Alta, a short time ago. It looks as if Olds is going to become a lively spot. "Good service and neat work," is Mr. Stock's motto.

W. J. Kirkpatrick, of Red Deer, has installed a finishing machine. He will certainly satisfy the people of Red Deer, being a capable man. With a new machine, he will cope with the work that comes his way.

Fred. Kennel has returned from England, and has again opened a shoe repair shop at 312A 8th avenue west, Calgary. He is some hustler, and with the new machinery which he has put in, he will sure make things hum.

Bill De Caux started up for himself in Calgary, on 5th street west, and with his cheery, affable way, he is sure to make hosts of friends.

George Manly, 233 8th avenue west, Calagry, has installed an up-to-date Goodyear machine and stitcher. He is sure branching out, and things are looking lively on 8th avenue.

The Boston Hat Works, of Calgary, has a good repair shop, and has installed a No. 12 Landis stitcher. Neolin soles is their speciality.

NEWSY BRIEFS FROM VANCOUVER

From a business point, trade in Vancouver is fairly quiet among the retail shoe dealers. The rush of summer sales is now over and every effort is being made to dispose of the remainder of white goods. Vancouver has had an exceptionally fine summer season, and it is still holding good, with barely a shower to mar the bright sunshine for some weeks.

With the dry summer, the school children's holidays and many families away camping by the sea, the repairers have had an off time, which has induced a few of them to take a much needed vacation. G. Morris, of the Goodyear Repairing Establishment was away East and to the States combining pleasure with business. G. Clapperton, of Robson street, and J. Scott, of Kitsalino, were also on a vacation. R. F. Ducommon, the genial manager of W. Woods, K Boot Store, has returned from a well earned holiday.

Several members of the repairing trade have been installing machinery with a view to increasing their shop capacity. J. D. McDonald, Robson street, has installed a Champion sole stiticher, and J. Hicks, Yew street; T. Foggerty, Main street, and J. Moore of 4th avenue, have each put in finishing machines. The latter gentleman is a returned soldier who took part in the retreat from Mons, and was in business in Winnipeg previous to enlisting. Another new comer is M. J. Morey, late of Portage La Prairie. He comes here well equipped to handle a large volume of business, as he has set up one of the most complete repairing outfits in Vancouver.

The advertisement of George Edwards, Medicine Hat, has created quite a discussion among members of the trade, and many are curious to have a few more particulars of what can be done in the way of welding soles by his method. Probably Mr. Edwards could get in touch with some prominent member of the trade and send a specimen of the work. There is a wide field in Vancouver for anything that would further assist in repairing fine shoes.

A Shoe Retailers' Association to be affiliated to the Parent Retailers' Association is in a fair way of successful formation. A preliminary meeting has been held, when there was a good attendance of the trade. The matter was fully discussed and another meeting will be called, when further data will be presented. Many wish the proposition every success, as they think that nothing but good will be the outcome of these get-together meetings.

W. G. Langdon, city representative for Messrs. Storey & Campbell, recently received word that his father has passed away at his residence in Southsea, Hants, England. Mr. Langdon, sen., was in his 78th year and had a life long connection with the leather trade, learning the business of a currier and leather dresser. He subsequently took over the business in 1874 of M. J. Burness, of Brantford, Midd., where he carried on the wholesale leather and findings to within a few years ago when he retired. The deceased was for many years a prominent member of the Masonic Order, and for 12 years a member of the Board of Guardian for the county town. W. G. Langdon, his eldest son, has three brothers all connected with the leather and shoe trade. They make the fourth generation to be connected with it.

NEW FIELD SHOE REPAIR OUTFIT

The brigade under command of Brigadier-General Sweetser was recently presented a mobile shoe factory in the shape of a large truck and trailer by the United Shoe Principals at Presentation: Brig. Gen LeRoy E. Sweetser, Louis A. Coolidge, Treasurer, and George W. Brown, Vice-President United Shoe Machinery Co., and Major Charles T. Cahill, of both Army and U.S.M. Co. affiliation.

Machinery Co. Presentation was made at the Framingham Camp in the presence of General Sweetser and staff, representatives of the United Shoe Machinery Co., prominent shoe manufacturers and newspaper men. The truck and trailer is the first equipment of its kind provided for the American soldiers' efficiency in service, says the "Boot and Shoe Recorder."

The presentation was made after an inspection of the apparatus in working condition. The occasion was the more eventful from the fact that after the presentation speech was made, an orderly ran up with the announcement that President Wilson had just appointed LeRoy E. Sweetser a Brigadier-General in the United States Army.

At three o'clock Vice-President Geo. W. Brown, of the United Shoe Machinery Co., tendered the equipment for war service, and said:

"Some time ago it was suggested to the officials of the United Shoe Machinery Co., that it would be desirable to make provision for the re-soling of the footwear of Massachusetts soldiers with the most up-to-date machinery. I took the matter up with Brigadier-General Sweetser and the idea of a field repair outfit for the use and benefit of the Massachusetts troops met with his instant and hearty approval. The idea of equipping a motor-driven car with shoe-repairing machinery was first suggested to us about two years ago. Since then the suggestion has come to us from many different sources. Major Cahill and some of our own men who were with the Massachusetts troops on the Texas border made a thorough study of the subject, and were convinced that the idea was practical.

"When the United States entered the war, our president, E. P. Brown, gave directions that the equipment that you see here be constructed that the Massachusetts troops might have the benefit of it. Any effort along this line is essentially experimental. It is much more of a problem to repair shoes by machinery than it is to manufacture new shoes of whatever grade by machinery. This equipment has a capacity of re-soling approximately four hundred pairs of shoes daily. It has storage place for all the materials necessary for protecting its supply department. It is equipped with all the duplicate parts necessary to prevent a delay in operating incidental to wear, tear and breakdown. This applies to repairing machinery, electrical equipment, motor-truck, and trailer."

The dimensions of the truck and trailer over-all are 43 feet long, by 8 feet wide and 8 feet high. It weighs, altogether, when equipped and manned, approximately four tons, and has a capacity of about 400 pairs per day.

The equipment consists of five machines—Goodyear Rapid Outsole Lockstitch Machine, New Loose Nailer, Edge Trimmer, the Buffing and Scouring and Finishing, and the Singer Patching Machine. There are, too, several Solidity Jacks for taking off the old soles and heels of shoes and fitting on new ones.

All the machines of this outfit are of the very latest type and pattern, the last word in shoe machinery. Its color is the familiar drab—a little lighter than the "Battle-ship Gray," and its sides are solid steel sheeting.

HE BELIEVES IN GOOD SERVICE

An enterprising member of the shoe repairing fraternity in the city of Hamilton is J. Thornton, proprietor of Thornton's Rapid Shoe Repair, located at 998 Barton street east. He has been in business in Hamilton for the past two years, and has a shop twelve by twenty-four feet, with a twelve-foot United Shoe Machinery finishing outfit. Mr. Thornton is a member of the Hamilton Shoe Repairers' Association and rigidly adheres to their scale of prices. He has worked up a very satisfactory trade, calls for and delivers goods, does first-class work and some unique advertising. Mr. Thornton lived in Huntingdon, Que., for twenty-five years, where he followed the shoe repair business and incidentally was a taxidermist. He is very fond of all kinds of birds and domestic pets, and has several beautifully mounted specimens. His reputation in this respect is more than local. Born in Yorkshire, England, Mr. Thornton has adopted progressive methods in the shoe repairing trade, and the picture of his shop shows several large rolls of sole leather, which he recently purchased from Beal Bros., Toronto, with whom he has dealt for the past quarter of a century. The gentleman standing in the doorway is Mr. Thornton, and the inset in the cut shows him as he appeared on a recent holiday. Well liked by his friends and customers, Mr. Thornton takes pride in the efficiency of his footwear repair establishment.

BIG FISHING CONTEST IS NOW ON IN FULL SWING

The Competitors Getting Ready for the Last Lap—The Greatest Angling Period of the Year is the Glorious Month of September—Two Correspondents Who Think They Have Been Slighted Have Mild Grievance Which They Will Probably Get Over

THIS is the month when everybody goes fishing, particularly the members of the shoe and leather trade who are getting in splendid shape for the final lap in the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL competition.

There is no more delightful, invigorating and exhilarating pastime than that of engaging in piscatorial pursuits. Reports come to hand from every quarter of the great fish that are being caught in both competitions and the judges expect to have some difficulty in deciding on the respective merits of the claimants for the silverware. The contest closes positively on October 1st.

The rules of the competition are very simple. The time having been extended until the end of September, as everyone goes fishing during the latter part of this month, there is no reason why you should not have an excellent opportunity of capturing one of the valuable premiums. Your chance is just as good as any of those whose names have been figuring prominently as anglers of outstanding merit and acknowledged pre-eminence. Now get to work in your favorite haunt and produce the piscatorial goods. The time for acting is here, not talking; although a couple of letters have been received during the past week from fellows who think they have grievances. Here they are:—

What He Has Really Done

Editor SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL:

I have always tried to cultivate two virtues—patience and modesty—and I pride myself in having been fairly successful, but I seem to have reached a limit in both of these just now.

First, my patience is exhausted, and second this has caused me to lay aside my modesty for once and speak of myself. I should not have done this had you been anywhere near fair and unbiased in conducting your fishing contest.

Why, sir, when I have been a subscriber to your Journal for nine years, and am paid up nearly two years in advance, should you slight me in the mention of fishermen of note. You have named everybody, seems to me, from Victoria to Halifax, any old body who ever wormed a hook or held a pole—but me.

And what have you got and who have you got? A bunch of third-class fishers that are not worthy of the name anglers. Why, look here; I've fished in every water of which this Dominion can boast from the two briny oceans to the rippling rivulets of the Arctic circle and the chain of great lakes and everything between. I have baited with everything from worms to horse hips. I've caught everything from the tiny minnow to the porpoise, shark and whale.

In my den the walls are a solid mass of taxidermic specimens of every conceivable thing that swims with limb or fin, either on the water or under the water. I am the only living Waltonite who has the one specimen of the family of mermaids who tempted Ulysses with their siren song.

In fact the only difference that has ever come between my wife and me is about that collection of dried, stuffed and preserved aqueous dwellers. She refused to dust them, so all my latter catches and specimens have been preserved in alcohol. The only way this can be accomplished is to take a generous supply when you go fishing.

Why, sir, my exploits in the fishing game would make dear old Isaac Walton, were he living, look like thirty cents.

Now, will you please tell me why my name and prowess have never been mentioned in your Journal? Is it because of my herculean accomplishments in this greatest of sports?

And I could use pages of your publication to recount my wonderful achievements were it not, as I said, for my extreme personal modesty. But believe me, I'm entered in the contest and I'm entered to win and I shall have one of those coveted cups irrespective of the fact that it may endanger the peaceful felicity of my domestic condition by adding another piece of "junk," as my wife calls my stuff, for her to dust.

If my name does not appear in the next issue of your paper, please cancel my subscription and return my $1.00 as an unsatisfied subscriber.

Yours, etc.,
J. A. STEVENSON.

Vigorous Kick from Montreal

Editor SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL:

I notice that a great many fellows are being mentioned in connection with your fishing contest. Why I should be overlooked is more than I can understand. I do not know what you have against me, but it appears that certain jealous-minded competitors are not disposed to give me a chance. Well, I will show them.

I am not much given to letter writing, but sometimes the feelings within seek an expression to other parties or through the medium of the press in order to serve as an outlet. I certainly think fishing is the greatest of all sports and have been handling a rod, minnows, flies and trawling lines for nine years. I have never exploited my catches, but intend to do so when the proper time comes. I have been making shoes for nineteen years now, being six years in the factory where I am at present and also working in Lynn, Haverhill and Rochester. I used to make some pretty spectacular catches in the days gone by and I do not think my right hand has lost its cunning. I want to tell you there are many slips between the cup and the lip, and some of these gentlemen who have been loudly proclaiming what they can do and filling the air with accounts of their prodigious performances will have to bite the dust. I am not so anxious for the trophy as I am for the honor, as some of the men around me who, knowing that I have a weakness for the pursuit of the finny tribe, have been jibing and chiding me for some weeks, wanting to know if I can do so much and have done so much, why I do not undertake it and show my skill in the present competition.

After thinking over the matter, I have decided to enter the fray and I went out last Saturday and got some bass that were real ones, and we lived a week on Bill Hanna's prescribed menu. Perhaps I have said enough, but you will hear from me later and in no uncertain manner.

Sincerely yours,
SUPERINTENDENT.

MANY NEW LINES WILL BE SEEN IN TENNIS SHOES

Price Lists for Present Selling Season Have Been Issued and Show an Increase of About 10 Per Cent.—Business During Past Summer Was the Best Yet, and Factories Were Unable to Fill All Orders Owing to Unparalleled Demand—Attractive Creations

THE selling season for outing shoes for 1918 begins on September 10th, and the new price lists, which have been issued, show an increase on the average of about 10 per cent., owing to the advances in duck, cotton, wages, etc.

New catalogues have been sent out by most of the firms and they reveal many new lines. The present prices are expected to remain in effect until December 15th, when most all the placing will have been done.

Demand is Ever Growing

The past summer was an exceptionally busy one for both factories and retailers in all lines of rubber soled canvas shoes. In several instances orders could not be filled, although the companies increased their output by many thousand pairs daily. Not many years ago outing shoes were used only for camping, picnics and holiday wear, but time has brought many changes and this style of footwear has become strictly correct for street, work and every day use, and finds an ever increasing measure of favor as the seasons roll by.

White still has the largest call, although tan, dark blue, gray and black sold very well. It is recognized that canvas footwear is an economical and efficient substitute for leather, coming at one-third and one-fourth the price. One reason for the abnormal requisitions was the high cost of leather shoes and the many new creations for every day and street wear had grace, snap, style, fit and beauty. Many were provided with heels, were cut high in the leg while the duck on the better grades was of the best quality and leather and fibre insoles prevented the drawing of the feet. Another advantage is that such shoes protect the pedal extremities against dampness and give extra comfort and elasticity.

Tennis Shoes for Every Purpose

One decided advance has been not only in the production of pumps, colonials, oxfords, sandals and high cuts, many of them adorned with leather foxing and tips in various shades, but the workman's bal has been strongly featured. These are of extra heavy duck, heavy sole and solid heel. Some firms are going to specialize on bathing shoes, which have enjoyed a large sale. One company is putting many new lines on the market which includes an aquatic shoe which is made entirely of natural plantation rubber of a light buff color with blue, red, and green trimming. Insoling is being changed from leather to fabrikoid by another firm which gives the reasons for the alteration first, that the cost of a good leather insole is almost prohibitive on the basis of the prices obtained for the goods, and, in the second place, that leather will not stand the new pressure cure process and this is primarily why they have made the change. It is pointed out that fabrikoid, while cheaper than a first class leather insoling used for tennis, costs fully as much as ordinary leather insoling used for tennis and comes through the pressure cure in perfect condition, which cannot always be said of leather, which is apt to shrivel up.

Advisability of Early Placing

Thus the range of tennis shoes goes on widening and as many retailers were disappointed in getting sufficient supplies during the past season, it is advisable that they give their placing orders as soon as possible to be assured of no delays. The plants are doing the best they can under very trying conditions, especially so far as labor is concerned, and while a number of concerns have doubled and trebled their output, the production has not kept pace with the requisitions. The spring and summer of 1918 will see greater business than ever in the sporting shoe range, owing to so many new patterns, combinations, trimmings and other features.

Some Very Fetching Creations

As the materials which are being placed on the market as substitutes for sole leather are increasing all the while so are the new lines of tennis footwear other than those already outlined. Not only do numerous shoes possess solid rubber heels but a number for the coming season will carry covered wood heels, both Louis and half-Louis and also the Cuban walking pedestal.

The new illustrated catalogues and price lists afford a better idea of the progress made than a mere recital of the changes, some of which can, however, be indicated. One firm is showing bathing shoes in blue and white, white and red, and white and gray with all smooth sole. They are pretty enough to lure anyone into the water. A blue pump with white sole is another striking achievement from an artistic standpoint and regatta shoes in different flaring hues, while they may not sell exceptionally well, are nevertheless beautiful to behold. The two-color effect is made up by eyelet facing and a facing around the circular vamp. They carry white soles. Some of the combinations seem are palm beach and white, white and tan, white and green, palm beach and green, navy blue and red, palm beach and gray, and blue and white.

New Things in High Cuts

Some firms are making a specialty in pumps with smooth rubber soles and covered wood heels with leather top lifts. One company has put many other new creations on the market in the shape of high cut bals and walking shoes, the tops being eight inches. They are all fabric creations with rubber soles and wood heels and come in white, battleship and pearl gray, palm beach, wine, nigger brown and black. All the wood heels carry leather top lifts. The walking heels are ten-eighths in height and the dressy effect and smart lines of the new high cuts are much admired.

In men's lines new bals and oxfords are seen in palm beach and white with leather tips and eyelet facing and smooth rubber soles. Another feature that might be mentioned is a football shoe of heavy canvas and elk skin reinforced, carrying a corrugated sole. A gymnasium shoe with ventilated leather upper is also interesting as well as a man's all one piece oxford adorned with chocolate trimmings. Bathing shoes are also proffered trimmed with red white and blue and possessing rubber soles or heavy friction duck.

Work Shoes Are Very Popular

Another company is featuring several new work shoes which have a gray finish. This color is obtained from pressure cured vulcanization of the best grade of pure para rubber.

The ever increasing demand for canvas outing and work shoes has resulted in nearly all the factories increasing their capacity for the coming year. Every concern has found the output of sales of sporting footwear far in excess of any previous season and anticipate even a larger volume in 1918.

NEWSY HAPPENINGS FROM QUEBEC

The shoe manufacturers are very quiet at present, but are looking forward to a good business in the near future. The retail trade report that things have been going very well with them and a very satisfactory summer turn-over has resulted. Wholesalers report that collections have been very good.

The annual exhibition will be held in Quebec during the week beginning September 3rd and large crowds are expected.

G. Plante, of Marier & Trudel, Limited, has been suffering recently from a bad cut which was made with an axe.

The many friends of Ed. Tremblay, shoe manufacturer, of Quebec, have learned with regret that his son was wounded at the front. He enlisted last year and has been several times in the trenches.

Ed. Gaumont, superintendent of the Plessisville Shoe & Leather Co., Plessisville, Que., reports that their plant is running in full. The firm has recently been awarded two more military shoe contracts and has added several new machines to increase their capacity.

Among the recent visitors to Quebec was M. A. Bowman, of John Laurie & Sons, Chicago; E. St. Amand, of the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., Montreal; R. E. Woodward, of F. E. Woodward & Sons, Lachine; H. Cobb, of John McEntyre, Limited, Montreal, and H. Hurtubise, of the Panther Rubber Co., Sherbrooke, Que.

CAPTAIN SCOTT TELLS OF STIRRING DEEDS

Capt. J. A. Scott, of Quebec, the widely-known leather merchant, has returned from the front on leave and needless to say all his old friends are glad to see him sound in wind and limb, and to hear his account of the great deeds of the Canadians in France and Flanders.

He did his humble share in the capture of Vimy Ridge and his account of operations and of life on the firing line is very entertaining and makes all red blooded people wish they had been there. Capt. Scott is sorry for the many Canadians who will see nothing of the great war and of the stupendous operations involved in transporting and maintaining such huge armies, but the system is so perfect that everything goes like clock work. The soldiers, he says, are well fed and clothed, discontent is unknown and even the wounded are eager to get back to the firing line. Capt.

Scott expects to return to the front and hopes to be in at the finish.

MR. PLUMMER GOES ON THE ROAD

W. H. Plummer, who has been manager of Wiesel's Cash Shoe Store, St. John, N.B., for the past year, has joined the selling force of the W. B. Hamilton Shoe Co., Toronto, and will cover Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island. He has been identified with the shoe game for nearly twenty years and has been a successful retail man and a progressive manager. Starting at the foot of the ladder by running errands and sweeping floors in Nixon's shoe store in St. John, N.B., he took a position with Waterbury & Rising in their King street store, St. John, in 1902, with whom he remained five years. Nine years ago Mr. Plummer went to Sussex, N.B., where he had full supervision of the shoe department of the Sussex Mercantile Co., with whom he remained until he went to St. John to manage Wiesel's store. Mr. Plummer has proved himself an expert buyer and student of style, and should make a capable and aggressive representative for the W. B. Hamilton Shoe Co. Many friends in the trade wish him every success in his new position.

KAUFMAN'S WON THE CHAMPIONSHIP

The baseball team representing the Kaufman Rubber Co.'s factory captured the championship of the Kitchener Baseball League recently in Kitchener by defeating the Dominion Rubber System's team by a score of 8 to 1 in the game to decide the winner of the second series of the season's schedule. Kaufman's being the winners of the first series thereby captured the championship, and City Baseball League season was brought to a successful conclusion. Despite the threatening weather there was a good-sized crowd of baseball fans at the athletic grounds to see the two rubber industry teams fight it out for supremacy. Both teams had about an equal number of supporters and the rooting was the most enthusiastic of the season. The contending teams presented their strongest line-ups, and both were confident of winning. The standing was:—

ADAMS' SHOE EMPLOYEES MAKE MERRY

The annual picnic of the employes of the Adams Shoe Co., Limited, Toronto, was held on Friday, August 17th, to Bond Lake and was favored by splendid weather, and a large attendance. The programme of events was an interesting one and every contest was fought out spiritedly. Much amusement was caused by the men's sack race, and also the ladies' competition in the same class, while the envelope race was another feature of the afternoon. The peanut race, open to all ladies, aroused much merriment and the needle and thread race came in for considerable attention. The picnic was well managed and was in the hands of a competent committee, consisting of L. Gietz, Harry Pycraft, Mrs. S. Smalley and Mrs. George Brant. The starters of the various races were Messrs. Clarke and Taylor, and the judges Messrs. Britton, Tyler and Harding, while L. Alexander was the announcer. There were many valuable prizes donated and nearly every one who entered the athletic events carried off a premium. Competitors were allowed two prizes only, and but one first prize. A competitor who captured a first award might try for a second or third prize. A generous dinner was provided and a tempting supper and in the evening a jolly dance was held in the pavilion, Mrs. Large ably presiding at the piano. Among the visitors were L. W. Hanson, manager of the United Shoe Machinery Co., Toronto; C. M. Iredale, sales manager of the Canada Last Co., Toronto; while H. B. Pollard, A. E. Boys, Mrs. Bott and others holding leading positions with the Adams Shoe Co., were present and entered heartily into making the annual picnic the splendid success that it was, and this year's outing was voted the best ever.

GUARD WELL THE NEW SOLE STOCK

There is some danger that too much of the wrong kind of competition may hurt the popularity of the fiber-sole for shoes, says the "Shoe Economist."

A thoughtless man might jump to the conclusion that this was a matter for only the fiber-sole manufacturers to worry about. As a matter of fact, it is of vital interest to the entire shoe trade—retailers, jobbers and manufacturers. For at the present time literally millions of pairs of shoes are being made with fiber soles. The mere thought of what might happen to the price of leather were fiber soles suddenly removed from the market will cause any shoe man to realize the importance of safeguarding the reputation of the fiber sole.

The danger to the composition sole arises from its very popularity. The soles put out by responsible manufacturers have given satisfactory service to a great army of shoe wearers, and now that the demand has been established there are plenty of other manufacturers anxious to cash in on some of the profits.

As is always the case when a new industry grows rapidly, keen competition leads to price cutting, and price cutting to quality reduction.

Unfortunately, it is easy to "take a price-cut out of the quality" of a fiber sole, and hard to detect the reduction in the quality. Experienced shoe men, who could readily detect the substitution of poorer leather in the shoes they buy, would find it extremely difficult to judge of the quality of the fiber sole, except by actual wear. In other words, the testing must be left to the customers, a dangerous proceeding.

The manufacturers who have been instrumental in the creating of the fiber sole recognize the danger that the industry is facing. Whatever means he adopts, the retailer has good reason to give serious consideration to the situation. Shoe prices are high enough now to give him plenty of food for thought, and if the fiber sole should be commercially "killed" the prices would, of necessity, go very much higher.

MISSES' AND CHILDREN'S PLANT FOR SALE

One of the largest and best known manufacturers of women's, misses' and children's shoes has decided to discontinue making misses' and children's shoes owing to the large increase in their women's business. They offer for sale the misses' and children's lasts and patterns, which are strictly up-to-date in every way. The factory has developed a large business on those shoes and has regular customers all over the country who unquestionably will continue to buy the line. Will lend every assistance to purchaser, permitting salesman to carry the line, etc. Shoes have a splendid reputation and their trade names have been extensively advertised for many years. Address for further particulars Box 160, care Shoe and Leather Journal, 1229 Queen Street West, Toronto.

NEW SHOE FACTORY IS COMPLETED

The new factory of the Globe Shoe, Limited, Terrebonne, Que., has been completed. It is a mill constructed building, 100 by 45 feet in dimensions and three storeys high. The first storey is of solid cement and the other two solid brick. The entire structure is absolutely free of auxiliaries as the elevator, stairs, etc., are in a special tower adjoining the main building. The factory is located in the best site in the town, is well lighted in every part and well ventilated, making it a very healthy place in which to work. The employes are delighted with the country-like surroundings. J. B. Hurteau, managing director, reports that the output of pillow welts and turns, for growing girls, misses and children, will be marketed through the jobbing trade. A large number of orders have already been received on the new samples which have been turned out.

ATTRACTIVE DISPLAYS AT TORONTO EXHIBITION

Leather, Findings, Rubber and Polish Manufacturers Made Interesting and Varied Exhibits—Several New Creations in Sporting Footwear—Fibre Soling Featured by Several Firms—Many Different Styles of Shoes Shown—Very Interesting Things

THE Canadian National Exhibition which is greater, grander and more representative than ever drew thousands of visitors to Toronto during the past few days to witness the development and extension of Canadian industry, art and science. The exhibits this year were more attractive, educative and imposing than ever and the showings made by leading leather and shoe firms, findings houses, shoe polish manufacturers, substitute sole makers and others were the centre of much interest and instruction. The booths were gaily decorated and the different lines were presented to their best advantage.

In the Manufacturers' Building

In the Manufacturers' Building there were the splendid exhibits of the Anglo-Canadian Leather Co., Toronto, the Breithaupt Leather Co., Kitchener, A. R. Clarke & Co., Toronto, and others.

The Anglo-Canadian Leather Co.'s exhibit has become an institution, with its bark pagoda and tan bark floor. The "Maple Leaf" brands of oak and hemlock leather in sides, bends and backs were displayed as well as large stocks of tap soles and top lifts. The apex of the booth was adorned with the English, Irish, Scotch and Welsh flags as well as small ones representing the different provinces, the coat of arms of each province being seen in the fold. The "Maple Leaf" trade mark on a large shield was seen in a prominent position and jars containing tanning materials and extracts revealed the processes of converting the raw hide into the finished product. In two large showcases there was presented the military footwear of every country in the world, the various specimens being kindly loaned by the United Shoe Machinery Co. of Canada. The Canadian army boot, rest shoe, slipper, trench boot and navy boot were all the centre of much interest. Samples were also shown of the outer sole, middle sole and inner sole for the various army boots as well as the counters supplied by the Anglo-Canadian Co. The splendid exhibit was in charge of S. L. Lawther.

The Breithaupt Leather Co., of Kitchener, had a striking presentation of their various lines made at the four different plants of the company. This was the first occasion that this enterprising organization has made a display at the Canadian National Exhibition. The walls were lined with all the products of the firm, "Penetang" and "Eagle" hemlock, "Kitchener" union oak, "Trent Valley" oak, "Lion" oak and "Royal" oak. Not the least interesting feature of the booth were the Jumbo blocks for shoe repair men in "Penetang" hemlock and "Kitchener" union oak. A most imposing array of shoes made by some sixty manufacturing firms who use the sole stock of this company arrested attention. A more varied and representative showing of footwear has never been seen at the exhibition. The display was in charge of L. O. Breithaupt, A. W. Puncher, who is quality man for the company, and John Cummings, who has for thirty-five years been a traveling salesman for the firm. An interesting exhibit was the Canadian and English army boots and many veterans were found comparing the two.

In the Manufacturers' Building there was an excellent display of the various lines of goods made by A. R. Clarke & Co., Limited, Toronto, where their well-known brand of patent leathers was featured along with gloves, mitts, shirts, moccasins and wet and cold proof clothing of all kinds. The exhibit, which included everything from head to toe for the lumberman, the miner, the prospector, the traveler and the woodsman, was much admired for its variety and splendid arrangement. The "A. R. C. brand" was conspicuous and the booth was the cynosure of thousands every afternoon and evening.

In the Process Building

The Canadian Consolidated Rubber Co., Toronto, made, in the Process Building, an instructive and interesting display, which had to be seen to be appreciated, for it embraced all the lines turned out by the company from showing Brazilian and Ceylon rubber sheets to the finished product. The new Rinex soling material of the company and Cat's Paw rubber heels were right to the forefront, while there was a most elaborate range of Fleet Foot tennis shoes, including the new lines of rubber soled pumps, bals and walking boots with eight-inch tops carrying rubber soles and wood Louis and half-Louis heels, with leather top lifts. White, gray, wine, black and nigger brown in reignskin, linen and canvas were seen. Rinex soles were in black, tan, oak and white. Men's bals and oxfords were presented in Palm Beach and white with leather tips and facings. Gymnasium shoes, football shoes and bathing footwear were much admired. Regular lines of women's rubbers in white, gray, black and tan and lumberman's snag proof in khaki, the all red line of snag proof, the all white line, etc., were there. W. G. Martin superintended the comprehensive exhibit.

The Goodyear Tire and Rubber Co. made a splendid showing of "Neolin" soles and "Wing Foot" rubber heels. Shoes made by different manufacturers who use the popular new soling material were shown and were much admired. "Neolin" was displayed in black, white and tan and instructive booklets were distributed telling exactly what it is and its superior qualities from various standpoints. The exhibit was in charge of Ross Robinson, Toronto.

The Canadian Shoe Findings Novelty Co., under the management of Lester Levy, had an enterprising display of Griffin's lines of polishes, pastes and creams in all popular colors. Griffin's odorless dye for coloring shoes, black or brown and guaranteed not to rub off or be effected by water, was featured. Genuine kidine, bronze polish that will not turn red, and suede dressings that do not lay the nap, were among the other offerings, while fans, flags, rulers and patriotic picture post cards were given away.

The Scholl Manufacturing Co., of Toronto, occupied a new and prominent stand featuring the well-known appliances and remedies of the firm, including, of course, the tri-spring, foot-eazer and anterior metatarsal arch supports as well as right and left hosiery which allows the toes their natural freedom and is knit to the normal shape of the foot. Booklets on the "Treatment and Care of the Feet" by Dr. W. M. Scholl were distributed, as well as samples of "Pedico" foot soap and celluloid charts of the bones of the foot. The interesting exhibit was in charge of R. L. Kimber, Canadian manager, and E. A. Fellers.

The Nugget Polish Co., Toronto, is a recognized institution of the Exhibition and did a thriving business with their black, white, toney red and dark brown polishes. Souvenir pencil boxes for the kiddies and a fibre paper school bag were given with each tin of polish. Shoes were shined free while several boots showed how "Nugget" preserves and beautifies the leather. The exhibit was in charge of L. R. Howard, acting manager of the company, and F. B. Bollard, who will have charge of the company's booth at the London Exhibition, while H. W. Parsons, who has returned from attending the Calgary and Edmonton fairs, has gone to Sherbrooke and Quebec to be present at the annual exhibitions in those cities.

Charles Tilley & Son, Toronto, showed their widely recognized "Regent" shoe paste in black, tan, ox blood mahogany and chocolate and also their canvas liquid, nubuck liquid, white kid klean, combination dressings, suede liquids, glace kid creams and suede powders as well as many other lines. Fans and other souvenirs were distributed setting forth the merits of the various preparations. The exhibit was in charge of H. Turner, chemist of the firm, and John Creech, who recently joined the traveling staff.

Blue and white, the colors of the Dunlop Tire and Rubber Co., Toronto, were artistically arranged around the booth of the firm. Miniature "Acme" soles were distributed and bore the slogan "outwear leather." Several shoes made by different manufacturers carrying "Acme" soles and "Peerless" heels were exhibited. The space of the company was admirably arranged and given over largely to a demonstration of their new fibre soling material. Samples were there with cuts made, both straight and curved, proving conclusively that the "sole of perfection" will not break, spread or crack. The panelled walls contained large samples of "Acme" and "Peerless" heels, the former coming in black, tan and white. The exhibit was supervised by J. R. Thompson, Toronto.

Gutta Percha and Rubber, Limited, occupied a large space and made a fine presentation of "Tenax," the new soling material turned out by the firm, which was shown in both sheets and moulded soles with the slogan, "they won't crack." A pair of shoes shod with this leather substitute which had been worn five months showed what stress and wear it will stand. The "Tenax" plug heel and the "Maltese Cross" rubber heel were displayed to advantage. On one side of the booth was a large picture of the company's plant in colors. A beautiful line of bathing shoes in colors, an all blue pump with a white sole, regatta shoes in contrasting shades and a representative range of rubber footwear, heavy and light, were the centre of much interest. H. A. Mahaffy was in charge of the booth.

Under the Grandstand

Beal Bros., of Toronto, occupied their usual quarters under the grandstand and, in addition to their superior lines of single and double harness was a representative collection of military and sporting boots, including trench boots. One of the boots shown was purchased by Capt. A. C. Trousdale, of the 102nd Canadian Battalion, in April, 1916. He was wounded at the Somme in the Regina trench raid in November of that year and the boot certainly showed how it can stand up against shot and shell, wear and tear. Another interesting exhibit was an aviation boot with tan calf vamp and chrome tan split leg. Strathconas, field boots, service and dress boots for officers and boys' tan calf boots were also shown. A Solidity repair jack complete with lasts was an object of interest to many shoemakers. The exhibit was in charge of W. A. Beal and A. Hyfield.

In Machinery Hall

In Machinery Hall the United Shoe Machinery Co., of Toronto, had an eighteen-foot Goodyear repair outfit, complete with stitcher, on display and operating with a two-horse-power electric motor attached. They also showed a thirteen-foot and a six-foot shoe repair outfit, while a full line of hand tools and general findings were exhibited in glass wall cases. Fred Naylor was supervisor of the exhibit which attracted many shoe repair men and shoe retailers. He was kept busy explaining the working of the machines and demonstrating the merits of this modern method of keeping the people's footwear in good shape.

BOTH SMART AND ATTRACTIVE

The new samples of the Woelfle Shoe Co., Kitchener, Ont., have been completed and are very smart and attractive. While a large proportion of the old and tried lines have been retained, the firm have introduced many new high and also colored lines in browns and grays. This applies to both high tops and slippers. A new range has been added this season. It is known as the Academy, and is a combination of a sport and walking last for growing girls' and women's trade. It is being shown in brown and black calf, patent, kid and colt. The firm will be represented this year in British Columbia by F. & F. Henderson, in the Prairie Provinces by L. Godbolt & Co., in Western Ontario by S. G. Amero and H. H. Shilby, in Eastern Ontario and Toronto by L. B. Hutchison and Jas. C. Bryant, in Ottawa Valley and Ottawa by E. E. Code, Quebec Province by A. Martin & Co., New Brunswick by O. J. Killam, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island by W. H. Semple.

"OPPORTUNITY TO BUY A GOOD SHOE BUSINESS"

A very well known shoe factory offers for sale, their misses' and children's business, because their women's lines have developed to such a point that they are obliged to drop the misses' and children's lines.

Any one in the market for a well established business should read the advertisement on page 52 of this issue of SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL, where full particulars are given.

A. G. Saunders, who for some time has been manager of the Johnston-Murray shoe store, St. Thomas, Ont., left this week for Edmonton, where he has been appointed manager and buyer of the shoe department of Jas. Ramsey, Limited. Mr. Saunders was for some years manager of Geo. H. Wilkinson's store in St. Thomas, and was afterwards on the traveling staff of John Lennox & Co., of Hamilton. He then enlisted with the Army Medical Corps, of Toronto, but was finally rejected as being medically unfit. His many friends will wish him every success in his new position in Edmonton.

While work on the new factory of the Reliance Shoe Co., at Acton, Ont., is going ahead and the building will be completed by spring, it is probable that the company will not remove from Toronto until such times as the war is over or the labor market perceptibly improves. The new premises will afford the company every facility for increased output, but this is not available at the present time as their present plant is now being operated short handed and it is impossible to get sufficient help to fill all orders. When labor conditions grow decidedly better the company will remove, but not until then.

Mr. F. X. Leblanc, of Aird & Son, Montreal, is a very enthusiastic gardener, and when he can spare a little time generally spends it in attending to his garden which is situated on a commodious piece of ground in Delormier Ward.

A handsome new catalogue of Greyhound Canvas Shoes has been issued by the Miner Rubber Co. It is splendidly illustrated, and cleverly designed. On the cover is shown a high cut Greyhound Canvas Shoe, which the firm intend to feature this year. Many of the illustrations of sporting shoes appear in colors—Blue, tan, drab, white, and other hues being featured. The style of the catalogue is unique in that the cuts of the tennis shoes are surrounded by a French gray background on which the text appears. At the top of each page is the symbol of the Greyhound Brand—and at the bottom is the company's trade mark. Full stocks are now carried in twelve cities and towns throughout Canada where branches of the Miner Rubber Co. are located.

Boot and shoe prices are expected to remain for some little time at the high level now prevailing and, while no further advances are anticipated, there is very little likelihood of any decline taking place. Sorting orders during the past couple of months have continued in good volume and collections are also reported to be satisfactory.

Edward O'Dell, general organizer of the International Boot and Shoe Workers of America, was in Toronto recently attending a conference of provincial boot and shoe representatives, at which a provincial council taking in nine boot and shoe centres was formed. The next conference will be held in Galt in March, 1918. The election of officers resulted as follows: Walter Brown, Toronto, president; E. O'Dell, Hamilton, vice-president; Edgar Drake, Preston, secretary-treasurer.

extent with the Commercial Economy Board of the Council of National Defence for the conservation of both men and material, to the end of promoting the efficiency of our Government in its military pursuits as well as its civic responsibilities.

Standard Cartons

Among the suggestions for the elimination of waste advanced by the Commercial Economy Board, and discussed by the meeting of the Executive Committee, was the introduction of "packing standards," and a special committee was appointed to ascertain for the Commercial Economy Board of the Council of National Defence the extra expense incurred by each member in the furnishing of cartons, other than the standard white carton adopted by the Conference Committees of the National Associations of Shoe Manufacturers, Wholesalers and Retailers.

The measurements of standard cartons are as follows:

	Length	Width	Depth
Men's.....	12¾	6½	4⅞
Boys'.....	11¼	6	3¾
Youths'.....	10½	5¼	3½
Women's.....	11½	5¼	3½
Misses'.....	10½	4¾	3⅞
Children's.....	8¾	4½	2⅞

Any carton varying from these measurements, or using colored paper other than regular standard color constitutes a special carton.

The information would include: Total extra cost of special cartons, total extra cost of special containers for cartons, total extra cost of extra space, heat and light used for carrying extra cartons.

It is the expressed wish of the Executive Committee that the information asked by this bulletin be promptly given.

Mr. Bale was born and brought up in Oshawa and has been associated with his father in the shoe business for the past ten years. He is a bright, aggressive young man and should make good on the road. His father has been in the footwear line in Oshawa for over a quarter of a century and has built up a large and prosperous trade.

22-FOOT GOODYEAR SHOE REPAIRING OUTFIT

MODEL N

THIS Outfit represents the highest development in shoe repairing machinery, and meets every demand of modern shoe repairing. It embraces all the essential processes for making new shoes from old ones, giving the maximum of equipment and efficiency in the minimum space. The Outfit has the Goodyear Stitching Machine with all its improvements, including a new style steam generator which uses gas or gasolene for generating the steam, and operates automatically, thereby insuring a uniform heat for keeping the wax in proper condition and requiring little attention from the operator. The Edge Trimming Machine has the new feature of the two shafts, being operated by a single belt, and the cutter grinder is attached directly to the main shaft. This arrangement gives better results with less power.

The Buffing and Scouring Machine has a shaft 57 inches long and carries the following equipment:

- | | |
|--|----------------------------------|
| 2 Split Bottom Buffing Rolls | 2 Flat X-Ray Hee Scouring Wheels |
| 2 "C" Shape X-Ray Heel Scouring Wheels | 1 Heel Breast Scouring Wheel |
| 1 Pin Wheel Pad Complete | |

A powerful Blower System removes the dust resulting from the trimming, buffing and scouring operations, and is designed to overcome certain objectionable features of other blowers.

The Finishing Machine has a 78-inch shaft which has all the necessary equipment for black or russet work:

- | | |
|--|--|
| 2 Corrugated Rubber Shank Finishing Wheels | 1 Corrugated Rubber Heel Finishing Wheel |
| 1 Corrugated Rubber Bottom Finishing Roll | 2 Shank and Bottom Brushes |
| 2 Heel Brushes | 1 Stitch Cleaning Brush |
| 1 Levelling Roll | 1 Bead and Wheel |

At the end of the Outfit is the Oscillating Edge Setting Machine which is fitted with union irons and its motions duplicates hand workmen with quicker and better results.

Each of the machines is operated independently by a friction drive pulley, so that it is necessary to use only those machines which the operator may require. This feature means a saving of power.

All the machines are firmly mounted on legs and driven by a countershaft with carefully adjusted bearings, so that the Outfit runs with very little vibration, and is in every way most efficient.

One of the Beardmore Tanneries at Acton

The natural imperviousness of an animal hide wonderfully adapts it to withstand the excessive strain of ever changing climatic conditions. Impervious to exposure to heat—to cold—to moisture, it is nature's own best protecting substance.

In this natural product the science of Tanning still further preserves and toughens the hide, giving it strength and flexibility, more resistance and durability, so that in all the centuries past right down to the present moment there has absolutely NEVER BEEN DISCOVERED A SUBSTITUTE FOR LEATHER that can begin to equal it for wear.

The Shoe with the "Anchored-Arch" Bridge Construction

THE
"Arch Preserver" Shoe
FOR MEN

U.S. Pats. on Lasts, Shank, Bottom Design, Shoe. Canadian Rights Pending

This is NOT an "arch-prop" shoe. Right now, when this wonderful new type of shoe is making its initial bow to the Canadian shoe trade, please let us get this ONE point thoroughly fixed in your mind:—

The "ARCH PRESERVER" Shoe is the shoe wearer's INSURANCE AGAINST THE DEVELOPMENT of foot weaknesses and other foot troubles.

Investigations and experiments conducted by the inventor, covering a period of many years in the leading shoe stores of the world, proved beyond any question that practically every foot weakness and other acquired foot deformity was the direct result of these things:—

Certain glaring inconsistencies in the modeling of lasts, the LACK OF PROPER STRENGTH IN THE SHANKS OF SHOES, the short-fitting from HEEL-TO-BALL which is necessary in the case of practically every regular type of shoe; all of above aggravated and supplemented and perpetuated by the fact that there is not in existence any system for FITTING regular types of shoes which is based upon the system

Just Wright

employed in modeling and making the shoes.

How many men or women in any part or branch of the shoe industry can honestly say that they have ever had a shoe which they felt was a proper fit for their feet?

Or how many have any well-grounded idea as to the actual LENGTH of shoe they should have, to fit their feet FROM HEEL-TO-BALL? Which latter is the way that all shoes are made to fit and intended to be fitted.

The principles involved in the modeling of the "ARCH PRESERVER" Lasts and in the method of BUILDING the "ARCH PRESERVER" Shoe, together with the "ARCH PRESERVER" system for determining the proper heel-to-ball fitting enable the shoe dealer to offer his trade a service so far superior to anything heretofore known that competition is practically eliminated.

The "ARCH PRESERVER" Shoe, in several models, will be included in our line going out this season and you will find our salesmen bubbling over with enthusiasm regarding the goodness of its principles and features, and prepared to point out to you the road to additional profits through added customers and the elimination from your stock of several types of "special shoes for special feet" after you get your stock of

And this is NOT an "arch-prop" shoe. This statement is repeated here for the simple and express purpose of helping to head off, at the beginning of our Canadian campaign, any possibility of a misunderstanding regarding the real MISSION of the "ARCH PRESERVER" Shoe.

The greatest satisfaction and profit, to both the shoe dealer and the makers of these famous shoes, as well as the maximum benefit to the public generally, can come only by having the real MISSION of the shoe properly and thoroughly understood.

The REASON for the existence of the "ARCH PRESERVER" Shoe can be found in the extra large size newspaper and magazine advertisements exploiting corn and bunion cures, deformity correctors, foot support devices, rubber heels, and in the fact that many shoe men are becoming chiropodists BECAUSE THERE IS MORE MONEY IN IT.

All of which does not argue well for some part, or parts, of the shoe business.

The MISSION of the "ARCH PRESERVER" Shoe is to PREVENT—or at least reduce to a minimum—the development of foot ailments, some of which afflict almost every human being.

Exactly the same principle of modeling and construction which are involved in the Men's "ARCH PRESERVER" Shoes are carried into the Women's "ARCH PRESERVER". Size for size, the Women's shoes carry the same width of STEEL BRIDGE CONSTRUCTION in the shank as the Men's. This idea is based upon the fact that a woman's anatomical and physical structure demands at least as substantial a shoe shank, to PREVENT the breaking down of her foot arch, as does a man. Nature treated both man and woman alike in the matter of formation and construction of their feet and in the character of the paths upon which to walk. But when the modern shoe, with heels, came in, shoemakers treated woman as though she were fifty times as strong as a man. The result is that women have more than fifty times as many foot and allied troubles as men have. All of the refinements and niceties of last modeling, pattern designing and shoemaking are carried into Women's "ARCH PRESERVERS," but in the strength of shank and the qualities which make "ARCH PRESERVERS" FIT AS NO OTHER SHOES EVER FITTED, they are equal to the Man's shoes.

THE SHOE AND LEATHER SITUATION

REPORTS from all over the country indicate a revival of business activity since the first of the month. With the assurance of bountiful crops through all parts of the country there comes the realization that there will be an abundance of money in circulation, and as soon as the produce begins to move the effects will be felt. In the meantime confidence in the situation has been largely restored and, although some disquiet has been occasioned by reports that the buying of munitions and other supplies by Great Britain in Canada will be shortened, there has been a general tendency in business to go ahead. With the shoe trade there has been a perceptible increase in activity with the conclusion of harvesting and the return of people to the city from their summer outings. Enquiries amongst dealers as to conditions reveal the fact that business has been better than usual for September and promises continued steady development. The renewed interest does not apply to the usual acceleration in children's goods that usually follows the re-opening of the schools, but dealers say there is an increased enquiry for regular lines and particularly for men's shoes, which have been somewhat neglected.

The report of the Journal's special representative in the West indicates an extremely hopeful and promising situation out there where the results of harvesting operations are now well assured. There is not only a general enquiry for staple goods but a disposition to purchase a better quality, manifesting the confidence that business is on a more staple and permanent basis than for a considerable period. Shoe manufacturers report sales of spring goods most encouraging, considering conditions that have prevailed for the past four or five months. They claim that while dealers seem to be fairly well stocked up with seasonable goods they do not seem adverse to anticipating their future needs. Attention is focussed upon the immediate situation and everybody is anxious as to how fall and winter goods are going to move. Undoubtedly the newspaper talk about "twenty dollar shoes" had the effect of inducing individual consumers as well as retailers earlier in the year to stock up and it may take some time for conditions to really settle, but as soon as fall trade takes on its regular swing much of the uncertainty will disappear. In the meantime manufacturers are to be congratulated upon trimming their lines for the new season and bringing them within reasonable limits. The talk about standardizing styles has at least had the effect of simplifying them to some extent with the new season's samples. Jobbers, while they have ordered freely of samples, have not seemed inclined to discount the future as to regular goods. They appear to be in the same position as the retailer, pretty thoroughly stocked with goods for the current season and are waiting to see which way the "cat" is going to jump. In fact, prices went up so insistently last winter and spring that they reached a point where everybody was afraid to take further risk. This, with the lull in buying, is making it hard for those who have stocks of goods purchased at prices made when factories had two or three months' work ahead.

The leather market continues fairly firm in spite of the weak situation in hides and that shoe manufacturers are not anxious to invest in leather at present. Tanners claim that stocks are small and that there is no object in making concessions, especially as the slightest increase in shoe activity will bring a demand upon existing supplies that will soon exhaust them. They claim that the temporary quiet and apparent weakness has been occasioned by the embargo on leather export to Britain and other European countries and that as soon as this is lifted there will be a general shortage.

The situation is largely dependent upon the sagacity and enterprise of the retail handler of footwear. The people have the money to spend, for both agriculturist and artisan have reaped bountifully as to crops and wages. While the people are being urged to save and economize it will naturally take a little extra persuasion to convince them that there are ways of cutting down expenditure and saving money for war loans without neglecting their feet.

DISTINCTIVE MODELS FOR SPRING

Few Changes are Presented in Men's Styles—Colored Calf Leathers will have Big Run—Fuller Fitting Lasts Featured—Women's Foot Toggery Will be Smart and Artistic—Military Effects Seen in Walking Boots—Long Vamps and Slender Foreparts Prevail on High Cut Bals—Some New Colors and Considerable Diversity of Materials—Cloth Tops, Buck Tops and Contrasting Shades on Several Offerings

ONCE more the whirlig of time brings around the period for the showing of spring and summer models in footwear. With each recurring season there are naturally some changes in lasts, patterns, colors and leathers, but alterations are, on the whole, probably less for next spring than they have been since the outbreak of the war.

In footwear offerings for 1918 the tones are possibly a little more subdued and there is a tendency toward smartness and dressiness rather than any bizarre effects or weird combinations.

Women's foot toggery will be snappy and distinctive and naturally assumes more of the military characteristic now that the United States has become engaged in the European conflict. There is no gainsaying the fact that American fashions are followed to a very large extent by Canadians, although possibly not to the same extreme degree as in former years. Much has been said regarding the restriction of the many manifestations of color, cut, patterns and materials in women's pedal gear, but as long as the female mind loves things that are bright and beautiful, original and individual, there is not much fear of any efforts to curb fashion tendencies meeting with any large measure of success.

Popularity of Walking Boot

The walking boot is having a larger place than ever in the various samples presented and is increasing in popularity, now that it carries the 13-8 heel and has a slender and more pleasing forepart. A decided improvement has been made in walking shoes and they possess much more grace, style and character than a year ago. All appearance of weight and heaviness is eliminated.

Another noticeable characteristic is the plainness of pumps, which are for the most part unadorned; a few carry collars or have a French cord around the top, while some have leather ornaments.

The Oxford bids fair to come into its old-time popularity. The samples which are shown by a number of makers are clean, trim, and slender and would add dignity and distinction to any foot. In no branch of women's shoes has there been so much progress and achievement as in the splendid creations in Oxfords, with their neat, light effects and shapely foreparts.

In regard to height, there is a tendency if anything to the nine inch boot, rather than to eight inch, while a few of the models carry a ten inch leg.

Sensible Offerings for Men

In men's shoes the wider custom model now holds sway. It is of medium character and possesses slightly fuller fitting qualities than some of the extreme narrow toes which an attempt was made to popularize last season. There is no tendency to any far fetched offerings on the part of Canadian shoe manufacturers, for the simple reason that the young men who bought gaudy, ostentatious footwear, are mostly at the front and those now at home may soon be transported overseas and the government will provide them with the necessary pedal equipment. The demand, therefore, for showy, conspicuous shoes is decidedly limited, and novelty boots are made merely to brighten up the line. Patterns are of a conservative character and there is no great variety of lasts.

One manufacturer remarked this week that the merchants were clinging pretty well to former styles. He thought this was a good move as it enabled them to clean up their present stocks, whereas new styles and new lasts might leave an accumulation for bargain sales. So far as an investigation of the new models goes, there has been nothing added that is freakish or extreme and the only variations are that some shoes have more ball room and more spring than formerly.

Dark leathers, such as mahogany and tobacco brown, African brown, seal brown, toney red, cherry, royal purple, etc., are being plentifully displayed and it looks as if there will again be a big run on them.

Of course, there is some difference of opinion on this question, but an impression prevails that brown shades will find an increasing degree of favor. Dark tones have prevailed for some time now and the latest offering is khaki calf, but the number of calls for this new shade has been rather limited so far. One manufacturer points out that different localities will call for different shades. Some will want very dark, other lights and still others medium shades. The usual lines of dull black calf, kid, and kangaroo, are expected to sell equally as well as last year, but from 40 to 60 per cent. of the sales for the coming season will likely to be on colored stock. A large proportion of these will carry composition, fibre or synthetic rubber soles—call them what you will—which are manufactured in many colors and are now giving good satisfaction. Having passed the experimental stage they are being accepted in the shoe making world by all well dressed men.

In regard to heels there is not much change, the 8/8 and 10/8 heel being still in favor. It may be added here that a few men's shoes carry suede and colored calf tops in gray, brown, beige, cinnamon, seal, castor, etc., but there is no evidence of any large sale for them. Most of them appear to be inserted as display shoes, and to impart spice and variety to the displays.

Neat, Smooth and Artistic

In the highest grade, men's shoes are wanted as plain as possible, mostly with blind eyelets. It is a noticeable fact that the higher grade the line the fewer the changes, and in men's footwear this season it is the medium priced range which show the most alterations.

The bal is still the leading shoe for men, although in the medium priced lines there are several blucher patterns shown and on the wider toed lasts, of course, bluchers predominate. Not many patent boots are presented and these only for dress occasions, civil or military.

One leading authority states that the full fox bal with the straight tip is a style that will continue as the leader in men's shoes. The plain stitched tip is right at the forefront, although imitation wing tips are seen. There is the military boot with the plain toe, no box and plain quarters. The call for this is likely to be limited as it is nothing new on this side of the line after three years of war, but across the border it is somewhat of a novelty as martial matters are engaging their attention to the same extent that we in Canada were taken up with them three years ago.

In Oxfords the circular vamp leads, and as it is expected that the orders for these will be limited during the coming year, makers of men's shoes are not showing any novelty products. In fact, the number of samples they have made up in low cuts is limited. The reason is easily explained. Last season was a particularly unprofitable one for low cuts, the cold, damp weather continuing until the middle of July, and then every retailer had to clear out his stock of Oxfords at practically cost. Very few made any money on low cuts, and will go gingerly in the matter of buying them for the coming season. It is youths who mainly buy Oxfords and with one hundred thousand more Canadians overseas, along with the short, uncertain summer season, the demand is problematical.

There is, of course, a strong tendency for buying sport footwear and during the past season white Oxfords in buck, nubuck and canvas were largely worn, even by men of middle and mature years. Tan and other colored trimmings made the offerings decidedly pleasing, while wing tips, saddle straps and perforated foxing were sported by even the most sedate lords of creation, for a little levity and distraction is permitted even among the most reserved and unpretentious in the good old summer time, on the lawn bowling green, the golf links, the cricket crease or the seaside resort. These models all carry fibre or composition soles.

Some Observations on Prices

"We notice that black and colored sides are finding more favor than ever. There, of course, is but one reason, that the price they are sold at makes these shoes at the same figures as the calf boots before they advanced. We do not know if they will last very long, but at present they are going very strong," says one widely known Canadian manufacturer.

Another maker of men's shoes declares: "Prices will be about the same as last season; the leather market is very firm and as soon as we commence cutting on next season's goods prices will still be advancing. Heavy sole leather is very scarce on account of so many army shoes being made in the United States, and should the embargo be lifted on leather going to Europe, quotations will go much higher so that the chances are prices will be higher in place of lower. A number of the merchants are of the belief that prices will be easier, but they will not be lower for some time to come. Even if the war should terminate this fall or next spring prices will not drop. The scarcity of hides, both in Europe and America, makes the leather market stiff. If the Food Controller in place of not allowing beef and bacon to be eaten on Tuesdays and Fridays, had made it veal and lamb there would not be such a scarcity of calf and sheep skins. Hon. Mr. Hanna should get these points and stop the killing of calves and sheep, and there would then be a greater supply of hides."

The New Modes in Women's

Simplicity and neatness of design and delicacy and refinement of style characterize all women's shoes for the coming season. There is a rather wide range of new colors being presented in beige, tan Russia, field mouse, gray, beaver, taupe, sea gull, biscuit, khaki, golden brown and other soft tones.

New pointed toe last, close edge, with special waterproof features in toney red calf. By Tebbutt Shoe & Leather Co.

The bal is still at the forefront, in eight, nine and ten inches, in wave, slant, curve or hussar cut, but most are straight or slightly on the bias. Judging from the number of samples offered, there is no great rush for fabrics; in fact, cloth tops have not taken to any great extent, and whether there will be a reversion to them later, it is not possible to say. Where the foxing is new and original, they are being bought in limited numbers; light weight, close woven cloths in dark browns and grays, black and whites, light gray and patent, gray and brown, ivory and brown and a few other combinations are revealed, but while contrasting colors would still seem to be popular, two tone effects are by no means strong. An attempt has been made to re-introduce button boots and while there is some disposition in the direction of buttons and bluchers; the latter owing to the wave of military and patriotic fervor, still it will be a considerable time before the bal is displaced. The retail trade seem backward about taking up button boots and cloth tops.

The leading firms have made up outside of the standard blacks, about half of their samples in colored calf, and the remainder in colored kid of more subdued tones. Black and tan calf and black glazed kid are prime favorites. Patent leather will come more strongly in appreciation, and for the past season has been holding its own. Walking boots in tan leathers are likely to be popular; in fact, the requisitions for shoes made on the army pattern have been rather extensive. The Munson last has been made up in walking shoes for women and some modified military foreparts of blucher cut seem to be meeting with kind regard. Oxfords are very numerous this year and are expected to have a strong run and the consensus of opinion from various sources is that browns, both in high and low cuts, are going to move freely. The mahogany, tobacco brown, seal brown, toney red, cherry and nut brown are likely to enjoy a good sale. In colored kids, various shades of brown and gray are seen while gray and black is a favorite combination as well as taupe and beige, in fact, there is a wide diversity of subdued tones. The new lasts have a long slender forepart from $3\frac{1}{4}$ to $3\frac{6}{8}$ inches—a few of four inches—while the toes are narrow and edges close.

The full breasted Louis wood heel, the half Louis, the military, Cuban and spike heels are seen with about an equal showing in each kind, but 13-8 Cubans are decidedly active.

The imitation wing tip is still favored, and the straight tip is also seen on a number of models, but for the most part foreparts are unadorned. Overlays, inlays and other ornaments are observed on some low cuts, particularly Oxfords. Perforations for the most part are of the small artistic variety.

The Return of the Oxford

Everything points to the return of the Oxford and among the new presentations is the pump tie which is a half way house between the Oxford and the pump. Full foxed Oxfords are also seen as well as those with the inserted lace piece.

The showing in white footwear is more liberal than ever. In the past season the white wave was at its highest and there is no indication but that pure white and white and black effects will be equally as much in vogue in 1918. Some shoes are of the mannish type with a round toe and medium heel.

The Cuban and Louis heel are seen on the more dressy creations. Novelty pumps are noticed having a forepart of patent leather or colored kid and the back in suede of gray, beige, beaver, etc.

There are various predictions regarding the future, but one man's guess is as good as another's, and in the meantime nothing very sensational in the way of advances in prices is spoken of, except certain colored kid creations. Last year cost conditions were very alarming, but so far this aggravation has not been added to the worries and perplexities of the average retail shoe merchant.

Will be Pump Season

Among the new creations in pumps is a new whole fox pump with a little fuller toe and carrying a 12/8 Cuban heel. This bids to be very popular. One firm expresses the belief that the summer of 1918 will be a pump season and they are pushing a very large line of pumps and Oxfords and going strong on black kid and patent leathers. The new colors in kid which have been added consist of khaki and field mouse and they believe that the latter will be the best proposition in color. This firm also state that Cuban heels will be a strong feature for the coming season and the heights will be about 12/8 and 13/8. Black leather are being talked up very strongly, especially black kids, but this does not mean that the colors are dead and there will be plenty of colored shoes during the coming season.

Another firm, strong on novelty stuff, is arraying every conceivable color in leather, every possible pattern, on ten inch tops in leather and cloth, straight and wave cut, white welts, ribbon stitching, patent kid, vamps as long as 4 inches, and heels from 2 inches to 1 inch.

Superior Creations for Men

The new spring models of the Hartt Boot & Shoe Co., of Fredericton, N.B., are characterized by dignity and grace, while craftsmanship has never attained such perfection as is evidenced in the styles for 1918. Four new lasts which fit in well with this exceptionally high class range have been added for the coming season. They are the Balfour, which is a straight last; the Blackstone, which is somewhat wider fitting with round toe; the Torpedo with a long drawn out pointed effect and the Windsor, a new medium recede toe. A particularly neat shoe is a rasin kangaroo bal on the Balfour last. This shoe is very much admired and is a new achievement in the art of St. Crispin. Other offerings are seen in the lighter colors in tan, as well as in mahogany, royal purple, Havana brown and other shades. A number of shoes have colored kid and buck tops, white, gray and brown being shown. Oxfords in calf, kid and kangaroo are noticed with square throat and plain stitched tips. Several models carry fibre soles and rubber heels and the range of Gold Medal shoes has been very largely extended this season. Among the noticable creations are sport Oxfords with buck saddle strap, eyelet facing and foxing, An 18 inch trench boot laced up the front and made of heavy storm calf is interesting, as well as sporting boots in tan winter calf, and pearl gray winter calf with bellows tongue, and full, double, viscolized soles. The firm say that colored leathers sold well last season, and they believe that they will go well again this season. The range of Gold Medal and Hartt models for spring was never so complete as this season, and the firm are confidently looking forward to big business.

Varied Colors are Desired

The Tetrault Shoe Manufacturing Co., Montreal, have added to their lasts a perfected receding toe which completes their showing of such shoes. They are of the opinion that colors will be more varied than usual, for already in orders received from various parts of Canada, different shades have been requisitioned, The new khaki shade which will be sold in some of the cities will not take elsewhere, while the very dark shades are still in demand in some parts of the Dominion. Others want a medium between the dark and light shades, while some desire the toney red which is still very popular and may continue so. Men's shoes are wanted as plain as can be for the high grades with blind eyelets and no hooks and some territories still require white soles, ooze tops or two shade effects. The firm report that fibre soles are selling more than they ever did before and their popularity is increasing tremendously. Some new fibre soles are finished exactly the same in appearance as leather. These are starting to be used in Canada and may have a tendency to replace some of the present fibre soles. The company look for a very strong season in all kinds of substitute soles, especially with colored leathers. The Tetrault range this year contains a few novelties, and one striking creation is a saddle pattern which is now being sold in the United States. The saddle give the effect of a combination straight and wing tip.

Nine inch plum kid whole quarter bal, circular vamp, with covered Louis wood heel

Present Types are Popular

The Brandon Shoe Co., of Brantford, have completed their samples of spring models and they are being very favorably received by the trade. The styles are running along much the same lines as last year, with colored leathers taking the lead. There appears to be a good demand for royal purple along with tobacco brown and dark mahogany. Light colors the firm do not think will be in very great demand for the coming season. They moved rather slowly last season. Gun metal is selling heavy and the company expect patent leathers to be in a wider measure of favor, during the coming spring and summer. Three new lasts have been added with the medium toe. The patterns are along the same lines as last year showing an imitation wing tip, which took very well and makes a decidedly neat shoe. There is quite a mixture of various hues in suede tops, kangaroos and nubuck in colors, but cloth tops are not selling well, and are not being pushed. Fibre soles are going strong especially in the colors, and from present indications it looks as though they will move rapidly. The whole range is marked by neatness, smoothness and pleasing offerings of a quiet, conservative character, and the firm report that it looks like a very bright season for spring trade.

Thinks Tan Russia is Returning

The new spring samples of the Minister, Myles Shoe Co. reveal many offerings that are unique and distinctive. In the men's models are seen several new creations in khaki calf, royal purple and seal brown. Four new lasts have been added in men's and they are of the recede toe type. The straight tip is noticed on a number of models and eyelets running all the way to the top of the shoe are featured. There are some attractive offerings also in toney red, mahogany and Havanna brown. A few models carry buck tops in contrasting colors.

In women's shoes, three new lasts of the long slender forepart have been added and some very striking creations are shown. One is in Alice blue kid, scalloped vamp, square throat bal, full Louis heel and white kid top, nine inches high, with deep red satin top facing. Another is a biscuit buck, scalloped vamp, Louis heel with stonette silk top of same color and lavender top facing. Another pretty model is a Havanna brown bal, square throat, biscuit buck top and Roman silk top facing, while another is an eleven inch bal with dark tan vamp, khaki cloth top and leather Louis heel.

Business Men and Their Success

Personality and Methods of Some of Canada's Successful Merchants—Side-Lights on the Character and Ideals of Those Who Have Made Business History in Canada

WHILE the name may still be more or less of a "red rag" to the average retailer, the time has passed when the up-to-date merchant can afford to ignore or scoff at the "big" store and its methods.

The name "Eaton" is so indissolubly associated with the rise and development of the departmental store in Canada, as probably the most outstanding example of the perfection to which the organization has been brought, that it will interest readers of the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL to gather from one who was personally acquainted with the founder of the concern and who was tolerably familiar with his views and business ideals, an idea or two as to principles that underlaid the marvellous success the late Timothy Eaton made of this business before his death.

For many reasons the gentleman interviewed is averse to the use of his name in connection with the matter, so that we present his views as given informally to a representative of the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL. They throw an interesting side light upon the Eaton enterprise and its founder.

The late Timothy Eaton was one of the many adventurous souls who have left the Emerald Isle to hew out a career for themselves in Canada. He brought with him the rugged characteristics that would have spelled success in any undertaking. He began his mercantile career in St. Mary's, in a humble way, afterwards removing to Toronto where he established a small drygoods store at the south west corner of Yonge and Queen streets, where Simpson's block to-day stands. Later he removed to 190 Yonge street, which became the nucleus of the present labyrinth of stores and factories that almost fill the centre of the downtown district.

As to his most outstanding characteristic, the late Mr. Eaton would be dubbed by the average man a "pig headed Irishman." When he made up his mind on a matter that settled it, and he went ahead. Nothing stopped him short of the absolutely impossible. He was often called an unreasonable man because he would listen to no adverse argument when an idea took hold of him. But this was the trait that caused him to win through eventually with the "big store" idea. The greater the opposition, the greater his determination to prosecute his project to a successful end.

A certain man, who had charge of all the interior work of the Eaton establishment for years, asked how he managed to retain his standing with the head of the house so long, replied, "When the governor comes along and says, 'Paint that ceiling blue,' I do it. If he should come around the next day and say, 'Make it yellow,' we get out the colors and change it. I have learned never to argue with Mr. Eaton. I do what I am told."

Some people would call this obstinancy, but it was the quality that carried the founder of the concern through many difficulties and vicissitudes, for the growth of the Eaton business has not been all steady and peaceful. By the way, when the late Mr. Eaton was once asked why he employed so many Irishmen, he replied: "An Englishman will never do what you tell him, a Scotchman will sometimes, but an Irishman will always do what he is told."

Timothy Eaton placed a man at the head of a department and gave him every opportunity to make it go. But if at the end of the business period it showed a balance the wrong way, out went the man, though he were a personal friend or even a relative of the head of the concern. Sentiment played practically no part in the Eaton method of handling employees. Friends were given a chance, but if they failed to make good they got no more consideration than a stranger. Nevertheless, Mr. Eaton was a good friend to those who were loyal to him and the store.

A young man who had been trained in the shoe business sought a position in the shoe department. He was put behind the men's furnishings counter. A friend who was interested in the young man and who knew Mr. Eaton, asked why he was not placed where his knowledge would do most good, Mr. Eaton replied, "We want men here who know how to sell goods, not people to lecture on how they are made." By this he did not mean to discount a clerk's knowledge of his line, but took a needed crack at a tendency only too prevalent sometimes to making too much of the technical side instead of attending to the needs of the customer.

It used to be a saying in the store "the nearer the top, the nearer the bottom." A young man who had held a certain position for several years at the head of a department, and filled it well, was asked how it was he had got no higher up. He made the remark quoted above. It was then the accepted belief that when a man got to the tip top he was liable to go over. Shortly after the above conversation occurred, a "spill" took place when several "heads" fell into the basket. Mr. Eaton had the Irish habit of saying little when he was pleased and using the axe when he was not. The "store" was everything, and anybody who got in its way or out of harmony with its organization was regarded as a menace and was let out. On the other hand a man who was genuinely in earnest and worked, and fought for the store and its ideals was sure of his place. But no one was allowed to think he was indispensable to the institution.

Two very clever men in the establishment in its earlier days were candidates for a certain position of preferment and had each a faction supporting him. The question came up at a board meeting, and after listening quietly to the arguments pro and con Mr. Eaton said, "They're both good men?" To this, assent was given by both sides. "Then we'll let them both go," and these two were let out.

His method of handling men might be illustrated by an incident that took place about this same time. One of the department managers was complaining that he was not given sufficient freedom in handling his department. In the discussion, which was short and somewhat unsatisfactory to the said manager, the remark was made by the latter that a certain other manager was allowed to do as he pleased around the store. The man referred to happened to be coming down the stairs at the time and Mr. Eaton peremptorily called him over, "This man says you do as you please around this store," said Mr. Eaton in his peculiar gruff way, "What do you say to that?" "Well I try to do all I think necessary in the interest of the store," was the reply, the puzzled deputy not knowing what was up. "How long have you been here?" was the next question. "Fifteen years, sir," was the reply. "Do you hear that?" said Mr. Eaton turning to the other man. "When you have been here fifteen years you will be able to do what you like," and he turned on his heel and left them.

Mr. Eaton was immovable on certain points. He would never sell liquor, tobacco or playing cards in his establishment. He was a Methodist and a great stickler for the "rules." When he was about to move to Toronto he intended adding groceries to his drygoods lines, and wrote a friend in Montreal, asking him if he thought it necessary to the success of a grocery establishment to handle liquors, which at that time almost all grocers sold. He added that if he had to handle liquors he would drop the line, as he would never sell intoxicating drinks. To this day the three lines above referred to have been ruled out by the management, the views of the founder being recognized to that extent.

The Eaton establishment has always treated its hands well, and its early employees, as well as those in the establishment to-day, speak well of the management in this respect. The concern has never been guilty at any time of paying inadequate wages either to its male or female help and has always followed the custom of looking after its employees when ill or incapacitated for work. For thirty years it has provided not only for their comfort and convenience in the store in many ways, but in their outside relations and surroundings.

Mr. Eaton was a man of strong religious convictions, and although not given to ostentation, gave liberally to everything he thought worthy of recognition, but was unsparing in his criticism and condemnation of everything in the nature of sham. He never liked to have propositions of a charitable nature "commended" to him. He preferred to form his views from direct contact with the proposition and those behind it. His best friends could not influence him against his convictions. He had a favorite saying which sounded odd and unreasonable, but which had a depth of meaning in it. He often said he thanked God that he did not have much education. He knew how to read and write and "figure," and that was all he claimed most men needed. He might be considered narrow or intolerant in this view, but his idea was that "much learning" was a hindrance to many young men, and he may not have been so far astray as might appear.

He was a great admirer of results. A successful man in his line or department could do almost anything with him. He was going about through the various departments just before Christmas, a while before he died, and noticing a display of a certain line of goods, he said to the manager, "How many have you got of these?" "So many," was the reply. "Why didn't you get more?" and he passed on. The manager thought the thing over, and hurrying down town after lunch, bought all he could get hold of in this line, although he thought he was already loaded. He put the goods on sale and by extra push got rid of the lot. After the holidays Mr. Eaton was again passing through and remarked that the line had been cleaned out. "You ought to have got more," said he. "I did," said the manager, "I got all there was after you were here." "That's right," said Mr. Eaton, "That's right," and he went off rubbing his hands. The department head said he did not believe that Mr. Eaton knew the goods were of special value, but he had put it up to him and he felt it was for him to see it through.

What was the outstanding characteristic of the man? you ask. I think it was getting things done. He inspired his lieutenants with the same spirit, which was doing things bigger and quicker than they had been done before. He was no man for details. He put a man in charge of a department, provided him with everything he needed to make it a success, and expected him to win out. His one great point was quick decision. He made up his mind and went ahead.

MR. WILLIAMS AGAIN IN THE RANKS

Geo. E. Williams, who is the new warehouse manager for Blachford, Davies & Co., Limited, Toronto, and recently entered upon his new duties, has had an extended and varied experience in the shoe game. Mr. Williams was with the J. D. King Co., Toronto, from 1881 to 1889 and with D. D. Hawthorne & Co., from 1904 until 1916. Before going with the former concern the subject of this reference was in Harris & Johnston's retail store in Ingersoll for some years. During his long connection with the trade Mr. Williams has made many warm friends, who will be pleased to learn that, after spending a year at Thornley Wallace farm, at Denfield, Ont., where he was much interested in poultry raising, he has resumed active connection with the shoe business. Mr. Williams is feeling exceptionally well and strong after his rural residence.

HE ORGANIZES NEW COMPANY

G. J. Trudeau, who some time ago withdrew from the firm of G. J. Trudeau & Co., Limited, has organized a company to be known as Trudeau & Co., of which he is general manager and director. They have opened up premises at 672 Ontario street east, Montreal, where a complete line of shoe findings and supplies, including metal shanks, metal shoe hooks, shoe buttons, white sole and heel varnish, etch stain and brushes are carried. The firm also represent E. L. Goudy & Co., of Brockton, Mass., manufacturers of felt box toes. Mr. Trudeau has completely recovered after several weeks' illness from appendicitis and, as he is well liked by the trade, the new organization of which he is the head, should meet with a large measure of encouragement and success.

NOTES OF INTEREST FROM VANCOUVER

With the long continued fine summer weather there was a good demand for white goods, and stocks were pretty well cleaned up. With the resumption of school duties, the shoe retailers made a fair bid to capture what business was offering, but the amount of trade does not seem to be so large as in other years, no doubt owing to the dry weather. The shoe repair line has not been active but, with the advent of the rainy season, business is expected to pick up.

The embargo placed on shoe sundries and findings by the British Government is making its effects felt here. All shoe rivets, nails, tacks, laces, threads, etc., have considerably advanced in price, and are causing shoe repairers to consider it as an item in their outlay for materials. When prices were normal it was not thought necessary to count in their cost, but now when shoe findings have advanced 100 per cent. and more, it is cutting into the profits of repairing. The time cannot be far distant when the members of the Repairers' Association will have to again boost the figures for their work. Prices that are being obtained by the majority at present are considered to be far too low to allow of a reasonable and just profit. No doubt Vancouver holds a unique position as compared with other cities in Canada, owing to the large number of Japanese and Chinese shoe makers who reside in low rented premises and do not consider the value of their labor to be worth the equal of the white man. This goes a long way to keep down the quotations for repairing. The profit to-day on shoe repairing, after taking into account the leather, findings, labor, and a percentage for rent and other overhead charges is of an infinitesimal quantity, and the amount allowed for the labor, which is skilled, is small compared with that of many unskilled workers around the city. It will often cost $4.00 to $5.00 for three hours' work of a plumber, while the shoe mender only gets $1.85, at the most, for the same number of hours work, and material costing $1.00.

The Goodwin Good Shoes are now installed in their new home, in the new premises adjoining the old store. This emporium, which is devoted solely to men's and boys' footwear, is one of the smartest and best laid out establishments in the city, and does credit to its enterprising proprietors.

At last the high price of shoes is dawning upon the public mind, and a writer endeavors to use the high cost to demonstrate an argument. The Buzzer, a little brochure, published by the British Columbia Electric Railway Co., every Friday, in a recent issue makes use of the following: "If we were a candidate for suicide we would go into a store and demand a pair of $3.00 shoes, shutting our ears to any pleas the storekeeper might make about the enormous price of leather these days." This argument is employed by the company to show how unreasonable the public is in asking for reduced fares. It would take too much space to enlarge upon this line of talk, but like all large corporations they view the case from every other point but the right one. Shoemen find if they want to secure the business and please the public they have to produce the goods.

G. Morris, who has been touring the East as far as Boston for the past few weeks, has returned, much benefited by his vacation.

H. North, of Fraser avenue, has installed a Sterling stitcher, and is confident of being able to do good work with it.

D. Matchet expired suddenly from hemorrhage, while walking along Granville street, on Sunday, August 26th. The deceased had worked for the Goodyear Shoe Repairing for the last three years, and previous to coming to Vancouver was a resident of Red Deer, Alta. He was sixty-six years old.

The Vancouver Exhibition, which was held from August 20th to 25th, proved one of the most successful in its history. Over 87,000 people paid admission at the turnstiles, and the directors report a surplus in excess of $5,000. The exhibits of manufactures were numerous and varied, showing that many industries are located in the Terminal City. The J. Leckie Co., local shoe manufacturers, were the only firm in the trade to make a display. There was a full range of all grades in boys', youths' and men's in riveted, Standard screw and welts. An improvement was observed in the models and general get-up. Another noticeable feature was the specimen of upper leathers that the company are tanning and dressing at their works at New Westminster.

HUMAN FEET AND THE WAY THEY SHOULD BE SHOD

The Necessity of Foot Education and Revolution in Shoe Styles Outlined by Mr. Taplin—Retailers Should Have Working Knowledge of Foot Anatomy and its Requirements—How Efficiency is Impaired and Health Undermined by Fashionable Footwear

"The shoe business should be professionalized and no one would be better pleased over all this than the shoeman himself. He could then feel that he was doing his share toward making life worth while. He cannot now claim that distinction.

"Now what should the national or universal shoe be like? The upper should be pliable and soft, any color or combination of colors, preferably laced, and any reasonable height. The sole should be shaped like the bearing portion of the foot and the outside rounding from the ball to the toe, with a sort of swing. The heel should be low, broad and coming well forward under the foot—approximately one-third of the length of the foot itself. The vamp should always be long so that when laced the tightness and fitting would be around the waist and instep, and not restricting the action of the ball and toes. The boot throughout should be as flexible as possible including the shank, which should never have steel inserted. The more rigidity the more the easy natural gait of man is changed. The sole should be thick enough to protect the bottom of the foot against inequalities of surface. The shoe last and the shoe finally chosen, such as I have outlined, is not based on preference, prejudice or pre-conception. In its outlines the styles and the whims of fashion are not taken into account. I believe however, that it closely co-ordinates with the shape, volume and physiological functions of the foot."

"THE Human Foot and Its Relations to Physical Health," was the subject of a lecture delivered recently in Westmoreland Methodist Church, by V. E. Taplin, President and Manager of Natural Tread Shoes, Limited, 156 Bay street, Toronto. There was a large attendance and the remarks of the speaker were made more vivid and impressive by means of seventy-two lantern slides showing the growth and development of the foot under natural, normal conditions as contrasted with many ill-shaped, contorted pedal extremities caused by wearing improper, uncomfortable and so-called stylish footwear. A number of ladies representing several prominent societies, which have become interested in normal shoes, were present.

Pointed toes and high heels came in for some scathing denunciation from the speaker, who said that the economic loss alone sustained through wearing ill fitting shoes, resulting in inefficiency and lessened earning power is probably more serious than any other economic question of the day. In a recent issue of the "Scientific American" it was stated that during the past year 1,149 persons were killed and more than 4,000 crippled in the United States alone on stairways. "High heels and run down heels," declared Mr. Taplin, "were largely responsible for these stairway accidents. I venture to say that if the truth was known the same heels would be found to be the cause of a large percentage of the accidents to women on our streets to-day. There can be no sureness of step when the foot is so cramped, bound, warped or twisted as it must of necessity be in the modern foot millinery. The toes have no opportunity for balancing or propelling. Mobility would be just as possible if we were elevated on stilts. Certain it is if the mind is concentrated on the pains and aches from suffering feet, it cannot be otherwise actively engaged and alert to the many dangers met with. Let the mind out of our control for one short moment on our crowded streets and a life may be the penalty."

The Sad Dictates of Fashion

"Led by fashions," continued Mr. Taplin, "customs have been followed and our eye so badly trained in respect to the dress of the foot, that it is considered quite the proper thing to have our toes narrowed and our heels raised, which condition results in hammer toes, bunions, corns, calous, weak muscles, falling arch, flat foot, backaches, muscle strain, nervous collapse—any or all of them—and a degree of inefficiency, which, if the extent was generally known, would call for the best and most serious thoughts and prompt action on your part and on the part of all educational and humane people, which would include the hearty co-operation of the business world. Major (Dr.) Munson, head of the School for Army Medical Officers and President of the Army Shoe Board of the United States, says, "after four years of investigation and the examination of many thousands of pairs of feet, that he found that 'it became evident that in many instances the faulty conditions of the soldiers' feet were due to lack of information on this important subject,' and my own experience in the fitting and examination of feet, confirms this." The purpose of my talk, along with the pictures shown, is to supply some of the practical information on this subject, which has not heretofore been easily available and without which it cannot be expected, the several factors which must co-relate in order to produce the best foot conditions among our people, will be suitably recognized and satisfactorily co-ordinated.

Service of the Normal Foot

"Little harm," said Mr. Taplin, "would come from wearing improper shoes if Nature had given the foot no other function than that of passively bearing the body weight. The normal foot serves as a well arranged machine, which raises the body and aids in its propulsion—a sort of leverage. This mechanism is subject to the same physical laws, that govern all machines and will suffer injury if the normal relationship of its structures is disturbed. The foot to serve as a lever and be of much aid in the propulsion of the body must, in walking, be advanced directly in the line of the body with the toes pointing forward. This is the walk and attitude of muscular activity and strength in which the great toe points forward or slightly inward; in which the arches of the feet are raised and the inner margin form together an angle opening backward. In this position only can the muscles of the feet work to complete advantage. The body weight is not passively borne, but is actively raised and balanced upon the front of the foot; the toes are spread and firmly pressed against the ground or boot; little strain falls upon the ligaments and the gait is marked by vigor, spring and grace. Such is walking. Altogether too little of this sort of walking is noticeable. More often do we see persons coming down the street with one toe pointing south east and the other south west as though each was on a special mission of its own. This kind of walking puts a tremendous strain on the inner muscles of the foot, frequently resulting in falling arch and flat foot and always in a weakened gait and weak muscles. In the first they are used and developed and in the second they are not."

Heels Too Lofty; Toes Too Cramped

In speaking of high heels and narrow toes, Mr. Taplin quoted Jesse Bancroft, on the Posture of School Children, who says, "High heeled shoes or those which through narrowness or pointed shape cramp the toes so that they cannot spread naturally, when the weight is thrust upon them, make the foot more a hoof than a foot, so that it becomes a stiff, inflexible pedestal attached to the leg. They are also the cause of weakened arches, bunions, and an abnormal strain on the ligaments that maintain the upright position."

The common shapes of walking-shoe of a promiscuous sort. Nothing but deformity, pains, and aches follow in its wake. The pointed toe induces bunions, hammer toes and corns, the too high heel tilts the body abnormally and injures the foot by shortening the heel tendon.

A shape automatically and scientifically correct, and for obvious reasons should be the only shape kept for sale.

"The idea," says Dr. Hoffman, of St. Louis, "apparently dominating the construction of nearly all civilian shoes, is that it is better that the footwear should be novel in appearance rather than it should be sensible in shape. A glance into the display window of the average shoe store will

A radiograph showing the nature of the usual deformity following the wearing of the modern shoe.

It should be the aim of every shoe manufacturer to make shoes on lasts following in general lines the contour of the normal foot as above. In no other way can the efficiency and comfort of the foot be retained.

habitually show scores of varieties of shoes of widely different appearance, not one of which even approaches correctness from an anatomical standpoint. The shoe trade considers itself free from blame as it is frankly in the business for profits and is interested in giving the public what the latter thinks it wants."

Meeting the Whims of Society

The same authority also says the whim of society and the manufacturer's enterprise alone regulate the shape. "Now," continued Mr. Taplin, "we find that this whim of society and the dictum of fashion, etc., are controlled by the advance notices of what is sent out regularly and with accuracy of aim from the directors of the large shoe centres. These articles appearing from time to time create the desire to wear what Mrs. Jones wears and long before the new styles appear, the buying public have been scientifically prepared for them.

"The manufacturers know they can sell double as many boots by encouraging the use of fancy and frivolous kinds. They are not bought to give wear or value, and in this they do not deceive you. They are properly put under the head of fancy. They are extravagance in the extreme—just as using fancy and dainty groceries or dry goods would be—for the closets of all who can afford them, and of too many who cannot, are filled with slightly worn, expensive, foot millinery of a vicious type.

"You have no doubt heard many people say they do not like the appearance of broad toed shoes. I have always claimed it to be a matter of education and to prove this I will tell you about Henry the Eighth and his daughter, Queen Mary. Henry had gouty, swollen feet, requiring very wide boots. From this people got the idea that broad shoes were the things to wear. The custom grew into such proportions that in Queen Mary's reign parliament had to limit the width of toes to not over six inches. I still claim it to be a matter of education. Bad feet cause mental irritability, lessen buoyancy of spirit and in many other ways render the possessor incapable of giving his or her best service."

Need of Correctly Constructed Shoes

After touching upon arch supports, which the speaker said should only be allowed to be sold on the order of a surgeon, Mr. Taplin said supports were bought with the same absence of seriousness one would expect in the purchase of an ice cream cone. You should be just as concerned as if you were buying a pair of crutches for you are admitting yourself to be a weakling, a cripple—in the foot, at least, and no longer able to navigate without artificial props. That is what supports are and that is what crutches are. The need of them could be removed completely by wearing correctly constructed shoes giving room for the toes and then using that room. Mr. Taplin stated that people should get rid of some false ideas, among them being that bunions are hereditary, that high arches require high heels, that a person cannot wear low heels, that the overly high arches are things of beauty and a joy forever, and that low heels cause falling arch.

It is regrettable that the feeling is so general that when a young girl is wearing a shoe properly constructed and is walking with that natural ease and grace, only to be associated with correct shoes and good feet, she cannot escape the stares of many of her friends and most of her neighbors. What lack of education is displayed, what gall they show themselves to be the possessors of? What possible right have they with their deforming things and their twisted sore feet to criticise unkindly any one who chooses to break away from this senseless slavery and enjoy life as it should be enjoyed. In spite of all these giggles, no girl can make the change to proper shoes without immediately raising herself in the opinion of practically all of those whose opinions she cares about. After all this opinion of people on a subject of which they know little or nothing should not be considered of very great importance. It is a fact that the great majority of our population is totally ignorant of this subject with which we are dealing, and from no cause of their own.

Should Start With the Child

A little thought will convince any one that the possession of strong and useful feet is almost an indispensable factor of life. The prevention of foot troubles should begin with the child's early life. We should by no means wait until partial or complete crippling overtakes them. While the weak foot is even more recognized to-day than ever before, on account of economic loss, that recognition is usually deferred until adult life, when the individual finds himself hampered by disability in the pursuit of happiness and economic independence. Moreover, the presence of foot trouble is increasing in frequency. And well you might ask: "Why is it increasing?" The giving up of the muscular development that comes from going barefooted has important bearings on the subject. The barefooted child in the city, parents are afraid, might be mistaken for a neglected and poverty stricken slum dweller, and so the feet are encased from the earliest period in leathern splints which interfere with the development of the foot muscles to such an extent that we find a great majority of ten-year-old-children with a four-year-old set of muscles. It just means that muscles have not grown in strength while the body has grown in weight.

The Penalty that Follows

Fallen arch and flat foot result. The pains accompanying this condition are often ascribed to rheumatism. All parents should be brought to realize their responsibilities in this prevention. We must do everything possible to turn our children into efficient adults and this matter of the child's foot is second to scarcely any other in importance.

What are the symptoms of weak feet in children? The weak footed child is not active, complains of tire and avoids playing or walking. They are apt to be round shouldered and to have feeble appetites. Pallor is sometimes noted. Not many of the cases have pain. The pain—and lots of it—comes later. I would not have you get the idea that I do not fully realize that all or most children have to wear boots a great deal of the time. Our climate makes it necessary. I only wish to point out that the wearing of a boot weakens the foot in proportion to the restriction.

Nearly all weakness and deformity come as a result of wearing wrongly shaped shoes or shoes of correct shape if they are improperly fitted. A very large percentage of our children are wearing shoes too short, and while it is possible to get shoes which, in most particulars, answer hygienic requirements, for very young children, you will find it more and more difficult as the years go by. Fashion has decreed that after the age of nine or ten a girl's boot shall be raised a lift or two in the heel and narrowed at the bottom and a slice or two taken from either side of the toe, each and every year that goes by until at the age of about sixteen we generally find that a girl with deformed feet and able to wear the high heeled boot. A low heel is not comfortable any more because with the raising of the heels there is a corresponding shortening of the heel tendon and the stroke of the calf muscles, and to lower the heel means a readjustment usually requiring a few hours a day for a few days. Besides most girls want to wear what Susan Jane wears. Consequences are not considered. Education will remove the desire to have these things.

Shoe Salesmen Should Be Specialists

Children should be educated in the protection of the foot and to appreciate its beautiful lines. They would then admire the shoe most that nearest resembled these lines in shape. Parents would accept their responsibility and treat the matter seriously. The demand for shoes following the normal lines of the foot and so constructed as to insure foot natural development would be such that shoe merchants, would in order to hold their trade, be obliged to obtain a working knowledge of the foot anatomy and its requirements. They would be obliged to employ salesmen possessed of the same knowledge and give these salesmen the right to properly fit ten customers in a day rather than misfit twenty. Their job should depend on the quality of their work, and not the quantity. The shoe merchants would also be obliged to carry a stock of shoes so shaped as to be anatomically and scientifically correct, in place of the disgraceful crippling things which now line their shelves.

Shoemen should be as well up in their line as dentists, doctors, lawyers or druggists which I am sorry to say they are not to-day. These shoe stores would all be carrying one general shape of shoes in about eight widths in all sizes, and in as many leathers and color combinations as they may choose. They could be just as pretty as you would wish, but they would not deform you. The knowledge of yourself or your child plus that of the shoeman or clerk would result in perfect, anatomic, scientific fits.

Good fits would mean good feet and good feet would in a very short time do away with corn doctors, chiropodists, etc. Our efficiency would increase 25 per cent. What work we did would be done easier and with less muscle and nervous strain. The medical doctors would get about 30 per cent. less business from women. Through increased exercise voluntarily taken, our general health would improve. Violent tempers and irritableness would subside. Our carriage would be more graceful; wrinkled and worn faces would brighten and be happy; feet would look like feet and act like feet. If you are interested in healthy children and efficient adults, in economics, in the dollar that pays the rent and buys the flour, in a broader intellect, in comfort, grace and sensible things, you must then be interested in this movement for foot education and footwear reform, for both of which I ask your support.

THEY CAUGHT OVER 200 FISH

Cecil A. Culbert who was the first merchant to open a store in South Porcupine, Ontario, where hundreds of others have come and gone, is still on the job. He not only does a large trade in shoes and men's furnishings, but also finds time to do a little fishing. Recently he took a jaunt with Dan. H. Presho, who is seen on the left in the accompanying cut, and in four hours they captured over two hundred pike, pickerel and perch. These were caught in a small chain of

D. H. Presho and Cecil A. Culbert, of South Porcupine, on a recent fishing jaunt and their splendid catch lakes in the Porcupine District near South Porcupine. Mr. Presho (formerly Sergt. Presho, of the 60th Battalion) is well-known in Montreal, having travelled for the Slater Shoe Co. and the Thompson Shoe Co. for a number of years. He left for overseas in 1915 and was wounded at Hooge the following year. After spending several months in the hospitals in France and England he was invalided home and discharged early this year. Mr. Presho now has charge of the shoe department for Mr. Culbert and is recovering very rapidly from the effects of his wound in the pure, invigorating air of the North. Mr. Culbert says that the mining camps in South Porcupine have had many ups and downs, but the prospects are fairly good for the coming season. The most of the mines are working, but on account of almost eight hundred men having gone overseas, and a couple of hundred more having departed for the West to take part in the harvest operations, they are all working short handed.

BIG PAGEANT HELD BY EMPLOYEES

The big pageant, garden party and gala, promoted by the employees of Sir H. W. Trickett, Limited, slipper manufacturers, Waterfoot, Eng., duly "came off" on Saturday, says a recent issue of the Rossendale Free Press. In accordance with expectations it proved to be one of the finest and most ambitious things of its kind ever seen in Rossendale. At various times there have been in the district public demonstrations and displays of one kind and another, but it is probably true to say that on no previous occasion has there been anything like the procession, both for elaborateness and the number of costumed characters taking part, which passed through the streets.

The promoters, of course, have much in their favor. For one thing there are well over a thousand employees at Gaghills, and when ten hundred people are directly interested in an event it would be curious if it did not assume outstanding proportions. Another important thing is that the workpeople are sympathetically and enthusiastically "backed" by the firm. The directors of Sir H. W. Trickett, Limited, have ever shown their readiness to encourage their workpeople in efforts of charity and philanthropy, and the recent demonstration was another case in point.

The proposal to do something toward augmenting the Comforts Funds of the local Military Hospitals, originated in the clickers' room at Gaghills. At that time the idea of the clickers was to hold a garden party, and to "run" it entirely by the operatives in that one department. The directors, however, hearing of the proposal, approached the clickers with the suggestion that the affair should be one for the whole of the mill—that all the departments should take part and that the demonstration should be on a large scale. This was agreed to, the employees set to work, committees were appointed, officials elected and the magnificent show was the result.

A PROGRESSIVE NORTHERN STORE

The store of the United Shoe Dealers, in Sudbury, Ont., has just celebrated its ninth anniversary, being opened in August, 1908. The premises are 60 feet long and 21 feet wide and have an attractive display window which is 17 feet in width and equipped with splendid mirrors. The motto of the firm is "stores of quality and fair dealing," the United Shoe Dealers having shops in North Bay, Lindsay, Port Arthur, Owen Sound and Sudbury. Business has been good during the past summer in Sudbury and the manager of the store, B. D. Menzies, is seen standing on the right in the illustration. All repair work is given out to private shops, of which there are a number in Sudbury; in fact no retailer in the northern town conducts a repair branch. The interior of the United Shoe Dealers' store is well laid out and the goods are neatly arranged.

The interior of the United Shoe Dealers Store, in Sudbury, Ont.

FIRST CHILDREN'S WEEK WAS A DECIDED SUCCESS

The recent special Children's Week held by Chisholm's Shoe Store, 1680 Dundas street, Toronto, proved a most gratifying success. The venture was so satisfactory in its returns that the decision of the firm to hold this unique event on the first week of each month, is amply justified. The windows were given over entirely to the latest models in shoes for the younger generation, and interspersed with the display were hosiery for children, flowers and appropriate show cards. The interior of the store was also attractively decorated and children's footwear was on exhibit in all the silent salesmen. Suitable souvenirs were given away, and the latest selections in vocal and instrumental music were provided by an Edison Concert Grand gramophone, kindly loaned for the occasion. Every evening many dropped in to hear the delightful re-creations of the most popular songs and operas, and the favorite melodies of the day. The firm report that not only was business up to the average during children's week in other departments of the store, but the receipts in the juvenile branch were the largest ever. As the special Children's Week recurs at the first of each succeeding month, there is every likelihood of it proving increasingly interesting and profitable, and it will become a distinct institution with the Chisholm establishment.

In this issue, the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL is able to present a view of the handsome front of this attractive footwear house. The exterior base of the window and side panels are of Tennessee marble while the entrance is laid with red quarry tile. The front is what is known as the shallow type, the windows being only five feet at their deepest point from the street line. The sides of each window and lower section of the back are removable, admitting of easy entrance for the purpose of trimming. The panels are of quarter-cut oak finished in Belgian gray. Over the panel woodwork, and at the side of the interior of each window are hand painted Dutch and Belgian scenes, and the top is of tan beaver board. There is a transparent blue glass sign, forming a separate border from the plate glass at the top of the side and front panes, bearing the name "Chisholm's." The exterior is all metal, marble and glass, the large panes being set in bronze and copper standards. At the back of each window, the lower portion is Belgian gray oak, easily removable, while the upper portion is of plate glass. The flooring is of oak with Belgian gray border. The top of each window is adorned with Normandy cloth initial curtains. The impressive exterior is one of the most striking and artistic that has been installed in a long time, and reflects credit upon the "go ahead" spirit of the proprietors, J. L. and M. L. Chisholm, both of whom are well and widely known in shoe circles.

APPRECIATION FAR AND NEAR

OF BENEFIT TO EVERYONE

I herewith enclose one dollar for one year's subscription to the "Shoe and Leather Journal." It is a publication which I think every shoemaker and shoe retailer should read.

UNIQUE SYSTEM OF COST MARKING

In the matter of marking cost price of shoes on cartons there are many code words used, but there are other systems as well. One leading Eastern dealer prefers making use of the accompanying, which somewhat resembles a Chinese laundry ticket, yet at the same time is very simple and capable of a number of variations.

From three to seven variations can be made with each figure, making an innumerable number of variations with cost marks of two to four figures.

This cost mark is made on the principle that all marks on the left of the perpendicular stroke count two, and all marks on the right count three. This makes an excellent mark that can be easily figured out. There is no use for a repeater.

In the shoe business there are a great many systems of marking goods, almost as many as there are systems of cost marks. But it may be laid down as a principle that, at least, one of every pair of shoes should be marked with the cost mark, or the mark used for that purpose, as well as a mate number, both shoes being marked with the latter. Where this system is carried out and the same mate number placed in a conspicuous place on the carton, a boy can put goods away when the salesmen are all busy.

The carton should also be marked in some significant manner so that every one knows what is inside. In some stores the number of lines carried are few and the salesmen have no difficulty in remembering the sample numbers, and this sample number and the price is all that is placed on the label. In other stores where the number of lines are too numerous to remember by the sample numbers, a description must be given to distinguish one from the other.

In one store where the sample, or store number is used as the only description, there is a list of the numbers, with the description pasted up where any "extra" man can consult it, making an index of the stock for handy reference.

WOMEN'S MILITARY BOOT OF CANADIAN DESIGN

With styles in shoes trending toward the military for a period of three years, it is only natural that Canada should have devised a military last in women's styles, says the "Boot & Shoe Recorder," of Boston. War activity has had its direct influence on all apparel from hat to suit to shoes, and the harmony of all three is seen in the costume of the smart Canadian girl.

The boots in particular are the design of William Chamberlain, of Getty & Scott Limited, Galt, Canada, and it is termed the "Chamberlain Military Boot." Its origin is from an adaption of the officer's military boot and yet its pattern is snug fitting and smart.

Canada at war has not meant Canada without style. The best dressers in the Dominion have been wearing smart military boots and the development of this style has meant more business in shoe stores.

In remodelling the officer's last to feminine lines, R. J. Walsh, of the Dayton Last Works, put into the wood the latest ideas in fitting values, making the model carry an 11-8 heel. Mr. Chamberlain, after many pattern changes and trial models, came to the decision that the Blucher point should follow strictly the lines of the regulation English officer's boot. The forepart is plain and does not carry a box.

MANY SMART EFFECTS PRESENTED

The new samples of La Parisienne Shoe Co., Montreal, reflect the highest achievement in the art of St. Crispin. In pumps there is a representative showing in various colors: Olive brown, light tan, pearl gray, cinnamon, salmon, burgundy, black and other colors as well as contrasting shades. For the most part, the pumps are very plain and the entire absence of ornaments is noticed on nearly every offering. A number of the models have collars and French cord around the top. The showing of buck leathers in various shades is exceptionally strong. Most of the models carry the full-breasted Louis covered wood heel and half Louis. The finest kid is employed in the make up, for the La Parisienne Shoe Company are shoemakers and not mere sample makers. There is a large range in white kid pumps and a few samples in black silk velvet. The pumps come in both turns and welts with the finest oak leather soles.

In the high cuts the 8, 9 and 10 inch models are seen, while three new lasts of the long pointed recede toe type have been added. The bal is the most popular shoe and carries the spike heel, the half Louis and the full Louis heel, while a number of walking and sport boots are presented. There are several new patterns in vamps and foxings, the tops being cut waive, straight and slant. Khaki kid is a favorite and the darker shades of brown are right in the forefront. Among the models are an all white buck, an all dark gray kid, an all khaki kid, a brown nubuck bal with khaki calf vamp, a brown nubuck with circular vamp and fancy top, a purple kid with circular vamp and white kid top, an all light gray kid bal, an all white nubuck bal and a mahogany calf bal with canary cravette top. A number of the models have blind eyelets and the foreparts for the most part are plain, although a few imitation wing and some straight tips are seen. An all khaki calf sporting boot is one of the leading features. The range of cloth tops is limited and the leading leathers are kid and calf and buck in the darker colors, with a fair representation of patents. W. C. Myers, of Toronto, is now showing the line in Western Canada, previous to his return to Ontario.

MODERN SHOE STORE FACILITIES PAY HANDSOMELY

Napanee Shoe House Installs New Front and Effects Several Interior Improvements—The Policy on Which a Prosperous Business Has Been Built—Veteran Footwear Merchant Who Believes in Being His Own Landlord and Closing Early

THE Haines Shoe House in Napanee, Ont., is now one of the brightest and most attractive to be found in any of the enterprising towns of Canada. Recently a splendid new front with double display windows was installed where there was formerly only one window. A wall was taken down and other changes were effected, giving 10 ft. more space in width. The front is of Kawneer construction.

The depth of the store is eighty feet and the width nineteen feet. A new, up-to-date indirect lighting system, bicycle ladders, comfortable oak seats, silent salesmen and golden oak fittings, natural finish, make the establishment inviting as well as comfortable for shopping purposes.

J. J. Haines, who has been in the retail shoe game for fifty-three years, and has stores in Belleville, Napanee, Trenton and Smith's Falls has, owned the Napanee business for over thirty years. He believes in being his own landlord, and owns all his store buildings with the exception of one. The manager of the Haines Shoe House in Napanee is F. J. Roblin, who has the rather unique experience of never working in any other establishment. He has been on the job now for twenty-three years and knows the footwear trade down to the ground. He has seen the business, of which he is manager, more than double in volume during recent years. Known for many miles around Napanee, Mr. Roblin is enterprising, faithful and energetic. Outside of business he likes to do a little fishing and his friends say that when the members of the finny tribe will not bite for any person else, "Jimmy" Roblin can land any size or number that he wishes to order.

The well-known policy which has made the Haines' enterprises outstanding successes in many respects naturally extends to the Napanee branch, and included in these progressive business ideals extending over half a century are strictly cash and one price to all, early closing, reliable goods, efficient service and fair, square dealing. It will be remembered that a couple of years ago, Mr. Haines installed a modern front and made other extensive improvements in the head store in Belleville, and the renovations and alterations which have just been carried out in Napanee, are tangible evidences of his conviction that bright, clean, up-to-date premises with inviting fronts, catchy window displays and a well arranged stock are potent factors.

F. J. Roblin, Napanee, Ont.

NEW POSITION FOR MR. YOUNG

W. E. Young, who for the past five years represented P. Jacobi, shoe store supplies and findings, in Toronto and Hamilton, has joined the selling staff of Blachford, Davies & Co. Toronto. Mr. Young is widely known and is a successful salesman, having had over twenty years experience in leather, findings and shoes. He will represent Blachford, Davies & Co. in Hamilton and the Niagara Peninsula, succeeding Thos. H. Ross, who has entered the shoe business for himself at the old stand of the late P. Arland, 11 McNab street, Hamilton.

WHY LEATHER IS SO HIGH

That the high prevailing prices of leather have every indication of considerably increasing, is the opinion of G. Campbell, manager of the shoe finding and glove department of the Great West Saddlery Co., Edmonton, who has returned from a trip through Eastern Canada. Asked as to the reasons for the present inflation of the leather market, he said that there were three all important causes. These were, first, the extra consumption, owing to the large armies in the field; secondly, the diminished production and consequently the shortage in supply; and thirdly, the great losses sustained owing to the submarine warfare.

There are several causes for this condition in the leather market but one that has a very serious effect was the entry of the United States into the war, as all the big tanneries there were obliged to divert their output to the use of their government. Again, many of the cattle ranches were going out of business, owing to the high cost of feed and were killing off their stock. A large number of these men are finding it more profitable to take up grain raising.

The reported raising of the embargo on leather by the British Government, which had a prohibitive regulation against importation in force for some time, also had an immediate effect on the American market. This action had been taken to meet the impending shortage of leather in England.

The transportation difficulties had also been accentuated by the submarine warfare, this having a severe effect on the prices of fine leather from India and China.

The great consumption by the European armies of leather articles was a very important cause of the present high prices, and these demands would undoubtedly increase as time goes on.

The price of leather is also being severely felt by the shoe repairing shops, as they now have to pay $1.05 a pound when they formerly gave fifty cents a pound. Tap soles, which at one time sold for $4.50 a dozen are now quoted at $9.80. Articles of staple leather, such as box calf, which could be obtained in 1914 for forty cents a foot now sells at sixty-five cents.

The labor question also affects this business, as it is now forced to take in unskilled men, in many cases, the more proficient workers having gone overseas.

NEWSY HAPPENINGS FROM QUEBEC

A. Jacques, leather manufacturer, and a party of friends were on a fishing trip to Lac Flippe and made the largest catch of the season. He was so well pleased with his good fortune that he resolved to go again, but on the second expedition managed to catch only six trout.

A. A. Deverell, representing Novelties Limited, H. Hurtibise, of the Panther Rubber Mfg. Co., Sherbrooke; J. R. Roche, of Parker-Irwin, Limited, Montreal; Jas. C. Stevenson, of Robt. Ralston & Co., Hamilton, and F. Whitley, of the Fred Whitley Co., Montreal, spent a few days in Quebec recently.

There was celebrated in Maisonneuve Church on Sept. 3rd the marriage of Raymond Ruelland, adopted son of Alfred Dupere, of Quebec. The day following nuptial mass was celebrated in the Church of Notre Dame de Lourdes in honor of the 25th anniversary of Mr. Dupere's marriage. Mr. and Mrs. Dupere were presented by a number of friends and relatives with a fine set of cutlery accompanied by an appreciative address. La Fanfare Lambilotta Band, of which Mr. Dupere is treasurer, presented him with a silver tea set, accompanied by an address. The presentation was made the occasion of pleasant associations and it was a late hour before the festivities were brought to a conclusion.

At the recent Quebec Exhibition there were many gold medals awarded to different firms in the leather business. The Tetrault Shoe Mfg. Co. won one for a special display of men's shoes, and others were awarded to H. Lamontagne, Inc., and the United Shoe Machinery Co.

Dupere & Garant were among the recipients of gold medals for an interesting display of findings and shoe repair machinery and a Goodyear lockstitch machine, the only one in the market, heated and run by electricity. During the Exhibition machines run by foot and electric power were shown. They were made by the Progressive Shoe Machinery Co., of Minneapolis.

The various leather manufacturers are rather quiet at present. Several shoe manufacturers, tanners and jobbers are out of the city on a fishing trip and they all expect to win the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL trophies.

Art Gosselin, bookkeeper for Ludger Duchaine, has returned from a very successful angling jaunt.

Edgar Clement, tanner, is making some improvements to his buildings in order to give him more room.

Joseph Guay & Fils are busy making chrome sheep and glove leather and report that they have a big demand for all colors for mitts and gloves.

Adelard Huard, bookkeeper for O. Goulet, shoe manufacturer, Mrs. Huard and Miss M. O. Goulet, recently returned from a trip down the Saginaw.

J. B. Lamontagne, doing business under the name and style of Eugene Thivierge, shoe manufacturer, Quebec, recently made an assignment.

Stray Shots From Solomon

When a man sits down and says, "Soul thou hast much goods laid up for many years, take thine ease, eat, drink and be merry,"

A CONDEMNED FOOL he is not far from the kingdom of hell. It will not be long ere he will offer the petition of the rich fool: "I pray thee therefore father that thou wouldst send him to my father's house: for I have five brethren; that he may testify unto them lest they also come into this place of torment." Do not wait for the light of hell to reveal your responsibility to your brother man. Learn that money, position, influence are but a means to an end, not the end itself. Do not dare to put "my" before either of these and flout the obligation that belongs to their possession, lest in the midst of your arrogant pride or arrant impudence the Judge say, "Thou Fool!" Learn the "luxury of doing good." Do not put all your money into bank stocks. There are investments that yield higher dividends here than any listed stocks, without taking into account the tremendous increment promised in the life that is to come. If you have never invested money in promoting the good and happiness of others, make the experiment. You can get more pleasure out of a ten dollar bill wisely spent to lift some poor soul out of trouble than you can out of ten times the amount spent on yourself. Try it.

* * * * *

Cat and dog are not more uncomfortable in each other's company than a good man and a bad.

FLINT AND STEEL Why is it that an unprincipled man always hates a man of character? "The bloodthirsty hate the upright." It is always the way. The man of honor and sobriety is to the man of crookedness and roistering as nitre to vinegar. Have you ever noticed that the introduction of a good man into a company or community is the signal for hell to break loose? We read in holy writ that those "possessed" when brought before the Man of Nazareth broke into dreadful orgies of profanity and blasphemy. Beware when you find antagonism to truth and purity aroused within. "Rejoice and be exceeding glad" when you find, like the prophets of old, you are reviled and hated by devil worshippers who surround you.

* * * * *

When success depends upon string pulling and log rolling let those have it who think enough of the end to adopt the means. Push

PULL a handcart all your life rather than get mixed up with the cattle who are "in the pull." This degrading principle is leavening our social and business as well as our national life. Pull is taking the place of brains, energy and integrity. Without pull it is impossible to please the god of politics. In business "pull" is making its influence felt, and it is not sufficient that a man shall have means and ability to get the best that is going, he must be able to give the "grip" and make the "signs" to secure all that his money and position ought to bring. Even the church seems to lend its tacit sanction to the doctrine that pull is mightier than worth. As soon as a man with "pull" gets inside the doors the whole church toadies to him. They make him a warden and his wife president of the "Ladies' Aid." Even the minister of the gospel is not above bowing the knee to this modern Baal, and not only does he offer incense at the individual shrine, but acknowledges the supremacy of the idol by taking a hand at the strings of the church organization himself. This servile, sniveling homage to the machine is unworthy a being made to stand upright in the presence of the Eternal God. When brains, dignity, honor and industry are prostituted to mere success then is man fallen indeed from his high estate.

* * * * *

The reason some people never get along in this world is that they are too smart. The clever man rarely succeeds, and that only TOO SMART when he has enough common sense to be clever on a special line. The average intellectual ability of the men who make a failure in life is far ahead of those who come to the top and score. The man with ordinary horse sense who plods along and knows enough to use what comes his way will always "make" money. The clever man is usually a faddist, and will theorize while money slips through his fingers. The clever man will write theses on "Success in Business" that are models of business classics, but will fail five times while his tortoise neighbor is making a single fortune. Never despise a man with fringe at the bottom of his pants. It is the almost unfailing sign of genius. Some extravagant nonsense is written of the clever men who have become "merchant princes" or "political leaders," who have simply known how to coin circumstances into cash or political capital. The late Sir John A. Macdonald was not a clever man in the sense of brilliancy or exceptional intellectual ability, neither will the warmest friends of Sir Wilfrid Laurier claim for him more than the genius of being able to turn every circumstance to advantage. The men who have made their mark in commercial life have been those who learned their business thoroughly, and had sense enough to profit by any opportunity that came their way. Beware of being too restlessly, intellectually, overreachingly smart.

CAPT. BEARDMORE GOING OVERSEAS

Capt. Torrance Beardmore, son of Alfred Beardmore, who has been in charge of the Acton Tanning Co., Acton, Ont., and had a commission in the York and Simcoe Forestry Battalion, has been appointed officer in command of a draft of 350 men from the Forestry Depot at Camp Borden. It is expected they will embark for overseas very shortly. A few days ago Capt. Beardmore was given a rousing send-off at Acton by the employees of the firm and the citizens of the town. H. P. Moore, on behalf of the men, delivered an appropriate address expressing their goodwill to him as their employer and extending sincere good wishes. Mr. Moore spoke of the pride felt by all that Capt. Beardmore, who is one of their boys, having Acton as his birthplace, had been given an important place as commanding officer of an overseas draft of men. All knew of the sincere desire he had felt from the outset of the war to do his duty as a soldier and to have the opportunity of overseas service. While general regret is felt that there would necessarily be the severance of the kindly relations which existed as employer and men for a time, everyone rejoiced that Mr. Beardmore's earnest wish had been fulfilled through the action of the military authorities. Reference was made to the splendid efforts of Mr. and Mrs. Beardmore and the firm to give the families of the men a happy time at Christmastide, and to the comforts which were then supplied. The hope was earnestly expressed that Capt. Beardmore would have the chance of doing effective service in the great conflict of Great Britain and her allies to win the war and that he would be spared to return home safely and resume his place at the head of the works here.

Three cheers and a tiger were then vociferously given by the hundreds of employees and citizens assembled.

Capt. Beardmore was visibly affected by the graceful tribute paid him by his men. He said that he was gratified that his long-deferred wish to go overseas for service, as Mr. Moore had truly stated, was now about to be fulfilled. He was proud to go overseas from Acton, for he was not only born but he had spent most of his life in Acton. He hoped to do his duty faithfully and to "carry on" in the interests of the great war and to the advantage of the men under his command. He appreciated more than he could tell this kindly expression of goodwill on the part of the men with whom he had been associated for so long, and by their families. He hoped he would be fortunate enough to return and be with them in civilian duties again.

THE TRADE PAPER AD IS THE SALESMAN OF THE MOMENT

Specialists in merchandising maintain careful record of the sources from which business is obtained. The writer has been privileged access to these records in the possession of some of the most progressive houses in the continent, and they are of absorbing interest.

In a number of instances, the firms whose tabulations were examined were carrying on national campaigns to the consumer, in others dependence was placed wholly upon enthusing the trade and persuading merchants to feature the goods. The trade journals were used by all, and it is the purpose of this article to deal with certain very significant disclosures relating to the employment of these media.

Throughout is a wonderful agreement of most impressive evidence that trade paper advertisements are doing a very large part of the actual selling to-day.

Himself long a traveling salesman, the writer has all the natural reluctance of that body to admit the claims to a place for the paper salesman alongside the flesh-and-blood drummer; but the facts are there, indisputable—the paper fellows are selling the goods.

No matter what the nature of the campaign, the trade paper is recognized as an indispensable link in the chain of organization by which distribution is obtained. Its value in keeping relationship right with the retailers has always been conceded, but its direct selling power was overlooked or underestimated until the volume of mail order sales compelled tardy recognition.

Even now there are found occasionally those who insist that all advantages are on the side of flesh-and-blood representation, which is very far from the truth.

In the old days of argumentative salesmanship the in-the-life drummer had the points. To-day most of us are agreed as to the unwisdom of argument.

Too, in a period now past, much of a social nature entered into the selling of goods. This no longer plays a serious part in salesmanship of the higher grade. Nothing of this character is permitted to confuse the issue between salesman and buyer. Where resorted to, it is good presumptive evidence of weakness in the proposition or want of confidence on the part of the salesman. Use of this method brings both into contempt, and few merchants have either time or tolerance for it.

Personality does count, but it is the personality that comes from real work and experience. The personality of substance and honor, the purely business personality of a resourceful and helpful kind. The living salesman possessed of it will always be a welcome necessity. In fact there would be colorless days for the trade, and problems difficult of solution, if these men were withdrawn.

Salesmanship has been reduced to a concise presentation of facts. The man behind the trade paper advertisement, highly trained to the work, in the quiet of his office, unworried about train connections, unruffled by poor hotel accommodations or other incidents or accidents of travel, equipped with complete data relative to the product and the territory to be exploited, concentrates upon the preparation of propositions that will appeal to the buying sense of the trade. His messages have the tremendous advantage of embodying the best selections of the house at the moment, with the most recent changes of price. "ARCH PRESERVER" SHOES TO BE MADE IN CANADA

In this New Type of Shoe Many of the Oldest Traditions of Last Modeling, Shoe Construction and Shoe Fitting are Cast to the Winds—Interview with Charles Henry Brown, Foot Efficiency Expert, of Boston, Mass., on the Principles of the New Type

THE two factories manufacturing the "Arch Preserver" shoe in the United States, having met with great success in marketing this "re-modeled," or "reform" type of shoe across the line, have decided that the principles involved in the shoe are just as much needed in Canada as in the United States and have perfected their plans for duplicating the success in the Dominion.

E. T. Wright & Co. will make the men's "Arch Preservers" in their St. Thomas factory and their Canadian salesmen will also carry the line of women's and misses' "Arch Preservers" which are made by the great factory of the Selby Shoe Co., at Portsmouth, Ohio, who are probably the largest producers of good grades of women's shoes in the world.

This method of handling the shoes in Canada will constitute a distinct advantage to the dealers over here as compared with the situation in the United States, where the top lines are presented by different representatives.

It is extremely interesting to note that in the interview with Mr. Brown and in the advertisements appearing in this issue, the utmost effort is put forth to establish the fact that the "Arch Preserver" shoe is not an "arch-prop" shoe in the generally accepted sense—that they are not shoes made especially for crippled people (with features about the shoes which stamp the wearer conspicuously as a cripple)—but are more than ordinarily stylish looking, regular shoes for regular people with regular feet.

To back up this statement and carry conviction as to the shoe being accepted as a universal shoe, Mr. Donovan, manager of E. T. Wright & Co.'s St. Thomas factory, called attention to the fact that "Arch Preserver" shoes are carried in stock by both the men's and the women's factories in a variety of exceptionally stylish types of lasts and patterns and in a greater range of sizes and widths than regular lines of shoes are carried by any retail shoe stores in the world.

This will be exceedingly good news for those dealers who are constantly aiming at longer and better fittings, but find themselves cruelly handicapped because of the impossibility of securing any but wide shoes from stocks on hand.

Principles Involved in Shoe

Recently Mr. Brown visited the St. Thomas factory for the purpose of counselling with the salesmen regarding the methods to be employed in presenting the "Arch Preserver" shoes to the Canadian trade. While there he was induced to give for publication an outline of the conditions which seemed, to him, to call for a change in last modeling and shoe construction and shoe fitting methods as universally practiced, and of the principles involved in the "Arch Preserver" shoe and its mission in the shoe world. What he said follows:—

"The ideas embodied in the "Arch Preserver" shoe and last were conceived, and have been developed to the point of practical utility for all who wear shoes, as the result of an unusual opportunity to examine into and carefully study the ideas which have been developed by the foremost orthopedic students of the world in their efforts to fathom the real cause, or causes, of weak or flattened foot-arches and other foot troubles, and to produce for a long-suffering humanity a type of last and a character of shoe construction which would prevent the development of these conditions.

"I have had, in working out the construction details, styles, etc., of the shoes, the earnest and untiring co-operation and practically unlimited resources and facilities of what are generally conceded to be the best organized and equipped shoe factories in the world.

"The net result of this is that the "Arch Preserver" shoe embodies the best ideas developed by the foremost orthopedists during the past twenty-five years, combined with shoemaking ideas, knowledge and methods which are the results of more than half a century's experience in the shoemaking centres of the world.

"Of course, the last upon which a shoe is made is the all-important thing in making a shoe. If the last is not right in all of its features, the shoe cannot be right in any of its features.

"And of all the points or parts of a last, the bottom of the last is by all odds the most important. The bottom of the "Arch Preserver" last has no resemblance to any other last ever used in the making of shoes.

Showing simplicity of new measuring device and point to which measure is taken.

Five Important Changes in Last

"After getting together the more important ideas and suggestions of the orthopedic specialists as to the changes that should be made in lasts—in order to make a shoe that would be the ideal shoe for the good or normal foot to walk in—it was found that there were five really important changes to be made in the bottom of the last.

"When these changes were made it was found that every important point, or feature, of the bottom of the new last was practically the reverse of the old one.

"The changes in the last bottom, which were demanded by the orthopedists were based upon their knowledge of the anatomical construction of the bottom of the foot and of its mechanical action when performing its function of carrying around the chunk of human anatomy suspended above it.

"Ordinary last bottoms are so modeled that shoes made over them have the effect of compressing the feet at every step, whereas expansion is absolutely necessary in order to maintain proper blood circulation in the feet and legs.

"Limitation of the blood circulation in the foot and lower limb, as a result of the continual compression of the foot, eventually destroys—rots out—the vitality of the ligaments and muscular fibers of the foot and leg, and then the arch structure gives way under the strain to which it is subjected in shoes as heretofore constructed.

"Trials and experiments covering a long period of time and consuming many thousands of dollars proved beyond any question that the changes in the bottom of the last advocated by the orthopedists not only were advisable, but absolutely necessary, in order to make a shoe that could be properly fitted to the foot and which would prevent the good foot from developing the various forms of weaknesses and other troubles which are to-day almost universal.

"At the same time it was proved that the shoe that is right and proper for the good foot to wear is also the best shoe that can be made for the relief and correction of foot weaknesses and the various corn and bunion-joint troubles; the only exceptions being where the weakness, etc., amounts to an actual deformity calling for operations or for especially modeled lasts.

Its Lines and Proportions

"It was proved also that the shoe that was right in its lines and proportions for a high instep foot was also the ideal shoe for the so-called low instep foot (except the so-called "rigid foot"). In other words, the "Arch Preserver" shoe makes the low instep foot behave just like the high one and offers it a chance to get back to normal condition instead of being forced gradually into a worse position by the so-called low instep shoe.

"I am frequently asked by men in the shoe business, as well as by physicians, what I think of the "flexible shank" idea in shoe construction as compared with the rigid construction of the "Arch Preserver" shoe.

"An absurd question to ask me, of course, but my reply is that I am advocating a firm, unyielding tread-base for the foot to walk upon and am giving my reasons for it and ask only that these reasons be taken for their apparent worth after they are thoroughly understood. My reasons are all based upon the simplest principles of mechanics and should be easily understood by anyone with even a moderate amount of mechanical sense.

"For instance, everyone knows that the way to break a stick of kindling wood is to put one end of the stick upon something that raises that end off the floor, and then jump on the stick. It won't break if jumped on while lying on the floor.

Practically a Solid Structure

"The outer margin of the foot, from heel to ball, is practically a solid structure. Place the heel end of this structure upon the heel of a shoe possessing even the usual strength of shank, and walk and stand upon it long enough and it is sure to break down just as does the piece of kindling, because it is being treated in the same way. Perfect physical condition will often delay the breaking, but break it will, sooner or later.

"Those in the medical profession who do advocate the "flexible shank" idea in shoe construction do not hesitate to agree that the ideal condition for the foot to operate under is the bare or sandaled foot upon the floor or ground.

"A careful analysis of this admission surely will make some of the claims for "flexibility" in the shank seem slightly scrambled.

"The flexibility of the average floor is not specially noticeable, don't you know?

"Yes, the Indian moccasin, the Chinese shoe, the Roman sandal, etc., were all good shoes. They were mighty good shoes—for they each allowed the foot to operate as though it were in the condition of the bare foot upon the floor or ground.

"In other words, the foot had the advantage of a firm, unyielding base upon which to tread, from heel to ball of the foot.

"But when the modern shoemaker put the heel on the moccasin, extending only a fraction of the distance from the rear end to the ball of the foot, the pictures changes—like-wise the story of the human foot.

"The condition of the foot in such a shoe is about the same as though one were obliged to walk with the bare foot upon a suspended lattice with the lattices apart so that the heel and ball of the foot would just span the distance between.

"The foot and its component parts get their principal exercise from the expansion produced when the foot is imposed upon a flat, firm, unyielding treading base, and not by walking on a cushion sole or flexible shank.

The Special Shank Construction

"The construction of the "Arch Preserver" shoe, from heel to ball, is such that it amounts to exactly the same thing as raising the floor up to the foot—or with the foot—when the foot heel is elevated upon the shoe heel.

"In other words, the special patented shank construction amounts to a solid wedge slipped under the foot from heel to ball, thus preserving for the foot the firm, unyielding bearing which it gets when imposed upon the floor without a shoe.

"There is no effort or idea of bracing or propping the good foot at any point. The bottom of the last is so changed as to provide in the shoe a treading base for the foot which is identical with the floor. Changes are made, it is true, for the purpose of eliminating the flattening and rotating strain upon the foot arch of the good foot which results from lacing the foot into the shoe.

"These changes, while eliminating the condition which does more than anything else to destroy the good foot, become at once the greatest possible factor in the relief and correction of the weakened foot, for they force the latter to take on the position and habits of the good foot and give it its only possible chance for recovery.

"As a final word, there is one point upon which I desire to again bear down, and bear down hard. It is this:

"The 'Arch Preserver' is not a 'special' shoe. It is not designed specially for broken down or weakened feet. It is not necessary to dig up a cripple in order to be able to sell a pair of shoes; and it does not stamp as a cripple the person who wears it.

"It is a regular shoe for regular wear by people who have regular feet and who are willing to keep them in just that condition. It is simply a modernized shoe based upon the latest knowledge of what the foot requires as a covering and as an assistant in carrying the load under present-day average physical conditions."

An Accurate Fitting System

A point of particular interest to which Mr. Brown calls attention is the fact that the retail shoe dealer never has had placed in his hands a foot-measuring or fitting system based upon the system of measurements employed in modeling lasts, drafting patterns and making shoes.

When one stops to think of it, there does seem to be a reason for some sort of change from the system, or lack of system, at present in universal use.

All of the fitting features of lasts and the drafting of upper patterns are based upon the eventual fitting of shoes from heel to ball, yet all fittings are made by measuring the foot from heel to toe and making a certain allowance over the stick measure of the foot. This is done in spite of the fact that the greatest variation in the anatomical construction of the foot, as Mr. Brown explains, is in the length of the great toe.

Under the method now in use three stores in the same block will each be using a different system for fitting shoes made on the same lasts. One store will allow 1 to 1½ sizes over the stick; the next store 1½ to 2 sizes, and the next store 2 to 3 sizes. Surely they can't all be right. Mr. Brown's contention is that they are all wrong; that the average run of feet—if fitted with ordinary shoes as they are really made to fit—would require from four to five, and in many cases six sizes allowance over the stick in order to give proper placement of the ball of the foot in the shoe, which is the exact spot where the ball of the last rested when the shoe was in the making.

Excellent Fitting Device Provided

The factories manufacturing the "Arch Preserver" shoe supply their customers with a device originated by Mr. Brown which can be used for fitting both the "Arch Preserver" and regular shoes. By the use of this system the exact length of shoe required for proper heel-to-ball fitting is instantly determined. Also with a little practice the same device can be used to indicate the exact width necessary.

This measuring and fitting system is fully illustrated and explained in a very interesting booklet entitled "Putting it Up To The Dealer," which will be sent to any shoe dealer upon application to the Arch Preserver Advertising Department, Portsmouth, Ohio.

BIG DEMAND FOR OVER-GAITERS

The coming season promises to be a very strong one in the matter of over-gaiters and manufacturers are exceptionally busy, having received more orders than in any previous period. The 8-inch cut with 8, 9 and 10 buttons, is a favorite and the leading colors are fawn, light and dark gray, white and canary. Some decidedly catchy gaiters are being made by the firms for infants and children. The samples look very neat and inviting. Naturally, owing to the high price of fabrics, there has been an advance in the cost of all lines of over-gaiters and the prevailing figures is from $15.00 to $30.00 per dozen. Everything points to the greatest over-gaiter season ever for fall.

HEAVY FINE FOR SHOEMAN

Magistrate Jelfs, of Hamilton, threw a bomb this week in police court when he fined William Harding, manager of the Canada Shoe Co., Hamilton, $1,500 or one year in gaol, convicted of selling shoes by a system which was a violation of the Lottery Act.

Indicative that the ruling was an important one, was the fact that the magistrate had prepared a written judgment of over five typewritten pages. In this judgment the magistrate summed up the evidence—how that the company sold a book of coupons to a purchaser, who sold those four coupons to another set of purchasers and who received an $8 pair of shoes provided that each of the four new purchasers bought another book of coupons.

That many people had bought coupons was shown at the trial when it was stated that more than 2,000 books of coupons had been sold, while over 350 shoes had been given out. Mr. Harding was shown to have over $1,500 to his credit.

In the written judgment, the magistrate declared that he considered that the offence should not be allowed to be passed off with a light fine, as the public must be protected from lotteries and schemes of chance such as that conducted by the Canada Shoe Co.

C. W. Bell, who appeared for Mr. Harding, intimated that an appeal against the magistrate's judgment would probably be entered.

STYLE PAGEANT WILL BE HELD IN TORONTO

Reception Room of King Edward Hotel Engaged for Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, Sept. 26, 27 and 28—"Classic Shoes" will be Displayed, on Living Models, Under the Management of R. J. Walsh, Conductor of American Styles Functions

THE first Shoe Style Pageant ever held in Canada will take place in the ballroom of the King Edward Hotel on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, Sept. 26, 27, 28, when Classic Shoes, manufactured by the widely-known firm of Getty & Scott, Limited, of Galt, Ont., will be displayed on living models. This is a unique and outstanding event so far as the development of the shoe trade is concerned and Getty & Scott, Limited, are to be congratulated on their initiative move and progressive ideas. The style pageant will be open to the public and also to the retailers and the spectacle presented will be both instructive and fascinating. This important function will be carried out under the direction of R. J. Walsh, of Boston, who inaugurated the first shoe style show in the United States early in January at St. Louis on the occasion of the convention of the National Shoe Travelers' Association. This footwear show made such a hit that Mr. Walsh was later induced to stage a similar demonstration at Toledo, Ohio, while two very successful style shows have been made under his direction at the Powers Hotel, Rochester, under the auspices of the Rochester Shoe Manufacturers, which have been attended by many Canadian manufacturers and retail shoe merchants.

The Classic Shoe Style Pageant will be the first held in Canada and will be carried out on many new and distinctive lines. There will be an illuminated runway on which twenty young ladies will parade, costumed in the latest wearing apparel and donning the smartest and most popular lines in both high and low cut foot toggery. There will be shoes shown for all occasions—for house and street wear, for afternoon and evening, for dress and social functions, etc. One advantage to the retail men is that they will know exactly how these models appear upon the feet and all guesswork will be eliminated. All the shoes will be the styles which the enterprising manufacturers recommend the dealers to purchase and thus they put their stamp of approval and endorsement upon the imposing offerings at the style pageant.

It is likely that one evening will be devoted especially to the public and perhaps two afternoons. It will require over two hours to display the very fetching and dignified creations.

In other cities on the occasion of inviting the public by invitation, there has been a wide demand for the cards, and hundreds have been turned away. It is likely that the same experience will be repeated in Toronto and those shoe men who have good customers that they would like to have attend this event, should make application to Getty & Scott, Limited, for whatever tickets are required. There will be splendid music furnished each afternoon and evening by a leading orchestra and appropriate programmes will be distributed on which the various shoes worn by the different ladies will be described in detail. As each model appears a number will be shown and by referring to that number on the programme, visitors will be able to learn exactly what kind of leather the shoe is made of, its color, pattern, last, etc.

Getty & Scott, Limited, are fortunate in procuring the services of Mr. Walsh, the pioneer producer of footwear pageants, to come to Toronto and inaugurate a function of this kind which promises to be an outstanding success both socially and shoeistically.

BLACK, BROWN, GRAY AND WHITE

"What about low cuts?" asked a manufacturer of a salesman recently returned from a trip among buyers.

"Not much. Boots are all I can see for fall and for next spring, too," answered the salesman.

"Of what leathers?"

"Kid mostly. Some call for calf, particularly Russia, for fall."

"Of what colors?"

"Black is the best seller. Browns are next. Grays are good and white is a staple."

"Any combinations?"

"Yes, as many as ever."

"What of fabrics?"

"I find no interest in them."

"What about lasts?"

"Smart, shapely lasts, for street and dress wear."

"Any military styles?"

"As a topic of conversation, yes. As a matter of sales, no."

"Are heels to be lower?"

"A 12/8 heel is a good seller these days. Girls up to 18, and women of more than 45, buy low heel shoes. Young women insist on high heels."

"What about tips and trimmings?"

"Wing tips on Russia calf shoes. But smooth, glove-like effects on kid boots."

"Are styles to be restricted?"

"Not by the buyers. They are calling for more styles than ever."

SHOE MEN WILL RESUME SESSIONS

The first meeting for the fall and winter months of the Toronto Shoe Retailers will be held in the Foresters' block, College street, on Wednesday, September 26th. There are many important matters to come up and some active and aggressive work will be undertaken. It is expected that the coming gatherings will be unusually interesting and instructive.

Some Window Hints for October Selling

WE are around again to October, the month when the out-of-doors turns to gold and brown. This then, will give you a color key for the store and window decorations—gold and brown.

October should be the harvest month for the shoe retailer. Crops will be pretty well garnered and money will begin to move. New fall goods should be pushed and there should be no need for special sales or reduced prices. September will have permitted people to finish their summer footwear and new fall lines will be in strong demand. There will also be a call for party shoes, pumps, slippers, etc.

We have frequently intimated that it is well to take advantage of holidays or special days for advertising purposes, so October offers us Thanksgiving Day. A very attractive window can be arranged by using various grains, fruits, etc., for decorating purposes. Small sheaves about five inches in diameter of various kinds of grains can be used for the background or corners of the windows. Very fine specimens of apples, pears, peaches and even vegetables may be used, but care must be taken not to have these overshadow the display of shoes, for it should always be remembered that the shoe dealers' business is selling shoes. Anything in the way of decoration should always be secondary to the display of footwear.

Should you be fortunate enough to have a fall fair in your town, take advantage of this for display and advertising purposes. Everything that you do to boost the fair will be an advertisement for you. Make a window display and call it "fair day display." Put it in about one week before the day of the fair, then make an announcement of the fair on your window card, also suggestions that new shoes will be needed and that you are in excellent position to fill the demand.

If you have anything in the way of footwear for hunters, do not forget that the hunting season is coming and you should let the people know what you have in these lines, which may be in the shape of leather or rubber high boots. A very tasty window display may be made by placing with the goods shown a gun, some little camping utensils, or anything else that will give it a hunting flavor. Even though there may not be very many huntsmen in your section, it will be a change from the regular windows and will cause the general public to comment, which of course is good advertising for your store.

Hallowe'en will also furnish you a pretext for window display. Various emblems of this quaint custom are very decorative. The colors should be yellow and black and the figure of a witch may be introduced into your window if it is large enough; then the various other little emblems such as a moon, pumpkins, black cats, bats, owls, stars, comets, etc., may be purchased at any good stationers, or you may cut them out of pasteboard yourself. These can be used at the back of your window or may be placed through the display. Little yellow pumpkins make very nice price tickets, and while we mention the subject of price tickets, we would advise that you always price every shoe you have displayed in your window. The old objection to pricing goods in the window is fast falling away and progressive merchants find that the best method is to price everything.

It should not be forgotten that there will be a strong demand this year, even stronger than last, for trench boots. Several manufacturing concerns have arranged with retailers to take orders for these shoes and the manufacturer will send them direct to the boys overseas. This obviates the necessity of carrying more than a sample for stock and does away with all the trouble of packing, shipping, etc.

With each of these displays it would be well to have an attractive window card calling attention to the display, or if the entire lines shown should be all one price, the price can be put on the window card instead of individual tickets.

With these suggestions we think you should be able to arrange something that will help greatly in the sale of footwear during the month of October.

SELLING ARMY SHOES IN BRANDON

While it is against military regulations for merchants to sell army goods in their stores, the practice has become so common, and apparently with the cognizance of the officers, that Magistrate Fraser was reluctant to make a scapegoat of Jerry Cristall, a merchant of Brandon, Man., when he appeared at the police court recently, charged with the offence of selling military boots. In the course of the hearing Mr. Dowling, of the firm of Dowling & Creelman, D. F. Creighton, of the Adams Shoe Co., and Mr. Hurley, recently adjutant of the 181st Battalion, all gave evidence. All the evidence submitted was to the effect that the practice of exchanging shoes with merchants in the city has been regularly carried out by private soldiers ever since the location of troops in Brandon, and most, if not all the shoe stores, had accommodated soldiers who desired to make an exchange. Under the circumstances, as stated, Magistrate Fraser was unwilling to make a scapegoat of one merchant for carrying on a practice that admittedly was common to all. He therefore dismissed the case on the understanding that the matter will be looked into by the military authorities.

GOOD PROGRESS ON SPECIALTY PLANT

Good progress is being made on the new specialty factory of J. F. Clark Limited, which is being erected in Montreal East. The new line of samples have been completed and they are a most representative range in men's, boys', ladies', misses' and children's canvas come in all colors with rubber and leather soles, wood, leather and rubber heels. The shoes are all made in widths and are McKay's. It is expected that the new plant of J. F. Clark Limited, will be in operation about the middle of December.

One of the most striking creations is a walking boot in long recede toe, carrying a fourteen—eight Cuban heel and imitation wing tip. This shoe comes in all leathers and its smart lines are much admired. A woman's military boot on the Munson last with 10/8 heel and seven inch top in tan Russia calf carrying a straight tip is being shown. A number of pumps in all leading leathers are noted as well as some trim Oxfords in gray, mahogany, dark brown and other colors. The firm think the coming season will be a strong one on tan Russia and other light shades of brown, and a number of models are in these leathers.

Featuring Brown Cedar Calf

Daoust, Lalonde & Co., Montreal, show some attractive and representative lines for spring. They have added two new lasts in men's welts, two in women's welts including a sporting last, two in men's McKay's and two in women's McKay's, and are showing quite a few samples in brown cedar calf leather. Most of the models carry the spool heel and a fairly low heel for the sporting lasts. The company are looking forward to a pretty fair season, although they think, perhaps, it may not be as big as last year.

Many Novelty Effects Presented

The new samples of the Perth Shoe Co., Perth, Ont., embrace over two hundred and twenty-five lines of women's welts exclusively in all the latest colors, lasts and trimmings, making a splendid showing and one that has never been equalled by the firm. About one-third of the shoes are in calf and the remainder in kid, while there is a good representation in patent leather and in the very highest grades patent kid is observed. The vamps are a little longer than usual, being from 3½ to 4 inches, and tops are cut 8½, 9 and 10 inches, with the 9-inch upper predominating. The Louis heel and the high Cuban heel are featured on most models. They also carry the new 10 and 12—8 pedestals. Nearly all creations have the square throat and a few the bow-shaped. Cloth tops are fairly well represented in field mouse, battleship, silver gray and other colors. The majority of the new samples are three-quarter fox, but a number have new pattern vamps with whole quarters. One leading characteristic is the spray tip, while wing and straight tips with the spray features are also noted. The soles are from 4 gauge up. The bal is a favorite with a slope, colonial, and straight cut tops in various shades of brown, battleship, silver gray, khaki, golden brown, field mouse, plum, cherry, white and black. Gray and brown seem to be the favorites. There is a splendid line of English walking boots and a representative range of staples. A noteworthy shoe is a nurses' trench boot in tan Russia calf with 10-inch top, Neolin sole and rubber heel and also a nurses' dress boot in golden brown kid. Buck tops and all buck shoes in gray, khaki and field mouse are among the offerings. In Oxfords, there is a very trim and artistic showing in patent and kid in black, blue, brown, steel gray and other tones with perforations and a fair amount of pinking. Pumps are decidedly plain and come in all the leading colors and shades. Many of the models carry white welts and ribbon stitching and there is a nice showing in cushion soles. Among the more pretentious offerings is the "Victory" shoe in white kid, with stitching on the vamp, eyelet row and top in red, white and blue. This model carries a white sole and heel. Another pretty shoe is a 10-inch field mouse kid with Cuban heel, white sole and spray tip; also a four-inch vamp patent kid with dull calf top, leather Louis heel, a brown colonial bal with 10-inch top, and a battleship gray, with white sole, blind eyelets and imitation straight tip with spray. The Perth shoe line is right up to the minute in style and superb shoemaking.

New Style of Men's Shoe

The new samples of E. T. Wright & Co., of St. Thomas are unusually complete and decidedly attractive. A few cloth tops are being shown and the leathers are about the same shades as last year with the inclusion of some lighter tones in brown. The company have added a wide Arch-Preserver last which is quite a valuable addition to their line. The company's factory at Rockland, Mass., has made a distinct success out of the new Arch-Preserver shoe, and the ladies line manufactured by the Selby Shoe Co., of Portsmouth, Ohio, has also been remarkably encouraging in this new type of footwear. The men's line in the Arch-Preserver shoe will be made at the Canadian factory to meet the demand in Canada and the company are making preparations to go into it very thoroughly.

Square Throats and Smart Lines

In spite of their desire to refrain, as far as possible, from confusing the trade with an offering of too many styles for the coming spring, it has been deemed necessary by Geo. A. Slater, Limited, Montreal, to brighten up their lines with a few new models, and these are largely by revised and added patterns, both in the men's and the women's lines. The square throat effect is much in evidence.

Some new cloths showing silver and gold dots on a light background, as well as a number of fancy ooze leathers in the lighter shades are shown in the women's line, and these used in combination with staple leathers such as patent kid and gun metal, as well as a particularly nice shade of plum kid, add a touch of snappiness which will doubtless appeal particularly to the city trade. These combinations are shown on both high-heeled and low-heeled lasts. In connection with the latter it may be stated that they are showing a new Louis heel which is daintiness itself. They also have a new last carrying a medium heel.

In the men's Invictus samples, the new patterns add materially to the appearance of the finished shoes; while retaining practically the same height as that formerly favored, the vamp lines are much smarter looking, a feature which will readily be accepted by the city trade.

So far as leathers in men's are concerned, Geo. A. Slater, Limited, look for a continued demand for gun metal, although kids will no doubt be popular for dressier purposes. Patents may show a tendency to come back during the present season.

Featuring Browns and Grays

The spring offerings of the Smardon Shoe Co., Montreal, are replete with all the latest distinctions in women's high-grade footwear in welts and turns for the coming season. Three new lasts have been added and the prevailing height is nine inches on most of the imposing models. The colors embrace dark and light grays, dark browns, white and black, while there is a fair representation of cloth tops. The Cuban heel is on a number of models, and also the full-breasted Louis, in both wood and leather, as well as the half-Louis. The new Dutch heel with concave effect and 12/8 in height is much admired. Among the most imposing of the many pretty shoes presented are an all African brown bal with half Louis leather heel and wave cut top; an all pearl gray suede calf bal; another with dark tan eyelet facing, foxing and wing tip and white nubuck vamp and top and 12/8 Cuban heel; a dark tan vamp with African brown kid top, and white offerings in reignskin, calf, kid and nubuck. In low-cuts are seen a pump with dark grey vamp and pearl gray kid quarter and dark gray collar and dark gray covered wood heel with turned sole; an Oxford with gun metal wing tip, foxing and eyelet stay with white suede calf vamp and quarters. There is a very effective range of oxfords in all leathers as well as pumps which, for the most part, are plain with long slender foreparts. Imitation straight and wing tips adorn a number of models. A few two-tone effects are displayed.

Most of the offerings with Louis heels carry long vamps up to nearly four inches in length, while in walking shoes, dark brown leathers predominate. The Smardon spring models are comprehensive, smart and distinctive.

Showing Many Cushion Soles

The Macfarlane Shoe Co., of Montreal, are showing a fine range of samples in infants', children's, misses', growing girls' and women's turns, welts and stitchdowns. Some very attractive models are displayed with both heavy and light soles and among them is a pump carrying a wider and fuller toe than usual, with a 12/8 heel. The Macfarlane line is made in all widths from baby's right through to growing girls'. Hinge lasts have been introduced this season and insure a perfect fit, especially on pumps. The company have adopted eight new lasts with a big range of patterns in all the latest styles. One of the outstanding features is the collection of cushion soles from baby's right through to women's, new lasts having been selected to make up cushion soles, this being one of the lines strongly presented. The company have also recently installed a complete equipment of Goodyear machines for producing women's light weight welts. Another characteristic is a women's last in triple E width, which the firm are showing in both welts and turns. The Macfarlane line is represented in Toronto and Ontario by James Heffering, of the Lumsden building, Toronto.

Strong Showing in Dark Browns

Scott-Chamberlain, Limited, of London, are featuring the Hurrah last with rather narrow recede toe and full fitting qualities. Several models are shown in Zulu brown, Havana brown, cherry red, and other tones in glazed finish. A very striking creation is a dress military boot in khaki calf, and another carries a patent vamp with plain toe and brown nubuck top. Other models carry buck tops in gray and brown while some have saddle vamps. The square throat is being featured. The new combination last called "Narrowbak," which enjoyed such popularity last season, is once more in evidence. Fibre soles are noticed on several offerings in the representative range, along with rubber heels. The flexible welt, which comes in all leathers, is not forgotten. This shoe is very easy on the foot and affords a particularly comfortable tread. Many other handsome and artistic creation-for men are observed, and in the Astoria shoe for women there are quite a number of pleasing models, all welts, with eight-inch tops in gray, brown and two-tone effects, on up-to-date lasts and attractive patterns.

Quiet Tailor-made Effects

The Blachford Shoe Manufacturing Co., Limited, Toronto, are showing a very complete line in the more quiet and tailor-made models. They have adopted a new last, carrying an 18/8 heel, for the ultra stylish footwear, and two very handsome 11/8 and 12/8 heel lasts for street wear.

One of the latest of J. & T. Bell, on Rambler last carrying 14-8 heel

They have added to their range a very complete line of turn footwear and are showing some beautiful models. An all ivory kid 9-inch lace with wood full Louis heel, No. 61 silver gray kid 9-inch polish lace with wood full Louis heel, and white washable kid pump, loop pattern, are among the most handsome models. Owing to their new turn department, they are showing a very complete line in white cloth pumps and Oxfords. These are most attractive, as special attention has been given to several of their many exclusive new patterns. The Blachford Shoe Manufacturing Co., Limited, have installed a very complete in-stock department. The lines carried comprise fourteen of the most attractive lines of the season, and are carried in widths from A to D. They are issuing an in-stock booklet, which promises to be one of the most artistic ever sent to the trade.

Field Mouse, Mahogany and Black

The new samples of Clark Bros., St. Stephen, N.B., are exceptionally inviting. They embrace all the leading colors—field mouse, mahogany and black kid and a number of the models carry the new 13/8 Cuban heel as well as higher Louis and Cuban pedestals. Three new lasts for high cuts have been added this season and two new pump lasts.

A particularly striking shoe is one of field mouse kid quarters and Royal Russia calf vamp, with white welt and wood covered heel. There are several creations in all field mouse and mahogany and the showing in pumps is particularly strong, a number of inset effects being seen. There is a beautiful range in black kid and the imitation square tip is seen on a number of models. A very pretty shoe carries a black kid vamp and field mouse buck top with leather Louis heel. The half-square throat is particularly noticeable.

The range of new models in white and colored canvas of all kinds in ladies', misses' and children's, men's and boys', made by J. F. Clark, Limited, Montreal East, is being shown for the first time and attracting much favorable attention. The samples carry leather and rubber soles and wood, enameled and rubber heels. There is a superb line of Oxfords and pumps as well as high cuts which possess all up-to-date features. The new factory of J. F. Clark, Limited, will specialize exclusively in white footwear.

The Classic Line Greatest Ever

Getty & Scott, Limited, of Galt, have the strongest line of Classic shoes they have ever turned out, in which military features on walking shoes predominate. There is an exceptionally fine range of military boots in nut brown, mahogany and Zulu calf, carrying 12/8 and 14/8 and toes with no boxes, all of remarkably smart appearance. The Chamberlain military shoe is certainly a winner and there is a splendid range of smart Oxfords with fibre and leather soles, imitation wing tips and saddle strap adornment, in tan calf, mahogany and white buck. Pumps are seen in all leathers, the Belmont, with buck inlay and overlap throat effect and carrying full Louis covered heels, being a leader. There is a magnificent range in brown, black, white, gray and field mouse; square throat pumps in McKays, welts and turns, on the new Weaver lasts, which is the final word in lasts, preventing gaping or bagging at the side. An imposing array of Oxfords on pump lasts in white kid, mahogany, tan calf, patent, African brown, chocolate, sky blue and black is distinctive, carrying Cuban and Louis heels from 12/8 up to 18/8 in height.

The Cantilever shoe with flex-arch is seen and the new Vimy pattern in welts and McKays with 4-inch vamp. Plain and imitation tips with fine perforations are observed on many nine-inch bals in tan calf, field mouse, mahogany, gray, white, black and other colors. A particularly appealing shoe is one with African brown vamp, cutaway pattern, with brown buck top, whole quarters, carrying a 10/8 Louis heel. The Seymour pattern with black kid vamp and ivory kid full quarters and white Louis heel is also a winner. A button shoe with Princess overlap fly in brown kid with brown buck top is very pleasing and there is a fine range of turns in all leathers, with full foxing, in ivory, brown, white and gray in 9 and 10 inch cuts. A novelty shoe is a midnight blue kid present time. Classic shoes for this coming season were never more distinctive or outstanding.

Some Unusually Fine Lines

The new samples of the Kingsbury Footwear Co., Montreal, are complete in every respect and embrace the finest line of McKays that they have ever turned out, the leading colors being field mouse, mahogany, chocolate, gray, black and white. A handsome shoe is a field mouse 9-inch bal, with fancy foxing and leather Louis heel. Among the others are an all mahogany calf bal, an all chocolate kid bal, a field mouse gray vamp with fancy foxing, silver gray silk top and enameled Louis heel, an all wine kid bal, and a wine cut vamp with fancy foxing and brown cloth top. A velour calf walking shoe with gray suede top and other offerings add to the interest of the showing. There is a splendid representation of walking boots of all kinds and in pumps and Oxfords the usual high class selections are presented, including an all patent kid pump with white kid inset at the throat. Several models carry imitation tips, while Cuban, Louis and half-Louis heels prevail. The usual range of "So-Easy" cushion soles is shown as well as strap slippers in a number of pleasing varieties and a more than usually wide range of canvas goods.

"THE CHEEKIEST CUSTOMER I EVER MET"

Human nature in the shoe store is a great source of study. One meets all kinds and conditions of humanity, every sort of plea and excuse, various kinds of falsehoods, deceptions, and other mean traits of human nature. The prejudice of individuals, the selfishness, greed, pride, jealousy, etc., of the great human family, or at least certain members of it, are brought to the front.

Here is one hot weather incident which bears our the statement that there is cussedness in human nature and guile in ever mortal being.

"A traveler, thank goodness he did not represent shoes, came into my store the other afternoon and wanted a pair of box kip boots for his boy. My clerk waited upon him and finally secured a pair that fitted the lad. Then the roadman said: 'Well, I do not think I will buy him any footwear today; I will have his mother come in with him at another time.'

"'Well, these box kip boots suit him admirably,' remarked the clerk, 'and you will not obtain better value elsewhere.'

"'I know that,' returned the commercial representative, 'but I do not just think I will take them this afternoon. I will have Mrs. S. and the boy come in a little later.'

"This excuse for not buying was altogether too plausible, and no faith was placed in the promise of the man to bring the boy back again, although fifteen or twenty minutes had been spent in fitting the youth. Nothing more was heard of the incident until three weeks later, when a man, his wife and the boy came in, and," continued the shoeman, "the shop was crowded. The man was the traveler who had called a few days before. He beckoned to one of the clerks, saying that he was in a hurry. The latter stepping up, was met with the request, 'We have a pair of shoes here, which we desire to exchange.'

"'But we do not exchange goods unless they are bought at our store,' returned the clerk, 'and these were not.'

"'Well, I think it will be all right. Kindly call your boss, and I will lay the matter before him.'

"When I came up," continued the retailer, "I immediately recognized the caller as the one who had come in about three weeks before and had several pairs of shoes fitted on his boy, which, by the way, was merely to learn what size the youngster took, and having found that out, he offered a flimsy excuse that his offspring would return with his mother at a later date.

"'I want to exchange these shoes,' spoke up the knight of the grip.

"'But they were not purchased here,' said I, after looking them over, and finding that he had got the pair from a factory in Western Ontario.

"'Well, I know that, but they are too small for the lad. He has not worn them.' Could you not let me have the pair I was looking at the other day and take these in exchange?"

"This was the galliest, nerviest request that I have ever had made to me in my seventeen years' experience in the shoe business, and I turned upon the cool, audacious visitor with the remark:—

All dark brown calf bal, recede toe—by Eagle Shoe Co.

"'Here, I do not want your trade, and I never exchange shoes not purchased here. I am very busy just now, and have neither the time nor the disposition to bother with you.'

"And with that I turned on my heel and left him. I must say the customer had enough good sense to leave without further parley, but he was not the least crestfallen or indignant, apparently, over the treatment handed out to him, which, I feel, was well-deserved."

The Shoe Repair Man

SHOE REPAIRERS WILL HOLD BIG SMOKER

The Toronto Shoe Repairers' Association will hold a big smoker in the Foresters' Building, College street, on Thursday night, September 27th, at which there is expected a large attendance. A splendid programme of vocal and instrumental music will be provided and it is expected that Duncan Cowan, the widely known entertainer, will be present. Every member is invited to come and bring a friend as the guest of the association, who will provide the smokes and a pleasant time is assured all. The arrangements are in the hands of a competent committee, and whatever the association undertakes is always carried out with enthusiasm and eclat.

The officers of the association have issued a circular letter which has been sent to every shoe repair man in Toronto, setting forth certain facts in connection with the organization. It reads as follows:—

"The Toronto Shoe Repairers' Association, after a year of existence, is now firmly established, having a membership of over one hundred, including nearly every leading shoe repair business in the city and having a substantial balance in the bank, the absolute property of the members. The association has established and maintained friendly relations with the wholesale trade generally. It has concluded an arrangement with the Goodyear Rubber Co., whereby members making their purchases of this firm's goods through the association agent, C. F. Robertson, obtain a substantial discount on their orders:

"It has, by promoting fraternal gatherings, etc., created amongst the members of the shoe repair trade a friendly feeling which did not exist before. On July 18th for the first time in the history of Toronto the repairers held a picnic and sports at Niagara Falls, Ont., when over 400 members and friends were present and met the members of the St. Catharines, Hamilton and Welland Associations. Prizes to the value of nearly $200, donated by the wholesale houses, were competed for and a most enjoyable day was spent.

The association is in no sense a combine and has neither used coercive measures to get members nor attempted any interference in the conduct of any member's business, believing that each one is competent to conduct his own business according to his own special ideas.

"It has, however, by mutual co-operation materially advanced and maintained more remunerative prices for repairs, by which action non-members of the association have benefited equally with the members. This has all been accomplished entirely by voluntary effort, not a single cent having been paid in salaries or fees out of the association funds. We want you to join and help us to increase the scope and usefulness of our association. We want the benefit of your experience and ideas. If you have any prejudice against our organization come and tell us. You will receive a respectful hearing and any ideas of yours, if practical, will be acted upon. You will find our meetings most interesting. Every subject of interest to the trade is discussed and advice and information on any matter is freely given by the members. Various entertainments, concerts, euchre drives, etc., have been arranged for the winter months. Come. Be one of us and help us to have a real good time. Ours is the very oldest craft in the world, so why should we not stick together. The annual fee is only three dollars, payable half-yearly. Yours fraternally, C. F. Robertson, president; H. K. Hayward, vice-president; A. Butterworth, financial secretary; S. Burnett, recording secretary."

ANOTHER TYPE OF RUBBER HEEL

George Evans, 463 Yonge street, Toronto, patentee of the Evans Detachable Rubber Heel, is also the patentee of a detachable slip-on heel to be used on any kind of heel—Louis, spool or Cuban. This heel comes in rubber, leather or fibre and is put on by the purchaser very easily and quickly, without nails or fasteners of any kind, being slipped over the regular heel. The elasticity of the upper part of the rubber holds it in position and the heel is interchangeable, thus evenly distributing and counteracting wear. Mr. Evans has just leased the store at 458 Yonge street, Toronto, where he will handle his many footwear specialties and patents in the shape of rubber heels, sole protectors, etc.

SHOULD ELIMINATE NAME "BLUCHER"

In writing to the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL, a leading shoe repair man says: "I think it is time the name 'Blucher' should be dropped from all British made shoes. Why not call them 'Kitchener' boots? No British footwear should be tainted any more with a name of German origin. There is a good opening now, I think for some live manufacturer to change the old name of "Blucher" to the one suggested, or to call this cut of boot after some leading light in the present aggressive campaign at the front. We would certainly like to see one of our Canadian officers in the firing line have this type of shoe named after him."

INSTALLING NEW EQUIPMENT

P. B. Wallace & Son, 186 Adelaide street west, Toronto, report that the following shoemakers in Ontario have installed Landis stitchers, placing their orders within the past three weeks:—J. Blum, Owen Sound; J. V. Calderone, Peterboro; M. Veneranda, Peterboro; F. R. Clarke, Hamilton; Jno. Thornton, Hamilton; Jas. McGall, Kingston and Jno. Henley, Belleville. Also the following have installed finishing machines made by the Progressive Shoe Machinery Co., of Minneapolis:—Dan Gultinan, Oshawa; J. V. Calderone, Peterboro; W. Petrie, Peterboro; H. Woxman, Hamilton; J. Valliear, Midland; T. J. Taylor & Son, Sarnia; R. E. LeSueur, Sarnia; C. Makey, Hamilton, and H. Murfin, Hamilton. They also have large orders from the Grey Nuns' Hospital, Montreal, the Whitby Convalescent Home, and the College street Convalescent Home. These machines have all been placed in the past three weeks.

BE READY WITH SUGGESTIONS

It is highly commendable for a helper, dutifully working for his employer's interest or for his own, to be straightforward and ready in advancing to his employer any suggestions he may have relative to improved methods for turning out better work in his department. It never pays to hide one's light under a bushel. Any helper who loses his job because of such conduct will readily find a better one in a shop where his loyalty is appreciated.

CANADIAN FIRMS CALL FOR MORE ARMY SHOES

Prompt Action Taken by the Manufacturers, Who Petition the Government to Make Immediate Move in Seeing that Production is Speeded Up—All Boots For Canadian Overseas Forces Should Be Made in Canada

THE action of the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL in calling for larger orders for ankle boots for the use of the Canadian Overseas Forces instead of the trifling one for 25,000 pairs that was awarded a few days ago, has aroused much interest, not only in the trade, but in parliamentary circles as well.

The information contained in the edition was a revelation to many members of the House who were not aware that matters had been in such a quiescent state for so long a period. The need for Canada looking after the footwear and leather supplies of her own men was pointed out and the fact emphasized that the Dominion should be given the opportunity to furnish the requirements of Canadian soldiers whether at home or abroad.

Letters received from the Premier, members of the Cabinet, the leader of the Opposition and other representative men, including prominent shoe and leather manufacturers, warmly endorsed the stand taken by the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL and expressed the conviction that Canada should receive sufficient orders to take care of the requirements of Canadian boys at the front.

One parliamentary representative who has closely studied the situation says: "I can quite understand that there might be some objection on the part of the War Office to get a separate stock of shoes for the Canadians, but this could be overcome if the English authorities would give Canada a sample of the boot which they want and let the Canadian manufacturers make it for them. We can make anything here in Canada that they can in Great Britain. I have taken the matter up with the Minister of Militia and also with the Premier, but they do not seem to have overcome the objection of the War Office. I am again directing attention to the matter and will see if something cannot be done."

Canadian manufacturers, in view of the few orders which have been awarded during the last year and a half for army boots, have taken action and passed a resolution to the effect that as the Canadian Government some time ago consummated an arrangement with the Imperial Authorities whereby the Canadian Overseas Forces are supplied with boots made in England, and now that the shipping facilities are much improved and as Canadian manufacturers as well as employes must eventually pay for the boots supplied to the Canadian Overseas Forces, they consider it the duty of every Canadian manufacturer to speed up present production with a view to minimizing any detrimental industrial reaction. The manufacturers are willing to do their utmost to meet the requirements of the War Purchasing Commission for boots for the Canadian Overseas Forces and have, therefore, petitioned the Ottawa authorities to give the matter immediate attention in order to bring about the desired result.

Eastern Manufacturers Meet

A meeting was held in Montreal on September 12th at which there was a representative attendance of shoe manufacturers in order to discuss ways and means to induce the Government to place more contracts in Canada. The following were in attendance: Geo. A. Slater, President; Joseph Daoust, of Daoust, Lalonde & Co; N. R. Feltes, of Ames-Holden-McCready; Ralph Locke, of Dufresne & Locke; E. Corbeil, of Corbeil, Limited; W. F. Martin, of Kingsbury Footwear Co.; C. Lafleur, of the St. Henri Shoe Co., and others.

The following resolution was carried, which speaks for itself:—

Whereas, the Canadian Government, some time ago, consummated an arrangement with the Imperial authorities, whereby the Canadian Overseas Forces are supplied with boots made in England,

And, whereas, despite the loss of business to our industry in Canada, this association has remained quiescent up to the present, owing to the existing conditions which it deemed sufficient to give due cause to the Canadian Government to become and to continue party to such an arrangement,

And, whereas, these conditions have altered, owing to the curtailment of orders for munitions, thereby promising the release of space in bottoms which could now be utilized for the carrying of boots to England,

And, whereas, our industry faces a detrimental reaction, owing to the reduction in the purchasing power of the public, as a result of the curtailment of munition orders,

And, whereas, we as manufacturers as well as our employes must eventually pay for those boots supplied to the Canadian Overseas Forces,

And, whereas, our industry and those immediately dependent on it, as well as the country as a whole, would benefit by the purchase of boots in Canada for the use of the Canadian Overseas Forces, through the distribution of the monies involved,

And, whereas, we consider it the duty of every Canadian manufacturer to speed present production with a view to minimizing any detrimental industrial reaction resultant upon the declaration of peace,

And, whereas, we are willing to do our utmost to meet the requirements of the War Purchasing Commission for boots for the Canadian Overseas Forces, exerting all our efforts to filling all those requirements to the entire satisfaction of the War Purchasing Commission.

Therefore, be it resolved, that the Prime Minister, the Minister of Militia, and any others whose influence may be necessary, be petitioned to give the matter immediate attention, with a view to the taking of such action as will best conduce to the end desired.

Copies of the resolution have been forwarded to Sir Robert Borden; Sir Geo. E. Foster, Minister of Trade and Commerce; Sir Edward Kemp, Minister of Militia; Hon. C. J. Doherty, Minister of Justice, and others. The association appointed a committee to discuss ways and means and also to co-operate in the matter of handling business after the war. This committee consists of Messrs. Slater, Feltes, Locke and Daoust.

The Purchases Up To Present

A member of the Government writing the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL says: "Since the war has opened the Government has purchased 1,600,000 pairs of ankle boots and 730,000 pairs of rest shoes from Canadian manufacturers and our soldiers in England have been supplied therewith.

Fortuna Skiving Machine

IF you skive leather, felt, cork, canvas or rubber you can increase your output and lower your cost of production by using Fortuna Skiving Machines.

Here are some of the features of the Fortuna that keep it in the lead of all other skiving machinery :

1. It requires but one-quarter horse-power.
2. It cannot injure the hands of the operator.
3. It is the only skiving machine with ball bearings.
4. It creates no dust; the skiving comes off in one piece.
5. It skives straight or irregular shaped pieces equally well.
6. It leaves no ridge or shoulder on the stock unless wanted.
7. It does not require a skilled operator. A boy or girl will do.
8. It has a cylindrical knife which can be ground while the machine is working.
9. It makes a perfectly conical skive from nothing up to two inches.
10. It produces exceptionally high-class work not obtainable on any other machine or by hand.

The Fortuna is made in four different models. Put your requirements up to us and we will advise you for your economy.

Orders have not been given of recent date because the department was over-stocked. The boots are now being gradually issued from the stores. The trench boot is issued to our soldiers out of the Imperial ordnance stores at the front, in favor of which method there are obvious advantages. The matter, however, is now being taken up by the Militia Department and further information may be possible within a short time. My information is that the British Government is fully able to supply their own soldiery and is contributing largely to the supply of some of her Allies. I am making enquiries at the present time as to the possibility and as to the exact condition of things in the above respect. Meanwhile, it would be well if the manufacturers would make thorough enquiries, as I have no doubt they are doing, as to the possibility of furnishing footwear to the Allied governments and it might be that the United States' demand for the equipment of her army might open up possibilities for some supply in that direction, as it is doing for manufactures of other commodities needed for war purposes."

No Back Seat for Them

An eastern firm, not in the shoemaking line, pertinently observes:—"We cannot see any good reason why Canadian shoe and leather manufacturers should have to take a back seat when it comes to equipping the soldier boys. Our shoe manufacturers, as you know, are able to produce the finest heavy service shoes in the world, and as for the leather industry, the very fact that thousands of tons of leather are exported each year to England shows that our product must be all that can be desired over there. You may depend upon our hearty co-operation in any movement which will bring about the long-desired result of seeing our Canadian army, which we are all paying to support, equipped with Canadian shoes, made by our own labor and materials."

BOOTH LOOKED LIKE SHOE STORE

One of the most perfectly decorated booths at the recent Western Fair, held in London, Ont., was that of Chas. A. Ahrens, Limited, Kitchener, manufacturers of "Ahrens" and "Chums" shoes. The display was in charge of S. G. Amero, representative of the firm. Mr. Amero is also manager of the Kaufman Rubber Co., London Branch, and sells the Woelfle shoe, Kitchener. The booth represented the front of a shoe store and was dressed the same. Yellow was used in the background and the trimmings were white and purple bunting. At the back and on both sides there were exhibited several samples of leather including box calf, tan calf, smoked elk, chocolate elk and kip. The firm showed the insoles, outsoles, counters, heels and uppers of shoes in the different processes of manufacture. A line of "Chums," which are girls' and children's stitchdowns, attracted a lot of attention. This range appears to be meeting with a wide measure of favor. Chas. A. Ahrens, Limited, were the only exhibitors of shoes at the Exhibition. On the right is seen

Mr. Amero and on the left Gordon Klein, who is assisting him on the road. The Western Fair was attended by an exceptionally large number of shoe retailers for many miles around.

THE REPAIRING OF CLOTH TOPS

The repairing of cloth top shoes is the cause of considerable perplexity among the repairers. Their introduction has come along at a pace more rapid than a fashion fad would warrant because of the scarcer supply of upper leather. The trouble to repairers arises through the use of so many delicate shades of cloth which become so readily soiled that oftentimes they need the attention of an expert cleaner who makes a specialty of that kind of work. It is said that this is what prompted many dyeing and cleaning houses to put in shoe repairing machinery. Over in St. Louis there is an instance of a large and widely known dyeing and cleaning house with stores all over the city who have recently installed shoe repairing machinery and are now catering for repair business at all of these stores.

THE WESTERN OUTLOOK

Situation as Seen by Our Special Representative—First Hand Impressions of Conditions West of the Great Lakes—A Great Crop and Great Expectations—Everybody Confident of Good Business

IT being his first visit to the West your representative felt a little anxious as to how a greenhorn from the "effete East" would be received by business men of our great Western centres, but was agreeably surprised upon his arrival at Winnipeg to be accorded the glad hand of fellowship, not only by the trade, but others he met. One is certainly impressed with the breezy, good-natured welcome of these wide-awake Western people whom I have found the same wherever I have gone, whether Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta. It seems to be in the air.

Winnipeg has about it the air of progressiveness and expectation that one finds even in the smaller towns of the West. The ideas and aspirations all partake of the sunshine and breath of the prairies, and if there is one characteristic more than another peculiar to the West it is extreme hopefulness. I notice that a year ago the JOURNAL had a good deal to say about the size, development and characteristics of many of these Western cities, so that I am going to confine my remarks to impressions of the business conditions and ideas that prevail. I may say that now the big crop is practically assured, everybody is evidencing a spirit of confidence and optimism that is making itself felt everywhere.

An illustration of this was afforded by a conversation with the manager of one of the principal retail stores of Winnipeg, who said the farmers were buying the best and most expensive goods. Retail business just now, I was told by the head of another large establishment, was the best in the history of the concern.

As an evidence of the enthusiasm of the rank and file of the city and town dwellers in regard to the crops, I found out that a large proportion of the population this year took its holidays harvesting. Girls who never did work with their hands before made up stooking parties and went forth in automobiles, provided by business houses, to gather in golden sheaves and put them in "stooks." In this way a good deal was accomplished that would have had to be left undone on account of the great scarcity of farm labor.

Record Crop Harvested.—A careful estimate of the crop prepared just as this letter goes forward gives the following figures: Wheat, 214,250,528 bushels; oats, 187,028,065; barley, 38,781,060; flax, 6,611,463 bushels.

The value of the crops is placed roughly at $575,000,000, as against $502,000,000 for the crop of 1915; $225,000,000 for the crop of 1913, the year prior to the war, and $136,000,000 for the crop of 1910.

Saskatchewan Crop Conditions.—It is estimated that the southern part of Saskatchewan will have a wheat crop averaging about eighteen bushels to the acre, with samples as fine as for many years past. Oats have picked up and barley also, and will make a good showing. In the central district storms have effected the crops somewhat, but the yield will be about the same as the south. In the north western parts of the province the results are better, giving forty or forty-five bushels to the acre for wheat. The crops are now practically all in, and the yield is said to average from twenty to twenty-five bushels to the acre.

Breaking new ground for imperial needs

Crops in Alberta.—The harvest in Alberta was practically completed on September 1st, which is considerably earlier than last year. The volume, as far as wheat is concerned, is not quite as large as last year, but it will grade higher. Some say that it will show the largest percentage of No. 1 ever yielded by Alberta. There was a serious loss by hail in the High River district amounting, it is thought, to about a quarter of a million bushels. The average yield, however, for the province will be nearly thirty bushels to the acre. The oat and flax crops are particularly good in Alberta.

ASK FOR A SHOW DOWN

People spend money for advertising with a carelessness they would not tolerate in anything else. They buy shoes and furniture and insist on the last stitch or nail being properly placed. When it comes to advertising, however, they look on the whole affair like putting up money on a horse race or backing a number on a roulette wheel. Why shouldn't a publication be compelled to make a show down of its circulation, whether it be a periodical or ordinary town weekly? Yet you will find hard-headed business men, who exact every discount and watch every other expenditure, being buncoed by advertising men and newspaper proprietors who dodge this question. In giving some sane advice on this topic, the "Boot and Shoe Recorder" says:—

"We once heard the following speech from the advertising manager of a live semi-weekly edition, to a merchant who was demurring and 'kicking' about the rates charged by the live newspaper, as compared with another paper in the same town. They were standing at the door of the store, and he said: 'Do you see that fellow with a hand-cart coming across the square? Well, if you want to go over and look, you will find that that cart contains the entire weekly output of the T—, on its way to the postoffice. That's the whole ball of wax—every paper they send out. Now, in less than half an hour, you will see old John Rau come round the corner of the street, with his dray; and he will have on it nine three-bushel mail bags, filled with our weekly edition, and anyone of the bags has nearly twice as many papers in it as that hand-cart has. There are two villages up the river, W— and L—, to which we send more copies of the B— than the whole T— circulation. Now, if you will just let me sit here, I will watch for John Rau, and when he comes you can open any of the bags you want to, and see for yourself what is in them. You know yourself that I don't talk much about competitors, but I don't call this competition; it is fakery and robbery, at the expense of you as well as me.'

"He was telling the exact truth; and the dray did come and was examined; and there was one less kicker on that ad man's list of customers. But it is seldom indeed that so graphic and clean-cut a show-down can be had. If it could occur oftener, there would be fewer such sheets grafting a living out of local merchants, and the newspapers of genuine circulation would not lose by the 'nibbling' competition of periodicals whose circulation is a hollow shell."

Enclosed you will find a Dominion Express money order for one dollar to renew my subscription to the "Shoe and Leather Journal" for another year. I might state that I would not want to be without your Journal.

Yours truly,

A VETERAN IN THE SHOE GAME

W. F. Tanner, who recently joined the selling staff of Blachford, Davies & Co., Toronto, and will cover the Maritime Provinces, is a veteran shoeman, having spent all his life in the game. He is a native of Pictou, N.S., where his father ran a custom shoemaking shop for a great many years and passed away in 1907, at the ripe old age of 92. W. F. Tanner had charge of the cutting and fitting work in his father's establishment and looked after the selling of factory-made shoes as well. In time the custom work dwindled down, so that only one man was employed and more attention was devoted to factory goods. In all Mr. Tanner spent some thirty-five years in the retail footwear business, but his health not being as robust as he desired, he decided to make a change whereby he could spend more time in the open. He joined the road staff of the C. E. McKeen Co., Quebec, covering the Maritime Provinces, and was next with the Drummondville Shoe Co. for about a year. During the past five years he was with Corbeil, Limited, Montreal, looking after the trade in the Maritime Provinces.

Mr. Tanner was, in his youth, an expert rifle shot and a sergeant in the old Pictou Battery. He is a brother of Hon. Senator C. E. Tanner, of Pictou, and has two boys overseas—Albert, of Winnipeg, who enlisted with the 59th Battery and is now in France, and Harry, of Pictou, who joined the 64th Battalion and was wounded at Courcellette by an exploding shell, fragments of which went through his leg and also cut him about the neck and face. After being in the hospital for many months, he has latterly been in training for a lieutenancy at Shorncliffe Camp, Eng.

An attractive and original display of women's stylish footwear by the shoe department of Chapples Limited, Fort William, Ont.

The Department of Trade and Commerce has received samples of boots required by the Municipality of Petrograd. The city of Petrograd has asked for the prices at which such boots can be purchased in Canada.

A letter read to the Maisonneuve aldermen at the meeting held recently from the controllers and aldermen of Montreal, expressed criticism of the recent legislation in Maisonneuve to induce shoe and other manufacturers to locate in Maisonneuve. In reply, the Maisonneuve Council stated their desire that the city of Montreal would "take some trouble to get the exact facts of the situation before giving publicity to an erroneous, malevolent and out-of-place resolution." Ald. Gelinas said that through all the speeches and tactics of the Montreal controllers and aldermen ran one motive, and that was to force Maisonneuve into annexation. The city of Maisonneuve, he added, did not intend to give any money to the companies which were coming there. It merely offered certain privileges to induce the manufacturers to locate there.

John F. Clark and James F. Clark, of Clark Bros., Limited, manufacturers, St. Stephen, N.B., spent a few days recently in Montreal on business. They were accompanied by C. Hazen McGee, of St. George, N.B., who represents them in the Maritime Provinces.

R. L. Savage, of Toronto, and family, have returned home after spending the summer months at Lac Marois, Quebec. Mr. Savage, who represents Clark Bros., of St. Stephen, N.B., in the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec, has a fine line of spring models.

H. F. Foote, of Peterboro, is covering portions of Manitoba, Alberta and Saskatchewan for the Blachford Shoe Mfg. Co., Toronto.

D. A. Leonard, of Toronto, representing American-British-Canadian Distributors, left recently on an extended selling trip throughout Western Canada. A. E. Elmer, of Montreal, formerly with George A. Slater, Limited, is now connected with the A. B. C. Distributors and is covering Eastern and Northern Ontario.

The Blachford Shoe Mfg. Co., Toronto, have recently gone very extensively into the making of whole cloth pumps and Oxfords for next season. The turn outfit lately installed is putting the firm in the very forefront for this line of goods in the Dominion.

J. George Robinson, of James Robinson, Montreal, has returned from a two weeks' trip to Quebec and the Maritime Provinces.

Pte. Archie Ellis, who before his enlistment was employed in the Weston shoe factory at Campbellford, Ont., and whose mother lives at 3 Pape avenue, Toronto, was recently killed in action at the front. He was only 19 years old. His brother, Pte. William Ellis, is in France, and his father, who is a South African veteran, has been invalided home after service overseas.

Work is progressing apace on the new factory of the Woelfle Shoe Co., Limited, Kitchener, Ont., and it is expected that the building will be completed by October 1st, when the present factory capacity will be doubled. The company, since its organization a few years ago, has made

A BOSTONIAN'S ANNUAL VISIT

Frank J. A. Perry, of Hoag & Walden, Inc., Lynn, Mass., recently paid his annual visit to Toronto, a city in which he always likes to spend a few days. He was born at Eastwood, near Woodstock, Ont., and goes to see the old farm where his father, over 91 years of age, still lives, hale and hearty and working in the fields. When Frank dons his "jumpers" and gets a pitchfork in his hand everybody rejoices. Even the cattle and horses dance to see him. Mr. Perry learned the shoe business in Woodstock, then went with John Agnew, in Brantford, and next with the J. D. King Co., in Toronto. About twenty years ago he decided that Boston was his field and has more than made good there. "Yes," he said, and his big eyes twinkled and he ran his fingers up through his bushy white locks, "I've a wife, a set of twins and one singlet, which, including myself, makes five hungry mouths to feed," and he smiled in a satisfied way.

Even the cows and horses dance when Frank comes home.

WANT FAIR WAGE CLAUSE INSERTED

E. W. A. O'Dell, Hamilton, general organizer of the Boot and Shoe Workers' Union, attended a meeting of the Toronto Local Union last week at which a strong resolution was passed in the way of a protest to the Federal Government in the matter of no army shoe contracts being awarded to Toronto firms. The Union urged Mr. O'Dell, the general organizer, to see that all contracts entered into between the Militia Department and shoe factories should embody a fair wage clause the same as is provided for in all contracts allotted by the Imperial Government. Mr. O'Dell has been in communication with the Minister of Labor, the Minister of Militia, the Director of Contracts, and others, advocating the insertion of such a clause. He has received replies stating that the matter will be taken up and dealt with, and hopes at an early date to be successful in securing the inclusion of this important stipulation.

RESPONSIBILITY OF THE DEALER

Surely the responsible dealer knows his own mind when he places an order—no undue pressure is brought to bear on him. He has the right to buy or refuse, leaving it to the manufacturer or his representative to solicit elsewhere if he is so minded. It is essential that these points be borne in mind and that shoe dealers who are earnest in their desire to preserve good relations with their supply houses co-operate to suppress the growing evil of cancellations. Failure to do so can only result in lowering the standard of the shoe trade among the business institutions of this country.

GIVE ATTENTION TO WINDOWS

Many repairers do not pay enough attention to the rearranging of their shops and window advertising. Make your shop and window so attractive that "lookers" will be tempted to buy. Change your displays not less than once each week and oftener if possible in order to get the best results. It takes considerable time, is not expensive, and has a good effect upon the customer. We have noticed some show windows that have the same appearance for months, and stocks have been in the same place for years. Nothing impresses a customer more than to see frequent changes in displays. Add as much to your old stock as you have room for. If you are unable to add to your stock, let the old stock have the appearance of new. A changing around of stocks and display windows is as necessary to a repair shop as a fertilizer is to a farmer. A good window display and a neat, orderly interior will literally pull people to your shop, and when once the public gets talking about your repair business, greater sales will be the result. Every change in your establishment is an advertisement.

22-FOOT GOODYEAR SHOE REPAIRING OUTFIT

MODEL N

THIS Outfit represents the highest development in shoe repairing machinery, and meets every demand of modern shoe repairing. It embraces all the essential processes for making new shoes from old ones, giving the maximum of equipment and efficiency in the minimum space. The Outfit has the Goodyear Stitching Machine with all its improvements, including a new style steam generator which uses gas or gasolene for generating the steam, and operates automatically, thereby insuring a uniform heat for keeping the wax in proper condition and requiring little attention from the operator. The Edge Trimming Machine has the new feature of the two shafts, being operated by a single belt, and the cutter grinder is attached directly to the main shaft. This arrangement gives better results with less power.

The Buffing and Scouring Machine has a shaft 57 inches long and carries the following equipment:

- | | |
|--|----------------------------------|
| 2 Split Bottom Buffing Rolls | 2 Flat X-Ray Hee Scouring Wheels |
| 2 "C" Shape X-Ray Heel Scouring Wheels | 1 Heel Breast Scouring Wheel |
| 1 Pin Wheel Pad Complete | |

A powerful Blower System removes the dust resulting from the trimming, buffing and scouring operations, and is designed to overcome certain objectionable features of other blowers.

The Finishing Machine has a 78-inch shaft which has all the necessary equipment for black or russet work:

- | | |
|--|--|
| 2 Corrugated Rubber Shank Finishing Wheels | 1 Corrugated Rubber Heel Finishing Wheel |
| 1 Corrugated Rubber Bottom Finishing Roll | 2 Shank and Bottom Brushes |
| 2 Heel Brushes | 1 Stitch Cleaning Brush |
| 1 Levelling Roll | 1 Bead and Wheel |

At the end of the Outfit is the Oscillating Edge Setting Machine which is fitted with union irons and in its motions duplicates hand workmen with quicker and better results.

Each of the machines is operated independently by a friction drive pulley, so that it is necessary to use only those machines which the operator may require. This feature means a saving of power.

All the machines are firmly mounted on legs and driven by a countershaft with carefully adjusted bearings, so that the Outfit runs with very little vibration, and is in every way most efficient.

The Tale of the Joyous Foot

Being the short story about a shoe—to which has been added much that tends to comfort and satisfaction

Tally-Ho is a shoe of many parts

ALL shoes have some good points. These may be—style—material—finish—or comfort and health features. But—it is rare for any one shoe to have all of them. TALLY-HO Shoe has them all. That is why it is the shoe of the Joyous Foot.

The Tally - Ho Policy

The curse of the shoe business is a multiplicity of styles. Fads, freaks and novelties—made in the attempt to anticipate styles—are the greatest extravagance of the shoe trade. The Tally-Ho shoemakers will avoid this waste by concentrating on a few styles. Concentration means standardization — standardization means economy. In this instance it means that real war-time economy which enables one to have the best at the least possible cost. This Tally-Ho policy of confining its line to twelve standard styles on six lasts—means to the storekeeper a quick turn-over—clean, fresh stock—complete size ranges all the time and authentic styles. It enables him to get fresh goods through the jobber quickly—and relieves him of the burden of carrying heavy stocks.

The Tally-Ho Shoe will be a big money maker for you. Ask your jobber—or ask us.

Tally-ho Shoes

Tally-Ho exclusive features are these:

1. Tally-Ho Corset Arch Support—built into every shoe.
2. Tally-Ho 2 in 1 Cushion Sole—an important feature.
3. The Bull Dog Out-sole—better wearing than either rubber or leather—waterproof—flexible—non-slip—guaranteed service—finishes like leather.
4. Authentic Styles—originated in American Tally-Ho Shop.
5. No-jar Rubber Heel—springy—resilient—pure rubber.
6. Sani-tex Health Lining—supplied with kid shoes.

RINEX OAK SOLES

Rinex Oak is the latest and best improvement in a fibre sole. Its color matches exactly that of oak leather. This is not a mere surface coating, but a through and through color which is always the same, however buffed or worn down.

Rinex Oak is much tougher and firmer than any fibre sole thus far produced. It can be channelled and stitched just the same as a leather sole.

Rinex Oak is always waterproof, and it will wear as long, if not longer, than the choicest sole leather.

If you want to sell your customers the very latest improvement in shoe-soling tell your manufacturer to use Rinex Soles of Oak color on your next order.

THE ARMY SHOE QUESTION

Manufacturers and Militia Department Discuss the Issue—Blame Placed on British Authorities—Opposed To Two Standards of Army Footwear—Negotiating to Have Canadian Shoes Made in Canada on English Lasts

SEVERAL meetings have been held by shoe manufacturers at which the question of the footwear requirements of the Canadian overseas forces have been discussed. The Militia Department claims that about 1,600,000 pairs of ankle boots have been contracted for so far in Canada, which, of course, does not begin to represent the footwear used by our soldiers during the past three years. It is claimed that at least five pairs of service boots per annum are required to meet the bare necessities of our army behind the lines and twelve pairs for those who are engaged in actual warfare. This would mean that in the past three years there have been used by our overseas forces over five million pairs. These have been made in England in spite of the fact that there has been a shortage in labor there that has seriously handicapped the industry and left supplies of civilian footwear so restricted that various expedients have had to be resorted to in order to keep the feet of the people off the ground.

The claim is made by the British authorities that it is "inconvenient" to have two standards of footwear for men on the field, and although Canada has had to pay for the equipment, she is not only compelled to see her soldiers wearing shoes that they do not regard as equal in comfort or wear to Canadian made shoes, but the shoe industry of the country, which is crippled to the extent represented by her three or four hundred thousand volunteer soldiers, must continue to look on while their footwear needs are supplied by others. With the embargo that exists on leather a further hardship is involved, as we cannot even provide the leather for our soldiers' footwear.

It may be urged that there are not sufficient transportation facilities and to some extent this excuse may have been valid when bottoms were taxed to provide space for munitions and food supplies, but to-day there ought to be no difficulty in forwarding leather or shoes from this standpoint. If Canada were not "paying the shot" little could be said, but it is not too much to ask that when she is called upon to provide the equipment she should be permitted to make it out of Canadian materials and with Canadian labor. As it is soldiers are constantly writing home to friends asking that Canadian made shoes be sent them.

If the Imperial authorities are bent upon having uniformity of style and make why not have a standard last and pattern furnished to the Canadian authorities and the boots made here to correspond to English models. We understand negotiations are in progress with this end in view, and although the Imperial viewpoint is difficult to appreciate here, we are sure that Canadian manufacturers as well as Canadian soldiers will fall into line and wear "Made in Canada" footwear, even though built upon English lasts.

With munition production easing off and conditions becoming more normal in many other lines, there will be plenty of reason for encouraging in every possible way the natural industries of the country. In spite of the abundance of money through the splendid crops, there is a spirit of quiet economy abroad that has made itself felt in more ways than one throughout the country. It is to be hoped that every encouragement will be afforded by the government to the demand to furnish as much stability as possible to our regular commercial activities so essential to the success of the financial as well as the military interests of the country and the cause.

Value of Good Slogan for Your Store

Its Worth and Meaning for Live Establishment—An Effective Means of Attracting Trade and Putting the Stamp of Individuality in Your Store—Just Like a Reliable Trade Mark—The Slogans That Some Enterprising Retailers Have Made Popular

WHAT is distinctive or outstanding about your shoe store? What singles it out from the rest of your competitors? What differentiates your place of business from its neighbors? Are you content to merge your interests with the crowd or would you prefer to have a striking establishment—one that is recognized and favorably spoken of by everyone?

There are several effective ways in which you can bring your shoe business to the front. One is by superior service; another is by an efficient staff; another by splendid window displays; another by clever and convincing advertising; another by latest and most up-to-date stock; another by brilliant lighting and an impressive front; another by exceptional facilities or conspicuous location, etc. But possibly as forceful as any of these, is to give your place a business identity.

Why not have a sort of trade mark or brand for your store, the same as manufacturers in all lines have for their goods. The result of the trade-mark is a permanent and tangible asset; it becomes so fixed in the mind of the public that it cannot be readily sidetracked or overlooked.

How the Idea Has Expanded

The trademark idea is one that has grown in favor in the past years. A good trade-mark may not add to the value of the goods it represents, but at least it has a tendency to keep these products in the public mind, and by so doing adds to their saleability. So much so is this the case, that there are large firms doing business to-day who put a valuation on the names they have chosen for their goods in several instances upwards of the million mark. The word or phrase has become so well known that people thinking of the article naturally think of the name, and just as naturally demand the goods by the name. In this way a mere word or phrase has become a tangible asset.

Merchants have been comparatively slow to recognize the value of such an idea. For one reason or another they have not adopted this simple principle that has been of so great value in the manufacturing world, and so they have depended entirely on the old conventional methods to draw trade. Among the merchants, however, who are alive to the value of such devices are several alert shoe retailers. It is their idea that a phrase may very well be used to differentiate their emporiums from all the other stores so that this differentiation may be of value. To make the public not only think of a shoe store, but to make them think of your particular premises by the unconscious association with some well known phrase means much on the journey of business success and expansion.

The object of all advertising is to make an establishment more widely known, to sell more goods and to create such a strong bond of mutual interest with the public that callers become permanent patrons and transient trade is converted into regular channels. In order to stamp the personality or individuality of a shop upon the mind of the masses the wide awake and aggressive dealer will settle upon some fixed policy or give to his establishment some one thing not possessed by his competitors.

It Is The Different That Tallies

The store that is different, the shoes that are distinctive, in fact, anything specific, so long as it possesses worth and merit, will generally secure the business. In nearly every centre there are a number of people who have no fixed place for buying footwear, groceries, hardware, provisions, dry goods, etc., and if by any special appeal or breezy, timely and convincing advertising the attention of your establishment is directed or brought home to this class, your trade is bound to increase. When such customers enter your place, it is then up to you to see that they come back. If they do not, it must be through some oversight, neglect or indifference on your part.

Remember it costs money to get people in your store and when they have entered if you do not convert them into purchasers—the great majority, at any rate—there is something radically wrong with you, your staff or your stock.

What Names Readily Come Up

Think of women's shoes or of men's shoes that are sold all over Canada, and the name of certain brands immediately comes to mind. The unbranded shoe is unknown and its praises are unsung. Then back of every brand or trademark stands the reputation of the house for quality, service and value. Why not have a store trade mark—one that is coupled up with your establishment in every announcement that you make? There are certain catchy expressions, appropriate titles, forceful phrases, or effective slogans that are quite easily remembered, and become associated with a local enterprise until the wording is known almost as well, if not more so, than the location of the store or the name of the proprietor.

That a slogan has power, value and effect in associating certain ideas, such as service, wear, quality, fit, finish, value, style, stock, etc., is undoubted. Every year more enterprising shoe houses are adopting something of this character to individualize them and make bids for a bigger and better business than ever for fall.

There is no doubt that a phrase, a title or combination of words that has meaning and worth, attached to the store name and printed in connection with its advertising, on its letterheads, envelopes, etc., is good trade puller, and when properly and judiciously used drives home the particular features of a particular store. Much more might be said upon the advisability of adopting a slogan for your shoe store.

Here are some of the slogans which are used by a number of leading shoe establishments.

Leather Trade Jottings

What is Seen and Heard Amongst the Trade—Views
and News of the Leather Trade at Home and Abroad

THE hide market which has been somewhat steadier for some time past, took a decidedly active turn the beginning of last week, and went up two or three points on some lines. No one seems to be able to satisfactorily account for the change, as there has been apparently a plentiful supply of raw stock all along and tanners had abundant chance for getting all they wanted at current prices. Packers who have tanning plants have, however, been quietly putting down what hides they could, and have evidently had more confidence in leather futures than the regular trade. Heavy hides have been fairly well bought up and even the lighter varieties begin to show the effects of the general firmness. It is claimed that tanners have held back so long that they are compelled to come into the market, and that the next few weeks will see an acceleration of leather buying that will change the situation still further. At all events tanners do not seem to anticipate a drop of any serious moment from present market quotations.

Leather Trade.—Business is going steadily forward on a moderate basis. There are stories of considerable quantities being picked up here and there in anticipation of quickened conditions in the near future, but any such purchases are kept pretty dark. A fair amount of trade is being done for immediate needs and some concessions have been made, although no noticeable deviations have been made in staple lines from the ruling quotations. Shoe manufacturers, especially in the East, where so many make shoes for jobbers, are still quiet and some of the plants are only working on part time. Orders for sorting trade are coming in gradually, but in very attenuated form. Dealers seem to be feeling their way and are hoping against hope for something to happen that will enable them to replenish their stocks at lower prices. Jobbers themselves are, therefore, buying in a "hand to mouth" fashion and using the same tactics on the manufacturer as the dealer uses on them. Shoe manufacturers do not seem to expect cheaper leather, but in the absence of substantial orders they are holding back for confidence to manifest itself through shoe buyers. Conditions are very much the same in this respect as they were a year ago. Everybody held back and leather climbed steadily up to the disadvantage of the over cautious and gainsaying members of the trade who got into the game late and lost considerably thereby.

American Situation.—The situation on the other side of the line is thus succinctly summed up by "Hide and Leather."

Last year there was tremendous production of shoes and leather for home and foreign trade. America was not at war and there was no British embargo. To-day America is suffering from the reaction caused by over-production of shoes and leather in 1916. While our exports are to-day blocked by foreign embargoes, our country is at war, and making tremendous demands for merchandise of all kinds for war purposes. The severe wave of economy that followed the shock of war declaration in America is passing away, and confidence is gradually replacing fear and uncertainty. Bountiful harvests now seem absolutely certain in America, and easily salable at highly profitable prices to the growers. Civilian trade is, therefore, becoming more aggressive and is probably stimulated by reductions in prices on shoes and other leather goods.

English Conditions.—Some say that there is still abundance of leather in the British Isles, in spite of the tremendous war orders put through for the Allies as well as her own forces, but nevertheless in certain lines there must be a genuine shortage. This shortage and the desire to keep up the supply of civilian footwear at reasonable prices has caused the movement to supply "standardized" footwear which will be made first in men's and youths' lines, but will no doubt be followed by women's and misses' goods. The men's are to sell retail at from $3.50 to $5.00 a pair, and the youths' from $2.50 to $3.50. They are to be made of substantial materials outside those required for army shoes, and are intended for not only the artisan classes but all who have been seriously affected by the switching of production to army footwear.

Japanese Leather Industry.—"During the course of the present great war," says the "Leather World," "the Japanese leather industry has developed to an extent quite undreamt-of, as, during the past six years, the production has increased six-fold. The leather industry of Corea has benefited most by this state of affairs. Hitherto that country possessed almost exclusively home tanneries, and small home industries for the manufacture of leather and leatherware. The absolutely gigantic orders from the Russian Government for boots, shoes, saddlery, and other leather articles, have now called into being in Corea an extraordinarily large number of modern leather factories, equipped with the newest machinery, and using the most modern processes. Seoul is the centre of the leather industry.

"Owing to the large proportions of the Russian Government orders, and the urgency of their delivery, the Japanese leather industry has been attaching greater importance to speed rather than to durability of the products to be supplied. As, in view of this, Japanese leather goods are getting into disrepute in Russia, the Japs are now marking all leather goods for Russia with the words, 'Made in America.' Quite recently, however, the Russo-American Chambers of Commerce at Vladivostock and Moscow have given attention to this matter, and have made some astonishing discoveries: For instance, it has been found that the Japs were being aided and abetted by high-placed port officials at Vladivostock, a fact which has created a great sensation in Russian leather circles. The Japanese leather industry is now making every effort to monopolize the whole of the East Asiatic market, and apparently with good results. A great propaganda is being made in China, Siberia, and even in India; the results obtained are such as to be disquieting for the future of English and American trade in those countries."

French Conditions.—The embargo recently placed upon the importation of all hides and skins entering France, except from French colonies, has toe, made of ordinary side leather. It is claimed that the adoption of this standard shoe has made possible not only a serviceable shoe at a fair price, but has eliminated a good deal of wastage in both materials and production.

The Future of Leather.—It is difficult to see how lower prices can come in leather for a considerable period, in spite of the falling off in the demand. At present the American market is getting about all the South American hides as well as absorbing all its own production of raw stock. It seems to have taken care pretty well of this plethora until the English embargo on leather made its appearance, since when there has been a slight already created more or less serious conditions in the Republic in connection with leather and shoe production. The object is, however, to secure tonnage for other products, and the French people are patiently bearing the inconvenience. Already there has been considerable acceleration of imports from the colonies, which will help to fill the gap. The inauguration of the "national shoe" has not met with the success that was expected, but the French people are responding with the patriotic spirit that has characterized them from the beginning of the war. It is intended, of course, for ordinary consumption, the retail price being fixed by the government at $4.60 for women's, and $5.60 for men's. Even these prices are far beyond what prevailed before the war for ordinary shoes of the class, which are plain laced shoes with medium easement. But as soon as the effects of the war orders begin to be felt, and as soon as general industry responds to the forward movement, inevitable through the tremendous growth in foreign and home trade in the United States and Canada, the temporary lull will be succeeded by a period of still greater activity. With the tremendous productions of the land and the factories there is bound to be a big demand for footwear. Even should peace be brought about within the next year, the European shortage of leather and the immense impetus that will be given to the manufacture of leather and shoes will mean the changing up of hides all over the world. There may be a hesitation following any peace arrangement, but for two or three years there will be no relief from high prices in hides and therefore leather.

POPULAR YOUNG SHOEMAN REMEMBERED

Flight-Lieut. Robt. Cowan, son of Geo. W. Cowan, shoe retailer, of Chatham, Ont., who recently left for overseas, was presented with a pocket Bible as a token of esteem by the Park Street Methodist Church, Chatham, Ont., prior to his departure. Tribute was paid to the young man for enlisting in the service of the Empire, and on behalf of the Red Cross department of the Church, Flight-Lieut.

Flight-Lieut. Robert Cowan, Chatham, Ont.

Cowan was also given a set of military brushes, to which he made an appropriate and appreciative reply. Lieut. Cowan is a highly esteemed young man, and is just eighteen years of age. He was born and educated in Chatham, and his future activities will be followed closely by a host of friends.

WELFARE WORK FOR WORKERS

It is announced that the Home Secretary of Great Britain proposes to issue an order which will come into operation on October 1st, and which will particularly affect such works and factories in which bichromate of potassium or sodium is used in dyeing or tanning. The order will provide that the occupier of the premises shall provide for the workers rubber or leather aprons and bib, rubber boots or leather leggins, loose-fitting rubber gloves, and also boxes or cupboards furnished with specified "first-aid" requisites. There is also to be provided suitable accommodation for clothing put off during working hours, with adequate drying arrangements for wet garments; a messroom, suitably furnished and warmed; adequate means of warming food and of boiling water, and suitable facilities for washing, comprising a sufficient supply of clean towels, soap and warm water.

FARM TRADE AND MAIL ORDER BUSINESS

At a recent convention of Michigan Shoe Dealers the question of farmer's trade came up for discussion. One speaker said very pertinently that three things were essential to successfully hold the farmer's trade. First, to sell him good shoes at equitable prices—not too high. Second, to sell him perfect-fitting shoes—so that he would go away with solid comfort. Third, to treat him courteously. He also emphasized the great importance of getting the confidence of the farmer, of becoming more friendly with him and knowing him better. He added that the merchant in the small town must make the farmer feel that he is after something besides the dollar.

Concerning mail order competition, another speaker hit the nail on the head when he said, he did not believe many people were buying shoes from mail order houses, it being almost impossible to secure a fit by mail on standard lasts. He said he did not believe there was much use in trying to fight mail order houses—that the best way to handle this competition was to sell as good quality shoes for less money. In looking up the catalogue of a mail order house he found they were asking $6.50 for one style of men's army shoe for which he was getting only $5.98—underselling the mail order house 52 cents. He believed it best for retailers to ignore the mail order houses. He said that if every retailer would aim to give good values, and to become personally acquainted with the people in his community, the amount of mail order business would decrease every year.

SHOEMEN WILL HAVE DISTRICT BODIES

A regular meeting of the Toronto Shoe Retailers' Association was held in the Foresters' Building, College street, Toronto, on September 27th, at which there was a large and representative attendance. This was the first session since the summer holidays, and the outlook for the coming season is encouraging. Many plans for active work during the winter were discussed and a proposal was made to divide the city into five or six districts with a chairman and secretary for each district. The interests of the shoemen in the various sections are often local and individual and it was felt that if district bodies were organized subsidiary to the main body and held separate meetings taking up home matters and adjusting them and passing on the larger issues to the central body, much more effective and aggressive work could be undertaken. The shoemen in the different parts will be called together and will elect their own officers and will possibly send delegates to the regular monthly meetings of the parent organization. It was explained that early closing, weekly half-holidays, advertising plans, matters of credit and other issues could be taken up in each section and regulated much better. There are some grievances or troubles which those out in the west end would like remedied that do not affect those out in the east end, and vice versa. The question of district bodies will be gone into more fully at the next regular meeting of the Association and it is felt that these meetings would be largely attended. It is asking too much of many retailers to leave their shops in the middle of the day and travel four or five miles to attend a gathering, whereas they would not mind going a few blocks to meet their brother shoemen in a friendly session.

NOW STATIONED AT CAMP DIX

Elmer Poyer, manager of the Canadian-Arrowsmith Manufacturing Co., Niagara Falls, Ont., who enlisted in the United States Army, is now a private in Company C, 312th Infantry, and located at Camp Dix, New Jersey, which is about three hours ride from his home in Newark. Mr. Poyer says that he likes military life and gets eight hours of heavy drilling every day, and it is putting a proper coat of tan on him. He adds that Camp Dix is a wonderful place and where six months ago were farms and forests, now stands a city of some twenty thousand population, and this number will shortly be increased to sixty thousand. The barracks are two storey frame buildings, well built and modernly equipped. There is an elaborate system of sewerage throughout the camp, up-to-date water lines, electric lights and telephone and telegraph connection with the outer world.

SOME "HITS AND MISSES" IN RETAIL SHOE GAME

Representative Retailers From All Parts of the Dominion Tell How They Have Scored and Wherein They Have Failed—Valuable Pointers That May be Gained From the Life Lessons of Others—Personal Matters That Cannot Fail to Interest

IT is as interesting at times to engage in retrospect as in prospect. Looking back over the past, one may learn where errors have been made and where they could have been averted and thus profit by the experience.

It is said that an ounce of foresight is worth a pound of hindsight, but this is not always the case if the latter will enable us to do bigger and better things and strengthen us in character, purpose and outlook. As men in the shoe business review the years that have gone, they may realize that they have made many "hits" and "misses," the former contributing to their success and prosperity, and the latter often demonstrating that while mistakes are costly, and it is only human to err, the principal thing to be remembered is not to make the same error twice. If this contingency is guarded against, one may turn almost any unfavorable state of circumstances into an object lesson that will stimulate and encourage for the days to come.

One of the greatest studies of human interest is the success or failure of others. Recently the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL interviewed several representative shoe merchants who are leaders in their respective centres. They were asked what was the greatest "hit" they ever made in connection with their business and how was it brought about; and what was the greatest "miss" they ever made, and what did they learn from it? Their replies are both instructive and illuminative and should prove of timely interest to all engaged in the trade in order that they may side step the pitfalls of others and profit by the successes or "hits" that have been scored by prosperous shoemen. For obvious reasons, the names of those who have given their experience, taken credit for certain moves and pleaded guilty to certain oversights or neglects, are not published, but this does not detract from the pith or pointedness of their stories. Most men, while quite willing to tell their life story, do not care to do so in the first person as it savors, in the mind of some, as being too egotistical and possessing too much love for the perpendicular pronoun.

Western Man's Verdict

"The greatest 'hit' that I ever made was sticking to business and giving the customers what they want, and the biggest 'miss' was taking cash out of the shoe business and putting it into real estate," declares a widely known shoe retailer of Vancouver.

"Now for the greatest 'hit,'" writes a Halifax retailer. "It is probably this: We had a big fire which burned up completely over two-thirds of our stock and badly damaged most of the rest with water. The stock was worth thirty-two thousand, and we had insurance of fifteen thousand and it looked as though we were ruined. We rented a big vacant building on a first class corner, and ran a fire sale, continuing with job goods for nine months until the new building was finished. When we took stock we found very little depreciation of capital through the fire loss, and it had given us wide publicity for a start in our new store."

"With respect to 'misses', probably our greatest 'achievement' in that line was the starting of branch stores, and then going away and leaving them. As your own Solomon once said about the man and his method, 'A branch store needs as much personal attention of the proprietor as the main store,' and it did not get it in our case, not by a long shot; hence the miss."

"The biggest 'hit' that I ever scored in my life was in conceiving and coining a good slogan for my shoe store," writes a London, Ont., retailer. "That slogan was Reliable Footwear. With the persistent use of it in all advertising for the last seventeen years and the consistent adhesion to it as a principle all the way along, I have done well."

"The biggest 'miss' that I ever made was probably that I waited too long before starting in business for myself, having worked for others for twenty years previously. This had a tendency to fix habits of thought that would hinder a larger grasp of affairs as trade develops."

Get the New Things First

"Among the greatest 'hits' I ever made was concentrating on my business, which has always been a big asset to me," writes a Hamilton, Ont., shoe dealer, "and also in extra special window trims and taking advantage of anything new in shoes; that is, in getting them in and sometimes out before the other fellow got them. The first—special window trimming—was the result of thought and co-operation on the part of our employes and observation of shoe windows made in other cities. We were successful in attracting more than the usual attention at an extra cost of about $4.00 per week for our two windows, which more than repaid us. The materials used for trimmings were suited to the different seasons. We got them from a shoe agency and then later through a window material supply concern in New York City. We do not do any paper advertising, so trust to our windows to pull in business.

How leading Montreal shoe house imparts charm, interest and originality in its attractive and well printed literature.

"The second big 'hit' that we made was taking advantage of the introduction of composition soles. Most merchants are afraid to experiment to any extent, while we bought very heavy, and in a wide range. The newspapers advertised a certain line very widely and this, along with our display in the windows increased our business 29 per cent. in four months, according to our records. We were not taking as big a chance as most merchants thought we were. The makers guaranteed the goods and we, of course, did likewise to our customers. We made this fact known and, although the guarantee was most sweeping, we were not called upon to make good on more than 4 per cent. of our sales. As a business getter and money maker, this move was our greatest hit. It gave us not only wide advertisement, but brought many young people to our store.

"As we have already said the biggest 'hit' we made was getting anything new in early, and the biggest 'miss' we ever made was pursuing the opposite course, not taking advantage of new goods. We might mention that some years ago tans came in very strong and with a rush. We were caught flat footed with scarcely any on our shelves, and as the stock was scarce and hard to get, we lost considerable trade before their arrival; hence those who took the chance got the business. This was a lesson to us and since then, we have been ready to take advantage of anything that looks fairly well."

Cut Out Credit and Approbation

A shoe retailer of Belleville, who has been fifty-three years in business and has branches in other towns says:

"The greatest 'hit' that I ever made was when we discontinued giving credit and sending out goods on approbation, and the greatest 'miss' I ever made was in continuing the credit and approbation so long."

"I do not think that any particular incident in my career can be looked upon as a 'hit,'" writes a shoe merchant in Western Ontario. "I started very small and have just come along from the shoe bench. I do not know of anything that I have missed that I could have got hold of and, therefore, I have not the privilege of learning from failure. I have been taught some things, however, from insight, among them being a thorough system of accounting, studied in my spare hours without the aid of an instructor. I was too proud to have anybody know that I could not open a proper set of books in double entry, or keep a stock system of any kind for that matter. My financial statement is now always ready and I know where I stand in the matter of stock and profits."

Cash and One Price to All

An aggressive Toronto dealer says: "My greatest 'hit' was when at the commencement of my business career, I took the trade name or slogan of 'The Big 88' and made 'cash' and 'one price to all' the basis of operation."

"My greatest 'miss' was in buying from too many firms and, as a consequence, having broken sizes."

Catchy Advertising Phrase

A Yarmouth, N.S., firm say: "That they can hardly put their finger on the greatest 'hit' or 'miss' in their business experience of a quarter of a century. They have not had an exceptionally eventful business career, but believe that the greatest 'hit' they ever made was the catchy advertising phrase of 'Reliable Shoemen.' It seemed to appeal to the fancy of the public and striving to live up to it has brought the public to the store, and the proprietors have done their best to hold them as customers.

"In regard to the greatest 'miss' they say that this was in their early experience of trying to do business without sufficient competent help. Both members of the firm had close calls to being nervous wrecks until they secured efficient salesmen, which move proved profitable in every way. They believe it best to be diligent, but not to work one's self off his feet or to the verge of distraction."

Too Much of Easy Mark

A Montreal retailer, in a somewhat humorous turn of mind, writes: "I have never made a 'hit' in my life. My career has been made up of 'misses,' but I do not seem to have learned any lessons from them. The 'misses' I refer to are not having enough backbone in buying, being too lenient with my sales staff, extending credit to too many people and being imposed upon in all sorts of ways. I am afraid that I am too much of an easy mark to ever score successfully in business. I can see the other fellows viewpoint more quickly than my own, and anyone with a tale of injury, innocence, neglect or alleged injustice can put it over me every time."

Co-operation Between Boss and Staff

"The greatest 'hit' I ever made in the shoe line was brought about in this way," writes a leading Winnipeg footwear merchant. "I had been in the shoe business 1904-5-6, and part of 1907 (which were good years), then followed a depression in our city in the latter part of 1907-8-9; the business seemed to be going 'dead,' at least in the old part of the town my business was situated in. I made a careful study of the situation and I came to the conclusion that the business was moving; I decided to open up a store in the other end of the town, but as my stock was rather heavy I decided to carry on the old stand as well for the present. The new business was opened up January 3rd, 1910. After the new business had been open four weeks I was doing as much business as the old store. After the new business was opened up I brought about a friendly rivalry with the result that the old store did a bigger trade for the next few years than ever before, and the new store finally gained the prestige of being the largest.

"Much of the success of this 'hit' was due to the co-operation between the two staffs of my two businesses, and I followed the course of making them interested as much as possible, and the better they do for me I can do for them.

"I take a deep interest in all my employees, and even those who have left me for some other new creative position, I have tried to give them my best advice, and I continue my interest in their welfare.

"The greatest 'miss' I ever made was brought about in this way: An ex-manufacturer who was engaged in selling firms who had a large buying capacity, came to me with a good line of samples; he showed me the good points about his samples, the quality, the outer and inner soles, the eyelets and linings, and as I showed him some shoes I had in stock I learned much about how shoes should be made and wherein lay the fine points in good shoemaking. (At that time I had not been in the business very long.) I came to the conclusion of giving him a big order, but thought it best to try out two or three styles in medium quantities; when those goods arrived I looked them over carefully and found that there was a great deal of difference between the shipment and the samples they were ordered from.

"I decided then and there not to continue buying from this firm, although they strongly urged me for some time. I kept track of them; after a few years they went out of business.

"I always like to do business with the banker and the manufacturer who is honest and reliable, as I am convinced that it pays first or last."

Bright, Alert Advertising Helped

"The greatest 'hit' I ever made was in starting newspaper advertising, featuring the announcements with good cuts, changing the reading matter frequently and publishing description and price of shoes as well as any general information in reference to the prevailing styles, lasts and patterns. I always occupied the same space, which was two columns wide by six inches deep and my announcement was a feature of the paper. I do not believe in spasmodic publicity. It is the continued, steady effort that tallies, and the use of printer's ink is a wise move. I look upon it as a good investment. Advertising, like other branches of the store, must receive personal and careful attention, and not be conducted on the happy-go-lucky plan," declares a Regina shoe dealer.

LEATHER TRADE IS AROUSED OVER FALSE REPORTS

Belated Corrections on Part of the Press Do Not Undo the Harm That Has Been Created—Conditions in the Hide and Leather Market Deliberately Misrepresented—Leading Tanners Do Not Look for Cheaper Leather During Progress of the War

THE misleading articles in the Montreal Star and other papers on the hide and leather situation have naturally aroused a great deal of indignation and called forth many protests on the part of leather and shoe men. The Star has since endeavored to smooth matters over by modifying its former statements and has quoted opinions of local manufacturers and tanners to show that there is no ground for the belief that a slump in hides and leather has taken place.

Set afloat any rumor in war time and no matter how wild or weird it may be, it appears as if general credence will be given to the allegation. When conditions are abnormal, and no one can peer into the future and accurately gauge what is likely to happen, it would be well before giving circulation to any rumors to substantiate them. The reports were to the effect that glut faces the markets, that the leather situation is extremely weak, that tanners are overstocked, that hides are plentiful, that there is little buying going on, that figures have declined very much, both on the American and Canadian markets, and that the price of shoes is likely to go down as a result of this combination of circumstances.

The SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL interviewed a number of the trade in Montreal who were unanimous in deprecating the publication of the reports which has brought enquiries from all parts of the country and resulted in checking to some extent the movement in shoes and leather which had begun to make itself felt.

According to the last reports received from Chicago at the time of writing there has been a complete recovery from the gradual weakness that has characterized the market and figures are going once more to top level. Last week was a very active one in packer hides, the sales running over a quarter million hides, and all classes are moving freely. Considerably over half a million hides have been sold during the past few weeks, and taking it all in all the number of pieces of hides and skins being disposed of has not been equalled for a long period.

Authorities point out that, with the large clearance, the packers are in an exceptionally good position and values will get back, if not exceed, the record quotations of a year ago. The big salting hides that were on the Chicago market have been pretty well cleaned up now and, outside of a few May and June light native cows that are held at twenty-six cents and branded cows and extreme light Texas, which are held at twenty-three cents, most every selection is now sold up into October by all the packers. In country hides there has been activity and strength and dealers are talking very firm and asking for twenty-four cents for choice buffs and heavy cows.

No Hope of Easier Prices

The opinion of Jos. Daoust, of Daoust, Lalonde & Co., tanners and shoe manufacturers, Montreal, who is well known as not only one of the most astute but careful operators in the industry, and is also regarded as a reputable, fair-minded man, is worth quoting in this connection. Mr. Daoust, in an interview with the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL, expressed himself as follows:

"I do not see any reason for anticipating any radical changes in the leather and shoe prices. The temporary flurry in the local hide market cannot be taken as having any permanent bearing upon the situation as evidenced by the recent strong advance on the American market. So long as the war continues there does not seem to be any great hope of easier prices in leather or footwear. Trade has been somewhat quiet for some months. There was more or less speculative buying early in the year with the result that both dealers and jobbers have been pretty well stocked up. Added to this there was a large sale during the summer of canvas and similar outdoor lines which militated still further against leather goods. But there has been quite a movement in leather shoes since the first of September, and while stocks may still seem high it is the higher cost of the goods that largely gives this appearance. There are very few more shoes being carried this fall than usual. As soon as this is realized and the demand for seasonable footwear starts in dealers and jobbers will both be on the market.

"What has caused the apparent weakness in light leathers and to some extent in sole leathers recently has been the accumulation occasioned by the embargo on British importations and the fact that army contracts on this side are using up the heavy grades.

"The hide market to-day is practically a world market and is not permanently affected by local stocks or prices. Heavy hides are scarce and even light cows are in better demand, prices not only being well maintained but advancing. With Argentine putting an export duty on hides there is likely to be a further need for native hides. We have not been able to get hides for less than 25c. that we could use, and the lowest we have paid is 22c. I do not see any chance in the near future for peace proposals and until these materialize I do not look for cheaper leather."

Creating Fictitious State of Things

The old adage that "a lie will cover the greater part of a journey while truth is busy getting on its boots ready to make a start," is exemplified in the articles which have appeared in certain papers. These articles do not reflect the true situation concerning the shoe and leather trade, but serve to create a false impression and halt any movement in the direction of active buying for spring. Naturally, the trade is thoroughly aroused over the situation and many protests at the misleading character of the articles have been received by the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL and also by the newspapers which have been giving currency to these reports. It is now admitted by the latter that there is considerable improvement in the hide and leather market and a better feeling exists throughout the trade. This is especially true with regard to heavy leathers, while large purchases of packer hides have been made recently. Domestic business is also improving to a considerable extent, while retail trade in shoes, which was rather quiet during September, owing to the mild, summer-like weather, has picked up considerably since the advent of some fall rains and colder days. Shoe manufacturers report that while there was a disposition, on account of the heavy stocks which a number of the dealers had, to hold back in the matter of buying, a different attitude is now being assumed. Many shoe buyers are coming forward and placing their usual quota of orders. A large number of tanners and shoe manufacturers who have been interviewed, are firm in the belief that trade will resume its normal activity during the fall months. Export business is already more active and there is a possibility of the British import embargo on leather being raised if the Canadian authorities get busy.

"It is just like this," said one big buyer of hides to the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL, "the large interests of the United States have been for some time in a panic, the same as affected the Canadian trade in 1914, when war was declared. Everyone began to tighten up, all speculative buying was killed and firms wanted to unload and assume no fresh obligations. However, we lived through it all and in six months a better feeling prevailed. Optimism began to take the place of pessimism and what was the result? Conditions began to improve and strengthen in shoe and leather circles in Canada to such an extent that the past year was the best that manufacturers ever enjoyed. Now, conditions are becoming stable across the border. The elements of fear and distrust are being removed and the trend of trade sentiment is healthy and strong. A great deal is heard about prices of shoes being likely to come down, but in my opinion the wish is father of the thought. Outside of foodstuffs, is there any commodity that you can name in the line of household supplies, wearing material, fuel, grain, lumber, paper, pulp, steel, etc., that has shown any decrease in price since 1914? On the contrary, there has been a gradual ascension in values created by war conditions. There may be some fluctuations, but no such a thing as a permanent reduction is heard of or thought of in the matter of general supplies.

"Nobody ever hears of anything decreasing in price in wartime and I am afraid that any shoe dealers or manufacturers who are looking around for materially lower values, will be grievously disappointed. The abnormal state of affairs created by the world being at war does not portend to the lessening of the cost in any commodity that I know of and my observation applies to shoes as well as everything else. I might say much more on this line, but there is not much more of interest that I could add except that I deplore the alarming character of the articles which have appeared in the press and think that some thought should be given by publishers before setting afloat rumors that tend to create a false conception in the minds of both buyer and consumer. One remembers the bugaboo a year ago about all shoes going as high as $20.00 in value and the prediction that some of the people would have to go barefoot, all of which was mere tommyrot and the idle production of an empty brain. The same is largely true with respect to the senseless reports that have been disseminated in regard to the alleged deadlock in the hide and leather market and the bottom falling out of the trade. More unjust and malicious statements were never made."

WHY CAN'T CANADA GET THE SAME CONCESSION?

Australia Secures Permission for Importation of Leather into Great Britain—Similar Arrangement Should be Effected by Canadian Government Officials Abroad in Matter of Having British Embargo Raised—Leather Interests Would be Benefited

IT appears from recent authentic advices that the Government of Australia has managed to arrange for permission for the importation of Australian leather into Great Britain to the extent of two thousand bales or about one hundred thousand sides or bends. The question naturally arises in the mind of the Canadian leather firms: "What have the Dominion Government or its trade representatives overseas been doing in this respect that no action has so far been taken toward removing the British import embargo?"

The members of the leather trade in the Dominion are inclined to think that the Australian Government has apparently "put one over" the Canadian officials who should look more actively after the trade and commerce of the Dominion. It is believed that if some aggressive, united action was taken on the part of the powers that prevail, Canada would have no difficulty in securing rights similar to those which have just been extended to Australia.

A leading Canadian firm has received the following advice from the office of the Agent General of South Australia, which explains itself:—

Office of the Agent-General for South Australia, 112 Strant, O.C.
September 4th, 1917.

Dear Sirs,—With further reference to the question of the removal of restriction on the import of leather to Great Britain, I am directed by the Agent-General to inform you that he, with other Australian representatives, interviewed the Controller of Import Restrictions yesterday, and as the result of a long and strenuous discussion the controller agreed to the importation of leather on the following conditions:—

1. Preference to be given to all leather contracted for sale to the United Kingdom before the 23rd February.
2. The balance to be shipped only on condition that same is consigned to the Leather Committee of the Army Council.
3. The total shipment is limited to 2,000 bales.

4. The Commonwealth Government is to allow the space.

It will be seen that the position of firms like yourselves is not considered, but the concession referred to is the best that can be obtained. The Agent-General suggests that you might communicate with the Leather Committee of the Army Council with a view to the disposal of the leather permitted to be imported being placed in the hands of yourselves and similar firms.

Yours faithfully,

J. O. WHITING, Secretary.

Speaking of the necessity of action in this respect a large firm in an interview with the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL said:—

"Yes, the British Controller of Imports has agreed to the importation of leather to the extent of 2,000 bales from Australia, preference to be given to all leather contracted for sale to the United Kingdom before the 23rd of February; the balance to be shipped only on condition that same is consigned to the Leather Committee of the Army Council. Now, we have heard of no such similar arrangement being made by the Canadian Government officials abroad and it looks to us as if the Australian Government officials were a little more wide awake in this matter.

Strenuous Effort is Needed

"This is not the first time we have had this question up; we have been continually endeavoring, through Ottawa and they through London, to get these embargoes in some way rescinded. Seemingly, the Australians have been able to do what we have not. In view of this, we feel that strenuous efforts should be put forth and a similar concession made to Canada. We are able to make just as good leather in this country as they can abroad. We have for years done a large export trade to England and the Continent and the existing embargoes to-day against the importation of leather into Great Britain have cut off our export trade almost entirely, as, before the war, fully one-third of our production was sent abroad, practically altogether to Great Britain. The same conditions apply to practically all others in our line."

Blachford Shoe Manufacturing Co., Limited
Toronto

Someone has cried "wolf" and made us tremble at the price of shoes. Yet it is still possible to buy this neat boot of fine patent colt with small "spike" Cuban heel and black cloth top of fine weave in lace or button style for $7.00. The same shoe with dull tops, $3.00.

Fashion Decrees that We be Simple in Our Footwear, Though Smart to Boot

In this modest lace boot is embodied a hidden treasure—extra width of toe and narrowness of heel, a detail of fit so necessary to many feet. With Cuban heel and medium length vamp, in fine black kid, the price is $12.00.

(Below) Since taking on her new duties as a munition worker, a V. A. D. or a collector for the Red Cross, the Canadian girl has learned the value of the mannish type of shoe. The price of this smart model in African brown with military heel is $10.00 and $11.00, and in black colt $9.00 and $12.00.

(Below) Thanks to the spat, it is a simple matter to convert the house pump into footwear for the street. This plain unornamented style lends itself particularly to this purpose. In patent leather, fine kid, dull calf or dark tan calf, the prices range from $7.00 to $10.00. The same in light soles for evening wear, $4.50 to $8.00. Spats, $2.50 to $4.50.

With the afternoon frock is very correctly worn a boot of patent leather with a high white calf top. The long vamp and narrow toe display a new line, while the Louis XV. heel is excellent style. Price, $15.00.

A splendidly illustrated and striking advertisement of H. & C. Blachford Limited, Toronto, which recently appeared in a high-class weekly publication. Showing shoes exactly as they appear on the feet is an effective and up-to-date idea and in each instance brief descriptions are given and a range of prices indicated.

THOROUGH KNOWLEDGE OF THE TRADE

John F. Carney, who has full charge of the cutting department of the Tetrault Shoe Manufacturing Co., Montreal, is well acquainted with the trade in both the United States and Canada. He started in as a boy in the cutting room in New England shoe centres, and was later foreman for the Richardson Shoe Co., of Hornell, New York. He next occupied a similar position with Geo. A. Slater, Limited, of Montreal. Mr. Carney was also with the L. Prouty Co., of Spencer, Mass., and for the next six years with the Hartt Boot & Shoe Co., at Fredericton, N.B. Previous to entering upon his present engagement he was with the W. L. Douglas Co., Brockton, Mass., in an executive capacity in connection with the upper leather department. Mr. Carney has a thorough knowledge of cutting and fitting, and a practical insight with upper leather, patterns and systems, making him a competent, all-round man.

BIG DECREASE IN EXPORTS

Exports of side leather last July, from the United States, were only 752,730 pounds as against 6,274,197 pounds in July, 1916. Exports of calf leather did not shrink quite so severely, but the shipments of kid leather abroad for July were 994,961 square feet, against 6,843,590 square feet in July, 1916; for seven months ending July, 30,492,686 square feet, against 56,551,297 square feet in similar period 1916. Total exports of leather and tanned skins and manufactures of, for July, 1917, were $4,521,279, against $10,407,661 in July, 1916. Seven months ending July, 1917, $69,848,825, against $82,750,993 for same period in 1916.

GETS THE FACTS FIRST HAND

A. A. Briggs, the advertising manager of the Dunlop Tire & Rubber Goods Co. has returned to the head office at Toronto after a lengthy tour in the interests of the company. Last year Mr. Briggs covered the Western territory, going as far north as Alaska. This year he covered the Eastern provinces of Canada to Sydney, C.B.

On these trips Mr. Briggs makes a thorough inquiry into the advertising conditions affecting the tire and rubber market locally and generally. He is usually in touch with the Automobile Clubs; makes it a point to meet all the important garage men and automobile dealers in every city he visits; and wherever possible he travels in an automobile so as to become thoroughly acquainted with the road conditions with which Dunlop Tires have to contend. Mr. Briggs reports that in Quebec the road from Montreal to Quebec, and the King Edward Highway from Montreal to Rouse's Point are unexcelled on the continent, and possibly only equalled by the Vancouver Island Highway. On the other hand, some of the roads in the East "would give an army tank a good wrestle," as Mr. Briggs graphically expresses it. During his travels Mr. Briggs was frequently interviewed, and the material appearing has been valuable publicity for the Dunlop Co. Mr. Briggs is the only advertising man who undertakes an extensive trip in the interests of his company, and makes a study of the conditions that influence and control trade, as well as inquiring into the best available local means of advertising.

WHY NOT USE TERM DERBY

Thos. Brake, 562 Yonge street, Toronto, writes the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL as follows: "On page 89 of the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL of September 15th, a writer says the name 'Blucher' should be dropped from all British made shoes.

"Now in England the people do not call a boot the 'Blucher,' but name it the 'Derby' and have done so for a number of years. Why should we persist in calling it 'Blucher' in Canada? It must be the people's fondness for the German. Why not adopt the name 'Derby' here, the same as in England?"

BREEZY BRIEFS FROM ST. JOHN

Fraser, Fraser & Co., of Charlotte street, have added an up-to-date line of shoes to their clothing stock.

B. W. S. Martin, representing the John Ritchie Co., Limited, of Quebec, was in the city during the last few days.

Theo. King, of King Bros., Whitby, Ont., was in the city recently visiting the local dealers. He is touring the Maritime Provinces.

S. H. Parker, of the Parker Shoe Co., Preston, Ont., was one of the boot and shoe men who visited St. John during the past week.

Joseph Gray, of Gray Bros., will attend the world's series baseball games in New York. He is an enthusiastic baseball fan and in addition to being a clever salesman is able to interest many patrons with his stories of happenings in the big leagues.

Retail dealers in St. John have been selling a large number of hunting boots during the last couple of weeks to sportsmen who are spending their holidays in search of big game which inhabits the woods in New Brunswick. They are also selling large quantities of moccasins and shoe packs to merchants along the St. John River, and to store keepers who are in touch with lumber camps.

Major Ralph St. C. Hayes, son of Mayor R. T. Hayes, president of J. M. Humphrey & Co., Limited, St. John, N.B., recently returned from the battle fields of France after an absence of over two years. Major Hayes was allowed to return to Canada to convalesce from trench fever. He left St. John with the 3rd Garrison Artillery, which crossed overseas with the first contingent and was then transferred into the 1st Divisional Ammunition Column, later being again transferred into the 1st Field Artillery Brigade. A short time ago he was awarded a military cross for conspicuous gallantry and devotion to duty in extinguishing burning ammunition pits under heavy hostile shell fire. Major Hayes was in charge of J. M. Humphrey & Co.'s shoe factory prior to enlisting

SELLING THE NEW GOODS AND THE REGULAR LINES

Dispose of Shoes as Shoes, But Satisfy Customers as Customers—Don't Merely Sell That Which is Easy, but Sell What the Customer Needs, Whether It Is New Stock or Regular Stocks—The Four Kinds of Values Outlined in Decidedly Clear Terms

“OUT of sight out of mind” does not apply accurately to the attitude of salespeople toward old stocks when the new stocks are in. Still the parallel is an excellent one in a certain degree. When new stocks of new shoes come into the department they are naturally put there to sell, and they are sold—sometimes to the detriment of the bulk of the regular stocks, the shoes that were in stock when the new goods came in, says the “Shoe Economist.”

Too often, indeed, almost immediately after the new shoes are marked and put into their proper niches on the department shelves and counters, the ambitious salesman begins to show them, to recommend them, to push them, totally disregarding the great bulk of good numbers that have been in the store since the last stocking up.

No one contends that new shoes shouldn't be pushed energetically. They should be, because their newness recommends them to customers and, in the case of novelties, early selling is necessary, if not imperative. But when a salesman either makes a sale or loses it on the strength of “new goods just unpacked” he is doing an injustice to himself as well as to his customer and to his house.

Congestion in Regular Stock

He is probably causing a congestion in regular stocks which will later result in overstocks in certain lines and the subsequent evil of a cut price sale or bargain event. And not only will the old, neglected stocks have to be sacrificed, but many of the new shoes also. So it's a losing game, any way you view it.

It's a matter of viewpoint, or lack of it, that causes this troublesome condition. The salesman, usually at the instigation of his superiors, bases his selling on customers, not on shoes. He starts out with the idea that the thing that brings in volume on his salesbook and profit for the house is the customer-sale; sales based on the number of customers he can serve in a day.

He figures that the thing to do is to sell the customer a pair, or pairs, of shoes. And up to a certain point he is right. The customer must have what she, or he, wants regarding style, last, trimming, design, comfort and fit. If she doesn't get these the sale is a loss, no matter how much money the salesman collects from his list of customers.

But the salesman ought to begin with the shoes, not with the customer. He should exploit every shoe in the department, new or old, that is anywhere near the type of shoe the customer needs before he says, “Here is a new shoe just come in. You will like it.”

The customer may think she likes it, because it is new, and for no other reason, and if she is dissatisfied later it is the salesman's fault. This isn't saying that the new shoe is less likely to be the right one for the customer, but it is saying that shoes should not be sold on newness alone and at the expense of another shoe that hasn't “just come in.”

Not as New or Old Shoes

Stocks of shoes should be viewed as stocks of shoes, not as old or new shoes. Stocks are the basis of profitable retail selling and retail service. The salesman shouldn't say to himself, “I can sell this customer old shoes, or new shoes;” he should say, “I can sell her shoes out of stock, the shoe she needs,” whether it has been in stock six days or six months. Every shoe in stock is a new shoe to customers, unless it is of the vintage of two or three seasons back. Then it isn't an integral part of the stock, because it has no selling points in its favor, not even good looks or style value.

Every shoe in stock has its real selling value, and on this is based the price, and on it is based the value to the customer of that particular pair of shoes.

And this leads to another consideration that would help salesmen and their bosses, if they understood it. Every piece of merchandise has four kinds of value. It has merchandise-value, sales-value, advertising-value and use-value. These four kinds of value begin with what ought to be known as intrinsic value.

Now, what constitutes these four kinds of value, and how are they related one to the other?

Intrinsic value is what is put into a piece of merchandise, a shoe for example, by the maker. It includes skill of the designer, excellence of workmanship, quality of material, and the cost of all these things. It is expressed in the quality of the shoe from every angle: looks, wear, fit, comfort, style. The prices the wholesaler and the retailer put on the shoe are based on its intrinsic value. And as soon as the shoe is put where it can be seen by a possible customer it begins to have merchandise value, that is, it has the power of attracting the attention of customers with shoe needs to fill.

Merchandise and Sales Value

Merchandise value furnishes the groundwork for sales and advertising value. But keep in mind that a pair of shoes has nothing but intrinsic value until a customer's need and desire glorify the shoes. Until that moment they are merely shoes.

Now, sales value! What is it? Sales value is merchandise value plus the special need of a customer, plus the selling ability of the salesman behind the pair of shoes. Sales value is not a mechanical situation; it cannot be described in words, nor can it be indicated by price. It has nothing to do with price. It has to do with the selling points that exist because of the customer's needs and because of a reflection of those needs in the shoe itself. All the salesman does is the talking and thinking for the shoe—it cannot think or talk—and the adjusting of the customer's thinking to the shoe.

Advertising value is another thing that comes from the nature or intrinsic value of the shoe. Advertising value means: Things of interest about a shoe and its use that are not inherent in the shoe itself, but arise from its purpose. Anything the adman says about a shoe that creates interest in it, aside from its selling points, is advertising value.

Why Neglect any Kind in Stock

The real value to a salesman of the above classification lies in the fact that he can better gauge the selling situation for any type of shoe if he understands the four kinds of value the merchandise has—just as anyone else can better gauge the selling situation on various commodities, hats fountain pens, automobiles, etc.

It would be folly to sell a doormat in the way you would sell a piece of statuary or an Oriental rug. In the same measure it is folly to sell one kind of shoe the way you would sell another kind. The use and significance of the doormat are different from the use and significance of the Oriental rug, or, in other words, their intrinsic value, merchandise value, sales value and advertising value are different.

New types of shoes and old types of shoes are of the same value to the customer, if they meet his wants. So why neglect the regular stocks when new shoes come in? Why neglect either, for that matter? Both are shoes.

The Shoe Repair Man

REPAIRMEN HOLD ENJOYABLE SMOKER

The first of a series of smokers and sing-songs held under the auspices of the Toronto Shoe Repairers' Association came off on September 27th in the Foresters' Building, College street, Toronto, and was a decided social success. No business was transacted. Several took part in the proceedings and a highly enjoyable and diverting time was spent. President Chas. F. Robertson presided and welcomed the genial company, and there were abundance of cigars, cigarettes, clay and corn cob pipes, fragrant tobacco and delicious soft drinks. These were distributed lavishly and no one was overlooked. Duncan Cowan, the well-known entertainer, gave several of his lively songs and stories and was frequently encored. His clever contributions added not a little to the success of the evening. The accompaniments were ably played by Geo. Musgrave and Musgrave's song sheets were handed to all, the members joining in the chorus. Arthur Butterworth and C. J. Wren favored with several vocal selections in good style and were very obliging in the matter of responses. D. Staniforth rendered some choice selections on the euphonium, while E. J. Skilling was heard to advantage in several cornet solos. Most of the selections were of a military or patriotic character, and the popular airs of the day were thoroughly enjoyed. During the evening addresses were delivered by President Robertson, H. K. Hayward, S. Burnett and A. Butterworth, all of whom referred to the good work that had been accomplished by the Association and the desirable results that had been brought about during the past year and a half. Copies of the leaflet, "Some facts about the Toronto Shoe Repairers' Association," the text of which has already appeared in the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL, were distributed and an aggressive campaign will be conducted during the winter to increase greatly the membership, which is now over a hundred and growing steadily.

It is proposed to hold several concerts, euchres, drives, etc., and a real interesting time is promised to all the members, while business of importance will be attended to as usual. When the Toronto Shoe Repairers undertake anything, they go at it whole-heartedly and unitedly, and the smoker was another evidence of the fact that they know how to supervise an event and carry it to a successful finale.

BACK FROM LONG TRIP

H. Lucas, proprietor of the National Shoe Repair Co., 1207 Bloor street west, Toronto, who sold out his establishment some months ago in order to take a trip home to Holland, owing to the death of his father, has returned and repurchased his former business. Mr. Lucas was away seven months and had to wait many weary weeks before being able to get a boat to return to Canada. He embarked on one which was out from port three days and had to return owing to the submarine menace. It was then some sixteen weeks before another steamer set sail from Holland for America.

STILL BACKS UP HIS PROCESS

Geo. Edwards, 511A Fourth avenue southeast, Medicine Hat, Alta., writes the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL that he would like every shoemaker who has already bought his process or art of welding soles and heels of leather, rubber or felt on to leather, or any kind of substitute and wishes to see the finished work, to send a pair of rubbers or shoes and he will use his own material and do the job with no charge to the sender, only asking him to prepay express

BUSY SHOE SECTION OF WESTERN STORE

The shoe area of Robinson & Co.'s departmental store, Winnipeg, is one of the largest in the West. The slipper section alone has 1,650 square feet of selling space, and all boots and shoes are on the ground floor, Charles Newton being the aggressive manager. The main shoe store is twenty-four feet wide by one hundred and fifty feet deep. The children's department is separate and is joined to the ladies' department, in which many well-known brands are handled. The company prides itself on having the largest slipper section in all Canada, and handles several American and Canadian lines. During the past season business has been good, and customers are buying better footwear.

Chas. H. Prentice is in charge of the ladies' department, and is head window trimmer. He has been connected with the firm during the last five years, and has had wide experience both in wholesale and retail trade in Canada and the British Isles. He also supervises the dressing of show cases and windows, and in that line has few if any superiors.

J. O. Sparling is head of the men's section, and has been with the company for three years. He has a thorough knowledge of the requirements of the trade, and is a very careful fitter and student of styles. Outside of business hours, he is an enthusiastic curler. Miss Kennedy has charge of the misses' and children's range, and everything progresses satisfactorily under her direction.

The shoe department has a regular staff of twenty sales people, exclusive of Saturdays and extra help. The leading American and Canadian makes in both women's and men's shoes are handled, and a very gratifying business has been developed in recent years. All goods are sold on merit, and every customer is given a square deal. Anyone found misrepresenting styles, values or makes is severely dealt with by Mr. Newton who has a loyal and co-operative staff, and people can rely upon every transaction in connection with supplying of their needs in Robinson & Co.'s busy shoe department.

DEATH OF AN ESTEEMED SHOEMAN

Adam Sippel, of the retail shoe firm of A. Sippel & Son, Kitchener, Ont., passed away a few days ago after being in poor health for a long time. He had been in the footwear business in Kitchener for some twelve or thirteen years, the firm being originally known as Sippel & Hagen. This partnership was continued until 1914, when Mr. Hagen withdrew and Mr. Sippel took in his son, Walter, who had been associated with him for some years, the style being changed to A. Sippel & Son.

Mr. Sippel was born in Kitchener, and some thirty-three years ago learned the shoemaking trade in that centre, working at the bench until he launched out for himself. He was a gentleman well known and highly respected and his passing will be deeply regretted by a wide circle of friends, not only in the trade, but throughout the whole of Waterloo County. He first started in business at 7 King street east, but later removed to 19 King street east, where the Sippel store is one of the most attractive and spacious in Western Ontario.

The business will be continued under the direction of Walter Sippel, who has been in charge during the time that his father has been in poor health.

Wm. Dargavel, formerly of Vancouver, who for the past two years has been on the staff of the Regal Boot Shop, Toronto, has gone to Owen Sound, where he has taken up land, and will engage in farming pursuits.

COLORS CONFINED TO FEW SHADES FOR SPRING

The Oxford is Again Coming Into Favor—Big Run on Buck Tops is Predicted—Various Shades of Tans Strongly in Evidence, While Calf Leathers are Getting More to the Front—Colored Patent Leather Makes Most Pretentious Appearance

NOVELTY shoes, instead of being "dead," as some manufacturers and occasional merchants have thought, are very much "alive." The colors just now are not so vivid as they have been, and as a whole the prevailing styles are quieter in tone and effect, says the "Shoe Retailer" in referring to spring and summer modes for women. Browns, which months ago were anticipated to be in demand this fall are proving heavy sellers, and the darker shades of gray are going almost as well. Black boots with lighter shades of toppings in buck and cloth are also among the best sellers to-day. It is a fact worthy of note that the public has quite recovered from the "economy bugaboo," and that women are paying good prices for good footwear.

Aside from the tendency toward a somewhat shorter vamp and a lower heel, little has been offered by the last manufacturers in the way of new models. There was an early attempt to revive the square toe, known as the "Philadelphia last," but this idea was rejected as being altogether contrary to accepted styles.

The Perfection of Pumps

The last manufacturers have made wonderful progress in the perfection of pump lasts. Pumps which in truth cling to the feet are no longer a myth. The revival of the oxford has brought out a number of new lasts which embody all of the popular and most acceptable lines of the boot last now in vogue. Much improvement has been made in the fitting qualities of the shank, and more beautiful lines in this respect are seen in the 1918 samples than have ever before been displayed by the makers of fine footwear for women.

It is the prevailing opinion of shoe manufacturers and merchants that 1918 will see a strong revival in the popularity of oxfords. This type of shoe has been at low ebb for a number of seasons. This paper for months has made its readers aware of the renewed interest in this type of shoe, and it is not surprising to see so many beautiful oxford patterns among the 1918 samples. While the blucher pattern is shown to some extent, it may be conceded that the bal-moral pattern is decidedly the neater and will have the greater sale. The types of oxfords which have met with the greatest amount of favor up to this writing are the four and five eyelet patterns, blind eyelets prevailing, while the lacings are small and neat.

As oxfords will be worn as street shoes, the popular type of heel is on the Cuban order, ranging in height from 10/8 to 13/8. An occasional oxford in the higher grades carries a 2-inch military heel, and where the shoe is intended as a semi-dress affair the full or half-Louis heel also is shown.

In the highest grade of oxfords perforations are small and inconspicuous. In the more popular-priced grades there are seen vamp perforations and quite fine perforated imitation tips, as well as foxings. Cheaper shoes have larger perforations and, as usual, are over-decorated in this respect,

Pumps Will Be Popular

Pumps are shown with few decorations, except in the medium grades, where they are shown with small cut steel buckles or ornaments. A few ribbon bows, after the pattern of the old sailor tie, have been brought out, but in the better grades the plain pump is conceded to have the preference, and this without perforation and void of imitation tips, which are positively out of place in the pump pattern. Readers of this paper will do well to give careful consideration to the extent of the demand they think there will be for oxfords and pumps. The latter may prove to be the better and largest seller of the two.

While on the subject of low shoes it is well to speak of the sport oxford, or pump, which has had such a long and popular run. The sport shoe, except for purposes of golfing and strictly athletic wear, has lost its popular grip on the public, and the more refined styles have very decidedly taken its place. It is evident, despite the incongruity, that both men and women have been encouraged to purchase sport shoes for every conceivable summer-time occasion and it has been no uncommon sight to witness the varied colored strapped combinations on the ball-room floor and at other functions where this style of shoe is entirely out of place.

In every respect the new styles being shown for women are a decided improvement over their predecessors, there being fewer freak styles and very few attempts to achieve unusual results by fancy inserts or "gingerbread" decorations.

Calfskin Looms Up Stronger

In the matter of materials and colors there has been a revival of calf-skin, which is now dividing honors with kid. The increased showing of calf is due largely to the increased popularity of the tan shoe, which, in popular opinion, gives a greater opportunity for variety of tone and which, in the opinion of many dealers, is to be preferred for a strictly walking shoe. While the deeper shades of brown, tan, mahogany, cordovan and cherry red are popular, there is a decided tendency in the better grades toward a lighter shade of tan. Tan shoes were never brought out in a greater variety of shades than during the last few months and the retailer can find almost any color, shade or tone, from deep brown, that is difficult to distinguish from black, to nut brown, hazel and army khaki or chocolate, which latter is so well reproduced in kid stock.

Colored Buck and Cloth for Tops

Deep grays are vying with the shades of brown in popularity and the opinion prevails that gray will be one of the popular sellers during early spring. It is the opinion of many that gray is best represented in kid stock and imitation buck, and in both boots and oxfords many pretty combinations of gray in the lighter shades of kid or cloth are shown for the coming season.

Black shoes constitute a large share of the new samples. All dealers find a steady market for black kid boots in the popular 8 and 9-inch patterns, carrying leather half-Louis heels. Black shoes with neutral gray or fawn imitation buck tops are among the most popular novelties for fall. In fact, buck is a strong factor for topping and it is thought it will continue in popularity throughout the season.

Cloth is a decidedly important factor to style and a great many boots made as high as 11 and 12 inches have all cloth tops. Where light shades of cloth are used on boots with black vamps, collar effects of leather, also leather lace stays and back stays, are used with good effect.

Patent Leather in Colors

No longer is patent leather exclusively a "shiny black" leather, for it is now being successfully made in light and dark tan, mahogany, gray and other shades. In New York, brown patent leather has had a good sale and while the smaller merchants have apparently been skeptical of its desirability, they are likely to follow suit and buy it as a novelty.

Cloth is good for toppings. Considerable cloth is being used in boots to retail at $7, $8 and $10. In the new styles are seen handsome and well-balanced designs in patent leather with white and pearl gray tops. A gray cloth top combines well with a dull kid vamp, and a taupe gray top with a patent leather vamp. With black kid, and also with the deep tones of reddish-brown shoes, a fawn cloth top makes a pretty shoe.

Just so long as skirts remain short, lace boots will hold the centre of the stage. Shoemen all know that a nine or ten-inch boot must be in the laced pattern. Button boots while genteel and modest, and preferred by many persons for dress wear, are not practical in a height above eight inches. In boots, therefore, the big demand will continue to be for lace styles, and with the coming in of the oxford the popularity of lace styles will be emphasized.

The Modes in Men's

The principal features of style trend in men's shoes for spring and summer, 1918, are: Conservation of lasts and patterns characterizes the styles in high and medium grades.

WHEN IS CONTRACT NOT ONE

Canadian manufacturers are bitterly complaining of the prevalence of cancellation of orders placed by reputable dealers—even such as are on our own books—and accepted in good faith. Some of these cancellations are requested the day following the placing of the orders, others weeks afterward.

When a dealer places an order and the manufacturer accepts it a contract is entered into just as if the terms, dating and specifications were subscribed to and the dealer's signature witnessed before a notary. Yes, we hear, but it's only a moral obligation; moral or legal the obligation is there, and to repudiate it is not only unbusinesslike but dishonorable.

The burden imposed, through cancellations, is particularly heavy on the maker who produces shoes to order only. Not only is expense entailed by having the traveler spend his time writing out the dealer's specifications and discussing same, but expense is incurred in entering, checking and attending to the other office details connected with the work of following out the dealer's instructions as outlined in his order.

Should the goods be in process of making when the request for cancellation is received the situation is even more serious because compliance with the request means a real loss limited only by the size of the order. The goods have to be completed—they cannot be used in other customers' orders without serious complications arising and therefore the goods must be sold over again with the resultant extra selling expense. Not only that—factory space has to be allotted for the storage of the goods until such time as they are disposed of, insurance has to be carried and additional clerical work is involved. It must be remembered that no two localities are alike in their requirements, the differences may be small but they exist nevertheless and cancelled goods for resale must carry a discount to interest the average dealer unless he is pressed for goods, and even then the quantities are usually unacceptable.

NEWSY NOTES FROM VANCOUVER

The many friends of W. G. Langdon will sympathize with him in the death of his wife, who passed away on September 7th. She was the daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Harris, Brentford, England. The funeral took place on September 12th and the first part of the service was at St. Saviours' Anglican Church, Vancouver, and conducted by the Rev. Dr. S. Fea. The service was fully choral and there was a large attendance of sympathetic friends. The deceased was a member of the choir, the Women's Auxiliary and Superintendent of the Junior W. A. Six of the vestry men acted as pallbearers. The polished oak coffin was covered with the Union Jack and the banner of the W. A., and the floral tributes were numerous and beautiful, being sent by the firm and fellow employes of Storey & Campbell, for whom Mr. Langdon is city representative, the Junior W. A., the Lady French Chapter of the I.O.D.E., the Conservative Club, and also from the family and many others. The late Mrs. Langdon was in her fifty-second year and had been married twenty-eight years. She leaves besides her husband, two sons to mourn her loss, one residing in San Francisco, while the other is in the service of the Royal Flying Corps at Camp Borden.

C. Glass, late with the Cluff Shoe Co., has joined the Ambulance Corps in Victoria.

The recent rains have caused a decided improvement in the repair trade and most of the members of the fraternity have returned from their holidays and are very busy. All the stores report better business and an increase in the sale of autumn goods. Grays and browns are both very popular with the buying public.

HOW MANY BUTTONS IN THE BOTTLE?

W. H. Higgerty, who operates two shoe stores in Ottawa, is conducting a rather interesting guessing contest in connection with his west end establishment. There is displayed in the window a large bottle which is filled with shoe buttons, and every caller has one guess free. Each customer has an additional guess for every dollar spent in the store. Coupons are given away and these are filled out along with the name and address, and deposited in a ballot box. Twenty-five prizes are being given by Mr. Higgerty, the first being an eight dollar pair of shoes; the second, a six dollar pair; the third, a four dollar pair, and credit checks worth one dollar on any pair of shoes purchased will be given for the remaining twenty-five guesses which come the nearest to the mark. The competition closes on October 10th.

INSTALLING NEW EQUIPMENT

P. B. Wallace & Son, Toronto, have recently received orders for the following machines made by the Progressive Shoe Machinery Co., of Minneapolis: W. Wharrad, Georgetown; G. H. Bignell, Brampton; Wm. Humphries, 439 Westmoreland Ave., Toronto, and Kenneth Haymes, Welland. They have also delivered a Landis stitcher made by the Landis Machine Co., of St. Louis, to L. E. Edwards, Woodstock.

SHOE BLACK MAKES $125.00 PER WEEK

John Spero, who told Judge Coatsworth that he made from $100 to $125 a week in the shoeshine parlor of which he is proprietor, was found guilty in the Criminal Court, Toronto, recently of having stolen a bicycle from A. E. Crate, and allowed to go on suspended sentence. Spero said that he had taken the wheel as security for a loan of $3 he had made to one of his customers, who later joined the army, and as he had no further use for the bike had abandoned his claim to it. "The same old story," said the Crown Attorney, "he buys a wheel from a man and does not know his name, and the wheel turns out to be stolen."

SHOE HOUSE WHICH HAS 56 FEET FRONTAGE

The accompanying illustration shows the new store front and fall opening display of the U. S. Factory Shoe Store, 86-88 St. Paul street, St. Catharines, Ont. The establishment is fifty-six feet wide and the depth is one hundred and twenty feet, two floors being occupied. The premises are among the largest in Western Ontario, and the proprietors are L. Leveys and A. Leveys. They started in business in St. Catharines five years ago in a place 10 by 20 feet, and have grown until they occupy their present commodious quarters. There is a background in the window of the crests of all the Allies. In the picture are seen L. Leveys, one of the proprietors, and his two children. They are two of the youngest sales people in the business, and dispose of very many goods on holidays and Saturdays.

SOME "HITS AND MISSES" IN RETAIL GAME

"The greatest 'miss' I ever made was when I first started business some years ago, I got a store cheap which was out of the beaten path. I thought I had struck a bargain when I secured it for $30.00 a month. I soon found out that I had made a serious error and after three and a half years of rather painful experience, I got a somewhat smaller establishment with double display windows in the central part of the city. I regard the three and a half years which I spent in that out of the way location as practically lost. If you want to do business, you must get where business is done and be right in the thick of the fray."

"The greatest 'hit' I ever made, in fact, I call it a home-run, was twenty-one years ago when starting in business in this city," states a Stratford retailer. "I subscribed for the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL. I have taken the paper regularly ever since and read each issue carefully. Needless to say, I have got a great many pointers and practical suggestions from its pages, and it keeps me in touch with all that is going on in the trade. I study the styles, prices, window decoration schemes, advertising suggestions and stock-keeping plans, and manage to use a great many of the ideas in my own establishment."

"The greatest 'miss' I ever made was in trying to be a good fellow, and buying from too many houses. The first few years, to nearly every traveler who called I gave an order, just to be a good chap or to encourage him. But I have got over that bravely now, and while I don't refuse to look at the samples of the other fellow, I confine my purchases to two houses in men's shoes, three in women's and one in children's. It pays to concentrate and not scatter in these days of business aggressiveness and activity."

"The greatest 'hit' that I ever made in the shoe business," declares a St. John, N.B., retailer, "was when I fired my head clerk. Jenkins is the name by which I will call him. I had a few thousand dollars and was anxious to get into business. One day I happened to get wise to the fact that a well located store would soon be vacated, and making a few inquiries in that neighborhood, I came to the conclusion that it would be advisable to put in a stock of medium price shoes. This was eleven years ago and, naturally, I knew very little about the footwear line. I advertised for a man who was a good buyer and knew something about fitting and selling. Among the different applicants was Jenkins, who told me about having experience in Montreal, Toronto and Detroit. He appeared very bright and energetic and I engaged him. Well, we got along very well for the first year and a half. Trade came our way from the start, but as the months passed by, Jenkins seemed to think that he owned the business, and that I was really working for him. He became supercilious and disdainful, and practically intimidated by his attitude and remarks that I was incapable of moving along without him; that trade would go to smithereens, and that his knowledge made him practically indispensable to my establishment. I stood this for several months, but when he started to tell me that if I had not linked up with him, the venture would never have been a go, and I should buy exactly the lines he recommended and never express any preference in the matter myself, etc.—this, using a slang expression, 'got my goat.' One morning as I was waiting upon a lady customer who was rather hard to please, he came along and made a nasty remark about lack of acquaintance with the stock, and not knowing the proper shoe for her peculiar type of foot. When the women had departed, I told him in pretty plain language just what I thought of his butting in, and he intimated that I was an ungrateful wretch for he had practically made me. One word led to another and I gave him two week's salary and told him to get out then and there. He walked away with a contemptuous smile upon his countenance and intimated that he would start in business across the street and ruin me. 'In six months the bailiff will be in charge of your effects, or your stock would be in the hands of an assignee,' he snapped. Well, as soon as he had departed, I made up my mind that I knew just as much about the business as this bluffer. Calling the other boys together I gave them all a raise in wages, and we went at the thing whole-heartedly and harmoniously, and the result was that in three months, we were doing a larger business than ever. Jenkins, who had in the meantime left the city for the West, had accepted some minor position in a departmental store in Calgary. It is an awful mistake when any employe thinks that the success of the firm is due entirely to his knowledge and connection, and the boss don't count.

"The biggest 'miss' that I ever made was in overlooking the large profits to be made in a well-equipped findings department. I viewed this as a sort of side line, although I had been told by travelers what big money making features it presented. However, I did not take the thing very seriously until one day going down the street I noticed a special findings window that had been prepared by one of my opposition. There was a display of polishes, brushes, laces, buckles, shoe trees, rubber heels, arch supports, heel pads, insoles, etc., with a few cards calling attention to them. It was only then that I saw the possibilities of such a department, and I immediately resolved that I would get my share."

A PROGRESSIVE FACTOR IN THE TRADE

(See Front Cover)

It is just twenty-one years since Norman Macfarlane started in the shoe manufacturing game in Hochelega, making a few soft soles. For a while he was in partnership with Louis Perreault, the firm being known as Perreault & Macfarlane, but the latter withdrew and since then the business has been conducted under the name of Macfarlane Shoe Co. Under its progressive head the concern has developed into one of the most substantial and aggressive in the Dominion.

For the first ten years Mr. Macfarlane put in from twelve to fourteen hours a day on all kinds of work in the factory and on the road. He did not spare himself in season or out of season, with the result that trade developed and after five years in Hochelega, the business was removed to 686 Craig street, Montreal, and from there to 92 Beaudry street. Three years ago a large factory on De Normandie street, which had been erected by the Cimon Shoe Co., was purchased and the output of the plant is now two thousand pairs a day, new equipment having been added for the making of light welts as well as heavy.

Norman Macfarlane was born in Norway, but came to Canada with his parents at an early age and, after spending some years on the farm, decided that he was not destined to secure any great measure of success in the agricultural arena. He drifted into Montreal where he entered the warehouse of A. Ramsay & Son Co., wholesale paints and after mastering the details took a position on the road, and later drifted into running a shoe store in Florida. He liked the aroma of leather and has stayed with the game ever since.

While he has never neglected business, having capable associates, and still purchases all the leather for the company—there are few better qualified judges of leather than Mr. Macfarlane—he finds time to take an interest in many outside pursuits, and is an enthusiastic curler, lawn bowler and golf player. In his younger days he could do some real sprinting and has a number of premiums that he captured. His muscles to-day are as hard as iron and he never knows a day's illness. He has always been an enthusiastic admirer of the horse, has had animals entered in nearly every meet from New Orleans north, and has carried off numerous trophies.

Classic Shoe Style Pageant

Startling Innovation Introduced by Well-known Galt Shoe Concern. Novel Demonstration of Footwear That Charmed Thousands of Toronto's Fair Devotees of Fashion as well as Drew Retail Shoe Dealers From All Parts of Canada.

IT is safe to say that few shoe manufacturing concerns in Canada have evidenced the growth and development shown in the past decade by Getty & Scott, head of the manufacturing and sales department, "pulls off" something daring in either shoes or selling methods.

The "SHOE STYLE PAGEANT" held at the King Edward Hotel, Toronto, September 26th, 27th and 28th, was the latest and most enterprising of the firms' sales promotion "stunts," and demon-of Galt, Ontario, manufacturers of CLASSIC SHOES. They long ago earned the reputation of being "Live Wires" and have so lived up to their name that the trade is never greatly surprised when William Chamberlain, the

be used not only to increase interest in particular styles, but to promote shoe sales generally.

The display at the "SHOE STYLE PAGEANT" was thus not only a particularly effective advertisement of CLASSIC SHOES, but to those who saw it a revelation as well of the marvellous development of the shoe industry of Canada in recent years. Continued expressions of astonishment were heard on every hand with regard to the shoes shown being made in Canada, the majority of those not in the trade being evidently under the impression that Canada had to import goods of this class from across the line. So that the "Pageant" was really a demonstration of the "Made in Canada" idea, which must result in advantage to the trade at large as well as to Getty & Scott in particular.

The staging of the "Pageant" was in the hands of Mr. R. J. Walsh, of Boston, who has made a specialty of this particular method of sales promotion, although Mr. William Chamberlain was the man behind the gun who put "Zip" into the carrying out of the various details. The Ball Room of the King Edward Hotel was used for the occasion and was furnished with a long, richly carpeted platform raised about three feet from the ground, and approached by several steps. On either side of this walk were tiers of upholstered chairs, the whole room being suitably decorated and brilliantly illuminated by electricity. Twenty pretty young ladies acted as models, and, decked in the latest modes, paraded one at a time under spot lights that threw out the shoes on the one hand and the costumes on the other, the regular lights being dimmed during each number, and a fine orchestra discoursing sweet music as the young ladies slowly and gracefully paraded up and down the carpeted dais for the space of three or four minutes.

There was not a hitch throughout each of the two hour displays, the young lady being led to the dais, and the announcement made in detail of the particular shoes she wore. In the eager manner in which the latter were examined by the audience on either side, not only interest, but delight were depicted, enthusiasm being further evidenced by enquiries made during or at the close of each seance.

The costumes for the occasion were loaned by well known Toronto firms. Fairweather's Limited provided the coats and furs; The Ontario Cloak & Suit Manufacturing Co. the suits and dresses; and The Robert Simpson Co., Limited, the millinery. Probably the two most popular numbers in the whole display were the Army Shoe, demonstrated by a handsome young lady in khaki with a jaunty aviation forage cap. The other was the "Nursing Sister" or Military Nurse who wore the Classic Red Cross Shoe. She was arrayed in the regulation military hospital costume with cloak, hat and shoes complete, and won salvos of applause as she walked up and down the platform.

Not the least important feature of the show was the fact that the leathers used were Canadian, the upper stock being the product of such firms as: Davis Leather Co., Robson Leather Co., A. R. Clarke & Co., H. B. Johnson & Co., Edwards & Edwards, while the sole stock was from the Breithaupt Leather Co., Beardmore & Co., and C. S. Hyman Co., attention being called to this fact from time to time by the demonstrator.

Getty & Scott are to be congratulated upon the high character not only of the display, but the manner in which the "Pageant" was put on. The models were of a particularly high class and gave themselves readily and fully to the serious purposes of the display. The firm brought down one of its own employees, Miss Wilson, who was used throughout on special features, and won constant applause by her quiet, graceful demeanour. The opinion freely expressed by those who attended the "Pageant" was that it might have been held where a much larger audience could have had the advantage of inspecting the styles. As it was, hundreds were unable to secure even standing room in the commodious Ball Room of the King Edward Hotel.

As an exposition of high class footwear, the creations worn by the models, and those displayed in the two large sample rooms presided over by Mr. S. J. Anderson, were equal in individuality, style, taste and distinctiveness to anything seen in the larger metropolitan centres across the line.

Among the styles shown were the Lancer Boot with twelve-inch top, the Currie Military Boot, a twelve-inch top walking boot, a nine-inch lace boot, The Vimy Boot, the Beaded Pump, a Walking Lancer Boot, the Classic Pump, the turn Oxford, the Seemore Button Boot and many others. Some of the most striking shoes were: The nine-inch lace boot with 16-8 heel, blue kid vamp and blue buck quarters; a Chamberlain pattern twelve-inch military boot of cocoanut brown calf, an ivory kid twelve-inch Lancer turn with 17-8 heel; a nut brown calf turn Oxford, a brown calf pump with olive brown buck quarters, and a nine-inch lace boot with white welting, fawn buck top and Zulu brown calf vamp. Another attractive model was a field mouse gray kid nine-inch bal, and 17-8 heel, and a white calf nine-inch bal with white calf 16-8 heel, and black calf vamp. The entertainment concluded each evening with the representation of Miss Canada with helmet and spear; garbed in the folds of the Union Jack and wearing a pair of Classic Military Boots.

For their artistic conception and enterprise, and for their initiative and aggressive ideals, Getty & Scott, Limited, are to be warmly congratulated. The educative effects of the Style Pageant were also much appreciated as it showed the general public and shoe retailers, a number of whom were present from distant points, which was the proper footwear for each occasion. The fact that so many retailers visited the function is ample evidence that they recognize the go ahead character of the firm, and the superior quality of Classic Shoes. Never were shoes revealed to better advantage. Their neat smart lines and superb fitting qualities were particularly noticeable, and the tones, patterns and trimmings disclosed to the best possible advantage on the beautiful models.

Appropriate programmes were distributed describing the various shoes worn by the different ladies. Each model had a number, and by referring to the corresponding number on the booklet, visitors knew exactly the fine points of all the shoes.

The Style Pageant in Toronto was one of the outstanding events in the footwear arena of 1917, and will live long in the memory of those who were fortunate enough to be present. It is to be hoped that when another enterprise of this character is carried out, more spacious quarters should be engaged, so that thousands instead of hundreds may be allowed to appreciate and recognize the beauty, exclusiveness and unsurpassed quality and craftsmanship of the Classic foot toggery for women, misses and children.

HE INVENTED COPPER TOES FOR SHOES

Newman Silverthorne, of Summerville, Ont., which is a few miles west of Toronto, is the inventor of copper toes for shoes, according to James Skelton, who contributed an interesting character sketch of this widely known pioneer in a recent edition of the Toronto Star Weekly. On the very day that the article appeared, by the strange and mysterious working of fate, there was announced on another page the sad news of the death of one of Mr. Silverthorne's three sons, Charles A. Silverthorne, Reeve of Etobicoke Township. He was killed in an automobile collision with a special car on the Toronto and Guelph Radial Railway.

Mr. Silverthorne, sr., was born in 1829 in Etobicoke, a mile from where stands his present home, and has been in turns mill-man, adventurer, lumberman, inventor, mining expert, and farmer, and in all a philosopher.

At twenty his wandering began, and we find him down South in Chattanooga operating a saw mill for some New England concern. His employers were ship builders in a large way, and his work was to get out timber of a grade especially adapted to ship-building purposes. Pine planks one hundred and fifty feet long and upwards were sawn from few and far apart. It bothered him. One eventful day, being reduced to extremity, he sat down on a log and took stock of his camping outfit. He decided he could spare one

YOUR satisfaction may depend on the way we sell a pair of shoes as much as on the quality, price and fit. We have the best corps of salespeople we know of; they're here to be helpful; and to sell, or not to sell, pleasantly. We can be always cheerful about refunding money. It is our aim to make you a satisfied customer.

YOU'VE probably heard many times that Rannard's carries more shoes than any other exclusive retail shoe firm in Canada.

We don't do this to boast about it; we do it so that our customers can come here and find exactly what they want, try it and see. We will give you any style, any size, width, weight, material or anything else you want in good shoes, and the prices are reasonable.

We buy in enormous quantities—that means we contract away ahead which gives us a big advantage. We share that advantage with you.

RANNARD SHOE LTD.

The ad of Rannard Shoe, Winnipeg, here reproduced is one that will attract attention. It is nicely arranged and the use of the shoe cut tells a big story at a glance. There is a deal of human interest in the matter too. The firm lets the public know that they will do everything to please them even to refunding money cheerfully. Cheerfulness and pleasantry are two potential factors in making shoe sales.

the giants of the Georgia forests, and so shaped in the sawing as to conform to the lines of a ship's side.

But malaria and heat drove the Canadian northward, to the enormous forests of pine in Northern Michigan, Wisconsin, and Minnesota, where he continued his milling operations.

It was at this time, while tramping the wilds in search of a suitable location and waterpower for a mill, that his observation and ready invention brought him good fortune. The native grass he found extremely hard on shoe leather, and in his long trudges his boots, particularly the toes of them, suffered—and shoe-repair shops in that region were old tin cup; so he cut this in halves with his jack knife, and roughly shaped one over the toe of each boot and tied it there. Eureka! So was born the idea of the copper toe-cap, which was soon to sweep the country.

But the inventor's reward was not to come without struggle. When he got back to Fort Churchill and was walking down the trail through the village he met a shoe traveler, and to him he showed the merits of his invention. The traveler, of course, stole his idea. Then followed the famous Silverthorne vs. Mitchell lawsuit, fought through two courts and finally decided in favor of the real inventor. Even yet he was up against it. With curious unanimity every shoe manufacturer whom he approached turned him down. "Make shoes last two or three times as long, you say?" they exclaimed, in effect. "And you expect us to take up and push your invention? Go to! You're crazy!"

Finally, the persistent young man found a listener. "Your idea is good," said this party, "but go out first and create the demand!"

So Mr. Silverthorne and his adviser planned and had printed some thousands of advertising cards, for distribution among the school children. On one side of the card they pictured a copper-toed shoe, with some text to the effect that copper-toed shoes lasted nearly a life-time; and on the other side they printed some puzzles and conundrums. Enquiries began to come in to the local shoe dealers, and they began to put in orders for copper-toed shoes; but the manufacturers wouldn't fill their orders. But the demand grew like Jack's beanstalk, and would not be denied—the manufacturers had to yield. Newman Silverthorne made a fortune.

The patent rights, however, expired in six years, and the government would not grant a renewal. When an inventor makes a reasonable profit upon his patent—so the tale went—it becomes public property at the end of the term. So the shoe-cap became the property of the great American people—and was promptly strangled by the shoe manufacturers. "Make children's shoes wear twice as long Good night! Nothing doing!" You never see them now.

Thirty years ago Newman Silverthorne returned to the farm. At Summerville he has one thousand acres of the finest land under the sun, and the yield this season is a record-breaker.

Having considered the growing increase in the price of footwear and being desirous of placing at the disposal of the working class footwear of good quality at as low a price as possible, the French Ministers of War and Commerce have signed orders regulating the manufacture of so-called "national" boots according to official models and types. These are to be sold at prices fixed by the Minister of Commerce.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATIONS FAVOR CONSERVATION OF LEATHER

AT a meeting of representatives of national associations of the shoe, leather and allied trades of the United States, at Washington, D.C., September 25th, to consider what steps could be taken for the conservation of leather and other materials used in the manufacture of shoes, as well as of labor, it was,

Resolved, That as representatives of one of the largest industries in the United States, we loyally tender our undivided support to the government, and pledge our cooperation with all other Americans to assist in all efforts deemed essential for the successful prosecution of the war.

Resolved, That, to provide more raw materials for war purposes, we recommend the wider and greater use by all the people of oxfords and other styles of low cut shoes, a reduction in manufacturers' samples, to limit the use of expensive cutting leathers which can be replaced by leather that gives as good service and which are obtainable at lower prices, thereby materially conserving raw and finished materials, as well as man power.

Resolved, That we recommend the use of leather and proven materials other than leather whenever practicable.

Resolved, That we endorse the suggestion that manufacturers concentrate on the particular lines for which they are best equipped to make in order to accomplish the most economical manufacture and give the best possible values to the consumer.

Resolved, That, to increase the supply of hides, leather and beef we urge that the slaughter of calves and veals be regulated and curtailed.

Resolved, That we pledge ourselves to make every effort to better control the unjustifiable return of shoes and leather and the cancellation of orders.

Resolved, That we welcome the suggestion of the Economy Board that deliveries of orders be so arranged as to evenly distribute throughout the respective seasons for which the merchandise is intended, to the end that the evils of seasonal employment be obviated, and that the workers in the factory be continuously employed.

Resolved, That we endorse the use whenever practicable of standard cartons and containers, and the shipment of shoes in car load lots whenever possible.

Resolved, That it is of the utmost importance that all prime quality of nine iron and heavier substance sole leather and soles be conserved for government purposes.

We would direct the attention of the tanner, shoe manufacturer, shoe finder, shoe wholesaler, shoe retailer, and the buying public to the use of lighter substance outsoles.

We recommend the use of the slip tap or double sole on heavy work shoes or leather of such substance and quality as will not interfere with government needs.

Resolved, That this body through its executive officers proceed at once with the proper authorities to limit the Branding of Cattle.

This practice is not carried on in any other country to the extent here, and is causing an enormous economic wastage.

We recommend that this body through its executive officers take up with the proper authorities that greater care be taken in the flaying of hides throughout the country to prevent sores and cuts in said hides and skins.

Resolved, That the president of each association represented in this board be authorized to appoint a member of the Executive Committee it being understood that the duties of the committee consists in carrying out the votes of the conference board.

J. A. Queen, 1234 Bloor street west, Toronto, has disposed of his property, and bought a large two hundred acre farm near Drayton, Ont., where he will remove in the spring to take up agricultural pursuits. He will, however, continue in the shoe business until early in the new year.

S. Davis, shoe dealer and shoemaker, of High River, Alta., has just installed a Progressive treadle sole stitcher, a power treadle finisher, and a sole cutter which gives him a complete equipment. He reports business in his line as being very good with excellent prospects for fall trade.

Grimshaw & Mantell have started in the shoe repair business at 729 Lansdowne avenue, Toronto, and have installed a twenty-two foot equipment with stitcher.

Removing one rod of an iron, barred window in the rear of the Men's Sample Shoe Store, 221 St. James' street, Montreal, burglars entered the store and unlocked the rear door. This one was found open by the policeman on duty at 2.30 o'clock in the morning, and the proprietor was notified. Burglars made a haul of 75 pairs of shoes, valued at $400. They had piled up in the store ready for removal more than $1,000 worth of shoes.

J. M. S. Carroll, sales manager, Canadian Consolidated Rubber Co., Limited, Montreal, is on a six weeks' business trip to the Western branches of the company.

Hayward & Canning, shoe repairers on Dundas street, West Toronto, have taken over the shoe repair business of C. E. Culbert on north Yonge street which was conducted until recently under the title of "The Pride of Rosedale."

The shoe business carried on in Hamilton, Ont., so successfully for over half a century by the late Robt. Wilson at 73 King street east, has been taken over by his sons, C. E. and A. L. Wilson, who will continue in the same stand under the title of the Robt. Wilson Shoe Store. The new proprietors contemplate making some additions and alterations to the establishment, for which they have just concluded a fifteen year lease. The location is one of the best and most central in the Ambitious City.

V. Procopio, 127 Church street, Toronto, is opening a second shoe repair establishment on Bay street near Adelaide and is installing a twenty-two foot outfit.

The Moyer Shoe Co., 266 Portage avenue, Winnipeg, have a very attractive store, located next to Woolworth's 5, 10 and 15 cent store. The background in a recess window was made of a large post and part of a wall, the latter being built of beaver board and covered with marble paper. The floor was also covered with this kind of paper, and vines were run from the post over the marble wall. These vines were made of artificial leaves and a few black berries. There was also a drapery at the back, which imparted a very nice effect. In the ladies' window the same idea was followed out, only there were artificial leaves at the back in place of the drape.

The Retail "Walk-Over" Dealers' Association convention will be held January 10th, 11th, 12th, 1918, at Hotel Sherman, Chicago, Ill.

The various rubber companies report that so far the placing orders for tennis and sporting shoes for 1918 are well in advance of last year, and prospects for the coming season are exceptionally bright. So many new lines are being offered to the trade and so numerous are the artistic creations in rubber sole footwear of all kinds that merchants are going more and more into this branch of the trade. There is no doubt that tennis footgear is growing more rapidly in requisition than any other section of the business. Last year the volume more than overtaxed the capacity of several plants and present indications point to the companies receiving all the trade they can properly take care of for 1918.

SHOEMEN SHOULD WEIGH FREIGHT CASES

"I do not know whether the railways are trying to do others as they are me, but there is something suspicious which needs investigation," remarked a leading Toronto footwear merchant this week. "I do not object to paying for the correct weight, but here are some facts. Recently I received three cases of shoes from Quebec City. The freight bill put down the weight at 330 pounds, and I had the goods weighed and they tipped the beam at 279 pounds, the rate being 56 cents a hundred. Here was a difference of 51 pounds against me on this lot. The other day I received another shipment labelled at 150 pounds. The actual weight was 102, and the freight rate was 38 cents per hundred pounds. I complained to the freight department and they sent up an inspector who admitted there had been a mistake and offered me a rebate for the overcharge. Then another case of goods came in from the East this morning billed at

The working staff of the World Shoe Co., Hastings Street, Vancouver—Good shoemen every one. They are a jolly bunch and Mrs. Paris, seen next her husband in the front, is one of the jolliest of them all. Note the fellow with the new head-dress. A shoe top—presumably to keep the flies or sun off his marble dome—but he is a good "old top" anyway. The billboard, is another advertising "stunt" of the proprietors.

The Tilycum Shoe Repair, 636 Broadway, Vancouver. Remarkable for its most horrible sign. This is a genuine Totem Pole brought from Alaska, and, although it may not be in any way connected with shoe repairing, still it's a sign that must be noticed—and remembered.

140 pounds. The actual weight was 98½ pounds, nearly one-third less than I was charged for. I once more lodged a grievance. It is not convenient for a shoe retailer to keep platform scales in his shop, but if the experience of others is the same as mine, it would pay him to invest in scales.

It looks as if the railways are trying to take advantage of us and charge up a great deal more for weight than the goods actually represent, and on the consignments which we receive in the course of a year, the difference in favor of the transportation companies would be a tidy sum. I would strongly advise all merchants to weigh their cases and if they have such revelations as I have had of late it will open their eyes. Should conditions not improve I think the transportation companies should be prosecuted. They charge enough now, in all conscience, for carriage and to be billed with one-third more weight than the shipping cases represent is going too far, and the time has come to call a halt."

SHOES

(Roy Temple House in the Chicago News)

I

When Wilkins finds he needs a pair
He goes to the store and buys 'em.

II

When Mrs. Wilkins needs a pair
She goes about with trouble air,
With knitted brow and anxious stare,
To figure out what's best to wear
This coming season, and compare
The values here and values there;
For salesmen lie in wait to snare
Confiding females everywhere,
And shoes that aren't just right impair
Your looks and lay your weakness bare.
There must be caution and to spare,
There must be study, thought and care,
In this most delicate affair.
She must be firm, though dealers glare,
The counter jumpers tear their hair
In impotent and mad despair.
It would be more than she could bear
If she should miss the perfect pair,
The timid charmer, rich and rare,
The "just the thing" that waits somewhere
Decreed to be her lot and share.
So, sternly bound to do and dare,
She goes the rounds and tries 'em.

H. C. L.—EXCELSIOR

Price used to be a steady lad
Content to take his proper place
He got an auto—and we had
Some trouble keeping up the pace.
But now he has an aeroplane
And on our planet will not stay,
He soars into the azure main,
And tries to skim the milky way,
Although 'tis neither safe nor sane,
"Keep on the earth," the neighbors say
But Price yells back "Excelsior."
* * * * *

We never made a kick before
And hate like thunder to complain,
But this we here and now maintain,
A sense of loss—a sense of pain,
A murderous rage like that of Cain
Comes surging over heart and brain.
We cannot stand the awful strain,
When told "Price has gone up again."
He rises more—and more—and more
It makes us SORE to see him SOAR.

A dinner party was tendered the office employees of E. T. Wright & Co., at Rockland, Mass., by E. T. Wright, treasurer of the company. Following the dinner the party attended a Boston theatre in a body.

Thiel detectives arrested Albert and Philip Gosselin, brothers, of Montreal, on a charge of stealing a large quantity of leather from A. Davis & Sons' tannery, Kingston, Ont., where they had been employed. They pleaded guilty, made restitution, and were allowed out on suspended sentence. The firm had been missing leather for some time. A portion of the stolen goods was located in Montreal.

A case of the illegal purchase of government property was disposed of when Thos. Fox, pawnbroker, was fined $100 and costs by the London police magistrate for having bought a pair of military shoes from a soldier.

A fire which did $2,000 damage broke out recently in the Ideal Shoe Co. factory at Elmira, Ont., and badly damaged the finishing room, while other departments suffered from smoke and water.

G. D. Desautels, of the Globe Shoe Co., Terrebonne, Que., was in Toronto on business recently.

J. R. Walker & Co., Limited, of Montreal, have been incorporated with a capital stock of $250,000 to take over the business of J. R. Walker & Co. The newly incorporated concern has power to manufacture, sell and deal in paper of every kind, including leather board, fibre board, friction

The capital stock of McArthur-Irwin Limited, of Montreal, has been increased from $200,000 to $360,000.

Fred. Smallwood, shoe manufacturer and merchant, of St. John's, Nfld., died very suddenly recently. A business man of unusual qualities, by his untiring zeal, he built up the Smallwood Boot and Shoe business, till to-day there is no better known firm in the country. His success was in a large measure due to the fact that he gave his personal attention to every detail of his business and was personally known to practically all his customers by whom he was greatly respected for his sterling qualities. Although he took but small part in social life he was a keen sportsman and his most pleasant hours were spent by the side of a river or pond with rod and basket or tramping over the barrens with dog and gun. He was a long standing member of the Masonic fraternity and belonged to both the Masonic and City Clubs of St. John's. Mr. Smallwood was twice married, and is survived by his second wife. He also leaves two sons, Walter, who succeeds his father in the management of the business, and Fred. with the Newfoundland Regiment in Flanders.

CONVEYORS USED IN SHOE MANUFACTURING

A visitor going through a modern shoe manufacturing plant will undoubtedly be impressed by the multiplicity of complicated standard and special machines used in the various manufacturing departments. If he is a keen observer, and appreciates modern ideas and methods used to facilitate handling and transporting, he will be very much interested in the different devices and types of conveyors that make up the very complete conveying system installed.

The big problem confronting executives, is with the human element and the high cost and difficulty of maintaining an efficient organization. Any machine or device that to any measure helps to eliminate wasted physical or mental energy, and at the same time increase production, will always be given careful consideration. Conveyor equipment is consequently coming into prominence, and is being given due careful consideration whenever estimates for alterations, additions and extensions come up for consideration. When the factory executives find it necessary to call in efficiency experts to help re-arrange systems and revise conditions so as to increase output and reduce costs, they will invariably find that the first points of attack will be the handling and transporting problems. It is the leaks caused by inefficient methods of routing materials through the plant that take the velvet out of the margin of profit, and are the big stumbling blocks to otherwise well equipped and well managed concerns. Conveyors have done much to solve these for the shoe manufacturer and it is by no means unusual to repay this expense several times over the first year after installation.

The writer has in mind a large plant that has installed a rather extensive system of gravity carriers, automatic elevators, metal spiral chutes and belt conveyors, that combined, handle the incoming material, the goods in process, and the finished product into the packing departments, and to teams for shipment. Boxes are received into the warehouses direct from wagons and distributed to various departments on the different floors, then returned to the ground floor shipping department, eliminating the wasted time and labor, and the wear and tear of floors, trucks and elevators, incidental to handling goods by the trucking method. This installation results in a condition that permits the routing of materials in a simple economical and satisfactory manner, free from the interruptions which break the regularity and therefore the momentum and efficiency of steady work.

From the outside of the building at point where empty boxes are unloaded from wagons, a steel chute projects through the wall, and enters into basement. All incoming boxes are unloaded direct from wagons to this chute which connects with four lines of gravity carrier.

These lines of carrier run one over the other and make connections to the chute by hinged and counter-weighted sections. These drop into place on chute, or are raised up by means of rod and handle and operate very easily because of the counterweights. Each of these four lines of gravity carrier continues about forty feet to an automatic straight lift elevator permitting the storage of a large load of boxes. When the top line is filled, the hinged portion of carrier is raised up, and boxes run onto next line, the same process applying until the wagon is unloaded or the four lines are filled up to the top of chute. The operator in charge of the elevator releases the stop on any of these lines allowing the boxes to be fed to it. Automatic arrangements on the carrier connecting to the elevator pick up one box at a time and hold the rest back. This is timed with forked carriages on the elevator which are suspended on endless chains running over sprockets at top and bottom, so that as each carriage reaches a station, a box is in position to be picked up. This process continues until the line is empty when the next line is released, the operation being continued as long as there are boxes to be raised to the various floors.

By dropping in stations on any floor desired, the boxes are discharged onto the floor required and conveyed by gravity to the point or department where they are used. There is a similar arrangement of the carrier on each of five floors, all of which are supplied with cases direct from teams by this system, avoiding all causes of delay and chances for misunderstanding.

Returning filled boxes and shipping cases to the shipping department is accomplished entirely by gravity. These are handled from the different departments down through the various floors of the building without power or handling cost. Boxes are placed on a line of gravity roller carrier leading to a sheet metal gravity spiral chute. They move over these rollers to the point where they enter the chute. Openings in the chute permit carriers to connect at any floor. Upon leaving the carriers, boxes slide down the chute to the bottom where they discharge onto another line of carriers. Over these carriers they are conveyed to the shipping and distributing department, connecting with an automatic scale that weighs each box as it passes over it. The operator at the scale stops each box long enough to get the scale to balance. Stencilling and marking of shipping directions is also performed while cases are on conveyors.

A belt conveyor is used in the cutting department. All waste cuttings are deposited onto this and are conveyed overhead to a metal spiral chute and discharged onto one of the threads upon which they slide to basement, where they are sorted and disposed of as required.

This system of conveyors though perhaps large in extent does not begin to cover the field or the possibilities for their use by the large shoe manufacturer. Variance in layout of plant, location of machines and kind of labor available have a tendency to limit or broaden their scope of usefulness, and are always to be considered when conveyor systems are contemplated. Where one concern can effect a saving, the same may not be at all applicable to another plant where conditions vary, but wherever quantities of materials are handled, conveyors can not only speed up production, but are important factors in assuring momentum in the routing of materials. They are also to a great extent eliminating the human element, and the physical energy made necessary in handling cases by other methods now old and obsolete.

MEANEST FIRM I EVER WORKED FOR

"Talk about the meanest man. I think that I had an experience one time when on the road, that will outdistance all previous records in the line," said an Eastern shoeman the other day. "I was in Winnipeg and was covering the prairie provinces for the firm. I had money enough to carry me out to a town a hundred miles from the city, but not to go further. So I wrote to the house, asking that a remittance for expense be sent. I gave them ample notice, and fully expected that the money would reach me at the town referred to. There I hung around three days, but no cheque or money order came to hand. I wired the firm, which was an Ontario concern, and told them the circumstances in which I was placed. They telegraphed back that the money had already been sent. I waited another day and finally the cheque arrived, after my losing four days' time on the trip west. I was sending in generous sized orders, and thought I was placing sufficient postage on the envelopes, but lo and behold, the house had to pay double postage in some instances. When I reached home, after an absence of some weeks, what was my chagrin to find that there had been deducted from my commission, $2.50 for telegrams and about seventy cents for postage, all of which were in the interests of the firm. I had used my money to get their money, when the fault was clearly theirs, and was being soaked for it. I had lost valuable time besides through their dilatoriness. Well, I stayed with that concern a very short while after this occurrence—it was too small and miserly for me to link up with for any lengthy period."

Many people wonder how Tetrault can make and sell shoes AT A PRICE.

Tetrault was the first manufacturer to conceive the idea and put into effect that shoes could be made at a price. Many contributing causes enter into this. One is that as soon as he sees a new idea he cuts off the old method and keeps the new.

That's how Tetrault keeps right on "sawing wood" and turning out Men's Welt Shoes by the MILLION DOLLARS' worth, and he is busy "sawing wood" the whole twelve months of the year. This accounts for

STRONG SITUATION IN LEATHER AND SHOES

The Whole Tone of Market Hardening—Lifting of British Embargo and Large Leather Purchases Makes Decided Change in Situation—Market Already Firmer and Prices Hardening

THE last issue of the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL was hardly off the press when proofs began to accumulate that our strong condemnation of the sensational articles on the hide and leather situation in the daily press and our predictions that a stronger market would develop were well founded. Within a week there has been a complete revolution in the whole situation. A large buyer last week who had placed a substantial order for hides the week before sought to double it and was told that prices had been withdrawn.

The large purchases of leather recently made on behalf of the English Purchasing Commission in the United States have contributed somewhat in clearing the atmosphere but it was practically only a passing circumstance that helped to accentuate the fact that the market in leather is quite limited in most desirable lines.

Just as soon as anything like an active demand for shoes makes itself felt and manufacturers get into the market for regular supplies there is absolutely certain to be a further upward move. It will be remembered that the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL last winter continually counselled shoe buyers against running up the market on themselves, saying there was plenty of leather to go around. Instead of following the conservative policy of buying only for immediate or near requirements, dealers rushed the market with the result that prices in both leather and shoes soared unnecessarily.

The outlook to-day is very similar to that of a year ago when everybody was holding back to watch which way the cat would jump. When prices begin to go up dealers and jobbers will begin again to climb over each other to get in on the ground floor. Leather in most desirable lines is in short supply and there is not the least doubt that with the recent strong advance in hides the backbone of the weak holders has been stiffened. There will be no cheaper shoes unless something radical should cause temporary stagnation. Within a month it is more than likely a brisk demand for footwear will make itself felt, and unless all the signs fail there will be another rush for goods that will put shoe manufacturers and leather men at their wits' end.

The retailer is taking no chances in ordering goods to-day for next spring and summer. He will pay more for the goods a month from now if we are to judge by the situation in leather at the present time. The statement that stocks are unusually large in retailers' hands is not borne out by facts. The inventory may show a higher cash value but the number of shoes carried by retail stores throughout the country is not higher than a year ago.

Meanwhile, with more seasonable conditions, business is taking on its regular fall swing and sorting trade is feeling out the shoe market to the extent that most shoe buyers realize that they are up against a genuine shortage not only of the raw but also of the finished product.

The Proper Way to Figure Your Profits

Explained by A. B. Lawrie to the Chicago Leather and Finders' Association on Figuring on Cost and Selling Price to Allow a Proper Percentage of Profit Offers Difficulties, Suggestions for Obviating Which are Furnished in an Interesting and Forceful Address

IN approaching the subject of "How to Figure Profits," I realized that there were two ways to handle it:

First—The introduction of some plan that has been approved in similar lines as a successful method of figuring costs and profits, then to go into the subject in detail and elucidate the system.

Second—The frank recognition that in this association, as a whole, there is not at present such a system in use, neither are you as yet organized so that you could readily adopt such a system:

It seems to me from what I know about the business that the majority of the jobbers could not, at least at present, adopt any exhaustive system of figuring costs and profits. In like manner it has appealed to me that taking conditions as they are, it was better to state some of the basic principles of the trade and try to apply them as first aid to present problems.

Many of your members combine in themselves the duties of buyer, salesman, bookkeeper, and stock clerk, so when you speak of something that will add materially to their labors, you are asking almost the impossible.

What Are Profits?

We are all out after profits. What are profits? Profits are the legitimate reward of the merchant for services rendered. They are the wages that those he serves render him for his work. The workman has his union to enforce what the collective mind of his organization considers the legitimate reward for his work. It is entirely logical and fair that members of a common line may express their views and plan their activities to obtain a reasonable reward for their services.

If I am correct in my understanding that as a whole you have not yet worked out a system of your cost of doing business to which you can refer with confidence as a basis on which to figure profits, then it would be well for us to take the best figures available in your line of trade as a basis.

Finders' Association Records Helpful

Unfortunately the findings business has no authoritative record, although the National Association has begun work along that line. Basing it on records obtained from like situated business and checking this up with reports from individual finders who have cost records, I find that from 14 per cent. to 18 per cent. represents the average cost of doing business. In this connection I would recommend that you read pages 66 to 73 of the report of the thirteenth annual convention of the National Leather and Finders' Association held at Milwaukee this year.

Concrete Business Figures

This 14 to 18 per cent. is the cost of doing business and does not represent any net profit. The reports from similarly situated lines give 26.13 per cent. as the gross profit, or a net profit of 8.13 based on the 18 per cent. cost of doing business.

In your case suppose we take 14 per cent., as I am assured from the way some of the goods are sold that your cost of doing business must be the lowest. Suppose we also cut the net profit to 6 per cent. and make for rough figuring 20 per cent. as the gross profit. (You see, I am ultra conservative.) When figuring cost of doing business, etc., it is, of course, understood that the percentage applies to the price at which the goods are sold, and not to the cost price.

I presume that this is clear and well understood by all, but lest it should not be familiar let us illustrate.

Illustrating Profit Figuring

In order to get 33 $\frac{1}{3}$ per cent. on your selling price you must add 50 per cent. to your cost. In like manner, to get

25 % add 33 $\frac{1}{3}$ %

20 % add 25 %

16 $\frac{2}{3}$ % add 20 % and so on.

Take the percentage of profit you want and deduct it from 100, then divide the percentage by the remainder. This will give you the percentage required to add to your cost.

Example
Percentage want on selling price	25%
Base	100	75)25.00 (33 $\frac{1}{3}$
Less 25%	25	22.5
	75	250
		225
		250

It is manifest that in a diversified line like yours the profit that can be obtained on different articles must vary. I suppose that you have certain staple lines that will not bear 14 per cent. plus a net profit, in which case your other lines must carry a larger percentage to bring up the average.

Figuring on Leather Prices

I am not very familiar with the leather business in the findings trade, but I have heard it so often referred to as "the sugar of the business," as they would say in the grocery trade, that I will use it as an example. (I suppose this would not apply to these abnormal times.)

If leather constituted half of your business and only showed 10 per cent., then in order to show an average of 20 per cent. on your entire business the other half would have to average 30 per cent.

Standardizing Profit Figuring

If my figure of 14 per cent. cost of doing business with 20 per cent. as the necessary average gross profit should be correct as being necessary to conduct the average finding business, according to good American standards, so that all concerned in the business may receive such a reward for their services as shall enable them to maintain our national standard of living.

It should be shown that this standard of profit is not being obtained. Then it is necessary to find a remedy. What is the remedy? This is the big question and one of many angles, but I am convinced its solution lies in two words.

CONFIDENCE and CO-OPERATION

A—Confidence that will enable you to trust your fellow jobber and be open and frank with him. If you have this confidence, it will enable you to correct many of the abuses you now complain of.

B—Co-operation. You must back each other up by doing your full share to bring about better conditions by united action. You will find when you begin to meet your competitor on a friendly and co-operative spirit that most of them are mighty good fellows, and you will find friends in unexpected places.

Do Not Cut Staple Prices

A beginning toward getting better profits must be made somewhere, and I would suggest that as a first principle almost beyond debate that where an article has either an advertised or an agreed upon resale price that this price by common consent be obtained. It is a well-known fact that when manufacturers make a resale price for the jobber they are apt to err on the side of the too little rather than too much profit, so you will be in no danger from the get-rich-quick bug by following this policy.

The temptation with reference to resale prices, especially on advertised goods, is to cut prices because the price is well known and the trade can quickly recognize the cut. The temporary advantage you seem to gain by giving your customer a cut price is quickly neutralized by your competitor who, in retaliation, is apt to add like items to the cut price list. These new cut prices you perforce have to meet, and your profits go a glimmering. In order to meet these thefts of legitimate profit, you will either have to reduce your standard of doing business or face eventual bankruptcy. Such price-cutting is the law of the jungle, and has no place in real up-to-date business.

Our President, Woodrow Wilson, has sounded the real note of success in business as well as in international life. In explaining our entrance into the war, he says: "We want nothing for ourselves that we do not want for all mankind."

I would suggest certain features for your consideration:

The value of a cash discount in figuring profits.

Let us see what it costs not to take them. If you do a business of $1,000 a month, $12,000 per annum, 2 per cent. will mean $240. If you pay in 30 days net you have the use of $1,000 for 240 days—for the year. This at 6 per cent. per annum would be worth $40, a net loss by sacrificing the cash discount of $200. Take it another way. If you had to borrow $2,000 in order to take your cash discounts, paying 6 per cent. per annum, it would cost you $120 and you would still be $80 ahead by taking the 2 per cent. cash discount. Some of your items have 5 per cent. discount, but the sacrifice of such a discount would spell bankruptcy.

I would urge particularly in these abnormal times that your costs be figured on your replacement value, and not on your actual cost.

If this is not practical in all cases, then at least take the average of your actual cost and replacement value and make that the basis of your figures.

Be Prepared for Depreciation

You may rest assured that the time will come when there will be a depreciation in many of your lines from present values. When that time comes you may be certain that your profits must be figured on your then replacement value. You have to serve your customers then, but you must look out for yourself now.

A man was going through a graveyard and he saw this inscription:

"Here lies Sister Mary Ann,
At rest on the bosom of Abraham."

Taking out his pencil, he wrote underneath:

"That's all very well for Mary Ann,
But mighty tough on Abraham."

Let me suggest that you examine into some simple but accurate methods of figuring costs and profits and adopt the method that is most suitable for your needs. Test out your main lines to see whether you are averaging up to a reasonable profit as indicated by the figures I have given. It might be well to divide the articles into classes under different percentage heads and see how you come out.

Cost of Price Cutting

I will close with an illustration of the cost of price cutting. Suppose you sell 100 gross per annum of an article costing $24 per gross, less 20 per cent., on which the resale price is $24. If you sell at $24 you make $480, a legitimate profit. Suppose as a result of the pirate method of cutting prices you have to sell at $1.75 a dozen—$21 a gross—then you are only making $180, or 7½ per cent. on the correct selling price, and this is less than your cost of doing business. There is a net loss of $300 per annum.

The union man would say you are a scab working for $300 a year less than the union wages and giving to the trade $300 which they rightly should pay you for services rendered. This is not a suppositious case. It is happening every day, and on quite a number of items.

SOME SHOE QUALITIES THAT MAKE STRONG APPEAL

See That Your Window Displays Really Tell the People Some of the Things About the Shoes They Want to Know—Innumerable Stunts Can be Employed, and Very Often They are More Striking and Effective Than Printed Messages

THE only sign in the window read "School Shoes." Just that and nothing more. Every shoe was shown in the same way, namely, in its normal, upright position, says the "Shoe Economist."

The window was not in a small store where the proprietor is the whole "works"—salesman, cashier, porter and display man—but it was one of the largest and best-known stores in the country, one that enjoys a wide reputation for its aggressiveness and progressiveness and where a capable display man is employed.

In this case, however, the display man had been asleep on the job. There are so many ways to make windows do good work that it is really heart-rendering to see the opportunities so completely overlooked.

Window displays are a form of selling just as much as is the work of the salespeople. The salesperson with average intelligence knows that when merchandise is being shown to customers something should be said about the merits of the article. The same principle should be applied in selling through the window. The display should tell something about the merits of the merchandise.

It is not always necessary to use printed or written cards to get a story across. There are innumerable display stunts to employ and sometimes these are more striking and effective than a printed message.

There are just as many good points to tell about good shoes as any other kind of merchandise. The materials out of which they are made, the quality of workmanship, the lining, the fit and foot comfort, the wearing qualities and the appearance of the shoe are all worth talking about. Frequently these things can be shown in some subtle way.

Some Things to Show

For example, the old stunt of showing a shoe with the sole immersed in water is a good way to indicate or suggest the damp-proof qualities of the shoe. The style element can be emphasized by the use of style posters in the window. On these posters, naturally, the shoes must be fairly conspicuous and they should be of the same style as those shown in the window.

Good materials can be indicated by showing well-tanned hides in the window with the shoes. In fact, any clever display man can devise ways and means by which the many good points about the shoes can be shown in a way that will make a lasting impression.

There is something more than the immediate benefit to be derived from an effective window display. If the good points about any kind of shoes are told or shown in a striking, emphatic and forceful way, so that people are really impressed, the impression will remain for a long time, and be associated with all the shoes carried by the store. The identical shoes about which the story has been told may be forgotten but the point brought out in the display will be remembered.

Create General Interest

The idea, then, is to say something or show something that will appeal to the self-interest of the store's customers or the town's population. Whatever the class of trade bid for, there are certain shoe qualities which will make a strong appeal.

Very few people are so wealthy that they can afford to be indifferent to the wearing qualities of shoes; on the other hand, very few people are so indifferent to appearances that the store can neglect to emphasize the style feature. Foot comfort is also a factor which most people are desirous of obtaining. All of these things are usually considered by the customers in making shoe purchases.

Merchants, salespeople and display men are apt to forget these things because they live too close to their own business. The merits of the merchandise becomes an old story with them, and they think that the public is in the same frame of mind. Hence, they conduct their business from the merchant's point of view instead of that of the public. In other words, they remain on the inside looking out instead of occasionally "being on the outside looking in."

Introspection is a good indoor sport if practiced now and then, but over-indulgence breeds narrow-mindedness.

New Viewpoint Needed

It would do store people a lot of good if they could remove, once in awhile, themselves from the atmosphere of their business long enough to learn how the public views the retailer.

It might not be a bad idea if the merchant or display man, or both together, were to put on their hats right now and go outside and look at the shoe window. See if the display really tells the people some of the things about the shoes that they want to know. See if a bunch of autumn leaves, or a nicely decorated background or pretty display fixtures are the only things being depended on to attract attention to the window. All of those things have a place in the general scheme, but they fail in giving the selling punch to the display.

Nowadays, when people are being instructed to buy carefully, the display that creates business must have selling punch to it. Careful buying does not imply less buying, but it does make people look for concrete virtues in the things which they purchase.

The store that realizes this fact is the one that is going to get the trade. The display man that keeps this fact in mind is going to bring business to the shoe department.

Buyer Shares Responsibility

Speaking of bringing business to the department is a reminder of the fact that the department head bears a share of responsibility for the character of the displays. When the buyer places an order for shoes, he is usually satiated with reasons for buying what he does. The manufacturer's or jobber's salesman exudes the virtues of his merchandise. Some of these "reasons" must make an impression on the buyer or he would not place the order.

The buyer should regard his salespeople and the display man in the light of customers. In other words, he should "sell" them the merchandise in the same way as he has been sold. He should explain his reasons for making a particular purchase and put the salespeople in an enthusiastic frame of mind.

Forearmed with this knowledge, the display man would arrange the display so that the good points of the shoes would be shown. On the other hand, if the display man knows nothing about the good features of the merchandise, he is compelled to use various accessories.

MORE "HITS" AND "MISSES" IN SHOE SELLING GAME

Representative Retailers Recount Their Experiences, and Tell How They Increased Business—The Strictly Cash System, Establishing Good Repair Department, Installing New Front, and Issuing Inviting Booklets Boosted Trade for Several

“WHAT was the greatest ‘hit’ you ever made in connection with your growing business, and how was it brought about?” was asked of a leading Eastern Ontario shoe retailer the other day. This man stands out as a signal of success in the footwear arena, and in reply to the query he stated:

“This is something very difficult to give an intelligent answer, but I think the best ‘hit’ I have made in carrying out my business was conducting it on a strictly cash basis with one price to all, and handling reliable goods.”

“The heaviest ‘miss’ I have made has been in the way of buying shoes that did not appeal to the public, as I had anticipated, but gradually I have learned to be conservative and have not been so venturesome. I have no outstanding record that would be helpful to any other members of the trade.”

Better Value and Better Service

Another leading shoe retailer doing business in Sydney, N.B., in regard to the “hits” and “misses” that he has made says: “Perhaps my greatest ‘hit’ was the happy faculty of putting myself into my shoes, and making the customer feel that he was getting better value and better service than the other fellow gave. I always stood behind my goods and adjusted any failure to the satisfaction of the wearer. Another factor in my success was that I began business just when the ideas of merchandising shoes were changing from selling them over the old fashioned counter like groceries, to the modern idea of careful fitting, settees instead of counters, neat interiors, special window trims, etc., and I adjusted myself to the new conditions.”

“As to ‘misses,’ starting as I did with no experience whatever in store keeping, the wonder is that I did not make a complete ‘miss.’ I was handicapped in not having a good office system or method of recording stock, placing orders, etc., and often found myself overlapping. Too much stock for my turnover, too many lines, buying too far ahead and picking an occasional lemon, have been my weak points. I have had many bumps and am now setting myself steadfastly toward correcting the error of my ways.

“I do not know whether the foregoing gets at the point you wanted or not. Maybe it will be a little different from the other fellows. Business keeps up great, away ahead of last year. Our people are beginning to feel the pinch of high prices more as old stock and old prices are done. The rural people kick most, but I give them no quarter. Who is better able to pay? Farmers produce as much as ever and procure four times higher prices. They sell vastly more than they buy so they should welcome high prices, eh? It’s the poor devil who has to work hard to support a big family that I pity. If prices go any higher, we will have to follow the example of our patron saint, St. Crispin, and steal from the rich companies to shoe the poor children.”

Keep a Good Repair Department

“Speaking of ‘hits’ and ‘misses’ in the shoe game,” writes a Guelph retailer, “the biggest ‘miss’ I ever made was when some years ago I discontinued my repair department, and sent all my work to be done outside. I thought that I was accomplishing a good stroke of business in attempting to side track all repair jobs, but I found out after a while that many families, who did not get their work when I promised it to them (for the repair man would attend to his own customers first), got peeved and I lost their trade.

Now repairing I had regarded as a nuisance and a bugbear, and in every way an undesirable adjunct, but let me tell you that a number of persons from the country expect to get their repairs attended to at the place where they buy their footwear. When I was not able to give them good service they gradually left me and went somewhere else. I managed to get along for two years, and then I decided that I would try and make a ‘hit’. I engaged a first class shoe-

A unique window display card shown by Chisholm's Shoe Store, Toronto, during a recent "Children's Week," which is observed the first six days in every month maker, and now my work in the repair branch clears me from fifteen to twenty dollars and more a week, above all expenses. I advertise ‘repairing attended to neatly, promptly and quickly.’ I endeavor to have all jobs finished when promised and the repair end is a good feeder to my store. I have concluded that if outsiders can make money in the shoe mending art, then I can do the same, and I find that I secure a number of new patrons each month through this branch of my business. No, sir, the repair end may have certain drawbacks, but I am willing to put up with them in return for the extra profit that I can make out of the game.”

Attractive Premises Pull Trade

“The biggest stroke or ‘hit,’ as you term it,” declares an Edmonton shoeman, “was when I took out my old front and put in a modern display exterior with receding entrance and double show case windows with proper shelves, and bought some wood and glass pedestals for the presentation of the latest styles that I carry in stock. I asked the landlord to carry out the work, but he refused, and on getting a new ten year lease from him, I told him that I would stand the expense myself. Of course, he had no objections, and I consulted a specialty firm in this line. In two weeks the front of my dingy place was transformed. The alterations cost me over six hundred dollars, but I have more than a handsome return on the outlay. Business increased eleven per cent. the first six months, and seventeen per cent. the next six, and I expect that this year my receipts will show a gain of at least thirty per cent. The greatest 'miss' is to jog along with poor equipment, shabby shelving, inadequate seating accommodation and indifferent display fixtures. The greatest 'muff' I made was in striving to plug so many years with an antiquated store front."

The inviting exterior of the Moyer Shoe Co.'s Store on Portage Ave., Winnipeg

"The greatest 'hit'—yes, an inspiration, was when I borrowed several cuts of up-to-date shoes on stylish lasts from a Canadian house from whom I buy a great deal of goods, and went to one of our local newspaper offices where a well managed job department is conducted, and spent fifty-nine dollars in getting out several hundred artistic booklets, on coated paper. They contained a full description of some twelve shoes, and prices were given. I did not scatter them about indiscriminately, but from the telephone book and the county directory, I spent a week in compiling a full list of the best people in the surrounding country for ten miles as well as in the city. I mailed these booklets to them, accompanied by a neat leaflet explaining the superior facilities of my store, and inviting them to come in and see the new styles, which it would be a pleasure to show, and callers would be under no obligation to buy. I also emphasized the service and complete stock of the store. These brochures brought me fine results. Many new customers were secured, and the profit on the first thirty pairs of shoes more than repaid the outlay for the printing and, as a result of the publicity, I sold several hundred more dollars' worth of the — make than I had in any previous season. Of course, the footwear was a well known, trade-marked line in women's high grade welts, which are excellent fitters."

"The biggest 'miss' I ever made," writes this alert retailer who does business in Fredericton, N.B., "was when six years ago I refused to give one of my best salesmen a raise of five dollars per week. He had received an offer from another firm, and when I let him go it was two years before I found a clerk who could sell as well as he could. I happened to run into a bunch of dubs, and the experience was rather costly."

SOME PEDAL FACTS WORTH KNOWING

The human foot may be weakened, lamed and rendered less serviceable by wrong habits in standing and walking, as well as by faulty shoes.

With very few exceptions, every child has perfect feet, unless they have been spoiled by ill-treatment. The child of to-day comes into the world with a foot shaped just like that of the baby of a thousand years ago, and the foot of the grown person of to-day should be just as shapely as was the human foot shown in the statuary of the classic ages of the sculptor's art, if it has not been spoiled by modern shoes.

The most common deviation of the foot from its natural shape is that in which the great toe has, from its normal line, pointing straight ahead, been turned outward so as to press upon the other toes. That is usually the first bad result of wearing ill-fitting shoes, and it is very often the beginning of a vicious circle of foot troubles which include a narrowing of the fore part of the foot, and a weakening part of its locomotive power; a tendency to assume a faulty gait in walking, and faulty postures in standing; and these in turn weaken the arch of the foot and tend to flat-foot; and in turn again accentuate or fix the habit of the awkward and unnatural gait. These are some, but not all, of the ills which come from having the feet misshapen by faulty shoes.

In the gait which is naturally taken by the person whose feet are unspoiled, and who is properly shod, each foot as it does its part in walking acts as follows: The heel, as the foot is swung forward, is the part which first touches the ground. It touches the ground lightly for the instant until the weight of the body is transferred to the ball of the foot, and the outer lower edge of the sole. The third and final stage in the action of the foot is a propulsive movement given by the toes, and more forcibly by the great toe, as they leave the ground.

The imprint of the unclothed normal foot upon a level surface shows that the weight of the body whether in standing or walking, is borne by the heel, the ball of the foot, and the outer and lower portion of the arch of the foot. In the deformity of the foot, which is caused by shoes which are narrow at the toe, or curved outward at the inner and front part of the shoe, there is a tendency to toe out in walking, and this throws the weight more than is natural upon the inner portion of the arch of the foot, the part which is not so well able to bear the strain.

But, if the foot is natural, the great toe will, and should, point straight forward, and the person will not have an awkward toeing-out gait. The straight forward direction of the toe in walking is nowadays more and more insisted upon as correct and good form.

The toeing-out habit and the toeing-out track indicates a foot which has been distorted or weakened.

ADVICE ON CARE AND CLEANING OF WHITE SHOES

The Proper Use of White Fabric Cleaners Depends in Large Measure on Kind of Adhesive Used on the Backing Cloth—One Good Way is to Use Soap and Water, and Two Nail Brushes, One for Dry Cleaning and the Other for Wet Cleaning

THERE is no precedent for the huge vogue of white shoes, but women generally don't know how to handle them, how to clean them or how to wear them, says the "Boot and Shoe Recorder." The big colored mammy of the South, the husky backwoods cook, the wife of the fruit vendor from the sunny Mediterranean countries, in common with all other women, are wearing white shoes and taking dancing lessons. The only education some of these women have had in the care of white footwear was the knowledge that their fathers used to smear tallow on their farm boots and cowhide brogans. It is imperatively necessary that the shoe merchant should take up the education of his customers in the matter of the care and cleaning of white shoes.

Recently one of the country's biggest shoe merchants asked where he "could have analyzed stains in white canvas shoes, in order to learn the cause of the stain, which appears after wearing in a light shower or damp weather."

Counters Not to Blame

Merchants will remember a somewhat similar condition which arose about eight years ago when tan Russia was so popular and a great deal of trouble developed on account of the color coming out of the leather, which on investigation was found to be due to the cleaner used.

Makers of white canvas shoes have experienced more or less troubles because of returns that they cannot pass on to the fabric maker or take responsibility for themselves. The retail shoe merchant's troubles are evidenced by the inquiry quoted, and the remedy lies, not in "passing the buck" to the man higher up, but to the woman further down in the scale of merchandising—the ultimate consumer. To do this, the merchant must educate his trade accordingly.

Investigation of white shoe discoloration gives a clean bill of health to counters, soles and innersoles. While there is necessarily some acid, both in leather and fibre counters, as well as in the bottom stock, authorities agree that the amount is so small as to have no effect whatever on the fabric quarter.

When complaints are received on the ground that shoes become discolored after wearing in a light shower or damp weather, allowance must be made for the customer's human desire to get an adjustment, whatever the cause of the stain. Improper cleaning—home made ideas in cleaning—sometimes injurious cleaners, are at the root of the trouble.

The proper use of white fabric cleaners depends in large measure on the kind of adhesive used on the backing cloth. Cleaners containing strong solvents have been found to discolor white canvas that has been backed with gutta percha, by dissolving the gutta percha and bringing a stain to the face of the goods. With the possibility of this occurring when any dark colored adhesive is used, fabric houses have been experimenting with white adhesives. These, however, can also be dissolved by volatile solvents, but discoloration will not result.

An important cloth house the past season has advocated the use of a white substance recently developed, but the white adhesives hitherto known were a flour paste, and vulcanized white rubber, which has been tested in the past few years by some of the biggest producers of women's shoes, with unsatisfactory results. The rubberized backing was found to lack the porosity of gutta percha tissue when properly diffused and the odor, which is often noticeable from rubberized cloths, was also an objection. While volatile solvents, such as gasoline or the specialties based on tetrachloride of carbon can dissolve gutta percha tissue, discoloring the cloth to a brownish shade, the gutta percha does not otherwise injure the fabric, and the shoe can always be re-colored to match a dress.

Where the Customer Makes Trouble

The other most common discoloration in a white shoe comes from the wearer painting her corns with iodine. The heat of the foot; perspiration; possibly getting the shoes wet in a shower, causes the chemic action of iodine upon the starched shoe lining, thus developing a purple color. Starch has always been the test for iodine, just as litmus paper is the test for acid.

Perhaps the simplest way to clean backed white fabric shoes is to use soap and water and two nail brushes, one for dry cleaning and the other for wet cleaning. A dash of ammonia, alcohol or ether is good, and after the shoes have been cleaned, talcum or most of the powder preparations can be sprinkled on the shoes. It must be borne in mind, however, that the manufacturers of special cleaning preparations are constantly working to develop their products, and a little inquiry amongst these houses by the shoe merchant will place him in a position to recommend the proper cleaners for each kind of shoe, and thus assure a sale and a profit to which he is entitled.

HOW MUCH OF YOUR STOCK IS ALIVE AND WORKING

Why Not Install a Simple System, asks the "Shoe Economist," That Will Tell You About Every Line, Every Week and Prevent You From Going it Blind—Every Phase of the Shoe Department Should be Kept on a High State of Efficiency

"EVERY department in the store is on a paying basis except the shoe department. Why can we not make it pay? The volume is good, but there is no profit at the end of the year."

At first blush, this quotation looks like a hurry call for an expert accountant or a real genuine sales expert. But it is neither; it is just the old story of the lop-sided departmental organization. It is the story of the department where three good points are offset by two bad ones in the quintette of important departmental considerations—buying, selling, merchandising, advertising and management. If any one of these things is out of tune the business of the department suffers and no matter how excellent the other four may be, the one bad one will throw the entire workings of the department out of gear.

Where the Loss Comes In

It is a peculiar circumstance, coincidence rather, that if there are several departments in a store and all are doing well but one, that one will be the shoes eight times out of ten. Why is this? Is it because good shoe buyers are scarce or because good salesmen are scarce or because good shoes are scarce?

It is none of these things. It is because it is more difficult to merchandise shoes, men's or women's, than it is to merchandise most other lines. This is due to the nature of the goods and the customer's attitude toward them.

While shoes are commodities of general need and are classed as necessity goods, it must be remembered that they partake of two other classifications. They are fashion goods and personal use goods.

The department buyer goes into the market and buys shoes for his season's stock, brings them home, marks them, puts them in stock, advertises them and starts to sell. He has 60 per cent. regular customers and 40 per cent. just-happen-in customers. His buying in the market was based largely on the regular trade of his department, and if he spent $10,000 in the market very likely $6,000 of his purchase went for lines, styles, lasts and sizes that he thinks he has regular customers for, and $4,000 went for just shoes which he expects to sell to whoever comes in to buy. He has bought shoes of all well-known makes and of high quality and you would think he would have no trouble selling them.

But he does have trouble year in and year out. He finds at every turn that the shoes he bought for what he deemed "his class of trade" are wanted by the now-and-then customer who just comes in once in a while and the stock he bought as a background for his department, the $4,000 worth, is not sold out during a season's business. Part of each division of his stock is dead stock practically half of the year. It is "idle," not working, stock up to the amount perhaps of $6,000 out of the $10,000.

Live Stock Must Carry Dead

The "live" working stock has to carry all the dead stock and cover operating expenses at the same time. Naturally there will be a loss, because all during the seasons there will be need for extra pushing in order to keep the stock turning. Extra pushing means extra stimulation by means of extra advertising—an added expense if business is slow—price reduction and special sales and oftentime bonuses to sales-people.

No set rule can be prescribed for all cases of acute idle stock—that's the name of the malady that is sapping the department's vitality—because individual cases differ greatly.

But there is one safe rule which any store can adapt to its individual needs—and that is the weekly stock taking system. Without going into technical details of the way to take stock, the idea is to find out frequently just what is moving and just what is going slowly and what is standing still in the stock. It may take a little time and patience to do this every week, but it will be time well spent, for at the end of every week the head of the department can check up just where to put the extra selling pressure the following week.

If your department has been run on the hit-and-miss plan so far as the selling value of the stock is concerned you could do yourself a lot of good by working out an I-know-where-I-am-at system by keeping tab on what sells well, what sells poorly and what sells not at all in your $10,000 worth of shoes, or whatever the amount may be.

Remember that the $10,000 is an investment represented by lines, styles, lasts, kinds and qualities of shoes. And it is an investment upon which you ought to expect a profitable return.

How to Go About It

Here is a simple method now in use by several progressive shoe departments in big and little department stores. You can take your own stock, no one needs to tell you how to do that, but after you have done that analyze it this way:

How many high-priced staple shoes of a brand have I left?

How many novelties of the same grade are left?

How do the sales in one brand compare with those of another brand? (It is assumed that you sell several branded lines as well as one of your own, all of which are classed as high-priced shoes.)

Then do the same thing with the medium grades and the popular price goods, if you carry them.

After you have analyzed by price, analyze by style; then by kinds—men's or women's, black and tan, lace and button—then by sizes and then by leathers.

It seems complicated, but it is simple. All you need is a chart which shows the number of shoes in stock from each big line you carry, then a column devoted to grades by price; then columns showing what kinds are selling, what sizes and what leathers. A sixteen-year-old boy can keep the chart and give you reports on it every Saturday morning. He can get the report from the salesman in charge of each division of the stock.

The above system will tell you every Monday morning something like this at the end of the fall season, let us say:

Blank and Blank line, 60 dozen pairs at opening of season. 30 dozen sold—half staple; half novelties; Sizes left in stock..... (put them down whatever they are).

Lace.....selling well or slow.

Button.....selling well in medium grades.

Blacks.....going fast.

Tans.....about average.

Just think of knowing all this at the end of a term of weeks about the Blank and Blank line in your stock.

You know how much money is invested in it. You know how much of the stock is alive and working; also how much is dead or at least passive. If you know all this about every line in stock, you know what to do the rest of the season.

Why not put a little system of this kind into your shoe department if you are still losing profit?

WHAT IS REALLY BELOW SURFACE OF LEATHER

Nice Exterior Appearance Cannot Be Had Unless the Leather is of Good Quality—
Some Instructive Data, and the Various Processes of Treatment—How Lubricants Are Properly Worked In—Must be of Good Substance to Take on Fine Finish

MOST shoe retailers choose leather by its finish. They judge it by its exterior appearance, which is quite natural, for a great many things in the world are judged by their exterior appearance. But there are many people, among whom are shoe dealers, who want to know what is beneath the surface.

For the benefit of these inquisitive, and at the same time keenly intelligent retailers, the following short sketch is given of what makes up the finish of leather. So that it will not be confusing, technicalities and formalities are omitted.

Leather must be of good substance to take a good finish. A goodly exterior appearance cannot be put on to a piece of pulpy leather any more than plaster of Paris can be made to look like genuine marble. But some surprisingly good imitations of finishes of high grade leather can be put on to shoddy leather, and the careful shoe retailer will be watchful that he is not thereby deceived.

In one factory, which makes a specialty of finishing leather, thousands of yards of cotton cloth are received each month, and are treated with much the same chemicals and machines that are used for finishing leather. This cotton imitation of leather is used chiefly for bookbinding, upholstery and novelties. But some of it drifts into the shoe trade.

Necessity of Well Nourished Skins

Leather that is of good substance must be made of well nourished skins; that is, of pelts of animals so well fed that their pelts, as well as their flesh, are solid and substantial. The fibres of such skins are strong, and are firmly woven together. The chrome tannage, or the combination processes of tanning, preserve in the pelts the network of fibres, and the gelatine substance around them. And, if the pelts are of good quality, and well tanned, the foundation is laid for a good finish, or the excellent exterior appearance that the shoe retailer and the shoe wearer appreciate.

In former times, tanners were content to tan their leather sufficiently to preserve the pelts, and then to dress it with oil, or grease. The famous "russet leather" of England, which was used for clothing by Robin Hood and his merry men, was bark tanned and finished "natural" as we would say to-day. It was oiled to soften it, and colored in the sun.

And, by the way, some very fine bookbinding leather of to-day is colored in the sun. Likewise, patent leather is dependent for its final finish on the sun, after the last varnish coat is applied.

Indians used to tan buck leather with brains and fats of deer. The fats grease the leather. The savages were as wise in leather making as are moderns. Practically all leather of to-day must have in it grease or oils. These lubricants are worked into the leather in a process that is called "fat liquoring." The "fat liquor" is made in the tannery of an emulsion of soap and oil. Or various kinds of "fat liquors" may be purchased ready made. The "fat liquor" gives leather its smoothness, softness, and flexibility, and its silky appearance, too.

Many tanners consider the "fat liquoring" process as important as is the chrome process of tanning. It must be done with a great deal of care. If there is too little "fat liquor" worked into the leather, the leather is dry and hard. And if too much is worked in, the leather is greasy, catches the dust, and becomes offensive to the eye.

Tanners who use oil for "fat liquoring" their leather have to be very particular about the quality of the oil, for there are plenty of substitutes for the best oils, porgy oil in place of cod liver oil, and an inferior oil will do as much damage to leather as an inferior lubricant will do to an auto

Chas. Webb, of Powell River, B.C. At home on his "Ranch" with his family. This is one of the stumps he is amusing himself by rooting out with blasting powder to make room for the "spuds." Charley "moved" one stump a little larger than this with twenty-seven sticks of powder. It moved—several feet and one chunk weighing hundreds of pounds jumped several hundred feet, and went over his house.

engine. The best cod liver oil used for "fat liquoring" leather is the same as the medicinal oil which is used for coughs and colds.

Dull calf leather, in the metallic lustre finish, furnishes about as good an example as there is of a leather that is properly "fat liquored." This leather has just enough oil in it to make it soft, silky and durable, and at the same time, not so much oil that the leather will gather dust. Indeed, dull calf leather holds a shine in a remarkable way.

The popularity of Russia calf leather during the last few seasons has been due, in a large extent, to the fact that tanners learned to "fat liquor" it in the same way that they "fat liquored" dull calf leather. They overcome the dryness and the brittleness of Russia calf of former times. The decrease in the popularity of patent leather, which some shoe retailers experienced a few years ago, was due to the fact that a great deal of patent leather that was pushed on to the market did not have enough oil in it. It was dry and brittle, and it cracked. Today patent gives satisfaction.

The surface finish of leather is secured by the use of machinery. The operation corresponds very much to the home occupation of laundering linen. The skins are worked out on "staking machines," so that they are of full measurement and are free from wrinkles. This operation corresponds to the work done by a laundress, when she smooths out a sheet to its full measurements, to free it from wrinkles.

This is the Time When Quick Service on Quality Merchandise is Necessary

This is true for many reasons, and one, perhaps the most important, is that quick service makes it possible for the retail merchant to turn his stock many times with much greater aggregate profits.

The reader of SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL has at his disposal both Quick Service and High Class Shoes in our In-Stock Department.

All you need to do to determine for yourself whether or not this service and this merchandise can help you to more frequent turn-over and greater volume of profits is to send us a trial order. And you should have one of our catalogs.

DO YOU KNOW WHAT YOUR REAL COSTS ARE?

Too Many Repairers Merely Guess at Matters—They Forget to Figure Per Cent. Profit on Selling Price—Salary for the Proprietor and Interest on Money Invested in Equipment Should be Included in Overhead Expense—Forecaste of the Future

SHOW me a shoe repairer who makes a study of the question of the cost of doing business, and I will show you one who makes a success of his business, says a writer in the "Shoe Repair Shop."

To be sure the subject of how to get business evokes more enthusiasm, but if due consideration to the present subject is not given, the other is liable to fool us, and lead us into false ideas of profit. Too many business men think because trade is good that profit necessarily follows, and with this thought in their minds habits of extravagance are developed. The well-balanced business man will, therefore, always take an interest in what constitutes the cost of doing business; and when he has reduced that cost to a percentage he will have that percentage in mind when he is figuring on the cost of a particular article or job, and the right price he should charge.

A great many repairers think that the only cost involved in putting on a pair of half soles is the actual expenditure for leather and other materials, and perhaps for labor; although many repairers figure that if they do the work themselves there is no cost for labor. It is not upon this theory that men who conduct big profitable businesses become prosperous.

If shoe repair shops are to succeed they must do more calculating to find the cost. When a customer brings a job to the shop and they figure on it, they must not only mentally compute the amount of material the job will use, but add to that a sufficient amount to cover overhead expenses and labor; regardless of whether the repairer does the work himself or has a helper do it. It is legitimate, however, to figure this cost for labor at the rate which you would pay a helper; for if you do the work yourself it is worth just what you would have to pay a helper; but the cost of doing business, the overhead expense, should also be computed. It's an expense just as infallible as the cost of material, and to overlook it means careless loss.

Keeping Tab on All Expenses

To be sure each time that a customer brings a job to your shop you cannot even mentally start in and figure on all such items as rent, insurance, taxes, advertising, postage, freight, loss for bad debts, and so forth, but you can do this: Keep track of all these expenses for a year, and also keep track of the volume of business that you do during the year. If you will do this thoroughly and systematically your first awakening will be to the fact that these so-called overhead expenses are greater than you think; but having attained their total amount it is easy for you to determine what percentage of your total receipts for the year has been expended in overhead expenses. If you find this amounts to say 20 per cent., then when a customer comes to the shop with a job you have this percentage in your mind, which you should add in to the cost of doing the job with just as much reason as you will also add the cost for material and the cost for labor.

For simple illustration, suppose that you are charging 75 cents for a half sole job. What profit are you making on this job? If your overhead expenses, or cost of doing business is 20 per cent., then the first item of cost on this particular job would be 15 cents for overhead expense. If then you compute the cost for material at say 23 cents and labor at 18 cents, you find that the cost of doing this job is 56 cents, and that your profit does not begin until this 56 cents is deducted.

Turn these figures over in your mind frequently. Let them become fixed there. They are not submitted as being absolute; they fluctuate with changing conditions, and are used for example only. Possibly you can do this job for a little less cost for raw material, but probably you are paying out more. The chances are that the charge for labor is insufficient, as wasted or intermittent time allowed for; and it may be that you have overlooked items which should have been computed in the overhead expense; but whether these figures are accurate or not, the principle remains the same.

Assuming the accuracy of these figures as indicating your profit, all remuneration for the extra time you are giving the customer, the money you are paying out for family expenses, recreation and all other expenses that you are personally put to, have to come out of this amount that is between the 56 cents and the 75 cents, or 19 cents; and if at the end of the year you have a surplus for the bank, that also has to come out of this 19 cents margin. It does not take much high life to spend 19 cents; but figures do not lie, and if the repairer has all these matters in mind every time a customer brings a job to his shop he is apt to have more courage to ask a reasonable price. I find, after all, the price we charge is simply a reflection of our courage.

Some repairers, due to location, have higher expense items; some have to pay more for wages; there is a little variance in the cost of raw material, as some repairers buy in large quantities and pay cash; but we hope that every repairer who does not now do so will plan to begin at once to keep a complete record of the amount of business done each day of the year, and will likewise keep a record of all operating expenses.

What About Your Own Pay

This list of expenses should first call for a salary to be paid to the proprietor. You ought to be worth a little more to the business than a helper, and therefore first figure on a salary for yourself which is a little higher than what you would have to pay a helper. The next item which you should figure is the interest on the capital you have invested in the business. If you have $1,000 invested in a repair shop it should pay you 6 per cent. interest just the same as though you had it loaned on real estate. Now fix in your mind these two important items, salary for yourself, and interest on the money invested, as being legitimate items for operating expenses. Next comes the item of wages for workmen and all other helpers about the place. Then come such items as rent, interest on borrowed money that is used in the business, taxes, insurance, light, heat, advertising, stationery, repairs, postage, freight and express, bad debts, association dues, depreciation in stock on hand, machinery, fixtures and so forth, and last but not least, watch miscellaneous items and see that they are all included in this matter of expenses. When you determine the total amount of this expense, then add up the total amount of business for the year and you will know what percentage of this volume comes under the head of this overhead expense. You are then in a position to easily figure this item every time you figure the cost to do a job.

Some Things to Remember

Here we want to direct your attention to one other important feature in figuring this cost, however. You must remember that this per cent. cost for doing business is computed on the total sales, and therefore in figuring a job you must not first figure the amount of the cost of raw material and labor and then add your overhead percentage to that amount. You must figure that percentage from the price you charge for the job. In other words, on a 75 cent repair job, if your overhead expense was 20 per cent., you must figure 15 cents in your estimate of the cost, and not simply add 20 per cent. to the total of the cost of material and labor.

20 per cent. added to cost—16 2-3 per cent. profit on selling price.

25 per cent. added to cost—20 per cent. profit on selling price.

30 per cent. added to cost—23 per cent. profit on selling price.

33 1-3 per cent. added to cost—25 per cent. profit on selling price.

40 per cent. added to cost—28 per cent. profit on selling price.

50 per cent. added to cost—33 1-3 per cent. profit on selling price.

60 per cent. added to cost—37 per cent. profit on selling price.

75 per cent. added to cost—42 per cent. profit on selling price.

80 per cent. added to cost—44 per cent. profit on selling price.

90 per cent. added to cost—47 per cent. profit on selling price.

100 per cent. added to cost—50 per cent. profit on selling price.

The Birthright of a Man

Repairers are not in the business to simply make a living. To "get past," so to speak. They are in business for the same purpose as great corporations, and that is to declare dividends. It is these dividends that make you a successful business man. It is these dividends that make possible the enjoyment of the better things in life. The shoe repairer is just as much one of God's children as an oil magnate. He has an equal right to enjoy all the pursuits of happiness. His children are created with the inalienable rights of other children. They are entitled to greater advantages than their fathers enjoyed. They will have to meet greater problems. They must be properly fed, clothed and schooled; and while a repairer is thinking of these higher ideals, the great universal mind is looking out for his welfare. As he strives to accomplish better conditions for those dependent upon him, he consequentially accumulates better conditions for himself. He becomes better satisfied with himself, and as this understanding of his own reality grows, courage supplants fear, and that progress which is a birthright he mentally realizes and enjoys.

ALWAYS TURN OUT FINISHED JOB

No one feature redounds to the ultimate benefit of the shoe repair shop more than the turning out of a finished job. Too many repairers have the cheap price in mind, and the consequential thought that goes with cheap price, of getting rid of the job with as little work as possible; and that class of repairers who hope to build up a successful business on low-priced half-soleing are slow to understand that a greater part of the people, and the profitable class, are willing to pay more, and of course expect something more.

A few days ago we were in a very busy repair shop along toward evening. We noticed probably twenty pairs of shoes, including men's, women's and children's, that were evidently finished so far as the idea of this particular repairer was concerned, but which were practically in the same surface condition as when the shoes came into the shop, with the exception of the particular repairs made thereon. Some of these shoes had the mud of the street on them. Knowing the neighborhood, and the character of people that live therein, we are safe in assuming that not a single pair of these shoes would be worn by their owners until they had first received a treatment of dressing and polish. While the repairing was substantially done, the appearance of the shoe as it was to be returned to the owner had received no consideration whatever. We will venture that 90 per cent. of these jobs would have given greater satisfaction had they been properly dressed ready for wear and 10 cents additional charged. If an objection had been made by the customers it probably

What has he done ?
Has he a record ?
What is his character ?
Will he make good ?

These are proper questions the world is asking of all who would occupy its stations of responsibility and honor.

Likewise in stocking your FOOTWEAR DEPARTMENT you must be able to assure customers that your shoes will MAKE GOOD.

would have been on the children's shoes. The process of dressing or polishing could be profitably done for 5 cents a pair.

We all know that many good shops pay special heed to dressing the surface of the shoes before they turn them out to customers. Once in a while these shops temporarily lose a customer because they charge 5 cents or 10 cents more for the job than the shop across the street; but let the customer take his next job across the street, and when he gets his job back, finds the work returned to him uncleaned and unpolished, instantly he is impressed with the inferior job. In fact the job looks so much more inferior than it really is that he condemns the entire work. He immediately assumes that inferior stock, poorer thread, and less mechanical ability are displayed; and his future business he takes to the original shop. He now becomes a permanent patron; and if the customer is a woman, who naturally is more particular and more appreciative of finished work, she will talk about it with the neighbors.

It is a very slight expense to clean the shoes of mud before they are repaired, and a very slight expense to afterwards coat them with a dressing. They do not need to be polished with elbow grease to give them the appearance of shop finish.

It is the mission of every repair shop to study all problems pertaining to good work which will earn good prices; and success depends upon acquiring understanding along these lines.

SOME POINTERS FOR THE TRADE

Crushed box toes can successfully be made to stand up again by placing a stiff piece of buckram, well shellaced, on a last with tacks. The heads of the tacks are cut off flush with the material and after inserting into the toe of the shoe, the last is left for two hours or more to dry the shellac and unite the buckram to the shoe. Then the last is pulled out, leaving the buckram free from fastenings and the toe rigid.

When your stock of goods is getting low, order fresh supplies, and do not wait until it becomes completely exhausted. Manufacturers and wholesalers are being held up with orders on account of the war conditions of leather and other supplies, and it takes several weeks before they are able to get new supplies. You may suffer a great loss of business because of not ordering goods before they are really needed. This suggestion, however, does not urge over-buying. It's not a good time to do that.

* * *

In the findings department of the shoe repair shop a good supply of shoe trees ought to be well displayed and their use encouraged among customers, not only from a financial standpoint to the repairer, but by impressing the customer of the true value they have in preserving the shoes. Shoes are expensive these days, and many people would gladly take advice as to ways of preserving them. Some women think that shoe trees are merely ornaments, whereas they are really necessities. It can easily be explained how the leather in shoes will shrink on account of perspiration, or dampness of the weather, thereby causing the shoes to lose their shape and become old-looking. Another thing that customers will appreciate are a few helpful facts in regard to the importance of keeping the uppers clean and soft by rubbing in some natural animal oil occasionally. Many times the skin of a banana will restore the softness, as well as clean the shoe, especially brown shoes. These two facts, the value of shoe trees and the value of taking proper care of the uppers, impressed upon customers, will make them feel that you take an interest in their welfare as well as your own, and may help you to make a good, staunch customer.

Leather Trade Jottings

What is Seen and Heard Amongst the Trade—Views
and News of the Leather Trade at Home and Abroad

THE past week has been a momentous one for the leather trade. From a condition of almost abject inertia, it has jumped into one of the most exciting periods that have occurred since the war began. The reports spread broadcast through the daily press as to the demoralization of the hide market had a most depressing effect upon leather. Shoe handlers who read these erroneous statements sat back and waited; in some cases, cancelling orders. In turn shoe manufacturers who were beginning to pick up a few lines of leather quit cold, and began to wonder whether the beginning of the end had not come. Tanners, to their credit, sat tight. For as one large leather man said, "What else could we do?" To join in the stampede meant demoralization, not only of the leather, but the shoe market, the end of which no one could foresee. There was undoubtedly an accumulation of hides, and in a wild effort to loosen the "jam" hide dealers went farther than they intended. The reports in the papers not only stopped manufacturers buying leather, but also caused tanners to hold back from buying hides. The Montreal paper that started things in Canada had a record deluge of opinions as to its unwise course from all sections of the trade. It sought to stay the conflagration in subsequent issues, with little effect. The report was reproduced and magnified by all sorts of papers, big and little.

A Changed Face.—Within a week the tide turned, and hides took an upward jump that caused even the bulls to wonder what had struck the market. Undoubtedly the effect was due to the release of large quantities of leather for export from the United States, and the giving out of large contracts for army footwear in that country. The British Buying Commission entered the market and purchased millions of dollars' worth of leather and shoes. According to reports they have taken 900,000 hemlock bends and 600,000 hemlock sides, and 50,000 cases of women's cut soles for Russia. Large purchases were also made of calf and side leather, but the principal movement has been caused by the lifting of the embargo for the admission into England of leather purchased by British manufacturers, prior to February 23rd last. The shipment of these goods has meant a general clearing up of the market, which being followed by the giving out of contracts for army shoes to the extent of a million and a half pairs has given the whole situation across the line a different face. There has been a response in firmness in almost all lines of upper and sole stock, with the result that already shoe orders are beginning to show marked activity.

The Hide Situation.—The sale of nearly three hundred thousand packer hides, early last week, was followed by more liberal buying by tanners.

Quite a few individual orders of fair size have been put in with the result that the market has been pretty well cleared of surplus stocks, both light and heavy. The market has taken on a firm tone, and is likely to rule strong, although there is now little excitement or tendency toward sensational advance. The feeling seems to prevail that business is now on a sound, sensible footing, and that as tanners have evidently conservation stocks, further demand will bring advances. The country hide market has responded to the general strength of packer selections, and although there has not been the strength manifested in this class of stock that has been present in packer selections the best grades rule strong at the prevailing quotations. The market in dry and salted foreign hides is also strong, supply being bare, owing to active buying operations in South America and the difficulty of getting supplies on account of strikes in the La Plata region. Tanners are quickly picking up such quantities as they can, without boosting the market, and from the purchases made of dry hides in the past ten days, they evidently think that present prices are, at least, reasonable. Calfskins are firmer, although in good supply, and, although fair quantities may be bought lower, some sales have been made around forty-two cents.

Where Canada Stands.—To some extent Canada will undoubtedly profit by the increased activity in American leathers, but Canadian tanners are naturally asking why they are left out in the cold in the purchasing of large quantities of materials for English consumption. This in face of the fact that we are contributing to the best of our ability in men and means for the prosecuting of the great war seems, to put it mildly, a little unreasonable. It is urged, of course, that the immense credit established in the United States by Great Britain, through war loans, makes it imperative that as much purchasing as possible should be done through that country. But Canada should be able to arrange a similar credit in connection with industries that are so essential, as the shoe and leather trades, to her industrial existence. Arrangements have been made for the handling of wheat and other food products. Why could not these be extended to embrace supplies in shoes, clothing and other equipment for our overseas forces for which we are already pledged to pay the cost? The shoe and leather trades would, without question, be willing to do their part in subscribing to loans or credits having this in view. As it is the country has been depleted of its men to an extent that has already made producers of leather and footwear, of this class, feel decidedly the pinch.

Trade Papers Enable Buying by Comparison

Intelligent Use of the Trade Journal Puts the Retail Buyer on a Par With His Big Rivals—Advertising is Big Factor in Direct Selling and Particularly So When Prices are Quoted and Adequate Descriptions Given

DEPARTMENT stores arrogate to themselves the right to buy by comparison shoes, gloves, hosiery, etc., of home manufacture. Let us briefly outline this method.

Firms bidding for the business of the large store are requested (instructed is perhaps a better term) to send in sets of samples by a stated date. When these arrive, they are laid out side by side, and the buyer, with the aid of his assistant, proceeds to make selections.

The advantages of this plan are very obvious.

In the first place, we are of the opinion that no man is able to carry in his head relative values of goods viewed separately. For efficient appraisalment they must be brought together.

Secondly, the method we have described entirely eliminates outside influences, which would scarcely fail to affect judgment.

Liability to error is surely reduced to a minimum.

Allow me a seeming digression, at this point, to say, it is the openly avowed policy of the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL to get a beaten track to its own doors by bringing real and direct business to its advertisers, while, at the same time, rendering service no less real and direct to its subscribers.

Buying Convenience for Retailer

In pursuit of this policy earnest effort is being put forth with the well defined object of enabling retailers to buy by comparison, thus lessening the disadvantages under which they labor.

Manufacturers and jobbers are encouraged to state their propositions so distinctly and completely that the retailers can buy directly and with as clear understanding as though through a traveler.

This may be accomplished by illustration, description and price quotation.

Art, engraving and press work are successful in reproducing the shoe on the printed page in such manner that any experienced shoeman can tell at a glance what the original is. Description supplements illustration. Price quotation is an absolute essential.

A series of offerings framed after this fashion, coming to hand twice each month, between the covers of the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL, virtually furnishes the opportunity to buy by comparison.

Further, houses carrying in-stock lines are almost always willing to forward samples. By availing himself of these offers, the dealer puts himself in the same advantageous position as the large store buyer.

With the broadening of business ideas comes willingness to state frankly the proposition. More so since it is realized that frankness is a winning quality in business, as in personality. The slogan of business builders to-day is, candor compels confidence.

From the standpoint of the manufacturer and jobber, advertising of this character reduces the cost of doing business by very greatly increasing output in proportion to overhead. A considerable portion of the total sales is made in this way, at extremely small cost when compared with what is accredited to the regular selling force. It puts great power into the hands of the salesmanager.

Productive of Good Results

The SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL sent out a special letter to retailers a few days ago, defining its position, and inviting expressions of opinion. Replies already coming in confirm the management's belief that its efforts will be productive of great results to both advertiser and subscriber. We quote two of these, which speak for themselves.

"Your letter of October 10th to hand, and read with interest. I am quite in agreement with it, and have made some of my best buys from advertisements in the Journal.

"In the case of firms who are not traveling every district it gives these districts an opportunity of getting lines they could not otherwise obtain.

"Also the matter of giving prices in your paper is a great benefit, especially to the smaller dealers.

"In fact, your Journal is all right and I would not like to keep shop without it."

"I certainly agree with you that it is good business for the manufacturer to give description and price of shoes carried in stock. For instance, at the time I received your Journal, I was puzzled to know where to get a 6½ B wide shoe, all leather, with 8 inch top and medium heel, without sending to the United States.

Carry Some Novelties in Stock

"On looking over the pages of the Journal, my eyes fell upon the Blachford Shoe Manufacturing Co.'s ad., with description and prices of novelty goods carried in stock. I ordered the 6½ B and then a few pair more of some sizes I was short in, and certainly found it a great convenience to me.

"Almost everyone has staples in their own retail store. It is the novelties in my opinion should be carried in stock by the manufacturers and jobbers.

"I have noticed some manufacturers in showing cut of shoe in your publication, give description but no price, which is mighty unsatisfactory to the shoe man wanting goods out of stock in a hurry.

"One reason why outside goods are brought into Canada is that the Americans carry the novelties in stock, in widths and are continually making it known to you through shoe journals and catalogues."

NEWSY NOTES FROM OLD QUEBEC

Major Jas. Scott, who returned some time ago on three months' leave from the front, bears the evidence of the campaign on his bronzed though smiling features. He said he would not have missed the experience for the world. He had the good fortune after considerable pushing to get to the very front and occupied a position that enabled him better than most officers to see what was going on on the whole Western Front, or at least the British section. He went over Vimy Ridge and was in the celebrated "scrap" that won such distinction and fame for the Canadians. Since his return Major Scott, who, by the way, submitted to a reduction in rank in order to get over to France, has been taking considerable interest in the returned soldiers, and as Quebec is one of the ports of arrival and distribution there is plenty of opportunity to give the returned heroes attention. The accompanying picture shows a lineup in front of Major Scott's office, on St. Valier street, of automobiles belonging to members of the shoe and leather trades, preparatory to taking the boys out for a ride around the Ancient Capital. The drive was in charge of John Perkins, of Duchesne & Perkins. It has been said that the boys are being neglected in Quebec and other seaboard cities on landing but this does not look like it. At least the shoe and leather trades are endeavoring to do their part.

Business has picked up somewhat in Quebec in the past month although the wild stories about cheap hides and leather had the effect of quieting things for a while. The Quebec trade are confident that as soon as buyers realize that such a thing as cheap leather is not only a remote but an altogether unlikely possibility they will begin to bring up their stocks to normal. The movement in hides during the past week has confirmed this and already those who see the signs of the times are coming around. Holders in Quebec expect cheaper leather and all are standing pat in the meantime.

The political situation is causing little concern in Quebec, where business is settling into its accustomed channels. The prospect of the election is, of course, bound to affect things to some extent but it is surprising how little thought is given to the political in comparison with the business situation. Retail business in Quebec city has been good this summer, notwithstanding the fact that tourist trade was hardly up to the mark.

MR. AMERO BUSY AT FALL FAIRS

S. G. Amero, manager of the London branch of the Kaufman Rubber Co., who also represents Chas. A. Ahrens, Limited, Kitchener and the Woelfle Shoe Co., Kitchener, put on such a successful display at the Western Exhibition, London. He was requested by several customers to do likewise at the fall fairs in their vicinity. Mr. Amero used practically the same display as he did at London, and added Life-Buoy rubbers and Gracia shoes. With the rubber display, crude rubber in various forms was used; also upper stock, sole stock and rubber footwear in the various processes of manufacture. In the Gracia shoes the spring models were shown and much admired. While exhibiting for Wm.

Hockin, shoe retailer of Wallaceburg, a pair of rubbers was offered to the scholars in each of the four schools in that town for the best essay on rubber shoe making, and the procuring of raw material. At 4.30 in the afternoon, about one hundred kiddies gathered around the booth, and Mr. Amero explained to them the method of gathering raw rubber and making rubber shoes. It was amusing to note the interest shown by some of the children. They took in all that the speaker said, and several came back afterwards for more information. It was certainly a novel idea of advertising, and Mr. Hockin was well pleased with the result.

ENTERPRISE THAT BEGETS BUSINESS

The enterprise of the Blachford Shoe Manufacturing Co., Toronto, in establishing an in-stock department of the most approved styles in women's high grade shoes with a wide range of sizes and widths, is one that is fully appreciated by the shoe retailers of the Dominion. Already, this department has met with splendid recognition and the exceptionally artistic and striking advertising, which has been done by the firm, has won appreciative references from footwear merchants in several provinces. The step taken by the company with its in-stock department, furnishes a service that is much desired and enables any requirements, either big or small, to be filled promptly and dealers to secure sales and profits on lines that are needed and moving freely now. The illustrations of the shoes, many of which were printed in colors, were among the finest ever produced in any announcement that has appeared in the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL.

CUPS FOR THE CHAMPION FISHERMEN

The great fishing contest conducted by the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL, which has aroused much interest, and has been the subject of lively discussion and active participation on the part of the trade, has closed.

The race has been a very keen and spirited one, and the judges are now considering the entries and the final affidavits of the witnesses in both the black bass and speckled trout contest, and the maskalonge and salmon struggle. The winners will be announced in the November 1st edition of the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL. The news will be received with much interest by the trade and will form a feature in the next issue of this paper.

PREPARING FOR NATIONAL CONVENTION

Plans are proceeding apace for the annual convention of the National Shoe Retailers' Association to be held in Chicago, January, 1918. The Sherman Hotel, which has been selected for convention headquarters, is admirably arranged for big convention work. The hotel management is assisting the local committee by assigning ample space on the main floors for exhibition purposes, and providing suitable quarters for those of the executive committee who will have the advance work of the sessions to look after.

There promises to be keen rivalry on the part of the various State retailers' associations in sending the largest delegation from the different districts. The Chicago committee plans to offer three prizes in the form of silver loving cups to be given to the presidents of the State organizations which send the three largest delegations. The cups will be trophies worth preserving. It is probable that a system of handicapping those States nearest the convention city will be adopted in order that the award of cups may be fair to the delegations which must travel much greater distances.

SHALL I HAVE THEM REPAIRED?

"This is not a repair shop. It is a shoe store. We are supposed to sell the customer new shoes and to make her want to get all her shoes here. Just remember that!" It was the shoe department manager taking a salesman to task for telling a woman customer that he thought it would pay her to have a pair of worn shoes half-soled and re-heeled. He—the manager—did not spare the salesman, even when he learned that the woman had already purchased two pairs of new shoes before she asked for the advice about her old ones.

The manager may have been really sincere in his attitude, but, if he was, he has an entirely erroneous idea. He is like the old storekeeper who reprimanded one of his salesmen for telling a customer where a certain make of collar, which his store did not carry, could be bought. The customer wanted a certain style made only by a certain house and he would have no other, even though he had bought shirts, ties, socks, underwear and so on to the amount of several dollars when he asked the question. The salesman felt that it was better to gain the man's further good will by giving him directions, since there was no chance to sell him, anyway. The collar salesman was right, and so was the shoe salesman, who brought down upon himself the wrath as quoted above.

Nowadays people are giving keen attention to little economies in matters of apparel of all kinds, and particularly to economies in shoes, not economies in the number of pairs, but the life of a pair. And it is a perfectly justifiable economy as well as a laudable one. Heretofore in many quarters there has been a tendency to waste, and it has been evidenced in a manner which adds nothing real to the shoe dealer. This because the waster usually, sooner or later, becomes a poor customer because of his or her extravagance. Contrary to this, the customer who practises sensible economy is a better customer for the shoe dealer than the wasteful one.

Why not help a customer who is intent upon prolonging the useful life of a pair of shoes, especially if it is a regular customer, and particularly if the worn shoes were bought of you? If you can tell the customer how to prolong the life of her shoes, you are really telling her how to get more satisfaction out of your own goods. And the rule is good whether or not the shoes were purchased of you. It is a matter of service and no store manager can afford to overlook a chance to offer real service, especially when it incurs no extra expense.

"Shall I or shall I not have them repaired?" is the customer's query. "Would it be money thrown away which would better be invested in new shoes or is it a good investment?" Look at the shoes and then give your honest opinion. It is a privilege as well as a duty.

If you can see plainly that the shoes are not worth repairing say so; if it is obvious to your trained and experienced eye that fifty cents expended for repairs will give the customer lengthened wear tell her so and tell her where to get them repaired.

It is more than likely that a customer with a repaired shoe will be anxious for an extra pair of new shoes. The repaired ones will hardly be worn except for rough wear, not for dress or for business.

A shoe department should not hesitate to be advised on all questions pertaining to shoes, especially when the matter is likely to lead to the purchase of a new pair, whether or not the old ones are repaired.

Service that costs nothing and brings much—that is what you give when you tell the customer to repair or not.

HOMAGE TO THE SHOE THAT FITS

A wonderful thing is a shoe—that fits.

When it's new you're proud of it. When it's old you're sorry, and you cling to it until your wife and your own feelings in matters of personal appearance finally force you to the separation.

It is the best friend you can have, loyal to you in success or failure, in sorrow or in happiness, pleading only for the right to be where you are, to go where you go.

Knocked about, worn out though it may be, still it stands by you and, in the end, it deserts you only when, having no further use for it, you cast it aside.

Of all your companions it is the most constant; the first to greet you in the morning; the last to leave you at night.

It is your most faithful servant, ready at all times to do your bidding, and, while doing so, to make your own tasks lighter by keeping your comfortable.

It works for you from morn till night, uncomplainingly, willingly, efficiently, looking after your best interests every minute of the time.

It carries you where you will, into strange lands and places, on strange quests, perhaps; and in return asks nothing more than a little polish now and then.

It protects you from the burning pavements in summer; from cold in winter, and from tacks, rocks, splinters and the careless tread of your fellowmen at all times.

NO RIGHT TO LURE THEM AWAY

Charles Laurendeau, K.C., head of Montreal law department, presented to the Board of Control recently a legal opinion regarding the so-called "Maisonneuve liberalities." The city of Maisonneuve was giving bonuses to industrial firms located in the city of Montreal to induce them to locate in Maisonneuve, and the civic authorities decided to find out "what about it."

According to Mr. Laurendeau, Maisonneuve has no right to lure business away from Montreal by such methods. The opinion reads as follows:

"The guarantee given by the city of Maisonneuve must be considered as a debt contracted by it," he says. "In this event the guarantee would be illegal. I must admit, however, that there is still some doubt on this point.

"A municipality cannot grant exemption from taxation or other inducement to a manufacturer already established in this province, for the purpose of attracting it within its limits.

"It cannot grant exemption from taxation or other inducements to a manufacturer who proposes to establish within its limits an industry similar in character to one already established there, but which has received no bonus.

"We do not know whether Messrs. Chouinard, Tetrault (of whom complaint was made), and the others, fall within the various paragraphs mentioned above."

LIVELY JOTTINGS FROM THE PACIFIC COAST

There has been a steady improvement in business in Vancouver. A greater demand is being made for heavier footwear and the few showery days have materially helped. There has also been a sharp requisition for rubbers, while white goods have totally disappeared from the streets.

As an incentive to increasing sales Johnston's Big Shoe Houses are offering five $20 gold pieces for the person who can guess the nearest number of coins in a glass jar.

The Empress Shoe Store is holding a great reduction sale and the Fit Eze store is commemorating its second anniversary with a sale of all lines in stock.

Amongst the repairers in Vancouver there is also all-round improvement. Many are being kept at the bench early and late to cope with the rush. It is not to be surmised that the great quantity of repairing being done in Vancouver to-day shows a corresponding increase in the population—although that is improving—but the big majority of boots now being mended would have been discarded or given to the junk dealer three or four years ago. It is taxing the whole ingenuity of some repairers to know where to start and where to finish on some shoes. This is proving two things—first, that the public realize that they cannot purchase new footwear with their limited purse in the easy manner they could previous to the war, and secondly, that the materials and method of manufacture have undergone a radical change in making and quality. It has no doubt come to the notice of manufacturers by this time (that is the makers of cheap colored glace percians and canvas high-leg boots) that it would be a wise policy in the future to spend a few extra cents upon solid leather heel seats in which to drive the nails to attach leather or wood heels. The writer has, this summer, seen scores of times where the heel has wrenched the whole seat and the insole away from the boot. This makes not only a lot of trouble for the repairers but is annoying to the shoe stores which carry this line of goods.

The makers of logging and waterproof boots are reporting good orders from the camps but the scarcity of expert workers is being keenly felt.

Archibald Muir died suddenly on September 23rd at his residence, 1645 11th avenue west, Vancouver. He was accountant at Storey & Campbell's for the last three years and left the office as usual on Saturday afternoon and proceeded home. He was unlocking the door when it was opened by his daughter and he fell at her feet and expired. The deceased was 66 years of age and leaves a wife, three sons and two daughters to mourn his loss.

E. Todd, shoe repairer for several years on Hastings street east, Vancouver, has closed his shop and entered the employ of Storey & Campbell.

V. H. Watchorn, boots and shoes, Nanaimo, B.C., has closed one of his stores. Ed. Kermode, boots and shoes, Nanaimo, has moved into store vacated by V. H. Watchorn.

Mr. Case, of Mutrie & Son's shoe store, Victoria, B.C., has gone east to take a position with Scholl Mfg. Co., Toronto.

Wm. Cathcart, of Victoria, B.C., was a visitor to Seattle lately.

Clarence Muirhead, of Chilliwack Shoe Co., Chilliwack, was on a recent business trip to Vancouver.

Geo. Ashwell and R. McIntosh, of Ashwell's Limited Chilliwack store, were business visitors to Vancouver lately.

L. Mutrie, of Mutrie & Sons, Victoria, boots and shoes, has returned from business trip to New York and Boston.

Among the travelers recently showing new spring models in Vancouver were:—Geo. H. Ferguson, Clark Bros., St. Stephen, N.B.; M. L. Savage, Tetrault Shoe Mfg. Co., Montreal; Mr. McRobbie, Walk-Over Shoes, Brockton, Mass.; F. Smith, John Ritchie Co., Quebec; Robt. Wall, Perth Shoe Co., Perth, Ont.; J. G. McDiarmid, Murray Shoe Co., London, Ont.; R. J. McAllister, Brandon Shoe Co., Brantford, Ont.; W. E. Shortt, Kingsbury Footwear Co.,

Montreal; H. E. Wettlaufer, Chas. A. Ahrens, Limited, Kitchener, Ont.; J. Trick, Ladye Belle Shoe Co., Kitchener, Ont.; H. Davidson, Macfarlane Shoe Co., Montreal, Que.; Mr. Bennett, Jas. Muir Co., Montreal, Que.; L. M. Stock, Walker, Parker Co., Toronto, Ont.; Geo. J. Scott, P. Jacobi, Toronto, Ont.; W. Campbell, Slater Shoe Co., Montreal, Que., and W. English, Hartt Boot and Shoe Co., Fredericton, N.B. They all report finding trade very good and there has certainly been a big improvement since the last trip.

Mr. Barrett, buyer for Simon Leiser & Co., of Ladysmith, has taken a position in Nanaimo with M. L. Masters.

Mr. Marshall, of Packham & Marshall, boots and shoes, Calgary, has taken over the business and named his establishment Marshall's Boot Shop.

SHOE STORE HELD POTATO SHOW

The retail department of the Amherst Boot and Shoe Co., Amherst, N.S., recently held a unique event and considerable interest was aroused in the original advertising stunt which was planned by W. G. Miller, manager of the retail store. The firm announced that a potato show would be held on Saturday, October 13th, in their store, open to all residents of Cumberland county, N.S., and Westmoreland county, N.B., and that the number of potatoes in each exhibit was to be six. Other conditions of the contest were that any kind of "spuds" might be entered, but only one kind in each exhibit and that each person must make only one exhibit and thus be entitled to only one prize. There were four valuable prizes given and a special one was donated to the best exhibit grown by an amateur gardener. All persons who exhibited tubers will be allowed a special discount of ten per cent. on all purchases in footwear made at the store for the balance of 1917. It was also stipulated that all the "murphies" must be grown by the exhibitor. The prizes were: First, $5.00 in cash; second, 25 per cent. discount on all purchases of footwear made by the winner and his family for one year; third, 20 per cent. discount on all purchases of footwear made by the winner and family for one year, and fourth, a pair of rubbers for the winner and each member of his family. The special prize for amateurs residing in the city was a pair of "Amherst Special" shoes for the winner and a pair of "Empress" for his wife, sister or daughter. Needless to say the event proved to be a decided success and many entered the contest. The judges had some difficulty in awarding the premiums, so close was the competition.

PIONEERS IN TRADE-MARKED SHOES

(See Front Cover)

John A. Walker and John T. Parker, of Walker, Parker Co., Toronto, recently observed their eighteenth anniversary in the manufacturing line. They are among the progressive manufacturers who have helped to place Canadian shoes on the map. Neither gentleman has ever sought the limelight, but has devoted special attention and study to the art of perfecting the product of the firm. They have not been afraid to strike out on broad and original lines. Previous to becoming associated in the shoemaking game, they were both successful shoe travelers until, with A. A. Marks, the firm of Walker, Parker Co. Limited was formed. This has grown from a comparatively small beginning to its present proportions.

The chief feature of the careers of Mr. Walker and Mr. Parker is that when they began making shoes they were the third firm in America to place women's lines on the market under a registered or branded name and with the price of the footwear stamped on the sole. The latter feature was maintained until the outbreak of the war, when abnormal costs and frequent fluctuations in the leather market rendered it impossible to preserve a standard price for any length of time. In 1899, when they started in business, there were many critics who declared that making women's trade-marked shoes exclusively was merely a fleeting fad which would sooner or later pass away, but to-day the unbranded boot is almost unknown and specialization has become the watchword of progress and the hall-mark of quality.

Mr. Walker and Mr. Parker have never been slaves to business. They have enjoyed the delightful associations of travel and the comfort and convenience of summer homes. They are both fond of motoring and of a quiet life in the country during the hot weather period, while Mr. Walker has always taken a lively interest in the affairs of the Ontario Boot and Shoe Manufacturers' Association.

SOME LIVELY BRIEFS FROM MARITIME PROVINCES

BUSINESS in the provinces has been good since the first of September and more especially during the past month. The success of the crops and the increased industrial activity have given assurance of stability and progress.

Halifax is one of the busiest places in Canada to-day. It looks like any of the great shipping centres of the Atlantic seaboard, and although perhaps not so crowded with shipping as it was upon the entrance of the United States into the war, it still bears the mark of its responsibility as the headquarters of allied activity on this side of the water.

Halifax is making history to-day in more ways than one. It is the first time in the history of this continent, for instance, that armed soldiers and sailors of the nation to the south may be seen in its streets. It has taken on a cosmopolitan character and samples of many nationalities may be seen not only on the streets, but in the harbor. It is the one place in Canada where the full portent of the present war may be realized in the surroundings to some extent.

Business in Halifax is good. The retail trade there say that there has never, to their knowledge, been the amount spent over the counters that has passed in the past few months. The carrying on, not only of the war enterprises, but the work on the new steamship and railway terminals, has made it a hive of industry. Added to this, the passing through Halifax of several military and naval parties leaves its impress not only upon the place but its commerce.

Halifax is but a sample of such industrial centres in Nova Scotia as Sydney, Amherst, Windsor, Moncton, Yarmouth and other places, which all evidence the presence of unusual prosperity and development.

The Amherst Boot & Shoe Co. are ample evidence of the popularity of "Amherst Solids" in the growth of their plant. They report business for this season as picking up and going ahead, especially in the West. In the East buyers are gradually realizing business is on a solid foundation and while buying carefully, are doing so steadily.

St. John, N.B., bears all the evidences of comfortable prosperity. Its activities are perhaps not as marked as Halifax for obvious reasons, for although it has the marks of maritime activity, it is hardly to be expected that it would vie with Halifax. It shows, however, the effects of the general prosperity of New Brunswick and its business interests indicate by the distribution of staple products, the fact that the province is enjoying satisfactory trade conditions. The crops have been good and have been safely garnered. The only fear at present is that the abundance of such products as potatoes, for instance, will militate against prices. The jobbing houses all report fairly satisfactory trade and retail business is good.

Fredericton is feeling the effects, not only of the good business throughout the country, but the extra importance given to industry by the war. The various shoe plants are not only fully occupied, but in some cases are cramped for room and making additions to their premises and equipment.

St. Stephen, Moncton, Sackville, Woodstock, Edmundston and other centres all report satisfactory retail activity and are expecting a good fall and winter season.

The Hartt Boot & Shoe Co., Limited, have put Fredericton on the map as far as fine men's shoes are concerned. They have now added a small range of high-grade women's shoes this season. This line, which is limited at present, is on a par with their men's shoes, very fine, indeed, in quality. They believe that following consistently the policy that made their men's "Gold Medal Shoes" so successful they will win out with the women of Canada as well as the men.

Clark Bros., of St. Stephen, N.B., are getting into their swing on spring goods. They report trade as very satisfactory and evidencing considerable improvement with the advent of more seasonable weather. They have one of the best laid out and best equipped plants east of Montreal. We understand that Mr. Knowlton, of the U. S. M., Montreal, has just been down and the Clark boys have been showing him a "neck" of the New Brunswick woods. We expect to hear some great moose stories shortly.

The Palmer, McLellan Shoe Pack Co., of Fredericton, are meeting with marked success in connection with their "Chromoil" footwear. They are becoming the popular thing with those who wear or sell goods of this class. They are making a great many trench boots both for the military authorities and individual requirements. The design is particularly neat and striking.

E. L. Rising, of St. John, accompanied by Mrs. Rising, is enjoying a well-earned holiday in the West. He is at present in British Columbia and expects to spend part of the winter in California, returning in time for the spring activities.

Mayor Hayes, the head of the J. M. Humphrey Co., is making a very popular civic executive officer and is spoken of highly not only in St. John, but outside the city. He is foremost in every good thing not only for the advancement of the city but its social and moral interests.

The John Palmer Co., of Fredericton, is turning out its full complement of the oil tans on which it has made its reputation with the shoe trade. They tan their own leather by a special process that they claim has been in the family for two generations and with their new factory and equipment have brought their product to such perfection that they claim it has no superior in the world. They are turning out a good many military or "trench" boots as well as their regular line and claim that they are every day receiving requests from the front or from friends of those at the front for goods of this class by those who know Palmer goods.

William Murdock, engineer for the city of St. John, N.B., died suddenly a few days ago from heart trouble. He was a son of William Murdock, who conducted a shoe business in Paisley, Scotland, in the year 1848. He came to St. John in 1854 and for some years was affiliated with the boot and shoe trade. Engineer Murdock was in the employ of the city since the year 1869 and was a valued employee. His funeral took place on Tuesday afternoon, October 9th, and was attended by many prominent citizens.

Samuel J. Warwick, who for many years was connected with the shoe business in St. John and Sussex, died recently after an illness extending for several months. He was employed with the McRobbie Shoe Co., Limited, with Waterbury & Rising, Limited, and with the Sussex Mercantile Company's boot and shoe department. In later years he was associated with the Warwick Bill Posting Co. Besides his wife he is survived by three sons, three daughters, one brother and one sister.

Frank Laskey was in St. John, recently, representing the Tetrault Shoe Manufacturing Co., of Montreal. Mr. Senez was also in the city in the interests of Aird & Son, of Montreal.

DEATH OF MR. R. J. WALSH

Richard J. Walsh, a well-known and highly esteemed citizen of St. John, N.B., passed away recently, after an illness extending over a year. He was in his 56th year. The news of his death spread rapidly and many were the expressions of sympathy for the bereaved family and regret at the loss of a citizen of such sterling character.

His loss will not only be felt in the commercial world, but also in many societies and social centres. For many years he was a member of the C. M. B. A. and held office in that association for years. He was president of Branch 134 for two terms, and also held the office of treasurer and secretary. In latter years he had held the honored position of grand deputy for the Maritime Provinces. He was also a member of the Father Matthew Association and of St. Peter's Temperance Society. While in office in the C.M.B.A. he took an active interest in social events and was instrumental in arranging a course of lectures which were largely attended and greatly appreciated by many citizens. He also had a warm place in his heart for St. Peter's Y.M.A., and on many occasions assisted in functions held under their auspices. Mr. Walsh was also a member of the Royal Arcanum.

Besides his wife he is survived by one son, Frank, who is attached to the staff of the post office, and four daughters.

Mr. Walsh was a director of Waterbury & Rising, Limited, and held the position of manager of the King street retail store and advertising manager for the company. He entered the employ of the firm of Waterbury & Rising thirty-five years ago at the age of twenty-one years, having had previous experience in the business with the Hurley shoe store in King street. Since that time he had been one of the most valued members of the staff and when the company was incorporated in 1911 he became a director. On the twenty-fifth anniversary of his connection with the concern he was given a handsome gold watch and chain by the firm at the annual banquet, a tribute which he treasured highly. His associates in the company and the other members in the staff speak in the highest terms of the late Mr. Walsh and of the loss suffered through his death.

Mr. Walsh was for some years, up to the time of his fatal illness, an active and valued member of the executive of the Playgrounds Association.

FIRST AMERICAN SHOES MADE IN 1628

The first shoemaking in America was recorded when Thomas Baird arrived on the second voyage of the Mayflower in 1628. Baird was under contract with the Plymouth company to make shoes for the colonists, and brought with him hides, etc., for this purpose. It was recorded that in 1636 a planter in Virginia employed six shoemakers to make shoes for his slaves.

That in the early history of the country the art of making shoes had become of considerable importance is shown by the very summary laws passed by the different colonies regulating the industry, says the "Book of Wonders." Particularly was this so in the province of Pennsylvania which, in 1721, placed upon its statute book most drastic laws regarding the making of shoes and regulating the prices to be charged therefor.

Shoemaking in New England early received impetus from the arrival of one Philip Kirtland, a Welshman, who came to Lynn, Mass., in 1636. He was an experienced shoemaker and taught his art to many of the colonists in his vicinity.

FIRMS TAKE ACTION TO SECURE ARMY SHOE ORDERS

Ontario Shoe Manufacturers will Co-Operate With Those in Montreal and Leather Interests Have Been Invited to Join in Representations to the Canadian Government
—Several Samples Have Been Made on English Lasts for the Boys Overseas

A MEETING of the Ontario Boot and Shoe Manufacturers was held in Toronto this week to consider the question of securing orders for army shoes for the forces from the Dominion who are now in service abroad. The whole matter was thoroughly discussed, and it was decided to take joint action with the committee, recently appointed by the Montreal Shoe Manufacturers, in calling the attention of the Federal Government to the advisability and necessity of placing business with the Canadian trade and giving them the opportunity to shoe the boys who are across the water.

A. Brandon, of the Brandon Shoe Co., Brantford, who is Chairman of the Ontario Association, presided and the committee selected to work in conjunction with the Montreal representatives is: W. S. Duffield, of the John McPherson Co., Hamilton; John Dunbar, of Scott-Chamberlain, Limited, London, and the chairman, Mr. Brandon.

The articles which have recently appeared in the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL were read and favorably commented upon. It was felt that the Canadian trade had not been fairly or justly dealt with in the matter of supplying army shoes, especially as the people of the Dominion are called upon to pay for the equipment of the men from home. There is no denying the fact that, by reason of some four hundred thousand young men having enlisted from Canada to do their duty in the great struggle, conditions in shoemaking industry in men's footwear have of late been rather quiet. Canadian firms can make shoes, which fact has been amply demonstrated many times, that are the equal of any British or foreign boots, in comfort, worth and wear.

Should Make All Shoes for Canadians

The entire footwear needs of Canadian soldiers, whether at home or abroad, or at least an amount equivalent to what they use, should, it was freely declared, be supplied by Canadian factories, who have the facilities and the equipment to meet every requirement. It was further pointed out that Canada should be permitted to make all shoes out of Canadian materials with Canadian labor for the lads in khaki and that every encouragement should be afforded by the Federal Government to this end.

A resolution was also passed by the Ontario shoemakers that the leather manufacturers be invited to appoint a committee to co-operate with them in securing army orders.

Since the last edition of the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL it is understood that two Canadian firms have been invited to make some samples of military boots on English lasts and patterns. These have been completed and among the specifications, which differ from the type of army boot as made in Canada for the Canadian boys, are the following:—

The 1917 Army Boot

Fourteen iron outsole or two seven iron soles cemented. Fleshout upper required, either fleshout English kip or fleshout chrome re-tan side. The former is made from India hide, which is taken by the British Government and given to the British tanneries, which are under Government supervision. The leather produced is sold to the shoe manufacturers making army boots at 25c. per foot. The alternative, however, namely, chrome re-tan side, can be had in Canada in large quantities, but the price at the present moment is in the neighborhood of 50c. per foot. The leather in uppers is eight ounce.

The shoe is made as follows: The slip sole is standard screwed, which also acts as a welt. Then the sole is laid in cement and Goodyear lock-stitched; bottoms filled with spriggs; head to come flush inside of outer sole; metal heel plates and toe plates; Hungarian nails from top of filler of heel, also part way back from toe plate.

Frank Plea for Fair Play

Speaking to the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL this week, a leading eastern manufacturer ably summed up the situation when he remarked that the shoe manufacturers of the Dominion would be satisfied to keep their wheels turning and their organization together, which could easily be accomplished if the Canadian Government would extend to them the privilege of making all the army shoes worn by our soldiers, and particularly for those men who are now overseas. "No comment is necessary," he added, "in regard to the reasons why this should be done as your recent articles express the sentiments of the trade clearly and convincingly. We are all anxious to co-operate in every respect. It is generally known that the makers of men's footwear have been running light during the summer months, making it necessary to lay off many workers, who have lost their wages while the manufacturers have lost large sums in overhead expenses, which otherwise would have been absorbed. Our records absolutely prove that the Canadian Government's purchase of boots since the war has been made at low prices but the manufacturers were able to save their overhead charges and retain their organization. If our government would meet our views in the matter and permit Canadian manufacturers to make all shoes for Canadian soldiers we believe that it would be wise to adopt the policy now in vogue in the United States, viz., to appoint a commission to meet the tanners and arrange for a price for the leathers required. This would permit all manufacturers to purchase their leathers at the same figure, each manufacturer adding to his material cost, labor, royalty, and his own overhead, plus a small percentage of profit, which could also be determined by the commission. This would show a slight variation in the prices but would enable each shoemaker to make approximately the same amount of profit. If the matter were handled intelligently there would be no difficulty in making the allotment of orders to the different manufacturers, who would wish to participate in the business."

Canadian Leather and Shoes Unexcelled

Recent tests which have been made by Canadian firms of Canadian tannage and what the English specifications call for demonstrate that the local product compares favorably in every respect. In no particular has the British leather been found superior and, according to the tests, English sole stock evidences more loading than any turned out in the Dominion.

Now that Canadian firms have produced sample army shoes on English lasts and have complied with every specification, it is believed that matters will be expedited for Canadian concerns to make all the footwear that may be required for the Canadian boys abroad. With the co-operation of the shoe and leather trades in the Dominion, it is hoped that something tangible will result, at an early date, in placing large army shoe orders with Canadian firms and giving an impetus to making men's shoes in plants in the Dominion who, as already pointed out, have suffered a considerable loss in many ways by reason of their being denied the right to provide footwear for the soldiers overseas, although the Canadian people are paying the bills for the goods. Canadian plants have every equipment and facility for turning out all orders promptly, skilfully and efficiently. The time for action on the part of the Federal authorities at Ottawa is at hand and all the producers of men's shoes in this country are asking is justice and fair play.

If Great Britain were to declare to General Pershing, commander of the United States forces in France, "there is the boot your men who are in service here are to wear; it is made in England," what reply would the representative of Uncle Sam make?

ASSISTING RETAILERS TO ELIMINATE WASTE

The traveling representatives of the shoe manufacturers all over the country have been appealed to by a member of the National Boot and Shoe Manufacturers' Association in the following bulletin:

"Every agency connected with the government is doing its utmost to conserve our resources and to reduce the expense of doing business and to eliminate waste. You can do your bit in this war by helping to educate the retailer to eliminate waste. This does not mean that there should be any curtailment of business, for business is good. We are receiving very few cancellations, and the general prospect for the retail merchant is better than ever before. It means that the frills and fancies should be cut out. There are certain unjust and unreasonable expenses now connected with retail merchandising which must be reduced if not entirely eliminated.

"The use of transportation facilities in returning merchandise has been estimated at 10 per cent. In other words, if we could avoid the return of merchandise throughout the country, we could add 10 more freight cars to every one hundred. We could employ 10 more men to every 100 in the shipment of merchandise and in the handling of government needs.

"It is your duty to help bring about this result.

"When orders have been taken and the goods cut and in process of making, there has been a considerable expense

AMONG THE SHOE MEN.

Geo. B. Shelton, late of Flint, Mich., who for some weeks was employed in the Walk-Over boot shop, Yonge street, Toronto, developed too much fondness for ladies' silk hose, and his actions arousing suspicion led to his arrest. Shelton was found to have forty-six pairs in his possession, and one pair of slippers. He pleaded guilty and was given a sentence of fifteen days in jail.

John Dunbar, of Scott-Chamberlain Limited, London, was in Toronto this week calling upon the trade.

Hon. E. J. Davis, of the Davis Leather Co., Newmarket, spent a few days recently in Boston and other Eastern centres on business.

The annual conventions of the Walk-Over boot shops have just been concluded, the Eastern one being held at Baltimore and the Western at St. Louis. The former gathering was attended by R. J. G. Gore, manager of the Walk-Over boot shop, Quebec; S. E. Wygant, manager of the Walk-Over boot shop, Montreal, and R. O. Dunhill, manager of the Walk-Over boot shop, Toronto, all of whom report having spent a most instructive and profitable time. The gathering was exceptionally well attended and embraced many new educational features.

A charge of assulting Isaac Rachlin, a huckster, which was laid against Robert Ash, was dismissed by Magistrate Brunton in the County Police Court at Aurora, Ont., recently. Rachlin stated that he had gone to the plaintiff's to buy shoes and when he refused to take them because they were too small, alleged that he had been assaulted. The defendant denied the assault and said that he had only ordered Rachlin off his premises.

E. H. Barnes, formerly of Chesterville, Ont., who has been a resident of Sault Ste. Marie for a number of years, Chicago, has joined the Walk-Over staff in Toronto, and has entire charge of the floor.

Pierre Blouin, of Quebec City, has purchased the entire stock of G. J. Trudeau Co., Limited, 365 Ontario street east, Montreal, in liquidation, consisting of buttons, backing cloth and stays, felt buffing wheels and other kinds, buckles, bows, camel hair brushes, bottom polish, counters, heels, laces, ornaments, rubber heels and soles, etc. It is Mr. Blouin's intention to dispose of this stock as quickly as possible, and with this object in view he has arranged with the Perfection Counter Co., Limited, of Montreal, which comis opening a large shoe store in that city, which will be known as the "Regal Boot Shop."

Fred. R. Foley, shoe retailer, of Bowmanville, Ont., who went to Port Huron, Mich., on a visit, was seized with an attack of appendicitis while in that city, and was sent to the hospital where he underwent an operation. His many friends will be glad to learn that he is now on the road to recovery.

R. F. Harry, who had charge of the ladies' shoe department in the State street store of the Walk-Over boot shop, pany he is interested in, to dispose of the stock in conjunction with him.

A recent despatch from Brandon, Man., says: Many a youngster who would scorn a "hand-me-down" in any other instance is begging father to buy him a pair of "cut-over" army boots at the Military Hospitals Commission vocational training schools this fall. The returned soldiers in the cobbler's classes are cutting down the soldiers' cast-off boots and resoling them in their trade course, and the boots becoming boy's size are acquiring considerable vogue among the young patriots who live in the vicinity of military convalescent hospitals where vocational training is carried on. The condemned boots in the army are given to the cobbler classes, and the men resole and sell them back to the soldiers for $1.50 per pair, and it is these boots which are in such demand.

Pleading guilty to obtaining some shoes and clothing from John Swinburne, a Stratford merchant, by fraud, Bruce Smith, a Hamilton young man, was also convicted of stealing a flashlight, battery and two boxes of valves when he appeared in Stratford last week. Smith was remanded for sentence.

THE NEW "REGALS" ARE DISTINCTIVE

The new samples of the Regal Shoe Co., Toronto, reveal a wider and more comprehensive range than ever. All the popular leathers are shown and several new lasts, among them being the "Crest" which is wide at the ball and has a semi-round toe with drop effect. Several offerings are seen in royal purple calf and chocolate kangaroo, while khaki calf, toney red and Cavendish are also noticed in a number of models. Fibre soles are rather strongly presented and a few smart creations carry tan and gray suede tops.

Some attractive shoes are observed in cordo veal and boarded veal, while military boots are presented both for officers and privates. These come in black winter calf and in chocolate and mahogany winter calf. In men's footwear for dress occasions patent plays a prominent part with plain receding toe and a number carry dull calf and cloth tops. The Regal range is representative and superior in every respect and in addition this year there are seen several shoes for boys, made of black and tan calf in both blucher and bal. One is a seven-piece pattern boys' shoe. This has a tip extended by a stay to the throat of the shoe and splits the vamp in two pieces, the design being rather unique. The same care and attention are given to boys' lines as characterize the splendid range for adults. It might also be mentioned that there is a nice showing in oxfords, while a few button boots are observed. All the company's travelers are now on the road with the distinctive and varied collection of Regal models for spring and are looking forward to a good season's business.

Shoe Trade Conditions.—There was a marked pause in business about the first of the month occasioned by the sensational reports about lower hides and leather. Some newspapers announced, with scare headlines, that leather had dropped 20 to 40 per cent., and the inevitable result was that retailers quit buying. With fuller information, however, there has been a reaction, and business within the past week or so has been decidedly better. This applies particularly to women's shoes and children's lines. There has been quite a noticeable slackness in men's shoes, which is attributed to the fact that early in the year jobbers and dealers bought rather heavily on account of the excitement in the leather market. There being no unusual demand as with women's shoes, and the substitution of canvas and other lines for summer use on a larger scale than ever, stocks in men's shoes have not moved very appreciably, especially in the medium and coarse grades. One of the great factors, no doubt, is the absence of so many men at the front, and the cutting off on this account of those who, under other circumstances, would use at least a couple of pairs of shoes in the year.

worth came to America in 1900 and for several years resided in Providence, R.I., after which they settled in Toronto. They have recently removed to 667 Queen street west. Mr. Butterworth now conducts three modern shops under the name of the Practical Shoe Repair Co. The last of these was acquired a few weeks ago at 667 Queen street west, where a complete new equipment has been ordered, consisting of a 22 Goodyear shoe repairing outfit, with sticher. A McKay sewer and a leather splitting machine will also be attached to the same shaft and operated electrically.

KING SHOE CO. MAY LEAVE TORONTO

It is rumored that the King Shoe Co., of Toronto, are discussing the possibility of removing their plant to one of the important smaller towns of Ontario and that attractive concessions have been offered to secure this industry. It is possible Toronto may lose one of its oldest established manufacturing concerns. The King Shoe Co. have, since the war, standardized their product to one class of shoe, which makes it practical for them to manufacture successfully in a smaller town. They were approached many times before the war, but always considered it impracticable to attempt manufacturing a general line involving a variety of styles, lasts and patterns. They, therefore, never seriously considered any proposition to locate elsewhere, but under standardized process making only one kind of shoes it is quite practical and feasible to operate successfully in a smaller centre. Nothing definite has been arranged or decided upon, but the removal of the King Shoe Co. from Toronto would reduce the total production of shoes materially.

Bulldogs and Tenacity

Having reference to the tough, enduring qualities of the new Tally-Ho sole.

The Bull Dog Sole is a triumph of modern constructive science. There has always been a demand for a sole that is tough, flexible, waterproof and enduring. One that would have all the good qualities of leather and several others besides. Inventive genius has solved the problem. And—in the spirit of having only the best — it naturally followed that Tally-Ho should adopt it as the standard sole of all styles of the Tally-Ho Shoe. It is better wearing than either leather or rubber. It's waterproof—it is the ideal sole.

Tally-ho Shoes

Six standard lasts—twelve standard styles—present a line that fills all the wants of the progressive dealer.

The few designs and patterns simplifies the problem of carrying stock. Dealers should know all about this money making line.

Ask us for particulars.

Joy Peds are great boosters for the Bulldog Sole

Tally-ho Shoes

2. Tally-Ho 2 in 1 Cushion Sole — an important feature.
3. The Bull Dog Out-sole — better wearing than either rubber or leather — waterproof — flexible — non-slip—guaranteed service—finishes like leather.
4. Authentic styles — originated in American Tally-Ho Shop.
5. No-jar Rubber Heel—springy—resilient—pure rubber.
6. Sani-tex Health Lining—supplied with kid shoes.

A TIME TO PUSH SALES

People have the Money and are Ready to Spend—Head off Useless Buying—Urge the Purchase of Footwear Instead of Extravagant Luxuries—We are on the Crest of the Wave of Prosperity—Take Advantage of It—Next Year May See a Change

A PROMINENT fur dealer stated the other day that his firm had never in its history sold as many or as expensive furs. The automobile industry is taxed to its capacity to produce machines of all classes to meet the demand of the spending public. Makers and sellers of luxuries of all kinds tell the same tale of feverish spending that is evidenced in overcrowded places of amusement and increased travel.

How long is it going to last? Business people are somewhat anxiously beginning to ask this question. There has been a substantial reduction recently in the output of munitions and our export returns show a falling off in volume in staple lines. Some of the factories are beginning to give evidence that we have been running the limit on speed and seem inclined to slow down. It may be taken for granted that industrial conditions will slacken considerably from now on.

The farmer has had an unprecedented year for crops and prices. He has doubled, trebled and in some cases quadrupled the returns from his yearly operations. He is the one who has made the most and suffered the least from the war. He will be inclined to spend more of his profits than usual and already has evidenced the tendency in the purchase of luxuries that he never considered before as available.

The next two months are harvest time for the dealer in this country. He should direct his utmost resources and energies towards getting the goods off his shelves and on to the feet of consumers. There never was a time when the shoeman had a better opportunity either in goods or customers. Men, and especially women, have been educated to regard their footwear as an important item in dress. There never were such attractive styles or such well-made shoes, and the public mind has learned to accept prevailing prices as warranted by both goods and conditions.

The shoe retailer has before him the opportunity of his history. All it needs is determined aggressive action along the lines of publicity, salesmanship and all that go these days to win success in retail enterprise. The time is short, but the chances are practically unlimited for turning over a goodly proportion of stock before Christmas.

With regard to the holiday season there never was an occasion before that lent itself so well to sales promotion in shoes. Shoes were never so fully adapted for holiday gifts and never offered so wide a field of opportunity in this respect for all classes of the community. The dealer should take advantage of this fact in a suggestive campaign that would place shoes in their proper place amongst those useful and ornamental articles so suited to accompany the inter-change of holiday greetings.

The reason for this being "up and doing" naturally lies in the fact that after the turn of the year no man can say what will happen. The next eight weeks spell opportunity.

Pep Will Produce the Business

The Retailers in the Front Line of Distribution Can Right the Situation in Thirty Days—It Rests With the Man on the Touchline

HERE'S a hot thought that we hope will sizzle its way into the brain of every retailer, every one of those men on the outer circle of distribution, from the city store to the farthest flung outpost—you can right the footwear situation in thirty days.

You are the points of contact with the great buying public. If your spark plugs are live the "Hydra-headed monster thing" will come across.

Buying is response to suggestion of requirement.

Starting the minute you read this article, put suggestion into everything you say, into everything you do, until it sticks out in knobs all over your enterprise.

Get right after the men, women and children who need shoes, until you make them feel that their health, happiness and social redemption depend upon the purchase of footwear.

The Standard Oil Co. at one time had mountains of paraffin wax accumulating at the refineries. They hit upon the idea of having everyone in their employ hunt uses for it. As a result of this campaign the wax mountains disappeared like snow before a chinook.

A widespread search for reasons why the public should buy shoes now would lead to a diminution of stocks.

The hesitation which has paralyzed trade would disappear and the great old machinery of distribution would be throbbing heartfully once more.

The war has ripped the word "impossible" out of the vocabulary.

You can do it. You can get the public coming. You can get things going.

Throw off your coat and inertia at the same time. Get up in the morning whistling and go to it.

You have the finest kind of an opening. The people of this country, individually, are at the zenith of their purchase power. Also the season is one when punctured footwear is least popular and whole shoes most wholesome. They need shoes, slippers, rubbers, shoe packs and moccasins, but they are just standing round like a lot of gawks outside the circus tent, munching peanuts and waiting for the mug with the megaphone to start something.

You're the spieler. Just give them the right line of dope and show them where to pass in.

The attitude you've taken the last while back won't get the crowd inside your tent. You encouraged them to question whether leather and shoes were higher in price than they should be. You tolerated the notion that there might be a break in the market, likewise false economy doctrines which would lead to the closing of industries and put thousands of workers in a position where they could not buy either bread or bonds.

No wonder they took a white-knuckled grip on the money in their pockets and shuffled away.

You only need to tell them the truth about leather—this time. Then stand aside and watch them line up to buy.

Fatal Financial Fiddling

While We Talk "After the War" Commerce, Present Opportunities and Necessities Are Neglected—The Laissez Faire Policy Likely to Cripple Canada Unless a Move is Soon Made

WE are fond of talking about Canada as one of the richest countries in the world in natural resources and yet right at this moment, we are absolutely powerless financially to negotiate the sale of a few million dollars worth of goods on credit with a country that is anxious and willing to buy from us.

The British War Mission, at New York, is buying goods in the United States that run into hundreds of millions of dollars, and claim they are shut off from patronizing Canada because we cannot loan them the money to buy, or in other words, give them credit on their war needs. They are anxious to trade with us, because not only are we next to kin, but have mingled our blood with theirs on the battle fields of Flanders, but financial conditions as well as arrangements with the United States bond holders, make it necessary to trade with those who are backing them, and their Allies, financially.

We have raised a few million dollars to finance wheat, bacon and other foods, but the ordinary citizen asks if the rest of Canada's business is to go to the dogs because our financiers are unable to arrange a credit that in the ordinary course of business is brought about every day. Germany has demonstrated what patriotism and finance can accomplish hand in hand in emergencies of this kind. Are our leaders in government and finance incapable of rising to the occasion or are they asleep while the interests of the country are thus in jeopardy?

Take, for example, the leather trade of this country, which may be considered as one of its natural industries. We have been exporting leather extensively to the United Kingdom for years past, but this business was suddenly cut off, eight months ago, by the embargo placed by the British authorities. Recently, however, the embargo has been lifted and the British War Mission allowed to purchase large quantities of sole and upper stock for British use. The purchases, however, have been made entirely from United States tanners, the instructions being explicit on this point.

The injury done Canadian tanners is more apparent when we consider that we have sent more than four hundred thousand of our men overseas, who, were when at home, users of Canadian leathers, and, although the footwear of these Canadian soldiers is being paid for by the Canadian people, the leather or a large portion of it is "made in the United States," the labor being provided by England which already claims to be so short of men that she cannot provide civilian footwear.

There appears to be bungling or supineness somewhere. The Minister of Trade and Commerce refers the matter to the Militia Department, the Militia Department passes the responsibility on to the Finance Minister and the Finance Minister points to the War Mission in New York. In the meantime, tanneries are idle, shoe factories are shut down and the outlook for the coming year is causing much anxiety. The time for action is now. It will be useless to lock the stable door when the horse has vanished.

There are other industries in Canada being affected quite as much as the leather and shoe trades by these hampering conditions, and there are some that may not feel them for a time. The marked falling off in our exports shown by recent

THE "JOURNAL" IS NOW ONE-FIFTY

In sending remittances for the "Shoe and Leather Journal" for the coming year, subscribers will please remember that the price is now one dollar and fifty cents per annum.

Owing to the high cost of paper, wages, etc., it has been found absolutely necessary to increase the figure from one dollar to one dollar and fifty cents, the change going into effect last month. The "Shoe and Leather Journal" is published twice a month and presents all the news and views of the trade in bright, helpful and instructive articles.

returns is a warning to those at the head of the business and financial interests of Canada to cease fiddling with politics and leave fine spun schemes for world trade till question of Canada's present business danger is settled.

Already some concerns have been looking about for locations across the line with a view to producing goods there that will find an outlet in export trade with England and her Allies. Thus the reverse process of that inaugurated by the fiscal policy of Canada, some years ago, is likely to be brought about by the exigencies of war finance.

It looks as though the present policy were going to allow us to drift back into the position of a debtor nation with our principal creditor, our big neighbor to the South, who may require something more than reciprocity to settle his claim, when it finally falls due.

The time to look the issue squarely in the face is now, not six months from now. If we want Canada to become the backyard to the United States we only have to sit down and let events take their course upon present lines.

there has been a little more doing in spring goods. There has not been sufficient push, as yet, in fall business to make itself felt in a regular way. With the advent of cold, clear weather with a few snow flurries business will begin to move. One indication is the increased interest of jobbers in what the market affords.

Hide Conditions.—The markets in both packer and country hides indicate greater firmness in tone, notwithstanding the approach of a season of plentiful supply. The feature of the week has been the large sale of packer native steers at 34½ cents. Lighter weight hides do not show the same sharp advance as the heavier grades, but are firm at the ruling quotations. Buffs are steady at 25½ cents, with sales reported as low as 25 cents. In dry hides, holders are asking fancy prices, but buyers are holding off. Bogosas have sold on a basis of 41 cents with centrals at 40 cents, with reports of sales shading these prices. River Plates are easier with 45 cents offered for B. A.'s and 48 cents for Cordovas without sales.

American Shoe Markets.—The regular trade on women's shoes is showing more life, although actual business is by no means active. In the men's trade some improvement is noted on medium grade lines. The popular demand to-day at retail prices is $5 to $7 for men's shoes and $6 to $8 for women's. The army work which was recently placed, and which totals about ten million pairs, has been a great help to factories making this grade of shoe.

Boston Leather Market.—The sale of a million sides of sole for export, and the improved demand for domestic use have helped to stimulate the market with the result that prices are from a cent to two cents higher in sole than a month ago. The upper leather situation has grown stronger with the change in the hide market, and the demand for stock by manufacturers getting out new goods. Side and calf leathers are both firmer, the market for all lines being helped by the cleaning out of the black chrome sides for English and light leathers have also responded, and kid and sheep are materially stronger.

Italy Fixes Leather Prices.—About all classes of tannage included in latest order. Genoa, Italy. —(U. S. Consular Service.)—Maximum prices for certain tanned material have been fixed by a decree of the Minister of War, which was published in the Official Gazette of Rome on September 14th, 1917. These prices are for material derived from skins of home production of animals slaughtered for military or civil use, and from those of foreign origin which heretofore have been distributed by the military administration. The respective maximum prices are given under three separate designations—"for military use," "for civil use," and "foreign, distributed by military administration." The government's list also presents figures for the various kinds of leather grouped under the general classifications: Sole leather, quick tanned; leather for uppers (white vegetable tanned); uppers of chrome black, and special leathers. All hides which are

Now is the Time to Reduce Your Stock

Various Plans Which Have Proved Successful—Getting Rid of Regular Lines at Regular Prices by Extra Push, Thought and Effort—Concentrating on a Campaign to Induce People to Make Sensible, Serviceable Christmas Gifts and to Buy Now

A WESTERN shoe man has adopted the slogan, "The store with a stock." This may be a very good title in times of great business activity when things are on the hum, but the store with too much stock just now is in the same position as the farmer who kept three head of cattle. He found they cost him $13.00 a week to feed and the net revenue derived from them was only $11.00, so that, using a local expression, "they were eating their heads off."

In much the same way, shoes that are on the shelves now should be disposed of and stocks reduced to a reasonable basis. It is not necessary to hold great reduction sales or price cutting campaigns in order to affect the desired state of affairs, but various plans may be introduced to stimulate trade and create an active interest in lessening the volume of goods to a normal basis.

Extra Publicity—Special Trims

A little extra advertising, a little more care and attention given to window trims, some well directed publicity schemes, guessing contests, premium competitions, potato shows or in fact any original plan may be adopted to get people thinking and talking of footwear.

The Christmas holiday season is only a few weeks distant. Retailers should urge upon the public the wisdom and advantage of giving useful things as Yule-tide presents. Footwear is always an acceptable donation, and is an evidence of sound, practical common sense on the part of the donor. It is just as well, especially in war time when thrift and economy are so much urged upon the public, to send remembrances that are sane and serviceable as it is to fritter away a large number of dollars in glittering baubles and valueless accessories in the way of household assets or personal belongings.

The far-seeing shoe retailer should also emphasize the necessity of early buying, explaining that when lines are complete a better selection is open to patrons, a more competent and painstaking service given, as well as personal and prompt attention. Now and then, when people wait till the last week to make their choice in footwear, they are not properly fitted, or buy something which they really do not care for. In looking over the advertisements of representative shoe retailers in Canadian cities it is gratifying to observe the quality of the publicity, its attractive nature, well-balanced display, and the manner in which the various lines handled are featured.

Many Pairs Mean Saving

Impress upon your customers that it is desirable to have three or four pairs of shoes and with them an abundance of shoe laces and as many pairs of shoe trees. It is good business philosophy to point out that a number of pairs of shoes worn alternately will last much longer than single pair lots. It is becoming more and more the practice to have shoes for every occasion, shoes suitable for all kinds of weather and shoes that are stylish, distinctive and artistic as well as warm, comfortable and orthopedic.

Another scheme to stir up trade that a retailer might adopt is getting out a booklet and mailing it to a select list of customers. He can obtain a list of the best families in each community from the telephone directory, from the city or town directory or the assessment roll. Most of the people in this world are vain enough to acknowledge that receiving letters is a pleasure; in fact, a much more delightful pastime than answering them. A booklet artistically gotten up and enclosed in a good quality envelope sent to a customer, particularly a few weeks before Christmas time, is bound to attract and interest.

Things for Shoeman to Feature

Here are some lines that the retailer can feature very well from now until Christmas. Let him get a move on himself and he will keep his goods on the move.

Satin slippers, bronze kid slippers, gold and silver slippers, slippers in ivory, African brown, pearl, royal purple and dove grey kid, sterling silver buckles, cameo ornaments, hockey boots, hockey skates, Everitt slippers, opera slippers, Cavalier slippers, pullman slippers, Romeo slippers, fur trimmed Juliets, boudoir slippers, pretty pumps, buckskin moccasins, fancy button hooks, over gaiters, fitted suit cases, children's leggings, ankle protectors, carriage boots, tennis shoes, football boots, polishing outfits, warm wanigans, shoe trees, rubber heels, heel cushions, aero-peds, arch supports, cushion insoles, soft sole bootees, shoe horns, warm overshoes, rubber footwear, bathroom slippers, silk laces, canvas trunks, leather bound trunks, fitted club bags.

"One way in which I increase my trade," remarked a Montreal dealer, "is to find out what firms, whose goods I handle, are issuing catalogues or booklets of the latest styles. I know that they are only too willing to mail these out to a select list of customers if I send in the names of my people. All I have to pay is postage. Now, the other day I sent in three hundred names to the makers of a popular shoe for men. They sent each an envelope in which were ten little slips giving a full description of T—— shoes and excellent illustrations of them. On the envelope there was typed my name and address and all it cost to have the above forwarded was a cent each.

"I find that one of the very best ways of increasing trade is to get the agency of some well known trade-mark shoe in men's, women's or children's and co-operate with the makers. They generally have cuts, special advertising signs, booklets, blotters or some other publicity matter which helps greatly.

"It is a serious mistake to handle too many lines or to buy goods from too many houses. This is an age of concentration and two or three makes in men's and the same in women's are the most that any retailer should undertake. He gets better service, better value, better terms, better understanding; in fact, improves his condition in every way in confining his buying operations. The manufacturers like to have accounts that are worth while, merchants that stand by them, push their goods to the limit, and send them in large regular orders. They would rather have one live representative in each of the smaller towns and cities answering these requirements than they would to have two or three half dead, go-as-you-please accounts."

Another method of boosting trade is not only to follow the suggestions presented from time to

ONE DOLLAR AND A HALF A YEAR

In the hope that there might be some mitigation in the near future of the extraordinary paper conditions that have prevailed for over a year, the "Shoe and Leather Journal" in spite of the fact that more paper alone was going into the publication each issue that was covered by the subscription price, adhered to the old figure. Last month we were compelled to advance the price on all new subscriptions to a dollar and a half, and in this connection have been agreeably surprised at the response made not only by new, but old subscribers, and our old friends. In every case the advance has been paid cheerfully and surprise expressed by some that we had not made the change sooner. At the present figure, we venture to say, there is no publication in Canada that is giving anything like the value for the money. The "Shoe and Leather Journal" in spite of the high cost of materials, wages and all that enter to-day into magazine printing, has continued to put the best available literary and mechanical effort into its work. We have been well repaid in the appreciation evidenced in the many letters we receive from subscribers from time to time, telling of its worth to them. We feel sure the small addition made to the annual subscription rate will be agreeable to our many friends and help us to keep up the improvements we are constantly trying to make.

time in the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL, but to make your advertisements and display work together—co-ordinate and co-operate, so to speak.

These are points which can and should be mentioned in the advertising, and they can certainly be brought home most clearly in a window display. Therefore, in this particular week the selling arguments for goods should be so planned out that the wear, durability and price are featured in the newspaper space and the style element featured in the windows.

Moreover, the newspaper advertising should call attention to the window and to the features emphasized. Such a planning of advertising as this also suggests that when there will be no special window display of shoes, the newspaper efforts should be expended upon lines which lend themselves best to descriptive advertising and don't need to be supplemented by window displays.

For example, the fitting qualities of a shoe may very well be emphasized by "X-ray drawings" showing the position of the foot in relation to the shoe. The shoe, therefore, which the dealer is going to push particularly for its fitting qualities should be one to select for a week when the selling plans call for newspaper, but not window display space.

All this must depend upon a careful planning of the advertising by the retailer. He must at the beginning of each month have at least a tentative schedule showing the newspaper advertising, the amount of space and the windows to be given to the different shoes during that month. Then he must go over his stock and lay out a definite, though possibly a more or less elastic campaign, in selling efforts.

Life is sweet, and the saint clings to it as tenaciously as the sinner. A prominent preacher was warned by his physician some time since that he must have a change, or take the consequences. He was advised to go to California for six months, but emphatically declined, saying that he could not afford the time. "It is California or heaven," said the medical man grimly. The divine purchased a ticket for the Coast the following week. To want to die is not a natural thing, to wish to live is common to the oldest patriarch if he is sound in mind and comfortable in body. Yet men mortgage their years as cheerfully as they would a scrub farm. It seems useless to tell a young fool or an old rake that the "years of the wicked shall be shortened." They scoff at your warning and rail at your advice. Yet the truth is backed up every day by the death notices in the papers and the attitude of insurance corporations. The latter know well the inevitable and unchangeable penalty of vice and wrongdoing, and guard their interests by refusing to incur the risk of in-sureing the drunkard and libertine. You can't drain your physical resources constantly to the dregs with sinful practice, and build up a constitution. You can't encourage the fires of a dissolute life or feed the fever of an uncurbed passion or appetite, and come out on the shady side of fifty with physique to carry you to the "three score years and ten." You can't allow the poison of a corrupt social or business life to saturate your whole being without realizing before you become older than Byron, the words he wrote at thirty-five.

The flower and fruit of hope are gone;
The worm, the canker, and the grief

Millionaires would be plenty as freckles on a red-headed schoolboy if people did not spend half their time snoozing. The chances of success to-day are as great as they ever were, but the trouble is that there are just the same proportion of sluggards. One man makes a fat bank account out of a farm or business, while his neighbor can't keep up the interest on the mortgage or pay more than 10 per cent. of his maturing notes. The old-fashioned stocks ought to have been maintained as a corrective agency, if only for the sake of this class of people. These lazy lie-abeds, whether men or women, should have their legs stretched. It is the only appropriate cure for the disease, and would be an effective warning to laggards. The clock of civilization is kept half a day behind through the habits and example of these lazy rascals, who decline to follow the law of nature in regard to work and sleep. Neither sticks nor anything else would apparently avail for the large number of somnambulists who walk abroad in daylight. Are you a sleep walker? Are you one of those who see an opportunity pass you like a limited express and gaze open mouthed at those who pick up nuggets where you find nothing but dirt? Get out of your trance or you will be in the poorhouse before you are out of your prime. Get someone to kick you around the block the next time you are found dreaming when opportunity knocks at your door. Go and get a justice of peace to give you thirty days at hard labor if you can't shake off the lethargy of a lazy mind and an indolent body. Waken up, or they will carry you out and bury you in the potter's field of the business derelicts. "The hand of the diligent maketh rich."

CO-OPERATIVE DELIVERY SYSTEM CUTS THE COST

Some Pertinent Suggestions How It Should be Conducted—The Plan is Practical, Not Only in Small Towns and Cities, but Larger Centres as Well—Object is to Release Men for Military Service, and the Saving Effectuated Does Not Mean Less Service

A STUDY of co-operative delivery systems undertaken several months ago by the Commercial Economy Board of the Council of National Defence has shown that such systems have commonly saved from 40 per cent. to 50 per cent. in investment and operating costs as compared with the individual systems replaced. The first results of the investigation, covering co-operative systems in 47 cities and towns, have just been made public by the Board, together with a number of practical suggestions on installing similar systems.

Of the 47 cities and towns studied the Board found that the co-operative plan had been a success in 30, a failure in 5, and doubtful as to results in 12, largely because the systems in the 12 places had only recently been installed. These cities and towns are located in 20 different States, and range in population from less than 1,000 to more than 200,000.

In one city of 12,000 population 14 wagons were found to be doing the work which under the old system required 20. One dealer in a town of 4,000 had cut his delivery expense from $1,638 to $806 a year. A merchant in another town reduced his delivery expense from $675 to $224 a month. Eleven stores in another place reported an annual saving of $5,000. In one city 9 wagons replaced 17, and in another 11 men, 14 horses and one car replaced 21 men, 32 horses and 4 cars.

The savings generally did not mean less service to the public. In a number of instances the service was actually increased.

Factors Which Contribute to Saving

Several factors, the Board states, contribute to the saving which generally results from co-operative deliveries. Depreciation charges on vehicles are generally reduced, because instead of several wagons or trucks covering a single district at the same time, one does the work. In place of several complete equipments one will do. Wagons are likely to go out more fully loaded. More deliveries are made per mile of driving. Several supervisors are replaced by one. A unified and more economical planning of routes is made possible.

The five suggestions made by the Board on installing a co-operative system come partly from systems which have succeeded and partly from those which have failed. They are intended to help merchants who are not experienced in organizing and carrying on co-operative deliveries to avoid the pitfalls which have generally been the causes of failure.

First, the Board says, particular pains should be taken to secure impartial valuation of the equipment turned over by the co-operating merchants. In some cases old harness and old wagons have been given in at figures far exceeding their true worth. A system in which this sort of practice is possible at the outset naturally works under a disadvantage.

Second, the Board suggests that merchants planning to co-operate consider the advisability of establishing a central station where parcels can be brought and grouped according to routes, where c.o.d. collections can be turned in, and where all the business of the system can be concentrated. The central station is not desirable in all cases, but it has been found profitable in many.

The Board's third suggestion is that all details connected with c.o.d. orders be worked out with great care. This is one of the most important problems. It requires for its solution responsible drivers, a special accounting system, and a definite agreement with merchants as to when they may expect returns. Irresponsible drivers will probably mean an inaccurate crediting of customers who make c.o.d. payments, careless handling of the money itself, disputes over the amounts turned in by the driver, and trouble for the management in turning over collections to the co-operating merchants. The accounting system need not be complicated.

Fourth, there should by all means, the Board declares, be a competent executive in charge of the work. Above all things needed for the success of a co-operative system is good management.

The fifth suggestion is that when a co-operative system takes over delivery work for any merchant, under the usual plan of a flat charge per delivery, it should be clearly understood that all deliveries are to be handled through the co-operative system and that there are to be no separate deliveries by the merchant. In a number of towns the Board found that the system had failed because certain merchants had made a practice of turning over the long and more expensive deliveries to the co-operative system and using boys to deliver goods to customers within a few blocks of the store.

Will Supply Data Desired

The Board is continuing its investigation with a view to making available still more complete and comprehensive data on the subject. It is now prepared, however, to supply advice and information in some detail to associations and individual merchants who are considering the establishment of a co-operative delivery system. Inquiries may be addressed to the Commercial Economy Board of the Council of National Defence, Washington, D.D.

Since the Board last June recommended co-operative delivery systems its correspondence has indicated a wide and growing interest in them. It is now working, either through the State Councils of Defence or directly, with business men in a considerable number of communities, in establishing such systems or increasing the number of merchants participating in those already established. While the Board's recommendation on co-operative deliveries originally referred only to small and medium sized cities and towns, subsequent investigation has indicated that they are equally practicable and advantageous under certain conditions in even the largest cities.

The recommendation was issued as a war measure. Its primary object was to help make it unnecessary for delivery men who join the army and navy to be replaced by men who are needed in munitions making, farming, ship building, railroading, mining, or some other vital industry.

N. GAGNON AND H. C. PARKER WIN CONTEST

Competition Aroused Wide-spread Interest, and the Events Were Keenly Fought Out—Championship Cups Donated by the "Shoe and Leather Journal" Presented to the Victors, Who Are Being Warmly Congratulated on Their Success

THE VICTORS IN THE FRAY

Silver cup for the largest black bass, small mouth, not less than five pounds in weight, or the largest speckled trout, not less than two pounds in weight. Won by Narcisse Gagnon, of Aird & Son, Montreal; weight of speckled trout, 2 pounds 8 ounces.

Silver cup for the largest maskinonge, salmon or salmon trout, not less than fifteen pounds in weight. Won by H. C. Parker, of Parker, Irwin, Limited, Montreal; weight of maskinonge, 44½ pounds.

THE great fishing competition conducted by the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL is over, and lively was the interest aroused in the shoe and leather trade for the handsome silver trophies. Arriving at a decision in the championship contest was no easy problem, owing to the large number of entries. There were many enthusiastic anglers in all parts of Canada laying claim to the title, which was captured last season by Hugh White, of the White Shoe Co., Toronto. Mr. White was not a competitor this time being content to rest upon his past laurels, as the winner of the famous leather medal, and "give some one else a chance to capture the cups," as he says.

The big event was open to any one connected with the shoe and leather industry and entries were received from as far west as Vancouver, and as far east as Quebec, but it remained with the exponents of the angling art in Montreal to carry off the trophies.

Two valuable silver cups were offered, one for the largest black bass, small mouth, not less than five pounds in weight or the largest speckled trout, not less than two pounds in weight; the other for the largest maskinonge, salmon or salmon trout not less than fifteen pounds in weight, the fish to be captured in Canadian waters with an ordinary rod and line. The competitors were required to submit mounted specimens or photographs giving size, weight, locality, how caught, etc., the exhibits to be attested by reputable eye witnesses or by a notary public.

The judges were James Acton, of the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL; James Robinson, wholesale shoes, Montreal, and

The splendid speckled trout, weighing two pounds eight ounces, caught by Narcisse Gagnon.

J. S. Ashworth, Toronto, Canadian representative of Sir H. W. Trickett, Limited, Waterfoot, Eng.

Narcisse Gagnon, proprietor of Aird & Son, shoe manufacturers, Montreal, and a veteran hunter and angler, whose prowess and ability are well known, has been awarded the cup in the black bass—speckled trout competition. He captured a speckled beauty weighing two pounds, eight ounces, on August 18th last, and an illustration of the fish appears on the foregoing page. In the party were J. Gohier, Alphonse Derosiers, Joseph Charpentier and Narcisse Gagnon. The catch was made by Mr. Gagnon at Macaza, up among the Laurentian Mountains. At Macaza there are three big lakes, and it was in Lac Chaud, (which in English means Hot Lake), that Mr. Gagnon met with his rare good luck. Affidavits regarding the correct weight, time of capture, etc., have been submitted by Joseph Savard, of Macaza, and by Donat Laframboise, hotel keeper, at that place. It is scarcely necessary to add that Mr. Gagnon, is pardonably proud of his new distinction, and the trophy, suitably engraved, has been presented to him and will form a very attractive ornament in his private office, at the factory, where visitors are always welcome. Mr. Gagnon is being warmly congratulated by his numerous friends on his achievement, and readers of the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL are familiar with some of the piscatorial specimens which he has captured in the past. He has worthily won the title of being champion fisherman of the shoe and leather trade in the black bass and speckled trout class.

Mr. Parker's Splendid Capture

H. C. Parker, of Parker, Irwin, Limited, Montreal, the widely known shoe manufacturers' supply house, was the victor in the maskinonge and salmon class, and the weight of the monster he landed was forty-four and a half pounds. The spectacular stunt of coralling this denizen of the deep was effected on July 29th, near Ste. Anne De Bellevue in Jacques Cartier County, which is the spot made famous by Thomas Moore in his famous song, "Row Brothers Row, the stream runs fast, the rapids are near, and the daylight's past."

Mr. Parker was accompanied at the time of the capture by J. P. O'Shea and Louis Daoust, of Montreal, who happened to be singing these very words. All of a sudden they were disturbed by Mr. Parker, who sent up a cry so shrill that the occupants of the craft thought he was falling overboard. He would have done so if it had not been for the assistance of his companions in steadying the boat. Finally Mr. Lunge was pulled in and he was the largest ever witnessed in that vicinity. The illustration shows the big fish on the left, and it will be noticed that another lunge is seen dangling on the right from the pole. In the excitement of the occasion the anglers forgot to have the lesser specimen of the finny tribe weighed. Mr. O'Shea is the man on the left, Mr. Daoust in the centre and Mr. Parker, the champion angler, on the right.

Certificates regarding the avoirdupois of the lunge as being forty-four and a half pounds have been submitted by J. Lefebvre, of Ste. Anne's and by P. Rausseau who weighed the monster. The silver trophy presented to Mr. Parker during the past week has been suitably engraved, and the genial victor bears his new honor with becoming dignity.

Hearty Plaudits for the Victors

To Messrs. Gagnon and Parker, too much praise cannot be bestowed for their angling achievements, which were of no mean accomplishment, considering the number of entries received. They are certainly entitled to the cups for both worked faithfully and sincerely with the object in view. Of the entries for the trophies—some twenty in all—it was no easy task to decide the difficult question of who were the leaders. Some entries had to be excluded on the ground that they were received after October 1st, the closing date, and, in other instances, they were not accompanied by the necessary certificates.

The great fishing contest is now over for the year 1917, and so outstanding has been the event, and so wide the interest incited that the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL intends making the competition an annual one. Those who were not successful this time should go in training and be in fine fettle for the next angling race. All who entered have proved themselves good sportsman, men who can enter a fray with might and main and, when beaten, can take their defeat in a true, cordial spirit and join in felicitations to the winners.

Here's to Messrs. Gagnon and Parker, of Montreal, the champion fishermen of the shoe and leather trade in the Dominion of Canada, and long may they live to enjoy the honors which they have so well and worthily earned!

fishermen, but live retailers as well and conduct a popular priced footwear emporium for men and boys at 56 Hastings St. W., Vancouver. They have one of the largest trades in the city for father, son and brother. Their brand is "Cornett Bros.," and inscribed beneath the trade-mark are the words: "This brand guarantees satisfaction."

C. G. Walker has taken a position with the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Co. and is calling upon the shoe trade in Toronto, in the interest of "Neolin." Mr. Lester is looking after the retail and repair customers in some of the larger cities in Ontario.

MAJOR CAHILL HONORED BY FRIENDS

Major Chas. T. Cahill, Adjutant in the 51st Depot Brigade, United States Army, was tendered a banquet recently by his friends and admirers in the shoe trade press of Boston, Mass., the event taking place at the Harvard Club in "the Hub." For many years Major Cahill has been director of publicity of the United Shoe Machinery Co., and has always proved himself an amiable and affable gentleman under every circumstance. His sound judgment, genial disposition and quiet, unassuming manner have won for him a high place in the consideration of his fellows. Ever an enthusiastic military man he was for a long period connected with the Massachusetts Militia. As an evidence of good wishes and appreciation on the part of his friends, he was presented with a military saddle accompanied by the following illuminated address:

Major Charles T. Cahill, Boston

To Major Chas. T. Cahill:

"In token of deepest esteem and respect engendered by long association in the pathway of business, and of affectionate regard inspired by a thousand intimate revelations of your generous friendship in which we have all participated, we of the shoe trade press take honor to ourselves in offering this expression of great good wish in your service to our country and in all things whatsoever."

The presentation was made by Albert H. Lockwood, of the Shoe and Leather Reporter, and was suitably acknowledged by Major Cahill. Among those in attendance were R. Box, of Samuel Barrow & Bro., Limited, the widely known English leather house, who extended greetings on behalf of Great Britain.

LIEUT. HAROLD FICE WOUNDED

Charles E. Fice, 458 Euclid avenue, Toronto, who represents J. and T. Bell, Limited, of Montreal, has two sons at the front. Word was received the other day that Second-Lieut. Harold T. Fice, who was with the King's Royal Rifles, had been wounded in the left thigh by shrapnel. He is now at the Endsleigh Hospital, London, Eng. Lieut. Fice, who is twenty-three years old, left Canada in April last with the University Officers' Training Corps from Toronto, and had been in France only nine weeks. Another son, Sergt. Percy Fice, is with the 6th Battalion, Canadian railway troops, and has been in France for some months.

IDEAL LEATHER FOR ARMY BOOTS

One of the most progressive industries in the capital city of Charlottetown, P.E.I., is the Kensington Tannery on St. Peter's road. The proprietors are E. B. Love & Son, who turn out a large range of products in the shape of wax and grain uppers, splits and harness leather and also deal in hides, calf skins, sheep pelts, horse hides, wool, etc.

The firm are convinced that the wax upper which they finish, would be an ideal leather for soldiers' boots for the trenches and would stand the hardships of campaign usage much better than the calf skin which has been generally used. They are of the opinion that while a calf skin boot may make perhaps an easier and softer one to wear than the wax upper, yet it will not stand the same strain and stress. The firm report that business is improving since the embargo has been raised by the British Government, and the outlook is good.

SHOEMAKER'S HAD DREAMS OF GOLD

If you are working day after day at a shoemaker's bench you have plenty of time to think or dream. Some shoemakers do the one, some the other. The work is sufficiently mechanical to leave the mind free and sufficiently monotonous to make it fairly ache for employment. That is how it comes that shoemakers are in the habit of working out wonderful schemes in politics and theology, and why the first borough to return an avowed freethinker to the British House of Commons was one chiefly inhabited by shoemakers.

Frank Taylor, a Vancouver shoemaker, became one of the dreamers. His dreams were of gold. To him had come on a drab day in January, 1915, a man who showed him how wealth untold could be his.

"You will not have to work at the shoe bench any more," said his new friend.

But, unfortunately, the price of release was over one hundred dollars, $107.50 to be exact, and all that poor Taylor had was $15. It seemed, however, that this was not to be fatal to his hopes. He could pay the $15 and the rest in instalments as fast as he could find the money. Then he would be made sole owner of a fabulously rich placer claim.

So the shoemaker paid over his $15 and month after month from his meagre wages he managed to spare the additional instalments until the whole amount was paid.

Working at the bench he dreamed of the bright days to come and when the stuff of which his dreams was made required renewing, went up to an office where his benefactor and other beneficiaries like himself talked of the great prospects before them.

At last the whole sum was paid, but for some reason or another the claim was not yet to be made over to him. Instead it was proposed that he buy another claim. Work, however, was worse than ever and poor Taylor really could not undertake to subscribe another hundred dollars. Twenty-five was his limit. His friend was equal to the occasion. He should have his twenty-five dollars' worth. Nay more, he should have half a claim for the money, his friend retaining the other half.

Time has gone on, but so far Frank Taylor has received no claim, neither the whole nor the half. Whether he still dreams of riches, whether he still believes he will one day dig gold from the creek of which he has been told, did not appear when he gave evidence for the crown in the case of Rex. vs. Musclow and Muir recently.

Harry Musclow it was who came to Frank Taylor and Harry Musclow and James A. Muir were lately on trial on the indictment presented by the grand jury that they "did conspire with other persons to the jurors unknown by fraudulent means to defraud the public."

DEATH OF POPULAR SALESMAN

Wm. H. Craine, who for many years was a traveler for Eveleigh & Co., leather goods manufacturers, Montreal, died recently at his home, 45 Mulock street, Toronto. He was forty years of age and twenty years ago succeeded his father on the staff of the Montreal house which he faithfully represented. "Billy" Craine made hosts of friends every where by his genial and obliging disposition. He was an enthusiastic lover of sports, and some years ago was a prominent playing member of the West Toronto Shamrock Lacrosse Club. His health commenced to fail him in 1914, and for the past year he had been more or less confined to the house. The funeral took place to Prospect Cemetery and was attended by a large number of personal friends and relatives. Rev. G. W. Robinson, pastor of Davenport Methodist Church, Toronto, to which the late Mr. Craine belonged, performed the service. The esteem in which the deceased was held and the sympathy expressed for his widow were marked by the numerous wreaths which surrounded the casket. Mr. Craine covered all parts of Ontario and was well liked, and held in high regard by shoe retailers over the province.

Your Business Prosperity is closely related to the Success of Canada's Victory Loan

YOUR business prospers because your customers,—farmers, mechanics, clerks, workmen and others—have plenty of money to spend. They have plenty of money to spend because business has been good.

And business has been good largely because of the millions upon millions of dollars spent by Great Britain for Canada's natural, agricultural and manufactured products.

But Great Britain needs credit, if she is to continue spending money in Canada. Otherwise she will buy where credit is available.

Canada's Victory Bonds are being sold to the people of Canada in order that the credits Great Britain requires may be established.

This money, loaned by the people of Canada, and re-loaned by Canada to Great Britain, will find its way back to the people of Canada.

The relation between your business prosperity and the success of Canada's Victory Loan is, therefore, very close indeed. In fact, your business cannot continue to prosper as it has been prospering, unless the issue of Canada's Victory Bonds is a complete success.

Canada's Victory Bonds, moreover, are an exceptionally good investment. They earn a good rate of interest; the principal is secured by the signed pledge of Canada backed by all the resources of Canada. Any bank will lend money upon their security alone. And the Bonds can be sold at any time.

INVEST YOUR MONEY IN CANADA'S VICTORY BONDS

And take every opportunity to explain to your customers how necessary the success of Canada's Victory Loan is to their own, and their country's prosperity.

It is the part of wisdom to do so because of the reasons given. And it is a patriotic duty because Canada needs money so that she may continue to provide her fighting forces with food, clothing and munitions necessary to keep on fighting shoulder to shoulder with Great Britain and the Allies until victorious peace is achieved.

Your Banker will help you to BUY CANADA'S VICTORY BONDS to the fullest possible extent.

Issued by Canada's Victory Loan Committee of the Dominion of Canada.

Money! Food! Men!

A Challenge to the Manhood of Canada

THESE are the three things needed to "Win the War" and every man, woman and child has it within his or her power to help to some extent in one or all of these great needs. Shall we fail in this pressing duty to our country and our age?

"Money" You are not asked to GIVE, but to LOAN what you can readily spare from your means to help bring this awful struggle to a successful issue. You will get your money back, not only with interest, but with the consciousness that you have done your part for civilization as well as for your home and country. Subscribe to the VICTORY LOAN and persuade others. Impress it upon your employees, your customers, your friends.

"Food" Every pound of food saved from extravagance and waste is so much ammunition for the Allied Armies. It is perhaps the only WEAPON you can use in this war. Weild it faithfully and well. Use no more wheat foods, meat or sugar than absolutely necessary. Stop criticizing the Food Controller and do your part simply, conscientiously and persistently. The war will not end until Germany is beaten. Your job is to back the boys at the front with food.

"Men" If you cannot go yourself, do a man's part at home, and thus make it easier for somebody else to join the colors. If you are an employer, cut down religiously unnecessary and unproductive labor. See to it that those who should and would go are given a chance. Don't be a slacker and don't be an excuse for a slacker. Do what you can to make it easy for the Government of Canada to get the necessary men.

By tightening our belts until we feel the pinch in MONEY, FOOD and MEN

We Will Win the War

The Shoe Repair Man

THE extra heavy sole was never intended for the outsole stitching machines. The machines may be constructed to carry it through, but that is not the idea; we must consider the final results. Extra heavy soles will not generally hold for any reasonable length of time and it is preferable to have such soles nailed on in place of stitched on. The writer has been in repair shops where cold wax was used and heavy soles were being stitched, with the result that the thread would break every now and then. Cold wax is the last thing that a repairer should use; it is never used in shoe factories. The thread may be carried through the machine easier, but not through heavy sole leather. Cold wax may be used on rubber soles, since the thread then never sticks and holds the substance as in leather. The writer is far from advising anybody to use cold wax at the outsole stitcher on any kind of a sole.

THE REPAIRING OF TURN SHOES

Never place anything heavy in the seam of a turn shoe. In shoe factories an extra piece of lining is sometimes placed over the stitching line, but even then the seam bunches out somewhat and is liable to hurt the wearer's foot. A piece of lining should, of course, be set in the channel of an old sole to re-enforce the between substance, but when placed directly upon the lining it is too much, as the stitch will strike the foot. In turning right side out any turn shoe the seam to which has been added this extra piece of material should be forced back and down out of the way of the foot. A six-cord thread is proper and four stitches to the inch. The old turn shoemakers, stitching by hand, would always strive to tighten the stitch so that it would not show once the shoe was turned right side out, and the six-cord thread was deemed the best to get that result, which is of prime importance in turn shoes. A tight seam should be evident even in repaired shoes, but one of the main objections is found to be in the lining, which is nearly all gone and not strong enough to hold the stitch. The writer would suggest that the repairers carry remnants of extra strong lining that is very thin, so that cementing down of such a lining over the old lining would make things in condition to properly insert the stitches without bunching up the sole seam. One old repairer had the idea that the thread should be greased mildly before using, and he would pass the thread over his head a few times before starting sewing. Still a waxed thread should be quite sticky, if the seam is to hold.

PROPER CARE OF THE SHUTTLE

Bobbins will wear down and the tension will be bad, the thread will not come out smoothly, so that the old bobbins have to be thrown away. The shuttle, with proper care, will stand a long time. What is proper care? To oil often and a little each time. But to oil the bobbin means oil upon the sole, and still the bobbin needs oiling. A machine operator oiled the bobbins and thereafter wiped them with a piece of cheese-cloth, so that no oil would flow onto the thread during the operation. This idea is O.K. as well as to heat up the bobbin before inserting in the machine. When the bobbin thread has been once heated and allowed to cool, it has to come off and be thrown aside. Bobbin thread is often too heavy for the needle thread and cuts the needle thread nearly in half in some cases, so that the seam is thereby much weakened. The shuttle wears down the raceway and gets loose and a loose shuttle will operate fairly well, but beware, as at high speed it may fly out and break the raceway and then the cost is double, since the shuttle is invariably ruined under the strain of breaking through the raceway. The shuttle and the bobbin never can be overheated; heat up as much as possible. The shuttle point must always be smooth and emery paper is about the best means of keeping the shuttle smooth. The shuttle is built to fit like the movements of a watch and calls for special care.

MORE DISCUSSION ON BLUCHERS

G. A. Bignell, of Brampton, Ont., writes the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL as follows: "I noticed a letter from Mr. Brake in your edition of October 1st, regarding the term Blucher vs. Derby Boot. I would like to point out to your readers that there is quite a distinction between the two.

Western Shoe Repairing Co., 2319 Granville Street, Vancouver. Mr. Felce, seen in the doorway, was before starting in shoe repairing in this country a heel manufacturer in a large way in England. He is an experienced shoeman of no mean order and a first class operator on the Goodyear Stitcher and other shoe machines.

The Derby as manufactured in England is the same kind of a boot as the one called Blucher in Canada. On the other hand the Blucher known and made there has the following specifications: The vamp and tongue are cut in one piece. The back is cut whole, and the shoe has three lace holes, and is manufactured at present for public institutions, with the result that it is ignored by the British people generally. I hope this explanation will be of interest to you."

HAS DISPOSED OF ONE SHOP

W. F. Barker, who has been conducting two repair shops, one at 802 Bloor st. west, Toronto, and the other at 210 Bleecker st., known as the "Rosedale Shoe Repairing Co.," has disposed of the latter to E. C. Follows, who has a similar business at 1590 Queen st. east. Mr. Barker, who will continue his shop at 802 Bloor st. west, is now enjoying better health than he has for some time.

HIGH HEELED SHOES—PRO AND CON

Many attacks are made on the wearing of the extremely high heel, both by medical authorities and by physical culturists. Mr. M. A. Shafer, of the Moore-Shafer Co., gives his theory in defense of these heels. He says: "There's a common-sense reason for the French heel. Did you ever watch a happy, light-hearted little girl? Does she walk flat-footed? She does not. She runs, and runs on her toes. Just so do many women walk—on their toes, naturally—and that is why the much-abused French heel is their natural requisite."

We confess that this is about as good an argument as the maker of high-heeled shoes could put out; but it applies only where women walk on their toes. Burglars are supposed to also walk on their toes, and perhaps it would be a good idea for some maker to introduce high-heeled shoes for burglars. We are inclined to the opinion that all women and all burglars should discontinue the practice of walking on their toes—in fact, that all people should adopt a sensible shoe with a sensible heel. To be sure-footed is one of the chief essentials of life. Stand on any street corner and watch any high-heeled woman cross the street, and you will observe that she is not sure-footed.

MR. TAYLOR MOVES TO LARGER STORE

Herbert Taylor, whose motto is "Good boots and shoes at reasonable prices," has moved into new quarters in Calgary. His present location is 803 17th Avenue west, in the Mount Royal Block, where he has a larger store which is on the car line. Mr. Taylor came to Canada nearly seven years ago and before that spent twenty-two years in the Old Country with the firm with which he was apprenticed in Pontefract, Yorks, Eng. Rubber Footwear Notes

Backward Season Favors Manufacturers—Dealers Complain of Shipments—Scarcity of Heavy Goods—Also Shortage in Arctics—Tennis Goods Booming

WHILE there has been a fair amount of rain during the past month it has not been such as to start a boom in the sale of rubber footwear. For this dealers have not been altogether sorry as supplies this year have been somewhat slow in arriving. What sloppy weather there was, however, started the demand for rubber foot coverings with the result that left over stocks have been well cleaned up and a considerable hole made in new goods of the lighter class. Up north where there has been a few snowflurries, and in the West where they have been having cold weather there has been quite a movement in heavier lines as well as felts.

A Big Season.—All the factories have been taxed to capacity to fill orders, and in some cases it is said that orders will have to be reduced. This is true, especially of heavy goods for which the demand is heavy for home consumption, not to speak of the increased demand for overseas needs. Those who get their full needs in heavy goods this year may congratulate themselves. The large increase in the use of sporting goods has, no doubt, hampered to some extent the production of regular lines. Complaints are numerous from retailers that orders are not filled as promptly as usual this year and manufacturers urge that not only are the orders larger than ever, but the overlapping of the sporting good's season has interfered with early operations. This, with the great scarcity of help, which after all is the great factor, has put manufacturers surely to the test to produce the goods on time.

Sport Goods Season.—The coming season bids fair to transcend all its predecessors. Evidently retailers have confidence in the future of this class of goods, and realize that they provide a sensible reaction from the high prices of leather shoes. At all events, the rubber soled summer shoe in all its varied applications to regular and sporting life seems to have become a fixed factor in the shoe business. Already orders are in to the capacity of most of the factories. Already some concerns are holding back on some lines so as to facilitate operations and using the new ones to boost trade, if it needs it later. The character of the goods has now become thoroughly established, and the uncertainty thus removed. The principal difficulty at present, seems to be to secure or hold operations, although matters have improved in this respect since the easing off in munitions. Materials are also a matter of anxiety, some fabrics being in small demand.

Crude Rubber.—The market continues inactive in raw rubber, the demand being quiet. Evidently manufacturers have secured adequate supplies for their full needs, and are not anxious as to the future. Prices have had a downward tendency rather than otherwise for the past month or so, although the London market has ruled somewhat higher. Plantation rubber seems weaker than Brazils owing, no doubt, to the more plentiful supply and notwithstanding the shortage of bottoms. As compared with other materials entering into rubber manufacture, prices are surprisingly low. First latex pale crepe is quoted 64 cents, with smoked sheet, 63 cents. Fine up river Para is held at 65 cents, island's fine, 54 cents; up river coarse, 46 cents; island's coarse, 29 cents; Caucho call, upper, 40 cents; lower, 38 cents; camata, 30 cents; centrals and Mexicans, 38 cents to 40 cents; guayule, 33 cents. Scrap rubber is weakening under the lack of demand for all kinds of rubber, the price at New York being $9.00 to $9.10 for scrap boots and shoes.

Rubber Sole Business.—The wonderful increase in the use of rubber soleing and heeling has, no doubt, helped to fill the rubber shoe factories with

A PAPER THAT'S WORTH WHILE

The twice-a-month Shoe and Leather Journal at one dollar and fifty cents a year is the best trade paper proposition in the Dominion. Its standing, prestige and reliability are recognized on all sides, and it is read carefully and thoughtfully from cover to cover.

extra business that has told upon its capacity. For a time the sole business was suffering with a pronouncedly discolored optic in a business way, received through the putting on the market of inferior or badly made soles. This trouble has, however, been largely obviated by the production of better stock. The reports of cracking, or of poor wear have very largely disappeared and prospects point to a large business in this line during the coming year. The ease and silence involved in rubber heels were long ago established as a desirable quality in footwear. With the introduction of dependable soles these desirable qualities have been further enhanced. It depends upon manufacturers how long the popularity of the rubber sole will last.

DUCK HUNTING PARTY HAD GOOD LUCK AND ENJOYABLE OUTING

Recently a jolly duck hunting party spent a merry time at the shooting lodge of J. J. Kilgour, of Kilgour, Rimer Co., wholesale shoes, Winnipeg. The spot is located about sixty miles from Winnipeg, at a point known as High River and in mallard, teal, blue bills and others. Rising at four o'clock each morning they walked three quarters of a mile and then paddled about seven more until the favorite resorts of the feathered fowl were reached. In the accompanying illus-

the party were J. J. and J. P. Kilgour, O. H. Vogt, of the Great West Felt Co., Elmira, Harry D. McKellar, of Kitchener, who represents the Oscar Rumpel felt factory, Fred Palmer and Brigham Young, of Galt, and others, who enjoyed the sport immensely. They captured numerous duck, trations, J. J. Kilgour is seen on the left with a generous representation of the number of birds that he killed. In the centre is Harry McKellar wondering what fortune he will have on the morrow, and on the right are Messrs. Palmer, Vogt, J. J. Kilgour and Young.

NEW ORNAMENT FOR LOW CUTS

A pearl button ornament, which is being made in several artistic designs, and in two grades, ocean pearl and fresh water pearl, is being presented as a new adornment for pumps and slippers of all kinds. A brass tube is permanently set in the pearl button leaving the protruding end of the tube straight. A hole is punched in the vamp of the low cut shoe and the tube is fed through the aperture and clinched inside exactly like an eyelet. The ornament is firmly held in position, and cannot work loose. A special machine with two heads, one for punching and the other for setting, has been designed and both heads are manipulated by one treadle.

Buttons can thus be attached quickly and easily, the operation being very simple. There are no neater or smarter ornaments than pearl, but in the past there has been some objection to them on the part of shoe manufacturers. Sewing by hand has been a rather tedious operation and buttons sewed through with an under eye will not set straight while the eyes often cut the thread. The new method of fastening pearl buttons is firm and secure and the ornament is there to stay. The company, who are putting out the new adornment, intend, in the near future, to place on the market, for the benefit of the retail trade, hand and foot power tools so that the buttons may be attached with ease and security.

BUDGET OF NEWS FROM PACIFIC COAST

The spell of rain of a few weeks ago has given away to the fine weather again, and there is very little material difference in the volume of business done in the wholesale or retail shoe line. The heavier weights in all grades are moving readily. The makers of logger's and miner's boots are working at full capacity to keep abreast of the orders, that are coming to hand every day.

I have just had an illustrated brochure given to me which is issued by Wood's Limited, of Cordova street, and the famous K Boot Shop of Hastings street, Vancouver. It does the proprietors of this catalogue great credit, for the publication is one of the best of its kind I have seen, being printed in two colors on art paper with 60 smart illustrations of all grades of footwear, overgaiters, etc. One novel feature is three cuts of English wood botton clogs of the London and Lancashire types. Every shoe is sufficiently described, giving sizes and shapes stocked, with the price, etc. A special department of the firm is the surgical and made-to-measure. Two good cuts illustrate two different styles of cork boots. Repairs are not overlooked for space is given for description and prices which include free postal delivery. Such a booklet must be of immense value to the firm's patrons living in the country. This system of advertising is to be warmly commended.

A little flutter of excitement was caused in these parts a few weeks ago upon local papers calling attention to a decrease of 25 per cent. on hides at the local market. Many jubilant remarks were made that the price of leather would soon come down, which caused some buyers of sole leather to hold off their purchase. I am afraid there will be a great gnashing of teeth when one of these mornings they find an advance has been made. There was a reason for this reduction in price of hides of which few know, as a few days previous to the report a cargo of Mexican hides was sold by order of the Prize Courts. These hides were of poor quality and brought a low price, naturally having a temporary effect locally.

Several members of the trade have discussed the proposition in the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL of September 15th, with reference to the blucher boot. They certainly agree with your correspondent, Thos. Brake, of Toronto, that the boot should be called Derby, as it is known in Europe. It is a misnomer to call the present style of upper a blucher, as the boot that was made and named after the German general was cut whole back $4\frac{1}{4}$ inch high and the vamp and tongue were one piece. There were three eyelets only. An improved model of this style was made and used in the British army for many years. It was a trifle higher at the back, had outside counters, and five to six eyelets, and was known as the army blucher. The present boot upper known in Canada under that name corresponds in no way with the original blucher in the tab, tongue, height or quarters. It would be a fitting opportunity to give this class of upper its correct and original name of Derby, or I would suggest Kitchener.

Several members of the repair trade have been taking their vacation in the mountains in search of game, but the sport has been poor. All have benefited by the change.

Conscription is having its effect on the shoe trade. Many of the young men in the stores come under the Act, as also among the repairers who are unsettled about their business in the event of their helpers passing the medical test.

SIZING UP CUSTOMER QUICKLY AND ACCURATELY

The Salesman Who Begins to Sell Without First Having Secured a Good Line on His Patron is Likely to Offer the Wrong Style or Quality, or Price says "The Shoe Economist"—Some Rules That May be Profitably Followed by Alert Shoemen

ONE of the oldest and most unprofitable arguments in the world of selling is the one regarding what is the most important asset in making regular sales, day in and day out. It has been aired, discussed and argued by practical and theoretical salespeople, business men, so-called sales experts, owners, managers and department buyers since store keeping began. And it is still unsettled. And always will be unsettled.

But there is one asset that no one denies the high value of in selling shoes—the ability to size up the customer quickly and accurately. And this is indeed a great and valuable gift, for it is a gift in a sense, although it is also a cultivatable trait.

The salesman who can gauge the customer's probable tastes, social status and financial power is a real jewel in the shoe selling force because he can quickly get the customer's confidence, point of view and good will. He can get it before the customer begins to wonder whether, after all, he is in the right store.

The salesman who begins to sell without having first gotten a good line on his customer is likely to offer the wrong style or quality or price the first thing, thereby getting the customer's ill will or putting him in a doubtful frame of mind. Once the customer is in even a mildly antagonistic frame of mind the going is hard and dangerous, and even if the sale is made after a long struggle and much backing and filling the customer may go out in a disgruntled mood and never return. If this happens half the salesman's work is lost, for getting the money for goods is only half the completed sale. Getting the customer's confidence and good will is the other half because good will usually is the prelude to more business in the future.

Good Guides to Thinking Mind

There are a few simple rules that help in sizing up customers, and shoe salesmen of even mediocre ability can soon learn them and put them into practical use. They are not infallible, but they are good guides and splendid stimulants to the thinking mind. Here are the three principles the rules are founded on:

A man's or woman's tastes are usually best indicated by the dress and ornaments worn. This is particularly true of women and it is true enough of men to serve the purpose.

A man's social standing, breeding and point of view is best estimated by his manner; a woman's by her voice, manner and attitude.

The financial standing, buying capacity rather, of both men and women is best indicated by their walk and physical movements and to a great extent by facial expression when approached by a salesman.

There are many exceptions to these rules, to be sure, and they vary in accuracy of application with environment and circumstances. It is practice alone that is the sure road to adequate accomplishment along this line—practice and experience.

Using personal tastes, social status and financial standing as a basis, take a good look at the next customer whom you have to serve. Suppose it is a middle-aged woman, say about 45 years of age. What are her tastes? you ask yourself. Look at her hat, her coat or waist, her shoes and her gloves, look quickly for these things and at the same time scrutinize the woman's face, studying her expression, especially the mouth and eyes. If she is a woman of good taste in little things, such as color combinations in her clothing, her hat, her neckwear, gloves and if she wears an expression that seems to indicate that she feels at ease in her clothing, you can figure her taste is good in most everything. You won't go far wrong. That for gauging taste, the desire for appropriate things.

Study Voice, Manner and Attitude

Now for social standing; not in the sense of formal society but as to aristocracy, democracy or plebeian—a matter of birth. Study her voice, manner and personal attitude toward you. If she is a woman of breeding whether she belongs to a high or low lineage her voice will be low and well modulated, she will show signs of a certain graciousness and her attitude will be one of helpful, sympathetic co-operation. Variations of these will indicate variations from the set standard of social position.

If the woman has plenty of money, or at least if she does not have to scrimp on what she pays for shoes, some indications of it will be apparent in the way with which she sits down to be served and the expression on her face. If she can pay whatever is necessary for shoes that suit her, she will show it by not putting a sort of defensive expression on her face and expressing it in her voice.

Why is it necessary to size up her taste, breeding and buying capacity? Simply because people of a high degree usually will want one kind of a shoe; a person lacking a certain amount of standing will want another kind, and so on.

It is folly to offer a $15 boot to a woman whose very appearance and manner designate her as a scrub woman. She may have taste at that and breeding, too, but she won't have much money. So it will help the salesman at the start if he realizes this. It is, of course, possible for a poorly dressed, badly mannered woman, or man either, to have plenty of money and willingness, even anxiety to spend it, but it isn't the rule and a shrewd salesman soon becomes skilled in unraveling the unusual cases.

Getting Proper Shoes on Feet

It would be worth money to the department if every salesman in it were taught the need of studying people even if he never becomes skilled at it. If he knows that it means added or lessened chances to make sales he will at least be cautious and if he does not help himself materially he will not hinder himself.

Every shoe in stock must finally be sold to some one and for the price the shoe is worth. It is more than likely that the better grades and higher priced pairs will go to people of tastes and means, although there will be a variation from the rule now and then; and the cheaper grades are likely to go to people of less means, regardless of their degree of culture or social standing.

"Sizing them up" simply aids in getting the proper shoes on the proper feet quickly, easily and gracefully.

Study people, Mr. Shoe Salesman!

SHOE COMPANY GETS CHARTER

A charter has been granted to the Humberstone Shoe Co., Limited, of Humberstone, Ont., who have been in business for many years and have developed a big trade in their special lines. The capital stock of the company is one hundred thousand dollars.

UNITED STATES RUBBER'S BIG PROFITS

Net earnings of the United States Rubber Co. for the six months ended June 30th last, amounted to $7,239,966. This is after an allowance of $500,000 for the special war tax.

These earnings compare with $4,900,000 earned in the same period of 1916. Adding $500,000 to the $7,239,966 would give $7,739,966 as a basis for comparison of this year's earnings with a year ago. This shows an increase of 53 per cent. in net for the first half of the current year as compared with 1916. Even allowing for the war tax United States Rubber earnings show a gain of 47 per cent. over last year.

Earnings of $7,239,966 are at an annual rate of $14,479,932, or $27 a share for the $36,000,000 common stock after deducting dividends of $4,800,000 on the $60,000,000 preferred stock. These are the largest earnings in the history of the company and compare with $15.12 earned on the same amount of stock in 1916.

FIRE DOES DAMAGE TO SHOE STOCK

Fire broke out a few days ago in the Singer Fit-Rite Shoe Co. at the corner of Inspector and Notre Dame streets west, Montreal. The blaze started in the cellar and spread over the entire floor in which stock is kept. It was two hours before the flames were extinguished, and the firemen had a fierce fight. The shoes on the ground floor were badly damaged by smoke and water. The loss on goods in the cellar, which amounted to several thousand dollars, is partly covered by insurance. The Singer Fit-Rite Shoe Co., also conduct a store at 744 St. Catherine street east, Montreal, while their wholesale department is located at 418 Notre Dame street west.

B.C., believes that he holds the record of making the largest sale to any one lady that has ever been affected. Recently he waited upon a fair customer and the accompanying slip amounting to $106.75 represents what her pedal requirements were. Six pairs of shoes were sold the lady as well as shoe trees and laces, the price of the footwear running from $12.00 to $20.00 per pair. The bill was paid, $110.00 in cash being handed Mr. Matchett, who returned $3.25 in change. This transaction represents the largest cash sale to one customer at regular prices that the Edward Stark Shoe Co. has ever known. The shoes were all of one size and one width and Mr. Matchett is certainly to be congratulated upon his efficient and tactful salesmanship. It would be interesting to know if any of the boot shops throughout the Dominion can beat this record. Of course, larger sales may have been made to a customer buying for more than one person or for a family, but the query arises: "Has any

THREATENED SUIT IF SHE DID NOT GET MONEY

Indignant Lady Would Not Accept New Pair and Made All Sorts of Trouble for Western Retailer—Latter Stood to His Guns and Did Not Lose the Profit on the Shoes—Was Not to be Intimidated by Lawyer's Letter—Strong Resolution Wins Out

"I am this day consulted by Miss Munn, of — street, with reference to a pair of women's shoes which were bought at your store a few weeks ago. You represented the shoes to be of good durable quality and you were paid $10.00 for them. After Miss Munn had worn the boots for a few minutes, one of the heels split, and she could not wear them any longer. When they were returned to you, you promised either to repair them and soften the leather so that she could wear them or that you would give her a new pair which would be of service to her without any further charge. After some little delay, you finally informed her that you could not give her any other pair as this was the only line you handled and such shoes would not be of any service to her. Under the circumstances, I must ask you for the refund of the $10.00, the purchase price, and, unless I hear from you within three days, I shall be obliged to take a very regrettable step and start proceedings for collection. Kindly do not permit matters to go this far.

Yours truly,

A. A. BLANK.

WHEN a Winnipeg retailer opened his mail the other morning, his eyes fell upon the foregoing letter. The communication is reproduced exactly as it is written except that different names are used, but this does not detract from the interest or pointedness of the story. The attitude of the client has been presented in litigious phraseology, or in other words legal lore, but how different is the state of affairs when the retailer steps up and presents his side of the case. A somewhat facetious newspaper man who passed away a few years ago used to say that "there are always two sides to every story and the truth besides."

Well, here is the retailer's version:

"Yes, Miss Munn came into my store a few weeks ago and bought a pair of eight inch mahogany bals, with plain toe and leather Louis heel with aluminum plates. These were made by one of Canada's leading shoe houses and I charged her $10.00. There was no particular fault with the shoe, except that perhaps the calf leather was a trifle too heavy for women's wear. After I had perfectly fitted her, I pressed the counters in a few times in order to soften them so that they would not hurt the woman's heel. Well, she went away and in a few days came back complaining that the shoes had checked at the heel. I told her that any shoe, no matter what price she paid, would have the enamel crack at the lower part of the heel. In softening the stiffener, a severe strain was put upon the heel by the nails coming so close to the seat. I also informed her the checking did not amount to anything so far as looks were concerned. No further objection was offered on this point, but she then complained that the linings were loose and were uncomfortable. I looked into the shoes and found that for some reason the linings had been cut too large, and got in folds or wrinkles, which was rather unpleasant. I remarked that I would have this matter attended to and to call around in three or four days. I sent the shoes to a repair man, but he was unable to do anything with the linings and the shoes came back to me.

Well, we were very busy one Saturday night, when in came Miss Munn accompanied by a young gentleman whom I strongly suspect is not only her lover, but the legal gentleman who wrote me the letter. I did not recognize her at first and one of my clerks went over to wait upon her after she had been seated a few minutes. She did not intimate to him that she had left a pair of shoes to be fixed, but stated that she would like to see something in the latest style of bal. The salesman began showing her some other colors in leathers than the kind she had bought. She noticed a particular last and admired it very much, but we did not have her size and width, and the clerk coming over to me asked what he would do. All at once it dawned on me that this was the woman who had left the shoes to have the linings made to fit.

Nothing Else Would Satisfy

I then said, "You are Miss Munn, are you not?" and she answered, "Yes." I then told her that I would have to give her a new pair of mahogany bals as the pair which she had bought were faulty so far as the linings were concerned, and that I would send the boots back to the factory. She declared that she did not want the mahogany bals, but immediately demanded her money. I told her, of course, that I could not return the cash, but I would give her another pair that would fit her perfectly and give satisfaction. She retorted that she did not want the shoes at all, but must have the money. I flatly refused to hand over the sum and her legal friend or fiance said, sotto voce, "Never mind I will see that you get your money back alright. Come on out of here," so off they went without further ado or explanation.

The next day I got the letter and went up with a friend of mine to the lawyer's office, which was little more than a 2 by 4 place. I said to the young lady in charge, "Where is Mr. Blank?" "He is not down yet," she declared, "but will be here by eleven o'clock. I told her that I could not wait, but to tell Mr. Blank that C. H. Rorn, the shoe retailer, had called.

In the afternoon I rang up Blank and said:

"This is Rorn speaking."

"What Rorn?" he replied.

"C. H. Rorn," I said. "You know very well there is no other Rorn!"

"No, I do not," he answered in a nasty tone. "There might be a dozen for all I know."

Feigned Ignorance of Letter

"Well, there is only one in your case," I replied. "And you know full well who it is after that peremptory note of yours this morning."

"What peremptory note was that?" he inquired.

"You know hang well," I answered. "You are the bosom friend who accompanied Miss Munn in my shoe store on Saturday night last," I said.

"No," he answered, "I do not know the young lady except as a client."

"Very well," I said. "And evidently you do not remember me or anything about the contents of your note."

"No," he replied. "How could I when I write about seventy-five letters a day?"

"Excuse me," I retored. "If you write seventy-five letters a day, you must be doing a whale of a business. No man could attend to such voluminous correspondence and get down at eleven o'clock in the morning."

"Don't get personal," Blank rejoined.

"Well, you need not get personal either," I countered. "You know perfectly well that I offered Miss Munn a new pair of shoes, ones that would fit her, and I am not the kind of a business man that you need write such letters to in order to have him carry out his word. You evidently do not know much about business matters or you would not base any claim upon the flimsy pretext that you have," I continued. "I will see that Miss Munn gets a pair of new shoes alright, as I have already offered, but so far as returning the money is concerned, there is absolutely nothing doing."

"We will see about that," was his response.

"I will see about it, too," I declared.

Took Special Pair to House

"Well," was the final response, "I'll phone Miss Munn, tell her what you say and have her call in and see you tomorrow."

"All right," I rejoined and hung up the receiver.

"I waited three days for Miss Munn to come in and she not appearing I determined that I would lose no further time in adjusting the grievance. I secured a superior pair of 4½-C width, and going with them to the house, personally asked for Miss Munn. I was told by an elderly lady who answered my summons, at the door, that Miss Munn was not in, but that the speaker was her mother. I told Mrs. Munn that I had brought up a new pair of shoes for her daughter. I asked her if she would be kind enough to sign a memo which I wrote out there and then. It was to the effect that her daughter had received a new pair of shoes in exchange for the ones which had been left with me, and that they were in perfect condition.

"Now, I have this little note on file, and have heard nothing more from Miss Munn, who has evidently discovered that discretion is the better part of valor, in this case, and has kept the footwear. In the meantime, I have not lost the profit on that sale, as I would if I had returned the money. If Mr. Blank is not Miss Munn's personal friend but simply a legal adviser, she will be out the price of sending me that communication.

"Some one may say that my action was rather high handed, but I do not return cash for shoes where they have been worn or on any mere whim or pretext. I am willing to make good any defects or shortcomings and see that footwear gives service in every respect, but if I once started handing back the money, I would never know when a sale was effected, I would be out the profit in each transaction and a large portion of each day would be spent in undoing the business that was supposed to be closed the day before. It is alright to adjust complaints, but not at too much sacrifice to yourself. The retailer loses his own respect, backbone and sense of dignity if he does and is simply making a public door mat on which others walk if given a chance. I am willing to go half way in any transaction, but do not purpose covering the whole journey, carrying the burden to the destination and returning with it."

DIRECTING GENIUS OF HISTORIC HOUSE

(See Front Cover)

There are very few firms that can boast of being fifty years in business and the golden jubilee is generally looked forward to with interest and celebrated with eclat. Such an institution is the Amherst Boot & Shoe Co., of Amherst, N.S., which a few months ago passed the half century mark. This house has always kept pace with the times and has stood for progress and stability.

C. S. Sutherland, who has been connected with the business for nearly thirty years, first entering the service as a bookkeeper, is the aggressive and thorough going general manager. He started out in life as a telegraph operator and for some time was employed by the Intercolonial Railway. He learned all about currents and wires, which no doubt has made him such a propulsive force in modern business methods. Mastering all departments of shoemaking from the producing to the selling end, Mr. Sutherland also knows the retail trade by personal contact with it throughout the Maritime Provinces and Newfoundland.

When Mr. Pride passed away some ten years ago, there was only one man, in the opinion of the directors, who could capably discharge the duties of general manager, and he was Mr. Sutherland. That the selection was a good one, time has demonstrated. Mr. Sutherland is a genial, warm hearted gentleman, with high ideals of honor and service, whom it is a pleasure to meet. He is a well known visitor to all the leather centres, and frequently takes trips to the Prairie Provinces, the Western branch, known as the Amherst Central Shoe Co., being located in Regina, Sask.

PUT IN SPECIAL ATHLETIC SHOE DISPLAY

M. Henning, proprietor of the Preston Boot and Shoe Store, Preston, Ont., is a merchant who believes in capitalizing local events and thus bringing additional trade to his establishment. He recently put in a special window of outing and sporting shoes, which were admirably displayed, and there were also the Dominion of Canada Lawn Bowling Trophy and Medal for singles, and the Seagram Trophy representative of the championship of the Central Ontario Lawn Bowling Association. The singles were won by P. McGrath and the Seagram award was captured by H. J. Sullivan, George Lindelius, A. Anderson and P. McGrath (skip), all members of the Preston Lawn Bowling Club. When clever exponents of the green, like the Preston men carry off such trophies, it is certainly worth while making a noise about it, for honors of this kind do not come to a town every day. Mr. Henning is to be congratulated on his progressive and enterprising spirit in having the trophies shown in his window, surrounded by sporting footwear of all kinds.

NEWSY BRIEFS FROM ST. JOHN

Mary Evelyn Osborne, an employe in Levine's shoe store in Charlotte street, St. John, was recently united in marriage with Guy Raymond Hagerman a popular member of the staff of W. H. Thorne & Co., Limited. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Thomas Marshall at the residence of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Albert Osborne, 214 Watson street, West St. John, N.B.

Miss Catherine Cusack, who until recently was employed with Waterbury & Rising Limited, has accepted a position with Percy M. Levine, and will be attached to the staff in his Charlotte street store.

The success of the British Red Cross Society Fund in St. John, has been largely due to the energy of Mayor R. T. Hayes, president of the firm of J. M. Humphrey & Co., manufacturers and wholesale dealers in shoes. The collections this year are vastly larger than those of last.

William Cole was in the city last week representing the Walker, Parker Co., of Toronto.

Mr. and Mrs. E. L. Rising have arrived safely in San Francisco. They intend to remain there for a month, and then proceed to Los Angeles where they will spend the winter. Mr. Rising is president of the firm of Waterbury & Rising Limited.

Harold W. Rising, who is taking charge of Waterbury & Rising Limited, during his father's absence, reports that the firm's travelers are out with spring goods, and are meeting with success.

HASTINGS TANNERY BURNED TO GROUND

The plant of the Hastings Tanning Co., Hastings, Ont., which is owned and operated by the Breithaupt Leather Co., Limited, of Kitchener, Ont., was completely wiped out by fire at an early hour in the morning on October 23rd. The blaze originated from some unknown cause, and the flames spread very rapidly. The factory had been running night and day and the company had just installed considerable new and expensive machinery for the betterment of the stock produced there to enable the output to be increased. The total loss will be about $200,000, partly covered by insurance.

It is understood the Breithaupt Leather Co., will commence rebuilding operations at Hastings soon, and the factory will be bigger and better than ever. The Breithaupt Co. report that, fortunately for themselves and their customers, they will be able to fill all orders, and look after the requirements of their trade the same as heretofore. Arrangements have been made with their other tanneries at Penetang, Woodstock and Kitchener to take care of all business, and these plants will be speeded up immediately to their utmost capacity.

"YOURS IS A VERY UNUSUAL FOOT—QUITE SMALL"

Tactful Shoe Salesman Knew the Full Force of Happy Reference When Applied to Pernickety Shopper's Pedal Limbs—Don't Survey a Lady's Foot With Disapprobation or Intimate That You Cannot Easily Give Her Perfect Fit with Every Ease

IN the buying of shoes there is much sorrow. I have come to the conclusion that what we need is shoes made to order, as no two pairs of feet are alike—and we'll never have pedal perfection until we are measured and fitted for each pair of shoes that we add to our small supply of footwear, says "Canadienne" in a whimsical and racy article appearing recently in Toronto "Saturday Night," and should not be interpreted too rigidly.

If a certain style of shoe happens to be in that foolish condition known as "the fashion," then a large number of persons in the community find themselves unable to get anything in the shoe shops either comfortable or becoming. A few years ago, the long, slender foot came into more than its own, and shoes began to approach the toothpick in width and point—also the shoes were abominably flat—and I, like other citizens of Irish "distraction," possessing short, wide and high-arched feet, arose and reviled the shoes and the makers thereof.

"Try the Tootsy Shop," said a kind friend, who is given to investigating all the new shops which open their doors to those who seek the very latest thing in what-to-wear.

"It won't be any better than the others," I said gloomily. "There's only one shoe I can wear, and So-and-So's are out of it. I don't see why, for the Germans can't need that particular kind of shoe."

"Well, it's the leather, you see. They need it for saddles and things like that for the cavalry."

"I don't believe that kind of leather is the least bit of use to the cavalry or the air service or anything but shoes," I replied firmly. "This war is just made an excuse for all manner of expense and inconvenience by lazy and avaricious manufacturers."

"Well, you go to the Tootsy Shop people," she advised. "You'll find them simply wonderful. They give you individual attention. Just mention my name, for I've bought several pairs there."

Looked Like Undertaker's Chapel

I'm quite sure of that, for the kind friend spends most of her leisure time and all of her spare money in the shoe department. Wherefore, I repaired to the Tootsy Shop and was shown to a place which resembled an undertaker's chapel, where I found myself in a seat upholstered in olive-green plush. A young man who looked like a grand opera tenor surveyed my foot with disapprobation:

"It will not be easy to fit," he declared in sad and silvery tones.

"I know that," I replied tartly, "I can't find a decent pair of shoes in this city."

That was a challenge and the Tootsy man accepted it. "We have what you can wear, but I'll have to make a drawing of your foot first." So I placed my unshod right foot on a piece of perfectly good paper and the leading tenor proceeded, like Zogbaum, to "do things with a pencil."

"Does my foot really look like that?" I asked, surveying the finished product with dismay.

"Your foot is very broad," said the leading tenor, his voice sinking to the lowest register known to his class. "Now, I'll have to trouble you to come in again to-morrow and I'll have the right pair of shoes for you."

"I'm a busy woman," I expostulated. "Why can't you get them for me now?"

The leading tenor gazed at me with the stern reproach of the real specialist. "This selection can't be hurried,"

he explained loftily. "I must study this drawing carefully."

"It looks like a Noah's Ark, if you ask me," I replied, with a growing pessimism, as I gazed on that weird and unshapely affair his pencil had traced. It began to seem as if I were to have a nerve killed, and I could just see the dentist's tray with all those fine steel instruments and smelly bottles. However—it was my duty to give the Tootsy Shop a fair trial. So I made a formal appointment for the next afternoon—which found me once more in the Tootsy Shop, with the leading tenor balancing a pair of ugly boots on his slender palms.

"I don't like them," I declared at once.

"It is the latest development in shoe manufacture," he asserted with a melancholy yet triumphant cadence. "It is the product of years of thought and experiment."

"Then they'd better guess again," I said rudely.

However, the woman who argues with a seller of shoes is lost, and I found myself leaving that shop, with the Tootsy pair securely buttoned on my unwilling feet, and the old shoes discarded.

Growing Slimmer and Longer

Still the fashionable shoes grow slimmer and longer, until they seem to be chiefly point and heel, and there is no one to listen to my wail of toe. Last week, I interviewed two shoe specialists, who profess to have the latest word—or should one say the perfect last—in footwear. The first one regarded the extended foot coldly and remarked: "Well, of course, the American foot is the fashionable shape. Now, yours is —"

"Mine is Irish," I said, with a Donnybrook beat-it-if-you-can air which made even that salesman slightly retreat, and almost fall back on a showcase filled with taupe and midnight blue silk stockings.

"Er—yes," he admitted, "just so. But we haven't anything to fit you, except these." He dragged forward a miserable pair of sixes, which I promptly scorned.

"If you haven't anything the proper length I don't want any," I declared promptly.

The next one was even worse, saying: "We have chiefly the narrow shoes. Now, yours is a stubby foot." "Stubby!" That man is a boor and an untruther, for whom there is no hope, and evil things will befall him. At last, at last, I came to a small shop, of which I heard by chance, as "a place where you can get decent shoes at a human price." An urbane nobleman proceeded to tell me that he had just what I wanted, and to produce a box containing a shoe which looked as if it might go into a fit on the slightest provocation.

"It's just what I've been looking for," I sighed luxuriously. "It's as comfortable as if it were old, and I'm going to wear these down town this very afternoon."

"You see," said the urbane nobleman. "Yours is really a very unusual foot—quite small, indeed, and high-arched. Of course, you know that the high arch means good ancestry."

Straightway I began to call to mind various Irish kings whom I might claim as ancestors. There was Cormac, now, a villainish person, but too long dead to protest if I appropriated him as a great-great-very-great grandfather. "Thanks, they fit beautifully."

"We have the pumps, too," said the urbane nobleman. "Shall I send them?"

"Um! Well, I don't really need them. Still, one never knows. Yes, I think you had better."

AMONG THE SHOE MEN.

Burglars recently entered the shoe and clothing stores of D. W. Downey, of Brockville, Ont., and secured several suits of clothes, shirts and pairs of shoes, while the whole stock was badly disarranged. Shoe cartons were strewn all over the premises. The police are hot foot after the perpetrators of this unadvertised autumn opening.

Fire broke out recently in Forest, Ont., and the shoe store of P. Cairns, and the shoe repair shop of A. Armstrong were wiped out by the flames. Several other business places were consumed before the blaze was conquered.

The firm name of J. Howard Carkner & Co., 206 Sparks street, Ottawa, has been altered to Code-Carkner, Limited. There has been no change in the personnel of the house whatever, except in the name and the fact that a federal incorporation has been secured. E. E. Code, manager of the Kaufman Rubber Co. (Ottawa branch), and J. Howard Carkner have always been the proprietors of the business, and the only reason for changing the style was that they have obtained a charter.

A ministerial decree requisitioning all the shoe factories in France, effective November 15th, is supposed by the shoe trade to be intended to overcome the disinclination of the manufacturers to make the new national shoe in the quantities demanded by the Government. Five hundred thousand pairs monthly were ordered, and only a small part of that number was put on sale.

A. C. Clark, of Toronto, Canada's practical sales specialist, returned lately after conducting very successful sales at Sault Ste. Marie, Sudbury and Iroquois Falls, and left again to conduct sales in North Bay and Timmins, Ont.

Contracts were awarded in Washington recently for a million and a half pairs of boots for the Russian army, at a total cost of $7,500,000. The awards were made by members of the Russian purchasing commission advised by the committee on supplies of the Council of National Defence. These contracts with those placed by the War Department for the American armies, make the enormous total of 8,400,000 pairs of footwear which have been ordered within the past week.

F. S. Scott, President of Getty & Scott, Limited, Galt, and a former mayor of that city, has received the nomination as "win-the-war" candidate in South Waterloo, which constituency he has represented in the Commons for the past three years.

J. P. Lacombe, of Shawinigan Falls, Que., shoes, recently assigned to J. P. E. Gagnon.

Nap. Tetrault, of the Tetrault Shoe Mfg. Co., Montreal, has purchased a handsome Pierce-Arrow limousine, and intends shortly to take his family on a holiday trip to the principal cities of the United States.

The Eureka Shoe Co., of Three Rivers, Que., are working to capacity and turning out six hundred pairs a day. The factory covers 72,000 square feet and the company are now considering the advisability of enlarging their floor space. The Eureka Shoe Co. report a very general demand for their sport last in khaki calf, Duchess Russian calf and gun metal. The firm manufacture McKays, imitation welts and turns.

Chas. S. Moore, one of the foremen at Beardmore & Co.'s tannery, Acton, Ont., was painfully burned recently. A cauldron of hot compound was being heated on a steam heater when the mass, for some unknown reason, exploded. Mr. Moore was standing at his desk writing when the boiling mass flew in all directions. Involuntarily he raised his arms to save his face. The back of his head and neck, one ear and both elbows and wrists were badly burned. Fortunately his face escaped from being burned.

J. A. McLaren, of Toronto, has returned home after spending a pleasant holiday in New York and Atlantic City. He was accompanied by Mrs. McLaren.

G. D. Jefferson has gone to Wolfville, N.S., where he has opened a shoe business. He served nineteen months in the army, eleven of which he spent in England and was honorably discharged for physical disability.

Charles N. Clark, a well known and highly respected resident of Fredericton, N.B., died recently at his home in Brunswick street. He was in his seventy-eighth year. In early life he was a manufacturer of footwear and later opened up a retail shoe store. He retired from business about eighteen years ago.

C. M. Haist, shoe retailer, James street, Hamilton, who was operated upon a few days ago for appendicitis, is making good progress toward recovery.

E. W. A. O'Dell, of Hamilton, general organizer of the Boot & Shoe Workers' Union, who has been confined to his house with illness for the past few days, is able to be around again.

W. A. Hamilton, of the W. B. Hamilton Shoe Co., Toronto, was a recent visitor to Montreal, as well as W. V. Eccleston, of the T. Eaton Co., Toronto.

Oliver Tetrault, of the Tetrault Shoe Mfg. Co., Montreal, has gone on a hunting trip to the wilds of the Laurentian Mountains with a large party, and expects to be away about ten or twelve days.

The appointment of Lieut.-Col. John I. McLaren as Administrative Commandant of Exhibition Camp, Toronto, for the purpose of routine and administrative business, being responsible for discipline, sanitation, interior economy and policing, is announced in camp orders by General Logie. Col. McLaren, in addition to his new duties, remains as O. C. the 1st Depot Battalion, 1st Central Ontario Regiment. He is a brother of J. A. MacLaren, of McLaren & Dallas, wholesale shoes, Toronto.

A very attractive shoe display window was installed recently at E. G. Thompson's, Blenheim, Ont. The exhibit consisted of "Classic," "London Lady," "Regal," and "McPherson," and as each of the firms furnished pretty cards, G. Nichol, who has charge of the footwear department, put in a decidedly striking window which resulted in considerably increased trade on the many neat fall models shown in a variety of colors.

John Dunbar, of Scott-Chamberlain, Limited, London, Ont. spent the past week in Montreal on business.

The members of the Horseshoe Hunt Club left this week on their annual deer hunting expedition near Dwight, which is several miles north of Huntsville. This club is a well-known, historic organization of nimrods and is conducted on a thorough business basis. Among the members, who are enjoying the outing this year are Hon. E. J. Davis, president of the Davis Leather Co., Newmarket, Elmer Davis, of A. Davis & Son, Kingston, and Fred Underhill, of Underhill's, Limited, Barrie. They all expect to return with a full quota of deer.

George F. Hamilton, of F. L. Hamilton & Son, shoe retailers, Galt, Ont., has been elected secretary of the Galt Curling Club for the coming year.

At the last regular meeting of the Toronto Shoe Repairers' Association considerable important business was transacted. Several new members were received, and the prospects for an active winter's campaign are very bright. Some trade problems which have been hanging fire for a long time have been satisfactorily adjusted, and the question of shoe polishes is now being taken up. It is probable that a polish may be prepared and put on the market under the direction of the Association, but this has not been decided as yet. Several songs were rendered during the evening by Messrs. Burnill, Butterworth and Smallwood, and addresses were delivered by President Chas. Robertson and others. Arrangements are being made for a progressive euchre party at an early date.

FEATURING REGAL IN-STOCK SERVICE

The Regal Shoe Co., of Toronto, have just issued a very attractive and artistic in-stock catalogue setting forth the superior facilities of the firm in this department. They have centred on twelve splendid shoes for men and boys designed to satisfy every requirement of those who want the best. Such a service enables the retailer to obtain Regal lines when he wants them and to clean up his profits quickly and at just the right time. Some of the lasts which are carried in stock are the "Banker," the "Pall-Mall," the "Briton," the "Penn," the "Clog" and the "Belmont." Stock numbers, sizes and widths are all given and at the back is an index giving the name, stock number and page, together with several detachable order post cards ready for mailing. These cards have been largely used and are so convenient that they can be filled out at a moment's notice. The Regal Shoe Co., report that the new catalogue has already resulted in an exceptionally large business for their in-stock department.

Another innovation is a series of illustrated leaflets containing the name of the last and giving stock number, leathers, etc., which have been issued. These are sent out by the firm to lists of customers that may be forwarded by any "Regal" agents. This service has been taken advantage of by many retailers, and the enterprise of the company in this respect has been warmly commended.

Corsets and Arches

Being a practical illustration of the supporting principles of both as applied to shoes.

CORSETS are typical of all embracing supporting qualities—while the arch in architecture is one of the standbys of all construction engineers.

The Corset Arch-Support is one of the out-standing features of all Tally-Ho Shoes. This device gives a welcome rigidity to what has been heretofore one of the weakest parts of a shoe. It prevents the arch from falling—and is a welcome addition to those whose arches have already fallen—as it does away with the clumsy, high-priced arches that are inserted after the shoe is made.

The Corset Arch Support

This device as shown in the illustration, is built in the shoe. Its truss construction supports the arch of the foot with perfection. It has the required elasticity to allow the muscles and tendons of the foot to perform their functions in an absolutely natural manner, and still has the strength to prevent the bones from being forced into an unnatural position by the weight of the body.

It is a preventive and an after aid in the majority of foot troubles.

YOUR customers will like this feature when it is made known to them. For — the number of men who are suffering from fallen arches is surprising. This is a fact brought out by the medical examinations of those who have reported under the Military Service Act.

In fact, statistics show that there is a great increase in foot troubles, with fallen arches largely in the majority.

Tally-ho Shoes

Tally-Ho exclusive features are these:

1. Tally-Ho Corset Arch Support — built into every shoe.
2. Tally-Ho 2 in 1 Cushion Sole — an important feature.
3. The Bull Dog Out-sole — better wearing than either rubber or leather — waterproof — flexible — non-slip — guaranteed service — finishes like leather.
4. Authentic styles — originated in American Tally-Ho Shop.
5. No-jar Rubber Heel — springy — resilient — pure rubber.
6. Sani-tex Health Lining — supplied with kid shoes.

You cannot afford to overlook a shoe with so many good talking and selling points. Ask your jobber about Tally-Ho—or ask us.

HELP WIN THE WAR

DO we mean business? Are we prepared to put up or be shut up? The supreme test of our earnestness, especially of those who have to remain at home in this great conflict, is presented in the opportunity to subscribe to the "Victory Loan." It calls for the very utmost all of us can do in providing the sinews of war for the Allies and especially for the gallant boys who represent us on the battlefield of civilization in Europe. No man should require urging in such a matter as this. It is his country's call of dire necessity and no one but those in the secret counsels of the nation can understand what financial help means to the "Mother of Nations" just at this juncture. We are asked to lend, not to give. We are asked to back our country's note in absolute certainty that we will get our money back with interest in due season.

The loan is more important now than our business for it involves our continuance in business. Great Britain is compelled, like any ordinary debtor, to purchase her necessities from those who lend her money. She is forced to buy millions of dollars worth of goods from the United States in spite of the fact that she would naturally prefer buying from her own flesh and blood and helping those who are mingling their blood with hers in the cause of world democracy. The War Loan means in ordinary terms "Lend me the money to buy your goods and thus give me time to pay for what I need and I will take all you can sell."

It will be a serious day for Canada if the immense export trade that has grown during the past three years to such tremendous proportions, be cut off or materially lessened. It is the spending of this money in Canada that has made our wonderful prosperity. Our farmers, our artisans, our manufacturers have all participated in the immense expenditures of British money that have flowed into the channels of commerce in Canada.

We already feel the effects of a lull in the demand for munitions which will, without doubt, be followed by the damming up of the flow of Canadian products to Europe in the next two or three months. Our statesmen and our best financial and business brains have been earnestly devoted to this serious problem and the only way out seems to be the advancing of sufficient funds or the establishing of adequate credit to ensure the continuance in some degree of these expenditures. In other words, the "Victory Loan" is to enable our kin across the sea to continue doing business as usual. The falling off in our export trade and its transference to the United States means that the circulation of money in Canada will be reduced by that much. There will be a cessation of labor, a reduction of wages and a lessened capacity to purchase which will make itself felt in the retail trade almost immediately, if we are to judge from past experience. A subscription to the "Victory Loan," therefore, means lending a customer on good security, the money to buy goods from you.

There are other ways we can help business just now in Canada and none is more important than buying everything we can that is produced or made in Canada. Every dollar spent upon Canadian products means the retaining of so much money in Canada to perform its mission in promoting and establishing your business. Every dollar sent out of the country, except for raw materials that we cannot produce, is a blow at Canadian prosperity at this critical time. If ever there was a time when "Made in Canada" meant anything it is to-day, because every dollar kept in Canada helps to win the war.

If you have never given thought to this question, sit down now and figure out the result if we fail in this greatest enterprise we have ever engaged in. Buy War Bonds if you have to borrow the money to do it. The banks are prepared to help to this end.

Build Your Business by Genuine Service

Keep to the Front Your Style Offerings—Potent Factors in the Fight for Trade are Courteous Attention, Personal Favors and Comfortable Fittings—Review all the Details of Your Trade to See Wherein it Lacks the Necessary Force and Appeal

A FLOURISHING retail shoe business, no matter how large, has like all other permanent successes, been built up from a small beginning. It has not expanded to its present proportions in a night, a month or a year.

Back of it all there has been a well defined policy or concerted course of action which, when followed consistently, has carried trade with it. Do you ever pause to calmly review and analyze your business methods, see wherein they are lacking, or on what points they excel? In business building, like in good stock keeping and profitable buying, there must be a process of elimination. Incompetency and negligence, indifference and indolence, oversight and mistakes must be cast aside, for they are the trees that should be cut down and cast into the fire as bearing no financial fruit.

Actually tons of matter have been written on the question of scientific salesmanship, and while the principles laid down in such articles do much to increase efficiency in selling it is still an unknown quantity that is the means of creating many sales and bringing customers back to your store. If the average shoe retailer were asked the question, "Why do your customers buy of you?" most could not give a definite and comprehensive answer. Having opened a store and gone to the labor of choosing a stock he has hazily conceived the idea that the neighborhood owes him a living.

Better Service a Factor

There are several reasons for the repeated visits of customers—better shoes, thorough service, correct and comfortable fitting and good values. To be a success among the many failures and half-failures, the business of retailing footgear must be remarkable for one of these features. The dealer may exist—perhaps prosper for a time—by acquiring an average merit in all. Customers may drift in from no special cause, meet with the perfunctory politeness that is just sufficient to keep them from being offended, and return because it is convenient to return. But will it require any great stroke of value or diplomacy to divert them into another store?

The secret of growth in a retail shoe store lies in providing some remarkable feature that will make the store worth remembering—some bit of service or value that will hold the many customers against any ordinary counter attraction.

What feature to concentrate on is the problem.

The basis of ultimate success in shoe selling is service plus actual intrinsic value of the lines offered for sale.

Timeliness of style has a wonderfully powerful appeal. Let a man, and more particularly a woman, be sure that the shoes you handle are smart in appearance, fine fitters, pleasing in pattern—neat in finish and bearing every evidence of good shoemaking and you will be the subject of grateful memories. Therefore, completeness and freshness of stock is an all important factor. If customers go elsewhere for lack of something to buy at your store you cannot expect their patronage.

The matter of price, though a potent factor in the fight for trade, is something beyond the province of abstract advice. Prices must be ample to repay your honest work and they must be low enough to face competition. We can only suggest that the small amount that represents your profit can be increased with no great hurt to your customer's pocketbook. The actual influence of price in repeat sales does not justify the profit cutting that is altogether too prevalent in many centres to-day.

Making Friends for Your Store

But the great power in gaining and holding competitors' customers is service—service genuine and unremitting. There are thousands of persons scattered throughout this broad land who are convinced that one shoe retailer, and only one, can properly supply their needs. They continually return to his store in spite of all changes of time, and when they move to another town they order of him by mail. Perhaps you have one or two such among your own clientele. Tracing back to the cause of their loyalty you will find that at one time you were able to render them some little special service—something cheerfully exchanged or a special favor done. As a result you have in them perpetual friends and constant advisers. They are proud to say: "I always buy my shoes at Blank's."

Make "Service" Your Policy

Such customers as these, converted from casual visitors to loyal friends, make an enduring business, and the store that grows is the one that has impressed the greatest number of chance customers with its generosity or careful salesmanship. You have seen in isolated cases the effects of special attention. Imagine, if you can, the benefits that would accrue if it were adopted as a lasting policy.

Through service you hold business and gain business.

Keep to the front in your style offerings. If your competitor shows new styles in fall or winter footwear models while you are working off last season's stock, his service is better than yours.

Always deliver goods without protest. Where it is remotely possible have a regular delivery service. This is one of the small attentions that makes a lasting impression and the prompter the delivery the deeper the impression.

Some Starve Stocks—Others Load Up

The Successful Shoe Dealer is the One Who Strikes the Happy Medium—Different Types of Customers to be Catered to—How Theorizing Works Out Beautifully, But in Practice is Misleading—Some Helpful Hints on Aggressive Salesmanship

Over-buying is surely over-stocking, but "starving" the stock to just the right point is an art known to but very few.

The housewife who plans just turkey enough for a good Thanksgiving dinner for her own family, and then unexpectedly has a few more come to dinner, so that there is not quite enough, would feel very badly. The ambitious retailer who is trying to starve his stock and loses sale after sale of good-profit-paying shoes because he has not bought enough of them, feels very much worse, and the chances are that the next season he gets caught the other way by over-buying.

THE theoretical way of doing the shoe business is beautiful and absolutely simple: All you have to be is a good style picker and then pick just enough. One successful theorist will tell you not to buy any extreme sizes—that is, the very large or very small ones—and the first customer you have when the season opens wants either one or the other, and you haven't got them.

What do you think they say about your store?

Another will tell you that a line of shoes that is not worth stocking in every size and width is not worth stocking at all. What have you got to say about that?

Still another will tell you that there is no demand any more for a staple line of shoes, and that you must buy only novelties. What are you going to do or say to the well-poised woman who wants a medium-shaped toe and sensible heel shoe, and you can show her only the narrow toe and the Louis heel one?

Each one of these theorists will tell you, when you complain, that you have lost business by following his theory, "Well, let the other fellow have that business. You are better off without it."

Well, that may be all right; but if the other fellow follows the same advice, there will be a whole lot of people that will have to go barefoot until some bright man comes along that has sense enough to see that there is a big chance for a real shoe store to make money, by catering to people with big feet and those with small ones; to those who want stylish shoes and the ones who desire comfort. And just as soon as that store is started and stocked on those lines, just as sure will it take a lot of customers from the store that is starving its stock or trimming its lines too closely.

Of course, location enters largely into what kind of shoes to buy and just how to buy them. I have in mind a store that hardly touches a staple or common-sense style. Only the extremes in styles are shown. I know another that deals entirely in conservative and foot-form shoes. And both houses do a successful business.

Then, there is a third one in the same city that caters both to the stylish customer and the one who buys for comfort, and has a magnificent business; and so it seems that a man's location should be the key or guide to his buying. But, on general principles, I think there is as much money lost in under-buying or starving the stock as there is in over-stocking.

One thing certain, you cannot sell what you do not buy, and if you overbuy, you can dispose of your surplus. If you go at it in the right way and at the right time, the loss ought not to be so serious.

I think one great trouble with the shoe retailer to-day is that he does not take his loss early enough, or he does not cut the price deep enough to move his stock, until the shoes he has to sell are badly shopworn or out of style.

Take the styles of this past season for example. In my judgment, the man who had a stock of 7-inch top boots of fancy combinations who did not hammer them or cut the price on them deep enough to move them right now cannot realize fifty cents, on the dollar for them later on. Then why not sell them instead of carrying them over—and, to do so, cut the price deep enough to move them?

Some one will say, "What is the use, then, of carrying that kind of shoe at all?" My answer is, get profit enough when the line is new, as you are almost sure to face a loss on some of them, and by carrying them you got the reputation of being up-to-date.

Three Types of Customers

I think most of us have about three types of customers for whom we must provide shoes. First, the breezy, wideawake customer who always wants new things, and in most cases is perfectly willing to pay the price for them. He is the faddist.

Second, the one who wants more or less of style, but insists on comfort, and is of the larger class. He is the conservative.

Third, the customer who wants comfort first, comfort last and service all the time. He is the matter-of-fact kind.

The buyer for a department store, or a store of his own, who is versatile enough to grasp the demands of these three types, and then keep the assortment down for each one of them to the lowest point, will not have a whole lot of surplus stock for the mark-down sale, and he will not lose much business throughout the season.

Here are a few suggestions which may help in selecting your stock:

Do not try to cover every size and every width in Succeeding in Business in Small Centres

Conditions for Success are Easier Than in Large Centres—Trouble With Average Town Retailer is He Lacks Inspiration and Enterprise—Does Not Know How to Buy or Attract People by His Advertising

“WELL, small store, small office, small desk, small advertisements, small man, small hat, everything small except the stock; spring lines on the shelves August 1st and winter shoes and rubbers on the shelves March 1st.

“O pshaw, what’s the use of trying to build a shoe business in a small town? Not much, if any, when one-half your stock is passe, when the window displays have not been changed in a month, when your advertisement in the newspaper, if you have one, has become useless and you are forever and ever only thinking of the chance in the big town.

“If the chance came in the big town would you know how to handle it? You say, ‘yes.’ You are entirely mistaken. For you conditions for success are easier in the small town than in the large city because there is less competition.

“In the days I have been in the shoe business I have come to believe that the small man lacks enterprise. He’s not half alive and he even doesn’t know that. He doesn’t know how to inspire or attract people by his advertising. He doesn’t know how to buy. He doesn’t know how to plan.

“I knew a man who started, like thousands of others, in the shoe business in a small town thirty years ago, hoping for success, but with absolutely no plans of how to do business and he lost nearly every dollar he invested in it. Why? To console himself (you know misery always likes company), he would make periodical visits to his competitors and they, like him, would agree that business was very dull, and hoping when the weather got warm that business would increase, or when the snow came, that the same result would happen. Those small men are never prepared for either.

Prepared Always for Change

“I am told the leading restaurants in the country are always prepared for any change in the weather. They plan in advance what to do on a hot day and they are prepared to serve you accordingly. Now if this small dealer to whom we call attention had his stock, inside and outside of his store, and his advertising plans prepared in advance, what would happen? Sufficient results would come to produce enterprise, new life and new inspirations; and it appears to me he would begin a profitable career which would not only make him successful in the little town, but in a larger field, likewise.

“There is absolutely no standard set of rules to follow to achieve mercantile success. You cannot buy it, but you can get an inspiration from any good convention of shoe merchants that will live in your life as long as you ought to live, and if you get the right kind of inspiration you will live longer than some of your competitors want you to.

“Now if there are no standard rules, there are various viewpoints to consider. A Frenchman at Niagara Falls said, ‘Wonderful, beautiful, marvelous, magnificent. What an inspiration for an artist.’ An Irishman who was near the Frenchman, said, ‘Be japers, what a place for a sawmill.’ There are various viewpoints, but I maintain, with proper enthusiasm, with push, enterprise and common sense, the Frenchman would make a success, and likewise the Irishman.

“If you consult the mercantile reports regarding small town shoe retailing conditions you will find the majority of dealers are rated from $300 to $500, with a credit standing of double D, double O, X, Y, Z. Now I have in mind an acquaintance who struggled with all the horrors of daily running behind for some few years. Why? He was so small he could not see the opportunity in the small town, but imagined he could see the chance in the large one, so he just waited for trade. He sold out, having enough left to buy railroad tickets for his wife and daughter to the house of his mother-in-law. He had saved a little of his capital, but he had lost considerable and also a few years’ time and labor.

Transforming a Small Man

“Now I come to the point which I hope may be an inspiration and of future service to this convention. This man began to think (and it’s never too late to do this), and to plan and scheme. He sought the advice of successful merchants. You know if you go into an enterprising store and compliment the proprietor and ask his advice, he will always invite you into his office and you will come away with an inspiration. We read about conversion and miracles, especially thinking the latter is a lost art, but as sure as the sun rises, both happened to this man and in twenty-five years he has been transformed from a little, insignificant shoe dealer in that little, small town, under those small conditions, to a man who to-day is worth thousands upon thousands of dollars.

“Let me tell you how he did it. To begin with, he raised capital sufficient to pay for his merchandise when it came due, and I’m only going to use just one buying illustration to show how he planned. Over twenty years ago he went to B—— one day, doing so on the advice of a friend in a small town who was a shoe jobber. Now watch the inspiration and the results of that instruction.

“He arrived in B——, entered the office of a shoe manufacturer who sold the jobbing trade exclusively, as they did in those days, and inquired for floor goods. He was shown twenty cases of a shoe named the ‘Mohawk’ which was jobbing at $1.60. In an instant this man knew the shoe, for he had paid the makers $1.60 a pair for many cases of them, in that little former small town, where he was doing business in his little, small way. Well, he said, 'What does the firm pay for this shoe?' '$1.45.' 'What's the trouble?' 'Tag made out wrong; heel and shank are black, but otherwise all right.' 'How much for the lot?' '$1.20, regular discount,' and that man's lack of method in doing business was such that he didn't know how much seven off was. Now, gentlemen, seven off from $1.20 is $1.11.

"Without making any further reference to any other future days that man returned home, not a small retailer, although in a small town, but a man in the small town. Why? Because of an inspiration, because he saw a chance of future success and no possible chance for anything else. He could give his customers for $1.75 a $2.00 article and make a profit. The realization of this fact caused him to change the size of his advertisement, it changed the character of his advertisement, it changed the enthusiasm of his advertisement, and it changed the entire atmosphere of that little store. I am not making any reference to regular goods; I know he must have them, but carrying and handling them did not need the enterprise, because there is less profit in them and the responsibility for getting rid of them proportionately greater.

"That gentleman's little, small store in a little, small town began to be talked about and the people began going there. He had been converted. A miracle had happened. If you are on the right road and you know it, you cannot help make a success of a little store in a little town, you can make a success of a half dozen little stores in little towns, or in a dozen big stores in big towns—and just what happened to my friend.

"He began to carry a small jobbing stock and he bought from the trustees a half dozen stores with the fixtures thrown in and the stock at about fifty per cent. In every instance he has made the stores pay about $2,000 each per annum, thus making $12,000 a year. Multiply that sum by twenty-five years and you have $300,000 made from retailing in small towns, by a small man, yes, one who was always complaining about small town conditions, but who, since he became converted, is now very enthusiastic to recommend them the small town as a good place to make money."

Here is afforded a splendid view of the booth of Wm. Hockin, shoe dealer of Wallaceburg, Ont., who made a representative and imposing display of Life-Buoy rubbers and various lines of leather shoes at the Fall Fair in his town.

SHOE MERCHANT SHOULD BE EXPERT IN FITTING

If He Does Not Know His Business He Should Not be Allowed to Sell Footwear, Declares Mr. Taplin—Takes Exception to Various Types of Shoes, and Says Some Day the Public Will Understand Foot Troubles, and Will Demand Scientific Fitting

Editor SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL:

SIR,—I have read with considerable interest the article appearing in your September 15th number by Mr. C. H. Brown, of Boston, in which he has made a brilliant introduction of just another attempt to put some more impossible foot appliances, in the form of wrongly constructed shoes, on to an ignorant public, through the agency of retail shoe dealers. I am, of course, referring to his "Arch Preserver Shoe."

It seems almost incredible that a gentleman having such facilities at his command as "the earnest and untiring co-operation and practically unlimited resources and facilities of what are generally conceded to be the best organized and equipped shoe factories in the world" would fail so utterly in producing a shoe that best meets the need of the natural foot (for he says it is not a shoe for cripples), providing his efforts were attended with reasonable honesty of purpose to serve the public. What has organization or equipment to do with the designing of a last on which to make a proper shoe? Neither possessing knowledge of the anatomic construction of the foot, nor the desire to serve the best interests of the public, so far as preservation of the foot is concerned, has ever been charged against the kind of factories he must refer to.

Stick of Wood vs. Human Feet

I venture to say his comparison of a stick of wood to the human foot does not do him justice. He treats the foot as though it were stiff, while, as a matter of fact, it is wholly and solely made up of ligaments, muscles and bones, and is nothing more or less than a system of springs and cushions. This system of springs is there to assist nature (or the joints) in absorbing the shock of step, and works in every respect as other springs. "Raise the floor" to fill up the natural hollows of these foot springs and you have successfully removed all spring from your walk, and each step results in a shock to the joints and system. The springs are no longer springs, and the foot becomes a stiff inflexible thing attached to the leg and serves more as a hoof than a foot.

The modern stiff-shanked shoe has served as a weakener of feet for ages, but where these only stopped the development of the muscles supporting the longitudinal arch, and interfered with the action of the toes and the flexion of the foot, Mr. Brown comes along, and with one of his five new ideas fills up the hollow of the remaining arch (the transverse) and the foot is a foot no longer. A plaster cast would serve the same purpose. It is common knowledge that through the wearing of the high-heeled, narrow-toed shoes, feet have become so mutilated and weak that, like a drowning man, the public will grab at anything that is likely to produce a momentary relief, and without doubt the "Arch Preserver" shoe will sell, and Mr. Brown will have plenty of testimonials. Had Mr. Brown introduced his shoe as a panacea for feet broken down beyond any hope of repair, there would have been reason and justice in his claims, while now there is none. He has, with his "Arch Preserver" shoe, simply made worse a form of shoe construction that has always been bad.

The Foot is Like a Spring

The foot should be compared to a spring instead of a stick. Jump on a spring with one end up and it goes down softly, jump off and it immediately restores itself. It doesn't break in either operation. A foot has that same power of going down under weight and raising again when the weight is removed.

The cut shows a pair of feet spreading under heavy burden. What would these feet do if shod in an "Arch Preserver" shoe? They couldn't go down, consequently it would be impossible for them to function properly. Remove the possibility of functioning, and you have removed the uses for which a foot is so wonderfully adapted. If it was intended that the arch should not go down under weight, it would, without doubt, have been made solid on the inside as it is on the out. Which it is not.

All Shoes Not Short Heeled

Mr. Brown treads on safe ground when he condemns the short heel, and his comparison in that instance is a just one. But he errs when he assumes that all shoes are short heeled. In a properly constructed shoe the foot would serve, as in the Indian moccasin, the Chinese shoe or the Roman sandal, all of which he approves.

The only shank required in shoe construction is sufficient leather (not steel) on which to sew the upper leather and to hold the forward part of the sole and the heel together.

Do Not Disturb Normal Relationship

Dr. Hoffman, member of the American Orthopedic Association and lecturer, says: "It is very significant that in one hundred and eighty-six pairs of primitive feet examined, I did not find a single foot associated with the symptoms of weakness so characteristic and common in adult shoe-wearing feet, which are weakened by the restraint the shoe exerts over function." He also says "The foot mechanism is subject to the same physical laws that govern all machines and will suffer injury if the normal relationship of its structures is disturbed, if their movement upon one another is interfered with or if forced to assume an attitude that is disadvantageous to the functioning of its muscles."

Major (Dr.) Munson, president of the Army Shoe Board and Director of Field Service School for Army Officers, Fort Leavenworth, Kan., says of arch supports (which would also include any style of "Arch Preserver" shoe having the rigid built up shank):

"Above all things, patent devices intended to support the foot arch should be avoided by soldiers with a tendency to weak or flat feet. These arch supports may give a sensation of relief when worn, but they relieve the symptom of discomfort at the expense of making the underlying cause of the latter much worse, for they splint and restrict the use of the very muscles upon the development and strengthening of which the regaining and the preservation of foot arch depends. Such arch supports are impossible in military marching, and once habituated to them, the wearer's feet are so much weakened that he is helpless without them."

Another authority of eminence, Prof. Nutt, says in speaking of weak muscles and supports, "The defective muscles should be made strong by properly selected exercise rather than weakened by props, which take away the work that the muscles ought to do."

Any types of "Arch Preserver" shoes do not permit of the necessary action to create strong muscles. To use Mr. Brown's own words, "the special patented shank construction amounts to a solid wedge slipped under the foot from heel to ball, thus preserving for the foot the firm unyielding bearing which it gets when imposed upon the floor without a shoe."

If it only did this, the "Arch Perserver" shoe would, indeed, be a blessing. But it does more. In walking, the bottom of the foot necessarily stops going down when the floor is reached, but the balance of the foot continues to settle until the shock of step has been quietly and gently absorbed. With the "Arch Preserver" shoe the whole foot stops at one and the same time. What takes care of the shock?

Unless for profiteering one can scarcely understand these continuous attempts to improve on the anatomical structure of the foot by stiff, patented appliances or boots. The construction of the foot is beyond perfecting. It is perfect. If flexible, easy-action shoes designed like feet were worn by all, feet, like hands, would experience no pains or aches, I say take away these cursed appliances and twisted shoes, and leave the feet alone.

The fluent, convincing manner in which Mr. Brown talks may result in selling his "Arch Preserver" shoes, but some day not far distant the buying public will understand the "ins and outs" of foot troubles, and then foot props and foot bindings; and all the sufferings and ills of the body directly traceable to them, will be no more, and the public will demand the same scientific professional fitting of feet that the seriousness of the situation calls for.

Shoe men will receive diplomas for possessing knowledge of how to protect the foot from deformity, and none will be permitted to practise the art without this diploma. Shoe lasts will be standardized. The construction of shoes will be controlled by law. In this way only will the public be protected from the hundred thousand and one ideas in respect to the foot. Twisted one way this year; another next year; in or out; up or down; any old way so as to produce something new and novel.

Shoe merchants, like doctors of medicine and dentists, should be controlled by law, and liable for prosecution for mal-practice when it can be proven that through ignorance, or malice aforethought, they have crippled a man, or made him less efficient through wrong shoeing. Responsibility should rest on the shoe man. If he doesn't know his business, don't let him sell shoes. The public should be protected.

Yours truly,

V. E. TAPLIN,

President and Manager, Natural Tread Shoes Limited.

JUDGMENT DELIVERED IN LEATHER CASE

Seldom in a judgment handed down from a high court bench has such a measure of censure and condemnation been delivered against a member of a company as was given by Justice Middleton in disposing of the case of the Bank of Nova Scotia vs. Salter, says a despatch from Hamilton, Ont. All through the evidence it was forcibly brought out that the defendant in the case had been the victim of an unscrupulous person connected with the now defunct Canadian Oak Leather Co., of Woodstock, of which Percy Thornton was the managing director; his brother, E. B. Thornton, being the secretary. So subtly was the defrauding process engineered, the secretary himself did not realize that an injustice had been deliberately perpetrated until the case was launched. The victim, J. H. Salter, is a well-known business man of Hamilton, and was inveigled in his present unhappy circumstances while a keen sufferer from rheumatism, trusting to the honesty of others in the transaction of the business of the firm. The judgment of Justice Middleton tells the story unmistakably, being as follows:

"In securing this result," Mr. Justice Middleton says, "statements were made by Thornton as to the amount of stock on hand and contracts under way, which permitted the advance from the banker's standpoint. In point of fact these statements were untrue and Thornton had been guilty of an extensive series of frauds, resulting in the entire depletion of stock, and had secured the acquiescence of Schultz in his conduct by threatening that he would have him interned as an alien enemy if he did not keep silence. Relying upon the guarantees held and securities upon the stock and assignment of moneys owing on book debts and the discount of customer's paper, advances were made up to $80,000."

Lewis & Schwenger, attorneys for Mr. Salter, announce that they are not yet done with the case, having determined to appeal. Although the amount, $50,300, is what defendant is held responsible for on the bonds of the company, it is said that when the individual responsibility is proportionately distributed the amount will be in the neighborhood of $30,000.

SHOE STORE HOLDS PUMPKIN SHOW

In the last issue of the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL an interesting report appeared with reference to a successful potato show which was held by the retail department of the Amherst Boot and Shoe Co., Amherst, N.S. Now another original display has been featured in Woodstock, Ont., where Knechtel's shoe store conducted a pumpkin show, which was an unqualified success and aroused much interest and enthusiasm. Five prizes of good footwear were offered for five different classes of pumpkins. The first prize was for the most perfect pumpkin; the second prize for the largest pumpkin; the third, for the most awkward, freak pumpkin; the fourth for the one of the finest color and the fifth for the longest shape. The pumpkins were placed on view in the window until the awards were made, after which they were donated to a worthy charity.

WOMEN WANT REFORM IN SHOES

A Footwear Reform League has been formed by several women in Toronto, the object being to encourage the development of the normal foot. Letters have been received asking that the league turn its attention to the necessity for having stockings, as well as shoes, long enough to fit the feet.

At the last meeting of the league held in the Central Y.M.C.A., Toronto, under the Chairmanship of Mrs. Hamilton, the following resolution was passed:—

"Realizing the value to our country of individuals with well balanced and normally developed bodies;

"And being convinced that the foot is an essentially important part of the anatomy;

"And knowing that through lack of information the foot has been neglected, and its natural functions abused, although it is admittedly as important to efficiency as the hand, and as finely adapted to its particular function as the eye or ear;

"And believing that individuals suffer in health and efficiency to an almost incredible extent through wrong treatment of the feet, and that many diseases are directly traceable to foot deformities, caused by tight and wrongly shaped boots;

"Therefore this association is formed for the purpose of educating the public—men, women and especially children—to a better understanding of the foot, and for encouraging them in allowing its full and natural development."

Mrs. John Sears has been appointed secretary of the newly-formed league.

PLEASING PRESENTATION TO ABLE ANGLERS

The two valuable cups awarded by the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL to the champion fishermen in the shoe and leather trades for making the greatest catch were presented on the afternoon of November 1st to Messrs. Narcisse Gagnon and H. C. Parker, of Montreal. The interesting event took place at the wholesale warehouse of Jas. Robinson, McGill street, Montreal, in the presence of a number of members of the trade. The recipients were thoroughly delighted with the silverware so emblematic of their prowess, perseverance and ability in piscatorial pursuits.

In a neat speech James Robinson, who came all the way from Pointe Claire to attend the function, spoke of the pleasure it afforded him to award, on behalf of the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL, such valuable premiums to two worthy exponents of the angling art in the persons of Messrs. Gagnon and Parker. He stated they were to be highly complimented on what they had accomplished, and that they deserved some kind of a cross of merit in addition to the handsome trophies. Why? These gentlemen were not only excellent fishermen, but were doing something substantial to relieve the high cost of living by contributing materially to Hon. Mr. Hanna's fish food campaign.

After Mr. Robinson's remarks, which were well received, Mr. Gagnon made a grateful and appreciative reply, as also did Mr. Parker, both of whom expressed their pleasure at the beautiful premiums and announced their willingness to defend their titles next year against all comers. Three hearty cheers were given for the successful anglers and a vote of thanks was tendered to Jas. Robinson for making the presentation and to Geo. Robinson for his kindness and trouble in placing his office at the disposal of the gathering. The winners were warmly congratulated and a happy and successful function closed with an ovation for the victors.

TRAVELERS RE-ELECT THEIR OFFICERS

The Ontario Commercial Travelers' Association, at the closing meeting of the year, held in London, Ont., elected all officers by acclamation. The retiring president is C. W. McGuire, of London. Those chosen for the ensuing year were: President, J. H. Grant, London; first vice-president, G. Moreley Adams, London; second vice-president, E. N. Hanna, London; third vice-president, John Lennox, Hamilton; directors—F. E. Harley, A. E. Cowley, J. H. Laughton, R. U. Kingswood, A. W. Howe, W. B. Screation, A. E. Ferte, London; C. E. Secord, Brantford; George W. Fulman, Chatham; R. B. Griffith, Hamilton; J. T. Grant, Kitchener; W. D. Martin, Stratford; George T. Ayerst, St. Thomas; W. Lind, Toronto; N. E. Sherwood, Woodstock.

The O.C.T.A. at present holds war bonds to the extent of $118,000, and it was decided at the meeting to invest in the Victory Loan to the limit of available funds.

GREATEST DANGERS—WASTE AND LOSS MOTION

Frank Stockdale Places Some Strong Vital Facts on General Unscientific Retailing Methods of To-Day Before Representative Business Men—If You Know Where Your Profits are You Know Where to Put Your Efforts and Where Your Losses Are

FOUR excellent lectures of a practical character were delivered before Toronto business men recently by Frank Stockdale, who is a widely known expert in merchandising methods. This gifted authority on retail problems was brought to the Queen City by the Toronto Ad Club and the attendance was very gratifying. Mr. Stockdale answered many questions, threw new light on various problems and drove home some ordinary, commonplace truths in a new and startling way—truths that set his hearers thinking by his original and effective method of presentation. The speaker was plain and practical, pointed and pertinent at all times.

Mr. Stockdale regretted the lack of business science to-day so far as the retail trade is concerned. He stated that he was ashamed that there was no science of business and that it was largely a case of every man for himself in the retail game. Many failures, he opined, could have been averted if the retail business had been brought nearer the status of a profession and he thought too much emphasis was laid on salesmanship at the expense of the merchandising end. Mr. Stockdale warned his hearers that the cost of running a business to-day had increased enormously, that profits were smaller and it was the patriotic duty of every merchant to give his best attention to his affairs and avoid loose methods in buying, selling and accounting. Mr. Stockdale dealt at some length with the problem of the rising cost of business and said that to-day it cost twice as much to run any business as it did a quarter of a century ago. The present rate of increase was abnormal and he did not counsel anyone taking it as a basis for permanent guidance. While the expense was rising the net profit was really dropping, thanks to the increase in the cost of living. There was an evolution in the kinds of stores and retailing which might be classified, first as the old cross roads general store, second the specialty or one kind store of old type, third the department store, fourth the mail order house and fifth the change store. Mr. Stockdale went into some details to show that the whole success of the last four depended on the management, which he thought the chief problem in the retail game.

Which Kind Are You?

There are many kinds of managers, but the speaker outlined three distinctive types. (1) The fearful manager, who is fearful that the men he is directing will not do the job right, and who, therefore, loads himself down with details. This kind of manager, he said, could not delegate authority and did not usually get very far. The second type was the domineering manager who, he said, was not wanted where brain power was required, though he was all right where he supervised men who worked with their muscles. The third type which was getting the farthest was the expectant manager, who sets a standard and lets others know that he is expecting them to come up to it, reward being given on the basis of results. Mr. Stockdale added that the man who gave him the outline of the latter type of manager was a man who spent over one million dollars annually in advertising.

"We must remember this," said Mr. Stockdale, "that we must eventually come to the civil engineer stage—that we have long since passed beyond the calf path and that the problems of retail merchandising must be figured out with the precision of an engineer's pencil and the sooner we recognize this the better we will be off.

"Many retail merchants are of the 'fearful manager' type, and get lost in the details of their business. The same thing applies to managers in department and chain stores. They forget to look at things in the right aspect. They lose sight of profits and when they do that their chance is lost."

"Whenever you can hire a man to do a thing cheaper than you can do it yourself, and don't do it you are missing an opportunity for growth. There is no rule to allow a man to-day to do $12 a week work and reap $25 a week returns. It does not work out that way in this world.

Frank Stockdale, the merchandizing expert, and Convocation Hall, Toronto, where he spoke to business men.

"There is another thing every man in business must recognize. Unless he can delegate authority in these days of competition, he cannot hope to maintain his end of the competitive struggle."

Do You Watch the Signals?

Driving home this point Mr. Stockdale bluntly put the question to the audience: "Are you the fireman or are you the engineer, the man who watches the signals or are you the man who shovels in the fuel and lets someone else do the directing?"

"Two things we must do in order to make our profits in spite of rising cost, in order to make our profits with the net profit so small, and one of the reasons why we must give so close attention is exemplified in the bigger stores. I know stores whose cost of doing business is 27 per cent. The net marking which is the gross profit is approximately 30 per cent. That store is making 3 per cent. net profit. In the old days there was 17 or 18 cents profit—the merchant could lose 6 cents and still have 12 cents, but what happens if the merchant to-day lost 6 cents? His 3 cents is on the other side of the ledger and whenever profits get small then we have to figure close.

"Two main things to look after are waste and loss motion. Waste which does not consist of any motion at all is seen in business to-day. Waste in stores to-day is in the clerks that are doing nothing and that is small to the waste that is in the merchandise that is doing nothing. It is an easier problem to get the maximum efficiency from merchandise than from the clerk.

"The average merchandise stays on the shelf six months in the United States," said Mr. Stockdale, "which means two turns a year, taking stores of all sizes and kinds, and there we have one of the big and vital problems in merchandising.

"When net profits get down to 3 per cent., and lots of specialty stores run on 3 per cent., we are up against the real proposition in handling figures. The vital question is 'What is the profit on merchandising?' If I know where my profits are, I know where to put my efforts, and I know where my losses are. If I know how to compute my profit on an article, I know how to conduct that business. I know enough about that business to conduct it profitably. I can put my finger on the sore spots."

Mr. Stockdale pointed out that the foundation of all retail business is a knowledge of profits.

Get Down to Principles

Asked to link up the main points of his line of argument as to how the retail merchant can meet competition to-day, Mr. Stockdale stated that the first thing laid down is that "we must get down past the stage of theories and get down to principles. In the second place, the rising cost of doing business is complicated and made so intricate that we must give special attention to figures. In the face of this competition we must recognize that management, real management that studies all phases of retail distribution, must have more of our time, no matter what size store we are running. We must get down to these two principles, i.e., to eliminate all waste in goods and help, and get away from guesswork and have absolute knowledge."

Answering a question in regard to the retailers' influence upon the "high cost of living," Mr. Stockdale replied that the retail merchant was the least to blame for the high cost of living of any person in the world.

A merchant who found a competitor selling the same line of goods cheaper than he could afford to mark them owing to lack of knowledge of the cost of doing business, queried Mr. Stockdale as to his procedure in such a case. The reply was that "if the competition was so great that I could not make any profit I would decide that I should be in some other business. Competition based on ignorance is the hardest to meet," added Mr. Stockdale, "and the merchants who are making the real success do not allow any person to set prices for them."

Chief Cause of Failure

"What in your opinion is the chief cause for failure among retail merchants?" was asked.

Mr. Stockdale laid emphasis on management in making his reply. "The greatest source of failure to keep books, to know about the business, to look after the buying and the market, is because a man tries to do too many small details." Mr. Stockdale added that only one thing was worse than the failure of a man to have at hand figure facts about his business, and that was to have figure facts that were not truthful.

In reply to a question of cutting prices on advertised and non-advertised lines, Mr. Stockdale stated that "the man who cut prices on advertised lines is a pretty wide-awake merchant."

"How about the man starting in business who has not reached the stage where he can live on 3 per cent. net profit?" was asked.

Mr. Stockdale's reply was that 50 per cent. of the retail merchants in the country were getting along without any net profit, their salary being included before a net profit is struck. The speaker was asked to define profit. His answer was that profit "is the reward a merchant gets for doing an exceedingly difficult job a little better than the other fellow can do it."

Benjamin C. Gill, shoe retailer, of Pictou, N.S., has moved into larger quarters two doors east of his present stand. His new store is neat and attractive.

NEWSY NOTES FROM VANCOUVER

One cannot say that the retail shoe trade during the last few weeks has been as encouraging as dealers would wish, although there are a fair number of sales. The volume is much below the average of a few months ago. The quietness is no doubt due to the desire of the public to make their wages go as far as possible, taking into consideration the ever increasing cost of living. Another reason has been the continued fine days. A marked improvement and briskness to purchase will set in with the break up of the weather and some continuous showers.

Mr. Newton and Mr. Smith, of the Fit-Eze store, have dissolved partnership. The store will in future be carried on by Mr. Smith.

The shoe repairers during the past few weeks report quiet times, with a few exceptions. This inactivity is only looked upon as temporary, as several are installing new and larger machinery. W. Britton, of Smyth street, has installed a 16-foot finishing outfit and anticipates adding a stitcher later. W. J. Heads, of Water street, C. Antory, of Commercial drive, S. Nabata, of Granville street, and H. North, of Fraser avenue, have all installed finishing outfits. The latter has now the best equipped repairing shop in South Vancouver.

Cyril Paxton, of B. C. Leather and Findings Co., has joined the Royal Flying Corps and left recently for Toronto.

W. Gibson, of Davie street, is closing his stand to join up. C. Hollister, 16th ave., is leaving for California. H. M. Brown has moved to a new shop on Commercial drive, Broadway.

What might have proved a serious accident occurred on October 14th, as Mrs. Brown, wife of J. T. Brown, Robson street, in crossing Granville street, was knocked down and badly shaken and bruised by a passing auto.

For the future welfare of the returned soldiers the committee of the local association of returned men have under consideration the equipping with all the necessary machinery a shoe repairing shop, with a view to teaching such men as are incapacitated from following their usual occupations the art of shoe repairing. This is no doubt a worthy object, but there are many things to be considered to make it a success. It is hoped that the committee will be composed of several practical men of the trade.

SMART LINES IN EXTREME HIGH CUTS

G. G. Hodges, representing Geo. A. Slater, Limited, Montreal, spent a few days in Toronto recently on business. Mr. Hodges, who has for several years represented his firm in Eastern Ontario, is now looking after the trade in Toronto, Hamilton, St. Catharines and Brantford, in addition to his old ground. Besides their extensive line in men's fine footwear the company is presenting this season a most representative showing in women's high-grade shoes in all the latest lasts and patterns, the display in brown, cherry and gray being particularly strong. Among the new things seen in the samples of the Invictus range this fall is a field service boot, seventeen inches high, made in brown grain calf, with front lacing and riding leg, and elk middle sole; an officer's riding boot with canvas top and leather facing, instep strap and garter strap; a woman's riding boot with patent forepart and gunmetal foxing and leg, carrying an 1 inch heel, and a nurse's boot made of tan willow calf, ten inch top, rubber heel, blucher cut, with drill lined vamp and leather lined counter, and hospital sheeting between the welt and the outer sole, carrying a 12-8 heel.

ONTARIO

TREAT EACH COMPLAINT ON ITS MERITS

Many complaints are without foundation and unfair, and the method of receiving them may confess a liability that does not exist. On the other hand, a customer may have a just cause for complaint and the treatment he receives may anger him so that he will never return, said B. J. Coens, of Chicago, before the Illinois Shoe Retailers.

Many shoemen are accustomed to blame the manufacturer, while others are inclined to throw all the blame on the complaining customer. The proper method is to treat each complaint as a separate case. Listen attentively and examine the article complained of impartially, ask for the necessary information politely, and be just and square with the customer, even against yourself.

A customer came to us with a shoe he had worn three times and said we had a bum lot of shoes. I invited him to take a seat, pulled off his shoe and saw at once the soles of his shoes had been burnt, and told him so, but he said, "Now, you can't hand me that bunk, I have no fire in my house. Our flat is steam heated and I don't put my shoes on the radiator." I then asked if he patronized a street car. He said he did. Then I said, "Isn't it a fact that you put your feet under the seat of the radiator?" He partly agreed with me, but at the same time I could not convince him that that was the way he burned his shoe. I then told him to take his shoe in any store in the city of Chicago, naming a few where he might go, and if their opinion wasn't the same as mine, we would keep him in shoes free of charge for one year. That didn't seem to make much of a hit with him. He said that he could pay for the shoes he wore. I noticed him getting uglier all the time, so sooner than lose his trade, I put on a new pair of bottoms at our expense, and he left the store well satisfied.

We were right in our diagnosis of the trouble, and would have been justified in standing on our rights. Owing, however, to the customer's calling in life and his influence, we deemed it prudent to conciliate, and succeeded in holding his trade, worth more to us than the cost of soling his shoes.

Another customer complained about a tan shoe. It had split across the ball. I looked inside and noticed it was black from perspiration. I told him it was his own fault, and that he would burn any shoe, especially tan leathers. He made an awful kick, and could not see it as I did. After looking over the shoes again, I noticed it was a pair we had closed out a year before and that he had not bought them a short time before, but fifteen months ago. He then tried to get out of it by saying he bought them last summer, and had not worn them very much. I told him the best I could do was to put on an invisible patch, but no patch for him. He said: "I'll sit here until I get a new pair of shoes." Just then one of our boys gave me the wink and I followed him to the rear. He asked me if I didn't remember the man I was waiting on. He said, "Don't do a thing for him—that man comes in every time he wants a pair of shoes, brings in his last year's shoes, and the old man has always given him a $3 rebate on another pair." You folks can realize how I felt about this time, so I told the customer that his claim was unreasonable, and that I would do nothing for him in this instance.

We probably lost an unprofitable customer, but are satisfied that no other retailer would care for his trade.

A customer came in with a pair of shoes that were split across the vamp near the throat seam, which was plainly a fault of the factory. She had worn the shoes about a month. I asked if the shoes had been worth $1.50 to her and she said, "Why, yes." I said, "All right, I'll give you a new pair for $1.50." She said, "Oh, I didn't expect that. I thought I could have them repaired." She went away happy. The next day a girl from her office came in and bought a $12 pair of shoes on the strength of that allowance.

Now, in this case, while we did more than the customer expected, we were square and did not lose by being square.

We insist on our salesmen studying the customer's foot and giving them as near as possible the right last. We try also to make it a point to use good judgment in the selection of leathers for different feet. For instance, a customer with perspiring feet, as you all know, should wear vici kid, We also try to sell custom and flat English lasts long enough. Lack of toe room often brings a customer back with shoes that must be exchanged.

Take a loss with a smile. Tell the truth in this matter, as well as about every other business transaction. At the same time, there are decided limits to one's patience. Lavish generosity in settling complaints leads to the belief that you are dead easy, or that your profits are so enormous you can afford to make some restitution, or that you do not know the merchandise you are handling.

THE GREAT SHOE CONVENTION IN CHICAGO

Frank P. Meyer, President Illinois Shoe Retailers' Association, has sent out the following:—

On behalf of the Illinois Shoe Retailers' Association, and acting for them as their president, I give to all the world of shoemen an urgent invitation to be present all three days, January 7th, 8th and 9th, 1918, at the National Convention of Shoe Retailers. This convention will be held at the Sherman Hotel, the manager of which has graciously consented to make a special rate to all shoemen. Extra courtesies will be extended the wives, mothers and sweethearts of visiting shoemen. A special committee of ladies acquainted with Chicago will have charge of the visiting ladies. Everything worth seeing will be seen.

Among the members of the various committees are: John O'Connor, general chairman; Otto Hassel, W. J. Gibbs, Fred. Foster, J. A. Goldberg, R. Metz, B. J. Coens, S. Bamberger. The fact that those "live wires" are working incessantly on plans of this world's shoe event, insures it going down in history as the greatest of all shoe gatherings. The shoeman who fails to attend will ever afterward be apologizing to posterity.

What the hegira is to the Moslem, this convention will be to the shoeman. It will be a business tonic, an upbuilder of future success. The greatest men of the game will discourse on the hottest subjects of the hour. Successful men will tell how they attained success. The big leaguers of the game, the men with a batting average over .300 will divulge the innermost secrets of how the big game is played.

This convention will have an educational value beyond the possibility of definite estimate. It will put "pep" in the "pepless," and liven the "dead" ones. The programme committee guarantees a social and entertainment programme which will be a criterion—a thing to be emulated by all future makers of programmes.

Chicago is the world's ideal convention city. Her possibilities for varied entertainment and amusements are inimitable. She boasts the finest playhouses, the greatest art museums, the greatest business houses in the world. Their Chamber of Commerce is boasting their intentions to make this next January convention an epic of conventions.

THE PATTERN HAS DISAPPEARED

Philip Pocock, of the London Shoe Co., London, Ont., writes the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL as follows: In the issue of the 1st inst. of your valuable journal I noticed a discussion on bluchers. The shoe C. A. Bignell, of Brampton, Ont., describes as made in England and called a blucher was made and freely sold in Canada back in the sixties and seventies under the name of brogan, but was better known to the shoe trade as a "dog house." This pattern of a shoe disappeared entirely from the Canadian market some years ago.

THE CAUSE OF FLAT FOOT

In placing blame for flat feet, even infantile paralysis is mentioned, but the chief cause is the wearing of improper footwear, which brings about a faulty condition of the foot, impairing its weight-bearing strength, says Dr. R. H. Bishop, Jr., Commissioner of Health of Cleveland, Ohio.

The principal arch of the foot is the inner or longitudinal one and as we stand normally, our weight falls on the heel bones and the ball of the foot, especially on the ball of the great toes. Anything which changes the normal foot pressure produces over-fatigue of the foot muscles and finally flat foot. The first symptoms are noticed in the discomfort which follows long standing or walking. Short rests may relieve this but later the pain begins earlier and lasts longer, and finally the soreness will cause restless nights.

As the strain is continued, the arch of the foot gives a congested appearance and there is much perspiration, which shows the circulation is being hindered. To rise on the toes is painful and often impossible.

When the pain becomes unbearable, the person goes to a shoe store for orthopedic shoes. If he is fitted correctly, the newness of the shoe may bring relief until the arch is weakened. The support is again gone and many styles are tried and the sufferer soon becomes discouraged. To effect a complete cure it is advisable that the person go to bed just as he would to cure any other sickness. But if this cannot be done, the next best thing is to buy the highest grade orthopedic footwear, and with time and patience a cure will be effected.

MAJOR SCOTT IS UNIONIST CANDIDATE

Major J. A. Scott, leather merchant, of Quebec, is the Unionist candidate in the Quebec South division at the election to be held on December 17th. A delegation composed of men belonging to both races and of the former political parties waited upon Major Scott recently, requesting him to stand as the "Win-the-War" candidate. D. H. Pennington, member of the Quebec Harbor Commission, and Dr. Dussault, alderman for St. Louis ward, spoke for the delegation, and represented the motive which prompted the delegation waiting upon Major Scott, and reminded Major Scott that his numerous friends, bearing in mind the fact that he has been to the front and also that his sons were on the firing line, were of opinion that no better candidate could be selected to carry the "win-the-war" banner. It was also stated that the delegation knew his acceptance of the honor would mean the temporary abandonment of his business affairs to take part in a difficult fight, but in order to carry the seat it was necessary to have a strong and capable man, also one whose heart would be in the fight, and it was felt that Mr. Scott would be the right man.

Major James A. Scott, Quebec

Dr. Dussault said that Major Scott was well-known and popular among all classes, and having shown a patriotic example, would make an ideal candidate for a division so mixed as Quebec South. The Major in reply said that he felt the honor which had been conferred by the delegation in asking him to be the "win-the-war" candidate in Quebec South, and if it was believed that he would be useful to the cause he would accept the nomination.

BOYS KICKED THEIR FEET IN WINDOW

The most successful window display that Rowland Hill, shoe retailer, of London, Ont., ever had was the one made at his main store on Saturday, October 20th. The aim was to make a special feature of boys' shoes, and the little work necessary to make the idea successful was repaid many times over in the big increase of boys' shoes disposed of, as well as stimulating the general trade.

The idea, though not absolutely original, was shown for the first time in London. The details were planned and worked out successfully by the window trimmer and card-writer, Rowland Hill, Jr.

The main part of the display consisted of two pieces of plaster board, 4 ft. x 5 ft., standing on end, meeting together and forming a triangle with the background of the window. The door to the window was hidden from view, being in that part of the background which formed the back of the triangle enclosure. The trim was put in the men's window of the V-shaped entrance and could be viewed equally as well from the sidewalk as from the entrance.

Ten pairs of boys' shoes were grouped around in front of the background, each pair being ticketed and numbered consecutively from 1 to 10.

Two round holes were cut in the plasterboard background through which the firm had a boy put his legs up to the knees. He was then instructed to kick and wiggle his feet. The shoes displayed on the lad were changed often, as well as a card which hung from behind and showed through an oblong hole directly above the boy's knees. These cards were changed with the shoes, the wording on each being used to describe the shoes on the boy's feet. Mr. Hill used two boys, who took turns in sitting on a stool in the enclosure behind the background, the lads themselves being hidden from view except their feet and knees.

They certainly succeeded in calling great attention to the display. This attraction was put on for one Saturday and it was often difficult for pedestrians to get through the crowd of people standing looking in the window. Mr. Hill, whose slogan is "reliable footwear," has two well conducted stores, the main one being at 189 Dundas street, and the east end branch at 429 Hamilton road, London.

LEATHER SUPPLY AFTER THE WAR

There seems to be little doubt but that Central Europe is hard put for adequate leather supplies which the great armies and civilian population require.

Even the German newspapers admit that leather is becoming a very scarce article. So far as civilian requirements are concerned it is said, for instance, that there is only enough shoe leather for the use of miners, fishermen, canal workers and a few allied trades. The manufacture of leather footwear for the rest of the population, it is stated, will soon be suspended. These people will have to get along with wooden soles and cloth uppers.

Apropos of this, one of the largest tannery owners in the country says: "When peace is once declared, what will be the demand upon the United States for the exportation of leather? So enormous that it is beyond computation at the present time. Therefore, while all the leather industries will be kept actively at work while this horrible war lasts, I consider the leather industry in quite a different phase from most industries which are active during war time, in so far as it is not alone a war proposition but an active peace proposition. Leather is one of the necessities of life, as people cannot go barefooted. There is no substitute for leather and one can imagine what the enormous demand will be on the tanners of United States when peace comes."

There is perhaps a tendency to over-emphasize the importance of war orders in comparison with normal civilian demand. It is interesting to note, for instance, that although orders recently placed by the United States Government and Russia for army shoes aggregate about 10,500,000 pairs for delivery over a six months' period, manufacturers of shoes would normally turn out 200,000,000 to 225,000,000 pairs of use for civilian use in a similar period. The leather requirement for these army shoes is very large but the civilian requirement is many times larger.

REPORTS BUSINESS WAS NEVER BETTER

S. Grimason, manager of the shoe department of R. H. Williams & Sons, Regina, Sask., reports that business has been exceptionally brisk this fall and has every appearance of continuing so throughout the remaining months of the year. Prospects are very bright and the farmers throughout that section of Saskatchewan have had bountiful crops and are buying all kinds of supplies freely. Mr. Grimason recently returned from a business and pleasure trip to the Coast and was much impressed with Banff and the beautiful scenery of the Rockies and the optimistic spirit which he found everywhere in the shoe trade.

BRIGHT SHOE SELLING HINTS FOR DECEMBER

Plate No. 1 Showing Window Card Ideas for December Selling

From the first day of December business begins to centre on the Christmas trade, and this year will be no exception. The trade may be different from other years but there will be a tremendous volume of business done this year, and shoe dealers should prepare to reap their share.

Cheap and trinkety Christmas gifts will not be so much in evidence as in other years. The war has caused many to think seriously, and when people think seriously they buy seriously. And the useful gift will dominate the holiday trade this year more than ever before. This being true the shoe trade will come in for a bigger Christmas business than has been done in past years.

Christmas windows and decorations are possibly the easiest to arrange of any type of window; in fact they are so easy that it is difficult to arrange them without being cluttered. In other words to hold yourself down so that the window will be neat and attractive without having too much in it.

The colors, of course, are red and green, which may be relieved with pink and white. The main emblem will always be Santa Claus, which can be used in a hundred different ways, either in figures, pictures or cut-outs. On account of shoes being so small, it would be well not to put too large types of decoration in the window. Evergreens may be used sparingly and, of course, holly will always be appropriate. Poinsetta flowers are now quite recognized as Christmas emblems and these are very attractive and can be used to good advantage.

The window background which we are illustrating is only suggestive, because it is difficult to lay out any such background that will fit various windows of the different stores throughout the country. This background is made with separate panels of 2-inch by $\frac{7}{8}$ -inch wood covered with some style of wallboard such as Beaver Board. It may be possible to get pretty Christmas wallpaper with some holly design on it to cover this background. If so do not select a pattern that is heavy. Have it very light, and the pieces between the panels can be covered with the border which matches the paper. Should you not be able to get paper of this kind, use plain light pink paper or some cloth material of that shade and tack it on. On the cloth or plain paper small sprigs of holly may be pinned here and there. In the centre of the window or near the background a holly wreath may be hung. In this you may place some greeting, such as

PLATE No. 2 Showing Christmas Card Suggestions.

“Merry Christmas,” “Happy New Year,” etc. Red and white ribbons may also be used as decoration.

About a week before Christmas it may be well to put in a real Christmas window with snow effects. The bottom of the window described above should match the background, but with a snow effect you may use cotton batting with frosting, which may be procured from any paint store. To represent snow on the evergreens, asbestos may be used, but it should not be used where it will come in contact with customers’ clothing as it sticks very closely to cloth materials. Soap chips are frequently used to represent snow or ice effects.

We always advise the pricing of all shoes on display in windows, and if this advice is followed it is possible to get tickets with little sprays of holly on them that are very attractive and appropriate.

We also suggest that you have greeting cards with a blank space on for the name to be filled in for the recipient of the present. This can be filled in by the purchaser and enclosed in the parcel. Cards of this type are inexpensive and are good advertising. It may also be well to have some of your own Christmas cards with a greeting on to enclose in all parcels during the Christmas season.

We are showing several suggestions for Christmas cards. Plate No. 2 we showed last season but will bear repeating. The sizes may be full sheets, 22 inches by 28 inches, or half sheets, 14 inches by 22 inches, according to the size of your window.

The styles of lettering may be followed or changed at your discretion, the colors should be bright, red for the large lettering and black for the small. The bells and candlestick can be gilt.

A NEAT and attractive background for Christmas Window.

The Shoe Repair Man

MR. HOCKIN MAKES NEW MOVE

Extensive developments and changes have recently taken place in the Oxford Harness Shop, south side Market Square, Woodstock, Ont., of which L. A. Boussey is the manager. The firm has now added shoe repairing to the present line of harness making and this department of the business is in charge of Jesse Hockin, a well-known east end shoemaker, where he has been in business for the past twenty-seven years. Mr. Hockin has closed his east end shop in Woodstock, and will now be found at the Market Square stand. With the addition of the shoe repairing, it was found necessary to secure more room and in consequence Mr. Boussey leased the store adjoining his own and has them connected by arches on the inside. The east store is the work shop for both harness making and shoe repairs, while the west store will be the stock and showroom. Here is on display the firm's large and complete line of harness of all kinds; trunks, suitcases, club bags, mitts and gloves, etc.

STOLE WATCH FROM HIS SHOP

Alfred Miller conducts a shoe repairing shop at the corner of Cannon and Cathcart street, Hamilton, Ont. He told the police that while he was engaged at work Cavaglione Rosarto and Dominico Latone, 1125 Cathcart street, entered his place of business and asked to be shown some second-hand shoes. Miller went into a back room to get the shoes and when he returned Rosarto and Latone were absent, and a watch and chain which Miller had left on his work bench, was also missing, he claims. The police were notified and placed the two Italians under arrest.

WHY SOME SHOE DEALERS FAIL

When on the road as a commercial traveler, I came in contact with many shoe dealers who were aching to succeed, says a correspondent in the "Shoe Retailer." One could see in their very eye an earnest desire to get out of the every-day rut. Their ambition was great, and my sympathy was always, of course, with them until they would quote Bill Jones, a successful merchant, as a lucky chap. Then, my sympathy would turn to disgust, for their entire ambition was only a wish; in other words, they had a wish-bone but very little backbone, for they were purely dreamers.

A shoe dealer asked the other day: "How can I increase my sales and keep my trade after I sell them?"

"Advertise, and do as you advertise," was the reply.

"What? Advertise? Advertise?" he replied with a cynical smile that showed contempt. To think that he should be given such an unbusinesslike advice was more than he could bear. "Why, do you know," he said, "I have spent almost a little fortune in advertising that never did me one cent's worth of good. There never has been a church or club affair given in our neighborhood but what I have advertised in their program, so when you are speaking of advertising as a trade getting medium, I believe, in fact I know, that you are utterly wrong.

A few weeks later I happened to meet this same dealer in a shoe salesman's sample room. After placing an order for a few dozen shoes, the salesman called him aside, and read a letter from the house. Despite my efforts to avoid eavesdropping I was forced to overhear him assure the representative that his check would follow within a few days so that he could get his shoes in time for his Saturday business.

Now this dealer had been in business almost ten years, and he was to be held up on a small shipment just because he could not have paid up his old bill.

This dealer is not a drinking man, a gambler, nor a high liver. He has no family troubles, nor does he own a home or an automobile, but he keeps a store; ycs, he is a storckeeper, but not a merchant. He used to advertise, but he does not any longer for he found out that advertising does not pay—program advertising. This shoe man represents a type that can be found in every line of trade, and in every city, town and hamlet.

REPAIRERS ARE HAVING BUSY SEASON

"Shoe repairers were never busier than they have been for the past few weeks," remarked Charles F. Robertson, President of the Toronto Shoe Repairers' Association. "Most of us have more work than we can attend to. The great problem is the help question. It is utterly impossible to get men and all the shops are short handed."

At the last regular meeting of the Toronto Association there was a good attendance and five new members were received, making the membership considerably over the hundred mark, which is a most encouraging record for an organization that is not yet a year and a half old. Good-year cement is now being handled through the central agency of the association and members may secure it by the gallon, at wholesale prices. The committee on the matter of shoe polish reported progress, and it is possible that the association may get out its own polish under a branded name at an early date.

A letter was read from the Hamilton Shoe Repairers' Association in which the advisability of having an affiliation of all shoe repair associations in Ontario was suggested. The matter will be taken up later. The question of having

WILL HELP THE REPAIR MEN

The Educational Committee of the National Leather and Shoe Finders' Association, met at Chicago October 17th to consider plans that will govern their campaign to bring about better conditions in the leather and shoe findings trade and in shoe repairing.

No definite decision was reached at this meeting, owing to the fact that the committee wish to go into this matter as thoroughly as possible before accepting a proposition. This campaign is to be made as exhaustive and as complete as the funds raised will permit, and it is contemplated to give every unit of the trade its share of the result and benefits.

Every unit in the trade is to be co-ordinated and the manufacturer, the jobber, the jobbers' salesman and the shoe repairer will be asked to do his share.

The committee invites correspondence from every shoe repairers' association in the U.S. or Canada. The director, Geo. A. Knapp, will consider it a great favor to attend their meetings and lay before them the plans of his committee. The most direct contact with the shoe repairer is desired and it is thought that their local organizations can be used to further this important feature of the movement. Already invitations of this kind have reached Mr. Knapp, and he has promised to meet with these associations just as soon as the plans of the committee are ready for presentation.

THE UPWARD TREND OF PRICES

Every article used in repairing shoes has taken a flight, as will be seen by the following table:

	Last Year	Now
Thread.....	$0.96	$2.30
Channel cement.....	.46	.85
Ink.....	.75	1.75
Nails.....	$4.50, $5.00, 6.00	$16, $18, $20
Leather.....	.50 and .60	1.35
Women's top lifts.....	.07	.20
Men's top lifts.....	.24	.40

Then comes the items of underliftings, labor, wear and tear on the equipment, investment, overhead expense, etc., and with it all the price of repair work has advanced only 35 and 50 cents. Some repairmen say they have made more money when they repaired shoes for $1.00 than to-day, with the increased cost of materials and labor, in spite of the advance made in shoe repair prices.

THE HEAD OF HISTORIC LEATHER FIRM

(See Front Cover)

W. G. Parsons, head of the historic leather and shoe findings house of C. Parsons & Son, Limited, 79 Front street east, Toronto, is one of the most widely known men in the business. He has held a number of responsible positions in the trade and his father, Charles Parsons, who was at the time of his death Canada's oldest leather merchant, passed away in January, 1916, in his eighty-seventh year, having been identified with the leather industry over sixty-five years. The firm of J. & C. Parsons was established on King street, at the corner of George street, in 1849. It afterwards became Thorne, Parsons & Vennor, but at the death of Mr. Vennor a change took place, the style being Thorne & Parsons. In 1875 Mr. Thorne retired and for some years the late Chas. Parsons conducted the business alone. Then W. G. Parsons joined his father and the company became incorporated under the title of C. Parsons & Son, Limited, and now has a wide connection, not only in all parts of Canada but also in the United States.

W. G. Parsons has been connected with the leather trade for about thirty-five years and has surrounded himself with a capable and conscientious staff, a number of whom have been in the service for several decades. He has always taken an active interest in many affairs outside of the leather business, and is an enthusiastic motorist, bowler, curler and golfer. Mr. Parsons is also fond of travel, having visited Europe several times and returned recently from an extended tour throughout the Western Provinces. The trade mark name of the firm is "Sterling," upon which the splendid reputation and upright dealings of the historic house has been built.

NEWSY BRIEFS FROM ST. JOHN

John Mitchell, formerly a prominent King street shoe merchant, St. John, N.B., died recently at his home in that city. He had not been in good health for several years, but the illness which resulted in his death lasted only a few days. Mr. Mitchell was active among the promoters of the St. John Opera House, and for many years was vice-president of the company. He is survived by his wife, two sons and one daughter.

Mayor Hayes, president and managing director of the firm of J. M. Humphrey & Co., Limited, recently returned from Woodstock, N.B., where he was attending a convention of the New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island Sunday School Association. He also recently attended a meeting of the Board of Regents of the Mount Allison University in Sackville, N.B.

William C. Rising, son of E. L. Rising, president of the firm of Waterbury & Rising, Limited, who has been ill for some time, is improving in health, and is able to be about again.

M. Lewis was in the city this week representing the Nursery Shoe Co., of London, Ont. Hazen McGee, who represents several shoe firms, was also in St. John lately on business.

NEW FIRM SPECIALIZES IN SHOE SUPPLIES

Bennett, Limited, makers of shoe supplies, Chambly Canton, Que. (whose Montreal office is at 59 St. Henri street), is the name of a concern which has just entered the Canadian field of manufacturing. The company are handling a number of products and are the only Canadian firm manufacturing counters making their own fibre. They also manufacture heel board, fibre innersoling, double and veneer board and other lines. Owing to the rapid expansion in business a re-organization was rendered necessary in connection with the Canadian Leatherboard Co., and the name Bennett, Limited, was adopted. The Dominion Counter Co. has also been recently taken over by the firm. The Canadian Leatherboard Co., organized a few years ago, started in a modest way at Chambly Canton, making high grade heel board, and turning out a uniform article, which has met with much favor in the trade.

Under the direction of Bennett, Limited, this branch of the business, which has developed so satisfactorily, will receive greater attention than ever. Bennett, Limited, have, as already stated, taken over the Dominion Counter Co., and early next month will remove the business from Montreal to Chambly. The company aim to produce the best possible fibre counters and to maintain, as in their leather board, a uniform production at the lowest possible price.

George F. Davis, who has been in connection with the Canadian trade since 1912, as manager for George H. Davis, Reg'd., is sales manager for Bennett, Limited, and supported by a competent staff, the organization has splendid prospects for a greatly increased demand in its various lines.

BRIEF JOTTINGS FROM QUEBEC

Wm. C. Bryce, of Cotton Threads, Limited, Montreal; C. L. Hawthaway & Sons, Boston; J. B. Crochier, of L. H. Packard & Co., Montreal, were among those recently calling upon the trade in this city.

Shoe manufacturers in general are getting busier. Some are starting on their new run and orders have been coming in a little more freely of late.

Edm. Tremblay, shoe manufacturer, spent a few days recently in Montreal on business and reports having received several good orders.

Tanners who have been shut down for some time have again set their plants in operation.

The many friends of Major J. A. Scott, leather merchant, who is a Unionist candidate in Quebec South in the forthcoming federal election, are enthusiastic over his prospect for election and are working zealously and whole-heartedly in his behalf.

Edgar Clement, Levi Cantin and W. Plante were in Boston on business recently and visited several tanneries while absent.

Several improvements have been made to the factory of Jno. Ritchie Co. The basement has been concreted and other changes carried out.

Wilfrid Laflamme, formerly foreman in the stitching room, has been appointed superintendent of the shoe factory of Jos. Tanguay.

Victor Noel, lately in charge of the finishing room of a Montreal factory, has taken charge of the treeing and finishing departments of J. M. Stobo, Quebec.

The many friends of J. E. Boivin, manager of Canadian Consolidated Rubber Co., Quebec Branch, will sympathize with him in the recent death of his daughter.

The inventory of E. Thivierge, who some time ago made an assignment, has been taken, and the stock will be disposed of by auction.

U. S. M. CO. REMOVES TO LARGER QUARTERS

Owing to rapid expansion in business the Toronto office of the United Shoe Machinery Co., Limited, will shortly be removed from 122 Adelaide street west to 90 Adelaide street west, next door to the Bell Telephone Co. building, which is a central, commodious and spacious stand. Three floors of about 800 square feet each will be occupied and specially fitted up for the various departments of the business. L. W. Hanson is the energetic manager of the Toronto branch.

E. D. Pretty who was for a number of years connected with U. S. M. Co., but enlisted with the transport service for overseas duty, recently was honorably discharged by the militia authorities, and has rejoined the staff as Ontario salesman. Fred. Naylor has been appointed city representative for Toronto.

HEEL PLATES THAT WILL NOT BREAK

Heel plates that are unbreakable, being made of specially prepared steel, are one of the strongest features of the hardware specialties put on the market by the Root-Heath Manufacturing Company, of Plymouth, Ohio. The plates save the heels, are easily attached and the prongs are warranted not to break. The manufacturers claim for "R. and H." heel plates that they are the strongest and most durable made on the market and are real money savers because they protect the heels in every way. The plates are of different sizes to fit any style of heel, French, cuban, spool, Spanish, military, etc., and are put up in cartons in one quarter, one-half and one gross plates and also in five gross display boxes.

SHOE COMPANY REMOVES TO OTTERTVILLE

The shoe factory of George L. Williams & Sons Co., Limited, which concern has just become incorporated with a capital stock of forty thousand dollars, has removed from 427½ Queen street west, Toronto, to Otterville, Ont. This thriving village is in Oxford county about twenty miles south of Woodstock, Ont. There a splendid building with two floors and basement has been secured for a term of years while the company will have the advantage of water power for its plant the year round. The premises are 80 by 40 feet in dimensions. The company will make little gents', boys' and youths' Goodyear welts of the better class and also children's stitchdowns and will have an output of about one hundred and fifty pairs a day. Considerable new equipment has been added, and the industry has been granted exemption from taxation.

What is Seen and Heard Amongst the Trade—Views
and News of the Leather Trade at Home and Abroad

BUSINESS seems to have improved somewhat during the past fortnight, tanners reporting increased enquiry on the part of manufacturers. The latter have begun to receive sorting orders in fairly satisfactory quantities and now report that spring sales have reached a point that, while not as satisfactory as it might be, encourages the belief that more confidence is developing in the shoe situation throughout the country. The fine weather that has prevailed for the past two or three weeks has helped those who had stocks of fine footwear in the cities and towns, while the openness of the season has permitted a larger amount than usual of farming activity, and thus induced the sale of heavier goods. With the starting in of seasonable weather, which is liable to occur at any time now, there ought to be a further stimulus to activity in footwear. Altogether the outlook for a good fall season is bright.

Army Shoe Question.—The agitation started by the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL some time ago with regard to the army shoe question has borne fruit. A conference was recently held at Ottawa, between government representatives and a committee of shoe manufacturers, at which the matter was fully discussed. The manufacturers came away satisfied that the results in the near future will justify the effort and remove an anomaly that has hitherto existed of paying for footwear made for our soldiers outside this country. We understand negotiations are at present under way which will mean a large order in the near future for ankle boots. This will not only mean that our Canadian boys will be able to secure boots to which they have been accustomed, but afford welcome relief to the shoe trade here as well as remove a considerable quantity of leather that since the embargo has been awaiting employment. The government is to be congratulated upon the spirit in which they met the deputation and the thanks of the trade are due those who took the matter in hand.

Leather Conditions.—Business has shown some indication of revival, as has already been stated. Across the line the army shoe production has called for a considerable quantity of both upper and sole stock, which is relieving the situation for Canada, as well as the United States. The lifting of the embargo even temporarily has put business upon a more healthy footing. Take the light leather business, for instance, the sale of kid and other light stock for European shipment has cleared the market to a considerable extent of accumulations. It is estimated that seventy-five thousand dozens of kid were shipped to Russia alone. Raw stock is growing more difficult to secure, especially the higher grades, which has a tendency to keep up prices in Patnas and Brazilian blacks. The prospect of the growing popularity of low cut shoes for the coming spring and summer is also influencing opinions as to the trend of the market. Calf leather does not show much change, although there have been advances made in light calf specialties. Patents evidence a tendency towards much greater activity. Side leather is much more active and especially in colors is in good demand with a strong market. Sole leather is much stronger than two weeks ago, the market being well cleared, especially of the heavy dry hide hemlock varieties.

Further Heavy Buying.—The British Commission has recently made a further purchase of seventy thousand sides of heavy black chrome waterproof embossed leather, which is said to be but the forerunner of a large order that will reach in the neighborhood of 7,000,000 feet. There is also some talk of large purchases of leather by the Commission for the manufacture of standardized shoes for domestic use in England. This will mean a tremendous pressure upon the production of both upper and sole leather, in which no doubt our tanners may be able to participate to some extent at least. We understand that strong representations are being made to the British Government by the Canadian authorities to have a portion of this business come to this country, and that there is every prospect of their wishes being acceded to. The inability of the United States to provide the necessary material will not only make this possible, but undoubtedly allow Canadian leather to pass through American channels to a considerable extent. In the meantime it is to be hoped that the "Victory Loan" will encourage the placing of considerable orders with Canada direct.

The Hide Situation.—The general feeling in the packer hide market is stronger, although there has not been any noticeable movement. Heavy hides, of course, maintain their strength, and are in good demand. Packers are busy filling orders and stocks are well cleaned up. Sales of heavy native packer steers have been made at 35 cents, with light at 33½ to 34 cents. Texas steers are strong especially in the heavy weight at an advance of half a cent, sales being reported at 31 cents. In country hides the activity has been confined largely to the lighter weights, but business is generally quiet as evidenced by the fact that extremes sold at 24½ cents recently. The preference shown for packer hides just now seems to be rather decided, on account of war order requirements, with the result that the country hide market shows increasing weakness. Buff hides are held at 25 cents with few takers at this figure. The general price seems to be 24 cents for 45 pounds up. Calfskins are easy at 45 cents for packers and city grades at 42 cents, although sales are said to have been made at 40 cents. The dry hide market is dull, very few sales being reported. Last sales are quoted 41 cents for Orinocos and Bogotas with 40 cents for Centrals.

Corsets and Arches

Being a practical illustration of the supporting principles of both as applied to shoes.

CORSETS are typical of all embracing supporting qualities—while the arch in architecture is one of the standbys of all construction engineers.

The Corset Arch-Support is one of the out-standing features of all Tally-Ho Shoes. This device gives a welcome rigidity to what has been heretofore one of the weakest parts of a shoe. It prevents the arch from falling—and is a welcome addition to those whose arches have already fallen—as it does away with the clumsy, high-priced arches that are inserted after the shoe is made.

The Corset Arch Support

This device as shown in the illustration, is built in the shoe. Its truss construction supports the arch of the foot with perfection. It has the required elasticity to allow the muscles and tendons of the foot to perform their functions in an absolutely natural manner, and still has the strength to prevent the bones from being forced into an unnatural position by the weight of the body.

It is a preventive and an after aid in the majority of foot troubles.

YOUR customers will like this feature when it is made known to them. For — the number of men who are suffering from fallen arches is surprising. This is a fact brought out by the medical examinations of those who have reported under the Military Service Act.

In fact, statistics show that there is a great increase in foot troubles, with fallen arches largely in the majority.

Tally-ho Shoes

Tally-Ho exclusive features are these:

1. Tally-Ho Corset Arch Support — built into every shoe.
2. Tally-Ho 2 in 1 Cushion Sole — an important feature.
3. The Bull Dog Out-sole — better wearing than either rubber or leather — waterproof — flexible — non-slip — guaranteed service — finishes like leather.
4. Authentic styles — originated in American Tally-Ho Shop.
5. No-jar Rubber Heel — springy — resilient — pure rubber.
6. Sani-tex Health Lining — supplied with kid shoes.

You cannot afford to overlook a shoe with so many good talking and selling points. Ask your jobber about Tally-Ho—or ask us.

NEW FACTORY IS NEARLY COMPLETED

The first annual meeting of the J. F. Clark, Limited, shoe manufacturers, Montreal East, was held last week, when the following officers were elected: President, Wm. E. Clark; vice-president, John F. Clark; secretary-treasurer, James F. Clark; directors—R. L. Savage, C. Hazen McGee and John A. Clark. Wm. E. Clark has removed from St. Stephen, N.B., to Montreal and will have charge of the manufacturing end of the business. Attractive new samples have just been turned out in children's, misses' and women's in white high and low cuts on which the firm will specialize. The new brick, three-storey factory fronting on Dube street, Montreal East, is now roofed, and in dimensions is 40 x 165 feet. The company will make white goods exclusively and the capacity of the plant, which it is expected will be in operation about the first of the year, will be two thousand pairs a day of McKay shoes.

FOREWORD ON SHOE STOCKS

Reduce your stock to as low a point as practical, giving due consideration to the fact that shoes will not be lower in cost unless cheapened in quality, and that very likely if buying is excessive from domestic needs, higher prices will prevail in the shoe business. Since a retailer's stock of shoes will represent a much greater investment than heretofore, all can urgently see the necessity of reducing same to its lowest point and yet provide for needs. Use the stock department freely to replace depleted sizes. Reduce varieties of styles throughout your store and concentrate on fewer kinds, and study your requirement so that each shoe will be a seller. Do not speculate to an excessive degree, but maintain your qualities, and ever remember that satisfaction in style and service will safeguard continued patronage. Good business judgment and intelligent buying are needed. These, coupled with faith in the future of our country and its business interests, should encourage every good merchant to trim his sails for a most successful voyage.—By Charles A. Eaton.

HOW TO FIGURE STOCK TURNOVER

A correspondent propounds the following question, says an exchange: "What do you consider the proper way to figure turnover? Example—stock at cost price of $1,000, sales $5,000—is this five turns?"

Answer—The best definition that we know for determining turnover is, "Divide the year's sales at cost by the average stock carried and you have the turnover." In regard to the example you give, "stock at a cost price of $1,000, sales $5,000 is this five turns?" It is not five turns. Just how many it is, we are unable to state because you have not given sufficient data. To figure the turnover it would be necessary to know your percentage of margin. Let us suppose that your margin is 35 per cent. The selling price of your goods ($5,000) represents 100 per cent. The cost price of these goods would be the difference between your margin and the full hundred per cent., in other words 65 per cent. of $5,000 or $3,250. The turnover then would be this sum divided by the stock carried, $1,000, in other words 3¼ turns. This is, of course, providing that your $1,000 stock is not inventory stock, but the average stock carried during the year. There are different ways of arriving at this average stock on hand, probably the most generally adopted way is to add the stock records of each month, if a monthly stock record is kept, and divide by twelve. This will probably come close to the actual stock.

Order NOW

That's particularly timely advice. There are three good reasons why you should act upon it. The first is to insure deliveries. The shortness of labor handicaps every manufacturer and the earlier orders will be surer of prompt deliveries.

The second is, YOU WILL SAVE MONEY. Every indication is toward a steady rise in the price of leather. Look over your stock, order at once and protect yourself against higher prices, as you may be sure they won't be lower for a long while.

The third is, we have some extra good values to offer in our new Spring Lines enabling you to sell

HE SEES NO DECREASE IN PRICES

A well-known authority on present conditions in the trade, speaking to the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL, said: "Factories are beginning to come into the market for their requirements in both sole and upper leather, as they recognize the fact that the recent large orders placed for army shoes and civilian shoes by foreign governments are having a strengthening effect on the American market. I don't see any reason for lower prices or a decline in shoe or leather values. On the other hand, I don't look for any boom or sharp advance in leather or hides. As far as I can discern shoe merchants and department buyers will not lose any money by placing orders now. It is not at all possible that they can purchase for less later on. Leather prices keep firm and higher and while civilian trade has been dull, owing to buyers holding back, I don't expect any lower quotations."

SOME JOCLAR REFERENCES DO HARM

It will be remembered that Sir Wm. Osler, the eminent physician, some years ago startled the world by a rather enigmatic utterance which was interpreted to mean that all men over forty should be chloroformed, as their usefulness was over. This caused a lot of unrest, discussion, resentment, speculation and even turmoil at the time. Of course, those who were young and active took a somewhat favorable view of the learned physician's dictum. Those over the two-score mark, who felt that they were still young, and had all the enterprise, energy and vim of youth coupled with the experience, insight and balance of maturer years, felt that a great injustice had been done them and an unwarranted reflection cast upon their physical fitness, executive efficiency and mental capacity.

It was about a year and half ago that a widely-known manufacturer, speaking of the outlook in footwear and leather at a banquet in Boston, made a somewhat mirthful reference to the fact that shoes would be selling at $20.00 a pair. Being ever on the lookout for the unusual and sensational, the newspapers naturally got hold of this significant remark and played it for all it was worth. In prominent headlines there were references to the effect that shoes would be $20.00 a pair. People in war time are inclined to give credence to any wild rumor and naturally a panic seized the trade. Even the retailers, who should have known better, were prone to think that the prediction of this manufacturer would be verified. They plunged in heavily and bought to the limit of their financial capacity and storage facilities, carrying from fifty to one hundred per cent. larger stocks than ever before, not in value alone, but in actual numbers on the shelves and in cases. The shoe manufacturer who made the statement was not serious at the time. No one present took his assertion in that spirit, and he had no idea that his bon-mot would be taken to cover staple lines of footwear, but such was the application that the general public immediately placed upon his prophecy.

It is well known that special lines of custom made shoes had been selling as high as $15.00 a pair for some years, and even $20.00 in some of the most aristocratic shops. This fact was lost sight of and the working man, the mechanic, the bookkeeper, the saleslady and the stenographer—in fact, the housewife and other members of the family—thought that as everything was ascending out of all proportion in price, shoes were no exception. Thus what was conceived in jest was taken in earnest, and even yet the effect of the prediction of $20.00 shoes has not been entirely obliterated. Although there is nothing to justify the belief that footwear will go any higher than it is at present, some think it will; and on the other hand there is no prospect that there will be any perceptible decrease. As far as discerning ones can deservy values are likely to remain at their present level for several months to come unless something unexpected occurs.

Easter will fall on a very early date next year. The festival will be observed on Sunday, March 31st.

Peter Beliveau, who for some time has been employed with Aero-Peds Manufacturing Co., Toronto, has gone to Quebec, where he has taken an important position in the factory of the Wm. A. Marsh Co.

E. J. Phillips, eastern representative of C. Parsons & Son, Limited, Toronto, has returned from an extended business trip to Boston, Baltimore, Washington, Richmond and other cities.

The many friends of Wm. O. Adams, shoe retailer, of Belleville, Ont., are congratulating him on the advent of a ten-pound son and heir.

The shoe store of J. M. St. Onge, Montreal, was partly damaged by fire recently.

J. G. McDiarmid has returned to Toronto after a successful business trip throughout the Prairie Provinces in the interest of the Murray Shoe Co., of London. He reports business in the West as being exceptionally good this fall.

C. F. Tugman, president of the Royal Shoe Co., Toronto, who has been ill for some weeks, is now recovering from an attack of pneumonia and it is expected will be able to resume business in the near future.

S. S. Joyce, shoe merchant, of Havelock, Ont., was in Toronto recently on a visit to his son, Russell Joyce, who is on the staff of Owens-Elmes, Limited.

R. J. Orr, of Toronto, who has been on an extended and successful business trip through the Western States in the interest of the Arrowsmith Mfg. Co., of Morristown, N.J., has returned home.

W. Alfred Moore, sales manager of Beardmore & Co., Toronto, is wearing a smile these days that will not come off. It's a boy.

F. X. LaSalle & Fils, shoe dealers, of Montreal, have sold out to C. R. LaSalle.

W. W. Lindsley, who represents the Minister-Myles Shoe Co., of Toronto, has returned from a successful spring selling trip throughout the Maritime Provinces and Quebec.

Mr. Alley, of Alley & Co., Charlottetown, who also represents the Amherst Boot & Shoe Co. on the Island, reports having had a very successful spring selling trip.

Messrs. Luscombe and Frank Sisman, of the Simcoe Shoe and Glove Co., have returned from an extended trip to Rochester, Boston and other leading shoemaking cities.

F. W. Knowlton, of Montreal, general manager of the United Shoe Machinery Co., of Canada, spent a few days in Toronto last week on business.

W. J. Detweiler, shoe retailer, of Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., spent a few days in Toronto and Montreal this week on business.

William R. Sampson, who has had many years' experience in the shoe trade, has recently been made general manager of the United Shoe Machinery Co., Boston, and is receiving congratulations from his many friends.

A. E. Faulkner, lately on the staff of the Invictus Boot Shop, Yonge street, Toronto, has joined the 67th Battery for overseas service. He is well known in shoe circles, having spent four years with P. A. Blachford, Toronto, and previous to that he was engaged with the St. Leger Shoe Co.

An interesting play was presented in Amherst, N.B., recently for patriotic purposes and was a grand success. The production was "Brown from Harvard," which has been put on for the second time with much appreciation on the part of the public. The cast was headed by W. G. Miller, manager of the retail branch of the Amherst Boot & Shoe Co., who possesses histrionic ability of no mean order.

The assets of Eugene Thivierge, shoe manufacturer, Quebec, will be sold by auction on November 22nd at the office of the curators.

Ten years ago this date packer heavy native steer hides sold at 16c., to-day they are quoted at 35c. At that time Chicago buff hides were quoted at 11½c. and to-day they bring 25c. Calfskins were quoted then at 15c., to-day they range from 32c. to 45c. This will afford some idea of the tremendous changes that have occurred in leather costs.

The new samples of B. F. Ackerman, Son & Co., shoe manufacturers, Peterborough, have been completed and a fine range of men's, boys' and youths' Standard screw lines are being shown. The Munson last has been used on several of the models and is taking exceptionally well. Peterborough merchants were the first to give orders to the new local factory and several thousand dollars' worth of shoes were booked the first day.

Rubber footwear factories are very busy at the present time, although the shortage of help is acute in some departments. However, on the whole, shipments are ahead of last year and if the present fine weather continues, the plants expect to catch up in a measure with a large volume of business on hand. Considerable complaint is heard in regard to the congestion of transportation and the delay in shipments reaching their destination. In many cases, weeks are taken to deliver goods which should arrive in a couple of days.

E. W. Borbridge, sales manager of B. F. Ackerman, Son & Co., Peterborough, has left on an extended business trip throughout the Canadian West and will be absent three or four weeks.

G. C. Wilson, representing Jas. Muir Co., Limited, Montreal, spent a few days in Toronto this week calling upon the trade.

every line you buy. Select only a few lines having the full run of sizes and widths, from 2½ to 7 in ladies' and 6 to 11 in men's styles. Make the selection of these lines cover as large a range as you think your trade demands, and after you have them in stock, don't be forever getting ahead of your customer in wanting to change them, for the nearer you can keep them to a standard, the fewer broken lines you will have for them, for there are still lots of people who want fairly staple shoes.

In buying near-novelties and extreme novelties there is no set rule that will work out well, except possibly one, and that is, don't buy many extreme sizes, either large or small, in any of them. It is safe not to buy all widths of them, either—that is, in the most extreme styles.

Bert Abernethy, of the Abernethy Shoe Store, Kingston, Ont., spent a few days in Toronto recently on business.

Albert Tetrault, of the Tetrault Shoe Mfg. Co., Montreal, was in Toronto recently on business.

Jobbers report that there is a shortage in women's mahogany high-cut bals carrying fibre soles and rubber heels. The demand for this line of goods has been very active. There is also a considerable scarcity in felts, some of the wholesalers not receiving more than half the quantity for which they placed orders last spring.

Extensive improvements have been made to the interior of the warehouse of Ames-Holden-McCready in Toronto. The sample room has been moved farther back and the office space greatly enlarged, while other changes have also been effected.

Advices from the largest tannery firms in the United States say that when peace is once declared the demand for exportation of leather will be so enormous that it is at present beyond computation. Therefore, while all the leather industries will be kept actively at work while the war lasts, they will be yet busier when it is over. The industry is quite different from most industries which are active during war, in so far as it is a peace and not a war industry. Manufacture of leather footwear for civilian population in belligerent countries is being suspended because of army needs, and the rush to provide the shortage after the war will be tremendous.

A. M. Cusson, for a number of years superintendent of the Tetrault Shoe Mfg. Co., Montreal, has resigned his position.

Percy Milburn, of Montreal, representing Marlatt & Armstrong, has returned from a business trip to the Maritime Provinces. He reports things as being prosperous down there.

Oliver Tetrault, of Montreal, has returned from a hunting trip to the Laurentians. There were sixteen in the party and during the trip they succeeded in killing thirteen deer. Mr. Tetrault looks brown and the picture of health and his friends say that he has grown fully six inches. They attribute it to the fact that he was always looking up to the tall tree tops to see if he could locate a partridge, but he was unsuccessful and had to confine his shooting ability to deer.

A recent despatch from Northampton, England, says: In connection with the announcement that preparations have been made for the manufacture of 250,000 pairs of standard boots of leather as soon as the Government gives authority, the prices were erroneously quoted. The correct prices are: For three grades of men's boots, between fourteen and twenty-one shillings; for women's shoes, twelve shillings upward; for women's boots, fifteen shillings.

All the employes of the Montreal works of the Canadian Consolidated Rubber Co., Montreal, turned out at noon on Saturday to a rally on behalf of the Victory Loan addressed by Major Smyth and Gustave Franco, and decided to form committees under which one man could collect the pledges of twenty others, the understanding being that so far as possible each man should pledge ten per cent, of his wages or salary. A. D. Thornton, one of the directors, undertook to personally superintend the campaign among the employes of his company.

The Panther Rubber Co. is contemplating the erection of a plant to manufacture fibre sole and rubber heels near Boston. It is reported that the firm will not rebuild its Stoughton plant, which was recently destroyed by fire.

C. S. Corson, of the Regal Shoe Co., Toronto, who is a member of the Red Chalk Game Club, has returned from a deer shooting expedition in Haliburton township, back of Dorset. The party of eleven got their full complement of the fleet-footed animals. Mr. Corson was successful in bringing down a 220-pound buck and reports that deer are very plentiful this season.

LYONS BROOK, N.S.

W. A. Lane, of W. A. Lane & Co., Montreal, leather merchants, spent a few days in Boston recently on business.

T. Sisman, of the T. Sisman Shoe Co., Aurora, has returned from an extended visit to Rochester, Buffalo, Boston and other leading shoe centres.

The Miner Rubber Co., of Granby, Que., have erected a power house at the upper dam with a view to developing power with the water wheels which were put in at this point a few years ago.

E. David & Sons, who are conducting a large shoe business in New Glasgow, N.S., are occupying two stores adjoining each other and connected at the rear. One store is devoted to men's and boy's footwear and the other to women's and children's. The plan works out very successfully.

The death occurred lately of Donald Fraser, manager of the Cash Shoe Store, Pictou, N.S., which is conducted by J. W. Priest. Mr. Fraser was a thoroughly experienced young shoe man and was previously employed by A. Henderson & Son, Pictou, and later by A. W. Redden & Co., Sydney. He was ill only a few days.

Wallace Bros., shoe retailers, Halifax, have fitted up a special children's department on the second floor, which is proving a decided attraction to juvenile customers. The retail branch of the Amherst Boot & Shoe Co. also contains special seats in the rear of the store for tiny tots. The equipment consists of small arm chairs on a raised platform.

The Humberstone Shoe Co., Limited, of Humberstone, Ont., which was recently incorporated with a capital stock of $100,000, is authorized under its new charter to manufacture not only boots and shoes but mitts, gloves and all kinds of leather goods. The incorporators of the company are Chas. C. Knoll, Chas. A. Neff and Marvin C. Knoll, of Humberstone, and Philip G. Knoll and Horatio H. Knoll, of Port Colborne, Ont.

Aero-Peds Manufacturing Co., Limited, have taken in considerable extra room and added new equipment at their place of business, 30 Adelaide street east, Toronto. In addition to manufacturing Aero-Peds as before, the company are turning out boot and shoe trimmings. H. A. Beatty, of American-British-Canadian Distributors, Toronto, has become associated with Aero-Peds Manufacturing Co. as sales manager and will handle the output of the firm all over the Dominion.

Among those who have returned from the West after most successful spring selling trips are H. E. Wettlaufer, of Charles A. Ahrens, Limited, Kitchener; L. M. Stock, representing Walker-Parker Co., Toronto; R. J. McAllister, representing the Brandon Shoe Co., Brantford, and R. B. Chalue, of Toronto, who has the selling agency for several shoe firms in the West.

Owens-Elmes, 89 Yonge street, Toronto, who have been in business for some fifteen months, have developed a splendid trade in high-class footwear and now find their present quarters inadequate to meet their rapidly growing clientele. The second floor, which has been used as a stockroom, will be converted into a children's department and also an upstairs woman's section. An elevator will be installed on the main floor just to the right of entrance and, when all the contemplated improvements are completed, the firm will be carrying double the amount of stock and have twice the floor selling space they have at present. Owens-Elmes have developed a large mail order connection, specializing in all widths and all sizes.

Clarence E. Girvan, for the past ten years with the firm of Waterbury & Rising, was made the recipient of a testimonial by the employees at the King street store, St. John, N.B., recently. Mr. Girvan has severed his connection with the firm and has entered upon his new duties as manager of the footwear department with the Canadian Consolidated Rubber Co. On the eve of his departure the opportunity was taken to present him with some tangible expression of the high esteem in which he is held by his associates.

A recent despatch from Halifax says: Deputy-Sheriffs Scriven and Mitchell, under a bond of $10,000 handed to Sheriff Hall by the Canadian Consolidated Rubber Co., and the Amherst Boot and Shoe Co., under execution issued by the Supreme Court, made one of the biggest boot and shoe seizures ever made in the city, gathering up in different shoe stores goods to the value of about $5,000. The stock consisted of all new goods, and when the seizures were all concentrated in one store they nearly filled it. They are held under the bond and the deputy sheriffs had the aid of the local police and a force of ten men and seven teams engaged in the transfer of the goods, which are now held subject to further legal proceedings.

The Boot and Shoe Workers' Union Stamp is a business asset to the manufacturer who places it on his shoes, and the retailer who handles these shoes.

Mr. Retailer, the Union Stamp costs you nothing and it is a powerful selling factor for your shoes which are received from factories where production is uninterrupted by labor strikes or factory difficulty.

A Satisfied Customer

The greatest asset a retail merchant can have is a satisfied customer.

There are three ways by which a customer can be really satisfied:—

- (1) Good goods at the right prices.
- (2) Courteous treatment.
- (3) Prompt service.

Good goods at the right prices can be supplied by turning your stock over as frequently as possible and by figuring on a fair margin of profit.

Courteous treatment is due all your customers. Your clerks should treat your customers with the greatest civility and respect.

Prompt service can be given customers by employing the most efficient methods of handling sales.

A National Cash Register System is the most improved method in the world. It eliminates delays, disputes, errors, and creates a friendly rivalry among your clerks. It conserves your profits and keeps down overhead cost.

Write us for further information. This will place you under no obligation.

THERE IS ONLY ONE ISSUE

THE only business worth while to-day is WINNING THE WAR. It matters little what may happen to individual interests so that this is assured. If we lose the war we lose business and everything else that goes with liberty. To hear men prate about the war affecting their business is like listening to a boy whining about his top while the home burns. If the war is won, there will be business enough, and if it is lost there will be no business to worry about.

To hear people rant about "political principles" and party advantage is maddening. What do we owe to either party or its "principles"? What are "party principles" worth with a ruthless and relentless enemy thundering at the gates? The only principle worth the thought of any red-blooded man is Right. The best men of both parties stand for a fight to a finish on this principle. Let us stand behind them. Let us mark the narrow-minded "party" men on either side, who are willing to sell their country for a mess of political pottage.

The temptation will come to plenty of men, especially young men, to vote against "conscription" in casting a vote against Union Government. The day will come when these men will blush to the roots of their gray hairs at the remembrance that their vote was once given to withhold support from the men who have so valiantly defended the outposts of liberty against the ruthless barbarian. Let not our sons or our son's sons say that personal advantage directed our ballots at an hour in the history of the country when its very existence hung in the balance.

The call to the manhood of Canada is to "STAND BY." It is no time even for a trade paper to turn aside and wash its hands in weak self interest. The one and only issue is—Shall we back up those who have forsaken home and country and gone to take their places with the chivalry of Europe in the greatest crusade for freedom and liberty of all time?

There never was an election in the history of Canada which meant so much to it and to the world at large. Failure to stand by our army at the front and failure to stand by the Motherland means not only an ignominious withdrawal from a position which has given us our place amongst the nations of the world, but it invites all that this withdrawal means in lost prestige and lost ground commercially as well as nationally.

One of the most awful curses of Holy Writ is devoted to a nation that sat back during a national crisis: "Curse ye, Meroz; curse ye, Meroz, bitterly; because they came not up to the help of the Lord; to the help of the Lord against the mighty."

But there are men enough in this good country who will respond to this call to a DUTY that is as far above personal feeling, business interests and party advantages as the heavens are above this war worn earth.

Booming Business By Giving Premiums

Good, Useful Articles Appear to Yield the Most Satisfactory Returns—How Some Dealers Conduct Contests and Stimulate Trade—Best Plan is to Award Gifts in Direct Proportion to Purchases Made and to Show no Favoritism

DOES the use of premiums pay the shoe retailer? If so, what form should they take? To whom should they be given? What restrictions should be placed on souvenirs and should their distribution be extended for a long period of time or only for a few days? Should something be given away in the shape of a novelty, or should the premiums be useful and serviceable? Do voting, guessing, popularity and other contests pay?

These and many other questions are often asked, and on this point no infallible advice can be tendered, for what one shoe merchant finds beneficial, another finds harmful and what brings success in one centre may result only in a considerable outlay in another with no corresponding benefit.

Most retailers, however, think that it pays to give away good premiums—articles that are worth while and in one scheme followed by a western man, which has worked out to very good advantage, it has been found that the cost is about two per cent. The prizes are all of good quality and are appreciated by the customers. This retailer adopts this particular form of advertising. He does not use the newspapers, posters or booklets, because he thinks that premiums have a more lasting and beneficial effect. Of course, there are various kinds of advertising: it does not necessarily imply that printers' ink is the only kind. There are so many ways and methods of keeping a name and business before the public that it is often difficult to winnow the wheat from the chaff.

The Self-Satisfied Establishment

Now and then one meets a merchant who says, "I have been here for many years. This house has been selling shoes for well nigh unto half a century. My father was in business before me and we have had customers coming to us for generations. Advertise? Why no, sonny. There is no need of it—not the slightest. We are so widely known now that no one within a radius of thirty miles can mention footwear and not think of T——, the shoe man, and as for business, we are doing about all we care to do. We turned over fifty thousand dollars last year, and that is pretty good for this burg."

Well, complacency is an ideal attribute in the mark-timer and in the contented being, but the healthy, normal, live wire, red blooded, keen business man is not satisfied to jog along at the same old gait year by year. He wants to go on doing greater and better things. He realizes that opportunity is bigger and buying power and volume increasing all the while. He desires to get in on a good thing while it lasts. He does not want somebody else stepping in and securing more than their share of what is going and at the same time drawing the trade away from his own door. Any plan, therefore, that will increase business and make a more frequent turnover of stock is one that should be welcomed and should prove an incentive and stimulus to others.

Getting After More Volume

The fellow who is solaced with things as they are, who, if he equals last year's record or exceeds it by five per cent., is thoroughly satisfied, does not need to be up and at it every minute; but most retailers nowadays, in this age of keen competition and the survival of the fittest, have to hustle and hustle hard for every dollar they get and to retain the hold they have upon the public, which, at best, is fickle-minded and as evanescent as capital itself. However, each one must determine for himself what publicity he desires.

In order to afford premium lovers some conception here is a successful plan followed out by one man and he is pleased with it. It applies to the children's department and will therefore be of very great interest to merchants in general who realize that the future buyers—the on-coming purchasers—are the armies now going to school. They will in a very short time be the patrons of to-morrow.

When a customer makes a first purchase he is given a card, one side of which illustrates two or three premiums and explains the elements of the premium plan, and the other side of which has numerals around its border which add up to $20. On the latter side there are blanks provided for the names of the parents of the child for whom purchases are made, the street address, the name of the salesman, the date and the number of children of these parents under 15 years of age. This set of blanks is filled in, of course, when the first purchase is made. The card is supposed to be taken to the store each time a purchase is made. The card is transferable.

The Inscription on the Cards

One of the cards of this sort recently issued pictured three premiums: A fountain pen, a watch and a doll. This side of the card is headed "Premium Card" and read as follows: "Purchases of boys', girls' or babies' K—— shoes to the amount of $15 entitle the boy or girl to a boys' guaranteed watch with compass in stem, a self-filling fountain pen, or a doll similar to the illustration. With purchases amounting to $20 we give a small watch or a large 'Baby doll' free.

"These premiums are furnished from the advertising appropriation, as it is better to give you the premiums than to spend the same amount in the newspapers and other advertising mediums. Other premiums may be added or changes made without notice.

Know Your Customers' Needs

Do Not Guess or Imagine Their Likes or Preferences, Get at the Facts—How a Large Retail Organization Built Success on Knowing Its Customers' Requirements

THE Liggett Drug Stores are now an institution in all large centres. The organization has some eight thousand stores in the United States and Canada and England. They originated with Louis K. Liggett fifteen years ago, who got the idea that they could be linked together in purchasing and selling arrangements. In discussing store methods and principles recently in the "American Magazine," Mr. Liggett says:—

Human nature is so much alike everywhere that it is possible to learn it and harness it and make capital of it on a big scale in retail business. If one will only study human nature he can conduct his business with something approaching scientific precision, and get away from the old hit or miss methods and rule of thumb.

For example, the old-fashioned way is to place on sale what the storekeeper thinks the customer will want, or ought to want, and then wait for the customer to come in and buy it. The more modern plan is to know in advance, in so far as possible, exactly what the customer is going to want, and then provide just that. A good retailer should know more about the average customer's needs and preferences than the average customer does himself.

One Woman Out of Ten Wants No Perfume

Take, for instance, the item of perfumery. Now, there are all kinds and grades of perfumery, from the very mild kind to the extremely smelly kind, and it is used by all types of women. One way to sell perfumery would be to pick at random a variety of grades, and trust to luck to hit on an assortment that would sell evenly. Obviously, it would be a big disadvantage to have too many of one kind and not enough of another. Yet that is the way a great deal of stocking up is done. And all the while, if the retailer only knew it, the customer's wants are a very definite thing: So many women out of a thousand like a certain kind of perfume, and it doesn't much matter whether they are on Broadway or in Idaho. The ideal way, therefore, is to have just enough of each variety of perfume to meet the requirements and no more.

Finding What People Like

There is no deep psychology about the idea of finding out what people like. It is just plain common sense. Yet it is a comparative novelty. The tendency has been to proceed along lines of haphazard guesswork. If I were conducting a newspaper, or magazine, or motion picture theatre, or any kind of store, I should spare no reasonable expense to ascertain just what my customers thought of the stuff I was offering, which things they liked best. I would aim to know, not only in a general way, but with precision. Think, for example, what an advantage an editor has over his competitors if he knows exactly what his readers like, what percentage care for a certain kind of news, or a certain department in the paper, and his competitor is merely guessing at it.

Have Got to Give Them Quality

But in addition to finding out what people like, you have got to give them quality in merchandise. I regard quality as more important than almost anything else in business. I would rather make an article as good as it possibly can be made, even though the cost be prohibitive, and make my profit by unique selling and operating method, than to produce inferior goods and make money by selling these goods at a high price. Business men can learn no better motto than "Quality First—Always."

I feel that we are approaching an era of definiteness. The man who knows exactly what he is about, where he is going and how he intends to get there, will stand a good chance to outstrip the other fellow.

This detail of scientifically investigating people's wants is only one of hundreds of ways that we try to capitalize human nature. We find it wise to know not only that people like a certain thing but why they like it. Referring again to perfumery, for purposes of illustration, we found out that the odor of the rose is vastly more popular than that of lilies or lilac. And the reason is that one tends to be buoyant while the other is heavy and depressing. The woman customer who prefers rose to lilac probably doesn't know why. If we didn't understand the psychology of the thing any better than she does, we should be working in the dark all around. Moreover, we know why it is blended perfume is far more popular than any one particular odor—because a person tires of too distinct an odor, just as one tires of too decided a pattern in clothes. A plain blue serge will sell better in the long run than a black and white-plaid. The subtle, intangible thing in perfume is best because it carries with it something of elusiveness and mystery. The average woman does not like to be identified by her fragrance the moment she enters a drawing-room. And no husband wishes to have his wife use perfume of too definite an odor, no matter how well he might like it at first. In time it might get on his nerves.

Differences Between Men and Women

Thousands of articles are sold because they appeal to some one or more of the five senses rather than to one's reason. Women, especially, are reached through their senses. They buy a fabric because it looks pretty or feels good when they take hold of it.

A man is more likely to consider such advantages as cheapness or durability; things, you see, which reach his reasoning powers. Automobile salesmen are likely to talk to a woman about the shape of the car, the color of the paint, the upholstery, and the easy-riding qualities, rather than about the efficiency of the engine.

If a merchant or manufacturer can offer an article that tastes better, looks better, smells better, feels better, or sounds better and IS better than any similar article on the market, and has proper selling methods, he can make a fortune.

Men buyers are by no means immune to this appeal through the five senses, though they are not reached in just the same way. The masculine tastes are more vigorous. A man is quite likely to prefer a rich red color where a woman would wish pale pink or baby blue; a man orders strong coffee, and his wife, maybe, takes weak tea.

We have given a great deal of thought to the item of color alone, to find what kind of ribbon on candy boxes, for instance, and what color in various other wrappings will attract the largest number of buyers. In selling candies we have to keep it constantly in mind, too, that while women are the candy eaters, men are apt to be the candy buyers—especially when it comes to the higher-priced goods. They buy for gift purposes. And a man will, of course, pay more for a box of candy to take to his sweetheart than she would pay if she were buying it for herself.

Exact Moment to Suggest Further Purchases

We make it a point in our stores to have what might be called suggestive grouping of articles. When a man comes up to buy a safety razor, he finds various other toilet accessories—shaving soap, talcum powder, and the like—in the same case, or near by, where his eye may easily take note of them. If he needs any such articles he is reminded of the fact and, perhaps, asks for them. Our clerks are instructed to make tactful suggestions about other articles the customer might need, but we are careful not to make this offensive.

It is not difficult to tell which customers will welcome suggestions and which will not. When a woman walks up to the counter and states in an authoritative tone that she wishes to buy a hair brush, and has the air of knowing exactly what she wants, we know that it may irritate her if we make any suggestions. But, on the other hand, there is the customer who is not certain about what she needs, and suggestions will actually be a favor to her. Not long ago a friend of mine went into a sporting goods store to buy some fishing equipment. He had never been fishing before and hadn't the remotest idea what he ought to buy. So the clerk entered into the spirit of the occasion and told him. And my friend was mighty glad that he did. The clerk not only sold more goods, but he conferred a service.

There is a funny thing, though, about making a suggestion. Unless it is timed just right, it does not lead to any more sales. It should be made within a few seconds after the customer has made his first purchase. If we take the customer's money, get his change, hand it to him, and then suggest something else, it is likely to be too late. He doesn't want to go through the whole operation of buying and getting change again. Unconsciously he regards buying anything as a closed incident for the time being. Neither is it wise to talk about selling him something else before he has finished selecting the article he came in for. Let us suppose that a woman asks for a tooth brush. If we instantly say, "And will you need any tooth powder?" before we even show her the tooth brushes, she is justified in being annoyed. But having satisfactorily provided her with the tooth brush that she sought, we may, before ringing up the sale, tactfully call her attention to a special sale of facial soap. One of our best clerks insists that this kind of suggestion is most effective when made within eight seconds after the completion of the first sale.

The Best Place For a Sign

The average person is not a close observer. It is necessary to go more than half way to meet his ordinary range of vision, because he will not go the other half. We have made hundreds of experiments, with signs at soda fountains and find that, to get the best results, we must have a sign directly on the level of the average customer's eye when he is seated. As near as we can ascertain, an announcement of a new drink displayed at eye level is just five times as effective as one two or three feet higher than the eyes. An observant man may look up and see the sign that is higher up, but, as I say, there are comparatively few observing men.

And in signs, just as in any other form of advertising, it is important to have enough variety in the type sizes to give the eye convenient stopping places. For instance:

IT IS EASIER TO READ A LINE LIKE THIS—in a window card, than—

TO READ ONE LIKE THIS

The letters in the second line, while capitals, do not afford the restful variety of the first line. Where the first letter, in each word, is higher than the others, they are like hooks upon which to hang one's attention.

One must never lose sight of the fact in retail business that people are creatures of habit. If they have been accustomed to buy an article in a certain shape or certain color of box, they do not know what to make of it if the color or shape is changed. For instance, cotton batting and medicated cotton have for a great many years come wrapped up in blue tissue paper. The idea is the same as that which prompts us to put bluing into the water when we wash clothes, because the blue makes the white seem whiter. Just now, because of war conditions, it is difficult to get the dyes for this blue tissue paper. But to use pink paper or plain white paper would mean a big reduction in the sales of the manufacturer who attempted anything so revolutionary. People are so in the habit of buying cotton in blue paper that they would be slow to believe it was the same cotton if done up in any other color.

Stray Shots From Solomon

The Bible has been put to queer uses in its time. Not long ago a fellow was arrested in Toronto as a vagrant who pointed to the text

IS WAR "labor not for the meat that RIGHT? perisheth" as his excuse for living on the community. The judge promptly quoted the words of the Apostle, "If a man will not work neither shall he eat," and sentenced him to thirty days at the Industrial Farm. Dozens of husky young men have been hiding behind scripture texts during the past month while their fellows in Flanders have been stemming the Hun flood with sand bags and pushing the brutes back with bayonets. The early settlers of this great country put their trust in God and kept their powder dry. Some of these "safety first" scripture quoters would never have been here had their fathers kept a Bible instead of a gun in the fence corner while they swung the scythe. The "love of God" is a poor weapon on a dark night with a thug at the other end of a six shooter. The man who talks scripture with the Hun at the front door is a brother to him who lets him in at the back.

* * *

In this war as never before, "bulldog courage" has counted. The "insignificant little army" that Britain set down over the channel

HANGING —the first hundred thousand
TO IT that struck its heels into the Flanders mud—has "stuck" and is "bucking" its way through. Ten to one the odds were at the start and now the line is being steadily pushed to the touchdown. "I returned and saw under the sun that the race is not to the swift, nor the battle to the strong." There is something greater than discipline, something mightier than "kultur." Canada's big part in this game of the ages has taught her the lesson of holding on too well to think of letting go at this juncture. We are going to see the thing through by the grace of God, and that in spite of the "enemies within the gate" that would "make us afraid saying, their hands shall be weakened from the work that it be not done." "Now, therefore, O God, strengthen our hands!"

* * *

A "living dog" may be better than a "dead lion," but give us the "lions," dead or alive, that have blocked the path of the LIVE DOGS Hun to Paris and London in preference to the "live dogs" that have managed to dodge the recruiting officer and fool the tribunals in the last three years of grace. It has been well worth while to find that with all its weakening influences the civilization of the twentieth century has not levelled the race down to that of the fifth century, when Rome had neither money to buy her liberty nor men to close her gates against the barbarian avalanche. The

"cook's son" and the "duke's son" have stood knee to knee in this grim business of stemming the tide of frightfulness that threatened to engulf the up-raised torch of liberty. The dust of the frail young heroes of the manor and of the counting house have mingled with that of the factory and the farm laborer upon a soil to which none of them owed love or fealty. They realized that there was "no discharge in the war" of free men against the oppressor.

* * *

Even the Food Controller has failed as yet to take the war seriously. There is altogether too much levity on this food question.

PULL IN "Blessed art thou, O land where
THE BELT thy princes eat in due season, for strength and not for drunkenness."

The Huns have already taught us the truth of the saying "a lean dog for a long hunt." Right at this moment there is more waste and gluttony in Canada than there has been in the last decade. You can't reason or cajole the ordinary man into stinting his stomach. You must throttle him. These little essays on war diet by the Food Control Department and talks to Women's Institutes on food packages are not worth powder to blow them over Gilroy's barn. What we need is action. Get the wheat to the sea-board. Stop the present waste of barley in turning it into beer. Stop the killing of lambs and calves. Prohibit the use of pork except on the farm, and the food situation will ease up. Let the hotels and big restaurants be put under rigid inspection and let the hogs who gorge themselves at home be given to understand that the boys at the front are going to be cared for at all hazards.

* * *

"Wisdom is better than weapons of war," but when a nation or man runs amuck the only remedy is that used for the mad dog.

SALVATION "As far as possible live peaceably
IN GUNS with all men," says the Apostle, but the Christianity that lets an enemy burn down your home and outrage your family is not to be found either in the Old Testament or the New. "The meek shall inherit the earth," but the weak may expect to say "Zu Befehl" to the Emperor of Germany. Christ says, "My kingdom is not of this world." but He does not expect us to hand over the earth to the Devil for the asking. This mongrel religion that some people talk is on a par with the craven politics that sets forth the plea that a plebiscite should be taken on the question as to whether our valiant little army in France shall be exterminated and the law of the jungle established amongst nations. Thank God, the vision to-day is so plain that "he may read that runneth."

Leather Trade Jottings

What is Seen and Heard Among the Trade—Views
and News of the Leather Trade at Home and Abroad

THERE is a more hopeful feeling abroad, although there is not a great deal of business doing. Shoe manufacturers report a little more activity in general lines but, on the other hand, some makers of fine lines seem to find things somewhat quieter. This is particularly the case with men's goods, which appear to be moving slowly in the better grades. For the past two or three weeks the "Victory Loan" campaign has had some effect undoubtedly in this direction, as all minds have been directed to the satisfactory consummation of this enterprise. The great army of men, and particularly young men, engaged in the campaign must mean that the thought of apparel has been in the meantime laid aside. In women's lines the demand has been good and the stimulating effect of the fine weather early in November was very effectively followed up by a spell of cold weather that has been felt in all classes of footwear.

About Army Shoes.—The assurance given shoe manufacturers that an order would be put through for ankle boots for our soldiers abroad, while it has not been of a very definite nature, appears to have been satisfactory. It appears that the purchase is to be confined to requirements in England and that the boys in the trenches are to be supplied still with English made boots. If this is the case the amount of goods required will not make a very great impression upon the shoe production of this country. It seems that certain plates and nails called for in the specifications for trench boots or those required for front line service cannot be procured in Canada. A large shoe findings man on being shown this statement recently, smiled and said the shoe trade could get all this class of goods they liked to pay for. There seems to be a "nigger in the woodpile" somewhere. The shoe trade of Canada has never had a square deal in this matter of army supplies from the beginning. What with crank specifications, incompetent inspection and irregularities that disgusted our best manufacturers at the commencement, the hoodoo has kept up. The shoe trade of Canada has been deprived of the trade of these men at the front. The government should face the issue and give them a square deal at least.

The Victory Loan.—It is expected that the Victory Loan will be fully subscribed and that it will reach the three hundred million mark. But it will take more than this amount to take care of the wheat and munitions alone, so that the vague promises of maintaining the industries of the country through this Victory Loan are somewhat optimistic, to say the least. It will take at least a billion dollars to put Canada in a position to compete with the United States in regard to export to Great Britain on a loan basis. Something will have to be done apart from the method being followed of tapping the savings accounts. The present experience will hardly warrant a repetition of the loan enterprise, although it can easily be seen that Canada has not done her full duty in the matter. Credit will have to be arranged, as the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL has already pointed out. It ought not to be a difficult thing to even hypothecate the resources of a country like Canada in order to enable her to put her full share of financial backing of this great world enterprise in the scale.

Hide Situation.—Business continues steady and a fair amount of business is being done. Packers are maintaining prices in spite of the fact that buyers are bearing the market hard. The demand for leather and hides of weights suited for army and heavy civilian purposes is clearing up stocks pretty well and this is keeping prices firm. Heavy native steers are selling at 34c., with buffs steady and easy at 24c. The calfskin market is quiet, packers asking 45c., with outside city lots selling at 38c. to 40c. Very little is doing with salted hides and the dry hide market continues dull with mounted Bogotas selling at 41c. and Peruvians at 32c.

"The above applies to boys', girls' or babies' shoes only. Hosiery, rubbers, findings and men's or women's shoes cannot be applied on this card. Don't fail to bring this card with you, for the amount must be cancelled at the time of sale. If this card is lost, we cannot give credit on a new one.

"Get friends to purchase the K— shoes and have amount cancelled on your card."

The proprietor states that the plan is very satisfactory. It brings back the customer and causes no hard feelings, since premiums are awarded in direct proportion to purchases made. No favoritism is shown and there is no chance for luck or any other element of that sort to enter in at all.

The boss has given away many premiums and finds that the cost to the store is about 2 per cent. The premiums used are of good quality and are appreciated by the customers, and would cost the proprietor slightly over 5 per cent. if all the cards were turned in. It is found, however, that less than half are turned in, so that the cost of this form of advertising is about 2 per cent. in this case. The plan has also brought the establishment many new customers, but it is especially instrumental in holding the old ones. Many families have used as high as six cards. The card is made out in duplicate and the original is kept in the office files and serves as a mailing list, which is very valuable for sending out catalogues or special follow-up notices.

"HUMAN NATURE" AS SEEN IN THE BOOT SHOP

DON'T HAND MONEY BACK TOO EASILY

The one object of the shoe business is to get goods sold and to get them sold right. To dispose of shoes that are saleable below regular values is not good business. To return money on every petty pretext shows lack of sound judgment or evidence that the one who does this is an easy mark. Not long ago a group of shoemen were discussing the case of one of their number who had sold a man's Havana brown calf bal to a certain customer, whom he knew intimately, for $9.00. It so happened that this particular patron was perusing the advertisement of a large department store the next evening and in the shoe section of the announcement the word "Acme" caught his eye along with the following expressive phrase: "Great clearing sale of Acme shoes, only $5.45 a pair."

This naturally opened the eyes of the reader and he immediately jumped to the conclusion that he had been "stung" by his regular retailer. Going to the store he said, "Here, Bill, you have charged me too much for that pair of Acme shoes," which, by the way, he had not yet worn.

"How is that?" inquired Bill.

"Well, I see them advertised by the G— department store for $5.45 and you tax me $9.00 and the shoes are exactly the same, for I went down and saw them myself."

"Well," replied the retailer, "I do not see how they can dispose of the Acme brand for any such money, as the very pair which I sold you for $9.00 cost me $6.15 wholesale, just seventy cents more than you have quoted."

"Too bad persisted the patron; "I cannot help that; every man has to look out for number one nowadays and I think in all fairness that you should hand me back the amount of the purchase price."

The caller pressed his point and, going to the cash register, the dealer took out $9.00, gave it to the patron and took back the shoes.

In the conversation that followed the narration of this incident, one man spoke up and said that Bill was certainly an easy mark, especially when he knew his customer so well, to have one put over him like that.

"Would I return the money? No, sir, not me. I think I could put up a better argument than that footwear dealer did. There was no complaint on the ground of fit, only price. How would I get over it? Well, this way: I would say, 'Look here, Matt, the shoe that I sold you is one of a line made up particularly for me under a red ticket and is warranted to contain the best leather on the market. I paid more for that shoe a great deal than that department store is asking you for the so-called same brand, but let me tell you, although you do not know it, their goods under this name are very likely discards. There is some imperfection about them, you can rest assured of that. All that these shoes were put on for was to have a sale. I'll wager any amount that the goods were rejects or floor stock secured by the department store and they are not losing any money on their sale even at $5.45. I could buy the same kind of stuff and sell it myself, perhaps not at this figure but at least for a dollar more, as I could not, of course, take the same quantity. My policy, however, is to have all Acme shoes made specially to my order. I know what I am getting and you know what you are getting and there is no thrown-back, defective, discarded merchandise, but shoes that are made right, of right materials and sold at a right price.'" Continuing the speaker stated: "If this very reasonable and definite stand did not satisfy my friend, before I would hand the money back, I would even go so far as to guarantee the wear and worth of the shoes for a certain period, knowing that any experience, no matter how costly, would not involve as much loss as surrendering the profit, on what should have been a closed deal, by handing the money back. Any retailer who cannot put up a better defence than was done in this case has no license to be in the business. He is altogether too conciliatory to make money."

TRAPPED WOMAN CUSTOMER IN NEAT WAY

"Please give me the money back for these shoes; I am in a dreadful hurry and cannot wait a minute."

"Excuse me," said the clerk, "the boss is just upstairs and I will call him as he made the sale."

"Oh, I cannot remain a second. I have an engagement with my dressmaker and am behind time already. Let me have the cash please."

"Well, it will only take a minute to summon Mr. J——" pleasantly replied the young man, who had already given the signal for the boss's appearance and in walked Mr. J——.

"What is the trouble?" he inquired in an agreeable tone.

"Oh," piped out Mrs. S——, "I bought these shoes here and as they do not fit me, I want to get my money back. I am in desperate haste."

"Did you bring your slip?" calmly asked Mr. J——.

"Oh, yes," she replied breathlessly, as she fished it out of her hand bag.

"You evidently did not read it," stated the retailer. "Otherwise you would not try to exchange these shoes or to get the money back."

"How is that?" inquired Mrs. S——. "Well," asserted Mr. J——, "it states plainly on the sales slip that all applications for refund or exchange must be made within one week from the date stamped on the bill. The date here shows that you got these shoes over two weeks ago."

"Oh, is that so?" said Mrs. S—— in surprise. "I did not know. You see I was away to the country for a few days and that is the reason I have not been in before."

"Well," responded the proprietor, "if what you say is true, I do not wish to take any unfair advantage of you, or to show any favors toward one customer that I would not extend to another. I cannot return the money for the shoes, but I will see that you get another pair that fit you perfectly."

"Oh, well," replied the crestfallen Mrs. S——, seeing that the get-the-money back dodge was not going to be worked out so easily, "you see if I am forced to take them—"

"Forced!" quoth J—— in surprise. "Understand that no one is forced to take anything in this establishment."

"I bought them in a terrible rush," exclaimed the woman.

"Hurry? Why, madam, I waited upon you myself; your daughter was here at the time, and you were over an hour making the selection and how can you say that they were forced upon you and that you were shopping in a hurry? I know very well, as it was about the hour for my evening meal when you came in. When I went upstairs I got a severe lecture from my wife for delaying dinner so long. That is how I know you took over an hour to do the purchasing."

Finding that this ruse did not work, Mrs. S—— did not press so fiercely for the return of the money and the shoe merchant stated, "Now, I'll tell you what I would like you to do. Come in some morning when you are at leisure—not in the evening or the afternoon, when we are bound to be very busy. Don't have anything else on your mind. Give us your un divided attention and we will see that you get a perfect fit in the line which you have selected (a pair of black kid bals at $8.00), or any other shoe of a similar type."

"All right," responded Mrs. S——, and out she went. Just to satisfy a feeling of curiosity and to learn for himself how far this customer had stretched the truth. Mr. J—— rang up Mrs. S——'s house about five minutes after she had left. A girl, evidently her daughter, answered the phone, but did not ask who was speaking. In response to the retailer's inquiry, "Is Mrs. S—— at home?" the voice replied, "No, she is out this afternoon."

"Did she get back from the country yet?" was the next query.

"From the country?"

"Yes, I understood she was spending a few days out of the city."

"Oh, no," was the rejoinder. "She never had any thought of going to the country, so far as I know and has been here all the time."

The retailer hung up the receiver, having satisfied himself that the woman had put forward certain pleas that often drop lightly from the lips and which the man who understands human nature learns to take with a pinch of salt. Evidently the daughter told her mother about some one phoning and asking if she had been to the country. The next day Mrs. S—— sent word to the retailer to send up the shoes as she thought they would fit her all right and she would not bother coming down to try on another pair.

"With everybody trying to put one over you or get money back after making a purchase, it is great to be in this game," said Mr. J—— in conclusion. "One has to be on guard all the time and be pleasant, yet firm, and to take a stand that is fair to himself and the interests he represents. If he listens to the whim or pretext of every customer or to every story presented he would wake up each week to find that he was refunding money on about half the sales made and undoing supposedly profitable and final transactions at a loss of a great deal of time, trouble and money. "Goods properly fitted and once sold should stay sold." Let that be the watchword of every man in the footwear business and in no instance return money for shoes that have been worn or soiled."

RETAILER HUNG ON TO "THE FIVE"

A young man came into my store not long ago, looked at a pair of royal purple bals with composition sole and rubber heel, was fitted to a nicety by one of my salesmen and said he could not take the shoes just then but would pay $5.00 on deposit and would send the remaining four down in two or three days. He was given a receipt for the $5.00 and in three or four days we received a note sent by messenger boy, asking that we hand over the "V" as he needed the cash just then very badly, but would come down within a week and take the footwear as agreed upon.

"I sent him back word to the effect that I did not know his signature and was not sure whether the request was a genuine one or not, but that, in any event, we would keep the shoes a little while longer and then if it was convenient for him to call in a couple of days and pay the balance. Back came a note to the effect that the signature was O. K. and that he must have the money at once. I paid no attention to this whatever except to say that when he got the shoes, if they were not satisfactory, we would be pleased to give him a pair that fitted. I politely intimated that we would keep his money until he showed up for the footwear.

"Well, sir, he blew in a few nights later in high dudgeon. He called us all sorts of things and was going to have us arrested for misappropriation of funds, high-handed robbery and I don't know what all. I told him that he had bought the shoes in good faith, we had sold them in good faith and we considered the transaction closed and were not returning money without some more justifiable plea than he had put up. He finally took another pair of shoes that cost exactly $5.00, the amount of the deposit that he had paid and walked away denouncing us vigorously and proclaiming that he would never enter the shop again. This was the last I expected to see of him and imagine my surprise one evening recently when he walked in as pleasant as he could be, bought an $9.00 pair of patent leather shoes with cloth tops and plain toes and went out smiling and quite satisfied.

"By being firm, I not only made the profit on the original pair, but sold him the second pair as well, whereas if I handed him back the $5.00, I would never have seen him again, for he would have taken special pains to stay away from the shop. My motto has always been, "Do not be too easy about giving money back."

HE BELIEVES IN SATURDAY SPECIALS

"Yes, I always endeavor to have Saturday specials and I work up a big trade by advertising them extensively in the daily papers on Thursday and Friday. I dress the window with these specials and thus get the people talking about them. I do not cut prices on regular lines, but generally have enough odd sizes and broken lots to make something interesting for the public," declared a Western Ontario shoe merchant the other day. "I use printers' ink extensively and have taken as much as a whole page announcement at a time. Supposing I pay out some fifteen dollars for an advertisement and do a hundred dollars worth of extra business on Saturday, I consider that I am well repaid for the outlay. The profits on the extra trade more than pay for the ad and leaves me a few dollars besides.

"Then no one can measure the propulsive power of publicity. It keeps my name before the public and makes my establishment thought of whenever shoes are required by any member of the family. In order to carry out my Saturday sales successfully, I make known that no goods are exchanged on that day, neither are any repairs taken in. We want our whole force conserved for selling.

"Another item that we have pretty well cut out is that of delivering shoes. I kept tab on this outlay and found that it was costing me from five to seven cents a parcel. Now I have a sign up to the effect that owing to the shortage of help, it is impossible to deliver shoes and I find that nine-tenths of my patrons are only too willing to carry their purchases home with them. They appreciate the difficulties I am up against in the matter of efficient help at the present time and have fallen in readily with the spirit of the object we have in view, namely, to cut down expenses as much as possible during the war and give our clientele the benefit of the reductions."

SALESMAN GOT TWO ORDERS

I was in an Ontario town a few weeks ago and just before I reached the shoe store for which I was headed met Tommy, who represents a Montreal shoe firm. Knowing something about the peculiarities of this shoe dealer I asked Tommy how he was feeling. "Fine," said he, "got two orders."

I must confess, however, that the dealer didn't look like easy money or ready-for-orders, and my suspicions were correct. He wouldn't even look at my samples. But when he told me that he hadn't ordered a pair of shoes for three months and that he didn't intend to buy any for the next six months I thought I had him. So I said: "I just met a traveler who disproves your statements because he said you had given him two orders." "Well! what of it, if I did? I ordered him to get out and the second order was to stay out." And then I lit out.

SUGGESTION FOR XMAS WINDOW BACKGROUND

The Use of Wallboard and Wallpaper in the Construction of a Background—A Mantle Suggestion Which Gives a Touch of the Real—Any Footwear Dealer with Originality Should be Able to Arrange an Attractive Christmas Background

THE above background is a suggestion that may be adopted in whole or in part for a shoe display window.

Its adaptability will, of course, depend largely upon the arrangement of your window and the space at your disposal.

The design as shown is made of wall-board nailed on a framework of seven-eighths by two-inch material, for the making of which we have given instructions before.

On to this board may be pasted wall paper of suitable design and color to match the other trims. But for a Christmas window we suggest a holly design, or if this cannot be obtained use a plain cream paper and attach sprigs of holly, or wreaths as shown in illustration.

If your window is large enough you may arrange a door in it as shown. A real door casing may be used or you may make it of Beaver-board and paper it with imitation wood paper. A pole and curtain will add to the realistic effect.

The mantle may be borrowed or can be constructed out of packing boxes and papered with imitation brick paper. The and-irons and grate you may borrow from your stove supply friend.

A neat card will complete your window and card designs may be seen in last issue of this Journal.

Wallpapers offer splendid possibilities for use in shoe window backgrounds, and the live shoe retailer can always utilize these to good purpose. Suitable papers are easily procurable by any dealer. The choice is a wide one both as to designs and color.

A window background attractively papered with a good wallpaper that is suitable for the lines of Christmas footgery shown could hardly be improved upon.

Prevailing styles in wallpapers lend themselves to very effective treatments. They offer an almost limitless range of ideas to the ingenious mind. Where backgrounds must be constructed at small cost they are a decided advantage to the trimmer. Many neat designs in quiet colorings, that any trimmer should be able to make valuable use of, are obtainable.

To describe in writing the manner of treating wallpaper is much more difficult than a personal demonstration would be. Ordinary frame work constructed of one by two-inch strips for panels, columns, etc., will answer. Cover these frames with unbleached wall board on to which the paper may be pasted. A coat of water paint on this will give it an effective appearance, and it will permit the use of medallions and panels without covering up the entire ground. Once a set of frames has been secured they can be recovered again at only the cost of the paper or paint.

It is not desirable to use backgrounds constructed of a series of straight panels with border on top, of paper with vivid patterns consisting of large clusters of flowers in gaudy colorings with well covered grounds, but there are various ways of using papers that are as different from those of some time ago as can be.

Look carefully through any wallpaper department in search of styles adaptable for window work. It will reveal many things. There are plain shades that have all the appearance of plain colored felts, and papers that resemble expensive brocaded silks and satins that would make most effective panels. Then we see landscape panels which will answer our purpose in many instances. Stencil border effects that can be cut out and mounted on any material—wood, felt, cotton, sateen, etc. The cost is a mere trifle compared with stenciling, and the result none the less effective. Cut-out medallions that might be used on columns with good effect, are also plentiful.

TOOK "KICK" OUT OF THE FARMER ON SHOE PRICES

Clever Salesman Pointed Some Cold Facts Showing the Rural Resident that He Should Preserve Discreet Silence—Farmers Never Got Such High Prices and Have No Reason to Grouch Because Footwear Has Gone Up—Some Concrete Facts

“WALL, I swan! Seven dollars for that pair of boots? Neyer heard the like if it in all my born days. Highway robbery, mister!”

A rural gentleman with a big roll of greenbacks in his hip pocket—securely fastened in an old-fashioned leather wallet, made this exclamation in a shoe store the other day when the writer chanced to be present.

“Yes, sir, and mighty reasonable at that,” replied the shoeman courteously; “ would have been more if I hadn’t bought them on the old market.”

“Neow look ahere, young man, I hain’t paid such a price since the Civil war, and with things up where they are to-day I can’t afford it, nuther.”

Can’t Afford to Sell or Buy

“Get any more for your hogs?” pointedly asked Mr. Shoe Dealer are right. And the demand wasn’t as great then as it is now, and you had to bring it to the city, too, to sell it.

“Hain’t got none to sell—too high. Can’t afford to sell ‘em and can’t afford to eat ‘em. What’s that got to do with it?”

“Speaking about eggs, why I put fifty dozen down in water glass this year at 47 cents a dozen, and now the price is 75 cents. Three years ago you got 35 to 38 cents for your eggs, and people called you a robber then, just as you call me robber now, when I am making a smaller percentage of profit on my shoes than I did then.

“Beans! Ha. Ha! That’s where it rubs. Let’s see. Marrow beans, per 100 pounds—you see I am well posted—$6.60 when the war broke out and people said we wouldn’t get into it. To-day we are in it with both feet, that is all save the farmers, and marrows are $14.25. Some jump, eh? Pea beans—here they are. Three years ago this month $4.60; now $14. Good thing shoes aren’t made of beans, my friend.

“Well, cabbages are plentiful, and we can’t live on that, but my list shows that even these are $16 to $20 a ton, a slight jump from $9 to $12 in 36 months.

“Pork, Pork? Seems to me I heard that word some-

A RURAL GENTLEMAN MADE THIS EXCLAMATION THE SHOEMAN PRODUCED COMPARATIVE FIGURES HE FORGOT HIS WIFE WAS WAITING OUTSIDE IN THE CAR

“Well, you can’t expect to buy shoes at the old prices when the shoe manufacturer has to pay more than double the former prices for leather tanned from your cows and calves, welting made from your hogs, and also pay increased wages to his help, because of the higher prices you are getting for your farm produce. Just stop and do a little reckoning, my friend, and you will find that you and the rest of the farmers of this country are better off than anyone else and that, of all people, you have the least kick coming. You never before had such a demand for your produce, and at such high prices. You are practically exempt from military duty, you and your sons on the farms. You have had bumper crops and you are right on top to-day.”

“Yes, but look how high—”

“How high farm products are? Wait just a minute, I want to show you something.”

Butter is Double the Price

The shoeman stepped up to his desk and produced a paper containing a list of items and comparative figures.

“Listen to this,” he continued, smiling, as the farmer adjusted his spectacles:

“Butter in September, 1914, the year the war opened, 27 cents. I am paying you 50 to 55 cents to-day, yet you think those shoes too high.

“Cheese. Why, people motor right to your door these days and pay you retail prices for cheese, butter and eggs. I know that, because I do it myself. The wholesale price of cheese to-day is around 26 cents, yet when the war broke out you got from 15 to 16 cents. Oh, I know, and my quotations where. Oh, yes. We used to eat pork. Sure, I remember here it is, sure enough. In 1914 pork was pretty high for pork, considering that ham and bacon used to be the poor man’s dish, along with potatoes. Latest quotation, $24 a hundred pound—more than double, and still going up. Hold on to your hogs for these are hogless days.”

Will Even Forego the Turkey

“Well, I don’t have to tell you about wheat, and barley, and poultry. Turkeys? You’ll be wearing shoes on Christmas day, I’m sure, but with me and most people it will be a turkeyless feast for all save the wealthy and the farmers.”

“I don’t expect to eat turkey this year,” put in the country man, as the shoeman turned to greet a young lady customer.

“I remarked that I don’t expect to have turkey myself this year,” repeated the rural gentleman when the shoeman returned. “You see, we just can’t afford it, with turkeys so high. It costs a lot for the corn to feed—that is, corn is so high that we don’t feel that we should feed it to the turkeys when we can get so much—I mean—say, how much did you say these shoes are? I almost forgot my wife was waiting for me outside. Much obleeged. Good day.”—The Shoe Retailer.

LIEUT. BLACHFORD JOINS FLYING CORPS

Howard C. Blachford, President of the Toronto Shoe Retailers' Association since its inception over two years ago, has received a commission with the Royal Flying Corps and has entered upon his new duties. Lieut. Blachford is an enthusiastic military man as well as an ardent shoeman and many friends in the trade, while learning with regret of his retiring temporarily from mercantile ranks, are proud of the step that he has just taken in the service of his King and Country.

A. Levy, the vice-president of the Toronto Shoe Retailers' Association, will be acting president of that body until the next annual meeting.

Owing to conscription, the shortage of help and other pressing problems of the moment, the regular monthly meetings of the Association are not being held, but there are district associations throughout the City which will deal with any particular problems of local interest.

Lieut. Blachford has been identified with the firm of H. & C. Blachford, Limited, of which he is the treasurer, for the past seventeen years, and since 1909 has been buyer and manager of the women's department. These duties will be taken over by Fred Blachford, assisted by J. J. Holts and Miss Law, who for a number of years have been with the firm.

When war broke out Mr. Blachford joined the Queen's Own Rifles as a private. He soon became a non-commissioned officer and then took a course in the Provisional School of Infantry, qualifying for a commission. Two years ago he joined the 12th Regiment, York Rangers, as a Lieutenant. He has been anxious to go overseas for some time and appointment as Lieutenant in the Royal Flying Corps is pleasing to his friends as well as himself. Lieut. Blachford will be equipment officer, and for the present will be stationed in Toronto although it is likely the Corps will be removed to some distant point in the near future.

On Saturday, November 24th, just as the lady members of the staff were preparing to leave at six o'clock, after the day's duty, they, along with the salesmen and heads of the various departments, gathered around the desk of Lieut. H. C. Blachford and presented him with a silver-mounted malacca wood cane, suitably engraved, and a valuable fountain pen. The cane bore the inscription "H. C. B. November 24th, 1917."

The following address was read by J. J. Holts:

Dear Howard: ☞

We feel that we should take this opportunity of expressing our pride and admiration in you, also in wishing you good luck in the new duties and responsibilities you are about to assume in joining the Imperial Forces. Though we deeply regret having to part, even for a short period, we trust, with a man whose ingenuity, broad-mindedness and thoughtful decisions in all matters of business have been equitable to all, we are quite prepared to believe that as a soldier of the King, your genuine sense and moral obligations to friends and brother officers will merit success as illustrious as that of the past.

Again we all unite in wishing you good luck and a speedy return and would ask you accept this Cane and Fountain Pen, not for their intrinsic values, but as small gifts in remembrance of the years you have supported us with your judicial reforms and facetious, yet commendable supervision.

With best wishes, we are,

Staff, H. & C. Blachford.

Lieut. Blachford made an appreciative and appropriate reply, referring to the pleasant relations that had always existed between the members of the staff and himself. In taking his departure to do whatever he could in the great world struggle for freedom and liberty it was a source of much satisfaction to know that so many cordial good wishes and kind thoughts were with him.

The gathering broke up with three hearty cheers for Lieut. Blachford.

BIG CALL FOR COCOA BROWN

The great demand for cocoa brown threatens to have a serious affect on the business throughout this section of the state, says a despatch from Cleveland. While the larger dealers in this city have been able to supply themselves fairly well, travelling salesmen say that there is a continuous demand for them from all the towns they visit, and it is getting to the point where it cannot be satisfied. Some manufacturers have asked the traveling men to co-operate with them in selling something else, and while they are willing they say nothing will induce people to desist from buying this cocoa brown but the fact that no more can be had. There is also some complaint that styles are being changed too often, and merchants being disappointed in not receiving the goods they order. New samples are sent and by the time orders begin to go in, notification is given that deliveries cannot be made on them. While under ordinary circumstances salesmen would be able to take care of all this it is difficult for them to explain so often to customers the causes of delays and non-deliveries. Some argue that it would be better to decide upon a number of standard models, to be used during the war. They feel that merchants would be much better satisfied, and that in the end both manufacturer and merchant would make as much profit as they would by continuing the present plan.

NEW SAMPLE ROOM JUST OPENED

Clark Bros., Limited, of St. Stephen, N. B. and J. F. Clark, Limited, of Montreal East, have opened up a permanent sample room in Montreal at 1014 New Birks Building, Phillips Square, which is in charge of Kenneth C. Savage, son of R. L. MAKES SPECIALTY OF SHOEING THE DEFORMED

How Whitby Shoemaker has Built Up Unique Business—Always Had Much Sympathy with the Suffering and has Done His Utmost to Afford Them Relief—Builds Surgical Shoes for People All Over the Country—Some Interesting Observations

R. H. Quinton is a shoe maker who has been in business in Whitby, Ont., for the past twelve years and in that time has developed a wide connection with the trade. His specialty is making shoes for cripples and persons with deformed feet.

He began devoting attention to this branch of the craft about fifteen years ago and has made such a study and mastery of it that he supplies surgical shoes to many persons living in different parts of Canada from the Maritime Provinces in the East to the Prairies in the West. Mr. Quinton specializes in extension boots with inside cork or outside cork. His service extends to all persons suffering with any kind of pedal trouble, whether resulting from war, accident or disease and he has afforded, by means of these specially made boots, relief to many people having Hip-Joint Disease, Infantile Paralysis, Rheumatism and other ailments.

The Need of Foot Health

"How did I happen to get in this line," said Mr. Quinton. "Well I have always had a great deal of sympathy for the cripple and those suffering from ill-formed or diseased feet. I recognized that foot comfort and foot health are most important in a man's physical well-being and that when he is suffering from pedal pains, his efficiency, strength and endurance are greatly impaired. I have read a great deal on foot troubles and their cure and the appliances that many firms have put on the market in order to alleviate the same. Some of this equipment is good and answers the purpose very well, but much of it comes a long way from meeting the object in view. No two feet are alike, as the measurements of various parts of them show, and I have always claimed that people with abnormal extremities should have their shoes custom made. I have spent considerable money in making known my insight and facilities for making shoes for cripples and for the deformed ones. I conduct a general repair business, but nearly half of the work that I do is along the line of building shoes for out-of-the-ordinary feet."

Since the Military hospital has been located in Whitby, Mr. Quinton has done numerous jobs for the soldiers and the accompanying illustration shows a pair of shoes which were made recently for a returned hero. The boot on the left is a tan winter calf Blucher with full double sole, and the one on the right, which has an outside cork sole of one and a half inches, gives some idea of the class which Mr. Quinton is called upon to build. He has put on outside cork soles as high as five and six inches for short limbed persons and also does considerable inside cork work.

Experience Has Been Varied

For thirty-three years Mr. Quinton has worked at the trade. He started in at Woodford, Ont., about eleven miles from Owen Sound. His principal business in those days was making long boots of French calf and French kip. After working five years in the shop, he went West and for some years was engaged with J. L. Desmore, shoemaking instructor in an Indian school at Regina, where riding boots were made in large numbers for the Royal Northwest Mounted Police. After serving considerable time there, Mr. Quinton returned to Ontario and worked in different places. He then started business for himself in Weston, where he remained for two years, and in 1904 he went to Whitby. After being there a few weeks he thought he would branch out for himself, although told at the time he would seriously regret the step, but he has never had cause to look back upon the movement with disappointment. His trade has grown, and he has a well-equipped shop eighteen by twenty feet, with a twelve foot Progressive finishing outfit, which he put in four years ago. He has two display windows. Recently he has been working alone, owing to his inability to get competent help. Like other shoemakers in this respect, he is finding that skilled labor is scarce; in fact not to be found in many centres. Mr. Quinton gets $12.00, $15.00 and $18.00 a pair for cork work, the average price being about $15.00. He is an enthusiastic craftsman and is never tired of studying the human foot and fitting it with the proper kind of leather covering.

Pair of shoes made by R. H. Quinton, of Whitby, for customer with one leg an inch and a half shorter than the other.

KNOWS SELLING GAME THOROUGHLY

Selling shoes is the chief amusement of Fred. Lessard, the energetic Quebec representative of the Tetrault Shoe Manufacturing Co., Montreal, of which company he is also a director. He has been identified with the firm for some nineteen years, starting as a boy in the office. Mr. Lessard steadily worked his way up to positions of importance and after obtaining a good knowledge of the activities of the plant, he went on the road, and is now one of the most successful travelers in the Province of Quebec. This year he hopes that his business will reach the quarter of a million mark.

Up to a few years ago, the subject of this reference took an active interest in military affairs, and for twelve years was connected with the 64th Chateaugay and Beauharnois Regiment, rising to the rank of Captain. Mr. Lessard comes from a military family, and is a relative of Maj. General Lessard, who has done so much in the interest of recruiting throughout Canada. Mr. Lessard is a genial whole-souled gentleman who makes many friends in the retail trade, and is never weary in the selling game, although he manages now and then to steal away from it for a few days while he goes on a hunting expedition. He is an ardent motorist and enjoys many a spin over the highways.

WHAT CONSTITUTES AN ORDER?

To define, to their salesmen, just what constitutes an order and what does not was the purpose of the following outline, prepared by a member of the National Boot & Shoe Manufacturers' Association:

"Good faith on both sides should be the basis. The customer is not always to blame for the atrocious practice of cancelling; misdirected zeal of salesman and lack of clearness are partly responsible.

"Terms, prices, quantity and, in some cases, total of order ought to be clearly shown and accepted by customer.

"Duplicate of order should invariably be left.

"An order contingent upon any future condition is no order. It is simply a follow-up that binds neither party and should be treated as such.

"An 'at once' order where there is a past due account, or where the customer's line of credit is already full is not an order—it's an embarrassment.

"An order for $1,000 for a dealer who is not entitled to a larger line than $300 is not an order, it is a grievance.

"An order for a new account without full references is no order. It's a clog in the wheel and a cause of hard feeling on the part of the customer, who may be perfectly good and entitled to prompt shipment and the best of treatment, which he fails to get through no fault of ours.

"An order to be made special for any but the most substantial and dependable dealers is not an order. It's just that much lost motion.

"An order not plainly and correctly written is not an order. It's an aggravation.

"An order for single pairs—especially for a new account—is not an order. It's a boomerang.

"An order for staple shoes, unsupported by a proper amount of profit-bearing business, is not an order. It's a loss of self-respect and the respect of your customer.

"An order that does not plainly show every agreement or every special condition entered into between yourself and your customer, is not an order. It's a breeder of misunderstanding and the cause of lost trade.

"Help us to keep down returned goods. Discourage single pairs."

SHOEMAKERS PROTEST AGAINST INJUSTICE

There has been some rather nasty articles recently in the London, England, morning papers on profits on army shoes. The fact that government officials have made individual contracts at rates lower than those arranged with the Shoe Manufacturers' Federation seems to have given ground for the talk. A large meeting of shoe manufacturers was held to protest against the injustice, and the change of policy which permits individual arrangement, found so disastrous early in the war. At present, prices are arranged mutually by a committee of the Federation and the War Office.

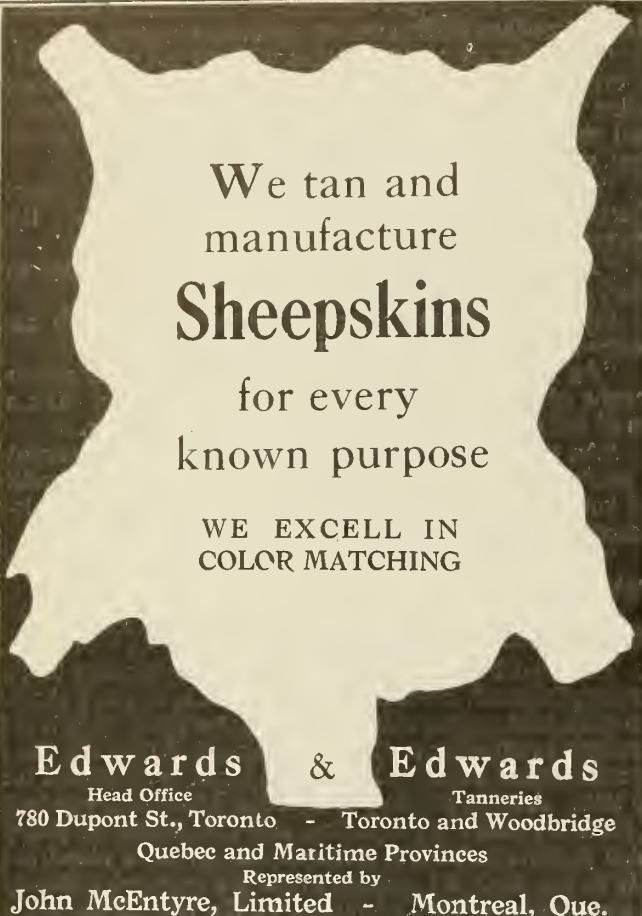

HISTORIC FIRM CEASES MANUFACTURING

The Robert Taylor Co., Limited, of Halifax, N.S., who have been makers of boots and shoes for half a century, have discontinued manufacturing for the present, largely owing to conditions in the labor market, as well as for other reasons. The company, however, are extending their jobbing business, which has been steadily growing for the past few years, and will carry a larger and more complete range of footwear than ever before. While we have retired from the manufacturing end of the business it does not of necessity mean that we will not engage in it again at some future time under more favorable auspices," says Mr. R. D. Taylor, manager of the company.

SHOE COMPANY BECOMES INCORPORATED

The Humberstone Shoe Co., Limited, of Humberstone, Ont., manufacturers of children's shoes and sandals, have recently become incorporated with a capital stock of one hundred thousand dollars. The officers are C. C. Knoll, president; P. G. Knoll, vice-president, and C. A. Neff, secretary-treasurer.

Messrs. Knoll have been in the shoemaking game ever since they were fifteen years of age and a partnership was formed thirteen years ago with C. A. Neff. The concern began with a capital stock of fifteen hundred dollars and, during the first few years, the partners did not receive wages or dividends putting all their earnings into the business. The volume of the output has steadily grown and each year has witnessed a distinct advance. The non-rip sandals of the firm are widely known, while they have made a specialty of a white canvas sandal. The various lines made by the Humberstone Shoe Co. are handled by the jobbing trade. C. C. Knoll is general manager of the organization and looks after the office, P. G. Knoll supervises the sole leather room and C. A. Neff the packing and shipping.

For those located where there is no agency there is no better time than now to procure it—while women are reading and thinking Dr. Edison. Regular agencies are already feeling a decided stimulus. A. E. Marois, of Quebec is a shoe manufacturer by instinct and training and occupies a foremost position in the ranks of St. Crispin. A native of the Ancient Capital, his parents were of French-Canadian origin and he received his education at the Quebec Academy. Mr. Marois began his business career in 1885, entering the employ of Messrs. W. H. Polley & Co., shoe manufacturers. He set himself to work to master all departments of the game and so proficient did he become that within four years he was made a foreman and remained with the concern for ten years. Then he entered into partnership with Paul Tourigny, M.P.P. and the partnership of Tourigny & Marois was formed. They started in a modest way, employing only sixty hands and to-day the plant is the largest in Quebec City. Five years ago, Mr. Marois bought out his partner and is now the sole proprietor of the business which is still conducted under the original name. A few years ago a fire wiped out the premises of the Company, but an attractive and admirably laid out, six story building was erected on St. Valier and Arago Sts., and the structure is regarded as one of the model shoe factories of America. The capacity of the plant is five thousand pairs a day, the firm specializing in a medium line of welts, McKays, and Standard screws. Employment is given to some six hundred hands.

Mr. Marois is a member of the Quebec Board of Trade, director of the Levis Dry Dock and La Compagnie du Parc Jacques Cartier. He is also largely interested in the Victoriaville Furniture Co. and the Victoriaville Clothing Co., of Victoriaville, Que., and other organizations. Fond of sports and an ardent fisherman, Mr Marois has demonstrated his ability in the angling art on many occasions. He is vice-president of the St. Antoine Fish and Game Club and a director of the Summit Club and Riviere a Pierre. An enthusiastic motorist he belongs to the Quebec Auto Club, as well as to the Knights of Columbus, the Royal Arcanum and the Chevalier de Bonaparte.

In 1889, Mr. Marois was united in marriage to Miss Anna Belanger, daughter of Benoit Belanger, and they have a happy family of fourteen, seven sons and seven daughters.

In religious faith Mr. Marois is a Roman Catholic, and in politics is a staunch supporter of the Liberal party.

SEND YOUR OLD SHOES TO FRANCE

One of the many war charities which should especially appeal to members of the shoe trade is the recent modest appeal for old shoes to be sent to France. There are thousands of poor women, children and old men in that country who will go into the winter barefoot, unless this country will furnish them with some kind of footwear.

Shipments from any city or town may be made direct to New York. Packages should be addressed to the Relief Clearing House, 133 Charlton St., New York City, marking it "For Dr. E. W. Shurtleff, Relief Work, Paris, France."

The leading express companies will accept shipments to this address at two-thirds the regular rate. They are forwarded from New York without charge. A lot of old shoemakers will put every pair in shape for the wear before they are given out. The committee says: "You can rest assured they will be turned over to those who are in absolute need."

Millions of pairs of old shoes should be gathered, repaired and sent to Europe where a famine exists in leather and shoes. Here is a great opportunity for shoe manufacturers, shoe retailers and indeed tanners and leather dealers to engage in a charitable work and at the same time do themselves a good turn.

Retailers could make public their desire to receive old shoes, which will be forwarded to New York. There should be placards in every show window announcing that old shoes will be received.

SERGT. PRESHO JOINS SELLING FORCE

D. H. Presho, late with Cecil A. Culbert, merchant, of South Porcupine, Ont., has joined the traveling staff of Geo. E. Boulter, 3 Wellington street east, Toronto, and is covering the city in the interest of a line of shoes manufactured by the Wm. A. Marsh Co., of Quebec, for which Mr. Boulter has secured the agency in Toronto. Sergt. Presho was a former member of the 60th Battalion and is well known in Montreal and other centres, having traveled for the Slater Shoe Co. and the Thompson Shoe Co. for a number of years. He left for overseas in 1915 and was wounded at Hooge the following year. After spending several months in the hospitals in France and England, he was invalided home and discharged early this year. Only recently Mr. Presho had charge of the shoe department for Mr. Culbert at South Porcupine.

DISTRICT SHOEMEN ELECT OFFICERS

The City of Toronto has been divided into six districts by the Toronto Shoe Retailers' Association with a view to intensifying the interest of the work in various sections. This seems to have been a move in the right direction. Already the shoeman in three districts have held meetings and have elected a chairman and secretary. In each case important matters such as early closing, Wednesday half-holiday, rubber prices, special sales, etc., have been discussed.

One of the first districts to organize was the shoemen east of the Don river, who held a representative gathering and elected the following officers: chairman, W. Crossley, 127 Danforth avenue; secretary, A. T. Widdowson, 176 Main street, East Toronto

It was decided by this Association that regular monthly meetings should be held on the Wednesday night preceding the general monthly meeting of the Central Association. The shoemen east of the Don have an arrangement whereby all shoe stores every Wednesday afternoon. This plan is likely to continue throughout the year. Other matters which were discussed at the meeting were that of having a clearing house for getting rid of odds and ends and slow sellers. It was thought that some arrangement might be made whereby all shoemen could unite in this movement. Another proposition brought up for discussion was co-operative buying, especially in connection with rubbers, in order to secure the largest possible discount.

Rubber selling was discussed and a schedule of prices agreed upon as the minimum for first quality goods. The full list of prices will be found on the "Rubber Notes" page in this issue of the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL.

The shoemen of Queen, Roncesvalles and Dundas streets, at an organization meeting, elected C. C. Allan, 1424 Queen street west, as chairman, and F. D. Chapple, 1500 Queen street west, as secretary. It was decided to meet the first Wednesday in every month at ten o'clock in the evening. The gatherings will be held at the different places of business of the members. A resolution was passed, which has been forwarded to the Central body, protesting against the practice of certain wholesale merchants selling goods by retail. It was stated that too many private parties are buying shoes in single pair lots from wholesale establishments. The matter of closing on Wednesday afternoon was brought up, but several members expressed the opinion that rather than have a weekly half-holiday during the winter months, they would prefer to close early a couple of nights each week. This question will be dealt with further at subsequent gatherings.

The shoemen of Bloor Street West and St. Clair District elected T. A. Wilson, 579 Bloor st. west, as chairman, and A. Neale, 614 Bloor St. West as Secretary. The matters discussed at this gathering included the possibility of arranging a selling schedule for rubbers. It is also stated that the proposition is being considered of co-operative buying in the matter of rubber footwear. Another session will be held at an early date, when various topics will be taken into consideration and definitely dealt with.

HORSESHOE HUNT CLUB HAD FINE OUTING

The hunting season of November, 1917, added one more to the long list of the successful and long-to-be-remembered outings of the Horseshoe Hunt Club. The members left for the hunting grounds in their Pullman car attached to the Cobalt Grand Trunk train, leaving Toronto the evening of October 30th. The membership is limited to twelve, but this year owing to war conditions interfering, nearly half of the real members were unable to go but, their places were filled by a sufficient number of guests to complete the number. The company consisted of John H. Ross, Brockville; Elmer Davis, vice-president A. Davis & Son, Kingston, Ont.; James L. and David Johnston, Ottawa; Dr. Skinner, Guelph; Jas. Ross, Aurora; Fred N. Winter, Dr. Ogden Winter, Toronto; Fred Underhill, president Underhills, Limited, Barrie; J. R. Y. Broughton, Dr. Scott and Hon. E. J. Davis, Newmarket.

After a successful railway trip and steamship trip over the Lake of Bays, etc., the company arrived at the Club

The Horse Shoe Hunt Club and spoils of the chase

House on the afternoon of October 31st. The hunting ground is situated in the Haliburton district.

That evening the Field Captain discussed the whole situation for the next morning, November 1st, with the guide and the work was all laid out and an early start made in the morning, and one of the members had shot the first deer at 8.30 a.m. that morning. The hunt continued during the two weeks, with varying success from day to day, but there was one feature that stood out prominently and that was the remarkably fine weather for hunting during every day of the two weeks, something that has not been experienced at any time in the past. Not one hour was lost through bad weather. On the evening of the 15th, the full number had been obtained. The deer were brought into the Club House, strung up on a pole and various members took snapshots, showing the results for 1917, which they will treasure during the years to come.

There are always a number of incidents that occur during a two weeks' hunt, and this was no exception. The most outstanding feature of the occasion was that a fine buck shot by Dr. Scott, and hung up in the usual way in the woods until the last day, was entirely destroyed by a bear. The guide who has lived in that section for over twenty years stated this was the first time that he had ever known anything of that description to happen.

NEWSY BRIEFS FROM ST. JOHN

Captain Ralph Hayes, M.C., son of Mayor R. T. Hayes, president and managing director of the firm of J. M. Humphrey & Company, Limited., has been appointed casualty officer for Military District No. 7, with headquarters in St. John. Captain Hayes, who recently returned from the front where he served with an artillery unit, was formerly in charge of a department of the firm's factory. It will be recalled that he won a Military Cross for gallantry displayed in action on the battlefields of France.

Gerald Murdoff, of the Dorothy Dodd Shoe Company of Boston, who is Canadian representative for this line, was in the city last week. R. L. Fraser was in St. John a few days ago in the interest of the J. & T. Bell, Limited, of Montreal.

Harold W. Rising, secretary-treasurer of the firm of Waterbury & Rising, Limited, wholesale and retail shoe dealers, recently received a letter from his brother, Captain Percy M. Rising, who is quarter-master of the New Brunswick 13th reserve battalion. He said he was in the best of health although he was kept quite busy. His unit was transferred from Shoreham to Seaford, England, where they are at present located.

E. J. Fleetwood, a well-known boot and shoe merchant of this city, has returned from a trip to Nova Scotia, where he was taking spring orders for his special line of "Fleetwood Footwear." He found business conditions good and his trip was very successful.

Friends in St. John will regret to learn of the serious illness of John Stewart, a well-known shoe merchant in Amherst. Recently he was stricken with apoplexy and his condition is serious.

William Hodges, sales manager for George A. Slater, Limited, of Montreal, was in the city recently on his semi-annual trip in the interests of the company.

SHOE NEWS IN SHORT SHAPE

J. S. Townsend, of Hamilton, was a recent visitor calling on the Montreal trade.

R. O. Dunhill, manager of the Walk-Over Boot Shop, Toronto, was in Brockton, Mass., recently on a business trip.

H. C. Parker, of Parker-Irwin, Limited, Montreal, has just returned from a business trip through Western Ontario.

Mallette & Co., 225 Lemoine street, Montreal, have been appointed to represent Lucien Borne, of Quebec City, through Montreal and district.

Bennett, Limited, have installed all their machinery in their new plant at Chambly, Que., and they are now in full running order.

The Ocean Shoe Co., Limited, of Montreal, have been granted a federal charter. One of the principal men behind the enterprise is Omer Chevretils, who was formerly with F. X. Charbonneau, and his interests were bought out by Mr. De Guise, of the firm of Charbonneau & De Guise. Mr. Chevretils then started a jobbing business at 15 Gosford street, Montreal, under the name of the Lion Brand Shoe. He states that he has secured land on Lagauchetiere street, Point-aux-Trembles, not far from the Canadian Footwear Co.'s factory, and that it is the intention of the promoters of the Ocean Shoe Co. to put up a four-storey brick building, 44 by 100 feet, and equip it with the very latest machinery for the manufacture of medium priced lines of footwear for men and women, which will be sold to jobbers only.

R. L. Savage, Toronto, left this week for Winnipeg, being called west owing to the serious illness of his brother, M. L. Savage.

Business with the repairers has been keeping up steadily during the past few weeks. Several inquiries have been made for help, but like most other places, there is no available labor to fill the gaps.

The employes of the Davis Leather Co., Limited, Newmarket, Ont., raised the sum of $10,000 in subscriptions to the Victory Loan, while the members of the firm subscribed $50,000 to the fund, making a total of $60,000, which is a splendid showing.

E. E. Donovan, of E. T. Wright & Co., St. Thomas, Ont., recently spent a few days in Rochester, Boston and Rockland, Mass., on business. J. A. Munroe, vice-president of the company, recently paid a visit to the Canadian plant.

C. F. Todds has bought the old Speight wagon works in Markham, Ont., for $7,050, which was sold recently under mortgage. He will form a syndicate of local capitalists who intend to start a shoe factory in the building early in the new year.

W. J. Brigden, Calgary, Alta., has commenced in the boot and shoe business.

Owing to the scarcity of male help in shoe stores in various cities throughout Canada, several shoe merchants who heretofore have never employed salesladies, are engaging them in their women's department; in fact the service of female help has become an absolute necessity in many cases, owing to the number of young men under the Military Service Act being called to the colors. Among the stores who are now employing salesladies in the women's department is the Walk-Over Boot Shop, Yonge street, Toronto, who find that the new arrangement is working very satisfactorily.

The John Palmer Co., Limited, of Fredericton, N.B., report that their line of Draw String shoe packs is an exceptionally strong one for 1918, as well as their summer packs and plow shoes for spring and summer wear. At present the company are exceptionally busy and short-handed, but are doing the best they can to keep their customers supplied. Their trench boot department is working night and day to keep up with the rush which, it is expected, will soon ease off, as trench boots are used largely for trench work during the winter months.

H. H. Lightford, for some time past superintendent of the Saco, Me., factory of the Sears-Roebuck factory, concluded his services with that concern and has accepted a position as superintendent of Plant Bros. Co., Boston, Mass. Mr. Lightford is well-known in Canada, having been associated with the Kingsbury Footwear Co., Montreal, the Perth Shoe Co., Perth, and J. M. Humphrey & Co., St. John, N. B.

PITHY NOTES FROM VANCOUVER

There has been very little snap among the buying public in Vancouver during the past few weeks owing to the purchasing of Victory Bonds, comforts for the boys in the trenches and Yule-tide remembrances looming up in the distance. The buying of footwear, therefore, has been of a secondary consideration. One of the very mild falls has been experienced, such as we enjoyed a few years ago, and even white goods have made their re-appearance on the streets. The extensive buying of new shoes has, therefore, been delayed until weather conditions make their necessity more urgent. Mid-season sales are being put on in quite a few stores and some good bargains are being offered.

W. Gibson, shoe repairer, of Davis street, has closed up his stand to respond to the first call under the Military Service Act.

A. Sutton, of the Champion Shoe Repair Store, on Granville street, has purchased the business of T. Wigglesworth, the latter having relinquished owing to indifferent health. He is a native of Manchester, Eng., and is a craftsman of no mean ability.

R. Robertson, of Kingsway, has installed a new stitcher and W. Britton has put in an improved Progressive finisher, while the Goodyear Repairing Co., of Pender street, have bought a twenty-foot Champion finisher with the latest improvements.

BRITAIN BIG BUYER OF LEATHER

Under cover of an embargo against imports of leather into England for civilian purposes, says a recent despatch from Boston, an agent of the British Government has been in the United States for several weeks buying large quantities of both sole and upper leathers, evidently for civilian use. These purchases aggregate millions of pounds of sole leather and millions of feet of upper.

It should be understood that the British embargo, which has been in effect since February 23rd last, was not directed against leather of military necessity, but was designed to eliminate speculative conditions in the leather trade by preventing transactions between concerns in the United States and factors in England. In other words, the government assumed entire control of the leather situation in that country. The shipping situation also made necessary priority of shipment for materials essential only to government use.

As a matter of fact, however, the British Government for many months has been buying practically no leather in the United States for military purposes. The assumption is that a considerable surplus was acquired in the big buying movement of last fall; also that England has much increased her tannery capacity and has been buying quantities of hides in South America and India and tanning them herself.

ROCHESTER STYLES SHOW NEXT MONTH

The fourth semi-annual style show of the shoe manufacturers of Rochester and vicinity, under the auspices of the Rochester Association of Traveling Shoe Salesmen, will be held on the 5th and 6th floors of the Powers' Hotel, the week of January 7th to 12th, 1918, inclusive, and gives promise of outdoing former shows in both splendor and in the number of exhibits.

SHOE WORKERS HOLD CONCERT

About two hundred members of the Boot and Shoe-workers' Union, and their friends, attended a Smoking Concert which was given by the Union in St. Mary's Hall in Kitchener recently. It was a highly successful event in every respect, and the Union can feel proud of their effort to entertain. Mr. W. Spiegelberger acted as chairman, and the chief address was that delivered by Mr. Martindale, of Rochester, N.Y.

PUTTING THE BEST FOOT FORWARD

Colored gentlemen are not the only persons on earth who have a predilection for high sounding words. We all like to put the best foot forward, whether speaking of ourselves personally or referring to our business. It is really amusing to pause a few minutes and study the pretence and pomp of certain misapplied words and phrases which roll glibly off the tongue as if they were full of significance and dignity. In a newspaper career of many years the writer has seen reports of thousands of "quiet and pretty" or "quiet and attractive" weddings, but never did he notice a reference to a "loud and homely" one; nor would such terms be employed even if a bridegroom were arrested immediately after the ceremony.

Never did a vagrant come up in the police court with a bitter taste in his mouth and his face disfigured who did not tell the magistrate that he was having a "quiet time," or that he was enjoying a "quiet drink" or a "quiet evening." Oh, the misapplication of that word "quiet." It is more elastic than some consciences.

Did you ever know a grocer who did not make a "specialty of tea and coffee" or a druggist who did not add "all prescriptions carefully filled," or a cobbler who did not proclaim "first-class work done?" There was probably never a shoe polish or dressing put on the market which was not "guaranteed to soften and preserve the leather." Never did a traveler call upon a footwear merchant who was not "doing a high class trade," and here is where the humor of the situation comes in. Considering that out of the total number of residents in every community only one-twelfth can be called "high class," for this proportion represents all the wealthy people of every city, one wonders who caters to the other eleven-twelfths so far as their pedal requirements are concerned. Who ever hears of a shoe dealer doing a "cheap" or "medium class" trade? It all comes under the heading of "high class."

L. W. Hanson, Toronto, the widely known manager of U. S. M. Co., who are moving into larger and more commodious quarters at 90 Adelaide Street West, where they will have double the former floor space.

How we all love titles. The bookkeeper is an "accountant," the dressmaker is a "modiste," the cook is a "chef," the clerk is a "salesman," the boss is a "proprietor," the storekeeper is a "merchant," the goods themselves are "merchandise," samples are "models," or "creations," the stenographer is a "secretary," the janitor is a "custodian," the plumber is a "sanitary engineer," the doctor is a "specialist," the lawyer is a "leading counsel," the ordinary traveler is a "sales manager," the delivery chap is a "route superintendent," the office boy is a "junior clerk," and the store is an "emporium."

EASTERN ROADMEN ELECT OFFICERS

Under the chairmanship of James Armstrong, the president, a meeting of the Commercial Travelers' Association was held in the Association rooms in the Board of Trade Building, Montreal, for the purpose of nominating officers for the ensuing year.

Mr. Armstrong referred particularly to the statement which is to be presented at the annual meeting this month, declaring that it would prove very acceptable. He also mentioned that during the past year the Association had invested largely in Canadian War Bonds, and that it was also their intention to subscribe extensively to the Victory Loan.

The nominations for the various offices were then read by the secretary: A. J. Brown for the presidency; L. L. Paul Bernard and J. Chas. Shea, for second vice-presidents. Eight have been nominated for the five vacancies as directors: E. E. Goodenough, Raoul O. Grothe, Wm. J. Joyce, J. F. Loisel, John McLellan, John O'Donnell, Fred. J. Percgo and Frank Summer.

Voting will not take place until Friday, December 14th, and the result will be announced at the annual meeting of the members at the Windsor Hotel on December 15th.

YUKON TRAGEDY OF BOOT LACE

The hanging of Rekuishi Yoshioka last month brought to an end the remarkable case of the "tragedy of the boot-lace."

It opened with the advent of Yoshioka, a Jap, and his wife, in the Yukon, to start a fox farm near Dawson. It closed with the confirmation of death sentence passed on the Jap for the murder of his wife.

Yoshioka was in partnership with an Indian, Percy James. One day, in the summer, it was announced that the Indian and the Jap's wife were missing. A little later the Jap came along with the story that he had found the body of his wife in the bush. She had been shot dead by a shotgun. The inference was, according to the story told by Yoshioka, that the Indian had killed the woman and then made his escape.

The search for the Indian was about to be given up when a retired officer of the Mounted Police, living in Dawson, determined to join in the chase on his own account. At several points he found the moss pressed flat, as though a weight had been dragged over it. He followed the slight trail, and found that it led to a depression near the river. Moss was growing there, and over it a tree was planted. Suspicious, the officer examined the ground closely. He thought the moss had been there for but a short time. He was convinced that the tree had been but recently planted. He notified his old colleagues on the force. Together they dug up the tree, and underneath found the Indian's body.

The Indian's Endicott shoes were without their laces, and it was from here that the first trail led back to the Jap. The vendor of the boots was found. He asserted that the boots were of a peculiar type, that the laces were supplied only with the boots, that only one pair had been sold within a recent date—the pair bought by the Indian. In the Jap's house were found a pair of laces corresponding.

AVIATION BOOTS ATTRACT ATTENTION

There are on display in the Owl Shoe Store, Edward Cook, proprietor, 123 Yonge St., Toronto, two pairs of boots that are attracting more than usual attention. One is an observer's pair and the other is that of a pilot of the Royal Flying Corps. An observer who recently returned to Toronto after being engaged in aviation work in France, brought back with him the boots of the pilot, who was killed when his machine was brought to earth after having its propeller shot away. The pilot's boots, which come up to the hip, are made entirely of sheep skin, tanned with the wool on. They have rubber soles and heels, an instep strap, a knee strap and a suspender strap. The pilot's boots have the flesh side out as far as the leg is concerned, while the vamp and foxing have the grain side out.

The observer's boots are knee high with suede calf leg and Russia calf vamp and foxing, and are lined with sheep skin wool. The sole and heel are of leather.

THINKS FABRICS WILL AGAIN COME TO THE FRONT

Times at Present Are Little too Prosperous for their General Acceptance but Change May be Brought About, Declares Leading Shoe Manufacturer—Drama Which Brings Vividly To the Mental Faculties the State of Affairs of Twenty Years Ago

“WE are enclosing a Shoe Drama which has been written by C. D. P. Hamilton, of the International Shoe Co., St. Louis, Mo., and it throws some timely light on the true situation in leather and shoes just now. It should prove of interest to your readers as it draws attention very closely to the present conditions,” says a well-known Ontario shoe manufacturer in a letter to the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL.

“Our experience,” he adds, “has been that the retailer is just a little in doubt as to whether the leather conditions are really in advanced stages or not, and we believe that this drama may give them some ideas.

“We are of the opinion that the trade should feature fabrics to a very large degree and we are doing so at the present time, but owing possibly to too prosperous conditions, wearers are not taking to fabric tops. We really believe that the time is coming when fabrics will have to take a prominent place amongst the shoe manufacturers.”

SCENE I—A General Store in Illinois.

Farmer: Here are twenty pairs of shoes, big and little, for work and for dress for all of us—how much do they amount to?

Merchant: Just $52.00. They are “All-Leather” Brand, and will give good service.

Farmer: I have been dealing with you for about twenty years, and if my memory is not at fault, twenty pairs of these same shoes used to cost me only $35.00. I think you are asking me too much. I guess I must go somewhere else.

Merchant: Yes, I remember very well that fall you bought twenty pairs of shoes. Don't you remember that you turned in 175 bushels of corn in payment for the $35.00? Corn, as you remember, was only twenty cents a bushel that fall.

Farmer: Yes, I remember that corn did sell at twenty cents a bushel, and even less.

Merchant: You deliver to me 175 bushels of corn to-day, and I will give you the twenty pairs of shoes costing $52.00, and in addition I will give you: One $20.00 suit for yourself, one $20.00 dress for your wife, one $15.00 suit for your boy, one $5.00 dress for the baby, one $2.50 hat, one $25.00 set of harness, one $50.00 farm wagon, one $5.00 box of cigars, $5.00 worth of sugar, $5.00 worth of coffee, $5.00 worth of gasoline and I will throw in 50 cents worth of candy for the baby.

Mr. Farmer, 175 bushels of corn like you turned into pay for the 20 pairs of shoes will to-day not only pay for the 20 pairs of shoes, but will also pay for the foregoing list I have tabulated, which amounts to $158.00. The value of your corn has not only taken care of the advance on the 20 pairs of shoes, but it also shows you a profit of $158.00.

Farmer: I had not thought of it in that light—wrap up the shoes and be sure they are the all-leather line.

SCENE II—A General Store (on the Plains.)

Enter Ranchman.

Ranchman: Let me see a pair of all leather shoes.

Merchant: Here is a good pair, your size—9's. They are all leather, as you know.

Ranchman: How much?

Merchant: $4.00.

Ranchman: Back in the nineties I bought shoes like these from you for $2.50.

Merchant: I think these are better shoes than I sold you then. Better lasts, higher cut, better uppers, but let that pass. You used to pay me for shoes and other merchandise with hides. Back in the nineties I bought fine steer hides from you. A steer hide weighing 70 pounds sold at three cents a pound, $2.10 for the hide. Then you gave me the entire hide and 40 cents in cash for a pair of shoes at $2.50.

Ranchman: Yes, I believe I did.

Merchant: You bring me in a 70-pound steer hide like you did then—same sort of hide, certainly no better—and instead of you giving me the hide and 40 cents to boot for your shoes, I will give you $17.00 in cash and the $4.00 pair of shoes! Or, Mr. Ranchman, if you like, I will give you five pairs of shoes at $4.00 each and a dollar bill besides—for your one hide! It's five to one in your favor, plus $1.40.

There is one fact that stands out in the foregoing and that is that there is nothing the farmer has to sell—wheat, corn, cotton, garden stuff, cattle, hogs, butter, eggs—everything has advanced in price two to five times as much as have shoes! Of all the staple things, all the necessities, shoes are, relatively, the lowest in price, and have advanced the least.

With shoes lower, relatively, than any other staple article of commerce, with everything the producer has to sell at record prices, and this includes the laboring man who sells his labor (and constant employment); the sunshine and the showers having smiled on us and everything that grows—from beans to buckwheat, and all in record quantities; a new customer in the market, buying just about everything—the biggest customer ever, and with the fattest purse—Uncle Sam—a customer buying a trainload a minute and paying cash for it at the rate of a million an hour; half the world have their buyers here ready to grab almost anything that is offered and at almost any price—this is how things are to-day.

This is the business outlook—and did any man now alive ever perceive such an outlook?

And we have instructed our manufacturing department to get busy—busy on the quick—pile up the shoes ready to ship, for, mark our word, a business the like of which we never saw is on the way, and is now thumping at our door.

Don't waste one hour, merchants—up and after it—the biggest business each one of you ever had in yours.

THE NEW "HARTTS" FOR WOMEN

Eighteen years ago the Hartt Boot and Shoe Co., was not known outside of the City of Fredericton. To-day the name Hartt is a household word from coast to coast and the firm's slogan, "Canada's best shoemakers," is symbolical with the maple leaf and the beaver. Hartt formerly made everything, but soon learned that specialization and concentration are the watchwords of progress and the hallmarks of quality. All was given up except the manufacture of men's welts and in this branch a degree of perfection and achievement have been attained which makes Hartt and Gold Medal shoes the highest quality footwear.

These brands are now on a par with the finest produced in any country in the world, which is a tribute to the genius of J. D. Palmer, the aggressive president, and J. A. Reid, the enterprising vice-president. Both have a thorough insight and a broad knowledge of the trade and like Alexander of old are looking for new worlds to conquer. The Hartt shoe holds such a unique and outstanding position that its prestige and pre-eminence have been thoroughly established.

Now a departure has been made from the regular line and the necessary equipment has been installed for the making of women's high-grade welts; welts that in art, quality and craftsmanship will compare in every detail with the Hartt shoe for men. The new range for women, while limited as yet, has already met with a large measure of appreciation and approval. The new models possess character. Every last has been put in to meet the demands of discerning femininity and travelers who are showing the new Hartt samples for women are enthusiastic over them and have every confidence that Hartts will be trumps in the women's game as they have been for many years in men's. It is the sincere wish of the makers to put the same stamp of superiority on their women's range as they have on their men's. Messrs. Palmer and Reid are pardonably proud of the efficiency and record of the Hartt Boot & Shoe Co. and believe there is a paying amount of appreciation for every effort, that may be put forth to give the Canadian people a genuine, good thing.

Four new lasts of an up-to-the-minute character have been installed, two of them being of the English walking type. The new offerings are eight and eight and a half inches in height, with plain toe or square stitched tips, while some carry wave cut tops and others straight cut. The shoes are all beautifully made and very artistically finished, the materials, linings and facings being of the highest grade. The range of "Gold Medal" shoes for women come in nigger kid, gray kid, Russia calf, duchess calf, gun metal, black kid and other leathers.

Among the outstanding creations are an all dark brown calf with plain toe, perforated foxing and eyelet stay, wave top, with cream colored kid facings and Cuban heel; an all gray kid, three-quarter foxed bal, plain toe, wave top and leather Louis heel; a nigger brown kid, with circular vamp and plain quarters, wave top and leather Louis heel; a walking boot in Russia tan calf, full foxed, with calf facings, straight tip, blind eyelets and 9-8 heel. The same is also seen in dull black calf.

PROFITS! ACTUAL OR IMAGINARY

Now that it's getting toward the end of the year, with the time rapidly approaching when books must be balanced and the year's business summed up, every retailer naturally wants to know where his profits are, says "J. & K. Shoe News."

Or, perhaps, some retailers may wonder where profits have gone in spite of every indication that they have made money and ought to have a satisfactory balance. Give attention, then, to a few of the hundreds of tiny holes through which profits may flow:

Mistakes in invoices.

Mistakes in customers' bills.

Loss in satisfying overcharged customers and failure in making adjustments.

Failure to charge goods sold on credit.

Wasted supplies.

Mistakes in general figure work.

Depreciation in stock and interest in capital tied up in dead lines.

Ninety per cent. of these losses can be rectified by careful bookkeeping. Mistakes in invoices can be caught by checking each invoice.

The error in customer's bills may be in your favor and the time in satisfying customers, together with the unpleasant view which they usually take of such a situation, means a loss.

Forgetting to charge items on bills occurs frequently and really needs nothing to remedy it but a little care and attention, which even the busiest salesman can give. Saving in office supplies amounts to quite an item and its importance should be impressed on every employe. Stock on your shelves grows less valuable every day. Every decrease in the potential selling price is translated into a corresponding decrease in your profits, which means that you should do your best to keep goods moving at full speed. It costs money to leave capital invested in such dead lines.

Systematize your business and watch the little leaks so they don't become leaks that may result in disaster.

Rubber Footwear Notes

THE factories are still hustling out goods which in some cases are considerably behind hand. The recent wintry weather has created a boom in rubber footwear and jobbers have been at their wit's end to supply goods to meet the sorting demand. Dealers who placed their orders early are being well looked after, but those who delayed are now finding it difficult to get their full stocks. The season, of course, has not fully started although up north and in the west considerable snow has fallen. Should the present cold spell continue another week or two there will be a decided shortage in some lines. However, manufacturers and jobbers are doing their best and working night and day to satisfy customers.

About Felts.—There is going to be almost as much trouble getting felts for the coming year as there has during the past. It is almost impossible to get some lines of felt at all and therefore they will have to be almost eliminated. Manufacturers claim that they will not be able to produce much more than fifty per cent. of the orders they could take if they could only see their way to filling them. It is early yet and still letters are in from importunate jobbers and large retailers asking how much goods can be expected for the coming season. A good many orders have been unfilled on last year's business and buyers are seeking to have them made good in the coming season without much chance of this being done.

Rubber Companies Face Help Shortage.—One of the leading rubber footwear manufacturers of Canada states that while it is not likely that the shortage in light rubber footwear over the coming winter will be quite as serious as it was a year ago, still there is a very decided shortage this year, owing principally to scarcity of help, etc. This is not confined to any one company, he says, but applies to all.

In a recent issue of a U.S. trade paper reports were presented from Rochester, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Cleveland and other cities, which showed that a decided shortage of rubbers existed among the dealers. Many have not received their full delivery and early snowfalls have made the situation very grave. Traveling men state that the manufacturers have been unable to fill their orders because the government is calling for such a large percentage of the output. This in turn prevents the shipment of immediate orders to the retail houses in the larger American cities.

The company then goes on to state that, while the situation across the border may not interest Canadians to any extent, yet, "we have had to stand a great deal of criticism from our branches and salesmen for a year or more and it is only natural that we defend our position. The shortage that we are experiencing is through no fault of our efforts at this end or at the factory, but is a situation for which we are not responsible. We are sorry that it was necessary to cancel several thousand dollars' worth of light goods on placing orders last spring, but even at that, as you are well aware, we are away behind in keeping up to the demand. Few of our branches gave us any special assistance to get a reduction at that time but most of them, on the contrary, caused us as much inconvenience as possible in order to prevent such reductions. This fact has made it all the more difficult for us right along. As far as this winter's business is concerned we wish to tell our branches that we are doing all we possibly can and more than that no one can do."

Selling Price of Rubbers Arranged—At a special meeting of the Eastern Section of the Toronto Shoe Retailers' Association, held recently to discuss rubber sales, the following prices were decided on as the minimum for first quality goods:—

A Time to Get Together.—The present would seem to be a good time for retailers to make a decent profit in their rubber footwear turnover. The "get together" idea has proven very satisfactory and profitable in some of the large cities and towns, and the wonder is that so many hard-headed business men are still content to let the rubber trade remain the rag end of the shoe business. It ought to be as profitable as any part of the business but the tendency is to put rubbers at the door at this time of year and mark them down to a point that makes them an advertising adjunct to the leather goods end of the business. This year when supplies are restricted it ought to be possible to make more money out of this department with considerably less trouble.

DO OLD SHOES SPREAD INFECTION?

"A Repair Man" is the alleged writer of a sensational article which appeared recently in a Toronto weekly. The danger of infection from old shoes seems much exaggerated and the possibility of disease spreading vastly overdrawn. The contribution nevertheless makes entertaining reading and is published for what it is worth. The SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL would like to hear from any repair man in Canada if he ever knew of a disease of any kind being contracted through a pair of shoes coming to his shop to be mended, even if the footwear was mixed up with other pairs on the shelf, bench or floor.

Here is what "A Repair Man" writes:—

The present age may be said to be an age of sanitation, so much attention has been given to the guarding of the public health.

By-laws have been passed in most of our cities and towns compelling fruit vendors to cover their wares so that dirt from the street cannot come in contact with the fruit. This is only one of the many precautions taken.

But with all the research, one of the greatest has been entirely overlooked—namely, the danger arising from the present method of shoe repairing.

I dare say that at the very lowest estimate ninety per cent. of the shoe repair men have no system for keeping each pair of shoes separate. They either place them side by side on a rack or tumble them indiscriminately on the floor or on a shelf.

The practice is bad enough, but it isn't the worst; lasts are inserted in a pair of shoes to repair them on, and when the repairs are completed the lasts are removed and placed in another pair of shoes needing repairs.

This is where the great danger of infection exists, for if the wearer of the first pair of shoes should be afflicted with some foot or contagious disease it naturally follows that the wearer of the second pair of shoes is in great danger of contracting the same disease, particularly if the system is in a weakened or run-down condition, for it is a well-known fact that the feet are the sewers of the body.

The following is a concrete instance going to prove my contentions:

Some years ago I conducted a repair shop at Pittsburg, Penn. I had quite a lot of repairs come in from outside towns.

At that time my daughter was between two and three years of age. She was taken very seriously ill with a malignant scarlet fever. We were at a loss to locate the source of the malady, as we could find no trace of the disease in the entire district. Finally it occurred to me that I had repaired her shoes just a short time before. On looking up the work record book I found that at the time I had repaired her shoes I had also repaired a consignment of shoes sent in from a small mining hamlet about six miles from my location. On investigation I learned that one of the pairs of shoes had been worn by a child who had just recovered from a very severe

A side plate-glass window at the entrance of the shoe store of H. A. Johnson, 278 College St., Toronto, was deliberately broken by a heavy piece of cement on Nov. 23rd. The miscreants got away with two pairs of men's shoes. The boldness of the deed would seem to indicate that there are certain young fellows who hope to escape compulsory enlistment under the Military Service Act by committing petty thefts and getting a short term in gaol.

Geo. H. Morris, of the Goodyear Shoe Repairing Co., 623 Pender St. West, Vancouver, recently installed a modern and up-to-date finishing outfit in connection with his business, which was supplied by the Champion Shoe Machinery Co.

Frank P. Rowbotham, representing Parker, Holmes & Co., shoe manufacturers, Boston, spent a few days in Toronto Montreal and other cities recently calling upon the trade.

Alex. S. Martin, of Toronto, selling sole leather for Beardmore & Co., recently visited New England shoe manufacturers. This firm has a production of oak and hemlock, 1,500 sides daily.

A recent despatch from St. Thomas, Ont., says: Henry Elliott, shoe dealer, Talbot Street East, who presented the petition for the repeal of the early closing by-law to the City Council, Tuesday evening, makes it clear, in a statement to the press, that he will not withdraw his opposition to an early closing by-law, even if it is made to cover all places of business in the city. Mr. Elliott declares such a by-law is wrong in principle, especially when it dictates what a man is to do with his own time.

The plant of the Newcastle Leather Co., Wilmington, Del., now occupies eight city blocks. They are very busy on black and colored glazed kid, and are still experimenting on calfskins.

E. Everitt Bird, Boston representative of the Davis Leather Co. and A. Davis & Son, is receiving congratulations on account of the distinction of being one of the youngest-appearing grandfathers on South Street, Boston.

The Tannery at South Westminster which is operated by the Leckie Shoe Company of Vancouver, is at present making shoe and glove leather out of the skins of hair seals caught on the coasts of Alaska and Northern British Columbia by a Seattle hide firm, which annually outfits a number of boats for this work. The Leckie Company has bought this season's catch of from 20,000 to 25,000 skins, of which the first consignment of 10,000 has been delivered at the tannery.

A recent despatch from Oshawa, Ont., says: The Town Council met Wednesday night to deal with a proposition from a shoe manufacturing firm from Toronto to locate here in the factory recently occupied by the T. Eaton Co. They asked the town to guarantee their bonds for $30,000 to $35,000 for 20 years. They agreed to employ 100 hands, most of them female. Their present payroll was about $1,000 a week, which they agreed should be maintained at that figure or higher. The consensus of opinion was that it was too high a price to pay for what was offered, but the matter was left in the hands of the Mayor to continue further negotiations.

Among the largest subscribers for Victory Bonds during the recent campaign was the Anglo-Canadian Leather Co., Limited, of Montreal, who took a million and a half dollars worth.

It is rumored that the Weston Shoe Co. are contemplating removing their large shoe factory located at Campbellford, Ont., to another town in Ontario.

William Chamberlain, of Getty & Scott, Limited, spent several days during the past week calling upon the trade in Montreal and meeting personally many of the enthusiastic retailers of Classic Shoes attack of scarlet fever. Of course, that is where my daughter's case originated.

This menace could be very easily removed. I am using a shallow pan containing an antiseptic solution. On removing the lasts from the shoes, immediately immerse them in this solution, and after leaving them immersed a few minutes, I remove them from the liquid and dry them on a hot-plate placed immediately behind the pan. This method kills any form of microbe.

Some good advertising could be had by placing the pan in the forefront of the window, the hot-plate just behind the pair, all in full view of the public. Then have some well written matter explaining the purpose of the display.

SAYS HELP PROBLEM IS ACUTE

At the last regular meeting of the Toronto Shoe Repairers' Association, H. K. Hayward, vice-president, presided, and there was a representative attendance, many matters of importance being discussed.

A letter was read from the St. Catharines' Association warmly approving of the idea of a federation of all shoe repair associations in Ontario and offering to assist in any way, the furtherance of this proposal. The question of the Association getting out a polish and putting it on the market was further taken up and reports were received, but no definite decision has yet been reached.

The help problem was reviewed and various suggestions offered in the matter of training returned soldiers and others on a certain scale of wages, so that they could take up the work. The labor situation is very acute at the present time and certain members stated that they had advertised for men in all daily papers, but had received no applications. It was explained by a member that the same reports came to hand from various other cities in Canada at the present time.

The election of officers for the coming term will take place on Thursday, Dec. 20th, so that the new men will take hold at the beginning of the new year. Owing to the large amount of work that has been done by Financial Secretary A. Butterworth, it has been decided to have two or three men look after the secretarial duties and the finances. It is likely there will be a recording secretary, a financial secretary and a treasurer.

It was decided to hold a progressive euchre party at an early date, while shortly after the new year, arrangements will be made for the second annual banquet of the Association, and it will be a hummer.

HAMILTON REPAIRERS ARE ON THE MOVE

The Hamilton Shoemakers' and Repairers' Association now has a membership of fifty-two out of a possible seventy members, which, considering that the organization is only ten months old, demonstrates the progress that has been made. It is hoped that before the year is ended, practically all the shoemakers in the Ambitious City will belong to the society. The price schedule which was fixed some months ago is being lived up to, and every member is thankful for the benefit he has derived from the Association.

Sec.-Treas. F. C. Tebbs reports that there is a movement on foot at the present to devote the second Monday of each month to business and to spend the fourth Monday socially. When the Association first organized, it met only on the second Monday of each month, but now meetings are held on the second and fourth Mondays in the Sons of England Hall, Hughson street north.

Mr. Tebbs writes that some time ago a member of the Association sent to Geo. Edwards, of Medicine Hat, Alta., for his process of welding on soles and that the members are not at all satisfied with the so-called welding. Mr. Tebbs declares that the method is an old one and that there is scarcely a man in the trade but what knew of it years ago, and they are all more or less disgusted with the alleged new art. "We will be glad" says Mr. Tebbs "to furnish anyone with a copy of the recipe free, although one of our members paid $10.00 for it."

LIVE WIRE WESTERN SHOE REPAIRER

One of the live repair men of Calgary is R. P. Davis, who conducts the Calgary Shoe Hospital at 123A 8th Avenue West. Mr. Davis thinks he can fairly claim to be a real old-time shoe maker, having started in the trade in 1874 and worked at it ever since. He served his apprenticeship in Lindsay, Ont., and was in the village of Minden for twenty years. Mr. Davis has been in his present stand in Calgary for fifteen years, and while he is of the venerable school of shoemakers, he has always kept his equipment up-to-date, with the result that he has been successful in every respect. He uses a twenty-two foot Goodyear shoe repair outfit with Rapid Stitcher, and also a McKay machine for sewing on soles. "Both of them do good and fast work, much better than we used to do in the old way," declares Mr. Davis.

The premises of the Calgary Shoe Hospital are only seven feet wide by fifty-five feet deep. Besides the equipment already mentioned, Mr. Davis is running an eight chair shoe shine stand and a modern razor blade sharpening machine. This proves an excellent side line. Twelve safety razor blades are whetted at once and the machine used is the only one in the world sharpening them with a lateral motion. Mr. Davis gets blades sent to him from many parts of Canada.

Another interesting feature in connection with his career is that he has had a man working for him for the past twenty-six years, and another for ten years. They are both old-time shoemakers. He has another, but of a later generation, who has been with him five years, all of which speaks well of the friendly relations which exist between Mr. Davis and his staff, showing that he must be "a good boss."

Mr. Davis is an enthusiastic sportsman and during the sunny weather does a good deal of his sole leather cutting out in the open at the back of the shop. He owns a car, behind which he carries a specially designed canoe when needed. He is a marksman of no mean ability, a clever angler and an all-round sportsman, as well as a competent shoemaker.

Darkness and Dawn

Against the dark background of falsehood and cruelty, never before equalled in the history of the world, there shines forth the glimmer of a Divinity that distinguishes man from the brute.

A bleeding Halifax, tenderly covered by the mantle of the Modern Samaritan, is the answer to the world's cry: Has the light of love gone out in the gross darkness of German kultur?

Out of the chaos and suffering, wrought by the "god of forces," will surely emerge the "peace and goodwill" of the God of Love

The Darkest Hour is just Before the Dawn,
May the New Year usher in the Perfect Day.

The Dawn of a New Christmas

The Crescent and Star of Islam Goes Down With the Shadow of Kaiserism — Do the Modern Crusaders, the Wise Men from the West, Herald the Day Star of the Prince of Peace?

THE encampment of the British forces upon the very hills from which the Crusaders of the eleventh century first saw through their tears the domes and minarets of the Holy City has aroused within the past month mingled emotions of exaltation and hope in the minds of the civilized world. From Gaza to Hebron in the south, and from Jaffa to Samuel's Tomb in the west, the British cordon steadily closed in upon the Turk and on December 10th last, "The City of the Great King," "The Joy of the Whole Earth," after centuries of infidel rule, fell into the hands of a Christian garrison.

Palestine has for nearly six milleniums been the battleground of the world. East and West, North and South have surged over its mountains and plains in the frantic game of world domination. Archaeologists tell us that at least half a dozen strata of ruins bear mute testimony to the dynasties that have risen and fallen as the tide of battle has ebbed and flowed over this great highway of the nations.

It is interesting to follow in this connection some of the expectations and speculations that, in the minds of some, link themselves to recent developments in connection with this land which as the home of ancient Israel and the cradle of Christianity, occupies a place no other can in the thoughts of the civilized nations of the world.

The "Zionist" movement, founded some ten years ago amongst the Jews, has for its aim the restoration of the Jewish people to Palestine. The enterprise is based on the many promises in the Old Testament that the complete rehabilitation of Palestine and its re-occupation by a race which, in strange and consistent conformity to these same prophecies, has not in all the centuries of its exile Arise, shine: for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee.

For, behold, the darkness shall cover the earth, and gross darkness the people; but the Lord shall arise upon thee, and his glory shall be seen upon thee.

And the Gentiles shall come to thy light, and kings to the brightness of thy rising.

The sons also of them that afflicted thee shall come bending unto thee; and all they that despised thee shall bow themselves down at the soles of thy feet; and they shall call thee, The city of the Lord, The Zion of the Holy One of Israel.

Whereas thou hast been forsaken and hated, so that no man went through thee, I will make thee an eternal excellency, a joy of many generations. (Isaiah lx.)

lost its identity even amidst conditions that might well have been expected to work its complete annihilation. They point to passages such as that quoted above and many others even more striking as the ground for their hope that in a more glorious sense and state they will take their former place of influence and honor amongst the nations of the earth.

Many Christians who sympathize with these expectations of a speedy return of the Hebrews to possessions that have been guaranteed to them by an eternal covenant of Jehovah, further point out that the gospels and epistles endorse the belief that Jesus will come again to reign as Messiah and King over a "redeemed" earth. They cite the promise of the Angel to Mary concerning the birth of Christ, covering as it does not only His miraculous conception, but His eventual personal reign. "Behold, thou shalt conceive in thy womb and bring forth a Son and shall call his name Jesus. He shall be great and shall be called the Son of the Highest; and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David; and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end."

Both Jew and Christian believers in this literal reign of the "Prince of Peace" unite in the conviction that the prophecy of Daniel with regard to the four eras represented in Nebuchadnezzar's image being succeeded by a universal world kingdom of righteousness are now due of fulfilment. They claim that the Babylonian, Persian, Greek and Roman world kingdoms, the latter in its last stages of disintegration to-day, are to be swept away in a final cataclysm that is to usher in the Messianic reign. "And in the days of these kings shall the God of Heaven set up a kingdom which shall never be destroyed, and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms and it shall stand forever."

Whatever we may think of these hopes of ardent Jews and enthusiastic millenialists no one can deny

JERUSALEM Porte Dordoi.
Gate of Christ's Triumphant Entry - Golgotha Terrace.

The Golden Gate, through which Christ made His triumphal entry into Jerusalem

MODERN Jerusalem is considerable of a disappointment to the western visitor with whom it has always been so intimately associated with sacred things. It is so far removed in everything but its rugged situation from all that we have been accustomed to expect from the writings of seers, prophets and apostles that the first impression made by its squalor, filth and fanaticism is that of disappointment even to repugnance. There is little but its situation and hoary memories to appeal to the eye or mind until we begin to brush aside the accumulated debris and superstitions of the centuries that smother its walls and associations. The mingling of the old and the new in structure, nationality and custom has produced a conglomeration that is as puzzling as it is exasperating.

Its Ancient History

Jerusalem dates back to some fourteen hundred years before Christ. It was a strong fortress of the heathen Jebusites when the Israelites came to Palestine from Egypt and it held out against the constant attacks of the newcomers until the time of David. After its subjugation it became the "City of the Great King" and was beautified afterwards by David's greater son, Solomon, who erected not only the Temple upon Mount Moriah, but built "for himself palaces" and otherwise made it one of the foremost fortified cities of the world.

In Israel's decline in later years it was several times besieged, until Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, destroyed it in the sixth century before Christ, and carried most of its inhabitants away captive to his northern kingdom. Under Nehemiah the city was rebuilt and the Temple restored to

"If I forget thee, O Jerusalem, let my right hand forget her cunning. If I do not remember thee let my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth: if I prefer not Jerusalem above my chief joy." (Ps. 137:5, 6.)

The Modern Jerusalem

The Sacred City of the Christian and Hebrew Religions Falls Into the Hands of the British After Nearly a Thousand Years of Moslem Rule

some extent with the authority of Cyrus, king of the Persians, and for a long time it was left in peace and quiet. It passed successively under control of the Greeks, Egyptians and Syrians until in the widening development of the Roman Empire it became under Herod the Great, who rebuilt and embellished the Temple, a Syrian province under Augustus.

At this time Jerusalem reached its zenith as a religious centre and began to spread the Hebrew teachings abroad through the civilized world. It was at the close of Herod's administration that Jesus was born at Bethlehem and later began His mission as the Messiah, being finally put to death under Pontius Pilate outside the city walls to please the Jews, who had been antagonized by His propaganda. From the day of His crucifixion evil pursued the city until after a revolt against the Roman authorities it was besieged by Titus and razed to the ground in the year 70 A.D. In spite of the efforts of Titus to preserve the Temple it was set on fire and utterly consumed.

The City Rebuilt

Nearly a hundred years later the Emperor Hadrian partially rebuilt the city and from time to time it was rehabilitated by the Romans until in the time of Constantine, through the efforts of the Empress Helena, it was considerably improved and beautified. Upon the decline of the Roman Empire it passed into the hands of the Saracens and thus remained under the domination of the Moslems until in connection with the crusade about the year 1100 A.D., it became the capital of a Christian kingdom. This, however, only lasted until 1187 A.D., when Jerusalem again fell into the hands of the infidels. Since 1516 it has been held by the Ottoman Turks, who have made it second only in importance in the Mohammedan religion to Mecca. Mahomet is said to have ascended to heaven from the "Rock" in the Temple area and for this reason a magnificent mosque has stood on the spot for many centuries. This mosque is erected on the Sacred Rock believed to be that on which the Altar of Sacrifice stood in the time of the Temple and originally the place where Abraham and Melchizedek sacrificed.

The Holy City

Jerusalem itself is called in Arabic "El-Kuds," which means "The Holy," as it is regarded as the next in importance to Mecca in the eyes of the Moslem. It is situated 2,500 feet above sea level on a rocky plateau in a mountainous region between the Mediterranean and the Dead Sea. There is a deep cut valley of Kedron, or Jehoshaphat, to the east of the city, beyond which is the Mount of Olives, and on the west and south is the tortuous valley of Hinnom. The southern half of the modern Jerusalem is roughly the site of the main part of ancient

A Jerusalem Shoemaker

Jerusalem, or upper city, the upper city being separated on the east by a long depression (the valley of Tyropoeon), which is now largely obliterated by the piled up debris of the centuries, from the city of David, or Zion, and Mount Moriah. The site of David's city, it is claimed, is not inside the present city walls.

Inside the city walls are four "quarters"—the Christian quarter at the north-west, the Mohammedan to the north-east, the Jewish at the south-east, and the Armenian at the south-west. Everywhere are narrow streets with many arched passages. The houses are as a rule of massively built walls of hewn stone, often consisting of many detached apartments. The roofs are flat for the most part, with uncounted low cupolas relieving the skylines, a single house often boasting of several cupolas.

The modern walls of the city were built by the Sultan Solyman the Magnificent in the first half of the sixteenth century, the rest of the walls, except on the southern side, being largely in upbuilding of foundations that are very ancient. The city walls, which are ornamented with many towers and include eight gates—one of the gates has been walled up for centuries on account of the Moslem superstition that some Friday a Christian conqueror will make his triumphal entry through it—rise to a height of almost forty feet and bound a circuit of two and a half miles. Many of the most interesting and historic points of Jerusalem are outside the walls.

Most important of the city's wall gates are the Jaffa, Damascus and Abdul-Hamid gates.

Jerusalem's People and Streets

Jerusalem has a population of about 70,000, of whom two-thirds are Jews. The rest of the population is made up of Christians and Mohammedan in the respective proportion of about two to one.

From the viewpoint of architectural as well as archaeological charm, the city's most striking feature is the Haram esh-Sherif—"the distinguished sanctuary" which occupies the site of Temple Hill. It is a rectangle, 500 by 300 yards, paved with marble, with ancient stones of great size at the corners. From the centre of the marble pave rises the magnificent mosque of Kubbet es-Sakhra (the "dome of rock," or sacred rock), an octagonal building surmounted by an imposing dome which was built by the caliph, Abdul Melik, who reigned from 685 to 705.

Near the Temple area is the Via Dolorosa, or Road of Suffering, said to be the way on which Christ passed with His cross. Half a mile to the west of Kubbet es-Sakhra is the world famous Church of the Holy Sepulchre. All about the city, inside the walls and just outside, are noted religious institutions—the great Greek monastery and the Coptic and Franciscan, the Armenian and other monasteries and the orthodox Greek Church. There is the Russian cathedral in the Russian settlement in the north-west suburbs, the Gethsemane Church of the Russians, which is just outside the city to the west on the slope of the Mount of Olives; and the Jews have more than seventy-five synagogues within and around the city.

The religious edifices listed are but a small part of the churches and monasteries of Jerusalem. Also the city boasts of a great number of educational institutions, hospitals and other philanthropic edifices run by various religious bodies of all nationalities from far parts of the world. Most of these are in the suburbs, where also the European consulates are cluttered.

The ancient citadel, a mass of great walls and towers, is close to the Gate of Jaffa. In the outskirts of the city are about twenty-five Jewish colonies. Of the ancient Jerusalem, outside of vast piles of debris, little is left. What still remains consists chiefly of parts of old walls, cisterns, pools, water conduits and burial places, the tombs of antiquity being situated to the north of the city.

Round About Zion

Although for centuries pilgrims have visited the Church of the Holy Sepulchre as the place where the world's great tragedy occurred, a place is now pointed out beyond the Damascus Gate as the true place of burial of the Saviour. About 1882, or shortly before his death, General Gordon discovered this tomb, which is close to a rocky hill of the shape of a human skull, just outside the gate of the city.

One of the points of interest outside the "Zion" gate is the Tomb of David, revered by Moslem as well as Hebrew and Christian, and some eleven or twelve miles from the city to the right of the Jaffa Road is the Tomb of Samuel, where the British encamped while encircling Jerusalem recently. Other points of interest are the Tombs of the Kings or Prophets, Mount of Olives, Valley of Jehosaphat, where both Jews and Mohammedans expect the judgment to be, the various pools of Siloam, Bethesda, etc.

One of the features of Jerusalem for centuries past has been the bitter strife between the Christian factions in which the Turkish soldier has often had to be arbiter. It is to be hoped that the advent of the British may remove some of their religious asperities, although with the ignorance and superstition that stimulate the antagonisms of their sects it will be hard to prevent the constant clashing.

to-day that the world is standing upon the verge of transcendent developments, political and otherwise, and one of the eventualities that may be considered as an almost certain concomitant of the success of the Allies is the rehabilitation of Palestine, and the restoration of this people without a land to a "land without a people."

Our artist, in connection with the cover picture "Dawn of a New Christmas," caught the spirit of this new era of hope held forth to this land of hoary associations by the western civilization, which owes most that it has and hopes for to the Jew. The soldiers who stand near the village of Buddu, close to Samuel's Tomb, the position until December 10th, occupied by the British, are representative of the three western nations who from the West this time herald the coming of Him Who shall be called "Wonderful, Counsellor, The Mighty God, the Everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace."

A Message from Flanders

“Carry on!” ’Tis the cry from the winding trench,
 Where the red blood flows in the conflict grim,
 ’Tis echoed afar o’er the fields of war
 By the stout of heart and the strong of limb;
 From billet and camp can ye hear the call,
 As the old year dies and the new is born—
 “Carry on!” till the day be won,

THE BIG STICK

THERE have always been and always will be in this world people who, when they can't have their own way, want to hit the other fellow on the head. Cain used the “big stick” on Abel and ever since that time this argument of the bully has been popular with those who have not brains or breadth to get the other fellow's viewpoint.

When a preacher, even a time like this, talks “politics” in his pulpit you will find two or three of these Cains get up and go out in a dudgeon or send a letter to the treasurer of the church cutting off their subscriptions. They are willing even to hit the man who tells them the truth over the back of the Almighty. Even the wisdom of Solomon is not proof against these thick-headed wielders of the “stuffed club” who drive home with every blow the truth that “the fool in his folly is wiser than seven men that can render a reason.”

In this country we have recently had brought home to us the folly of this “big stick” argument. It is too late in the day to throttle free speech, whether by organized rowdyism in meetings or by boycotting those who happen to live where such outrages occur. Let us beware of that which is sure to react, as all such bullyism must. More especially when the innocent are made to suffer with the guilty.

As Solomon Says:

“Answer not a fool
 According to his folly.”

Jos. Daoust, Montreal

THE above question, or its equivalent, was recently propounded to Joseph Daoust, of Daoust, Lalonde & Co., Montreal, a man who is generally recognized throughout the shoe and leather trades as having "arrived" in a larger sense than even business success.

Mr. Daoust is in middle life and in twenty-five years has not only made his mark in the trade, but has left the impress of a personality upon those about him that is as helpful as it is emphatic. He was connected with the wholesale dry goods trade originally and from taking a small interest in a shoe jobbing concern on St. Paul street, has developed a shoe manufacturing and leather producing business that makes him a leading factor in both trades to-day. As a man, Joseph Daoust ranks high not only amongst his fellow citizens of both languages in Montreal, but for breadth of view, keenness of insight and sterling character, is regarded as one of the strongest figures in the trade. He is modest almost to a fault and it was only with utmost persistence that the Journal could get him to talk of the underlying principles that have led to his success.

"I do not believe all is luck in business," said Mr. Daoust; "I think business success is a matter of industrious effort following certain well defined principles, which, if any young man adopts, he is bound to establish a future of reputable as well as solid business achievement that is well worth while.

"Many men attempt too much when they start out. They want to begin where their fathers left off. They are not content to do 'foundation' work and follow this by a carefully erected superstructure of patient effort. Be satisfied to begin according to your means and develop the business as you find or make 'elbow room.' There are a great many meteoric careers that are the result of a wrong start.

"When a man has selected his business or calling in life, he should stick to it. 'Shoemaker, stick to your last,' is good advice for the business man as well as the shoemaker. The man who has too many irons in the fire is sure to burn some of them. This is an age when specialization is the watchword and concentration the highway of achievement. It does not pay a business man to spread his interests or diffuse his energies on outside enterprises unless these are allied to his regular business.

"The proper understanding of the value of money and its use and economical handling are secrets that are well worth mastering. Meanness is bad business policy, but extravagance and wastefulness are worse. These days expenses need careful watching. There is a tendency towards spending that in many cases becomes a disease. While it is well not to be stingy, the man who keeps before him the thought that it is the small leaks that sink the vessel, need have little fear of the larger dangers that lurk in the path of the modern ship of commerce. Both personal and business expenses should be kept at a point that permits the leeway made by the business to make itself felt in increased means for its development.

"A man should make all the friends he can in business and as few enemies as possible. Friends, as a rule, are assets and enemies liabilities, but friends may become liabilities if we allow them to divert us from right business principles and aims. To favor friends when other things are equal is good policy, but favorites in business is poor policy in more ways than one. Make as few enemies as you can, for notwithstanding the saying that 'knockers are boos-

Will A Break In Prices Come?

Views of Prominent Shoe and Leather Operators on the Situation in Shoes, Present and Future—A Long Period of High Prices Ahead

THE question is being asked on every hand—are present prices in leather and shoes stable, or is there likely to be any appreciable change in the market in the immediate future? It may be said that this question is not only puzzling the veriest tyros of the trade but is racking the brains of veterans on both sides of the market, buyers as well as sellers. Naturally the opinions of these two factions are tinged by their opposing interests, and leather men are inclined to be bullish in their tone, while shoe men seem to feel that prices are certain to come down.

There is this to be said for the stability and continuance of present conditions that for six months past it has stood the brunt of a siege that, under ordinary circumstances, would have resulted at least in what in these days of war would be called a "readjustment of lines." There has been so far comparatively little indication, as far as prices are concerned, of definite weakness in the leather situation, in spite of the fact that not a few shoe factories in some lines have been on short time for some months. On the other hand, there has undoubtedly been a healthy settling from a status that was admitted a year ago to be based largely upon a condition of "nerves," more or less common to all classes of business.

There is no doubt that the era of "twenty-dollar" shoes is now practically over. That is to say, the sensational conditions that existed early in the year, fostered by the reports that were being circulated through the daily press, have now disappeared, and while people are prepared to pay the higher prices that still prevail in almost every line, they cannot be again stampeded into the frenzied buying that obtained some months since. And while they realize that values are steadily upward, they are inclined to follow the trend of events cautiously, not to say resentfully.

Era of Fancy Figures Passed

A large producer of high-grade women's lines who was one of those who were carried the farthest upon the crest of the wave last spring, on being asked what he thought of present and future conditions said: "I am convinced that we have passed the era of fancy prices and that shoe manufacturers will have to calmly revise their ideals with this in view. The demand is insistent for shoes of a more moderate price and we will have to meet it. This will have to be accomplished through the remodelling of some of our lines if we cannot make sufficient headway in securing lower costs in materials. In other words, we will have to take it out of the shoe, not necessarily in quality, but in some other effective way. The general demand for women's shoes to-day is for those at or below the 'ten dollar standard.' If we are to drop to this we will have to have substantial help from the leather trade in the matter of prices."

A prominent leather manufacturer puts it this way: "Business for many months has been upon a most conservative basis. Tanners have been under pressure from two sides, a firm hide market and a languishing leather market. Shoe manufacturers have only been buying what they have actually needed for their week to week requirements. There has been little speculative buying for over a year. The result has been that tanners have been following a very conservative policy. They have been doing the same as the shoe manufacturers, only buying what they need from week to week to keep their plants going. Added to this has been a pressing shortage of labor. The tanneries have only been half manned during the past year, and costs have gone to a point that makes it a problem to turn out goods at a profit to supply the curtailed trade. There are no accumulations of any account, and although there is a reported weakness in the hide market, the existing lack of demand for leather and the falling off in the quality of the hides more than account for any difference. I cannot see where any adequate relief to the shoe manufacturer through a drop in leather prices is possible. There may be a slight settling of things as conditions become more established, but the possibility of a slump in leather is as remote as the antipodes, unless something unforeseen should occur in Europe to make a general upheaval."

Affairs Never Before Faced by Man

A large operator with international relations who is regarded in high finance as well as leather as a reliable authority, recently discussed general conditions with the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL. His views throw an important light upon the whole situation and back up the attitude of the tanner quoted above. He says: "We have been passing through experiences unknown to the world throughout its history. The extraordinary conditions brought about by the war have never been known in the history of man. Gold reserves on this continent have piled up on one hand and circulation has expanded enormously on the other, and this has sent up prices of commodities, labor and everything else. It may seem a strange thing to the lay mind, but a plethora of gold and an inflated circulation always mean higher prices, and we have these two extremes to-day in a degree never before known. Prices will not for a long time recede from the general level upon which they stand to-day, and will never, in our time at least, go back to where they were three years ago. Of that much we may be absolutely certain. But in the case of leather, the law of supply and demand, which in ordinary times affects prices more widely than other factors, has

PROPER BASIS ON WHICH TO TAKE AN INVENTORY

January Will Be Busy Time for Shoe Retailer in Stock-Taking—The Real Purpose of Such a Procedure—It is Generally Supposed Footwear is Worth the Cost Price, But This Not Necessarily So—Do Not Deceive Yourself by False Valuations

By G. W. BROCK

YOU will be stock-taking after the Christmas holiday trade and the first few days in January will be busy ones with you.

Why do you take stock? It means a lot of extra work and worry, long hours and routine proceedings and is one of the duties that the average shoe merchant would like to skip. It is not nearly as pleasant as selling shoes, receiving new goods or watching your business show increasing receipts from month to month.

Then why take an inventory? Well, you should know where you are at, how you stand and what progress, if any, you have made. A proper inventory serves as a compass and rudder, a log book and chart on the troubled sea of business during the present abnormal period of the high cost of living and steering a safe, steady course under war-time conditions and anxiety.

You wonder what will be the result of your stock-taking and what the figures will show, in what departments you are overloaded, in what lines your goods are dead and shop-worn or clean, bright and saleable.

On what basis should an inventory be taken in these days of rapidly changing styles, lasts, patterns, heights, colors and values?

Inventory your stock of shoes and findings at what you honestly believe you could get for them in the market if you were selling them right now. Never mind what they may be worth next summer or next winter. What they would bring now is the fixture in determining the inventory price if you want your business to figure safe.

To begin with, some retailers do not take an inventory at all. Such dealers are hopeless cases so far as establishing a retail system is concerned, and one even doubts if their business is in a healthy or even paying condition. Happily the number who conduct their business affairs on such a loose scale is being reduced through the efforts of live credit men for wholesale and manufacturing houses. These credit men insist upon seeing an inventory and in comparing the inventory with the stock in hand before allowing extended credit.

Are They Worth the Cost Price?

It is generally supposed that retail goods are worth their cost price, but this is not necessarily so. Take the present leather market and you will find that available finished leather was made from high-priced hides, which could not be duplicated for much less money. The finished leather cannot be sold at a price commensurate with the cost, and, therefore, in this instance, as in the case of retail stocks, there are times when goods are not worth in the market even the cost price of manufacture. Shoes are frequently included in this category. Suppose you bought a certain lot of shoes at $5.00 a pair, intending to sell them at $8.00 a pair, and on January 1st you had 50 pairs on your shelves. You might reason to yourself something after this fashion: "Well, those are pretty good styles and there is no reason why I should not sell them next summer. If I depreciate them now, my inventory won't be so strong and I guess on the whole, I'll take the chance and put them in at cost."

Now here is what actually or possibly happens: Those shoes don't go as well as was expected, and the 50 pairs only dwindle down to 41 pairs after strenuous sale prices, etc. But you have inventoried at cost, which means that you have been deceiving yourself right along. Now what are you going to do? In a fit of wrath you are likely to mark them down to $4.00 a pair, and sell out the entire lot at a loss of $41 over the original cost to you, but they have stood right along on your inventory as being worth $205.

This is only one item and, when it is considered that it might run up into ten or a dozen such cases during a year with a fair sized business, on this same basis, it can be seen that you would have lost several hundred more in the year than you supposed you had. Certainly this is not fair to yourself and if you do this repeatedly with full knowledge of what it brings you, there is no reason why you should not be classed with the man who cheats at a game of solitaire. You are only beating yourself and certainly that is poor satisfaction.

Retail Stocks Hard to Sell

One great reason why more retail stores are not sold in response to the advertising of their owners, is because the inventory belies the case. Usually, the owner does not really believe he is misrepresenting things. He is so strongly possessed with the idea that the goods on his shelves must be worth what he paid for them that he can see no other logic.

I once knew of a firm who purchased the stock in trade and goodwill of a shoe store in a thriving city. Shortly after the purchase, some defects in the stock were noticed, and later, over 700 pairs of shoes were sold to the junk man at 65 cents a pair, including the shoe laces and buttons on them. On the inventory these goods showed a depreciation of about 10 per cent. on a cost price of better than $4.50 per pair in the average. Moreover, the goodwill was a myth, as the store had not enjoyed an enviable reputation for many years. The purchaser was stuck good and proper, and, after running the place for a little over a year, he closed its doors and stood a loss of over $5,000. Here was a case where the owner had succeeded in fooling the buyer, but it did no good for the purchase price was paid in installments, and was based on the representations made. When these discrepancies crept in, it resulted in a law suit, and the owner lost through having misrepresented affairs.

Suppose that instead of trying to catch an unwary buyer, you depreciate your accumulated stock each year. When the time comes to sell out you can say to your prospect, "I have an inventory here which shows that the stock is actually worth in the store to-day. I have depreciated on all the lines which are in any way unseasonable, and these figures I am showing you are absolutely reliable and true." Don't you believe that an interested party would be impressed with this sort of talk, and don't you believe that a sale could be much more easily effected in this manner?

In conversation with a dealer who had tried to sell his store, I learned recently that his price was out of reason with the value of the business. After repeated advertising, he gave up the matter and determined to try and make it pay for himself. He gave as his reason, however, "that buyers had no money when it came to actually buying and they did not want to pay what the stock was worth." And I happened to know that he did have a lot of odds and ends in his stock, and that he took his inventory at selling price and then deducted 25 per cent. from his total and called it a true inventory. Now, what do you think of that?

Travelers Are Keen Judges

Traveling men for various houses run up against some funny propositions when among the trade, and oftentimes they have much to do with securing credit for their customers. Much as a salesman wants to sell goods, he will rarely take on an account which he thinks will reflect on his judgment or cause any "come-backs." It is not possible to fool many of these bright men for they recognize many goods by the labels on the boxes and can classify them immediately as belonging to such and such a year. They know how much stock you have that is old and they know also about what your goods are worth. You cannot get far ahead of them in estimating values, for the simple reason that they are among retailers all the time and they know better than you do what a fair valuation of your stock is.

Suppose now that you ask for credit from some jobber, and offer a statement of your assets and liabilities together with an inventory of your stock as the basis for such credit. Very likely the credit man will call around some day with the district salesman and they will look over your stock. If you have a true account of it all, you will have little difficulty in securing an extension of credit, but if it is seen that you have grossly overestimated the valuation, it is likely that you will be refused.

Can You Afford to Take Chances?

Let us suppose a little more, and presume that you have asked for an extension when your business is in a tight place. If the credit man says, "Yes," your business is saved, but if he says, "No," every dollar you have in the world is likely to be lost. The view of the matter that appeals to us is: Can you afford to take such chances when the greatest gain you can possibly secure by inventorying falsely is to beat yourself in your own store? With a proper depreciation allowed for dead stock and for wear and tear on equipment, the credit man will see that you have a correct insight into the problem of retailing, and he will have far greater confidence in you and your store than he would have under any other condition. These men are dealing with profits and losses all the time and, when they see a dealer who realizes the importance of correctness in this detail, this same man stands out in their memory distinctly, and they are more inclined to be lenient with him. If you do not need credit, you will find that proper accounting will secure for you the first and best offering on the market.

Salesmen will be instructed to call on you first, and thus you will be put in touch with many opportunities that otherwise would go to your more progressive neighbor. I remember a case wherein a valued employer was very decided in the matter of taking inventory. I noticed that about half of the traveling men visiting us were those who had never sold us goods, and one day in a spirit of friendliness, I asked one of them why it was that he made a certain offer to us when there were larger stores in the city to whom he might have made it. He replied that his house had considered our firm the most desirable one to sell, because we were conservative and conducted our business along business lines. This set me thinking and I then began to see a reason why we had to take our inventories twice, instead of once, as other firms did. Each six months we took an inventory twice, using the second list to check the first. Oftentimes we found errors of hundreds of dollars, and, frequently, there would be whole shelves of goods overlooked in the first inventory, which would appear in the second one.

What Should Depreciation Be?

Now, to get down to actual figures in this matter of depreciation, I should suggest a depreciation of five per cent. each six months, or ten per cent. each year on store fixtures. This, as you will see, allows for a life of ten years for the store equipment. A few good firms figure more than this. As for stock, it should never inventory at prices above what you have offered it for sale. To explain this statement, we frequently find odds and ends of stock offered for sale during bargain periods for half price, and yet these same goods are listed in the semi-annual inventory at cost. This is manifestly unfair and only makes a showing which you have to overcome at some other period in your business. By figuring all these depreciations safely, your business is at all times clean. What profit you figure on this basis is really a profit of the kind you can bank on or borrow money on.

ECONOMIZING ON THE DELIVERY SYSTEM

One regular delivery a day as a maximum for retail stores throughout the United States, and co-operative delivery systems in all the smaller cities and towns, are now direct objectives of the delivery campaign started some time ago by the Commercial Economy Board of the Council of National Defence. This announcement was made lately after a conference between the Board and representatives of several of the state councils of defence. The state councils of defence have been co-operating in the campaign.

Except in five or six states the campaign up to this time has been carried on largely through correspondence and conferences. The Board's recommendations have been adopted as a whole or in part in cities with a total population of approximately sixteen millions, and as a result at least 15,000 men called for war service have not had to be replaced from the limited labor supply available for the essential industries. All this, however, has been preliminary. Agents of the state councils and other representatives of the Board are now to go over the country town by town and press for the adoption of the entire programme.

"We have been content to let the changes proceed by easy stages, because experience was needed," said A. W. Shaw, chairman of the Board. "At the outset we were able only to say it was evident that these changes would produce important savings of labor. But now we have actual results to show it. One store, for instance, has saved 24 out of 167 men, by adopting the recommendations, another 2 out of 9, another 12 out of 56, another 6 out of 42, another 2 out of 3, and so on.

Shoe Journal:—

It is sure worth the money! Best wishes.

"The savings from co-operative delivery systems are even greater. An agent of the Board has made a careful, first-hand study of twenty-one of these systems. They require a total of 207 men, as compared with 659 men required for the individual systems replaced—a saving of 452 men, or 68 per cent.—and the service to the consumer is practically everywhere as good as it was before, and in some places better.

"It is now plain that in these two ways—by co-operative systems in the smaller communities and one delivery a day throughout the country—more than 150,000 men can be released to meet the increasing need of workers in agriculture, ship building, munitions making, mining, railroading and the other vital work.

"The Board is prepared to give merchants suggestions on how the savings may be made. Members of the staff have studied the technique of deliveries, both as to routing and as to organization within the stores. They have studied how co-operative systems are established and maintained, what has generally been safe practice in them and what unsafe. This information is now available in preliminary form.

"While the object of the delivery modifications is to save labor, they frequently involve a saving of money also. In several thousand stores known to the Board, and doubtless in many others, these savings are now being shared with the customers through closer prices on goods. The Board expects all merchants to adopt this policy."

Shoe Selling, Serving and Satisfying

How Capable Saleswomen Fit Fair Patrons—Callers are Never Asked the Size or What Price They Wish to Pay, Which Would be Indiscreet—The Expert Understands Intuitively the Style Required—The Exceptional Foot Presents No Real Difficulties

IT seldom takes more than a few seconds for the average customer to learn whether the saleswoman is thoroughly competent. Efficiency is its own advertisement. It reveals itself in a score or more of ways about which the indifferent, even the "middling good," saleswoman knows little or nothing. Almost the first move the saleswoman makes, when a customer approaches, reveals efficiency or a lack of it. Note, for instance, the pleasing, alert attitude which the thoroughly expert saleswoman assumes when serving a customer. She is always pleasant, self-contained, quiet and gracious, not servile, says a writer in "Store Chat."

See how deftly and quickly she unlaces the customer's shoe, without any real evidence of hurry. Seemingly in a moment she has placed the shoe beside her and is busy taking the measure of the customer's foot with the size stick, confident that this first hand knowledge of size is her best and safest guide in effecting a perfect fit. She never asks the size, and never seeks it in the shoe she removes. She prefers to satisfy herself in this particular, for she knows that the shoe the customer has been wearing may have been too loose or too tight, or otherwise an imperfect fit. She also knows that any expert knowledge she may have will help to inspire the customer with confidence.

The expert saleswoman never asks the customer what price she wishes to pay. That would be an indiscretion. She understands intuitively, in eight cases out of ten, the style and quality of shoe required. When she is in doubt she shows the customer a medium-priced shoe, and then notes the inclination of the customer toward a higher or a lower grade.

Observe the Lines of the Foot

When measuring the foot she closely observes its lines, apparently without trying, and, particularly notes if there are any imperfections—ascertaining if the arch is weak or has fallen, if the joints are enlarged, if the ball of the foot is unusually wide, the instep exceptionally high, or callouses have formed. Every saleswoman in the shoe department knows that we not only have all the styles in vogue, but also that we have all those shoes that are fashioned to correct foot troubles, sustain a fallen arch, or for that matter, prevent a perfect arch from falling. She never attempts to fit a long vamp shoe on a short, thick foot, or a short vamp shoe on a slender foot. Should the customer insist, for instance, on trying on the long-vamp shoe, she will comply with her desire, show her the difference and intelligently explain, in a pleasant manner, the annoyance that would ensue if she chose the wrong shoe. She is extremely careful with the customer whose foot is unusually soft and fleshy. Such a foot often will go into a shoe a size, or even two sizes, too small, without the customer suffering any immediate discomfort. It is when the customer walks several squares that she learns that the fit is unsatisfactory. The high-class saleswoman avoids this contingency by guarding against it in the beginning.

It is the exceptional foot which the thoroughly capable saleswoman prides herself on fitting; and it is the exceptional customer she makes a special effort to satisfy.

Get Shoe that Looks Smaller

It may happen that a woman who is trying on a number eight shoe (because that happens to be the size she wears) will exclaim:

"Oh, isn't this awfully large!"

The saleswoman realizes that the shoe looks large because it is large; but she knows how to remedy the matter, and at the same time please the customer. She procures a foxed shoe, which, on account of its construction, looks two sizes smaller. The customer is invariably pleased with the marked difference this style of shoe makes in the appearance of her foot.

The expert knows that we have shoes as soft as velvet for particularly tender feet, and common-sense shoes, with low, flat heels and plain toes, for those who eschew styles for comfort.

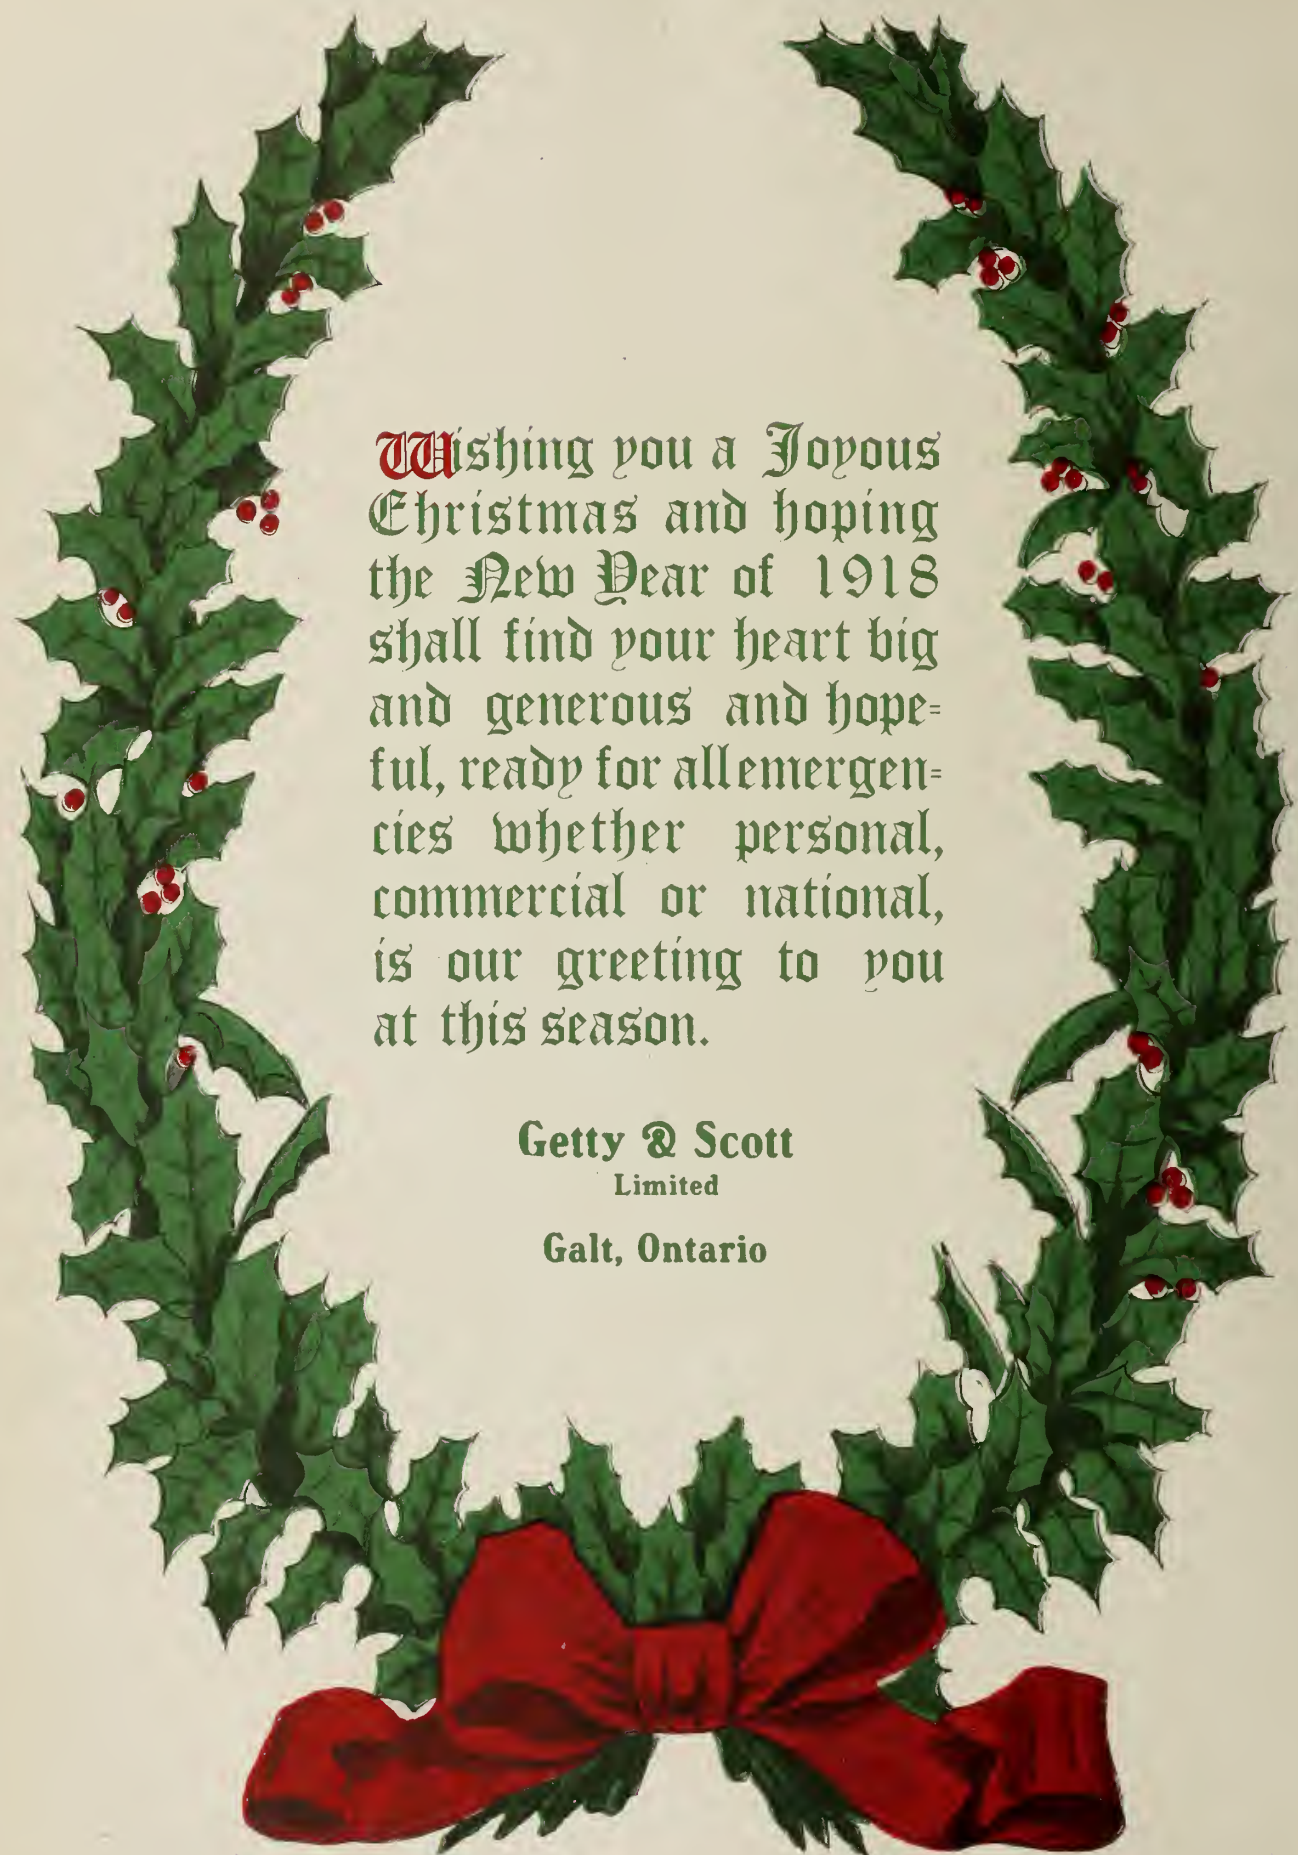

In brief, she knows the stock perfectly, and can put her hand almost instantly on any kind of shoe required. She can tell you the systematical arrangement of the stock, how it is divided off into numbered sections, each group of numbers representing a particular style and price. For instance, the high-grade shoes run from 1 to 100; medium-priced shoes from 101 to 200, etc.

Her proficiency is also shown by the easy and graceful way in which she slips the average shoe on the customer's foot. Even the congress gaiter, to handle which becomes irksome to the saleswoman with little experience, proves "easy" for her. She simply draws it on sideways, slipping it over the foot until the toes touch the insole, when she deftly turns the shoe, all the while continuing to draw it gently and firmly until, presto, it is on!

Watch the thoroughly capable saleswoman lace the shoes (according to the new mode). With the fingers of one hand she deftly takes the laces and pushes both ends through two eyelets at once. Having reached the top of the shoe she goes back, and with a few gentle but dextrous pulls draws up the slack, and ties the laces. She is equally expert at buttoning a shoe on the foot. She never jerks at the button, nor gives those awkward twists that pinch the flesh of the customer, much to her annoyance.

WHEN THEY WORE TOP HATS AND LONG COATS

Wm. Wood, Veteran Footwear Exponent of Vancouver, Recalls the Days of Long Ago—His Reminiscences of Early Period in Winnipeg—How He Became Shoe Specialist and Built up Business on Unique Lines—Makes Many Loggers' and Miners' Boots

THE records of the Curriers Co., one of the old city of London trade guilds, show that the Wood family has been uninterruptedly connected with the leather business for the past four hundred years. It was fitting, therefore, that the first breath Mr. William Wood, of Vancouver, B.C. should draw should smell strongly of leather.

Wm. Wood, Vancouver shoe merchant, as he appeared when he first began to toddle.

He was born a year or so before the accompanying picture was taken, in a room over an old fashioned country shoe shop, established by his grandfather in 1851, at 131 Minorities, London, England. He began studying the shoe business at a very early age and has been at it ever since. "In the days I am speaking of," declared Mr. Wood, "shoemakers were divided into clickers, closers, binders, men's-men, women's-men, etc., all work except the cutting being done in the homes of the operators, who called at the store every day or so, both bringing in and taking the work away. The price of a man's calf boot at that time was about $6.00, $2.00 being paid for bottoming a man's hand sewn shoe and $1.00 for closing the uppers. The jobs done by some of these hand closers would astonish the present generation, being equalled only by the finest machine fitted top of to-day. Most shoemakers wore long coats and top hats, taking an artist's interest in their work, their highest ambition being to be considered one of the 'Gods of Leather,' as the Dons of the trade were called at that time. One man I specially remember made ladies' Louis XV heel work exclusively (Wurtemburgs as they were then styled), each individual pair being a work of art in itself. Ladies' side laced boots, and Congress were worn, the latter decorated with rows of fancy white stitching up the front, sometimes with an imitation button piece with pearl buttons. Slippers and children's shoes were made straight, no rights and lefts. Fancy kid slippers came from France without heels, and were packed together perfectly flat, one half dozen pairs easily going into an ordinary shoe box, the wooden heels being attached after the slipper had been purchased by the customer.

"Cartons were unknown, shoes being kept on shelves protected by sliding glass doors, the better class stores being elaborately fitted with mahogany and carpeted, as to-day."

Boots Hung from Store Roof

Coming to Winnipeg in 1883, Mr. Wood worked for William Wellband who was regimental shoe-maker to the Riel Expedition of 1872. Long boots hung in rows from the roofs of the store while heavy felt, leather covered Wellingtons, the first product of the Rumpel shoe factory in Kitchener, were piled up like cord wood on the floor. Hyman's of London, and Lenoir et Fils, of Montreal, were popular lines.

The chief duties of the subject of this reference consisted of cutting wood for the big box stove, cooking the meals for the boss, looking after the room upstairs where the boss and he slept, and selling shoes between whiles. "Lou" Godbolt, of J. & T. Bell's, kept store in a log cabin in the next block and Arthur Congdon, now head of the firm of Congdon-Marsh, Ltd., Winnipeg, clerked for him. Thos. Ryan was doing a retail footwear business in an old frame store on the site of the present Ryan-Devlin building on Main street, while Geo. Ryan shoed horses.

The Ames-Holden Co. operated a small wholesale establishment with a manager and a boy, the former being A. C. Flummerfelt, of Granby Mine fame. Their strong line was a ladies' vici button boot with scalloped top, having a blue silk inside top facing with a yellow star in each scallop.

Mr. Wood was in business in Winnipeg from 1893 to 1899, and selling out to Mr. Geo. Middleton, he reached Vancouver in 1901 and worked for Edward Stark and Jas. & H. D. Rae. In February, 1912, Mr. Wood decided to start in business for himself, so he opened in half of his present premises at 160 Cordova St. West, eventually occupying the entire building. Three years later he launched another store known as the "K Boot Shop" at 301 Hastings St. West. His ambition was to do a nice, compact shoe trade and he was trying to keep it down to reasonable proportions. In spite of having done nothing more than giving good value and providing good service, 1917 found that his business had grown to such healthy proportions that it was deemed advisable to form a joint stock company, which was done under the title of Wood's, Limited. A. J. Barter and James Harley, the managers of the two stores, with Mr. Wood, constitute the firm. The company make a specialty of the English "K" shoe for men and women, handling also J. & T. Bell, Getty & Scott, George A Slater, and other standard lines. For the sake of old associations, the firm still do a custom and repair business. Through the medium of the mail order catalogue, Wood's Limited endeavour to cover the footwear needs of every portion of British Columbia.

SUDDEN DEATH OF J. A. ADAMS

John A. Adams, a former well-known shoe manufacturer of Montreal, died suddenly at 410 Sackville street, Toronto, last month. Mr. Adams, who was managing director of Aero-Peds, Limited, 30 Adelaide street east, had been in poor health for some time. He left the house about nine o'clock to come to business and was taken ill on a street car. He went into a drug store at the corner of Carlton and Parliament Streets, where he collapsed. A doctor was sent for and the patient, somewhat revived, was taken home, but passed away early in the afternoon. Mr. Adams was in his 48th year and had spent all his life making shoes. Born at Lakeside, Ontario he learned the trade in a factory at Walkerville. He afterwards went to North Adams, Mass., where he followed his trade for some time, and then to Montreal. He returned to North Adams for a while and coming back to Canada's commercial metropolis, took an important position with James Linton & Co., Victoria Square, where he was engaged for a number of years. He next became identified with the Rideau Shoe Co., being managing director of that concern. It will be remembered that the plant was completely wiped out by fire a few years when the Company was doing a remarkably large business. Mr. Adams then located in London, Ont., where he was manager of the Murray Shoe Co., which position he held for a couple of years, until failing health compelled him to relinquish the duties. Coming to Toronto, he recuperated for some months and then started the manufacture of Aero-Peds in association with his brother, W. J. Adams and others. Latterly, considerable extra space was secured and operations were extended to the making of sock linings, back stays, eyelet facings and other shoe trimmings.

Mr. Adams leaves a wife and one son, Edward A. Adams. His father, Alexander Adams, is still living and conducts a shoemaking business at 597½ Parliament St., being in his seventy-seventh year. Four brothers as well as one sister, also survive.

The business of Aero-Peds Limited is being continued by W. J. Adams, who is president, H. A. Beatty, Sec'y-Treas., and Edward A. Adams, son of the deceased, who is a director.

LIMITS THE HEIGHT OF SHOES

It is interesting to note that the tendency toward lower tops in footwear has been recognized by the Swedish Government, which has issued an order limiting the height of women's shoes to about seven inches.

According to recent cable reports, the decree says that no shoes made in Sweden shall be more than 18 centimeters in height. This, reduced to our system of measurement, is 7.0866 or about 7 1-12 inches.

The report of this decree does not specify how a shoe shall be measured, whether according to the American standard, namely, from a point in front of the breast of the heel to the top of the shoe, or according to the English standard of measurement, from the heel seat to the top of the shoe at the back.

The order also provides that all cow-hides weighing more than 16 kilograms, about 35¼ pounds, may be used only for the manufacture of sole leather.

AN OLD TIMER IN SELLING SHOES

An old timer in the retail shoe game is Geo. H. Cavin, of Ladysmith, B.C., who believes he is the oldest shoe man, or, at least, the longest in business of anyone in British Columbia.

The interior of George H. Cavin's shoe store, Ladysmith, B.C.

Selling shoes for thirty-five or thirty-six years has not impaired his health, for he tips the beam at nearly two hundred and fifty pounds and is as spry as many men half his years.

Mr. Cavin was born and brought up in Victoria, B.C., and started in the shoe game with the late Henry Mansell, the pioneer shoe merchant of British Columbia. He worked in his store for some fourteen years and then went with a department establishment at Wellington as manager of the shoe section. When the mines closed down at Wellington and the stores were moved to Ladysmith, Mr. Cavin came to that town, and after holding the same position for 12 years started in the shoe game in his own behalf in 1908. When he launched out as a boy practically all the shoes sold were either made by foreign manufacturers in San Francisco or by local establishments with Chinese labor. Travelers in those days from Eastern Canada came over the Central Pacific as this was before the advent of the C.P.R. They were genial, whole-souled chaps. Mr. Cavin says he does not see a great many of these veterans to-day outside of Billy Damer, Jack Scott, Mr. Sait and the Adair Bros. Practically all the others are newcomers, although Lou Godbolt and one or two more of the old timers are still going to British Columbia, but they do not get to Ladysmith or Nanaimo.

Mr. Cavin says once in a while he sees some familiar faces in the columns of the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL, which paper he always looks forward to with a great deal of interest. In a reminiscent vein he remarked: "It is a long time since Bud Mullarky came out here selling the 'red school house shoe' for the John McPherson Co. We had a most unusual summer and I did a land office business in white goods." Mr. Cavin conducts the only exclusive shoe store in Ladysmith and has a brick building, twenty-eight by seventy-five feet, which is the finest shoe store on the island, outside of Victoria. Ladysmith is a progressive town of about four thousand population.

MUD COVERED SHOES ATTRACTED THOUSANDS

It's a long way from Fredericton to Boston. But if there is anyone in cultured Boston to-day that doesn't know where Fredericton, is it is because they are dead ones and don't keep abreast of the times, says a recent despatch from the capital city of New Brunswick.

Fredericton was advertised in Boston last week. It was gloriously advertised. Fredericton goods and Fredericton men were brought to the front. The advertising almost caused a riot, at that.

It happened in this manner: A certain shoe merchant, with a place of business on Washington Street, got hold of a pair of shoes worn in the trenches by a Fredericton boy. The shoes were covered with mud and showed they had been used. They were placed in the store window. To them was attached a card with this inscription: "Made in Fredericton, N.B. and worn one year in the trenches of France by a Fredericton, N. B., boy."

That was enough. It got the crowd. Traffic on Washington street was blocked. Police reserves was called out to keep a passage way open. People were eager to see the shoes. Crowds drew crowds and the shoes were the attraction for all passing up and down Washington Street.

AND EVERY MAN DID HIS DUTY!

During the recent campaign for Canada's great Victory Loan, advertisers gave free use of their space and advertising men gave free use of their pen to boost the issue.

Probably one of the most unusual pieces of literature produced was that issued by Mr. A. A. Briggs, Advertising Manager, Dunlop Tire & Rubber Goods Co., Toronto, who took as his keynote the word "Victory" and by tying it up to the Victory Flagship and the Victory Bond, dreamed of Nelson coming back and sizing up Canada as a country where no one needed to be told to do their duty—every evidence was on hand that each man had given the command to himself.

The following is the blank verse from Mr. Briggs' pen.

If Nelson Could Return

And flash his searching glance across our shores,

His instinct to appraise the truth of any fame

Would soon find play in passing scan

Of our good gifts in soldier men, and in those

Aids to life and limb which take

Such human ways in the heart and soul

Of this great nation.

Lo! the eager glance would leave the "mighty Nelson's" face

And in its place a smile most sweet and calm—

"My men of 'Victory' ship have left their impress on this soil,

Their heart's heroic glow in every act.

No need that I implore your sons that Duty loudly calls for, behold, I see

My ship is now 'in Bond'— the good old 'Victory'.

Each man sets sail with stern resolve to Place his gold and jewels unto the crown. So

Canada doth know this day 'every man will Do his duty! "

REPAIRING SURE TO BE DONE WELL

The following tribute is paid to the Hurlbut Co., Preston, in a recent edition of the "Shoe Repairer and Dealer": The writer had heard of experiments along this line of repairing in Australia and in New York City, but was surprised to learn of a Canadian shoe manufacturer who arranges to repair the shoes for his customers. The manufacturer is the Hurlbut Company of Preston, Ont., Can., a concern making over two thousand pairs daily. The customer who has bought Hurlbut shoes may mail them direct to the factory to be soled or otherwise repaired. This work is done at actual cost, although the customer pays the expense to the factory and the manufacturer prepays the return charges.

This should surely be an inducement for customers to buy this manufacturer's shoes or for the retailer to handle them, for the repairing is sure to be well done, making the shoes as good as new, and giving the buyer the maximum of wear for his money.

NEW STYLE OF ARCH SUPPORT SHOWN

The latest innovation in the way of arch supports is being shown to the trade in the Dominion by the Canadian-Arrowsmith Mfg. Co., of Niagara Falls, Ont. It is known as the "all leather arch support," being light, airy, non-breakable and self-adjusting. These new supports—metatarsal, longitudinal, combination and heel adjusting—come with or without rubber heel pads. Each support is provided with a number of leather plugs which are removable. Thus the wearer adjusts his or her own pair and the shoe retailer does not require any special machine for this purpose. When a sale is made, the transaction is closed, as the customer attends to the adjustments in a way that gives no trouble and affords exactly the relief and comfort that he or she personally desires. All the leather in the supports is specially treated so as to prevent it from deteriorating through the sweating or moisture of the feet.

The new, all leather arch supports have been much admired for their neatness, lightness, strength and special, self-adjusting facilities. They mark a new achievement in pedal appliances.

NEW LIFE NEEDED IN ASSOCIATION

It appears that the Shoe Repairers' Association, which was formed in Vancouver with much enthusiasm about a year ago, has practically ceased to exist. Just why the organization has been allowed to elapse cannot be fully learned, but it is a pity that such a useful institution did not have a longer life. At this moment in the shoe repair business, when leather has never been known to be so high in price and findings of all kinds are mounting up, it requires all the resources of the members of the trade to educate the public in the matter of fair prices. This can be accomplished more successfully and expeditiously when they work as a union instead of on an individual basis. There is one thing certain, and that is, the figure which is being charged patrons to-day on most jobs is not sufficient to allow a proprietor the wages of a journeyman and, with the increased cost of living, the probable rise in rent, etc., shoe repairing in Vancouver affords little more or less than a bare existence. It is hoped that it is not too late yet for wise counsel to prevail and that the members of the craft will get together and re-organize the Shoe Repairers' Association. If they will do this and work with interest and zest, there is no doubt a bright future ahead, but unless each one makes a special effort, there is danger of the association collapsing by default.

With the advent of winter and the stormy weather all shoe merchants are reaping a harvest in the sale of rubbers. They are also beginning to feel the benefit of the Christmas trade. They anticipate a bumper business this year, as people seem to be purchasing more practical presents than in former years.

TORONTO SHOE REPAIRERS ELECT NEW OFFICERS

At an enthusiastic and well attended meeting of the Toronto Shoe Repairers' Association, held on December 13th, new officers were elected for the coming year. The old officers were requested to retain their positions for another term, but modestly declined, on the ground that new blood would be in the best interest of the organization.

President Charles F. Robertson presided and most gratifying reports were presented, showing that the finances and membership are in a healthy condition. The statement of the financial secretary, A. Butterworth, was received with many expressions of satisfaction. The membership is now over one hundred and there is a balance in the bank of $180.00. A year ago the balance was only $25.00. The membership fees during the past twelve months were $293.75, profits from the picnic to Niagara Falls, $50.20, and profits from the banquet held last winter, $32.50. The Association has not a dollar of indebtedness.

The following officers were elected for 1918:—

President—H. K. Hayward, 2852 Dundas street west.

Vice-President—J. W. Hendry, 2191 Queen street east.

Financial Secretary—S. Burnett, 761 Yonge street.

Recording Secretary—S. Mason, 165 Van Horne street.

Treasurer—A. Butterworth, 457 Yonge street.

Executive Committee—Charles F. Robertson, 497 Queen street west; Walter Burnill, 75 Queen street east; H. E. Carley, 1067 Gerrard street east; J. L. Weir, 462 Parliament street; A. M. Brodie, 229 Dundas street.

Auditors—A. M. Brodie and S. Mason.

All the officers were returned by acclamation with the exception of members of the Executive, for which there were

The Picked Hides from these steers are tanned by our special time-tried, vat-tanned process, and the result is leather that is honest, flexible, long in fibre and possessing the maximum of wearing strength.

Star Brand Tap Soles are made from the prime portions of this leather, as shown in the illustration. They are carefully sorted and inspected before shipment. When you buy Star Tap Soles you are getting the best that can be produced. Millions of shoes were re-soled last year with Star Brand.

nine nominations. It was decided that the next regular session would be held on January 10th, the remaining meeting in December being cancelled owing to the holiday season. The Executive Committee was authorized to make arrangements for the second annual banquet which will be held at a date to be decided upon later.

In retiring from the office of president, Mr. Robertson thanked the members for the warm support they had given him during the year and a half that he had been in the chair.

S. Mason, Toronto, newly elected Recording Secretary

The regular semi-monthly meetings had been well attended and, from discussions and association with the members, he had learned much in buying, selling and the treatment of customers, and he believed that all the others could say the same. They had been taught many things that they never knew before from the advice and insight of the various craftsmen. He suggested that, during the coming season, a series of debates should be carried out on practical and helpful subjects in ways and means of bettering conditions of the trade, stock-keeping, purchasing, etc. As retiring president of the Association he would continue to give it every support and maintain the spirit of co-operation and harmony which had marked all their gatherings.

President-elect Hayward, who has ably filled the position of vice-president, thanked one and all for the honor conferred upon him and promised to do all that was in his power to sustain the interest and enthusiasm of the organization.

Mr. Burnill, who stated that he preferred to serve in the ranks as a committeeman rather than accept the office of vice-president, for which he was nominated, stirred the gathering with his stimulative words. He thought that addresses should be delivered at some of the meetings on the best methods of developing business and increasing trade. Mr. Burnill offered several valuable suggestions which will be acted upon.

Other speeches were made by Messrs. Butterworth, Hendry, Mason, and Smallwood, which were well received. A hearty vote of thanks was tendered the retiring officers, special mention being made of the faithful and efficient services of Mr. Butterworth, whose work, in behalf of the organization, bespoke his worth. At the close of the business proceedings several songs were rendered by F. Smallwood, pianist of the Association. The prospects for the coming year are exceptionally promising and the new officers will preside at the next regular meeting on Thursday, January 10th.

BIG RUSH AT WESTERN SHOE SALE

One of the largest shoe stores in Victoria, B.C., is that of Jas. Maynard, who has been in business in the Capital City for thirty-three years, coming from London, Eng. Thos. Brake, shoe retailer, of Toronto, worked for Mr. Maynard in the old land. The accompanying picture shows a crowd in front of the Maynard shoe store during a sale. The number of people became so great that the doors had to be closed and the police called to control the movements of the scores that had gathered on the street.

When a big sale is on in Victoria

THE FIVE POINTS OF BUYING

At the front and rear of stores to-day shoes are arriving in just this way.

Were these shoes —your shoes, perhaps— bought with these five pointers in mind?

1. What styles will fit in with my customers' wants?
2. What single style will move best in my store, and what proportion of my total trade is it likely to form?
3. Is it in the proper grade, price, materials, color and standard of service?
4. Is it a good fitting style?
5. What is its weak point as a merchandising feature, and will it have to be watched?

The days of loose and careless buying have passed. Merchants have bought this season, more than ever, with discrimination. They have bought with appreciation of the necessity of buying as usual to ensure satisfactory deliveries of the styles they must have, and in the selection of late novelties. Experiences of the past three years have shown that the proper buying stabilizes business in all branches of the industry and by sound and safe selection orders placed have not been subject to the unethical habit of "cancellitis"—"Boot and Shoe Record"

NEW POST FOR MR. McFARLAND

S. Mullett, who for the past few years has been managing director and secretary-treasurer of the Williams Shoe Limited, Brampton, is retiring at the end of the year and will be succeeded by G. W. McFarland, who established the western branch of the company in Regina in March, 1915. Mr. McFarland is widely known in the shoe trade and, in taking up his new duties in Brampton, will be welcomed by many friends. W. D. Harris, who has represented the Williams Shoe in Alberta for several years, will take over the management of the western branch. He is thoroughly conversant with the shoe business and his friends feel confident that he will make a success of his new position.

PLAIN, POINTED TALK BY SHOEMAN

Here is what appeared in an ad of J. H. Mansell, 650 Johnson street, Victoria, B.C., recently:—

Shoecology.—“Something for Nothing” is the snare that lures many a dollar from the buying public.

There is no mechanic or laborer working for glory nor any of us in business for our health.

Confidence is an outgrowth of strength built upon the principle of doing business legitimately, and satisfying the public that they have received full value for their money. What more can you expect? What more can we ask?

SHOE CONTRACTS INDEFINITELY HELD UP

A recent despatch from Boston, says: With Lenine and Trotzky in control of the Russian Government, which is unrecognized by the United States and by the Allies, the contracts for manufacturing shoes in this country for Russian civilian use are indefinitely held up. Some decision is expected to be reached soon as to whether or not this work is to be entirely abandoned.

About the middle of November manufacturers in the United States submitted bids to make approximately 2,000,000 pairs of these shoes, and the bulk of the awards came to New England manufacturers. But contracts were not completed and the work has not been started.

In addition to these contracts for manufacture, the Russian Purchasing Commission bought from stocks already on hand approximately 500,000 pairs of heavy unlined work shoes, approximately half from Eastern supplies and half in Western manufacturing centres. These shoes, it is understood, have been shipped from the wholesalers' stores, but it is not believed that they have yet left the country. It has been stated that shipments of these shoes will be permitted to go from the United States to Russia, but care will be taken to keep the supplies from falling into unfriendly hands.

further intervened to promote an even stronger situation, which promises eventually even higher prices than rule-to-day. The armies engaged in the present world conflict are using up available supplies of leather at a rate that is many times greater than ordinary consumption would involve. The demand for meat has contributed to a large extent to help out conditions in the supply of raw materials for the tanners, but at the rate at which the animals have been killed for food in the war zone, as well as in those countries where large contracts for army supplies are under way, warrants the assumption that the available supplies of raw stock have been seriously impaired and the future drawn upon to an extent that will mean a far stronger market than has hitherto obtained, as soon as further demands arise for leather or shoes. Should there be well founded reason for believing that the war in Europe will come to an early end, or should a cessation of hostilities be declared, there would undoubtedly be a pause in business and a scramble to get from under. A good many people would get the 'nerves' and seek to unload, which would naturally mean a slump in prices for the time being. But let it be remembered that this slump if it occurs will only be temporary. Business will soon right itself, and in my opinion prices will rule stronger than ever a few months later. The demand for materials of all kinds to make up for the immense destruction brought about by the war will call for the utmost that can be accomplished in production for many years to come. Taking the leather and shoe trades as an example, there will be an unprecedented demand that will only be limited by the financial means of the people, and as there will be more than enough employment for those who return from the war, and who have been deprived of their natural occupations, by its prosecution, wages will continue high as they must from the extraordinary financial situation which will follow the war, so that indications all point to an era of higher rather than lower prices ahead."

IS SUCCESS AN ACCIDENT?

ters, it does not pay to have people speak evil of you or your business. Be kind, courteous and considerate to your opposition and never for any reason say a disparaging word about him or his business. Be open and frank with your competitors and friends as far as your real business interests will permit. It pays to have people believe that your house is open and honorable in all its dealings.

"Gambling is a bad business policy, whether it be stock gambling, overbuying or taking undue risks in selling. No man with a legitimate business on his hands has a right to expect success if he devotes his best thought to the stock market. No man can continue long in the game of speculative buying without getting caught. It is the same with regard to selling to doubtful accounts. Cut out an account when you decide it is a poor risk and put the energy you would waste upon it into a good prospect. One of the commonest temptations in business is to take new risks to cover old ones. Men will take on a concern that has made a bad failure and hope to recoup themselves for previous losses. The results have turned out oftener than not in further loss.

Business Building Needs Definite Planning.

"The man who waits for 'things to come around' or who leaves his business to grow without definite planning is taking serious risks. Business building like any other class of good construction, is founded upon definite planning. With a set objective, progress is bound to be accomplished, while haphazard methods are sure to be unsatisfactory, to say the least. Business planning does not necessarily mean that cast iron rules or fixed methods are to be always followed. Plans, as well as machinery that are found to be inefficient or ineffective should be discarded although too much changing is almost as bad as none at all. It is a good thing for a business man to set an aim and make a steady, definite effort to achieve it. If he does better than he hopes, which is more than likely if he works persistently to this end, that is so much to the good."

A Boston Concern Tries to Tell Canadians Where to Get Off—No Truth in the Statement Made

A BOSTON concern doing business with Canadian shoe manufacturers has written the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL recently cancelling its advertising, and this is the reason it offers:

We have just had a salesman return from a somewhat extended trip through Canada calling on the shoe trade and from his experience we should judge that your manufacturers had absolutely no desire to place any more business with the States than was absolutely necessary.

"Probably AFTER WE WIN THE WAR FOR YOU, there will be a change of feeling, at least we hope so. We have for many years enjoyed splendid trade in your country and considered the Canadian customers among the best on our books.

"Our salesman reports that almost every concern told him that they would not buy a cents worth from United States that could possibly be bought in Canada.

"In former times, we heard this occasionally, but now it seems almost every concern. If this is their feeling we have no notion of spending any more money in Canada for advertising."

Yours respectfully,

SHULTZ-GOODWIN Co. (Inc.)

F. W. A. Shultz, Treas.

As far as we are able to judge from conditions in Canada and a reference to some of our responsible shoe manufacturers, there is absolutely no truth in this claim further than that for economic reasons Canada is compelled just now to look a little more closely into her expenditures. Some months ago this same firm threatened the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL with the "big stick" because it claimed the Canadian Government was unduly censoring its mail. It showed the same spirit as evidenced in its later letter, saying: "If your country is taking their trouble with Germany to heart to such an extent that they do not allow mail to go through because the forwarder happens to be of German ancestry, they are carrying the matter too far. If this card does not reach you, you may cancel this advertising contract and we will also stop shipping goods into Canada. They are having difficulty now getting goods in this market, and we can add to it very materially. It is a poor rule that does not work both ways."

If this firm's representative was as candid in his attitude towards Canadian buyers as its head is in expressing his feelings with regard to Canada and Canadians the wonder is not that he failed to sell goods, but that he got back at all. The brutal effrontery of this man who proposes to speak for the American people is the best evidence of his origin. Fortunately few here believe his bombast to be an expression of the attitude of those who have recently joined hands with the civilized nations of the earth in putting down the Hun.

Canada and the United States were never in their history so closely and warmly drawn together than at the present moment, and the most recent evidence of this is in the handsome contribution of America to the needs of stricken Halifax, has thrilled Canada from coast to coast. The busybodies who seek to stir up antagonism between the two countries should be put where they belong—behind a barbed wire enclosure.

NEW POSITION FOR MR. MATHEWS

W. V. Mathews has been appointed factory superintendent of the Tetrault Shoe Mfg. Co., Montreal, and has entered upon his new duties. Widely known to the shoe trade he has had a long and successful experience, and belongs to a family of shoemakers, his father and brothers being engaged in the business. Mr. Mathews first started as a boy in the office of Bradley & Metcalfe, Milwaukee, Wis., his father at that time being superintendent of the plant. This firm is one of the pioneer shoe concerns in the West. From the office Mr. Mathews went into the factory and got a thorough knowledge of the technical end of the trade. Later he was the superintendent for Drew & Selby, Portsmouth, Ohio, with whom he remained for eleven years as superintendent. Next Mr. Mathews was with the Conrad Shoe Co., of Louisville, Ky., where he had charge of the plant. Some time later he came to Canada on a holiday and thought he would like to call on a few of the factories. While in Toronto, he was offered the position of superintendent of the Victoria Shoe Co. and accepted it. He remained with this firm several years, afterwards going to J. & T. Bell, Limited, Montreal, with whom he stayed five years. His last appointment was as general superintendent of the Ames-Holden-McCready factories in Montreal and St. Hyacinthe, Que.

Outside of making and designing shoe models, Mr. Mathews has an interesting hobby and that is painting both oil and water colors. He has produced a number of very attractive pictures which have been declared by experts to be exceedingly fine work.

W. V. Mathews, Montreal

Mostly About Cushions

Being an application of the ease and comfort of the cushion to the sole of the foot

ONE of the great problems of shoemakers has always been to provide a shoe which would be soft and easy on the foot—yea, and also rigid and strong enough to protect it—without undue clumsiness. To provide a cushion between the walker and the thing walked upon.

And—it is no mean problem to counteract the terrible strain caused by the continual shifting of the dead weight of the human body from one foot to the other—during the waking hours in the simple process of walking. But the Tally-Ho Shoe has done it with their famous 2 in 1 cushion construction.

The Cushion Feature of Tally-Ho Shoes

The inner cushion—built into the shoe—consists of a leather insole covering a soft felt cushion which is laid on top of a second cushion of cork. (See cross section opposite showing the way it is built.) The outer cushion is provided by the famous and reliable Bull Dog sole—resilient and elastic—yet durable, strong and waterproof. The two make up our 2 in 1 Cushion Shoe—the most practical and comfortable shoe on the market. Remember that all Tally-Ho Shoes have these strong features as part of the shoe—features built in, not tacked on.

2 in 1 Cushion Sole Tally-Ho

Standard Features of Tally-Ho Shoes

1. Tally-Ho Corset Arch Support—built into every shoe.
2. Tally-Ho 2 in 1 Cushion Sole—an important feature.
3. The Bull Dog Outsole—better wearing than either rubber or leather—waterproof, flexible, non-slip—guaranteed service—finishes like leather.
4. Authentic Styles—originated in American Tally-Ho Shop.
5. No-jar Rubber Heel—springy, resilient, pure rubber.
6. San-i-tex Health Lining—supplied with kid shoes.

Here's a shoe with practical features that all shoe wearers want. It is sold at a price—no larger than that of the ordinary shoes. It is a shoe that you cannot afford to overlook, as it offers both good profit to the seller and great satisfaction to the wearer.

Ask your jobber about Tally-Ho—or ask us.

WHAT ABOUT TRENCH BOOTS?

Manufacturers of this class of army shoes who are being deluged with individual orders are naturally asking why the government are not supplying them to the soldiers. The families are put to this large and unnecessary expense, which ought to be borne by the country at large. If the trench boots are good for those who are able to procure them at their own expense surely they should not be beyond the reach of the rest of the army. We are accustomed to hear the expression repeated, "there is nothing too good for the boys at the front," and it would seem that the proper protection against the wet of the trenches and the inclemency of the Flanders winter would be one of the first things called for by this sentiment.

NEWSY BRIEFS FROM QUEBEC

Jos. Leclerc, formerly superintendent for Jos: Tanguay, has taken a position with F. Blouin, Enrg.

Shoe factories are getting busier all the while and many of them are now in the midst of their spring run.

A number of manufacturers bought Victory Bonds during the recent campaign.

Ed. Gaumont, superintendent of La Cie des Cuirs et Chaussures, Plessisville, Que., was in the city recently and reports that the factory is very busy.

There was a pool made up among the shoe manufacturers and the leather merchants recently for a share in a Victory Bond and luck was in favor of Alfred Marois, of Tourigny & Marois.

The many friends of H. C. Parker, of Parker-Irwin, Limited, Montreal, were glad to see him on the occasion of his recent visit to Quebec. He was warmly congratulated on being the lucky winner in the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL fishing contest.

The sale in the case of Eug. Thivierge, shoe manufacturer, insolvent, was conducted by the firm of LaRue, Trudel & Picher, Liquidators, as follows: Machines and accessories, valued at $12,384.20, sold to Chas. E. Roy & Co., for $1,300.34; leather and fittings, value, $18,590.90, to C. E. Roy for $8,644.77; leather and fittings, value, $2,689.96, to L. S. Odell for $2,299.93; footwear, value $16,926.48 to Jos. Tanguay for $12,525.60; footwear, value $1,398.45, to Jos. Tanguay, $1,027.86; footwear, value $2,647.85, to J. A. Martin, $2,012.37; furniture, value $208.05, to C. E. Roy & Co. for $66.58; 8 Nationale Bank shares, value $1,200, to L. P. Thibault for $1,196.00; balance of lease to James Scott for $130.00; property at St. Etienne, Levis, to Felix Lavoie for $1,500; property at No. 102 Queen street to P. Noel for $2,700.00.

Among the recent callers on the trade in Quebec were: Horace R. Thomas, of Boston; A. A. Deverell, of Novelties Limited, Toronto; L. S. Odell, Montreal; J. B. Crochier, of L. H. Packard Co., Limited, Montreal; F. X. Minneau, of F. F. Dalley Co., Hamilton; A. Isseman, of the Walpole Rubber Co., Montreal, and F. J. Perego, of the Steel Co., Montreal.

DEATH OF MR. M. L. SAVAGE

Many friends in the shoe trade will learn with deepest regret of the death of Melville L. Savage, which occurred in Winnipeg on December 7th. He had not been feeling well for the past few weeks, but with characteristic energy and indomitable will, kept at his work. It was only a fortnight before his death that he was taken to the hospital and although the best medical attention possible was given, there was little hope from the first. Heart failure and pneumonia were the immediate cause of his demise.

"Mel" Savage, as he was familiarly called, was one of the most popular and widely known shoe travelers in Canada.

Big in sympathy, geniality and physical proportions, his good nature was proverbial and among his numerous customers he numbered scores of intimate friends. For some ten years he had represented the Tetrault Shoe Manufacturing Co., of Montreal, and J. A. & M. Cote, of St. Hyacinthe, Que., throughout the Western Provinces and did a very large business for these firms.

The late Mr. Savage, who was 45 years of age, secured his first position with the Boston and Maine Railway and was a ticket seller at the North Station in Boston. Later he came to the Maritime Provinces and for some years was in the retail shoe business in Fredericton and St. John, N.B., and then entered the traveling ranks.

A few years ago he and Geo. H. Ferguson, Western Canada representative of Clark Bros., St. Stephen, N.B., organized the firm of Murray's, Limited, and bought out Glass Bros., 102A Eighth avenue west, Calgary. They conduct one of the most progressive footwear establishments in the West. A large trade was built up and only a few weeks ago the same firm took over the Harvard Shoe Store, 311 Portage avenue, Winnipeg, and completely remodeled the premises. Mr. Savage had finished his spring selling trip and was in charge of the latter establishment when taken ill.

R. L. Savage, of Toronto, who represents Clark Bros., of St. Stephen, N.B., in Ontario and Quebec, left for Winnipeg a few days before his brother's death.

Another brother, Hanson M. Savage, of the Wetmore, Savage Co., Boston, also arrived in Winnipeg two days before the final summons came and was accompanied by the wife, son and daughter of the deceased. The body was accompanied by Mrs. Savage and her two children to Ayer, Mass., where they have resided for some years. There the late Mr. Savage spent a considerable portion of his time each year when off the road.

R. L. and H. M. Savage, the two surviving brothers, and executors of the estate, remained over a couple of days in Winnipeg to attend to some important business matters, but reached Ayer in time for the last sad rites. They sold the Harvard Shoe Store (recently acquired as already stated, by the deceased and his partner, Mr. Ferguson) to John Affleck, of the Yale Shoe Store, Portage avenue, Winnipeg, who also owns the Allan Shoe Store, on Main street, in that city, and was a personal friend of the departed.

AMONG THE SHOE MEN.

J. F. Reeb, shoe dealer, of Port Colborne, Ont., has sold out.

The shoe stock of Mrs. Jos. Lamotte, Montreal, was sold recently.

The P. C. Price Shoe Co., Montreal, was recently registered.

W. E. Smith, shoe dealer, of Ottawa, recently assigned to W. A. Cole.

The Canadian Boot Lace Co., Montreal, recently registered.

Clayton E. Hurlbut, of the Hurlbut Co., Preston, Ont., was in Montreal recently on a business trip.

W. T. Francis, sales manager of Gale Bros., Limited, Quebec, was in Toronto last week on business.

Geo. Tuxford, repair man, of Vernon, B.C., has enlisted with the Army Service Corps, where he will continue at his trade.

Adolph Hansen, shoe repairer, of Stettler, Alta., has installed a Sterling stitcher, as well as a Progressive finishing outfit.

Peter A. Doig, sales manager of the Star Shoe, Limited, Montreal, was in Toronto and London last week calling upon the trade.

Clayton S. Corson, general manager of the Regal Shoe Co., Toronto, spent a few days in Boston last week on business.

The Cotter Boot Shop, Montreal, was among the concerns recently registered.

W. F. Muirhead & Co., Kamloops, B.C., have purchased Bacon's shoe store and have now the only exclusive footwear establishment in Kamloops.

Geo. Woods, shoe repairer, of Vernon, B.C., has installed a Progressive finishing outfit in his repair department.

Fred. J. McCann, who is well known and well liked by the shoe trade, has been appointed manager of the footwear department of Jas. A. Ogilvy & Sons, Montreal, and has departed upon his new duties.

J. E. Warrington, of the John Ritchie Co., Quebec, spent a few days in Toronto recently calling upon the trade.

Wm. H. Thorpe, who until recently was manager of the Yale Shoe Store, Regina, left for Bellingham, Wash., where he will reside in future.

The many friends of A. J. Chessum, shoe retailer, East Toronto, will sympathize with him in the loss of his brother, Arthur C. Chessum, who passed away recently in Toronto after only a few days' illness from pneumonia.

E. I. Peel and A. Reid have entered into partnership under the firm name of Peel & Reid, carrying on a boot and shoe business in Amherst, N.S.

E. Berube, who conducted the largest departmental store in Amherstburg, Ont., and was one of the oldest citizens, died recently. He has been in poor health for some years and paralysis was the cause of his death.

T. H. Clarke, shoe repairer, of Penticton, B.C., has opened a new shoe store in that town. He is incorporating some new ideas in the management of his business. There will be no delivery of goods, the purchaser carrying the parcel home from the store and thus cutting out delivery costs. There will be no goods sent on approval, thus eliminating messenger costs. Every sale will be a cash transaction, thus saving the cost of bookkeeping. By paying cash to the manufacturers, Mr. Clarke intends to cut out overhead expenses and to sell shoes at a price that is as near real value as possible. T. H. Clarke will continue his repair business as usual with Samuel Clarke in charge.

It is understood that J. W. Arrowsmith, of the Arrowsmith Mfg. Co., will shortly place on the Canadian market a new arch-prop shoe, which is his own invention. It possesses all the latest features, and arrangements will likely be made for its manufacture in the Dominion at an early date.

John Mitchell, who conducted a shoe business on King street, St. John, N.B., some years ago, and died recently, left an estate valued at $12,800, of which $11,200 was real estate, consisting of two lots of land on King street in that city.

J. W. McCulloch, manager of the shoe department of Archie McGillis, Fort William, Ont., is a recent graduate of the American School of Practipedics in Chicago. The science of practipedics consists of using the most advanced methods of shoe fitting in conjunction with the scientific adapting of individual need of the corrective devices invented by the world's leading authorities.

J. P. Lagace, of Lagace & Lepinay, shoe manufacturers, Quebec, was in Toronto recently calling upon the trade.

James Robinson, of Montreal, and James Young, of Toronto, left recently for Florida, where they will spend the winter months.

W. Hebert, of Gagnon, Lachapelle & Hebert, shoe manufacturers, Montreal, is in Toronto this week showing his new line of samples for fall of next year. The range is a very complete and attractive one, and in it are included some fifty new models which are particularly inviting. There is a large showing of misses' with both leather and Neolins soles, and the whole collection was never as representative as at the present time.

T. H. Rumford, shoe retailer, of Georgetown, Ont., has moved into his handsome and well appointed new store in that town. His premises are located next door to the post office.

L. S. McKindsey, of Hamilton, and J. W. Garrett, of Toronto, who represent the W. B. Hamilton Shoe Co., of Toronto, in the Western Provinces, have returned after successful selling trips in the interest of the firm.

Harold G. Greene, son of R. H. Greene, Gutta Percha and Rubber, Limited, Toronto, who has been attached to the Montreal office of the company for the past three years, has taken up his residence in Ottawa, where he has been appointed assistant manager of the Ottawa branch, of which E. E. Chisnall is manager.

The Toronto office of the United Shoe Machinery Co. has been removed from 122 Adelaide street west to 90 Adelaide street west, next to the Bell Telephone Co. building. In the new premises the company have three floors, 100 x 25 feet which afford more than double the amount of space that they formerly had. The interior has been admirably fitted up and the private office of L. W. Hanson, the manager, is just on the left of entrance. Upstairs very comfortable quarters have been provided for the road staff.

Lieut. Geo. J. Young, who was killed in action on November 20th, went overseas with a company of the Royal Flying Corps from Toronto. He was born at Foster, Que., and was twenty-eight years of age. Before enlisting he was employed in the offices of the Dominion Rubber Co., Montreal.

LYONS BROOK, N.S.

The United States Rubber Co. has in the neighborhood of $5,000,000 of war orders. A portion of this business is for the French Government.

W. A. McLellan, of the Palmer-McLellan Shoepack Co., of Fredericton, N.B., returned recently from a visit to the West calling on his way at the principal points in Ontario and Quebec enroute. He reports the business situation in the West as good, although the lack of suitable seasonable weather so far has militated against the sale of heavy lines. Jobbers seem to be pretty well provided with goods and are hoping for weather that will start things.

A. D. Smith, manager of the branch of Gutta Percha and Rubber, Limited, in Halifax, N.S., was in Toronto this week on business. All the windows in the company's offices at 143 Granville street, were smashed in the terrific explosion which recently shattered a large portion of the city, but the members of the staff escaped injury.

E. W. Firth, son of J. E. Firth, of Peterboro, Ont., who for many years has represented the W. B. Hamilton Shoe Co., Toronto, is confined to the base hospital in Toronto, suffering from a very stiff leg, the ligaments being badly strained in an accident which he met with a few weeks ago at Camp Borden, where he was in training with the Royal Flying Corps, of which he is a member.

The ratepayers of Whitby, Ont., carried by a vote of 341 to 41 a by-law to loan $25,000 to the United Rubber Manufacturing & Reclaiming Co., of Toronto. The company is to begin work on its plant in Whitby immediately and hopes to produce its own 1918 output of tires. A building 160 by 60 feet will be erected, and the building and site will be valued at $15,000 and $25,000 worth of machinery will be installed.

A. B. McKenzie, of the McKenzie-Crowe Co., larrigan and shoepack manufacturers, of Bridgetown, N.S., was a visitor to Toronto recently in the interest of his firm. He spent a couple of weeks in Western Canada visiting the trade and placing his goods for the coming season. He claims their well-known line is as popular as ever and that he found the demand for well-made goods at a fair price is not affected by the cheap, undesirable stuff that is being marketed by some concerns in Quebec and elsewhere.

A. A. Allan has been elected a member of the directorate of the Canadian Consolidated Rubber Co., Montreal. He is connected with a number of companies and his wide experience should prove of value to the board of the Canadian Consolidated. A recent report from Montreal shows the company's business continues to show a large increase for the corresponding period of last year and that 1917 will be the best year in the history of the organization.

P. Jacobi, shoe store supplies, Toronto, states that the present season has been the busiest in the sale of overgaiters which they have ever experienced. The favorite colors are dark brown, dark gray and fawn, the gaiters being made with eight and ten buttons in felt, kersey cloth, melton and beaver. There has also been a big demand for children's leggings in brown, gray and white corduroy. The firm also report an exceptionally heavy holiday business in boudoir slippers of various colors.

Shoe retailers report generally a large business in rubbers of all kinds. The recent heavy falls of snow have made trade in this line exceptionally brisk and the factories are rushed to the limit in order to keep pace with requisitions. A scarcity is reported by some dealers in women's light goods and tan rubbers. Complaints are heard from wholesale warehouses at delayed shipments on the part of the railways and express companies while, in all the plants, help is short and labor, both skilled and unskilled, very difficult to secure. On the whole the companies are doing their utmost to keep up with sorting trade, considering the many obstacles with which they have to contend.

B. D. Menzies, manager of the store of the United Shoe Dealers, Sudbury, Ont., was in Toronto on a sad mission last week. He was accompanying the remains of his father, Robert J. Menzies, who passed away in Detroit, on December 11th, to Lindsay, where interment took place. The late Mr. Menzies was a former resident of Lindsay but, for the past five years, had been living in Detroit. He is survived by three sons, B. D. Menzies, of Sudbury, Percy, of Detroit, and Harry D., who left recently for overseas with the 1st Depot Battalion of the Western Ontario Regiment. Another son, Norman E. Menzies, who lived in Edmonton, and belonged to the Royal Engineer Corps, was killed a little over a year ago after being only three weeks in France.

The revised net price list of sporting shoes has gone into effect. Placing orders have been much ahead of last year, although in September there was an average increase of eleven per cent. on all kinds of tennis goods. The new list, just issued, show an advance of from two to five cents per pair on the various lines. There is no branch of the footwear business in Canada which has made such strides during recent years as outing and athletic shoes and wonderful progress has been evidenced in workmanship, styles and materials.

OUR BEST WISHES

THE SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL takes occasion to express to the Trade its warmest thanks for the loyal support it has received during the year that has just closed and which enabled it to excel anything it has hitherto achieved. The total number of pages, in spite of the adverse conditions throughout the year, has been 1,844. Its THIRTIETH volume, compared with its first, is just five times the size. The SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL has kept up with the progress of the shoe and leather trades of Canada in size and service.

We wish our readers a Happy Christmas and a Prosperous New Year.

James Acton

D. R. Hawley, who represents Getty & Scott, Limited, in Montreal and Eastern Ontario, left this week for New York, where he will spend the Christmas holidays with his daughter. Mr. Hawley expects to return early in January and call on his customers with some snappy New York styles for early spring trade.

Joseph Mantell, the oldest citizen in Toronto, being 107 years of age, went to the polls on election day and cast a ballot for the Union Government. Mr. Mantell lives at 49 Rainsford road, and was until a few years ago a shoe maker.

Harry L. Taylor, has joined the selling staff of the International Supply Co., of Kitchener, Ont., and is with the firm at their Montreal branch. He is one of the best known and most popular supply salesmen in Canada, and has been for a number of years calling upon the trade. The Montreal offices of the International Supply Co., are located at 401 Coristine Building.

Louis Payan, of Duclos & Payan, St. Hyacinthe, Que., was in Toronto last week calling upon the trade. The new factory of the firm specializing in fibre counters, is now in operation, with a capacity of 100,000 pairs a day. The building is 44 by 132 feet in dimensions, two storeys high, and admirably equipped for meeting the rapidly growing demand for the output of the firm.

An innovation in children's shoes has been introduced by Getty & Scott, Limited, Galt. It is a cushion sole shoe constructed on the same plan as the famous Dr. Reed Shoe. It affords a soft and pliable tread for tender little feet, and cures all the ills and deformities in growing feet. The idea of making a cushion sole shoe for children originated with the energetic superintendent of the Classic shoe plant. Tacks, wax and thread are eliminated from the inside of the shoe, and the makers of this new creation expect a large sale for it as soon as it is shown to the trade.

H. A. Innes, who for nearly two years past has been head of the accounting department of McLaren & Dallas, wholesale shoes, Toronto, has enlisted with the 69th Battery. At a gathering recently at the home of Miss Laura Jeffrey, 60 Herbert street, an interesting event took place when Mr. Innes was presented with a military wrist watch, accompanied by an appreciative address from the employees of the firm. The presentation was made by Searle Gray of the office staff, and a pleasant evening was spent. J. A. McLaren, who was present, added a few words of appreciation of the faithful services of Mr. Innes.

Bachrack Bros.' shoe store, Yonge street, Toronto, was gutted by fire on December 15th. The fire broke out in the rear part of the basement, which is used for a stock-room, and soon ignited the main floor, which collapsed, the safe and cash register falling through to the basement. Owing to the inaccessibility of the basement, the firemen, who were early on the scene, had considerable difficulty in extinguishing the flames. The stock, which runs into the neighborhood of $100,000, was not totally destroyed by fire, but everything was more or less damaged by smoke and water.

That the military trend now predominating in women's shoe fashions in the United States duplicates what took place in Canada during their first year of war was the interesting statement made by Walter Smardon, president of the Smardon Shoe Co., shoe manufacturers, of Montreal, Canada, who was in Rochester last week, says the "Shoe Retailer." The Canadian shoe manufacturer, who visited the local shoe factories in a search for new style features and suggestions, related that the same military blend and style tendency has taken hold in the United States as was the vogue in Canada immediately after war was declared. "For a time business in women's shoes declined slightly," said Mr. Smardon, "however, Canadian women are demanding better shoes and what's more they want prettier shoes."

J. P. Mitchell, of the travelling staff of the McFarland Shoe Co., Edmonton, is spending a few weeks in Toronto, on a visit to relatives.

John McCullough, shoe retailer, 866 College street, Toronto, who has been ill for some time, is able to be around again.

Fred Foley, shoe retailer, of Bowmanville, Ont., who was seized some time ago with an attack of appendicitis, while on a visit to Port Huron, Mich., and was in the hospital there for several weeks, is once more on the job in his native town, and reports the Christmas trade as being very satisfactory.

A federal charter has been granted to the King Shoe Co., Limited, with headquarters in Owen Sound, and a capital stock of $100,000. J. S. King, W. F. Marquardt and F. W. Wegenast, of Toronto, are among the incorporators. For some time negotiations have been going on with a view to removing the industry from Toronto to Owen Sound, where certain concessions will be granted the firm.

Lieut. J. H. McGee, formerly of the staff of the Randall Shoe, Limited, Winnipeg, and a brother of H. B. McGee, sales manager of the Minister, Myles Shoe Co., Toronto, has left for overseas. He is a member of the Royal Flying Corps, and has been in training for some months at Leaside, Toronto and Deseronto.

W. L. Tuttle, shoe retailer of Halifax, who has a store on Barrington street, and also one in Dartmouth, writes that his building in the latter place was badly shaken, while his store in Halifax had plate glass and other glass smashed. All the other shoe establishments in the city suffered in like manner. Geo. E. Wallace, of Wallace Bros., was cut on the left side of the chest, which required several stitches to close. His injuries, however, are not serious. Constant Upham, general dealer, selling shoes, and one of the most respected citizens of Halifax was killed, his store collapsing. Many rubber companies have sent cases of shoes for the relief of sufferers and a number of wholesale houses have written their accounts in Halifax extending to them not only sympathy, but many concessions.

The Dominion Commercial Travelers' Association held its 42nd annual meeting in the Windsor Hotel, Montreal, on Dec. 15th, when it was stated that the membership had grown to 8,335 and the surplus to $44,234. Officers were elected as follows:—President, Romeo Brosseau; 1st vice-president, J. P. Harrison; Secretary, Chas. J. Shea; treasurer, Maxwell Murdock.

Judge Haggart, of Winnipeg, refused exemption to Harold K. Hutchins. He did not consider it expedient in the national interests that Hutchins should be continued in his present employment, instead of being employed on military service. This case has occasioned a great deal of local interest. The appeal was made by the young man's father, E. P. Hutchings, president of the Great West Saddlery Company, and was based on the declaration, afterwards withdrawn, that he was a skilled saddler.

Chas. Duclos, of Montreal, sales manager of Duclos & Payan, spent a few days in Toronto recently with E. R. Lewis and R. E. Bennet, who represent the firm in Toronto and Ontario.

Delbert McFarland, of the McFarland Shoe Co., Edmonton and Calgary, was in Toronto, Kitchener and Montreal, last week on business.

The Modern Shoe Co. is a new concern which has started business at 40 St. George Street, Montreal, making women's, misses' and children's McKays. A. M. Cusson, formerly connected with the Tetrault Shoe Mfg. Co., is the principal in the new company.

In connection with the recent disturbance at a political meeting in Kitchener, Ont., whereby an organized gang of irresponsible hoodlums made such an uproar that Sir Robert Borden, Premier of Canada, was not permitted to deliver an address, severe punishment has been meted out to the offenders, heavy fines imposed and a number of those who took part in the pandemonium have lost their positions. The manufacturers of Kitchener held indignation meetings and the city council, at a special session, passed a resolution tendering an apology to the Premier. Speedy action was taken by the various industries and financial institutions and steps adopted to prevent a recurrence of any similar demonstrations. No one regrets the escapade of a few hot-headed agitators more than Kitchener captains of industry and the action of the city council in repudiating such tactics has been heartily endorsed.

Elwin T. Wright, treasurer of E. T. Wright & Co., Inc., Rockland, Mass., and St. Thomas, Ont., was seriously injured when struck by a locomotive at the North Abington Station, recently. Mr. Wright had barely crossed the track on his way to the Boston train that was on the siding, when another train coming in an opposite direction caught him a glancing blow. He was at once placed on board the train for Boston, and taken to the Massachusetts General Hospital. While not on the dangerous list, Mr. Wright is seriously injured about the head and shoulders and naturally suffers considerably from shock of the accident. Mr. Wright has been engaged in the shoe business for over 52 years. He is chairman of the Rockland Public Safety Committee, ex-president of the Union Glee Club, Rockland, a prominent member of the Rockland Commercial Club, and of many other social and fraternal organizations.

J. S. King, of the King Shoe Co., Toronto, accompanied by Mrs. King, left last week for Los Angeles, California. Mr. King expects to return to Toronto about the middle of January, but Mrs. King will remain in the south until May 1st.

NEW HOME OF STAR SHOE CO.

Construction work is proceeding on the new factory of the Star Shoe Co., Limited, at the corner of Aird avenue and Girard street, Maisonneuve, Que. The building is a three-storey one with basement, sub-basement and an annex. The main structure is 50 by 150 feet in dimensions and the annex 15 by 52 feet. The factory is of the slow burning type, of mill construction, the foundations are of concrete and the exterior plastic brick. The main entrance, which is on Aird avenue, is built of stone and another entrance on Girard street, is for the employes. The edifice represents the last word in factory construction and the walls are now up to the first storey. It is expected that the new premises will be roofed in by January and the Star Shoe Co. hope to occupy their splendid new home by March.

A new charter has been granted to the company with headquarters in Maisonneuve and a capital stock of $300,000. The company is empowered to purchase and take over as a going concern, the property and assets of the Star Shoe, Montreal. The new plant of the Star Shoe Co., of which J. I. Chouinard is president and P. A. Doig, sales manager, will have a capacity of two thousand pairs a day. While no new lines will be made, the firm will possess more than double their present flooring space. They will also have greatly improved facilities, which will enable them to develop their service to the highest degree. The Star Shoe Co. are now selling exclusively to the jobbing trade in Canada and report having had the busiest year in their history.

ST. JOHN SHOEMEN SEND RELIEF

During the recent catastrophe in Halifax many boot and shoe merchants suffered heavily and some establishments are to-day nothing but a heap of ruins. Owing to the confusion existing it is impossible to give an authentic estimate of the damage sustained by men in this line.

George H. Waterbury, of St. John, who is the proprietor of a large shoe store, is in receipt of a telegram from his son notifying him that their store was quite badly damaged from the explosion, which practically wrecked the city, and as a result business was suspended indefinitely. The loss sustained by Halifax boot and shoe merchants is not yet known and therefore nothing definite could be learned in time for this issue.

Mayor R. T. Hayes, president and managing director of the firm of J. M. Humphrey & Co., Limited, has returned home after visiting the stricken city. He went to Halifax with a relief train and while there did all in his power to render succor to the unfortunate citizens.

The St. John boot and shoe dealers held a meeting a few days ago and contributed large quantities of boots and shoes for the grief stricken citizens. All local wholesale dealers were represented at the meeting and in addition to contributing themselves they appointed a committee to interview all retail dealers with a view to obtaining donations. As a result large quantities of footwear were shipped to Halifax to be distributed by the committee in charge of the St. John Relief Depot.

George Gray, of the firm of Gray's Shoe Store, was recently appointed vice-president of the St. John Kennel Club. He is a dog fancier and is considered an authority in the province.

Many shoemen learned with regret of the death of Melville L. Savage, which occurred on December 7th, in Winnipeg. Mr. Savage for many years conducted a boot and shoe store in King street. Several years ago he moved to Massachusetts. Mr. Savage then went west and opened a store in Calgary and went to Winnipeg to open a branch store in that city. Besides his wife he leaves one son and a daughter.

W. F. Cassidy, one of the leading shoe merchants in Chatham, N.B., was recently appointed sheriff. He was formerly mayor of that place and in addition was elected alderman. He has always taken a keen interest in civic affairs and his appointment is only a slight tribute of the esteem in which he is held and of appreciation on the part of the citizens.

E. J. Fleetwood, a well-known shoe merchant, was one of the local merchants that took an active interest in the recent campaign for the relief of the unfortunate citizens of Halifax.

S. Mullett, who is retiring from the management of the Williams Shoe Limited, Brampton, and will reside in Orillia.

The late Geo. Stockand, for many years in the wholesale shoe business in Edmonton, who passed away recently.

F. Stewart Scott, shoe manufacturer of Galt, who was returned as Member of Parliament by a sweeping majority.
