FOOT TROUBLES

AND HOW TO RELIEVE THEM

Almost everyone has callouses on the soles of the feet and these callouses are frequently very painful. To give relief and comfort instantly is to win lasting gratitude. You can accomplish this easily and profitably.

Callous is a thick, hardened area of skin usually caused by pressure or friction. It is found frequently in cases where the shoes are too large and permit the feet to move about in them, rubbing upon uneven spots or prominences on the inner sole, particularly when the sole of the shoe is thin.

The most sensitive parts are at the ball of the great toe and over the heads of the metatarsal bones. At these points the protective tissue is very light and the parts are easily irritated.

Dr. Scholl's Absorbo Pads

To give immediate relief and comfort it is necessary to eliminate the pressure, to protect the affected part from contact with a hard surface.

To remove the callous, select the proper size Dr. Scholl's Absorbo Pad (Size D for the ball of the great toe; G or H for larger callouses on the ball of the foot). Then apply the pad over the callous and fasten with the adhesive tape which accompanies each pad. Be sure that the hollow of the pad is directly and completely over the callous, so that the shoulder around it will prevent the pressure upon the tender spot.

Fitting snugly and closely, Dr. Scholl's Absorbo Pad excludes the outside air and retains the natural warmth and moisture of the foot. In this way a separation takes place between the hard callous growth and the true skin beneath it. And after a short time the callous may be removed.

Size D retails at 15 cents each; G and H, 25 cents each. Other sizes for corns and tender, enlarged joints.

As to Prices

The increasing cost of raw materials that enter into the manufacturing of rubber footwear and the higher cost of labor justify advances in the prices of rubber footwear. But our policy has been, and will continue to be, to maintain, as long as possible, the stability of prices to dealers, advancing just as little as possible, considering the manufacturing cost.

As to Quality

In no case will quality or workmanship of Dominion Rubber System brands be sacrificed for the sake of price. Our fixed policy is to maintain fully the quality of each and every brand we manufacture, regardless of cost. That ensures the same genuine satisfaction that has always made our brands so popular with the trade and consumer alike throughout Canada.

WHAT SHOULD THE RETAILER DO?

Where Are We Drifting?—What Will the Next Six Months Bring in Shoes and Leather?—Is There Any Daylight Ahead?—Is It Safe to Pay Present Prices for Shoes and Leather?—Is the Twenty Dollar Shoe a Bugaboo?

THESE are the questions that profoundly agitate the trade from "Dan to Beersheba" just now. The SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL, if it could solve the problem of the future of shoe prices, would be wiser than "seven men that can render a reason." No one whom we have asked within the past month will venture any positive answer, the proverbial reply being that of the Spaniard, "Quien Sabe?" Who can tell?

We reproduce elsewhere interviews with several shoe manufacturers, jobbers and leather men from which the impression may be gathered that no relief is expected in the near future with regard to shoe prices, and that it is rather expected that conditions will shortly be worse before they are better. These men have no reason for "boosting the market," but on the contrary, should be interested rather in keeping down costs. It seems a safe proposition that leather and shoe prices will continue to climb for some time to come unless some unforeseen circumstance transpires to suddenly change the whole situation. Should the prospects of a cessation of hostilities in Europe become anything like certain there would, no doubt, be a hesitation on the part of buyers everywhere that might cause a sag, temporary or otherwise, in the leather and shoe market. This occurred to some extent two weeks ago, in the United States, when the German peace proposals were first mooted.

But that there will be no return to former leather and shoe conditions for a long period, even should the war be brought to an end in the next six months, seems to be the unanimous feeling. Beginning with hides and ending with the shoes themselves there has been a steady depletion of stocks and it will take a long time to bring the supply back to normal. In the European countries involved in the war the civilian population has become almost bootless and the prosperity prevailing on this side of the water, coupled with the panicky feeling promoted by the prospect of "twenty dollar shoes," has contributed to make shoe buying rather more active than usual. Very few dealers have been doing any speculative buying, but have rather followed the market with the manufacturer and replaced diminishing stocks from month to month.

With the tremendous use and wastage of leather caused by the war, and the demands for meat, both for military and ordinary purposes, the cattle supply has been so seriously diminished that it will take years to put hides back near anything like a reasonable basis and, it may be taken for granted, that they will never go back to former levels.

There may be more or less inflation in certain classes of upper and sole leather that will be shaken out in any substantial change in the war outlook, but in such lines as calf, the finer grades of side leather, as well as in some selections of sole, it will take a long time to bring the supply to anything near a parity with the demand.

The policy of the shoe dealer just now should be to maintain his stock on an effective basis by purchasing at ruling prices and keep on advancing his retail prices on the basis of present costs. Manufacturers and jobbers are practically following this course and their conservative attitude is the only safe one. It may pay to take a chance on such lines as cannot shrink in value, but hand to mouth buying is the safest in the end.

"Watchman! What of the Night?"

What Those Prominent in Shoe and Leather Circles Think of the Outlook—General Disbelief as to War Conditions Subsiding—Predictions that Shoes Will Sell at Double Present Prices in Six Months

"WHAT do you think of the chances for lower prices in shoes in the near future?" was asked of a prominent firm of women's shoe manufacturers the other day. "The chances are all the other way," was the reply. We venture the prediction that within a year or even less the retail prices of all shoes will be a hundred per cent. higher than they are. We expect that the lowest priced shoe we will be making by June 1st will be six dollars and the highest fifteen dollars. That is certainly a great change in a couple of years.

"Here is a letter we have just received from an American kid house concerning an order for black vici-kid which will net us about ninety-four cents a foot laid down at the factory. That kid cost us a year ago twenty-six cents. Here is a quotation we have just received from a Boston concern of seventy cents. A year ago we were buying this stock down here for twenty-two cents. That explains the situation better than any words we could use. It gets worse every day. If we could buy a month's or three months' supply at these figures we would be glad to do so, but the chances are that next week we will be quoted another five cents a foot higher. To us there does not seem to be any probability of relief in leather costs for a considerable time to come and it will not then be of a nature to effect the situation much."

What a Men's Shoe Maker Says

A prominent manufacturer of men's shoes stated in answer to the question as to the prospects of leather prices relaxing: "I would not be surprised to see sole leather up to a dollar and a half a pound and more by spring and such upper stock as calf and vici fully as high and even higher. In fact I do not see how the calfskin business can continue, or indeed, the cattle business itself, if things continue a year longer on the present basis. I am afraid the government here and in the United States will put the ban on killing young cattle in order to protect the meat supply. I do not see how any relief is to come from any return to peace conditions for a considerable period at any rate. Over in Europe the cattle have been so largely killed off for war purposes and on account of the scarcity of feed and the need for meat, that there will be no chance for hide supplies from this source for years to come. Great Britain and France will thus have to draw largely from South America and other outside points for their raw stock and will have to depend in the meantime upon America for her leather to a very large extent. There is going to be a leather famine in from five to ten years and things will never get back to their old status. As to substitutes, the people are not in a mood to suffer them as yet. Perhaps when things settle down generally there will be a disposition to accept cloth and other materials that are proffered as leather substitutes. In the meantime, cloth and other fabrics have been soaring, as well as leather. Speaking of sole leather substitutes, their reliability has not as yet been fully demonstrated. The tendency to crack, cut with stitching and the claim that they "draw" the feet will militate against the general use of composition soling. At the same time I think the makers of some of these substitutes are making the serious mistake just now of following too closely the sole leather market. They just seem to keep their product between number one and number two sole and go up with the market. I do not see that there is any chance of any relief in sight, even should anything come of the peace talk. There might be a 'stagger' for a day or two and some of the sole leather magnates might get cold feet and ease up a little, but I do not believe it would cut any figure in the situation. I think there are sole leather people who have made fortunes out of the war, but I think the talk about the cellars full of cheap hides and warehouses packed with sole leather is a good deal of it wind. They say that a certain Ontario tanner borrowed two million dollars to buy hides two years ago and has realized a fabulous return on his investment. The same, I have no doubt, is true of others to a greater or less extent, and this action of the tanners all over the continent has no doubt resulted in higher prices for hides as well as leather. But these men are paying now for what hides they get and it will be more than a month of Sundays before you see hides down to the basis they were even six months ago."

What a Fabric Man Says

A large dealer in fabrics who has had a good trade in this line in past years with shoe manufacturers, claims that there is a good enquiry for this class of stuff, but manufacturers are very cautious about purchasing. The high shoe is at present intimately associated with fancy leather and as long as women have the money and New York sets the pace women will turn up their noses at fabric tops. In men's it is much the same, although we are selling more stuff for this purpose than for women's wear. Best fabrics are bound to return to general use in shoes, apart from the matter of price, and even makers of women's shoes who resold some of their stock a year or two ago and quit the business are making enquiries.

"By the way," said the fabric man. "I was talking with a large shoe manufacturer on the other side of the line with an international reputation, who stated that he had just purchased a million dollars worth of sole leather at sixty-eight cents and was not going to pay a cent more. As soon as it runs out he says he will lock up his factory unless he is able to purchase at the same figure. It remains to be seen, however, whether this millionaire concern will stick to its guns and let its business go or come to the scratch."

From a Jobber's Standpoint

A prominent shoe jobber interviewed as to the situation in general lines of footwear said:—"Every mail brings us notifications from eastern manufacturers of changes in prices. We bought sufficiently to fully cover the requirements of our customers for spring trade and have been supplying goods for sorting at ruling prices since our placing orders were taken. The situation is particularly awkward as customers seem to think their spring orders can be supplemented, as in ordinary years, at the prices at which the original purchases were made, and although they bought more largely than usual, they are trying to work in on us sorting orders at the prices of September and October. They do not seem to realize how unreasonable this is. We cannot buy shoes at prices we paid even two weeks ago and they seem to think we should sell them goods on two months' old figures and stand the loss.

We try as far as possible to think for the dealer and it keeps us busy at that, but we can't go as far as he seems to want us just now. We are maintaining our stock at its usual or rather its war-time volume and are replenishing from time to time at current prices. The retailer should do the same and be willing to carry his share of the burden. In common with all other wholesalers we have to revise our prices practically every week and just now are making out our lists for January 1st. Do I know what lies in the future? No more than you or anybody else. Who can tell? Shoes have been going constantly up for the last year and will continue to go as far as I can see for another year or at least until peace is assured. My advice to the retailer is to buy what he can from week to week. It will cost him more every time he puts off his purchases. If I was a dealer with plenty of capital, I would purchase all I think my business will require for the next six months at present prices and sit down and wait. Shoes will be worth practically twice the price by summer." Such conditions as prevail in the shoe trade today never existed before. It is like the war, uhique.

What the Leather Men Say

What a Boston House Has to Say to Its Customers—
A Strong Presentation of the Fine Upper Leather Situation—A Vigorous and Forceful Review of the Situation

A LARGE Boston leather house has sent to its customers in the United States and Canada a circular that puts the situation in their viewpoint in a terse and practical way. Here is how they put it:—

What Makes for Higher Leather Prices?—Everything!

We are facing a no-raw-stock situation. It is the belief of buyers of finished stock that there is an abundance of raw stock in foreign countries. But such is not the fact. Not only is there no available or present supply but even the supply of the future is gone as well.

High prices have brought out every particle, every skin, every hide, from even the utmost parts of the world. But, worse than that, high prices have made them kill the raw stock of the future. Natives can now get as much for a young calf for meat, skin and pair purposes as they formerly could get for a steer. Therefore, they take the present great value, regardless of what the future value may be and kill. The same is true in regard to sheep and goat. The kids are killed. Can you deny this?

Even the warring nations, and even with the advantage of embargoes, etc., are up against it and cannot get even enough for military purposes, leaving alone civilian demands.

Shipping is in a worse condition than ever. The ships to foreign countries have been reduced to three or four per month. As the military demand takes these ships for war purposes the number grows smaller than ever. The submarine warfare may not loom up so terribly large altogether, but when in percentage to the available shipping it is a tremendous factor.

Insurance is a tremendous factor. At the lowest it has been about 5%—and it has ranged from that up to 50 and 75%. Think of paying twice for a lot of goods, yet this has happened already and is very apt to happen again and possibly may become a regular thing.

Not only is the demand excessive from home but every country in the world is trying to buy finished leather from America and this on top of the limited and diminishing supply. Not only is this true of leather but also of shoe and all leather goods.

Now, why not face the real facts? Why say in the face of these facts that everything will come out all right. Because it won't.

Remember leather raw stock doesn't grow every season, and you can't dig it out of the ground. It is different from all other raw stocks in this respect. It takes years to develop and increase leather raw stock.

Many buyers consider that they are fully covered with contracts with leather houses. But they will be obliged to discount their orders at least 50%.

Because the leather houses are not going to get more than 50% of the orders that they have placed for raw stock. Exporters of raw stock are "laying down." There is no way to force them under existing conditions. We recently sold $50,000 of stock to a man who had already placed his order with another some six months' previous. This house had taken his order in good faith, but bought raw stock to cover, but no raw stock had been shipped.

We congratulate everyone who has a six months' supply of leather on hand. You can to-day sell it at 100% advance. We ourselves would be extremely glad to buy it. What it will be worth in a few months is beyond us, but two and three hundred per cent. is not a dream. But only a few of the very large and very wise houses have done this. The great majority are in the market, if not for all, at least for a part of their needs. If you aren't fully covered in every line of leather, we would advise that you do so at once even on to-day's market, i.e., if it is still possible to do so.

More than that, we would advise every user of leather that he immediately cover himself to replace what he is using each day and therefore keep a full six months' supply ahead of him at all times. There is no surer way of making money.

There are a great many houses who are bluffing in regard to the finished stock they have on hand for their immediate use.

This is no time for bluffing. Nothing could cost a manufacturer more. This is the time to face cold facts and get right down to brass tacks.

It would take mighty little money today to absolutely corner both the raw stock and the finished stock. This too in a time of extreme styles. This too at a time when all colors and fancy stocks are selling better than staples. A time when, if you have colored stock on hand, you can get your price for your manufactured goods and get your profit.

As to substitutes: We hope manufacturers will use every substitute they can get. Use white canvas, black cloth, etc., but even then, what are you going to do for colors? Every user of a substitute will today help the leather man considerably. Things are exactly as bad as that; therefore, all we can advise is that you get busy at once and immediately cover yourself, and especially so on all colors, those leathers where you can get your price and make your profit. Aren't we right?

What the Retailers Think

What Some of the Prominent Men of the Shoe Business say of High Prices—Believe There is Undue Inflation—But Era of Low Prices Have Gone for Good—Cost of High Living

SOME shoe retailers are declaiming against the "profiteering" of leather men and shoe manufacturers, and say the whole market is fictitious. One of the Toronto papers came out recently with the demand of a prominent retailer to have a government commission investigate the high price of leather.

Others say that the present high prices are extraordinary, but will subside as soon as the war conditions are abated. Some have been caught with the speculative spirit and have bought considerably ahead, hoping to make neat margins on their foresight and courage. Many are quietly buying what they want from week to week, keeping their stocks up, and advancing their retail prices as the market goes up. They take it for granted that the public know conditions as well as they do, and are prepared to pay high prices for their shoes. A number are still holding off for lower prices and seeing their stocks diminishing.

The Leather Market Inflated

"Can you tell me," said a large retailer to a representative of the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL, why vici kid has gone away up amongst the stars? A couple of years ago you couldn't give this kind of stock away, and now manufacturers say they are being spoon fed and have to take what kid manufacturers give them and pay anything they ask them. The morocco men got together two or three years ago down in New York or Philadelphia and really discussed whether they would have to go out of the business, and inaugurated immense advertising crusades to boost kid, with the result that its sales, began to show some development, but not the craze that has characterized the market in the last year. The frenzy that has taken hold of kid dates from the short skirt and the demand for high boots in colors. It is colors that have not only revived, the kid business but put it in the gold bond class, and as soon as the fad dies down there will be lots of kid, no matter what manufacturers may say. It is the same with other lines, although I think calf is going to stay up, but not at the present prohibitive prices. I think, dealers are to blame a good deal for boosting the market on themselves. If they would buy just what they need and go slow on the fancy stuff there would be certain relief.

Is There a Combine

A retailer who has several store and who does a nice findings business as well, said to the journalite, "Why don't you get after those sole leather men? Those people have the slickest thing that is in the country just now. They disbanded the 'Association' a few years ago, but they have been doing business at the old stand ever since, most successfully and profitably. You can't tell me that this uniform raise of two and three cents a pound is spontaneous and the result of the necessities of the market. It comes as regular as clock work. Sometimes we get a notice twice a week of changes in the prices of cut soles and so forth. There are only a few of these sole leather tanners, and they have the thing 'right in their mit.' They have been buying hides for all they are worth from the beginning of the game, and the sole leather they are selling now is made from hides that was bought from 50 to 75 per cent. less than the market prices quoted to-day. If an investigation were held it would be found that tanners have still large stocks of cheap hides and, that between these and what the packers and others are holding back, there would be plenty of leather of all kinds for general use, if they were turned loose. There is a shortage in calfskins, sheep and other light stocks, but I don't see why with all the killing that has been done in North and South America in the last year and a half, there should be any shortage of hides, even granting the British Government demands upon the market."

Why Should It Keep Up

"This talk about twenty and thirty dollar boots is all moonshine," said a prominent eastern retailer when asked what he thought the next six months had in store for the shoe business. "You could always go and get a pair of twenty-five dollar shoes if you had the price. Shoes to-day are worth what you are willing to pay for them. It is true prices have gone up, and people are paying five, six and seven dollars for shoes they once got for three, three-and-a-half and four dollars a pair. The majority of trade is still done in this class of goods, and a canvass of the retail trade will show that the proposition of fifteen and twenty dollar shoes sold is practically no greater than it was three years ago. People, especially the working classes, are doing well these days, and realize that shoes like everything else are up in price, and they are willing to pay for them. It is just as easy and, perhaps easier, to get six dollars for a pair of shoes now as it was a couple of years ago to get four. But I think prices will settle down more on this basis as soon as the fear of spending, caused by the present tremendous prosperity, eases off. People to-day are really drunk with prosperity. There are women who come into a shoe store and pay ten and twelve dollars a pair for shoes, and you wonder where they get the money. Even 'old stagers' have been

Shoe Fads and Fancies

What is Heard and Seen in and about the Shoe Centres—
Shoe Fashions and Styles for the Coming Summer Season

THE Spring selling season is about over and it is possible to judge what has caught the popular fancy for the coming spring and summer, and above all what is likely to be the trend of "sport" goods, which promise again to be an important feature in summer wear. People seem to be shoe crazy and are paying all kinds of prices to get just what they want.

"Sport" Styles

Already there has been a large sale of fancy outing footwear for use in the "Sunny South." Later these will be in evidence in northern resorts of the pleasure seeking hosts of this continent. The outstanding features are wide stripes and color effects to match sport coats and skirts. A favorite material is greyish black striped cloth, others are combinations of tans, blues and greens. Some fancy prices are asked for these creations.

A Thirty-Five Dollar Shoe

We reproduce on page twenty-one a thirty-five dollar shoe made in the custom shoe department of Marshall-Field Co., Chicago. This is the high water mark so far for women's shoes, as far as anyone has heard. Of course, there are fancy shoes made for actresses and other similar professionals, but this is a standard shoe for sale to "toney" customers. It is a combination of high-class patent kid and buff buckskin. The heels are full Louis XV., of wood brightly enameled to match the vamp. It is hand sewn, handfinished with a "fudge edge." It is lined with colored figured silk and beautifully finished throughout. In Chicago there is a great sale of women's shoes at twelve to eighteen dollars a pair.

New York Notions

Amongst the newest things shown by makers of women's footwear in New York is a combination of fawn ooze calf vamp, perforated ivory kid wing tip, ivory kid top, eight and a half inches in height, blind eyelets, covered Louis heel to match upper, welt. Another style is a silver grey ooze calf vamp, perforated pearl grey wing tip, pearl grey kid upper eight and a half inches in height, blind eyelets, covered Louis heel to match upper, welt. The new shades of colored kid made up in whole effects are artillery grey, citron and chartrusse. These three numbers come full foxed, with perforated imitation straight tip, covered Louis heel.

Silver grey kid is also in evidence in stylish women's shoes and promises to be one of the popular sellers for next spring and summer.

The low heel seems to be growing in popularity. While the ordinary French heel is generally found, especially in stylish footwear, there has been a great call for spring for inch and inch-and-an-eighth heels and dealers claim the demand is growing. "Dutch" heels are used in semi-dress shoes and the "vanity" heel has taken a great hold, although there have been some complaints of the plates cracking. Low Louis Quinze heels are, however, by far the most popular still in women's shoes.

Women still show a preponderating tendency in favor of the laced shoe although for dress purposes a gradual tendency is noticeable towards the buttoned boot. In spite of the tremendous prices asked for fancy leather shoes there does not seem to be any noticeable tendency to back down or take to substitutes. Some manufacturers have felt out the market somewhat with cloth tops but even with extremely attractive patterns and combinations they have not been able to woo away the feminine love of the leather product. It is up to some ultra fashionable women to set the pace and set the ball rolling that will give the manufacturers of colored kid and calf a breathing spell.

The spat craze seems to keep up with all the clamor for high shoes and fancy combinations. During the present fall and winter the demand has been such as to leave the supply far behind. And now it has taken hold of the men for New York has begun to witness the patter of even young feet in dainty "gaiters."

Paris Shoe Fashions

The check shoe is a Paris novelty, made in black and white—also in combinations of colors and in patent leather combined with velvet. Slippers of ornamental leather trimmed with contrasting color and work—fur is a popular shoe trimming and ruffles of tulle are used in trim evening shoes.

For walking or the morning promenade, as an accompaniment to the tailleur, the preferred shoe is the high boot, laced to the side, or buttoned behind or at each side which is very elegant. The colored upper beige or gray cloth is very popular.

In the afternoon the graceful high heeled shoe is worn with very fine stockings. The shoe with the leather bracelet above the ankle continues to have success in the domain of novelties, and among this class I note a model in blue kid with a piping of white leather all around, and a bracelet outlined at the same side with the same piping.

Elaborate Effects

Paris styles are having their effect on a lot of the high cuts for the coming summer season which show the sharp effect accentuated to a degree that was hitherto unknown. "Jewelry" effects are also shown on the colonials and low cuts designed with buckles and other ornamentals of the most elaborate and expensive kind. Some of these lines sell as high as forty dollars a pair.

Shoes in the War Zone

The Situation Serious both with Central Powers and Allies—Restricting the Character and Sale of Footwear—Taking Care of Wastage

THE footwear question in Europe apart from the immense armies that are wearing out shoes almost faster than they can be made has become a serious one, both from the standpoint of materials and workmen, and has already created conditions necessitating governmental regulation of the most exacting character. The production and distribution of the immense quantities of footwear for the armies have necessitated a complete revolution of methods in most of the countries concerned outside of Germany, Austria, Great Britain and France, where the factory system has been largely in vogue for some years. In Italy, Russia and to some extent in France, footwear has been made in comparatively small establishments and without the equipment to be found in the modern shoe plant. As a result it has devolved upon Britain to make up the lacking in her allies in this as in other respects. The requirements of both the Italian and Russian armies have been handled largely by Great Britain as well as the needs of her own immense field force. Germany was probably the best prepared of all the warring powers at the beginning of the war. In this, as in everything else, she carried the doctrine of "preparedness" to the limit that made the German war organization a marvel to the world. Already stored away and ready for use at a moment's notice she had immense quantities of footwear for her soldiers. To some extent the same preparation had been made by Austria. The result has been the elimination of a situation which has been a serious hindrance to the opponents of this modern war moloch.

German Footwear Conditions

In Germany the requirements of the civil population were made secondary, of course, to that of the military. The government practically took over control of the production of leather and shoes, and saw that the needs of the army were properly safeguarded so that "Fritz" has had his feet well looked after from the beginning. Certain restrictions were put on the manufacturer of ordinary footwear as to materials, and make, and things have gone along without any of the hysteria with regard to footwear we have passed through in United States and Canada. Recently, however, the German government has issued an order that civilians must be content with two pairs of shoes a year, and must turn in the old ones before they can get the new. They have long ago provided in Germany for shoe wastage and in this respect have been an example to some other nations.

Shoe Legislation in England

The supply of ordinary footwear in the United Kingdom has been necessarily curtailed by the immense demand made upon the factories for army shoes. Still there has been no serious deprivation or even inconvenience apparently as there has been a large importation of footwear from the United States and elsewhere. Recently, however, there has been a movement on foot to curtail the use of leather especially in high cut woman's lines. This has been advocated as note the following in the Shoe Trades Journal of London:

"The high legs of ladies' boots have lately been the subject of much controversy, and in the House of Commons last week a member asked the President of the Board of Trade whether his attention had been called to the prevalent fashion for ladies to wear high-legged boots, the demand for which tended to increase the cost of ordinary boots and shoes; and if so, would he state what action he proposed to take, having regard to the reported scarcity of leather. The President replied that he had received a letter from the National Union of Boot and Shoe Operatives on the subject, which would be looked into; but he was under the impression that a large proportion of the uppers referred to were made of substances other than leather.

"The matter must be regarded from a common-sense view-point, because low-cut shoes are not practicable to go with the present fashions in dress which, it must be admitted by all, are both sane and sensible. From the hygienic point of view it is undesirable that women should revert to the old scavenging skirts, and it seems highly probable that the present neat and smart appearance of women's dress has come to stay. If more material is being used for boots, there is undoubtedly a great saving in that used for dresses, and the balance is very likely on the credit side of economy. A big quantity of cloth is being used for the legs of women's high boots, but it is obvious that, in the English winter season, gaiters would have to be worn if the production of women's footwear were limited to shoes, and we take it that the high-legged boot is considered by many to be more convenient than the use of separate shoes and gaiters. The whole point rests on the quantity of leather that is being used for the uppers of high boots."

Closing Small Shops

England is putting forth her efforts to get every available man in the field. The other day a large retail shoe concern with several branch stores, and that is now employing female help largely, put up the plea that it needed a man in each store to handle heavy packages, and dress the windows. Let the windows go and get trucks for the women was the decision. The policy of the government is heading to the closing up of small establishments as witnessed by the following item from a local paper:

"The lack of uniformity in the decisions of Local

SHOULD DEALER REFUND PURCHASE PRICE?

Western Ontario Man Made One Exchange and Even Then his Patron was not Satisfied—Woman Demanded Return of her Money which was Refused—Customer Entered Suit and Won Case, Although it Cost her More than she Figured

"I WANT you to exchange these shoes, please. I do not like them, and would prefer another pair," remarked a well-dressed lady, as she entered a shoe store in a Western Ontario city a few days ago. The proprietor pulled down several cartons, showed her various styles, and finally exhibited another last which caught her fancy, and the transfer was made.

When Mrs. Exchange got home with the footwear, no one knows just exactly what happened. Apparently, her husband said she did not need the shoes and anyway, he did not like their looks. They made her feet appear clumsy, the toe was too broad, or the heels too high, or something else was not just right with the pedal togger.

Back came Mrs. Exchange to the shoe dealer, demanding the return of her money. He said that he had already made one exchange in his faithful effort to please her and he thought that was going far enough. The woman was insistent and then the retailer offered to give her back the first pair, but no, that would not do—she demanded her money or nothing. The shoeman refused to hand over the coin, and out went Mrs. Exchange in high dudgeon. Nothing was heard of the incident until sometime afterwards, when notice was served on the shoe dealer, that suit had been entered in the division court for the recovery of the money.

Not Much Financial Consolation

The woman told her story to the judge and won her case. The retailer got back the boots and the woman got the purchase price. However, there was not much gained by the action of this lady, as the victory was a sort of hollow one. Her husband, Mr. Exchange, hired a lawyer to whom he paid $5.00; the cost of the action amounted to $2.00, and he lost half a day's pay, owing to having to appear in court. This, of course, would be deducted from his wages. In all, it cost him about $10.00, and his trouble and worry. Against this, of course, he secured the $6.00 which was returned, but his wife did not even get the shoes. The difference between income and outcome of the little unpleasantness, was $4.00 on the wrong side of the family account book.

This is possibly the first case that has come up in a long time, whereby a merchant who has absolutely refused to refund money has been sued in court. It is a debatable question whether "money refunded cheerfully and no questions asked," wins the retailer any extra custom, while it may entail much annoyance, disturbance and turmoil. Here are two directly opposite views on this important matter, which is a perplexing one at best.

A SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL representative called upon several members of the trade, and asked their opinion, as to whether money should be refunded, when shoes are returned by the customer, the same as cash is returned on purchases in a department store, on presentation of printed slip at the proper bureau.

Why Certainly Give It Back

Here are the arguments in favor of refunding the money, as announced by Mr. Upholder of this practice.

"Why, of course, we return money if a customer brings the shoes back. We do not even ask her why she has brought them back. Frequently she will voluntarily explain the reason when she feels the touch of the coin. If not, we sometimes tactfully draw out in conversation the real cause.

But the main thing to do is to hand over the collateral readily and cheerfully. Ask no questions and then the customer is in a more genial frame of mind. Having the cash in her purse, she is very apt to give some reason for returning the shoes.

"There may be half a dozen different causes. Her husband may not like them—she may have seen a better bargain elsewhere, or discovered that her old ones would answer, with some resoling. Perhaps her sister has bought a pair of a different kind at another store, and she wants a pair like them. I have even known shoes to be brought back because some unexpected bill had been presented at the house for payment, and the lady would conclude that she could do without the footwear. There are any number of reasons, but I maintain that we have won many new and firm customers by this practice.

Privilege is Not Abused

"The department stores return money, and the privilege may be abused, to a certain extent, by fickle-minded and changeable bargain-hunting individuals. When selections are restricted to shoes, there are not a great many people who are going to impose deliberately on you by buying a pair, have them sent up to the house, and then bring them back, in order to have their money returned.

"This is going to a lot of trouble, in these days of anxiety and worry, and most persons have too much to do in war time to flirt with fancy or gratify momentary whims. Practically every person entering my store does so to buy shoes, and I am able to satisfy 90 per cent. of the callers. I do not believe that more than one customer out of every fifteen ever wants his or her money back, and from the very fact that they know the cash will be promptly and pleasantly returned, if they are not satisfied, they experience a sense of freedom and satisfaction in shopping here."

No Obligation to Buy—No Refunds

Mr. Opponent, who says that he never returns money except in the most obstreperous cases, and under extraordinary circumstances, declares:—

"What! return the money? Why I would be the victim of all sorts of sudden and unreasonable changes of mind or humor. Humans would be running in here one day, making purchases, and coming back the next morning, getting their cash, and going some place else, in order to buy something which they thought was a little niftier, more attractive, or cheaper. When my patrons enter my establishment, I do not urge any of them to buy. They are permitted to exercise free choice, and if they return with any of the shoes they have purchased from me, I ask them what the fault is, and grant them the privilege of exchanging for any other pair in the shop. I extend to them a wide field of selection, and it is only in a case where the shoes are faulty, do not fit perfectly, or I have not a pair in stock of the right size and width, that I fork over the cash.

"In this store, we consider that people are rational, sensible individuals, who buy what they want and when they want it. We emphasize the fact that any service rendered in the matter of showing the different lines in stock, imposes no obligation on the caller to purchase.

"Why, if we gave money back, many a flippant young miss and dapper youth would drift in and drift out, and we would have to make refunds in many cases."

Leather Trade Jottings

What is What in the World of Hides and Leather—Peace Talk Creates Hesitation in Both Raw and Finished Products—Situation Weaker in Hides and Stationary in Leather

ALL staple products felt the effects of the recent peace overtures. Germany has hinted at a desire to talk things over, and, although the Allies have been unanimous in stating that they will not talk until the Teutons declare their position more fully with regard to the discussion, the chances for a conference and a possible cessation of hostilities has caused the usual pause in the busy operations that have been going forward, not only in war specialties, but all products the values of which have been enhanced by the chance of the conflict being protracted. The stocks of one large steel corporation dropped a hundred points in twenty-four hours, and it is not to be wondered at that other lines of trade should feel the effects of the sudden pause in feverish industrial activity. The uncertainty has to some extent been helped by the note from the President of the United States.

Hide Conditions.

At this time of the year there is always a tendency to go slow on hides, and prices slacken. It was thought a month ago that the usual holiday lull would be missing, but the peace talk seemed to put the damper on with rather more than the usual vigor. Reports from the hide markets, both at home and abroad, indicate a cessation of buying activity. It was reported that for nearly a week there has been no sales of any account, and those were the left overs, largely of former transactions. Although packers are holding firm, concessions are being offered, and as cattle are coming in more freely there is every indication of lower prices in the next two or three weeks. Both packer hides and country butchers are down a couple of cents, a sale of buffs being reported at 23 cents. Of course the quality begins to fall off at this season, but undoubtedly hide dealers have their ears to the ground. Dry hides have not shown the same tendency to sag, although sales have been reported at a half cent reduction on prices asked a week ago. The large demands from England and the high freight rates contribute to keep up prices, and the market seems to be pretty well cleaned. There is no telling, however, where prices may get should the dogs of war be leashed for a time.

The Leather Market

It is a time for stock taking with manufacturers, and usually it is difficult to get shoe men to look at leather. Some have been running so close to their requirements, however, that they are not as indifferent as usual. Nevertheless there is considerable hanging back on account of the steadying of the market under the peace talk. Reports from Boston say that for a couple of weeks there have been no important sales of sole or upper leather of standard selections made. Business has become timid on account of the possibilities of an armistice in Europe, and while all lines are firmly held at market quotations there is no inclination on the part of buyers to anticipate these needs. Sales of oak bends have been reported at 94 cents for which 96 cents was asked a couple of weeks ago. In upper leather there has been no change in price since our last issue.

The leather situation, particularly in light uppers, is still strong, as tanners have been clearing out their stocks as fast as they accumulate, and are not disposed to listen to demands for concessions as higher costing stuff comes through. If the war were to stop next week tanners claim it would have no immediate effect as they are sold up on a basis of increased cost for a considerable time ahead. Calfskins are particularly strong, and are reported in the Boston market at 70 to 80 cents a foot for blacks and colors from 80 to 95 cents. A good many calfskin tanners have had to turn their attention to side leathers on account of the impossibility of getting raw skins. Side leathers are also strong, and seem to maintain their position in spite of the general easiness. Black chrome stock is quoted at 36 to 50 cents a foot, with fancy lines such as white buck at 65 to 75 cents. Kid is still up in the skies, 70 to 80 cents being quoted for blacks, and colors any where from a dollar up.

English Conditions.

The British Government has practically taken over the control of the hide market as well as that of leather production, and recently issued an order reducing the price half a cent on account of seasonable conditions. There has been comparatively little trouble, although a deputation of tanners waited on the government to state that they were not getting enough profit on army leather. They were given the option of turning over these plants to the authorities.

"There is still a certain amount of speculation," says the Shoe Trades Journal, "as to the number and description of army boots that will be required in the New Year. It is doubtful if there will be any more Italian orders, but it is certain that a large contract for Russian ankle-boots will be placed; in fact, some manufacturers have already had intimation to that effect, and are now only awaiting instructions to proceed with the work. There will also be big demands for British ankle-boots, although it may be some little time before the orders are placed, as certain alterations in the B5 boot are under consideration. Meanwhile, there has been a movement on foot to curtail the extravagance in women's and men's shoes with regard to leather, cutting down the height, etc."

SOME SHOW CARDS AND SELLING SUGGESTIONS

FEBRUARY is one of those months in which some merchants stand around wishing something would turn up. By the time it arrives people have become tired of winter and spring is too far away, so it settles down in a sort of in-between location and merchants of the above type settle down with it. But business must be conducted the same as usual and it is up to every merchant to make things move.

Those whose goods may be affected by seasons or styles should begin with advanced showings of spring lines. It is always well to be in advance of the season rather than just with it. It furnishes opportunity for the public to see that you are alive and progressive and ready to meet their needs when they are ready to buy.

It is sometimes advisable as a stimulus to trade to arrange a special February sale. Price inducements may be the means of bringing much business. This may assume the character of a clearing sale to rid the stock of off-sizes or goods that have not proved so saleable as anticipated. Or you may purchase a few special lines and supplement with goods from stock. Increase your newspaper advertising space and dress your windows at least two days in advance of the opening of the sale. Put price tickets on every article and complete the trim with a neat card.

You may feature St. Valentine's in your window displays and decorations. Hearts, darts, cupids, bows, arrows and quivers in various sizes may be utilized to splendid advantage. Reds will dominate the color schemes and many of these emblems are procurable at trifling expense.

Window Card Sign

The cards shown herewith are suggestions on which you may curtail or enlarge. The $7 card is an air brush design but can be made without its use if desired. The heart can be made of red paper or card and attached to the main card and lettered in the usual way in black.

The $2 to $9 card is a simple design that can be worked with the brush in plain card. The small lettering may be in black and the figures in red and shaded with pale green.

The February sale card is an air brush design but can be worked with plain patterns and ruled lines if desired, or a dark card can be used and a red or white heart cut out and attached. If red the lettering can be white or black, but if the heart is white the lettering can be red.

The $12.75 card may be done on any mottled paper or card obtainable and may be lettered in any color that will show well, preferably red or black with pale green shading.

SHOP EARLY AND GET NO ATTENTION!

"Shop early" is the message screamed from the very housetops these frenzied days. "Shop early in the morning, early in the week, early in the month, but early, early, early," and then when one does shop early—what?

A woman went into the shoe department of one of the great New York stores at 10 o'clock Friday morning, planning, of course, to buy shoes. There were three other customers waiting; one of them seated. Oh, yes, there were salesgirls there, too. But the salesgirls were busy talking and, judging from the yawns of one of them, they had been out late the night before and were talking it over now.

What about the customers? Why, the idea of expecting to be waited upon at 10 a.m. But one of the customers was indignant, she said she had been waiting just ten minutes and none of the salesgirls had even shown a sign of interest. "If this were the day after Christmas—or after the Christmas rush—I could see some excuse for the yawn," said one of the would-be customers. She walked over to the group of girls and said, "Will one of you young ladies deign to wait upon us?" pointing to the other customers. Yes, several of them deigned upon request, but they weren't the least bit put out by the reprimand. Yet this store is known for its high class of salespeople!

Simple Window Back for St. Valentine

At least ten months of the year have some special feature or day that can be utilized for advertising purposes. February has St. Valentine's Day, and while it is not a public holiday it is of sufficient interest to feature in your window trimming, show cards and store decorations. It will take care of at least the first two weeks of the month.

We suggest that you keep these articles on file for reference for we shall frequently refer to instructions placed so it would look up over the top of the heart.

Cupid's pictures and images, bows and arrows, darts, etc., can be utilized in decoration at the discretion of the window trimmer. Either crepe tissue paper, ribbons or genuine fabric ribbons, can be used to advantage in the various trims and store decorations and red should be the dominating color.

This back is designed for general use. That is, it can be adapted to almost any display of merchandise.

and illustrations given previously which will save much time and space, both of which are valuable. We think it would be advisable to make two complete sets of frames for your window back, so that when one is in use you can be redecorating the other and immediately replace the one you take out when necessary.

The background shown with this article can be made over the frames mentioned in last month's edition of this journal. A light colored or grey paper with very little pattern can be used. Or, if it is more preferable to paint it, white, cream, grey, buff or similar subdued colors can be used. The large heart can be cut out of Beaverboard and then painted red. Or it can be papered with a red ingrain wallpaper. The small hearts can be painted with a stencil and the flames painted with yellow and red, blended to give a fire effect. These may also be cut out of red paper and pasted onto the background and the flames cut out of yellow paper and pasted on also. The flames may be dispensed with if desired.

The strip behind the small hearts should be in a different color from the main background, but in a shade that will harmonize with it.

It may be possible to obtain a picture of a cupid, which may be placed in the centre of the large heart. Or picture of a cupid's head might be

Even though the window be open at the back top part, it can be utilized in some measure for the lower back part.

In the event of your lines being small, like shoes or notions, etc., it is possible to cut hearts out of red paper and fasten to the back and attach an article on to the heart. The ingenuity of the window trimmer will easily find a way to adapt this setting to any display, whether the lines are large or small.

It will add to the effect of the big heart if it is heavily padded with batting or other convenient padding material and then covered with some rich red material like velvet or plush. A border of artificial flowers may then be run around the edge. White or gold or red roses are very pretty. If desired this same floral decorations may be continued along the bottom of the border on which the small hearts are arranged.

These flowers may be substituted with a ruffle of crepe tissue paper which is inexpensive and very easily manipulated.

Of course the window decorator will always use his own judgment with the various trims, as these articles are merely suggestive in character, to open up a field that you may work and cultivate with your own ingenuity.

HOW I LOST MONEY MANUFACTURING SHOES

Launched Out in Association With Practical Man, but All Sorts of Trouble, Both Productive and Financial, Soon Loomed Up—Partners Fell Out, Creditors Pressed for Claims and Goods Were Turned Out at Too Low a Figure—Lack of System

By G. W. BROCK

"I WENT into a shoe manufacturing business, dropped all the money that I had, and now I am content to be a salesman," declared a well-known representative the other day, as we sat in the rotunda of the Windsor Hotel, Montreal.

"I thought there was lots of money in making shoes, much more than there was in selling them. I knew a fellow who was a very good friend of mine and believed that he could look after the manufacturing end, while I supervised the selling. We could get hold of a good financial man who would also take an interest in the proposition, and the three of us would make a strong combination. I had no money, however, and the thing looked very dismal, so far as realizing my dreams. But now and then dreams do come true. About three weeks later I dropped in to see a lawyer friend of mine, and he said:—

"Well, Sam! How are things going?"

"Oh, not so bad, Henry—about as usual."

"Making much money nowadays, Sam?" he enquired.

"A living," I said, and then I suddenly added, "I wish I had $5,000."

"Why so?" inquired Henry.

"Why I would go into the shoe manufacturing business," I retorted. "I know of a very good opening."

"Do you?" was the response.

"Yes, I do, but I have not the money, so there is no use discussing it."

"Well, if that is the only drawback," came the surprising reply, "I will loan you $5,000 right now."

"What is your proposition intended for—a practical joke?" I inquired.

"No, not at all, I mean every word I say."

"Really?"

"Yes," he replied, with earnestness.

"So this set me thinking, and I began to get my thoughts together, with the idea of launching a shoe factory."

How the Proposition Was Launched

"I know a man—Repton—by name—in fact I am quite intimate with him. He has had several years' experience in the shoemaking line, and is steady and reliable. He always earned good money and can turn out a nice shoe. I will see him at once," I declared as I departed in a happy and hopeful frame of mind.

"My practical shoemaking friend got several hundred dollars and was keen on the factory proposition. Where he got it I don't know, but he coralled it just the same. I put in a thousand, the lawyer pall of mine invested, and three relatives came in on 'the good thing.' We started off with what I will call The Planet Shoe Mfg. Co. We made fairly good progress for a time, although the samples were a long time in getting finished. We thought we would show some children's lines at the same time and imported a fellow by the name of Henchin from across the border to produce these. At the end of four months he had not done so, and one afternoon I charged him with being a four-flusher of the worst kind. He retorted that I had a good deal to say, and that he knew his business. I rejoined:—"Well, you don't—you have given us nothing but excuses since being here, and we have no samples yet. I think you are as shallow as the palm of my hand, and although you put a little money in the business, either you get out or I do."

"This little argument occurred in the hotel rotunda, just after we had had tea. I went back to the factory and he came in an hour and a half later and said: 'Well, I am here to have it out with you.'

"I replied:—"Everything is over, so far as I am concerned—either you get out of this place, or I get out. The roof is not big enough to cover the two of us.' I brought the matter up before the board of directors and they unanimously decided that Henchin must go. So among us we raised the $1,000 that he had invested and paid him off. I have seen fellows who could work the bluff game to perfection, but never a man who was such a consummate artist in that line as Henchin. However, we made men's and women's welts, going to the retail trade direct, and found at the end of the first year that we had lost some money. We all put our hands down in our pockets and made up the balance.

A Series of Serious Deficits

"The next year it was the same story. One of our men had gone out and made a contract with a jobber to deliver so many thousand pairs a month, in order to get what he called 'quantity production.' He thought he was pulling off a great coup, but let me tell you, from the day that we started making shoes for that wholesaler we dropped money on every pair. Costs were figured far too low. I do not think a concern with the moderate output the Planet Co. had can cater to big and little fellows at the same time. Either the one end or the other will be neglected and deliveries delayed. At the close of the second year, we found again that we had lost money, and I began to inquire regarding the cause. I had several confidences with Ropeton, the superintendent and partner, who had based all his costs on an average output of 500 pairs per day. I discovered that we were not getting 300. Shoes were lying all over the factory—some half lasted some half stitched, some half-soled, and others half finished. The output never reached the 500 mark, and yet all costs were based on the definite quantity production named. There was waste and loss on all sides.

"I took Ropeton, the superintendent, to task about it, and he told me to mind my own business. 'I know exactly where I am at,' said he, 'and want none of your interference. You attend to the selling end—that is what you are here for.'

"So I do," was my rejoinder, 'you think you are getting a certain number of shoes each day, but the tags and records of shipments for the past three months, which include practically all shoes made in that period, reveal the startling fact that you have been getting an average output of less than 300 a day.'

"How do you know that?" was his insistent query.

"How do I know it? Because I have a summary of all shipments and orders filled and have done a little persistent investigation."

Superintendent Did Not Make Good

"Well, to make a long story short, Ropeton had to acknowledge his mistake, but he promised to do better—to put in an accurate system and develop more expeditious methods so far as output was concerned. We let him go on a year longer, and seeing that improvement was impossible, we made inquiries from other plants where he had worked and found that, while he was a capable shoemaker, from an artistic standpoint, yet as a productive and economical official he was a flat failure, and never earned money for anyone with whom he had been associated. So, at the end of three years we let Ropeton go, as we had never made a dollar.

"Then we ran along with another man named Stenton for a while, although he was not much better, and in the meantime our liabilities were piling up. We had two or three leather firms who had been very generous with Ropeton, allowing him all manner of credit, and when he found himself discharged from the place, he made it his business out of revenge, to go around and induce these manufacturers to press their claims. They finally became very persistent. We owed one tanner $6,000 and another $4,000. It was between selling seasons and we tried to raise money in order to wipe off these obligations, but found it impossible to do so. All the shareholders, after five years' experience, felt that it would be like sending good money after bad to put any more cash into the concern. I did my best to induce them to see matters out, telling them that we were just now turning the corner and things were coming our way, but to no avail. One of the leather manufacturers finally entered suit against us to cover the amount of his obligation. Seeing that disaster could no longer be avoided, and that the bank had shut down on giving us any more accommodation, and that our own shareholders had sternly refused to put in another dollar, we went to the wall. I dropped every cent I had put in the business, while my friends also were losers to the extent, in some cases, of several thousand dollars.

Looks Easy to Try it Out

"Oh, it looks easy to make shoes and sell them at a profit, but when you have to satisfy customers on the one hand and labor people on the other, when you have to deal with rising costs of materials, the successful marketing of the output, the matter of overhead expenses, collection of accounts, and scores of other worries which enter into shoe-making, not to speak of the rapid changes in styles, lasts and patterns, I am perfectly content to allow the other chap to carry on the enterprise.

"I much prefer my position on the road, with its limited salary, to the remote possibilities of growing wealthy in the shoe manufacturing line, with its ceaseless grind, its financial strain and economical adjustments. More businesses go to the wall through lack of working capital, good buying and proper figuring of costs and profits, than through any other means, and I know whereof I speak, for I have had a costly and painful experience."

AN ADVANCE ALMOST EVERY DAY

That shoes are going much higher was agreed by all the trade speakers at the dinner of the Boston Boot and Shoe Club in Boston, recently. There was talk about the possibility of shoes at $20 by Mr. Alfred W. Donovan, former president of the club.

President Elisha W. Cobb of the Boston Leather Trade Benevolent Society, a former president of the club, who is a well-known tanner, said that "hides are nearer to what we call a corner than we have ever known." That the new wholesale prices are within about 15 cents a pair what he has been selling boys' shoes at retail was declared by Mr. Hollis B. Scates.

"The hides which we use most largely in our business," said Mr. Cobb, "are 55 per cent. higher than they were on September 1st. We may be on a gambling basis, but everything looks very strong to me. I am buying hides. The packers have taken off considerably more hides in the last two years than in former years, but they want them in every country in Europe. They cannot be grown in three years and they cannot be dug out of the ground. Who can say what the price of leather or shoes will be a year from now if we have war? There has been an advance almost every day recently. I see nothing in sight which means more hides or leather."

CANNOT GET IT AT ANY PRICE

"We have never refused to buy any kind of kid offered us in months if we could possibly use it, at any figure that was named," observed a leading manufacturer of women's footwear, this week. "This is a pretty broad statement to make, but I tell you frankly that we have never questioned prices. We were only too willing to pay what was asked, and to-day, the number of refusals that we have received is greater than the amount we have on hand, or will use in our entire spring run. For kid in the cheapest shoe that we make, we paid a year ago 16 cents laid down here for dongola. To-day, we placed an order and after considerable negotiations, and vexatious delays, we finally got it accepted in Chicago for 200 dozen, although we had asked for 500. The figure is 53 cents in that city, which will mean that with duty and freight added, 64 cents a foot when laid down here, —just four times the price of a year ago, and exactly the same grade.

"Here is another boot, in which we use black kid. We paid 24 cents to 26 cents for this kid a year ago, and to-day, we are searching the market to get a fresh supply, and have offered as high as 75 cents, with no acceptance, being turned down by one of the largest kid skin houses in America. You may draw your own conclusions from the foregoing, which is an actual recital of conditions, and not given to you with an idea of being pessimistic or exaggerating the acuteness of affairs."

Here is what one leading shoe firm now stamps on all orders to protect itself. "In taking this order it is understood that we are not to be held responsible for failure to deliver in the event of strikes, lock-outs, fires, accidents, interruption to the supply of raw materials or other contingencies beyond our reasonable control."

SERVICEABLE UPPER-LEATHER SUBSTITUTE

"Shu-Skin" is the name given to a new substitute for leather which has been adopted by some of the largest Eastern shoe manufacturers and in actual use has proven meritorious. It is used for tops, tongues, facings, button flies, etc., and appears to be excellently adapted for this work.

The manufacturers of this material have experimented extensively in order to get stock adapted to the requirements of the shoe trade. "Shu-Skin" not only looks and feels like calfskin, but it also has the essential feature of durability as well as firmness. To the layman and the majority of shoe manufacturers it would be impossible to tell this material in the finished shoe from genuine leather, unless, of course, they were able to see the backside.

The cost of this material is from eight to eleven cents per foot, depending on the weight, etc.

SHOE DEALER "GOT EVEN" WITH MANUFACTURER

Accepted the Agency for Widely Known Branded Line for Women to Retail at Certain Figure—Got off to Good Start When Makers Began to Force up the Price Without Justification—Owing to Lack of Co-operation and Interest Merchant Killed Demand

"It is a wonder you would not handle the Afton line of shoes. They are the cleanest, classiest and cleverest creations in women's footwear."

"No," responded Evanton, the shoe merchant, "I have about all the lines that I can carry and I do not care to open up any new accounts."

"Well, if you do not take our line," replied Gayson, "there is Maddox down the street who will. He is coming rapidly to the front as you know, but I am giving you a chance to get in on a good thing and get in quick."

"No, I do not think I want them," replied Evanton. "As I told you before, even if the line is widely known. I have handled the Amity and the Fidelity brands for years, and they have given satisfaction. I do not see any reason why I should make a change."

A Mean Jibe at the Start

"Well you evidently do not know a good thing when you see it," rather arrogantly replied Gayson, "I have given you a fair chance, one that does not come every day," Warning up to his pet subject, he insinuated that Evanton could not be a thoroughly representative, up-to-date shoe dealer until he handled the Afton line—the only one in feminine footwear.

Gayson declared that it was up to the minute in make, the best value on the market and widely advertised, not only in leading trade journals, but in the daily newspapers. It sold at a popular price, and the branded name "Afton" had caught on. Women were asking for it in every centre.

"Now look here, you are a smart young man, and an enthusiastic one—perhaps a little too fresh and forward, but you will get over these undesirable qualities in time," retorted Evanton rather warmly. "Do not attempt to drive anyone, or tell them they must do so and so. Force and coercion will gain you nothing. As for your intimation that I must handle your line, in order to be considered up-to-date and enterprising—and holding out the threat that if I did not take the agency, some one else down the street will, I care nothing for that brand of talk. It is pure buncombe.

"Let me tell you, I have not been in business in Shennigan fifteen years for nothing. Some eleven years ago, there was the Climax Shoe, which was more broadly recognized, and much more thoroughly advertised than your much vaunted Afton. It was made across the line, and a breezy, dapper young man blew in here one fine day, and offered me these shoes at $3.25, laid down in my shop. They retailed easily for $5.00, which figure was stamped on the soles, and had plenty of dash and grace, snap and character.

"Well sir, we were doing considerable publicity at that time, and mentioned prominently that we had been appointed selling agents in this burg for Climax Shoes—the great five dollar leader in female foot toggerly. The brand was already well-known by advertisements appearing in large city papers. We put in special window trims, prepared special store cards, and everything else, to boom the Climax Shoe. We had women coming from far and near, talking of its style, its dressiness, its splendid fitting qualities and its durability.

Began to Raise Price on Him

"Well, after we had sold about $5,000 worth of the Climax, the manufacturers, on the other side, raised their price ten cents per pair on some flimsy pretext. They thought we were wedded to this boot, and would swallow the increased cost without a murmur. We did so, and about six weeks later, up went the shoes fifteen cents more. This made them $3.50. We thought the ascent would stop there. but in February they jumped the price again—this time to $3.60.

"The traveler, J. C. Perne, came along in March, we had a fairly good stock of them on hand. We gave him a hearty welcome, never mentioning the high-handed methods that his firm had been adopting in jacking up the price. We still continued to dispose of the shoe at $5.00, as its selling figure had become firmly fixed in the public mind. Perne was not to blame for the extortions of his house. We drove him around the city on his arrival, gave him a good time, and informed him we were not ready just yet to place our order. He inferred that we would be sending it in by mail later, and departed, in the hope and expectation that everything was all right.

"Well, to make a long story short, we simply 'canned' the shoes. We did not mention the name any more in our advertisements, and we made no more window displays of them; we placed what few pairs we had left at the back, and gradually cleared out our stock. No one in the store talked of the Climax shoe, and unless we were asked specifically for it, we never referred to it in any way. We started booming the Irene brand, another popular line, which had just come on the market, and in less than six months, this famous, branded, nationally-known Climax was dead.—so far as both we and the town were concerned.

Must Have Co-operation of Dealer

"This is a long story, but it goes to show that no shoe can retain its prestige and sale without well directed publicity, window displays and mutual co-operation, on the part of the merchant and the manufacturer. When the makers of the Climax thought they had safely landed us, then they began to squeeze us, thinking we would stand for it, but they reckoned without their host. They tried to place the agency with two or three other firms in the town. The houses would not look at it, as they knew that we must be giving it up for some good reason. The natural query made of their traveler was—"Why did Evanton throw it overboard, he used to boom it in great style!" The salesman could give no satisfactory answer, and the result was there is not a pair of Climaxes sold to-day in this burg—whereas, we would formerly dispose of from 100 to 150 pairs every week."

The moral is this—play the game fairly—act honestly with your patrons—develop unity and mutual confidence, and the results will be satisfactory. Attempting by underhand or coercive means—by dire threats or nasty insinuation, to put a thing across reacts with boomerang effect. Doing the right thing at all times and under every circumstance pays, and pays well.

GOOD HINTS ON THE CARE OF SHOES

Here are a few useful hints which the shoe repairer may use to advantage. A suggestion of this sort to a customer shows that you know your business and is of real value to the customer sometimes, so that he thinks he gets more for his money than just the repairing of his shoes. It is better to talk on such topics than to waste time in foolish talk that draws idlers. Be sociable and pleasant, but be businesslike.

Good shoe polish is necessary if shoes are to look well. For thin kid shoes liquid blacking can be used. There are several pastes or creams now on the market for black shoes that are worth trying. They can be used on dull calfskin shoes with good results and are easily applied.

If new shoes seem to be a little too big in the heel, and in rubbing against the foot cause a blister, try rubbing the inside of the heel of the shoe with a small piece of castile soap. Also powder the linings of the shoe.

Patent leather shoes need protection against sudden changes of temperature. Therefore, if the closet where they are kept is cold, they should be slipped into cotton flannel bags when they are taken off. When they are taken from their resting place in the closet they should be warmed slightly and slowly before they are put on the foot. Rub them with a little vasoline, applied with a small piece of cotton flannel, when they seem dull.

Light evening shoes should be kept covered. They should either be wrapped in tissue paper—which is a good deal of trouble—or else kept in bags or boxes. If you have room and enough old shoe boxes to accommodate them, this method of covering them is good. If your space is limited muslin bags will be found useful. These bags can be hung from the under side of a closet shelf by stout tapes.

NOT AS GOOD A BARGAIN AS IT LOOKED

When is a bargain not a bargain, is a question often asked. What may at first appear a good thing may turn out to be the opposite, and vice versa. A story is told of a visiting shoeman, who went into a large establishment the other day in search of "snaps." There were some eighteen hundred pairs of travelers' samples and other lines on the floor, covering men's, women's and children's, etc. The buyer was offered the lot at a $1.50 per pair all around. He said that he would give $1. Then he came up to $1.25, but the house did not make any move to accept the proposition. After some further parley the purchaser said that he would take the lot, holus bolus, at fifty per cent discount off regular selling price. "Done," said the seller and they went over the goods, some of which sold at a fairly high figure. When the whole lot of samples had been gone through and marked down fifty per cent, it was found, averaging the 1,800 pairs, that the cost to the out-of-town man was just $1.60 per pair. He had been offered the whole selection in the first place at $1.50 per pair, which meant that, if he had accepted, he would have been $180.00 better off than he was when his own overture of taking the bunch at fifty off was proposed.

TWO KINDS OF SHOE SERVICE

Unfortunately Mr. Brown had a theatre party on for that night. And—hang it all!—he had forgotten to purchase a new pair of shoes after leaving the office. So, directly after supper, he hustled around to one of the local stores. It was an unpretentious store of a type found here and there all over the country—a typical uptown store devoid of the higher science of merchandising which spells success, a place that stands still while the neighborhood blossoms.

There were just two clerks in the store at that time. One lounged in his shirt sleeves, a cigarette dangling from the corner of his mouth. The other, clad in a shabby coat, sprawled on a settee, half hidden behind the sporting extra of an evening paper.

The one with the cigarette tossed its smoking stub into a cuspidore and strolled forward to wait on Brown. Now, Mr. Brown was prejudiced from the very beginning. If he had not been in a great hurry the weak looking clerk would have failed to land him as a customer, but with the theatre party waiting, Brown could not afford to waste much time in the matter of selection. He purchased a pair of shoes which did not altogether suit him and hustled off with the very wrong impression that all uptown stores in general, and this one in particular, had "punk service."

Just what gave Mr. Brown this idea? Let us analyze his subconscious thoughts upon entering the shop in question. "Shirt sleeves! Shabbiness! Lassitude!" whispers one little brain cell to the other. "Poor business methods, very poor!" And as the act goes on, Brown becomes momentarily more disgusted.

Why? Because Brown is in reality a very prim and correct gentleman himself and such faults in others irritates him. He vows that his next pair of shoes will come from a large downtown firm, where service is the watchword.

Time wore on and Mr. Brown's shoes wore off. Eventually he needed another new pair but this time he did NOT forget to purchase them after leaving the office for the day. He went direct to a large, well-equipped store near the centre of the city and entered quite confidently.

There were a dozen neatly dressed, alert clerks scattered throughout the place, some waiting on customers, some going carefully over the stock, and some re-arranging the stock of the findings case near the front of the store. But none were idle and all seemed to enjoy their work. One clean-cut young salesman was ready for Mr. Brown the moment he was seated. And Mr. B. took particular delight in noting that this clerk was as spotlessly attired as any customer in the store. He was attractive and full of ginger, too, and Brown liked him.

It seemed, also, that the young fellow knew exactly what Brown wanted. Dissatisfaction was out of the question to begin with, and consequently Mr. B. selected the second pair of shoes shown to him, and before going out stopped at the findings counter and made a liberal purchase. He left with the avowed determination to become a steady patron of the establishment. "Fine service—fine service, indeed," was his inward declaration.

What gave Brown this idea? Once more let us analyze his thoughts upon entering this popular store. "Neatness!" whispered one of Mr. B.'s brain cells to another little cell-mate. "Neatness! Neatness! Neatness!" And the other answers back: "Vim! Vigor! Snap! I know I shall be satisfied!" The sale was made before the customer seated himself.

SOME SHOE SUPERSTITIONS

The Scotch lassie believes that should she by accident drop her new shoes before they have been worn they will surely lead her into trouble. It is said that old maids believe that when their shoes come untied, and keep coming untied, it is true their sweethearts are talking and thinking about them. The sweetheart, when on his way to see his lady love, should he stub his right toe he will surely be welcome, but if he stubs his left he may know that he is not wanted. It is said that if old shoes are burned snakes will squirm away from the place, while to keep old shoes that are past wearing about the place will surely bring good luck. Should you meet a person whose shoes are "worn on the toes" you may put it down as a certainty that "he spends as he goes"; and on the same authority it is said that the girl that has her shoes "worn on the side" is surely fated to be a "rich man's bride."

Retail Footwear Prices

Should the Dealer Advance Prices on Stock Bought at Low Prices?—Are Retailers Charging Exorbitant Prices for Footwear and Making Abnormal Profits

THE daily press having threshed out the bread question, chased the meat packers, and roasted the cold storage concerns, are now out after the shoe men. The talk about "twenty dollar shoes" seems to have got everybody going. It is one of these things that make a startling newspaper paragraph, but there is nothing in it. People have been buying twenty dollar shoes for as many years, and nobody has thought it worth while mentioning it until the present situation arose. The effect has been hurtful to some extent as uninformed, nervous people, have started to lay in stocks of shoes just as they hoarded flour and sugar two years ago. A down town merchant got home the other night and found his wife had purchased five pairs of shoes, enough to do her for two years, because she had read that women's shoes were going to be twenty dollars a pair. Retailers should discourage this foolish talk, as it is calculated in the long run, to do damage to the trade. One of the worst things it accomplishes is to create distrust in the shoe dealer and drive customers to mail order houses and fake enterprises.

Retail Footwear Prices

As a matter of fact, retailers are timid rather than aggressive in regard to marking up their stock. The tendency is rather to sell at old prices while the stock lasts than to take advantage of increasing costs to get what one can for goods which have been bought at lower prices. On this account some lines of shoes have recently been sold at nearly what they realized a year ago. The result is going to be damaging to the dealer in many ways. The man or woman who buys a pair of shoes at four or four-fifty from stock that was bought a year ago may hear from a friend who has bought the same shoe, either at the same store or elsewhere for six-fifty, and who thus becomes dissatisfied. Then again, supposing the store has run out of sixes or eights and has to replenish at the new market prices, what is to be done about the tens and elevens which will be one price, while the middle sizes will be from twenty-five to fifty per cent. higher? The only way is to add to the selling price as new goods come in of a similar class, and which have to be marked at an advance to make a profit. This giving away to the customer the advantages of stock bought at low prices is poor business policy, as well as apt to lead to serious selling complications. Nevertheless it seems to be quite a common failing.

Where Is It To Come From?

Here is a retailer who bought for fall a regular line of women's shoes for which he paid $2.65. He has to replace these for spring with a similar line at $3.65, where is the dollar a pair extra going to come from? Then there is the old stock that nobody seems to want these days when ultra styles are the rage. How is he going to cover himself on these. In most of the shoe stores are lines of women's footwear in the better class in which the leather values are much better than can be bought to-day for half as much again. But women will not look at these shoes because they are not up to the notch in style. The craze for high cut, colored goods, and all that sort of thing, has made dead stock of a lot of perfectly saleable lines that represent considerable investment. These goods are bound to deteriorate, and will have to be sold at a sacrifice.

Covering the Future

Another retailer puts it this way. We have a shoe that sells all the year round in the country for $3.50. We have been paying $2.75 for this shoe for several years, and stocked for fall pretty liberally. We are now pretty well cleaned up, and I went into the market the other day and found that I would have to pay $3.40 for this line. Now why should I continue to sell the few dozen pairs I have on the shelves at $3.50, when I am ordering a large supply at within ten cents of the old selling price. That has led me to adopt the plan of keeping a close tab on my stock, and when I find a line running out I advance the price more or less as I think the case calls for, so that by the time I have to re-order I am pretty much in line with the new prices. I do not see how a merchant can advance his prices all around on his stock. But he can use the high price era to get rid of his slow movers, both by display and advertising.

Selling Unmarked Goods

"We are adopting the policy of avoiding the marking of goods lately," said one representative dealer. There are a good many lines which we mark up with tolerable certainty that there will not be any material advance until stocks run low; but there are some lines of specialties that we carry that are changing so frequently that we do not give the price to the salesman or put it on the cartons in cypher. We prefer to have the salesman suit the customer, and then refer to us for the price. We find that people are willing to pay for what they want, and ask no questions as a rule. During the Christmas season we sold thousands of pairs of shoes, at a substantial advance, and did not find a customer kick. People are alive to the high cost of shoes, and do not seem to question the right of the shoe man to get an adequate profit on his wares.

A BELL PRODUCT

(See Front Cover)

Although, there has been continuity for over a hundred years in the name and in the policy of the J. and T. Bell Co., there has not been a succession of "Bells" in the business. The late John T. Hagar, who was head of the concern, for many years before his death, was a nephew of one of the Bells, but he maintained the ideals of the founders of the establishment with religious scrupulosity. When Mr. Hagar died his mantle fell upon a young man who had for over twenty years been under his personal influence and direction.

H. E. Moles is thus in direct line of apostolic if not family succession, and it has been said of him in a business sense that he is distinctly a chip off the old block. He has the quiet determined way that is the result of a lifetime spent in the same business, for it is just about thirty years since he was initiated into the mysteries of Bell shoemaking, and became acquainted with Bell ideals.

Mr. Moles is a shoemaker who follows the advice of Appelles and sticks to his last. He knows the manufacturing end as well as the selling end thoroughly, and has in the eight years he has been the executive head of J. and T. Bell, Limited, put the product of his concern up several notches.

While he sticks to business most thoroughly, he is a great believer in the open air and is fond of a game of golf, or a good run in a motor. He is in his prime, being around the half century, but looks no more than thirty-five, notwithstanding his picture which does not quite do justice, we think, to him.

NEWSY PARAGRAPHS FROM ST. JOHN

Alfred De Friez, who for some time past has been conducting special sales for boot and shoe merchants in the Maritime Provinces, recently received word that his son had been killed in action in France, and he left for his home in Toronto.

Samuel J. Warwick, late of the firm of Waterbury & Rising, Limited, who was very ill, is able to be about again. He is President of the Warwick Posting Co. Mr. Warwick at one time had charge of the boot and shoe department of the Sussex Mercantile Co.

A letter was received a few days ago from George Crosby, who is at present in France with a Canadian unit, and who formerly was employed with J. M. Humphrey & Co., as traveler. He said he was in good health and had, up to the time of writing, escaped injury.

Mayor Hayes, president of the firm of J. M. Humphrey & Co., wholesale boot and shoe dealers, recently received a neatly gotten-up Christmas card from the officers of the 69th Battalion, now fighting in France; an engraved greeting card from the Canadian Club in Winnipeg, and greetings from the mayor and council of Toronto for the mayor and citizens of St. John.

J. D. Palmer, president of the Hartt Boot & Shoe Co., Limited, of Fredericton, N.B., while in St. John, N.B., few days ago, said that his company had done satisfactory business during the year, and had over 200 employed in the Fredericton factory. When asked re the advance in prices in shoes he said that it was largely due to the upward trend in the price of leather. Mr. Palmer, who is a leading member of the Fredericton Board of Trade, and a past president of that body, expressed himself as convinced that the board would do well to push vigorously after the war an advertising campaign that had been inaugurated a few years ago. The Hartt Boot & Shoe Co., Limited, enjoys a large business throughout the Dominion. Mr. Palmer is a former resident of St. John.

Mrs. J. V. Russell, wife of Commissioner Russell, of St. John, N.B., died suddenly at her home on December 18th. Besides her husband, who was formerly one of the best known boot and shoe dealers in the Maritime Provinces, she is survived by two brothers, Messrs. George and Joseph Gray, of Gray Bros. boot and shoe store on Main street, also five sisters. She was well known in social circles and her death came as a shock to many friends and acquaintances. Her funeral was held Wednesday afternoon, December 20th.

Richard J. Walsh, manager of King street store of Waterbury & Rising, Limited, St. John, N.B., is seriously ill and has been taken to the St. John Infirmary, where he will undergo an operation. During the last few weeks he has been confined to his home, and as his condition failed to improve, his physicians decided an operation was necessary. He has a host of friends who will unite in wishing him a speedy recovery.

Douglas McRobbie, Canadian representative of George E. Keith & Co., Brockton, Mass., arrived in St. John recently. Mr. McRobbie is a son of J. H. McRobbie, boot and shoe dealer in this city. About seven years ago he left St. John and became associated with his brother in Vancouver in the shoe business. Later he secured his present position. Talking of business conditions he said he never found them better.

John F. Fitzgerald, a shoemaker employed with D. Monahan & Co., Union street, St. John, N.B., has been in the trade for a quarter of a century, and occupies the same bench to-day which he used twenty-five years ago. During that long period he rarely missed a day. He has many friends who will unite in wishing him many more years of activity.

"DOING HIS BIT"

By G. B.

They said he was only a store clerk,
 "A Cissy" they said, who sold shoes;
 And he only signed up 'cos he had to,
 Having little or nothing to lose.
 But when the call came he responded
 And acquitted himself like a man;
 They forgot that this much abused shoe clerk
 Could buck up and get out of the "tan."

So he just dropped the "stick" for a rifle,
 And prepared to get into the fray,
 Being earnest, he worked hard in training
 And the life, stiff at first, was O.K.
 He found it a change from the shoe game,
 "Getting fit" in a different "style,"
 And the next time his chums spotted Billy
 He was wearing a stripe, and a smile.

Overseas! Came the order soon after,
 So our hero prepared for a "sale,"
 His "fine trim" was not in a window,
 But the "line" he was in couldn't fail.
 So his pals said "Good-bye and good luck, Bill, Here's hoping you'll come through all right."
 And Bill laughed and answered "Be good, boys,
 Who said that we shoemen can't fight?"

Soon after—'twas somewhere in Flanders—
 The Huns launched a mighty attack,
 But the boys of the Maple were ready,
 And grimly they beat the foe back.
 Our friend, Bill, was in a hot corner,
 Though wounded, no duty would shirk,
 So the folk round the city were answered
 By a man, though a humble shoe clerk.

GLAD TO SEE THEM

An Ontario retail firm writes: "Your December 15th number was very interesting, especially the photographs of the shoe manufacturers. We do business with most of them, but never had a chance to see one in ten. Your journal is improving wonderfully."

Felt Goods Notes

The Season Later Than Usual—Concerns Pretty Well Sold Up—Good Demand Everywhere for Felts—Prices Up About a Third

THIS year felt men have not been any too anxious to get their lines before the trade. The high cost of materials, both felt and leather, and the frequent changes in the past month or two has made price marking an almost impossible operation. The scarcity of labor and its high price have not only created further cost problems, but interfere seriously with the getting out of goods.

Sorting Business Good

Business in sorting has been exceptionally good, and would have been better if the goods could have been got out. Dealers have been complaining that orders have only been partly filled, and in some lines they are hopelessly in the lurch. There has been a good deal of dissatisfaction and kicking on this account and it has been hard to convince customers that the impossibility of getting certain products was a fact. Jobbers have been doing their best to satisfy their clients, and have been as rough on manufacturers as the retailer has been towards them.

About Felt Prices

It is difficult to say what prices will be for placing. While some of the companies have their samples out, there does not seem to be any new list as yet. For sorting all kinds of prices have been paid, and large buyers have been glad to get goods on the list basis and forego discounts. Sales have been made that represent from ten to twenty-five per cent. on list and, latterly, from twenty-five to thirty per cent. higher than last season's list has been obtained. It is safe to guess that the new goods will be sold on a basis of practically one-third higher than last year. Some of the concerns have been taking blanket orders, and asking their customers to leave prices to them. With the state of the market most buyers seem willing to do this.

New Styles and Designs

While there is a general tendency to concentrate in manufacture, and there will be a substantial reduction and consolidation of lines, the felt companies have introduced new features in the season's goods that keep them up to the general progress on shoe manufacturing. There are some dainty creations in women's, both in plain colors and combinations, that will entice the feminine craving for the chic and alluring.

caught with the high shoe fad which will not last forever, any more than other shoe extravagances have. When the clamor for high cuts and colors eases off, there will be a simmering down of shoe conditions."

"It is worth while being in the shoe business to-day," said another shoeman, rubbing his hands. "We stand a chance to get a decent return on our investment. People have lost track of shoe values and are meek and tractable in regard to prices. A couple of years ago a customer would come in and could tell you almost to five cents what he ought to pay for a certain class of shoe. Competition in the cheaper and medium grades of shoes was a nightmare and a man looked forward to the end of the year with fear and trembling. The fact that to-day the shoe merchant has to add a proper profit to his goods to cover himself and that profit is based on higher costs, means in itself increased revenue. Of course, the expense of doing business is greater with some retailers, but with the majority, who do not employ help, conditions are much the same with the exception, perhaps, of slightly higher living costs. I think the era of higher prices has been a good thing for the whole shoe trade, and I for one sincerely hope the time for the three dollar shoe in both men's and women's lines has gone the way of all flesh, and will have no resurrection. And I do not see how it can be otherwise. It will take years to get back the cattle supply to normal and it will never be what it once was, unless something wonderful turns up to give us a new source of shoe materials. I don't think you will see the shoe trade back where it was five years ago in your lifetime or mine."

Tribunals is causing more dissatisfaction than finds public expression. But the dissatisfaction exists, and is quite comprehensible. I have before me particulars of a case in which the appeal of a shoe retailer came before a Tribunal in the Birmingham district last week. The appellant had put the whole of his savings into the business, and he carried a stock valued at £800, while his repairing plant was valued at £150. Previous to the war he employed four workmen, but three of these have joined the army, leaving only himself and a cripple, thus necessitating his devoting practically the whole of his time to the repairing department of his trade. The chairman of the Tribunal made light of the sacrifice which that man was called upon to make, and his appeal was dismissed. On leaving the room the appellant asked a trade friend for the address of a well-known multiple firm who might possibly be purchasers of his business. Of course, it is obvious that the seller of a business in such circumstances is in a position of serious disadvantage, and is practically at the mercy of any prospective buyer. And when he comes back to civil life, if he is lucky enough to return, he will have to start afresh, and take his chance of building up a business under exceedingly difficult conditions."

Stray Shots From Solomon

Hell is full of people who were always going to quit the tack they were on. Every old boozier you meet is going to quit getting polluted some day.

JUST QUIT Just now a good many men are shaking hands with themselves over some New Year's resolution that they have signed, sealed and delivered to themselves and the chances are that by Valentine's Day they will forget that they ever had such a serious transaction. The beginning of the year is a good a time as any for a man to cut a bad habit or tie the can to evil companions, but there is a lot of this "turn over a new leaf" business that must make the Devil laugh. Get down to brass tacks friend. You have promised yourself to quit your meanness. Make the break clean and absolute. That thing can't go on you know yourself. Let this year be a clean one—one on which you can look into the eye of your friends, your business associates, your clerks and your wife and say I am a man.

Greed always overreaches itself and brings its own retribution. The man who stole the sawmill would have been all right if he had let well enough alone; but his greed led him to go back after the dam, and he got caught. We heard of a man the other day who succeeded in getting an allowance on his bill for shortage, then an extra discount, and finally refused the draft on account of an odd fifteen cents. It was the last straw, and the camel refused to carry the load. The paper was protested, sued and the hog had to pay a nice little bill of costs. This he not only mourns, but the fact that the whole transaction is out will make the results of his avarice rather costly. This disposition to squeeze the last cent out of others is a despicable trait. There are men who appear to be decent in every other way, but are afflicted with a strange mania for exacting concessions in settlements. In fact this evil seems so prevalent that few are free from it. It is one of those habits that few realize as being practically dishonest. Of course, as they say, the wholesaler is not compelled to accede to these demands; but when a pistol is held to a man's head on the highway, it is idle to talk about his not being compelled to hand over his wad. Decent men, in thinking the matter over, will see that the practice is neither creditable nor honorable.

Solomon says, "Wisdom crieth without; she uttereth her voice in the streets." Listen to her. It will pay you. I stood at the corner of the street a few days ago with a friend just after lunch. As we stood, a man PLUGS OUT passed who was once one of the OF YOUR EARS most honored and respected wholesale merchants in the city, but now with unshaven face, threadbare clothes and bleared eyes he picks up a job here and there for whatever he can get. Last week he was handling trunks for a former traveler of his at fifty cents a day and his board. All his position and prospects thrown to the winds for whiskey! A few minutes later another passed who was once well connected in business, now earning a precarious living in various ways, brought to it through "wine and women." Hardly had he passed out of sight when another followed who once drove his carriage and pair down to his counting house and back to his luxurious home, but at this particular time was making a short cut for a ten-cent lunch counter, through gambling. People do not need churches and ministers to point out the results of folly and wrongdoing. There are some men reading this article who are on the path that leads to this, and who will doubtless reap the same harvest. Friend, take the plugs out of your ears and hearken to wisdom lest it happens with you as with them at the last. "Because I have called and ye have refused; I have stretched out my hand and no man regarded; but ye have set at naught all my counsels, and would none of my reproof; I also will laugh at your calamity: I will mock when your fear cometh."

Jacob thought he was doing a pretty smart thing when he took the skin of the kid and deceived his poor old father into thinking his first-born, Esau, was before him and thus stole his brother's blessing, but there IT GETS his brother's blessing, but there ROUND came a day when his ten blackleg sons brought in the coat of many colors, dipped in the blood of a kid, and with almost the identical trappings he had used to deceive old Isaac, deceived him into the belief that Joseph, his pet son, whom they had sold as a slave, had been slain by wild beasts. He sowed a lie and reaped ten with such sorrow of soul that it made him an old man in his prime. David did some clever thinking to get Uriah's wife and committed murder to cover up his miserable crime of adultery. What did he get? Adultery in his own family, following murder, in which one of his sons slew the other. These things get round. A man can't sow thistles and get wheat, he can't sow smartweed and get strawberries. There are some men who wonder that their sons turn out crooked. They expect a corrupt tree to bring forth good fruit. The man who sows deception will get up some morning and find himself one of the worst deceived men in the world. The man who is always tricking his neighbors and making unjust gains, will discover sooner or later that his own feet will be fast in the net. The chickens may be a little late getting back to the coop, but they will come home to roost just the same. Some thief who reads this will sneer at this prophecy, but he will think of it when he gets caught in the tolls. "Whoso diggeth a pit shall fall therein; and he that rolleth a stone it will return upon him."

Can You Beat This for Value?

Two Dollars for One

¶ There is Over a Dollar's Worth of paper alone in the twenty-four issues of the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL for 1916. The twenty-ninth volume weighs, without covers, exactly fifteen pounds—at present paper prices this means $1.50. The printing and mailing brings the cost to over $2.00 a year.

¶ There were 1,718 pages in all, or 143 pages a month in this twenty-ninth volume, giving up-to-date information about leather, shoes, markets, styles, business methods, store displays, trade problems, news, etc., including over one hundred pages of illustrations of stores, windows and of persons and things of interest to the trade.

¶ We say without fear of contradiction that nowhere can anything like this return for the money that the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL offers be obtained. Some shoe papers are asking $4.00 a year for the same service.

¶ Paper costs today practically twice what it did a year ago. We ought to raise the price of the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL but are averse to change a policy that has now been in force for Thirty Years.

¶ At all events we have decided to wait a little longer and see whether war prices are to continue or abate. In the meantime you can cover yourself as many of our subscribers have done, by sending in your renewal for two years instead of one at the old price. One old friend of the Journal recently sent in FIVE DOLLARS, saying that the paper was well worth the price and to date his subscription as far ahead as we thought this would carry him. This is the right spirit and we hope it will spread. It shows confidence and trust in the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL which for Thirty Years has served the shoe and leather trades so faithfully and well.

¶ The MOST IMPORTANT POINT is that it saves our sending out men and leaves these men, like Sergeant-Major Tyner, who for so many years represented the Journal on the roads, to give their services to the COUNTRY instead.

¶ Wishing our readers a HAPPY AND PROSPEROUS NEW YEAR.

THE SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL.

SEES NO DECLINE IN LEATHER VALUES

In the Annual Financial Survey of the Toronto Globe, George W. Beardmore reviewing the leather situation during the past year says:

"There has been an active trade in practically all lines of leather during the year. Hides throughout the world have been closely bought up, with the result that the demand has made enormous advances, and hides to-day are at record prices, away beyond anyone's expectations. Usually $\frac{1}{2}$ cent to $\frac{3}{4}$ cent per pound was considered a very large advance in hides, but within the past year we have had advances at one time of 3 cents per pound.

GEO. W. BEARDMORE, TORONTO

"The cost of hides and the enormous advance in tanning material, also increased cost of labor, have made it imperative for tanners to advance their prices of leather. So far as we are able to look ahead and judge, we cannot see any abatement in the early future, as there do not appear to be any large stocks, and tanners to-day are offering for sale only such leathers as they finish from week to week on replacement values.

"Harness, bridle and equipment leathers had only a fair year. Outside of a few contracts for the Canadian Government, no other 'war business' was received, a condition which was in marked contrast to 1915, when Canadian tanners were very busy all year producing leather for military equipment, saddles, harness, etc., for the allied governments.

"The black harness trade was very disappointing during the first half of the year, there being practically no demand and prices being unremunerative, but marked improvement took place the last half of the year, and to-day all are busy on both domestic and export orders and the outlook for the future is much brighter.

"Light leather tanners, who include those tanning upper leathers for shoes, experienced a large volume of business during 1916, and at nearly all times were booked up to capacity. In this branch of the trade price advances were probably more marked than in any other. Calfskins and sheepskins also show heavy increases in prices.

"Business conditions throughout the country indicate that as large a volume of trade will be done in 1917 as during the past year, and the leather industry will doubtless get its share. Much will depend, however, on the condition of the crops and the duration of this frightful war."

WILL PUT TANNERY IN OPERATION

The plant of the Fraser River Tannery Co. at South Westminster, which has been closed for two years, will be re-opened, having been leased by the Vancouver boot and shoe manufacturers, J. Leckie & Co., who propose to operate the plant in the process of transforming raw hides to the finished product. The plant will be in operation by March, and extensive alterations are now being made to both it and the building. The plant will have a capacity of about 100 hides per day, will be operated by electricity and employ approximately twenty men.

When the tannery closed down conditions in the leather business were very different from those of to-day, when the demand caused by the war is continuously in excess of the supply. This is one of the few tanneries in the West, and was formerly operated under difficulties, mainly as to the supply of raw material. It turned out a first class leather, but failed to make a profit, and finally was closed down.

A MAN OF VARIED ATTAINMENTS

J. A. Coleman, of the United Shoe Machinery Co., has been with the company about fifteen years. He spent six years in the factory, working in most of the different departments, so has a thorough knowledge of the company's goods. He has been calling on the trade around Montreal for the last nine years and is well liked, conscientious in his work and does his best to please everybody.

He is known to the shoe trade as "Artie," and is at present the most popular salesman with the United Shoe Machinery Co., in fact, he is "the whole thing." We would not care to say he made the United Shoe Machinery Co. famous, but he has done his best to do so.

He has a summer home on the lake front, is the owner and skipper of a motor boat, and we believe knows the whereabouts of several shoals and rock piles in Lake St. Louis.

He is also quite an accomplished singer, in fact, is known to his friends as the Lake Shore Nightingale. Taking him altogether he is "some boy." We wish him a long and happy life and hope he may be able to greet the trade for many years with his pleasant and cheerful smile.

BELIEVE SOLE SUBSTITUTE HAS COME TO STAY

WRITING the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL on substitutes for sole stock, their worth, weight, adaptability and durability, one of the leading firms producing one of the several widely used materials which has come prominently to the front, offers the following observation, which will no doubt be read with interest. The name of the material will be furnished on application.

"With the information which you have on the present cost of hides, you can no doubt determine the cost of various grades of leather soles of the same sizes and thickness as ours.

"Now, in addition to this price information which we append, we will simply endeavor to give you out ideas of the situation.

"We do not believe that leather is the most logical substance for shoe soles, in spite of the fact that it has been the standard for so many years. We receive reports from people wearing our soled shoes saying that they never want to go back to leather soles. No doubt there are manufacturers of other kinds of soles who get the same report.

"As we believe there are now several other manufacturers who are actually trying to make a sole that is preferable to leather, we are convinced that our company long ago should have started to make a sole that is preferable to leather, but like in many other things, we did not realize the opportunity until the scarcity of leather brought it forcibly to our attention.

The Reason Some Have Failed

"When the scarcity of leather became apparent, a lot of manufacturers started to make soles. The majority of them went at it with the attitude that leather was scarce and that it was simply a case of making something that would do for a sole and that the people would put up with while leather was hard to obtain. Consequently, there were many cheap rubber soles made and there were a lot of poor fibre soles made. No one else started out with the idea of manufacturing a sole with advantages over leather.

"These cheap soles would have had only a temporary large sale, and then when the demand for leather does not so greatly exceed the supply, they would be practically forced off the market. In other words, they were on a make-shift basis. Our company has such a variety of products and such a large volume of business, that we felt we could not afford to build up a large production and a large business on only a temporary proposition. So, we set out to make something preferable to leather for shoe soles. Something which we felt would remain a standard and continue to give us a big volume of business always, regardless of the price of leather.

"The real interesting part of the situation, it seems to us, is that it required a scarcity of leather to make manufacturers see the opportunity, and that even then, some started out on a temporary makeshift basis, while others began to replace leather for all time in this field. It is an interesting case of the old saying that "necessity is the mother of invention."

"Here are the reasons why we conscientiously believe that our product will continue to be a big factor, regardless of the future prices of leather. It protects the feet from moisture and chill better than leather does. It wears as long or longer than the best leather. It is more flexible, thereby making a shoe more comfortable. It does not curl or turn up like the leather sole does with use, therefore, the shoe continues to hold its shape better. It is not so slippery as leather, which is quite an asset on smooth floors, dry, icy pavements, or even on dry, clean pavements, so that one walks with less effort. It does not scratch polished floors or furniture, as does leather.

"Following are the cobblers' costs of the different thicknesses of our soles per pair:

15	Iron, Men's.....	$1.00
12	Iron, Men's.....	.80
10½	Iron, Men's.....	.70
9	Iron, Ladies'	.55
9	Iron, Misses'	.45
9	Iron, Children's.....	.40

MAKING PROFITS ON SOLE LEATHER

A New York correspondent writes: During the period, a while ago, when leather was jumping upwards every day and sometimes fluctuating several times each day in price there were a number of instances where stock was sold and resold over again several times to different buyers, and sometimes coming back to the original buyer, and often no actual shipments were made during the period when the stock changed hands. Some interesting stories are told regarding these transactions, but the following one, which is vouched for by a member of the "Swamp" who participated in the deal, is about the most interesting of all. According to the story told, a lot of 2,000 oak bends was sold in Boston to a Philadelphia house at 60 cents. This Philadelphia concern resold to a New York dealer at 62 cents, who in turn sold to another New York house at 64 cents. The latter concern sold the leather to an exporter at 67 cents, and later bought it back from the exporter at 75 cents. This dealer then made a second sale to a Philadelphia concern other than the original purchaser at 85 cents, who in turn then sold the lot back to the original buyer in Philadelphia, who again made his second sale to the same party in New York who first bought from him. Then this New York party finally sold the leather again for export. No record of price is given after the 85 cent figure was secured, and it is understood that no more, and possibly less, was later obtained. During all this time the leather remained in a loft in New York until it was finally shipped to Europe.

CATCHING TRADE OF PASSERS-BY

An enterprising Toronto shoe repairer is making a specialty of catching the passing crowd, and is meeting with encouraging success. The establishment is known as the Balata Soling and Shoe Repairing Co., of which H. J. Eady is the proprietor. Prominently displayed in the show windows of the concern is the following: "Shoe repairers waiting service—heels, rubber or leather, ten minutes; soles, and heels, eighteen minutes; full soles and heels, thirty minutes. Waiting room for ladies and gentlemen. Slippers and newspapers and comfortable seat—then you go out with good points on your feet." The company has found that its special waiting room has proved a great attraction to passers-by, as within a short time a lady or gentleman may step in and be re-shod, and the time passes so quickly that the customer is scarcely conscious that he is being detained.

The Anglo-Canadian Leather Co. have issued a unique little calendar with a small thermometer attached. This is evidently gotten up in connection with the rising cost of leather, and will serve to curb the excited feelings of the members of the shoe trade, as they will be able to note the rise and fall at their leisure.

Messrs. Clarke & Clarke have issued their annual "Lest We Forget" desk diary. This year the diary is bound in a handsome bronze leather limp and looks like an edition de luxe of one of the minor poets. Those who receive one are not likely to forget the Clarkes.

The T. Sisman Co., of Aurora, have issued a calendar for 1917, which is most artistic in style and coloring. It is a reproduction of a celebrated oil painting, known as "Peggy." The whole thing is in excellent taste and worthy of being framed for home decoration.

The John Ritchie Co., of Quebec, have got out a very pretty calendar for 1917, representing a hunting scene entitled "The Intruders," from the painting by Belmore Browne. It is really one of the handsomest calendars so far seen.

In the last issue of the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL, reference was made to the new factory of the Breithaupt Leather Co. at Penetang. This was an obvious error, as the article referred to their purchase of the tannery and equipment of the Canadian Oak Leather Co. at Woodstock, Ont. Breithaupt's have now four tanneries.

Emanuel H. Sulkis, a popular traveling salesman who covers the Canadian territory for the wholesale shoe house of Samuel Cohen, Boston, Mass., is making a six weeks' business trip in the interests of his house, and will call on the trade in all the principal cities in Eastern Canada. He carries with him a very extensive line of the latest American novelties and popular staple footwear. The firm of Samuel Cohen are well known in Canada, where they have carried on an extensive trade for several years.

A meeting of the creditors of the Milton Shoe Co., Milton, Ont., was recently held. This concern seems to have had a somewhat difficult time since it succeeded to the Winn business. The trouble recently has been the supply of materials, there being no dearth of orders apparently.

The Provincial Cut Sole Co., who recently secured manufacturing premises at 83 Richmond street west, Toronto, are doing a splendid business, and have been cutting large quantities of women's oak outsoles and men's insoles. It is the intention of the company to cut men's outsoles, and to go into various other lines of cut stock. The company is composed of Gregory Hoye, formerly superintendent of the Regal Shoe Co., and E. B. Paige, formerly assistant treasurer of the same company, and latterly connected with the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Co. The firm are doing a splendid business, having established a connection with a large number of factories in Toronto and throughout the province of Ontario.

The annual conference of the traveling staff and heads of departments of W. B. Hamilton Shoe Co., Toronto, was held on December 28th. Plans for the coming year were discussed and a valuable interchange of ideas took place. In the evening the usual banquet was held at the National Club, at which W. A. Hamilton, president of the company, presided. There were seventeen members seated around the festive board, three being absent owing to illness. A varied and patriotic programme of vocal and instrumental music choruses, etc., was rendered interspersed with bright speeches and happy references. Among those who ably contributed to the entertainment were, Joseph Davis, Toronto; William Griffiths, Jr., Barrie; J. E. Firth, of Peterboro, and George Nicholson, of Toronto, all members of the traveling staff, while William Coulson, the veteran foreman of the cutting room, gave a recitation. The gathering was voted the most enjoyable held in many years. The company have issued a little souvenir in the form of a cartridge pencil. It is a regulation war cartridge with the screw attachment to push down the lead. They evidently are expecting to make a bull's eye this season.

The rather startling tidings has just been cabled from London that the British government has released 500,000 light oak bends, held up for months past, ostensibly for army purposes. This leather, the cable adds, will now be used for shoes for the masses. Following this important announcement the belief was expressed in trade circles that, naturally, England had had abundance of sole leather and that buying for England would be practically suspended, at least for some time. But the other day cable inquires again came from Great Britain for 20,000 bends; this, with the presence in the market of a large buyer from Paris, France, gives the impression that foreign leather buying has neither been abandoned or even suspended.

A shoe manufacturer whose average wholesale price a year ago was $1.75 has gone through succeeding changes to $1.85, $2.10, $2.15, and $2.25. He now feels that when his supply of leather is used up, about April, that he will be obliged to raise his average wholesale price to $2.75 per pair. This he believes will reduce his volume of sales, which have been keeping his factory operated for a long time at full capacity.

As far as we are able to judge, says the Boston Trade Bulletin, the demand for women's boots is as large as ever. At the beginning of the season it was expected that oxfords would sell well, but so far reports are not convincing that this style sold much better than previously. Low cuts of all descriptions, especially in white, were in better demand. It is apparent that cloth will be used in a very large way next year. Early in the spring good judges of the shoe business predicted that it would sell nicely for fall, but it did not. Recent happenings have demonstrated, however, that the demand for cloth will be brisk during the next few months.

The American Commercial Attache accredited to China and Japan in a recent interview, says, that China wants American shoes preferring them to all others. He said in part: "For the American manufacturer of shoes who will put in the Chinese market a neat appearing shoe to retail at from $3.00 to $3.50, his opportunities are unlimited. The Chinese are fast discarding the sandal and adopting the leather shoe. The American shoe in particular has met a great demand and shoes to retail at a moderate price will be well received. To date, several manufacturers have been supplying a shoe retailing at $5.00 and up, and have met with good success. The real demand, however, is for the more moderately priced shoe. Style is secondary to price, although a good, staple, comfortable last is essential."

NEWSY NOTES FROM MONTREAL

Regarding Montreal trade conditions, most of the manufacturers, particularly the larger ones are not buying any raw stuff. They feel that the price of leather has reached its highest point, and that they had better wait further developments, especially in view of the recent peace talk.

The retail stores are overstocked and the retailers are not buying. The manufacturer is beginning to find that stock is accumulating on his shelves for the first time in over eighteen months. There is, among the smaller firms, a tendency to want to dispose of this stock at a lower price, and some think that the January sales will show a considerable decrease in the price of shoes.

There is one firm on St. Catherine street, and it is not a high class firm either, who have been selling ladies' shoes at $15.00 a pair. I am told that this firm could have sold them at $10.00 a pair and made a fair profit, but they took advantage of the talk about shoes increasing in price to make an extra $5.00 on each pair. This shows people are willing these days to pay for what they want.

The leather merchants seem to feel that a slump may be coming, and price is in some cases slightly lower for leather than it was two or three weeks ago. The tanners are offering lots for sale, which is something they have not done for over a year. In other words there is a tendency on the part of the tanner and leather merchant to ease up a little, and to get rid of any surplus stock they have on hand, and they are out buying much raw stuff. Most of the manufacturers will not accept any more orders, except on conditions that they charge prevailing prices for leather at the time of manufacture. In other words they are not accepting orders at a fixed price.

Of course, conditions at this time of the year are always unsettled, and there are always a few people with cold feet who are ready to get out from under if they think things are getting slow. The general feeling is that there is nothing as yet to warrant the belief that there will be any serious change in conditions for some time.

The McArthur-Irwin Co., Limited, held a dinner and convention on Thursday evening, December 27th, at the Place Viger Hotel for the members of their staff and affiliated companies. This firm have just purchased the Allan Munro Color Co., and will operate the Munro plants at Montreal and Point Clare.

NOT TAKING ORDERS BEYOND APRIL

Shoe manufacturers in general are not taking orders beyond next April is the statement made recently in a talk on trade conditions in general.

Shoe manufacturers throughout New England continue to report heavy sales, with factories running at full capacity.

The outlook is clearly for a continuation of good business. The law of supply and demand holds good in leather and is evidenced by heavy buying in all grades and by a sharp upward trend in prices of raw and finished material at every point.

MAKING LEATHER FROM SHARKS

The scarcity of leather has induced the Department of Commerce to see whether shark skin cannot be made into an acceptable leather in this country, as is done abroad. Shark skin is very tough and durable, and leather made therefrom has a good body. Arrangements have been made by the Bureau of Fisheries with Florida fishermen for securing a supply of very large shark skins, which will be sent to tanners for treatment. The Bureau of Fisheries solicits correspondence with tanners, leather dealers and manufacturers who may desire to co-operate.

AMONG THE SHOE MEN.

Union Shoe Co., Winnipeg, Man., has sold out to C. Finkleman.

H. A. Beatty, of the A. B. C. Distributors, 67 Gould street, Toronto, has gone with his wife and family to Havana, Cuba, where he will spend the winter.

The Harness & Leather Goods Co., Limited, of Saskatoon, are applying for change of name to Saskatchewan Harness & Leather Goods Co., Limited.

D. A. Leonard, of the A. B. C. Distributors, Toronto, has returned from an extended selling trip throughout the Western provinces, going as far as the coast.

M. Fefferman & Co., dealers in boots and shoes, and clothing, Medicine Hat, Alta., have dissolved partnership.

Percy Waugh, who represents Getty & Scott, Galt, Ont., in Western Ontario, recently joined the ranks of the beneficiaries. Many friends will extend congratulations.

D. R. Hawley, of the traveling staff of Getty & Scott, Limited, is spending some weeks with his family in New York, where he intends to remain until the next selling season. Mr. Hawley resided in New York some years ago, and is quite at home in the metropolis, where he says he has met numerous Canadians, who are all doing fine.

James Grant, who, for several years represented the Slater Shoe Co. in Eastern Ontario, and more recently Scott-Chamberlain, Limited, in Northern Ontario and Manitoba, has joined the staff of the A. B. C. Distributors, and will cover Eastern Ontario, Montreal and Quebec Province.

Captain John Trethewey, a well-known mining engineer, passed away recently at the residence of his daughter, Mrs. J. J. Tilt, Toronto. He was the father of J. L. Trethewey, one of the Ontario representatives of the Brandon Shoe Co., Brantford, and the father-in-law of J. J. Tilt, until recently Western Canada salesman for the Brandon Shoe Co., but now in the footwear department of the T. Eaton Co., Toronto.

Here is the original manner in which an Eastern Ontario shoeman sends salutations to the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL: "I fully intended sending you Christmas greetings before this, but the days and nights were so strenuous that I could not make it, and several old friends failed to hear the sound of my pen. However, I am waving you a Bon Voyage as you set out upon the sea of life for 1917. I wish you a joyous sail, and may you never get away so far from the shore but that you can hear my Bon Voyage across the water and see my flag of friendship flying high for you."

Reports from various parts of the country indicate that the Christmas trade done by the shoe merchants was this year the heaviest on record. The Saturday before the holiday established a new high water mark with numerous retailers, and the weather in all parts of the Dominion was propitious for live, brisk trade. The advertising done by the shoemen in both large and small centres, emphasized the necessity of giving useful, practical, sensible gifts and the announcements were splendidly illustrated and neatly displayed. The key note was that the great war makes 1917 an exceptional year during which useful, sensible gifts will be appreciated and patrons will make no mistake by buying footwear, which is rapidly increasing in price.

As regards the army requirements in England, the latest order requires leather houses to furnish such particulars of their business as may be required. At present what is required is a schedule of all American sides, bends and backs of all weights that are at the moment on hand. No mention is made of bellies or shoulders. The impression is that all importations of this leather will be restricted in the near future, as no particulars of any Colonial leathers have been asked for.

Chas. E. Clements, shoe dealer of Chatham, Ont., was among those re-elected as members of the council of the Maple City for the coming year. His return by a large vote is an evidence of his worth and work in the interests of the ratepayers. Mr. Clements has been an alderman for several years and many friends in the trade will be pleased to hear of his renewed success at the polls.

Clayton E. Hurlbut, of the Hurlbut Co., shoe manufacturers, Preston, Ont., who has ably filled the Mayor's chair in that progressive town for two years, and retired recently, was presented by the business men and manufacturers with a handsomely fitted club bag, as an evidence of appreciation of his devotion to the interest and welfare of Preston.

C. A. Davies, President and Managing Director of Blachford, Davies & Co., Limited, has returned to Toronto after an extended trip throughout all the prairie provinces, going as far as the coast. Mr. Davies reports business as greatly improved throughout the West and the outlook as being most promising. He visited the larger cities and found a spirit of optimism prevailing, and trade on a good, sound, financial basis. Blachford, Davies & Co. have established a strong connection in the West, and some very large orders were taken.

A manufacturer of welt shoes in Lynn states that the men operating his welt sewing machines are earning steadily from $60 to $80 per week, while upper leather cutters are earning from $20 to $25.

The demand for the so-called "painted" calfskins is increasing. Shoe manufacturers say that it runs a more even color and facilitates the mating of shoes in the factory. Most all calfskin tanners are turning out some of this leather, although they say their individuality is lost in the process of painting the stock.

The members of the staff of the White Shoe Co., Toronto, took advantage of the holiday occasion to present Hugh White, head of the firm, with a handsome leather fitted traveling case. The presentation was made by R. B. Gravlin, accompanied by the best wishes of the employees.

Plans have been prepared for an addition to the premises of the W. E. Woelfle Shoe Co., Limited, Kitchener, Ont. The estimated cost is $15,000. The Woelfle Shoe Co. are forging ahead rapidly, and meeting with a large measure of success.

Geo. W. Allan, shoe retailer, Carleton Place, spent a few days in Toronto last week on business.

L. B. Hutchison, manager of the Kaufman Rubber Co.'s branch, Toronto, spent the holidays with his parents in Penetanguishene, Ont.

Ed. R. Lewis, leather merchant, Toronto, was in Montreal and Quebec on business recently.

Jan. Lovell, of Toronto, representing Corbeil, Limited, was among the recent visitors to Montreal. E. A. Chalk, of Toronto, representing Daoust Lalonde & Co., also spent a few days in the city.

In the recent municipal elections in Kitchener, A. R. Kaufman, general manager of the Kaufman Rubber Co., headed the vote among the British League candidates for aldermanic honors, but was defeated by the Citizens' League. Mr. Kaufman made a splendid run, however. J. C. Breithaupt, of the Breithaupt Leather Co., was chosen once more as a member of the Water Commission on which board he has served for some years.

C. Nelson, who carried on a shoemaking business in Islington, Ont., for many years, died recently. He was 71 years of age and had been ailing for some time.

The many friends of Hon. C. S. Hyman, leather manufacturer, London, and former Canadian Minister of Public Works, will extend their sympathy on the death of his wife, who passed away this week after a short illness. Mrs. Hyman was born in London and took a prominent part in church activities.

In addition to the labor question, says an English paper, the item of leather, as regards price, is rapidly proceeding right out of any considered limit. American prices are right out against English prices, the latest market on American sole leather showing selling prices this side, roughly, at 4s. 1½d. bends and 2s. 8½d. sides. Last Friday's

OUR PROGRAMME FOR 1917

¶ The "Shoe and Leather Journal" has made arrangements for some special features for 1917, that will put our THIRTIETH VOLUME as much ahead of our TWENTY-NINTH as beyond its predecessors.

¶ We have arranged for a series of articles on show and publicity methods to be accompanied by plans and illustrations by a special artist.

¶ We have planned that each issue shall contain a special feature that will distinguish it from all others.

¶ The articles will be pithy, meaty, and full of ginger. Just what you want these strenuous times.

¶ This last year our progress was encouraged by scores of letters indicating endorsement and appreciation.

¶ Don't be afraid of telling us when we are wrong as well as when we are right.

¶ Your renewal will be one of the best endorsements, but send a line or two with it.

advances of glace kid, 15 cents, puts a premium on glace that stops any further purchasing, so that we now have glace at 4s. already (I intimated in September that January would see glace at the price of 4s.). Leather sold this side at present is not upon a replacement basis. Business continues to be transacted between merchant and merchant so that manufacturers may not expect any easing just yet.

Wm. Hockin, who has been in the shoe business in Wallaceburg, Ont., for six years, was elected a member of the city council at the recent poll. Mr. Hockin has a neat and attractive store, has built up a large trade, and should make a faithful steward of the peoples' interests.

R. H. Partridge, city traveler for Ames-Holden-Mc-Cready, Limited, Toronto, who, with his wife and family spent the past two weeks in Kingston, has returned home.

R. W. G. Bloor, shoe retailer, of Ingersoll, Ont., who has been in business in that town for several years, was re-elected alderman at the recent municipal contest. Mr. Bloor is a live spirit in the community, a popular vocalist, and a progressive merchant.

An immediate 14 per cent. advance in the price of rubber footwear of all kinds was announced in New York recently by the U. S. Rubber Co. This represented, it was said by an officer of the company, an increase of almost twenty per cent. over the price at this time last year, due to conditions brought about by the war. The company has also advanced tire prices, effective at once, averaging 15 per cent. for casings and 10 per cent. for tubes.

The excitement which arose out of the liberation of the light-weight bends held in bondage at the command of the War Office is gradually subsiding, but we are unable so far to discover that the release of these goods has had any material effect upon the price of sole leather generally, except to make the position as bad as ever—or worse. One would have thought that the first effect of the opening of the flood-gates for a bit would be a slight weakening in values. Such a result would have been the case in normal times, but this and a thousand other instances go to prove that the common law of supply, and demand gets very much out of joint in abnormal times, and especially in war time.—From the Shoe and Leather News, London, Eng.

SHOE JOURNAL GOING AHEAD

A Montreal shoe manufacturer writes: "I congratulate you upon the wonderful strides the 'Shoe and Leather Journal' has made in 1916. May you long be spared to continue its useful and successful management."

"THE GALL" OF SOME SHOE CUSTOMERS

"This is my trouble day," remarked a shoe retailer, with a woe-be-gone expression, and a somewhat ruffled air. It was on a Saturday morning and one complaint after another had just been received and disposed of, some of the grievances being of the most bold-faced character.

"Now here is a sample of where a driver tries to put one over me," he said, "this young man bought a pair of short rubber boots yesterday morning for $3.50. I told him he would not find them warm, even if he wore thick socks, but he said he was prepared to take chances on them, and his heart seemed bent on securing the boots. This morning he came in telling me that the boots were cold, and wanting his money back. They were all covered with snow and mud. I intimated that they had been worn, and he said that while he had had them on a while, he did not think any marks would show. I then told him to go and wash them and bring them back again and I would have a look at the soles. This he did, returning in a couple of hours. He said the boots were no good to him, and thought that I should exchange them for something warmer in the rubber line. The soles showed visible marks of usage and I told him he could see for himself that I could not palm these boots off as a new pair, and I would be lucky to get rid of them for 50 cents or a dollar less. I then went downstairs and got him a pair of men's "curlers," or as they are sometimes known expressmen's boots, which are warmly lined. The price of these is $3.00. I said, 'Now, I will charge you 50 cents difference between this pair and the rubber boots.' He then started to argue with me and told me that it was really soaking him a dollar, as I still had the rubber boots on my hands.

"'Yes,' I said, 'but they are damaged and I would be lucky to sell them even at a loss.' He intimated that I was trying to 'do' him, and I replied, I was not to be imposed upon. He rejoined that he spent a lot of money in my shop and he would not buy another pair there. I told him I did not care whether he did or not, and I was not going to have a pair of rubber boots returned to me that had been worn all day, and allow full price for them. He then took the rubber boots in high dudgeon, and danced out of the door, firing a volley of threats. But that sort of thing does not 'faze' me a bit; I am getting used to that kind of treatment.

"Then again, just a few minutes ago a lady came in with a pair of overshoes neatly wrapped up. She had come in last Friday morning asking me what a pair of women's Jersey Arctics would cost, and I told her $2.25. She said that there was an old lady in the house, a relative, who, she thought, could be induced to go out and spend an evening if she had something warm for her feet, and she wanted to take the overshoes home to surprise her. She paid me the money and I selected a particularly fine pair, because I had my suspicions. She asked if she could return the overshoes if they did not fit or were not wanted, and I said 'Certainly, madame, but they should be back this afternoon, as our lines are very scarce.'

"She said 'All right,' and the overshoes were taken. The next morning she entered serenely, with the overshoes neatly wrapped up, and remarked: 'They do not answer after all.' I had my suspicions that the lady was trying to put one over me, and opening the parcel up, I saw clearly the marks of wear.

"I said, 'Of course I do not want them now that they were used last night.'

"I did not see them used,' was her reply.

"Well, if you look very sharply you will see the evidences right here,' I rejoined.

"Please do them up again,' and without another word of explanation, she marched out.

"I have had too many instances of this kind put over in the past to be caught again in a like trap, and the shoeman who allows wily customers to over-reach him has only himself to blame."

PAPER IMPROVED A HUNDRED PER CENT.

A prominent shoe jobber congratulating the "Shoe and Leather Journal" upon its Christmas Number, says: "The paper has shown one hundred per cent. improvement in the past year, and it was good before."

SHOE RETAILERS SHOULD TAKE HOLIDAY

A certain amount of travel means as much to a business man as a pinch of salt does to a piece of meat.

"I haven't had a vacation in four years," said one shoe retailer in an Eastern town to another. "There are always so many things in the store requiring my attention that I haven't been able to see my chance to get away from one year's end to the next."

"That's not it," said the other. "The fact is that you get in a rut and don't know it. You don't get far enough away from your daily routine duties to get the right perspective. If you could go away for a few days you could look back and laugh at some of these little things that you have allowed to chain you down for nine years. When you get far enough away big things look little, and when you get too close to little things they look big."

"Yes, I know," said the first footwear merchant, "but my work is different."

"Not a bit of it," protested the other. "I used to think that myself, but once I had to take a trip for sad, personal reasons, and I discovered that the world really went on about the same. Since then I have frequently gone to visit stores in other towns and cities, and it always puts new vigor into my business. I begrudge neither time nor money spent in the right kind of travel."

CANNOT FIX THE RETAIL PRICE

That a manufacturer, when selling to a retailer, has the right to fix the price to himself, but not to go further and arbitrarily determine the price to be paid the retailer by the purchasing public was the emphatic declaration recently of Hon. T. W. Crothers, Minister of Labor, Ottawa.

The Minister said he had been making enquiries, and was astounded to find the extent to which this custom prevails. From information he has received, Mr. Crothers says there is a widespread system of contracts by which the manufacturer fixes these retail prices, and, in many instances, declines to sell to the retailer if this schedule is violated.

The department intends to investigate fully. The system of fixing prices is regarded as a combine in the worst form, and opposed entirely to the spirit of the Combines Act. Incidentally, it is doubtless a factor in the cost of living.

RETAILER HAS UNUSUAL EXPERIENCE

"A lady came into my store the other day, and after looking around, finally selected a pair of high cut Havana brown shoes. The price was $8.00. She asked me to put them aside and she would call in a few days for them. I did so," remarks a Toronto shoeman.

"Judge of my surprise when, a few evenings later, she returned at a time when the store was filled with customers, and told me, in a rather loud voice, that I need not keep those shoes for her.

"All right," I replied, "I suppose you have seen something elsewhere that suited you better."

"No," she said, "I have not."

"Then why will you not take them?" I politely inquired.

"Oh," she answered, with an independent toss of the head, "I went up to ——— wholesale shoe house and got a pair for $5.50. I am not going to pay you two or three profits on your boots."

"Of course I made inquiries and found out what she said was true. The reason that the wholesale shoe house gave for letting her have the footwear was a flimsy one. It appears that her brother-in-law had been in the boot business, and had been a customer of this firm. He is now in the grocery line, but on the strength of former patronage and her relationship to him this woman was accommodated with a pair of shoes. I think it is high time a distinction was made and severe lines drawn. The retail trade should be protected to a greater extent."

MODEL N

THIS Outfit represents the highest development in shoe repairing machinery, and meets every demand of modern shoe repairing. It embraces all the essential processes for making new shoes from old ones, giving the maximum of equipment and efficiency in the minimum space. The Outfit has the Goodyear Stitching Machine with all its improvements, including a new style steam generator which uses gas or gasolene for generating the steam, and operates automatically, thereby insuring a uniform heat for keeping the wax in proper condition and requiring little attention from the operator. The Edge Trimming Machine has the new feature of the two shafts, being operated by a single belt, and the cutter grinder is attached directly to the main shaft. This arrangement gives better results with less power.

The Buffing and Scouring Machine has a shaft 57 inches long and carries the following equipment:

- | | |
|--|----------------------------------|
| 2 Split Bottom Buffing Rolls | 2 Flat X-Ray Hee Scouring Wheels |
| 2 "C" Shape X-Ray Heel Scouring Wheels | 1 Heel Breast Scouring Wheel |
| 1 Pin Wheel Pad Complete | |

A powerful Blower System removes the dust resulting from the trimming, buffing and scouring operations, and is designed to overcome certain objectionable features of other blowers.

The Finishing Machine has a 78-inch shaft which has all the necessary equipment for black or russet work:

- | | |
|--|--|
| 2 Corrugated Rubber Shank Finishing Wheels | 1 Corrugated Rubber Heel Finishing Wheel |
| 1 Corrugated Rubber Bottom Finishing Roll | 2 Shank and Bottom Brushes |
| 2 Heel Brushes | 1 Stitch Cleaning Brush |
| 1 Levelling Roll | 1 Bead and Wheel |

At the end of the Outfit is the Oscillating Edge Setting Machine which is fitted with union irons and in its motions duplicates hand workmen with quicker and better results.

Each of the machines is operated independently by a friction drive pulley, so that it is necessary to use only those machines which the operator may require. This feature means a saving of power.

All the machines are firmly mounted on legs and driven by a countershaft with carefully adjusted bearings, so that the Outfit runs with very little vibration, and is in every way most efficient.

CUTTING OUT HIGH SHOE COSTS

Just now both SHOE MANUFACTURER AND SHOE DEALER ought to be interested in everything that makes for ECONOMY in FOOTWEAR COSTS. To meet these conditions we introduce two new lines which we will manufacture in addition to our regular lines of High Grade Calf.

BLACK DIAMOND VEAL

Is our newest effort to supply a much-felt need in the shoe trade. Has all the earmarks of gunmetal calf, and is its equal in texture, lustre and durability.

DIAMOND MAT VEAL

A perfect substitute for Mat Calf, having the full appearance, feel and wear of genuine mat calf in the shoe.

OUR increase in sales last year over 1915 was 90 per cent.

To produce such a volume we had to equip our large plant to turn out a pair of men's shoes every twelve seconds in each working day.

RITCHIE SHOES must be giving unbounded satisfaction or this increase in equipment to keep up with the great increase of sales would never be needed.

STYLE

The young men of to-day are not buying a few pieces of leather fastened together and called a Sturdy or a Serviceable Shoe, or yet a Sensible Shoe.

What they are demanding is a STYLISH Shoe carrying the above mentioned good points.

But STYLE is the viewpoint always, so that a shoe that is not down-to-date in STYLE, Finish and Character does not interest young men, no matter how Sturdy, Serviceable, Sensible, or even Low-priced it may be.

MISCHIEVOUS CHATTER ABOUT SHOE PRICES

Newspaper Paragraphers Exciting and Misleading the Public—Too Much Wild Talk About Shoe Prices—Frightening People Into Reckless Buying and Embarrassing the Shoe and Leather Trades

SHOE values have gone up steadily for nearly a year. This advance in price has not been peculiar to the shoe trade, nor has the extent of the advance been more marked than in many other lines. In fact, the upward trend in shoe values does not begin to compare with that evidenced by some other lines in which there would seem to be less ground for excitement.

The war has eliminated many sources of supply of raw skins, and has naturally created such an unprecedented demand for leather that stocks have been rapidly and steadily depleted. The result has been that some lines of leather have almost disappeared from the market, while others have become so scarce that prices have gone up from fifty to three hundred per cent.

This state of affairs has naturally created considerable unrest, and promoted much speculation as to what the future may develop in shoes. This unfortunately has encouraged a mischievous spirit amongst newspaper paragraphers in search of exciting material for a sensation-loving public. These stories about twenty and thirty dollar shoes are to a large extent mere talk. The SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL in an issue of nearly twenty years ago, when hides were on a basis of five cents, and when fancy leather was being sold at twenty-five cents a foot, illustrated a pair of women's high shoes that sold for over twenty dollars. One could then, as now, squander fifty dollars for a pair of shoes if money were no object. It is true that shoe values are materially higher than a year ago, and that they are likely to be higher still in the immediate future; but a glance at any of the advertisements in the local papers will satisfy anyone that he can still procure satisfactory footwear at figures that will not prove a strain on his financial resources.

The mischief wrought by these extravagant statements about shoe prices can hardly be over stated. They are creating a situation with both wholesale and retailer that is re-acting upon the consumer to the latter's certain disadvantage. The inevitable result must be to establish high prices for materials as it promotes a frenzied demand for shoes that results in driving the manufacturer into the market unnecessarily for supplies, thus creating unfavorable market conditions clear through to the tanner, who is compelled to buy hides and skins at prices that make leather production still more costly than it is.

An example of this pernicious attitude was recently afforded by a Toronto paper which devoted almost two columns to this subject, adding insult to injury, by seeking to make political capital out of a situation that is as trying to leather and shoemen as it is to users of footwear.

With conditions as they obtain at present the tariff has no more to do than the Koran. The same abnormal state of affairs exists in the United States as here, the factories there being at their wits end to supply their own trade. Canadian shoe manufacturers have scoured that market for supplies with little or no results. A local shoe manufacturer, of standing, sent recently a hundred letters to American manufacturers of light upper leather making enquiries for stock, and received ninety-five replies, stating that they were opening no new accounts. The others did not deign to answer. The duty has nothing to do with the question, either in leather or shoes.

But it is the keeping up of the local excitement about shoe prices that is most largely responsible for the creating of an unnatural demand for footwear. At this time of the year the shoe trade is usually at its dullest period, but a visit to any of the manufacturing or jobbing establishments of this country, just now, will convince anyone that what was recently said by a member of the Toronto trade in a jocular vein, is more truth than poetry—"A shoeman needs to provide himself with a 'ticker' these days to keep up with the market."

Collection of Accounts

Bad Debts a Menace to Retail Business—Keep Accounts Well Collected—Right and Wrong Ways of Getting in the Money—Just Now Dealers Should Look Well to Their Books

MANY a retail establishment has gone down through giving too much credit, and especially by not getting in the money due from credit sales. Now, it is not even these days always possible to run a strictly cash business, although this is the ideal in a successful retail enterprise. When the large departmental stores and mail order houses are able to conduct their immense establishments on this line, and mostly at the expense of the ordinary dealer, it ought to be possible to do a large proportion of business to-day, even in a country store, on a cash basis.

Taking it for granted that there is credit given, judgment as to how much, and the length of time allowed is a most important thing for the man giving it. On general principles the shorter, of course, the better, and the smaller the safer as a rule.

The character and business qualifications of the debtor should be thoroughly considered. People who get their wages weekly and have to depend upon them should not be given long credit. Weekly or at most semi-monthly accounts should be the rule. Salaried people may be entitled to a little more consideration, and monthly bills should be promptly sent out. People on salaries are apt to go on spending recklessly, and settling as irregularly, unless they are reminded periodically of their obligations.

There are some people whom you can trust, and indeed, must trust for longer than a month, but this should be a matter of careful scrutiny and arrangement.

But there will always be a certain amount of credit business done even in city stores, and the effort should be to minimize the evil in its extent and effects as far as possible.

In the first place discrimination should always be used in giving credit. A merchant has no business giving credit to everybody who asks it. The things to be taken into account are the ability of the person to pay, and also his willingness to pay. Financial standing and character should be the two great considerations in allowing people to take goods from your store without paying for them. Some people with plenty of means to discharge the obligation have a distaste for paying their debts on time, and others with every desire to pay what they owe are hindered by lack of means. Some people with very limited means are the most desirable subjects for credit for, after all, character is the cornerstone of credit.

There are business and professional men who would be offended if they were "dunned" for their accounts in less than three months, and would go elsewhere for goods if they were followed very closely. On the other hand there are even amongst this class those who prefer monthly statements.

In the collecting of accounts the first thing for a merchant to do is to carefully classify his customers. He must study the individual and make the approach as individual as possible. There are those to whom one has only to send the account, and the cheque or money comes back immediately. There are those who think it dignified and proper to wait a day or two, and those who forget, and need reminding. Then there are those who are careless and indifferent and who require close, thoughtful and persistent effort to bring to book. It is as with every other department of business, results are obtained from brains and attention.

Promptness is the great essential in dealing with accounts. Have stated times for sending your bills, and then follow them up. Educate your customers to pay promptly in this way, and your book accounts are as good as cash.

Follow up with letters and make these letters a study. Avoid abruptness and at the same time don't have them get the impression that you are not in earnest. Tact and forcefulness should characterize them. Here are two letters that demonstrate the wrong and right way of following up an account.

(1) "Your account is now past due, and we must ask an immediate settlement. When the goods were charged you distinctly promised pay in two weeks, which has not been done. Kindly send amount by return."

The account was paid but the customer went elsewhere for goods next time.

(2) "No doubt you have overlooked the account for $16.50 which we herewith enclose and which is now overdue. We would be glad if you would please let us have a prompt remittance."

The money was paid and the customer's friendship and patronage retained.

Here is a breezy yet pointed way of stirring up a delinquent who has not paid attention to his bill.

"Yes, here we are again!"

"No doubt you are tired of these bills, so are we, especially as it costs us money to send them.

"Let us cut out this trouble, both ways. Send us a cheque for $5.00, and will send you a receipt. You will then be saved bother and we will be saved the time and postage.

"Thanking you in advance."

It leaves the debtor in no uncertainty as to the determination of the firm to keep after him till he pays, and does the work in an inoffensive way.

It is often a puzzle to know how to collect accounts that are guaranteed, or those of a son, daughter or wife, when the head of the house is supposed to be uninformed of the debt. It is better to send the account to the person concerned direct, when you realize that a debtor means to beat you, don't be tender. Avoid threats. Never dun on a post card or over a telephone. Never tell anyone else your customer is a rogue or a cheat. If he is crooked he may get damages on you.

Here is a good follow up letter when a couple of polite invitations have failed.

"We have now written you twice about your account, without getting an answer. We take it that you do not intend paying until we take other means. Unless we hear and if not attention is paid to it to intimate that the account will be sent to the father. Here is a letter of this kind sent when promises of a young spend-thrift failed.

"RING OUT THE OLD, RING IN THE NEW"

THE BARRINGTON STREET STORE OF WM. TAYLOR CO., HALIFAX, WAS RECENTLY GIVEN A NEW FRONT ENTRANCE WHICH HAS EFFECTED A VERY GREAT IMPROVEMENT IN THE APPEARANCE OF THE PLACE. THE DOOR WAS FORMERLY AT THE EXTREME RIGHT, BUT IS NOW IN THE CENTRE AND CARE HAS BEEN TAKEN TO SECURE SUFFICIENT WINDOW ROOM ON EACH SIDE FOR DISPLAY PURPOSES.

"We are taking the liberty of enclosing an account contracted by your son, George, who has made a number of promises to settle, but failed to carry them out. The account is not large, $25.50, but I have thought it wise to call the matter to your attention. Will you be kind enough to take up the matter with him and let us know what to do."

The same idea may be followed with an extravagant wife's account, being careful to have the letter polite, considerate and reflecting in no way upon the one ordering the goods.

Take it for granted that the majority of people are willing to pay if they are able. Try moral suasion before getting out the "big stick." But from you by 15th inst., we shall hand the matter over to our attorneys for action."

If you would like to take a third try before sending this final warning, the following might move the delinquent.

"We would not like to think that you are wilfully refusing to acknowledge our account or letters, but we will be compelled to believe you are taking this attitude unless you answer this letter. It will mean costs to you, and trouble to us, to collect through our attorneys, and we shall wait five days before doing anything further."

In following up accounts avoid bluffing. Have your remarks polite, but pointed, and carry out what you promise. In any case just now look after your accounts. Good times will not last for ever, and you can educate people now, when they have the money to pay up.

How Major Martin ^{of} Millersville Ran a Shoe Sale

Written Specially for the "Shoe and Leather" by Ralph Gordon

"NOT one line less than half a page and it must be in Saturday evening's paper," and Major Martin brought his big hard fist down on the desk in his little office with a thump that made things jingle, and he spoke with a tone that indicated he meant business. He was speaking to his junior partner, George Clark, a worthy young man who had been with him for some years, and wanting to encourage him, had taken him into the business. There was another reason which the Major knew and recognized, but did not say anything about it. The Major had no sons but his only daughter who helped at times in the office, allowed young Clark to see that she got home safely from the office whenever they thought it would be necessary for her to remain in the office till closing, and the keen old eye of the Major didn't miss that.

The Major was sixty-five years old but looked and acted the part of a man twenty years younger. He was active, alert, and right up-to-date in business. He always dressed in a neat, snappy business suit and finished up with a red necktie. He said the tie distinguished him from other people. It was a sort of advertisement. He had conducted his business in the same stand for several years and had made considerable money. So last fall he decided to take a holiday and go south for a month or so, leaving the business in charge of young Clark.

The latter was a little over cautious and thought it would be saving to cut down on the advertising. So when the Major returned things were not moving just as fast as they should. A number of lines of shoes that he took in last fall were a little disappointing in their selling qualities, sort of hung fire, didn't go quick enough to meet his pushing disposition. So he called his young partner into his office and said: "See here, Clark, we've got to get these goods moving. Call up the paper and tell 'em we want a half page ad. for Saturday evening's issue."

Clark was flabbergasted; it almost took his breath away. He spluttered away about a waste of space and money. He argued that everyone knew where their store was and if they wanted the goods they would come and get them. This rather nettled the Major. "A-hem, a harum," he cleared his throat. And when the Major cleared his throat, look out. He cleared for action. "By the great dog all Harry, Clark, you get my goat. Here you are a young man and you ain't got enough real old down genuine 'pep' to make a skeeder wink. Get this into your noodle and let it stick—IF YOU DON'T SOW YOU WON'T REAP."

"But," broke in the youngster, "why not take a smaller space? The paper can't get up half a page ad. for Saturday, for all the printers quit at twelve o'clock on that day."

It was this remark that caused the Major to bring his fist down on the desk and say: "Not one line less than half a page and it must be the Saturday evening's issue." Then he went on—"Now, here's the campaign. Arrange a special sale of men's and women's oddments and off sizes that are moving slowly to start sharp at 8 o'clock on Monday morning. Cut the price on these slow sellers till they will be enticing to women who know a good thing when they see it."

"But—" broke in young Clark.

"Not a word," the Major jerked out. "I ain't through. Cut the price on the slow sellers. This is the month of February. We need the money. We need the turnover. We need customers coming to our store so they won't forget the habit. This is a between season, so we want to keep the people coming to our store. Want them to make a beaten path, so they will follow it, when the spring trade opens. And the printers can quit at 12 o'clock on Saturday too. This waiting till the last minute with ad. copy is all humbug. This is Wednesday; get your copy and lay-out into the printers' hands this afternoon. Get the proof to-morrow (Thursday). Read it and return it Friday morning. They can correct it and lock it up ready to go on the press Saturday morning, and every Tom, Dick and Harry in the print shop can quit at twelve o'clock if they want to for all of our ad. which will come out in Saturday evening's paper. Now just for a leader we will sell those men's bals $3.25 a pair.

Poor Clark. It was a brick bat to him. So he spluttered: "Why, Major, you're crazy, that's ridiculous; we're selling them at $5.00 now."

"No we're not," came back the Major quickly, "we're just offering them for sale at $5.00 and they are not moving half fast enough at that price. Make 'em move, boy; make 'em move."

"But look at the awful reduction," young Clark half moaned.

"Never you mind that," was the Major's answer, "I bought that line at $2.85 before the prices started to climb, and took two hundred pairs. We'll make a drawing card of them by clearing them out at a big reduction on present prices, but still be making 45 cents a pair. That's mighty cheap advertising. Remember they are the leader, the feature for the sale. And you can add that 100 or more pairs of women's buttoned you're trying to sell at $5.00. Sell 'em at the same price. I paid $2.65 for them before the rise.

"As a head liner these two lots at $3.25 will make a whole lot of people in this good old town of Millersville sit up and take some notice two or three times. In one of the bottom drawer of my desk you'll find cuts that you can use for these shoes. Hunt them out and use them. Describe the goods well with short, but pointed reading matter and quote the price in your ad.

"Surely, Major," gasped young Clark, "you don't mean to quote prices in the ad. do you? Why that will give our prices all away to our competitors."

"Yes sir, boy, everything has got to be priced in the ad. and in the store, so you better hunt up price tickets too, while on the pricing job. Never you mind about our competitors. They are running their business and we are running ours. Don't bother about any business but our own. Now here's a heading for your ad. Run it all the way across the top of the paper, seven columns in 48 point black face type.

LET US HELP YOU SAVE MONEY ON YOUR SHOES

And here's a sub-heading, run it in 24 point black face:

"On Monday morning we will start the biggest sale of shoes we have ever inaugurated. Every body in Millersville needs shoes, and here's a big opportunity for you to save money."

"Here's a leader—200 pair of men's shoes, present price, $5.00—Sale price, $3.25.

"Describe these lines minutely and they will be the feature.

"Now hunt out all the odd sizes and every pair of shoes that won't move quickly, reduce the price on them and clear 'em out, we need the room.

"Get a cotton sign to go across the front of the store with this wording on it:

"BIG SALE OF SHOES STARTS MONDAY AT EIGHT O'CLOCK. READ OUR ADS. IN THE PAPER."

"And remember this, boy, these shoes and other lines are simply leaders to get people to the store; it's up to you to sell them other lines that are not advertised and on which we have a little more profit."

"I know you don't like these special sales, but mark this young man, successful men are worth following—so long as their success is obtained by honest dealing. The big city stores are not giving up their special sales and they have tried it out for a great many years. If it does not pay why do they sell goods at them sometimes much below cost? Simply because it pays. It's one way of advertising and you always have to pay for advertising. It brings the people. Your bound to sell more goods and regular lines at that.

On Monday morning when young Clark came down to the store at 7.30 he got the surprise of his life when he saw the men and women waiting for 8.30 o'clock to buy shoes at $3.25 a pair. And when the hour actually did come and he went to unlock the door from the inside he was nearly carried off his feet by the rush of housewives and men to buy shoes at $3.25 a pair. The sale was a huge success and Clark was converted. He says that the half page ad. cost some money, but—IT PAID.

Leather Trade Jottings

What is Seen and Heard Amongst Leather Men—Business in Leather During the Off Season—Tanners Keeping Their Feet Warm

WE have received many congratulatory letters with regard to our full discussion of the leather and shoe situation in our last issue. A compliment was paid the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL by one of the largest leather concerns in the country which asked for another copy of the last number, as one of his firm had carried off his copy of the JOURNAL. We are glad to find that these days when leather and shoes are like stocks and wheat the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL is of practical service to the trade. We take occasion here to express our thanks for the many kind things said to us by leathermen and others at the close of the year.

Business Quieter.—At this period it is usual to find shoe manufacturers busy with stock-taking and preparing to begin spring shipments. The feverish state of the leather market that prevailed almost until the holidays had the effect, however, of promoting rather more buying than usual towards the end of the year, with the result that spring goods are further on than usual. Manufacturers are, therefore, on the qui vive, and are enquiring for stock rather more than usual. They are, in many cases, trying out the market and seeking concessions, but leathermen are standing pat. Stocks are pretty well cleaned up and tanners see no reason for weakening. Most of the large manufacturers have their spring requirements pretty well covered, and are seeking to get a little ahead on sorting as well as to provide for the future, which it would seem, they think is problematic as far as prices are concerned.

The Hides Market.—The hide market continues easier, but the condition of the hides is a factor in the situation undoubtedly. Nevertheless, tanners are not as keen buyers as they were two or three months ago, although the larger ones continue to pick up fair lots when they get a chance. Chicago packers are holding firm, although some heavy native steers have sold at 32 cents. Country butts are quoted at 25 cents, but have been sold as low as 23 cents. Dry hides are quiet, but some business has been done at fair prices. Calfskins are weaker on account of a large lot of Russian skins that reached the New York market last week. The limited shipping facilities are militating more and more against dry hides which do not change, notwithstanding the slackness of demand occasioned by a waiting policy of tanners.

Leather Conditions.—Sole leather has eased somewhat on some lines, but the situation is practically unchanged. There has been a quickened demand for export, but the difficulty in securing freights is preventing sales. The local demand in any case, it is thought, will consume all there is in sight. The same applies to staple lines of upper leather. An English buyer recently made an effort to secure a quantity of certain lines of stock, but was unable to make arrangements for an adequate supply. Calf is a little quieter, the price having caused a halt for a while. The demand for side leather, however, is good, and good prices are being paid for prime stock. There does not seem to be any material weakening in the leather situation here. Kid shows a little weakening, although the report of government legislation on anthrax has stiffened things again this week.

Peace and Prices.—Will peace bring a drop of any moment in leather was asked a prominent tanner. His reply was: "There may be a temporary halt in prices and business, but I do not see how it can continue. After the war there will be a large export of leather and shoes to European countries. Undoubtedly it will take them some time to reorganize their industries there. Then there will be a rush of South American hides to England and, especially to the European countries, that have practically been closed to them. This will keep up hide prices, which means there will be a chance for reductions in leather costs for a considerable period. I think the extremely low supply of raw stocks all over the world will keep leather prices up for some years at least. Meanwhile the demand for footwear of every kind will be enormous."

Russian Conditions.—A good deal of data is appearing in the Russian press in connection with the leather and allied trades. For instance, it is stated that in the Pavloff district the industry is being organized on modern lines, and that the old-fashioned village industry is being supplanted by larger tanneries equipped with machinery. Quite a large trade in leather is already done with Bogorod, and already tanning is being done in drums in place of the old pit system. Such processes as pumping, and grinding of tanning materials, are also being done by power as against the old hand methods. The trade in this district appears to be in a specially good position, as the proximity of the Nizh-ni-Novgorod market renders it possible to procure raw goods and to dispose of the finished product fairly easily. The only drawback is the distance goods have to be horse drawn, the nearest stations being thirteen or twenty-two versts away. This and other items of news, however, which we often publish, show Russia is surely developing her industries.

Apropos of leather, it is also stated by the Minister of Finance in his report that the Russian leather industry was unsatisfactory in 1915. The shortage of leather greatly increased the difficulties of boot production, and prices rose from 65 to 170 per cent. as compared with 1914. Both the large factories and the small cottage shoemaker, however, were requisitioned to supplement the huge quantity of military boots required.—Leather World.

SHARP ADVANCE MADE IN RUBBER PRICES

High Costs of Materials, Shortage of Help, Unprecedented Demand and Delayed Deliveries Cause Average Increase of Twelve Per Cent.—To Facilitate Manufacturing and Stock Carrying There Will be no "Second Quality" Goods Henceforth

UP go the prices for rubber footwear. The new lists went into effect on January 5th, and the average increases on an ordinary bill of goods will run about 12½ per cent. over the figures which have prevailed since May last

Briefly, the cause is shown in the table printed above. The constantly increasing costs of raw materials entering into the manufacture of rubber footwear, the greater outlay for labor, the scarcity of experienced help, and the abnormal demand with which Canadian plants have been utterly unable to cope owing to the heavy draughts made on their working forces by enlistments, munition factories, etc. All these and difficulties due to freight congestion have brought about the inevitable diminution of supplies and the recent advances. If all the mills had been able to obtain sufficient labor there would have been no shortage in goods, but that is a matter which it has been quite impossible to overcome.

No Second Quality Lines Now

Some radical changes have also been put into effect by the concerted action of the various companies. From this time out there will be no so-called second quality. Only one price, any brand, will prevail. All brands will be sold at a standard figure whether the lines are light or heavy. Men's self-acting rubbers carry higher prices, and the usual extra charges for roll edges, extension heels, etc., still apply. The combining of the two qualities will, of necessity, eliminate certain lines, thus further facilitating manufacturing and stock carrying. The manufacturers believe that the tendency will be to level goods up to standard prices and reduce the number of lines and brands, giving the producers an opportunity to economize on production.

In no case will the quality of workmanship be sacrificed and the various companies state that their policy will be to maintain the same high standard of each and every brand. There will be one quality for all goods, prices varying, of course, according to the features which each particular shoe possess. Some factories may make a third quality rubber, but from this out there will be no second quality.

"This means," remarked a leading member of the trade, "that the number of rolls in the mills will be reduced, that there will be fewer branded cartons, less overlapping and detail, while the process of manufacturing generally will be simplified and the output correspondingly increased."

Difference Between First and Second

Generally speaking, the difference between first and second quality has been that the former carried lighter linings, and no reclaimed rubber was used in their production. While the advance in rubber has been comparatively light the extreme advances in other materials have brought the cost of manufacturing the heavier goods fully up to first quality figures. The difference in price between heavy and light ranges has been from 5 to 10 per cent. on the lists in the past. The heavier rubber, or so-called second quality, was supposed to stand more strain and stress in rough wear, and not to be quite so trim in appearance. Heavy and light lines will still be made by the producers, but the price classification as first and second quality has disappeared.

Prices Across the Border

Rubber companies across the border in their new price lists of to-day as compared with those of a year ago, show an average advance of 22 per cent. Never was there such a rush of placing orders as during the past few days, and all records have been surpassed in volume within a short time.

"In Canada," said a sales manager of one of the companies, "there has been no such stiff increase as over the border. Last May an advance of about 6 per cent. went into effect after the placing order season. With the growing expense of manufacture and materials, on which replacement values have to be taken into consideration, I doubt if the factories, on the present basis of costs for raw stock and other supplies, help and operating outlay have been getting cost out of the goods. It has been felt for some time that a substantial advance had to come.

"You cannot realize," he continued, "the conditions that we have been up against. I know there is a liberal supply of lumbermen's goods, but in light rubber footwear there is a dearth such as I have not seen for years.

"Do you know that there was not in a wholesale house in Toronto last Saturday a pair of women's high heel rubbers. The weather has all along been propitious to a large call for rubbers owing to the wet stormy days, and the demands made upon the retail trade have been excessive. More people are wearing rubbers to-day than ever, to protect their expensive leather shoes, and it is wise economy to do so. But some one not familiar with manufacturing conditions, speaks up and says, 'why can't you change your help in the factory and switch from heavy lumbermen's goods on to light weight lines and so supply the crying need for the latter.

Cannot Shift Help at Pleasure

"I will tell you why. The man who is working on an overshoe, a rubber boot or leather top goods will not touch a light rubber. He will tell the foreman or superintendent that the latter work belongs to girls and he will not change for the convenience of any firm. You have to deal with help very gingerly under present conditions, and grant them almost any concession if you wish to retain their services at any price. As for the girl labor, many who worked in the rubber footwear factories have gone to munition plants. Then owing to fathers and brothers getting such liberal remuneration in other lines of employment many a young woman or perhaps a wife has given up working altogether, and is staying at home.

"Someone else says why not establish more factories to meet the present need? Let me tell you right here, equipment could not be obtained for at least a year and a half. We have made an exhaustive investigation into the machinery supply market and we know. We have done everything within human possibility to give our customers service. In the last three months no goods have been received by freight as we did not know when we would get them, or be sure of getting them at all, owing to the congestion on all transportation lines. Every case reaching us from the factory has been sent by express which means a heavy additional cost to us. Only the other day some goods shipped by express from our factory took four days to reach us, whereas, under normal conditions, the time consumed should have been only two or three hours.

"The normal daily capacity of the various rubber plants in Canada is, I should estimate, some sixty thousand pairs, and not more than two-thirds of this number is being turned out and probably not that. The plain unvarnished reason is that we cannot get the help, although we have advertised far and wide and pressed any and everybody into service, while wages have been augmented fully 33 1-3 per cent. I am no pessimist, but you cannot realize what we have been up against. We make no complaints and only ask the retail trade to be reasonable and considerate under circumstances that no one, not actually in the rubber manufacturing game to-day, can adequately appreciate.

Things That Can't Be Governed

"The rubber manufacturer cannot foresee weather conditions, and to add to our tribulations there are so many styles of heels and different lasts called for that we do not know which way to turn. We cannot gauge the sorting demand. Old Probs has for the last three or four weeks been playing into the hands of the retailer, exhausting his stock and causing us to be flooded with business at a most inopportune time. But there, I am not going to assume any further the role of a professional apologist I have given you a few facts from the productive standpoint which may assist the retailer to comprehend our tremendous disadvantage and perplexities of to-day."

Some Prices that Prevail

The following are the prevailing prices on some of the leading lines as compared with the lists of 1916:

Retail Prices Also Ascend

All live retailers have to take into consideration replacement values in rubber footwear in view of the increase in prices. Already they have done so in the great majority of instances. A few weeks ago the Toronto Shoe Retailers' Association adopted a minimum price schedule for rubbers for the present season.

They now report that the people are paying the new prices without complaint. There have been very few who have even questioned the figure and when matters are explained, the money has been handed over without further ado. "The public understand the conditions which are contributing to the high cost of both leather and rubber shoes, and are disposed to pay the price," remarked a Yonge street footwear merchant.

Such conditions as exist in the shoe trade to-day never prevailed before and may never do so again. No relief is in sight and people will have to take the state of affairs in pedal requisites the same as they do the weather—just as it comes from day to day.

The following prices are now charged by Yonge street shoe merchants, Toronto.

HE IS "JUST WRIGHT"

(See Front Cover)

E. E. Donovan, the head of E. T. Wright & Co., St. Thomas, is a born shoemaker. He received his technical and business training across the line, and his first Canadian experience was in connection with the Cook-Fitzgerald Co., of London, Ont., being largely responsible for the marked success of that firm's goods.

He took charge of the Canadian establishment of E. T. Wright & Co., when it was established in St. Thomas, a little over four years ago, and has built up a business in high-class men's shoes that has made "Just Wright," a household word.

Mr. Donovan is a whole-souled, genial man of whom everyone speaks in the warmest tones of appreciation. He knows his business through and through and, while he does not keep his nose on the grindstone all the time has very few hobbies outside shoemaking. To him a well designed and well constructed shoe is an achievement well worth his time and brains.

THE TALE IS TOLD

of Goodyear welts turned out by the Tetrault Shoe Manufacturing Company, from January 1st to December 31st, 1916, has now been finally summed up, and reaches an amount far beyond our most sanguine anticipations. The grand total as shown by our factory records, is :

This amount has been a gradual development from month to month, clearly demonstrating the fact that the popularity of the TETRAULT SHOE is not the result of a spasmodic effort or an unnatural BOOST. It shows the gradual appreciation of our efforts to give the shoe trade of Canada a shoe that it would be impossible to turn out a product in VOLUME and QUALITY equal to the TREMENDOUS production of the TETRAULT PLANT, which has been so systematized and specialized that every operation is performed not only with the latest machines and appliances, but with such an arrangement of the work as to yield the BEST RESULTS.

Without Capable Men

the TETRAULT PLANT would find it difficult to turn out the IMMENSE VOLUME even of one kind of shoe. But with the ORGANIZATION and the COMBINATION of brains and skill, it is able to produce both Quality and Volume that places it in a CLASS by itself.

The Successful Guess

It was a comparatively simple matter to gauge the output of the TETRAULT PLANT for the last half of December and thus complete the year total. The growth has been so natural that it could be measured by a coup d'oeil, or glance.

Total Number of Guesses, 875

We have had many guesses from near and far. Some were considerably below the mark, and some almost as far beyond. The lucky guess, or more properly speaking, the most mathematical computation placed the production at $2,002,312.21

The actual production, as previously stated, was $2,002,094.54.

The contest was won by Mr. C. H. LUDLOW, of Ludlow Bros., Brantford, Ont.

We congratulate Mr. Ludlow upon his ability as a mathematician, as well as his skill as a prophet.

The Guesses and Winners are as follows:

These gentlemen will receive, in due course, the reward of their skilful calculations.

The highest guess was $2,245,109.80 and the lowest guess was $1,925,007.25.

We desire to thank the trade for the very wide interest taken in this question and assure them of our intention to have the current year record, in a fitting way, the growing popularity of the TETRAULT SHOES.

"WIN THE WAR" IS THE ONE ANIMATING SPIRIT

Sir H. W. Trickett, Limited, say This is the Great Essential Thing which Must Claim First Place—Satisfactory Report Presented on Past Year's Operations Considering the Difficult and Perplexing Times—The Welfare of the Employees Reviewed

"A NATURAL question for any of the shareholders to ask is—'What about the future.' I am not a pessimist by any means. Still, I can see greater difficulties ahead, in keeping our factory going, than any we have experienced up to now. So I trust that everyone will be ready to face the difficulties that are sure to come, and I hope we may do it in the spirit that the one essential thing which must claim the first place in all our arrangements is to help all we can to bring this war to a speedy and successful termination."

"We have finished the year with a much heavier stock than usual. You will be glad to know that as regards made-up goods it is many years since the stock was so low. The increase referred to is in raw material which is without doubt, more valuable than its equivalent in cash. The result of the policy which has been pursued during the past year, of holding a larger stock of raw material than usual, has made it possible to carry on the business continuously."

So spoke Mr. Oliver Eatough, Managing Director of Sir H. W. Trickett Limited, Gaghills Slipper Works, Waterfoot, England, at the recent annual meeting of the company.

As this widely known British firm of slipper manufacturers has a strongly established connection with the trade in the Dominion, extending over many years, and maintains a permanent Canadian office in Toronto of which Mr. J. S. Ashworth is manager, its record of achievement during the past year, in the face of many difficulties in the matter of obtaining raw materials, and heavy draughts on its employees who are doing "their bit" for King and country—no less than 220 having joined the colors—a report of the proceedings will be read with much interest. The firm is to be congratulated on the splendid progress made when all the deterrent circumstances occasioned by the war are taken into consideration.

In the course of his remarks Mr. Eatough said:—

At this, the third annual meeting of the company, it affords me exceptional pleasure to move that the balance sheet be accepted. The directors feel that to be in a position to present such a satisfactory account of the year's working, considering the difficult and perplexing times we are passing through, is of no small interest. But before saying anything as regards figures, I would like, with your permission, to make a few remarks in general. When I spoke to you twelve months ago, I then announced that 105 of our men had voluntarily responded to the call of King and country. That number has now been more than doubled, for to-day no fewer than 220 have joined the colors. Nearly one-half of these men are serving with their regiments either in France or on the Eastern front. Ninety of the young fellows are at present undergoing training. Six of the number have been discharged. Another six are in hospital suffering from wounds. One is still reported as missing, and worst of all, twelve of these brave lads have been killed.

It may be interesting for the shareholders to know that the wife of each married man who enlisted prior to the Derby Scheme receives weekly from the firm the sum of 10s., and in like manner the dependents of single young men who enlisted voluntarily receive 7s. 6d. per week, making a total payment to these dependents since the war broke out of just over £3,300. Your directors have also felt it their duty to subscribe in the company's name to the local charities and hospitals, Red Cross Society, Y.M.C.A., and towards the purchase of a Motor Ambulance Car, which to-day is doing good work in France.

Development of Welfare Work

An innovation has been made in the factory just lately, appointing a Lady Welfare Superintendent, whose duties are as the name suggests, to look after the welfare of the females in our employ, and, in case of indisposition or sickness, she will attend to them. To facilitate the work, a Rest Room has been provided, which is in charge of the Lady Superintendent, Mrs. Maxwell, who is able to render first-aid. The Rest Room has been equipped to meet all likely needs.

On account of the high cost of living the workers connected with the slipper trade made a request for an advance on their previous war bonus. On the decision of Alderman Smith, Board of Trade Arbitrator, this has been granted, with the result that to-day we are paying at the rate of over £9,000 a year in war bonus. This extra cost naturally compels us to advance the price of the goods manufactured. We are also glad to say that our workpeople are earning good wages. As an example—the average wage, with bonus, for last week, leaving out the general staff, but including all workers over thirteen years of age, was £1, 12s. 5d. So we are of opinion that both workers and shareholders alike will be satisfied with the year's result, considering we are at war. You will observe from the balance sheet that the profit shown, namely, £19,299 3s. 8d., is after making allowance for excess profits claimed by the government. There has also ample provision been made for debts owing to the company by enemy countries.

O. EATOUGH, MANAGING DIRECTOR

The cash balance, and bills in hand, at our bankers, namely, £12,105 3s. 3d., is very satisfactory, taking into

STRONG DEMAND LOOMS UP FOR FELTS—BUY NOW

Shortage During the Coming Year is Unavoidable, Owing to Scarcity of Wools, Leather and Dyes, and the Shortage of Labor—Stocks are Low and Prices About Twenty-five Per Cent. Higher—How the Industry has been Developed and Expanded

ONCE more the felt footwear selling season has been ushered in. The past year has been a trying one for all manufacturers in this line owing to the labor shortage, and the high cost and scarcity of all raw materials. Stocks are at the lowest ebb and deliveries have been slow and uncertain.

It is understood that the new price lists average from 25 to 30 per cent. higher than during the last placing season.

"Yes," remarked a leading manufacturer this week, "it is rather difficult to make any prophecies in regard to the future. A shortage during the coming year is unavoidable as raw materials such as wools, leather and dyes required for the production of felt footwear are almost unobtainable, and with all felt stocks including all imported "left-overs" cleaned out during the past season, I can only suggest to the wise retailer not only to buy early, but to get early shipment if possible for 1917 felt requirements."

This pretty well sums up the situation. There has been an unprecedented demand for felts and stocks are depleted in many lines. Manufacturers have done their utmost under very difficult conditions.

High Plane of Production

There is a general tendency to concentrate on many lines owing to the shortage of materials and labor, but a number of new models are being introduced from the strong, serviceable warm shoes for curling and outdoor wear, to the dainty and luxurious slipper and house boot for home and fireside.

The felt footwear production in Canada has attained large proportions and been brought up to a high plane of efficiency. Felt shoes are made with all the style, comfort and appearance of leather goods in various combinations and artistic patterns, and the new creations for the coming year were never more representative or comprehensive in character or features.

Felt in the cold climate of Canada, particularly in the West and Lower Quebec, plays a large part in promoting the individual comfort of the populace, and the story of how the old monk, St. Feutre, weary and footsore, unintentionally became a felt manufacturer is worthy of reproduction.

How Felt Was Discovered

It came to pass in the pleasant land of France, in the days of Robert the Devil, that a certain monk dwelt in the city of Caen, whose name was St. Feutre.

Now, this monk, for his sins, felt called upon to make the pilgrimage to the Shrine of St. Michel-in-peril-of-the-sea, which is on a mount placed in the ocean not far from the good village of Pontorson. So this monk set forth from the Abbey Aux Hommes, which had been founded as a religious house by William the Conqueror in expiation for his sins inasmuch as his marriage to Matilda was displeasing to Heaven. He started upon the morning of a bright day, with staff in hand, his robe girded round him, the cockle-shells in his cap, and a new pair of sandals on his feet just turned out by the brother cobbler of the Abbey.

Now, it was at the season of the year when but few pilgrims are wending their way toward the west coast, so that St. Feutre had the road to himself, and though he set out blithely each morn he was much wearied at night when he arrived at the inn or religious house where he was to sleep, and his feet were sore and worn by token that his sandals were new and his feet unused to them, and as he walked on he thought to himself that each step taken in his new sandals was a part of the penance that he was doing for many sins, of which he hoped to be relieved when he reached the shrine of holy St. Michel. But at times, as the way waxed long, he felt that his penance was more than he could bear. From time to time on his tedious journey, he passed fields of sheep being driven by the shepherds to the nearest market towns, and he wondered within his heart whether it would be displeasing to God if he should reach out his hand and pluck a handful of wool from the back of the passing sheep and put the wool in his sandals for his feet to tread upon, and thus ease the soreness which his feet had taken from the shoes.

Vouchsafe Miracle To Him

And as he thus communed with himself it came to him that he would ask God to bless the action and vouchsafe a miracle to him that it had not been unfitting and he should thus make his pilgrimage more easy to his feet.

And so he plucked from the back of the passing flocks of sheep, not one, but several handfuls of the wool, which he placed upon the soles of his shoes to his great comfort, and then he proceeded upon his journey, and lo! at the end of the fifteenth day he arrived at the Island of Mount St. Michel, and as he stood before the shrine of St. Aubret the miracle was vouchsafed to him, for he pulled his sandals and in the bottom of each was a new cloth, unknown before, firm of texture, soft to the touch and strong, made from the wool of the sheep, tramped down by the daily footsteps of the pilgrim. The miracle had been performed, and thus was the manufacture of felt made possible in our day.

NEW CLAIMANT FOR FISHING HONORS

Fred. W. Wagner, who is the foreman of the turn department of the Kingsbury Footwear Co., Limited, Montreal, has returned from Rochester and Auburn, N.Y., the latter place being his old home where he spent a well-earned holiday. He was accompanied by his wife. Mr. Wagner is not in love with the recent frigid weather and the thermometer flirting around the zero mark as it deprives him of the pleasant pursuit of fishing. He is a most enthusiastic angler, and would also go across the continent to attend a clam bake. In politics he is an ardent Democrat. Of a quiet, genial disposition, mild manner and expansive smile all these desirable characteristics have disappeared during the recent stress in the weather, but it is expected they will reappear with the buds and leaves in the early spring when winter releases the streams from her icy embrace, and all nature is in tune. Then with a congenial party of friends Mr. Wagner may once more sally forth in search of members of the finny tribe. He has already entered the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL contest for 1917 for the leather medal—very valuable now owing to the soaring prices of raw stock, which was captured last season by Narcisse Gagnon, of Montreal, on his great salmon angling expedition down the St. Lawrence River, while Hugh White, of the White Shoe Co., Toronto, was a close rival. The competition during the coming summer will be more exciting and more largely entered than ever.

RUBBER HEELS

Abounding in Merit

It had to come—a rubber sole that could really stand the “gaff.”

We put our experts on the job and the picture you see herewith is the result of long deliberations.

- Dunlop Rubber Soles wear indefinitely.
- Will not crack.
- Will not dry out.
- Give maximum resiliency.

Dunlop Rubber Soles have gone to the front, the same as Dunlop Rubber Heels. Quality, with an organization back of it, did that.

Why not Dunlop Rubber Soles and Soleing for your line now? All sizes—colors: Grey, Black, White and Tan.

“Peerless”—At the Front

Of course, Dunlop Rubber Heels have always led, as far as quality is concerned.

But the advertising campaign back of Dunlop “Peerless”—combined with the non-varying reliability of the heel and the dealers’ big inducement to sell—gave the public the impetus to buy.

You know the rest—that is, if you are one of the hundreds of dealers who earn good money each month by selling Dunlop “Peerless” Heels and by returning “Peerless” empty heel boxes.

All sizes—colors: Grey, Black and Tan.

We make a full line of Cements for rubber heels and patching purposes.

The Shoe Repair Man

TORONTO REPAIRERS TO HOLD BANQUET

Charles F. Robertson, 457 Queen street W., was re-elected president of the Toronto Shoe Repairers' Association at the annual meeting held on January 11th in the Foresters' Hall, 22 College street. There was a good attendance and the prospects for the coming year are unusually bright.

Reports for the past term showed the affairs of the association to be in a flourishing condition with a membership of over a hundred. It is only six months since the organization was formed and, in that time, it has made great progress. Practically all the old officers were re-elected in recognition of the good, faithful work that they have done in the interest and welfare of the trade, in improving working conditions and effecting price reforms commensurate with the rapidly increasing cost of raw stock. Three new price lists were issued during the past few months and the one which went into effect in December last still prevails.

The following officers were elected:—

President—Charles F. Robertson, 457 Queen St. W.
 Vice-president—H. K. Hayward, 1658 Dundas St.
 Recording Secretary—S. Burnett, 761 Yonge St.
 Secy.-Treasurer—A. Butterworth, 457 Yonge St.

Executive Committee—J. W. Hendry, 2191 Queen street east; D. Pretty, 853 College street; A. Brodie, 229 Dundas street; J. Sagar, 100 Victoria street; W. H. Ferguson, 1307 Queen street east and D. B. Butler, 667 Queen street west.

The membership fee for the coming year was fixed at three dollars. It is proposed to hold a banquet early next month and arrangements to that effect are being carried out. Representatives of Shoe Repairers' Associations in all the leading towns and cities of Ontario will be invited to attend and the dinner will be a great get-together occasion for the exchange of ideas and pointers. Its success is already assured for the proposition is being taken up enthusiastically.

The Toronto Shoe Repairers' Association meets every second Thursday in the Foresters' Hall, 22 College street, and all gatherings are well attended. The Association has adopted a trade mark on all its literature showing the sole of a shoe before and after repairs, surrounded by a circle upon which the name of the Association is printed.

COST OF SOLE SUBSTITUTES IN REPAIRING

The subject of substitutes for sole leather is now a live one of interest and discussion among the members of the shoe repair trade. In view of the constantly ascending prices for oak, union and hemlock leather, other materials of which there are at least a dozen on the market, are being considered as effective and economical mediums for bottoming purposes.

Among the new things recently put out is Tenax Fibre Soling, manufactured by Gutta Percha and Rubber, Limited, of Toronto. This is made in two colors at present, black and tan; heels are not being made yet, although the company expect to do so later on. Tenax comes in the following sizes and thicknesses 36 x 36 and 48 x 36 in either quarter-inch or three-sixteenth inch thick. The one-quarter inch is intended for men's, boys' and youths', and the three-sixteenths for women's, misses' and children's shoes. The approximate weight is as follows: one-quarter inch about sixteen pounds per square yard, and the three-sixteenths inch twelve pounds per square yard. Tenax soling in all sizes and thicknesses is sold at fifty cents per pound, and the terms are 2 per cent., tenth of month following shipment, or net cash end of month following shipment. It is the intention of the company to supply Tenax in moulded soles in all the standard sizes but, owing to difficulty in having these moulds made, the firm cannot supply them as yet.

better and cheaper than leather and practically as light; that it wears longer than leather or rubber, and is non-squeaking, waterproof and flexible. It is a highly fibrous compound, developed and perfected in the laboratories of the company, after months of research and practical tests and, as a substitute for and in view of the scarcity and high price of leather, is a boon to the consuming public.

Another well known soling is Neolin which is manufactured by the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Co., Limited, Toronto. This material has been on the market for some time and is widely advertised in the press. It comes in both chocolate and black, whole cut soles and the following prices prevail to the shoe repair trade on the different thicknesses: 15 Iron, men's, $1.00; 12 Iron, men's, 80 cents; 10½ Iron, men's, 70 cents; 9 Iron, ladies', 55 cents; 9 Iron, misses', 45 cents; 9 Iron, children's, 40 cents.

In regard to Neolin, the manufacturers declare that the product will continue to be a big factor in the trade regardless of the future prices of leather and that it wears as long or longer than the best leather, is more flexible, is waterproof, and non-squeaky, and protects the feet from moisture and chill better than leather does. It is also contended that the shoe, to which this kind of soling is attached, is more comfortable and easy than one bottomed with leather, that Neolin will not curl up like leather soles do with use and, therefore, a boot holds its shape better. It is not so slippery as leather, and does not scratch polished floors, etc.

Many arguments are advanced by makers of other sole leather substitutes along the lines already indicated. There are scores to-day, especially men who are walking around the streets, shod in shoes either made with or repaired with the new solings on the market. On the whole it appears these materials have given satisfaction. The future will tell how much larger the demand will be among shoe repairers for materials compounded and manufactured with a view to replacing sole leather stock.

OTTAWA REPAIR MEN RAISE PRICES AGAIN

The Ottawa Shoemakers' Association, Ottawa, on January 1st, adopted a new price list, which was approved by all the members of this live organization, of which E. A. Schryburt is secretary.

The new list is the third one which has gone into effect since April last, when the Association was formed. Some members are talking of a further increase, thinking that raw materials are so high that the profits on the whole do not average over 30 per cent. when overhead expenses, wages, etc. are taken into consideration.

The following is the list of new prices for best work:

SHOES PARTLY MADE OF ALUMINUM

How would you like to wear aluminum shoes? A Milwaukee paper says: "Owing to the increase in the cost of leather, which has been on the upward trend for many years, there has been a demand for some substitute that will take its place to a certain extent in the manufacture of shoes and, in some parts of the country, there has been received with favor a shoe partly made of aluminum. The use of leather is not dispensed with entirely, for there is yet considerable entering into the shoe, but the sole and counter, the parts most subject to wear, are made of metal. The hard usage of the shoe comes on the heel and sole, and in the case of the aluminum the wearer walks on the heel and a rocker, across the sole of the shoe, which parts are renewable and may be readily replaced. The shoes are no heavier than those of leather, and are said to be much more economical on account of the increased service secured."

NEWS BRIEFS FROM ST. JOHN

Captain Ralph Hayes, son of Mayor R. T. Hayes, of St. John, the president of the firm of J. M. Humphrey & Co., wholesale boot and shoe dealers, is now in command of a battery of field artillery, according to Lieut. F. C. Badgley, M.C., of Ottawa, who recently arrived in the city from the Western front. He said Captain Hayes was one of the most efficient artillery officers in France and won his promotion very rapidly. Captain Hayes was in charge of one of the departments of J. M. Humphrey & Co., prior to leaving for the front.

An announcement was recently made by St. John rubber concerns that the prices of tires, tubing and other goods had advanced in price from 12½ to 25 per cent. Rubber footwear is what the majority of people are interested in, and the fact that it is soaring in price is causing many to worry, especially as leather is getting beyond the reach of many.

While some falling off in the price of leather hides was recently recorded in the wholesale market, J. M. Humphrey & Co., the largest manufacturers of shoes in St. John, say that these prices have not yet reached the manufacturer, and according to their latest advices the price of leather was expected to move upward instead of downward. They say that the public has not in the truest sense been obliged to pay for its shoes at present quotations, as most of the shoes now on the market were made from leather that was purchased when prices were far below their present levels.

Joseph Walsh, who has been employed with the firm of Waterbury & Rising, Limited, wholesale and retail boot and shoe dealers, for a number of years in the repairing department, will undergo an operation in the near future. He has been seriously ill for over a year and at times little hopes were entertained for his recovery. If the operation is not a success he will be placed in the home for incurables. The firm in appreciation of his valuable service for so many years has granted him a specified sum for the remainder of his life, providing the operation is not a success.

R. J. Walsh, manager of the King street store of Waterbury & Rising, Limited, is still confined to the St. John Infirmary. His condition is still critical.

PATRIOTIC WINDOWS VIEWED BY THOUSANDS

Two attractive and patriotic windows were installed by John Lennox & Co., Hamilton, during the recent Yuletide season. The work was ably executed by W. Pinch, artist of the firm. One painting represents Admiral Beatty's flag ship going into action at the Battle of Jutland, and the picture in the other window depicts the frontier of Belgium and France in the dead of winter, showing the camps of the soldiers behind the firing line. Each painting which aroused much interest and favorable comment was seven feet high and nine feet wide. At night the windows were brilliantly illuminated with electric stage effects, and thousands viewed the spectacle with delight. The photographs herewith reproduced convey some idea of the beauty and charm of the presentations. One window was filled with a splendid range of club bags while in the other there were fitted suit cases, leather fitted cases and companions and a pleasing variety of general leather goods. The firm received many congratulations.

THE ERA OF ADVANCING PRICES WILL BE LONG

Leading Shoe Manufacturer Aably Reviews Conditions During Past Year—Predicts that the Cost of the Finished Shoe for Fall at Prices Now Paid will Mean an Increase to the Dealer from One to Two Dollars—How Business will Adjust Itself to Conditions

"That high prices will prevail for a long time is the consensus of opinion as expressed by many authorities; just how long is a matter of conjecture, but that the era of advancing prices will be prolonged is a surety and one on which we all should base our plans. As evidence, manufacturers of shoes are to-day buying leather in anticipation of dealer's requirements for fall which, at the prices paid, will mean an advance to the dealer in the cost of the finished shoe, of from one to two dollars per pair over and above the prices now being charged for the same lines."

THE foregoing reference from a message to the shoe trade by George A. Slater, President of George A. Slater Limited, shoe manufacturers, Montreal, indicates that not only will the present high cost of footwear continue, but that quotations for fall deliveries will be augmented from one to two dollars per pair.

On the other hand, Mr. Slater takes no doleful view of the outlook for 1917, and points out that there has never been a time when business did not adjust itself to the conditions affecting it. "There has never been a country," he declares, "which offered so many possibilities as Canada, and there has never been a people with better facilities with which to develop advantageously such possibilities than have we Canadians."

Reviewing the record of events during the twelve months, Mr. Slater says: "At the opening of another year no doubt most of us can look back on twelve months of accomplishment with a feeling akin to pleasure, because all of us have overcome difficulties which seemed well-nigh insurmountable. Indeed, the retrospect is gratifying if only in the knowledge that Canada has surpassed itself in achievement. Probably most of us fail to realize the full measure of that achievement; the adverse trade balance to Canada's discredit before the war has been displaced by a balance so favorable that it is almost astounding; instead of occupying the position of a borrowing nation we are now loaning money to our largest pre-war creditor, the Mother Country, and more and more Canadian currency is finding its way into Wall Street, the great American financial melting pot. To maintain our position, too much attention cannot be given to the policy of conservation and economy advocated by the government. Let us curtail our imports so far as we can, reasonably. Every dollar sent out of the country, be it for footwear or anything else that can be purchased to equal advantage in Canada, represents a retarding feature in our progress; particularly is this the case as applied to luxuries or incidentals not absolutely necessary to the physical welfare of the community. Far from being radical this view is really only in line with the English policy now being enforced as essential to the furtherance of the allied cause.

Indication of Country's Well Being

"In agriculture we find that in 1913 the exports of farm produce totalled slightly over $210,000,000, while in 1916 the aggregate amount was approximately $508,000,000. The banks of which Canada is well endowed, report greater savings deposit accounts—a true indication of the country's well being, but even more gratifying is the knowledge that we are able to finance our undertakings without external assistance. All over the country there is ample evidence of our prosperous state; the lumber industry, for many months dormant, has revived; the building trade has come into its own again; mining is being carried on with renewed energy; in fact, business in all quarters and of all kinds is flourishing, and as a result you and we have felt the recovery from the depression which existed in 1914, and trade in footwear has shown a wonderful growth. The growing pains, however, have also been in evidence; a continually rising market with other troublesome elements combined to cause us trouble and the situation is not clearing. Fortunately the condition of the country and the public's knowledge at large, of the difficulties confronting the manufacturer and the distributor of shoes, helped to solve those difficulties, but I am led to assure with diffidence the role of prophet in which capacity I am supposed to send this message. However, a few words as to the future may not not be amiss, and in that connection I would like to quote from a circular sent to me by a prominent firm of tanners:

Facing No Raw Stock Situation

"High prices have brought out every particle—every skin—every hide, from even the utmost parts of the world, but worse than that, high prices have made them kill the new stock of the future. Natives can now get as much for a young calf, for meat, for skin and hair purposes as they formerly could get for a steer. WE ARE FACING A NO-RAW-STOCK SITUATION, and it is the belief of all buyers of finished stock, that there is an abundance of raw stock in foreign countries, but such is NOT the fact; not only is there no available or present supply, but even the SUPPLY OF THE FUTURE HAS GONE AS WELL."

These are the words of one who is in closer touch with the situation than you or I, and he gives us food for thought.

"Some people may say ten and twelve dollars are prices too high to pay for shoes. Let them consider the true facts

WILL LOOK AFTER "NUGGET" INTERESTS

Major John Harris, who is second in command of the 256th Construction Battalion, which is being recruited at points east of Port Arthur, will leave shortly for overseas. He has always been an enthusiastic military man, and since his appointment over two years ago, as manager of the Nugget Polish Co., has won a host of friends. Major Harris is leaving at the end of the month. During his absence the business of the Nugget Polish Co., Toronto, will be looked after by L. R. Howard, with whom is associated H. W. Parsons. Mr. Howard has been thirteen years in the service of the Nugget company, nine of which have been spent in Canada, and the firm's interests will be in most capable hands.

MAKING OR MARRING A SALE OF SHOES

"I find in effecting a sale in footwear that the transaction is either made or marred in the first few questions or remarks addressed to a customer," remarked a leading Ottawa shoe dealer this week. "If you greet a caller pleasantly and with a smile you will in turn receive a bright, cheery response. After you have invited a patron to be seated, it is well to mentally 'size up' your prospect which you can easily do without staring unnecessarily or boring with too many queries. Glance at the pair that the caller has been wearing. That will give you a clue as to the character of the footwear which the party has been in the habit of buying and, perhaps in taking the shoe off you can secure a look at the lining, which will afford you some conception of the size.

"Now when you show one style of shoe it is well to gaze for a moment at the cartons next to that pair to see if you have the next size larger or smaller as the case may be, and to know in exactly what widths you have the footwear. Then if the shoe appeals to the patron, but is a little too small or narrow you can say 'I think that I have another of the same kind which will answer admirably.' You are sure before you make this statement that you have such a shoe in stock owing to the preliminary examination of those on the shelves. Suppose a shoe has found favor, but is not a good fit, you then can get down one-half size larger or smaller. To discover suddenly and unexpectedly that you have not such a one in your store—well, such a confession and lack of acquaintance with your goods reveal a shortcoming on your part, and puts you at much disadvantage. If you have only a certain size, and fit that on, and notice that it answers so far as style features are concerned, but you are shy on that particular selection, it is well to forestall matters by diplomatically observing that perhaps another model will look a little better and prove a little more attractive.

"Selling shoes successfully and closing a deal is an art. It requires tact, study, patience, courtesy and adaptability. A store with the stock is not the whole thing. One must know how to come in contact with customers and win their confidence and respect. It is a life long insight and the more years that I am in the game the more I am learning every day. I do not want a salesman in my employ who knows it all. He is too valuable for me. The clerk, who is ready, willing and obliging as well as efficient and energetic, is the one who will render the best service and, when you interpret the word 'service' in its broadest sense, you take in everything worth while in the merchandizing of footwear."

MEETING WITH GOOD RESULTS

J. D. Lynn, of Truro, N.S., who some time ago joined the traveling staff of Canadian Arrowsmith Manufacturing Co., Niagara Falls, has had about twelve years' experience on the road, five of which have been spent in the Maritime Provinces, where he has worked up a good connection with the shoe trade. Mr. Lynn was born in Collingwood, Ont., and is well and worthily known throughout New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. He has thoroughly mastered the arch support game, and is a close student in specialties for the foot.

The Canadian Arrowsmith Manufacturing Co. have now built up a thorough sales organization, covering every part of the Dominion, having five men representing them at the present time. J. D. Lynn, in the Eastern provinces; Edmour Brosseau in Quebec; R. J. Orr in Ontario; J. K. Vidler, Winnipeg to Calgary; and J. B. Meyer, British Columbia.

Because one lone employee was dissatisfied on a salary question the four hundred hands at the Ritchie Shoe Factory, Quebec, were forced to quit work, 150 of them having gone out on a sympathetic strike for their dissatisfied comrade. The trouble was finally adjusted and the plant is again in full operation.

WHY SHOES COST MORE

The following table has been compiled from manufacturer's figures. It shows the cost of a pair of shoes to retail at $3.50 in 1905, and the cost of a shoe of the same quality in 1912, March, 1916, and December, 1916, with the percentages of increases in the several intervals.

WHAT a strenuous year 1916 has been for most people. Many, of course, have been almost fabulously prosperous, but to how many times more people has the high cost of everything been a condition, and very far from a theory.

Everything seems to have been going up continuously and with no visible sign of stopping.

It costs high to live, to keep well, to play, to die. The average individual has no choice but to resign himself to the inevitable and to keep at the problem of living, trusting to luck to come out somewhere near even in the end.

Shoes We Must All Have

There are many things one can economize on or go without, under financial or other compulsion, but the list does not include boots and shoes. One's underclothes, perhaps—but never one's footwear. Footwear is seen of all men and the streets and sidewalks of the twentieth century are against going barefoot. Shoes we must have.

It is human nature to kick without much thinking. Something appears to be unjust, unfair, an imposition, and at the moment it seems wholly reasonable to kick; but it may be an impulsive conclusion and to a considerable degree without justification nevertheless.

Take the subject of shoes. Every member of the family must have shoes. Shoes are costing more all the time, and the additional drain on the household purse is considerable. Human interest in shoe prices being universal, caustic comment and indignant revolt have followed. Robbery, unwarranted advantage of war conditions, another trust move, and the like, have been freely charged. "Who gets the extra dollar?" is asked.

Good and Undeniable Reasons

Indiscriminate criticism eases the mind, true enough, but it doesn't get anywhere. A little thought and a little inquiry show that there are good and undeniable reasons for the higher prices asked for shoes; that the higher prices were inevitable and they are likely to go still higher, and that there is no big pot of gold coming to any one set of people. No one person gets that bothersome dollar. It is so split up that only a fragment goes in a single direction.

If you were a shoe manufacturer all this would be emphatically clear. The shoes you buy at retail have got to return more money to the manufacturer, for they cost him more to make. It is a simple question of figures, of profit or of loss.

The chief expense in a shoe is the leather, and leather is much higher than it used to be, for cause. One million less cattle and half a million less calves than a few years ago are slaughtered annually in this country, a decrease of 12 and 20 per cent. Further, millions of dollars' worth of both sole and upper leather are now being exported from this country, and this scarcity of leather for the manufacture of domestic shoes is increased by absorption of millions of feet of heavy leathers to fill foreign orders for army shoes, to which should be added the million pairs of army shoes for the United States now being required. There is also an abnormal demand for leather for saddles, harness, leggings and other army accoutrements.

NEW MODELS IN FANCY CLOTHS AND IN CLOTH AND LEATHER COMBINATION EFFECTS

Chiefly for these reasons the country's shoe manufacturers must pay much more for their leathers—lessened supply and abnormal demand are always followed by this inevitable economic result, and leather is no exception.

Lessened Supply—Abnormal Demand

There are, too, contributing causes besides the increase in leather prices.

The scarcity of dyestuffs and chemicals increases tanning costs. Linings and other findings, laces and buttons are higher, labor costs continue high, rents are increasing, freights and insurance, merchandising and retail expenses are higher. Tracing the various raw materials from their original state to their combination in a finished shoe, each article and each process is more expensive than formerly and the "extra dollar" which is complained of is divided into many parts and distributed all along the way. And it is to be feared that this extra dollar, owing to the laws of trade, will be found to be too small before it is found to be too large.

These new conditions have to be met in turn by the cattle raisers, packers, tanners, manufacturers, jobbers, retailers, and each must get back his quota of the increased expense incurred.

The table, "Why Shoes Cost More," accompanying this article, shows in detail the increases in costs which the shoe manufacturer is facing and which he must meet. These comparisons are for the years 1905, 1912 and March and December, 1916. They tell a plain story and an illuminating one. Since 1905 the cost of manufacture has increased 64%; since 1912, 32%; and between March and December, 1916, the increase was 26%.

Ray of Sunshine in Gloom

In the midst of all this gloom of high prices for footwear there are a few rays of sunshine perceptible. There is today, for instance, better service in the manufacture, distribution and sale of footwear than ever before, all along the line from factory to retail shop.

In facing an uncomfortable situation it is always consoling to be able to say that it might have been worse. That consolation exists in the case of the increasing cost of footwear, for there is one item in the manufacturing cost that has not increased. For this a due amount of thanksgiving and remembrance should be recorded. And, curiously enough, this lone cost item which has not increased is the very one which by most people is thought to be chiefly responsible for the jump in shoes prices—the royalty or shoe machinery expense.

While carefully compiled tables of the various items of manufacturing costs over a series of years show an increase of 64 per cent. in the cost of medium grade shoes, there is one solitary cost item which has not changed—the shoe machinery cost as shown by the royalty paid by the manufacturer. This has remained undisturbed during the years of higher prices at a maximum of less than six cents per pair and in most cases is much less, an almost insignificant percentage of the total cost of a pair of shoes which runs into dollars.

By reference to the accompanying table, it is to be noted that in the midst of increases in costs ranging from 16% to 111% in the different items, the royalty cost for the grade of shoe figured does not vary, but remains at five cents—the same today as in 1905.

Machinery Cost as it Was

There has been an impression more or less widespread that the required machinery cost has had much to do with the price of shoes. On the contrary, the conclusion is inevitable that with the maximum machinery cost constant at less than six cents a pair, rising prices are not in the least contributed to thereby, but indeed are lessened so long as the machinery cost remains constant. Indeed the machinery cost is the only item that seems to have behaved properly, to have remained consistently the same, without change, when everything else around it has been soaring.

A recent issue of a shoe trade paper has the following statement on this point:

"The human interest in shoe prices is greater today than ever before. But, no matter how high prices may be, the maximum shoe machinery cost to the manufacturer remains unchanged. It has been constant at less than six cents a pair since the organization of the United Shoe Machinery Company in 1899."

And it is indisputable, even in face of the higher prices, that the footwear made today has never been approached for variety and stylishness, for comfort, durability and from an artistic standpoint.

The firm of Tourigny & Marois have sent out for the year 1917 a splendidly-gotten up calendar, which is appreciated by every one who is fortunate enough to receive a copy.

WM. HOCKIN, SHOE DEALER OF WALLACEBURG, ONT., WHO WAS RE-ELECTED TO THE COUNCIL AT THE RECENT CONTEST IN THAT TOWN

THEODORE KING, OF KING BROS. CO., WHITEBY, THE NEWLY ELECTED VICE-CHAIRMAN OF TANNERS' SECTION OF THE TORONTO BOARD OF TRADE

J. H. HODGSON, SHOE DEALER OF HAMILTON, WHO WAS RE-ELECTED AS AN ALDERMAN AND IS ONCE MORE CHAIRMAN OF BOARD OF WORKS

SERVING AT COUNCIL BOARD

William Hockin, shoe retailer, of Wallaceburg, Ont., has been re-elected a member of the town council, and is chairman of the Charity Committee. He is not a stranger to municipal life, for previous to going to Wallaceburg, six years ago, he had the honor of serving the ratepayers of Dutton, Ont., in a public capacity. Mr. Hockin has met with much success in the shoe business in Wallaceburg. Before launching out on his own behalf he was associated for a quarter of a century with his brother in the T. Hockin Co., Limited, of Dutton. Mr. Hockin is a live wire in the trade, and makes good use of the advertising columns of the Wallaceburg newspapers, as well as of leaflets, booklets, etc. He believes in service, proper fitting, reliable goods and courteous treatment, all of which have helped him materially in building up a permanent and paying family trade.

HIS THIRD YEAR AS AN ALDERMAN

J. H. Hodgson, shoe retailer, Barton street east, Hamilton, was among the shoemen who were re-elected at the recent municipal contests in Ontario. Ald. Hodgson has been a member of the Hamilton city council for three years and has been appointed to the responsible position of chairman of the Board of Works for 1917. He holds the same post as last year. The Board of Works is the largest spending committee and its affairs have been ably supervised by the chairman, Mr. Hodgson has been in the shoe business in the Ambitious City for the past seven years and had met with encouraging success.

BOOT SHOP OR SHOE STORE—WHICH

"Do you call your shoe establishment a store or a shop? There is a certain punctilious party in a Western Ontario city who speaks of his enterprise as a 'store' and even takes the trouble to correct any caller when the term 'shop' is used. I had a long argument with him the other day, declared a traveler, as to whether it was proper to use the word store or shop, and I think I convinced him that shop was equally as appropriate and dignified a term as store. I notice that a number of footwear establishments are referring to their places as 'boot shops.' I like the term much better than store, but, of course, it is all a matter of choice. There is possibly as much difference between them as there is between a fiddle and a violin, a cellar and a basement, a side-board and a buffet, a hall and a vestibule, a bureau and a dresser. The latter term in each case sounds a little more aristocratic than the former. For myself, I prefer the term 'shop' to 'store.'"

NEARLY 1,000 GUESSES SENT IN

The guessing competition conducted by the Tetrault Shoe Manufacturing Co., Montreal, on the total sales of the firm for 1916, was a pronounced success. Much interest was aroused in the big event, and hundreds of replies were received from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

The Tetrault Shoe Manufacturing Co., who inaugurated this original contest, were amply rewarded for the results could not have been more satisfactory. They exceeded even the most sanguine hopes of the firm.

Nearly one thousand readers of the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL, declare the company, took part in the great guessing contest. This is a most remarkable evidence of the enthusiasm aroused, and the popularity of Tetrault's Goodyear Welts which has made the firm the largest exclusive producers of welts in the Dominion.

The total sales for 1916 were $2,002,094.54.

The first prize of $75 was captured by C. H. Ludlow, of Ludlow Bros., Brantford, whose estimate was $2,002,312.21. Mr. Ludlow, and the other winners of cash premiums, are to be congratulated on their good fortune. The result in many instances was very close and it took some days for the judges to complete their work.

The Prize Winners

- $75.00—1st, C. H. Ludlow, Brantford, of Ludlow Bros., Brantford, Ont., $2,002,312.21.
- $25.00—2nd, Abe. Mendelsohn, Montreal, of Regent Shoe Store, Montreal, $2,001,875.75.
- $15.00—3rd, M. F. Cartier, London, of Thorne Bros., London, Ont., $2,001,757.09.
- $10.00—4th, Melvin Midby, Lethbridge, care of A. Williamson, Lethbridge, Alta., $2,001,375.31.
- $5.00—5th, J. P. Kilgour, Winnipeg, of Kilgour, Rimer Co., Limited, Winnipeg, $2,001,254.07.

OWING to the high price of leather a well-known firm making infants' soft soles has decided to discontinue for the present at least the use of leather and will employ fabrics. Like leather, fabrics are getting dearer all the while and are hard to get, making it necessary for the firm to contract now in any of the desired lines for very large quantities. Straws such as this show which way the wind is blowing in the leather arena.

INCREASE OF OVER FORTY PER CENT.

"See here," remarked a leading jobber the other day, when discussing the ascending figure for footwear of all kinds, "in October last this boot was quoted to us by an eastern manufacturer, from whom we have bought for years, at $3.15 per pair, wholesale. What do you suppose the price is today? Just $4.55 per pair—a jump of $1.40 in three months. Mind you, this is not an all calf shoe for men. It is a single sole bal, on an English last, Goodyear welt, made of gum-metal side leather, with calf top and calf tip only."

IMITATION LEATHER IN ALL COLORS

Owing to the rapid demand for something to take the place of leather for tops, facings, trimmings and sock linings there are now being put on the market several colors in imitation sheep and side leathers, in grey, black, white, mahogany, brown and other shades. Among the firms turning attention to this line is Henry Gitterman & Co., 33 Spruce street, New York, who is represented in Canada by Ed. R. Lewis of Toronto. Imitation leather comes in all widths from 35 to 50 inches and is quoted from forty-five cents to two dollars a yard, the average price being around sixty-five cents f.o.b. point of shipment.

Mr. Lewis has also been appointed selling agent for fibre counters manufactured by Duclos & Payan, of St. Hyacinthe, Que. The company guarantee these counters to outwear the shoe and offer to pay for any shoes which have broken down and become a claim through the fault of the counter and without the shoe having given reasonable wear. A good demand is reported for their line of counters.

SOLE LEATHER INCREASES AVERAGE 63 PER CENT.

Reviewing the sole leather situation a leading Canadian manufacturer said this week, the demand for hides was still very strong, but one of the chief difficulties was in obtaining help. So many men had enlisted it was exceedingly difficult to replace those who had gone to the front even though wages had been greatly increased. "The result is," he said, "that we have to take on any and all sorts of help, green and inexperienced, and our working force is not half what it was before the war. We have to move men from one part of the tannery and work them in another, and shift them about as best we can. We are operating at only a little over half capacity, and if we could get the help we could market the limit of the product of our plants. We are turning down orders both home and foreign every day.

"Regarding what the scale of prices will be for the coming year I cannot tell. We are up against conditions such as the world has never seen before. To-day (January 10th) the price of No. 1 oak bends for manufacturing purposes is 87 cents, and for hemlock 83 cents. Just a year ago the figure for No. 1 oak bends was 54 cents, and for No. 1 hemlock 50 cents. The increase has been a trifle over 63 per cent. No. 1 oak sides are selling to-day at 60 cents, and No. 1 hemlock at 58 cents. Twelve months ago the figure for similar stock was 38½ cents for oak, and 35½ cents for hemlock, an increase of 63 1-3 per cent."

GETTING READY FOR THE NEW YEAR

One of the essentials for preparedness for 1917, is the securing of an accurate list of shoe manufacturers. The 1917 American Shoemaking Directory is now ready for distribution and contains a list of all the factories with the kinds of shoes made, capacities, names of superintendent and other valuable information. This book is extremely useful to those selling anything to shoe factories as well as to the buyer of shoes who wants a list of manufacturers. Many books have been gotten out in the past which contained jobbers, cobblers and names which are not actual manufacturers of shoes, so that this new, accurate directory is almost a necessity. The book is published by American Shoemaking Publishing Co., of Boston, and the price is two dollars.

THE WRONG WAY TO RUN SHOE FACTORY

Editor SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL:—

I have no great desire to rush into print, but your little story in the last issue by G. W. Brock, telling how easy it is to lose money in making shoes, gave me a violent desire to say something along the same lines. I have, unfortunately, been connected in the last fifteen years with several shoe factories that found it impossible to make any headway on the profit side. I understand the manufacture of shoes fairly well, and I was near enough connected with the manufacturing end to see their faults and try to remedy them, but not near enough to have my ideas carried out.

One little incident which came under my notice lately might be of interest. You may think it a small matter, but shoe manufacturing is made up of small details, which all have to be watched carefully. The other day I was looking over a bunch of shoe laces which had been used in men's samples; I was trying to mate up a pair to use myself, and out of ten laces I found eight different qualities, evidently made in different factories. This told me plainly that the man who did the buying, bought his laces from Tom, Dick and Harry, instead of having a regular contract with a reliable firm for so many gross of a standard quality per month for his grade of shoes. Being aware of the methods of this factory, the reasons were obvious. He bought one lot of laces from one house, when the bill came due he renewed for the amount and then bought some more from another house, and so on indefinitely—using Peter to pay Paul, and getting a reputation of being slow pay.

This factory had a violent desire to make an elaborate set of samples twice a year, comprising about eighty lines of six pairs of each kind, thereby requiring a large amount of sample lasts size seven, and the output of the factory was only 300 pairs a day at the utmost. I venture to say, the actual extra cost of making, selecting of leather, extra time, and the selling of these samples at the end of the season, with the usual discount which is given on samples, would entail a net loss of at least $2,000 a year, which would be a fair dividend on a capital of $20,000.

I could go much further with details of this kind, but the above two mentioned (being the largest and the smallest) will suffice for this article.

Then take the item of overhead charges; it is always about double what it should be on factories producing from 250 to 500 pairs per day. The selling end is generally very poorly handled, and the manager who is responsible tries to make it up by putting in an inferior quality of stock, and skinning the shoe out as the saying goes, instead of making a standard quality to follow the sample. I knew one manufacturer who contracted for a certain quantity of shoes at a certain price, which about cleared cost; then he thought he would create a profit by taking about ten cents out of the quality of the shoe. He shipped one thousand pairs of these, and of course had them returned. Before he got those shoes sold to stay sold, and got the money for them, they showed a net loss to the factory of over 30 cents a pair. This is one incident of the kind and I have known of many.

In conclusion, I may say that I think the shoe manufacturing game is a hard one out of which to bring a profit. There is a right way and a wrong way to run a factory. If you run it the wrong way you lose money fast, if you run it the right way you make money, but very slowly.

Yours truly,
SHOEOILIGER.

CONDITIONS ABSOLUTELY BEYOND CONTROL

"We read with interest the observations of a Boston leather man on what makes the prices of fine upper leather higher, and his assertion that we are facing a no raw stock situation," says the Breithaupt Leather Co., Limited, of Kitchener, Ont. "We would say that his estimate of the situation is based on sound reasoning. The fact that our own government has urged stock growers to conserve their growing stock, even though at pecuniary loss and to make special efforts to increase production, demonstrates the further fact that those in a position to know consider the situation, and the future outlook serious so far as all kinds of leather raw stock is concerned. Whether the article in question is too strong or not strong enough remains to be seen. It is, nevertheless, worthy of serious consideration, and consumers will be well advised in protecting themselves to as great an extent as possible. Our own views were recently expressed as follows, and we have no reason to change them. As the cost of hides and tanning materials have advanced far beyond levels anticipated, we are compelled to make all prices subject to change without notice. We cannot hold open any offers under present conditions. We are desirous of making all advances as light as possible, and we will do our utmost to take care of our customers, but we wish our friends in the trade to fully realize the seriousness of the situation, and would suggest that they govern themselves accordingly in disposing of their own product. These steps are necessary because conditions have reached a point where they are absolutely beyond our control."

FREE SAMPLES OF BLACK OIL DYE

The Lion Polish Co., Limited, 525 King street west, Hamilton, report a splendid demand for their Lion Black Oil Dye. This dye, which has no disagreeable odor when used, is, as is well known to the trade, used for dyeing faded or soiled tan shoes black. Such shoes are made a beautiful black by application of this preparation, which is put up in any desired quantity from a very small to a gallon can. Any retailer who forwards his name to the company will be sent a free sample of the Lion Black Oil Dye which the manufacturers state is the best on the market today.

AMONG THE SHOE MEN.

F. W. Knowlton, of Montreal, general manager of the United Shoe Machinery Co., of Canada, spent a few days during the past week in Toronto, London and other points calling upon the shoe factories.

G. G. Parker, of Montreal, representing the Boston Last Co., Richmond, Que., was in Toronto last week on business.

A. K. Mihell, of Calgary, Alta., was in Toronto lately paying calls upon several members of the trade.

George E. Boulter, Toronto, has returned from a business visit to New York, Boston and other shoe centres in the Eastern States.

Both wholesale and retail shoe men report that while there was a lively demand for hockey boots of all kinds before the holiday season, requisitions have of late dropped off considerably. This is caused by the fact that in many of the smaller towns and cities, owing to enlistments of so many young men for overseas service, there are no hockey clubs and many rinks, which were open last winter, are closed this season.

D. D. Hawthorne, wholesale shoes, Toronto, was in Montreal and Quebec last week on a business trip.

The annual convention of the various branch managers and heads of departments of Ames-Holden-McCready, Limited, will be held in Montreal starting February 5th.

M. H. Shibley, of Toronto, who represents the Brown Shoe Co., of St. Louis, Mo., has returned from a successful convention of the company's salesmen. There was a large attendance and a most enjoyable banquet was one of the features of the enthusiastic gathering.

It is rumored that the Canadian Consolidated Rubber Co., Montreal, intend removing their large general offices up town to a more central location and that negotiations are pending for a large and well appointed building right in the heart of Canada's commercial metropolis.

W. F. Martin, of the Kingsbury Footwear Co., Montreal, spent a few days in Toronto, recently, calling upon the trade.

S. F. Lawther, representing the Anglo-Canadian Leather Co., Toronto, is spending a few days on business among the shoe factories of the Maritime Provinces and Quebec.

J. J. Kilgour, of the Kilgour, Rimer Co., Winnipeg, was in Toronto and Montreal and Quebec, during the past few days on business.

L. C. Van Geel, of the Tillsonburg Shoe Co., Tillsonburg, was in Toronto recently on a business trip.

Col. J. W. Miller, the veteran military man and shoe merchant of Peterborough, Ont., who has been a member of the Board of Education in that city for many years, has been elected Chairman of the Finance Committee of the Board for the ensuing term.

The Regal Boot Shop, 556 St. Catherine street west, Montreal, is holding a removal sale previous to occupying new and enlarged quarters at 415 St. Catherine street west, which are now being fitted up in splendid style with every modern appointment and convenience.

It is said that Endicott, Johnson & Co., the world's largest shoe manufacturers, did a gross business in 1916 of approximately $60,000,000, against some $50,000,000 in 1915. The present shoe output of the company is about 75,000 pairs a day, and it is planned ultimately to double this production. About $1,000,000 is shortly to be expended upon further plant extensions.

A. L. Johnson, of the A. L. Johnson Shoe Co., Montreal, spent a few days in Toronto, recently, calling upon the trade.

C. J. Howe has been appointed superintendent of the Regal Shoe Company's factory, Toronto, and entered upon his new duties. He is a former superintendent of Ames-Holden-McCready, No. 1 factory, Montreal, and has had a wide experience and thorough insight in all branches in several of the foremost plants in both the United States and Canada.

One of the most beautiful show windows ever seen in Ridgeway, Ont., was at Dunkley's shoe store, during the recent holiday season. It was splendidly designed and unique in make up.

The Montreal Box Toe and Heel Co., manufacturers of high grade box toes and heels of all kinds, has owing to the great increase in its business taken the whole building at 321 Aird avenue, Maisonneuve. The company of which J. E. Dupre is the progressive proprietor, was established in 1904, and now has some 20,000 square feet of space devoted to the heel business.

The Quebec Shoe Co., Winnipeg, recently assigned to the Traders' Trust Co. of that city.

The White Shoe Co., Limited, 48 York street, Toronto, has been federally incorporated with a capital stock of one hundred and fifty thousand dollars. The company is empowered to buy, sell and deal in shoes and rubbers. The incorporators are: Hugh White, R. B. Gravlin, T. W. Scott, George Cessford, and F. W. Scott, all of Toronto. A few years ago the firm was known as Garside & White. When Mr. Garside retired in 1912, Mr. White, who had been associated with him for a long period, took over the interest of his partner and the White Shoe Co. was formed to do a wholesale business. The name is now the White Shoe Co., Limited. All the members of the organization have been in the service of the firm for many years.

G. H. Ansley, of the Perth Shoe Co., Limited, Perth, Ont., has returned after spending two weeks on a trip to Boston, New York, Rochester and other shoe centres. He says that there does not appear to be any let up in the price of raw materials, and he found that many factories on the other side are featuring cloth tops quite extensively. The company are getting out their immediate spring and fall set of samples, together now, and so far as they can figure there will be even higher tops on some lines, particularly cloth.

On the ground that it was insufficiently signed the civic finance committee declined to receive a petition from a number of Vancouver shoemakers in favor of putting the business under the early-closing regulations.

A. J. Gahagan, shoe dealer, of Woodstock, Ont., who has been in business in that city for several years was elected a member of the city council at the recent municipal elections.

Lieut. Daryl G. Peters, son of F. A. Peters, president of the firm of C. H. Peters & Sons, Limited, tanners, St. John, has received a commission in the 236th Battalion. Lieutenant Peters returned from France some few weeks ago, after having served for more than a year in the ranks of a Canadian unit. It will be recalled that he won the military medal for conspicuous gallantry while in action.

A conference of the travelers of Daoust, Lalonde & Co., Montreal, was held recently, when all the members of the staff were present and spent a most profitable two day session discussing plans and styles for the coming season. All departments of the plant and also the fine large tannery of the company were inspected and a dinner tendered the boys by the president of the company, Mr. Joseph Daoust. M.

C. Mullarky is now assistant superintendent of the plant which is under the direction of Louis Daoust. Mr. Mullarky was for many years associated with the W. A. Marsh Co., Quebec, and will look after the fine goods of the company. Daoust, Lalonde & Co., have issued a very handsome calendar for 1917 in which pictures of their plant are shown, and also the photographs of the men on the road and others.

The idea of taking around a sample case with a real "life size" shoe is being done away with by many up-to-date manufacturers. The writer was shown recently some miniature samples which were made perfect in every detail just the same as if it had been a 4½B. When completed a buyer gets the same effect and knows just how the shoes will look when made up into an order. The combination leathers are used and the miniature samples are making a great hit. Mr. Sullivan of the Lynn Shoe Co., Lynn, said that he booked an order recently for $10,000 worth of shoes on his miniature samples. It is certainly a practical idea and with the high cost of all materials, the manufacturer is able to save a great deal of his materials on samples and at the same time give his buyers the desired effect.

John A. Adams, of the Aero-ped Manufacturing Co., 30 Adelaide st. east, Toronto, has returned from an extended business trip to New York and Boston, where he completed arrangements for the handling of Aero-peds by a number of leading wholesalers on the other side of the line. For the present Aero-peds will continue to be made in Canada, but Mr. Adams hopes that the business which is developing nicely will necessitate starting a similar industry across the border in the near future.

W. L. Douglas, of Brockton, Mass., former governor of Massachusetts, spending the winter in Florida, says he has discovered a satisfactory substitute for leather, which can be manufactured much cheaper than leather. He refused to divulge the nature of his discovery, but declared that experiments show conclusively it can be made into serviceable shoes to retail at not more than $3 a pair. Mr. Douglas predicted still higher prices for leather, and declared this would cause much suffering among the poor. He said there is as much leather produced as formerly, but the consumption has been greatly increased by automobile upholstery and as shoes for the great European armies. This and disorganized transportation will cause higher prices.

The merchants of Vancouver have formed an organization to fight the Saturday half holiday, for the remainder of the year, and a petition has been circulated setting forth the fact that the Saturday half holiday, as in force at the present time is a detriment to the city, but that the merchants would favor a Saturday half holiday during the summer months. Among the members of the campaign committee who will do considerable newspaper advertising against the Saturday half holiday all the year round is Geo. B. Johnston, of Johnston's Big Shoe House, Vancouver.

N. R. Feltes, Vice-President and General Manager, of Ames-Holden-McCready, Limited, Montreal, has gone south to spend a few weeks.

J. W. Leslie and N. S. Duffield, of Hamilton, were in Montreal and Quebec last week on business.

John J. Tilt, of Toronto, who for the past two years has been an efficient member of the traveling staff of the Brandon Shoe Co., Limited, of Brantford, Ont., has taken an important position with the T. Eaton Co. He is now the assistant manager of the men's shoe section, and enjoying the work of his new post. Previous to going on the road, Mr. Tilt was for a considerable time with the T. Eaton Co. He feels that his selling experience throughout the Western provinces, which he covered from coast to coast, has given him a wider grasp and more intimate insight into the footwear line than he could otherwise have obtained.

Central Leather Co. has taken another big order for sole leather for foreign account. As high as $11,000,000 has been mentioned as the amount involved in this transaction, but no confirmation is obtainable. It goes without saying that an order for anything like that amount of leather could only be taken for future shipments, as such a quantity is not obtainable for nearby delivery. Interests identified with the big leather company feel confident of the strength of the leather situation and of the future, whether or not peace eventuates in the near future. The fundamental basis of this position rests in the world hide situation. Before the war, Germany and Austria, combined, produced more sole leather than the United States. But since the outbreak of the war Germany has been unable to get adequate supplies of hides, and it is figured by competent authorities that when peace comes Germany and Austria will want 4,000,000 to 5,000,000 hides to get their tanneries in operation.

W. C. Myers, Ontario representative of La Parisienne Shoe Co., Montreal, spent a few days in that city recently on business.

Thomas Goode, a widely known citizen of Niagara Falls, Ont., died at his home there recently. He was in his eighty-seventh year, and carried on a shoe business up to a few days before his death. He leaves a widow and eight children. Mr. Goode was born in Huntingdonshire, England, and came to Canada about sixty years ago.

NEWSY HAPPENINGS FROM QUEBEC

Edgar Clement, tanner, of Quebec, was recently in Boston on a business trip.

A. L. Johnson, of the A. L. Johnson Co., Montreal, was in Quebec lately on a business trip.

J. R. Roche, representing Parker-Irwin, Limited, Montreal, was in Quebec some days ago on business.

In an Industrial Bowling Match held some days ago in Quebec, the Telegraph team was beaten by the Wm. A. Marsh team, and the John Ritchie team beat the B. Houde team.

Edouard Ruel, shoe case manufacturer, of Lauzon, died suddenly last month at the age of sixty-two years.

American Shoe Machinery Co. of St. Louis, Mo., have sent out a handsome souvenir to their customers, in the shape of a nice metal paper holder.

Quebec shoe manufacturers are busy and are receiving orders every day. During the week preceding Christmas, it is reported that their sales were higher than at any similar period in the past. They also report that collections are good. Nearly all the shoe manufacturers closed their factories for a week to take stock, and to give the employees a holiday, during the week preceding Christmas.

Lachance & Tanguay, shoe manufacturers, Quebec, have completed the installation of a new modern sprinkler system in their factory which will materially reduce their insurance rate.

of the case—leather is unlike many other raw materials in that it is really a by-product, and as such is subject to the whims of the producer, in other words, the cattle raiser. Cattle raising as a profession has fallen into the discard as is shown by the statistics and the present European conflict involving practically every nation, directly or indirectly, has served to make worse the situation already bad. The shortage of leather cannot be overcome in six months or even a year, because no synthetic substance has been discovered to replace the main material used in the construction of high grade shoes in the class of a product (the output of which is controlled entirely by the producer).

Consumers Attitude on High Prices

"We should take into consideration the consumers' attitude in the matter, and I think that attitude is sufficiently plastic (and is liable to become more so) to enable you to explain, with good results, that high prices are due not only to the shortage of leather and of all other materials entering into the making of shoes but also to the demands of the consumer himself (and herself) for styles and leathers, the use of which are contrary to the wishes of the conscientious manufacturer and inconsistent with the present principles of economical shoemaking.

"No one would like to sell shoes at half the present prices, better than I. Making shoes, not boosting prices, is my hobby and life-work, and in the distribution of Invictus Shoes I feel that you are actuated by motives similar to mine, otherwise you would not be handling Invictus. On this common ground I am sure we can go ahead unfalteringly into the months of the year 1917. There has never been a time when business did not adjust itself to the conditions affecting it. There has never been a country which offered so many possibilities as Canada, and there has never been a people with better facilities with which to develop advantageously such possibilities than have we Canadians.

"I extend, in all sincerity, the hand of fellowship to you at this time and in conclusion may I hope that you will be inspired by the thought which has helped me, and which has been so aptly expressed by W. E. Henley in his famous poem 'Invictus.'"

It matters not how strait the gate,
How charged with punishment the scroll,
I am the master of my fate,
I am the captain of my soul."

consideration the carrying of the heavy stocks of raw materials mentioned. Another feature which makes for the efficiency of the business is that since the company was taken over, short of three years ago, new plant to the value of £7,300 has been added, so taking the business altogether, it is in a more healthy condition to-day than ever before. Since the formation of the present company the ordinary shareholders have received a dividend of 10 per cent., and your directors are gratified to know that this year's result will enable the same amount to be paid, besides carrying forward the sum of £1,249 3s. 8d.

You will notice that there has been put aside for foremen's bonus £1,500. Your directors feel that the giving of a bonus to all foremen and assistant foremen, as well as to the general staff, has been a very good move, and one would like to add here that the goodwill and harmony existing between directors and general staff, as well as all our employees, has, no doubt had a good effect on the year's working, for wherever there is unity of purpose, coupled with ability, success is sure to follow.

D. Guihan, foreman of the stock room of Underhills, Limited, No. 2 Factory, at Barrie, Ont., was pleasantly surprised by R. Underhill, on New Year's Day, with a cheque for $100 in recognition of his progressive management and ability. Mr. Guihan is regarded among the shoe trade as one of the best sole leather men in the country, and his long experience serves him well on all grades of work. He has been employed by several leading shoe manufacturers and cut sole houses in the Dominion.

An extra provincial license has been granted E. T. Wright & Co., Inc., shoe manufacturers, to carry on business in Ontario and to invest $125,000 in operations in the province. The company has been successfully operating for four years in St. Thomas, Ont.

The assets of E. P. Vaillancourt, shoe maker and saddler, of Bonaventure, Que., have been sold.

J. G. Maxwell, shoe dealer, of Swift Current, Sask., has sold out.

A charter has been granted to the Ajax Rubber Co., of Canada, Limited, with a capital stock of one million dollars. Among the incorporators are Wm. D. Hamilton, R. S. Gilpin, J. F. Selby, G. W. Miller and others of Toronto. The company are empowered to manufacture and deal in rubber and rubber goods of every kind and in all articles composed wholly or in part of rubber.

H. Dallas, Toronto, who has been confined to his home a few days with illness, is able to be around again.

J. A. McLaren, of McLaren & Dallas, Toronto, and Hugh White, of the White Shoe Co., Toronto, are spending a few days calling upon the trade in Montreal and Quebec.

J. C. Moreau, western Canada representative of Blachford, Davies & Co., Toronto, has returned from an extended selling trip throughout the Western Provinces and reports business as greatly improving.

W. A. Moyer, who has been for some time on the staff of the Ryan-Devlin shoe store, Winnipeg, has formed the Moyer Shoe Co., and will open out with a general retail stock of footwear at 266 Portage avenue, Winnipeg.

Among the visitors from the West calling upon the Toronto and Montreal trade during the past few days were J. Bercuson, of Calgary; H. Cohen, of Winnipeg, J. A. Shelmitsky, Winnipeg, and F. Henderson, of Vancouver.

J. M. Clark, Teeswater, Ont., was in Toronto this week calling upon the members of the shoe trade.

In the semi-annual bowling contest at five pins held between the travelers of the White Shoe Co., Toronto, and the warehouse and office staff, the latter won easily each of the three games played. The scores were as follows:—Travelers: E. L. Williamson, 117, 147, 85; L. Fingland, 125, 96, 132; H. Braun, 124, 131, 124; E. A. Edmonds, 159, 104, 71; O. Braun, 97, 111, 112. Warehouse and office: R. B. Gravlin, 151, 100, 83; C. McFarlane, 147, 153, 182; Geo. Cessford, 141, 131, 104; A. Reeve, 128, 100, 134; A. Bawden, 164, 115, 142.

John C. Breithaupt, secretary of the Breithaupt Leather Co., Limited, Kitchener, has been re-appointed chairman of the city water commission, for the seventeenth term. This is a long and honorable record of service, and Mr. Breithaupt's many friends in the trade will extend hearty congratulations.

THE interior of Batstone's new shoe store on McNab St., Hamilton. At the rear there is a balcony with special fitting room for ladies.

HAS SPECIAL FITTING ROOM FOR LADIES

"I consider it a good tip for all shoe clerks to take a personal interest in their customers," remarked W. L. Batstone, 19 McNab street north, Hamilton, Ont., who has now been in the shoe business for himself for several months. An illustration of the interior of his well equipped store is presented on this page. Mr. Batstone, who has had some twenty-five years' experience in the footwear game, worked in the district in which he is now located for seven years, and being well-known and well thought of, has been rewarded with a splendid patronage which is rapidly growing.

One feature of his establishment is that at the rear there is a balcony which he has converted into a ladies' fitting room for all colored high-cut shoes. This is a feature which is greatly appreciated. The apartment is comfortable and cosy. Mr. Batstone states that the fair sex have made this convenience known and that when ladies enter they will walk straight for the balcony as it is private, and a saleslady is there to attend to their wants. Mr. Batstone carries a well assorted stock and his motto is reliable goods, proper fitting and prompt and efficient service.

Owing to the constant increase in business the Factory Shoe Store, of St. Catharines, has found it advisable to increase their store accommodation and have leased premises adjoining for a period of five years. This will permit of a much larger and more complete stock and better display of goods.

The Eureka Shoe Co., of Papineau Avenue, Montreal, have made arrangements to remove to Three Rivers, P.Q. A new incorporated company is being formed with a capital of $100,000. A portion of a new municipal factory in Three Rivers has been rented, giving sufficient room to allow four times present capacity.

Among those who attended the splendid styles show at the Powers' Hotel in Rochester, N.Y., during the past week, were Wm. Chamberlain and W. G. Fallon, of Getty and Scott, Limited, Galt, Ont.; H. B. McGee and Alf. Minister, of the Minister, Myles Shoe Co., Toronto; A. Levy, Toronto, and others.

The Walk-Over Boot Shop, Yonge street, Toronto, are converting the basement of their attractive store into a well-equipped and admirably fitted up children's department. Heretofore only men's and women's lines have been handled, but now juvenile footwear will be given special attention in all its branches.

Fred. Perry, Toronto, representing the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Co., has been in Winnipeg for the past few weeks calling upon the shoe repair trade of that city in the interest of Neolin, and Wing Foot Rubber Heels, and reports business as brisk.

The Cut Rate American Shoe Store, Winnipeg, has moved to Main street in that city, taking over the old Harvard Fur Co.'s stand recently vacated by Holt, Renfrew & Co.

The staff of the Kilgour, Rimer Co., Winnipeg, wholesale shoes, were all kindly remembered at the end of the year by a substantial bonus. Addresses were delivered by J. J. Kilgour, J. P. Kilgour and A. K. Ferguson, while responses were made by George Wheeler, manager of the Findings Department; W. Patterson, one of the veteran travelers of the West, and others, while Thomas Gillis related some amusing anecdotes. President Kilgour entertained the staff at his comfortable home before leaving for the East on a business trip. He was accompanied by his son, Frank, who will take an examination in the aviation course at Ottawa, while away.

The annual meeting of the Toronto Shoe Retailers' Association will be held in the Temple Building, Toronto, on Thursday, January 18, at ten o'clock in the morning. A full attendance is requested as officers for the coming year will be elected and other important matters come up for consideration.

Montreal shoe factories are recovering from their holiday quietness and say that many retailers are inquiring for goods. Leather prices are well maintained in spite of the temporary tranquillity of the market and everybody expects a resumption of activity similar to October and November, although perhaps not quite so feverish. The seasonable weather made the rubber business so active that manufacturers and jobbers had a task to keep up with the demand. Shipping facilities were hampered by the shortage of freight accommodation.

Elmer Poyer, manager of the Canadian Arrowsmith Manufacturing Co., Niagara Falls, Ont., has returned after spending a pleasant holiday at his home in Newark, N.J.

The Palmer-McLellan Shoepack Co., of Fredericton, N.B., have adopted the use of a chrome tanned larrigan leather that is absolutely waterproof. While the goods may cost a trifle more than the ordinary oil tanned leather, it has proved to give superior results in wear and waterproof qualities.

The Davis Leather Co., Limited, of Newmarket, Ont., have recently introduced two new lines which they are manufacturing in addition to their widely known brands of calf leather. These brands are Black Diamond Veal, and Diamond Mat Veal. The former has all the earmarks of gun metal calf and is its equal in texture, lustre and durability, while the latter is a perfect substitute for matt calf, having the full appearance, feel and wear of a genuine matt calf in the shoe. The firm have received many applications for samples and, in view of the present high prices for footwear and all lines of leather, the new brands have been introduced as tending toward economy in the production of shoes.

Three schools for returned soldiers will shortly be established in Saskatoon where the entire Y.M.C.A. building will be required. The schools will be shoe repairing, telegraphy and automobile repairing and operation. H. W. Hewitt, who is the vocational officer of the Military Hospitals Commission, has the matter in hand.

Gutta Percha and Rubber Limited, Toronto, have donated $5,000, to endow a bed in the Toronto General Hospital in memory of the late Captain Trumbull Warren, 15th Toronto Highland Battalion, who fell in action on April 20th, 1915. Captain Warren was president of the Gutta Percha and Rubber, and son of Mrs. H. D. Warren, "Red Gables," Wellesley street. The bed will be placed in the male surgical ward, and will likely be used for patients who have undergone amputation operation. The plate has already been made for the bed.

Numerous were the congratulations and letters sent to Mr. and Mrs. Alfred W. Donovan, who recently celebrated their silver wedding. They enjoyed a trip to New York, Philadelphia, Atlantic City and Washington. Mr. Donovan is widely known for his connection with the shoe trade, having been associated in that business since a boy. Mr. Donovan is president of the E. T. Wright Co., of Rockland, Mass., but started with the concern as stitching room foreman. He is a member of many of the shoe clubs and organizations affiliated with the shoe trade. E. E. Donovan, who is at the head of the Canadian plant of E. T. Wright & Co., St. Thomas, Ont., is a brother.

A serious breakdown happened at the Bainton Bros. Tannery, Blyth, Ont., when in some unaccountable way the governor belt on the engine broke, causing the engine to run away, and as there was no person in the engine room at the time, it caused considerable damage before it stopped. The flywheel on the engine broke and one part of it, which weighed a few hundred pounds went sailing to the ceiling and roof of the building and travelled about 100 yards from the tannery, while another piece went through the cement wall.

James McCormick and Malcolm Johnson, former shoe dealers of St. Thomas, who were bought out by Cloos and Wilson, have left for Rochester, Minn., where Mr. McCormick will enter the Mayo Brothers' hospital for treatment. Mr. McCormick has been ill for some time. Messrs. McCormick and Johnson will not return to St. Thomas, but will take up their abode in some climate more suited to Mr. McCormick's health.

The request of the Calgary boot and shoe dealers for a uniform closing by-law was approved by the legislative committee, and a by-law will be submitted to the city council.

James Agnew, formerly owner of the Agnew shoe store, Winnipeg, which was damaged by fire recently, states that he disposed of his interest in the store on December 11th.

Harry B. Snook, of the firm of J. J. Snook & Co., harness and leather dealers, died at Truro, N.S., recently.

The employes of the Merchants Rubber Co., of Kitchener, were handed comfortable bonus checks in their pay envelopes recently. The company distributed in all $3,648.37. The bonuses were given on the basis of percentage on wages. The amounts given were not for the entire year but merely for the quarter of June, July and August.

ADVERTISES "BLACK SHOES FOR ECONOMY"

The following advertisement recently appeared in the Boston daily press. While a New York store of equal prominence links style and cloth tops, the Boston firm recommend cloth for economy:

"Buy practical shoes to get around the high cost of living.

"Buy heavy sole (Goodyear welt) shoes instead of thin turned soles and get longer wear. Buy black shoes, buy cloth-top shoes, buy lower-cut shoes to get the most for your money. The time has come, we believe, to consider shoe expenditures very carefully. If you want very high boots made of delicate kidskins, you will have to pay extremely high prices, and the more they are wanted, the higher will the prices go. We have such shoes but we do not advise their purchase. We do advise the purchase of serviceable shoes at $5 to $8.

"Buy 7 inch boots and save a dollar over 8 or 9 inch boots. Buy practical leather-heel boots and save 50 cents or $1 over the cost of covered heels. Buy fancy shoes with cloth-top and save from $2 to $7. Buy black shoes for economy."

KID AND CLOTH LARGELY USED

A large department store of New York, had an advertisement in the newspapers of the Metropolis, regarding the advance style of a certain trade marked shoe. They illustrate a circular-foxed vamp lace boot thus described: High cut boot of patent or dull leather, quarters and heels of pearl gray suede. This boot is high-arched, with narrow toes and 2¼-inch Louis XV. heels. The same model can be obtained in pearl gray suede, patent leather, with white washable kid tops, and in all black glaze kidskins. Pair, $10 to $14. This announcement followed:

"Cloth top boots to be in vogue this spring. Many handsome models are already in stock: patent leather boots with pearl gray or white cloth tops; dull black kid boots with pearl gray or white cloth tops; African brown kidskin boots with cloth tops to match; African brown kidskin boots with white cloth tops; tan Russian calf boots with cloth tops to match."

This advertisement confirms the different news items recently printed concerning an increased use of cloth for spring shoes. It is quite certain that more cloth top boots will be sold to consumers during the spring months, but it is yet too early to predict that the public will favor cloth as quickly and largely as it adopted kid two years ago.

CLOTH TOPS ON THE BEST LINES

Cloth is being talked to a great extent for uppers but retailers are a little shaky, wondering whether or not it will be popular. If leather wasn't to be had, cloth sure would be popular, but as long as the manufacturers continue to scrape up enough leather to make the eight and nine-inch boots, milady will have nothing else, says a leading authority. However, many of the high-class manufacturers are turning out samples of their very best boots with a cloth top, and if the prices is made attractive and much lower than the kid boot, there is no doubt but what the shoe will be popular, and should sell from $1.50 to $2 cheaper at least.

Black glazed kid is having a big run with gun metal next and patent leather following. For low cuts the dull kid predominates. One neat pump recently shown had a crimped vamp, a small little bow, a light welt sole, and leather Louis heel. These are being made up in black calf, tan or white calf, kid or buck. Boots with fancy buck and kid tops are good sellers.

In the new lasts now being used the vamps are ever so much longer than before, now being 3½ inches. The "long" vamp of a few seasons ago, now looks very short in comparison. Shoes are being made lighter than ever before and the edges trimmed so close that they nearly all resemble the turn shoe. A heavy shoe is not to be considered by milady, a light shoe, the lighter the better, is wanted, with no thought of durability, however.

HAD BIGGEST YEAR'S BUSINESS

The A. W. Ault Co., Limited, Ottawa, Ont., have just closed their year's business for 1916, and had the biggest year since their formation. Twenty-one years ago the firm of Poaps & Ault started in business at Ottawa with a capital of $10,000.00. Their first year's sales were $22,000. A few years later A. W. Ault bought out the interest of J. V. Poaps and the A. W. Ault Co., was formed. Since that time there has been an increase of shipments from a few thousand to almost half a million in 1916.

The firm has five travelers and the territory covered is only the Eastern and Northern part of the Province of Ontario, and the short line to Montreal in the Province of Quebec. The salesmen are: W. T. Martin, who covers the

OTTAWA ONT.

Cobalt district and the Soo branch; Joe Tucker, the Ottawa Valley and Gatineau districts; Willis Fulton, the St. Lawrence and between Ottawa and the border; George Marion the short line to Montreal, and Sam Bell the City of Ottawa.

In the fall of 1914, Mr. A. W. Ault, who passed away a few weeks ago, retired from active management of the company, his son, Lloyd, and Mr. L. C. Wilson were appointed to the joint management of the company. Mr. Lloyd Ault started the shoe game seven years ago at the bottom of the ladder, juggling cases and working through each branch until 1913, he became city salesman, but owing to his father's illness he assisted in the buying until 1915, when he took over the supervision of the warehouse, the sales management and the buying.

Mr. Upton, his stock clerk, has been on the job every minute for eight years, and the fact that the stock was turned over four times in 1916, and that at stock taking there was only a fifth of one per cent. of ends of lines and jobs speaks well for his stock keeping and Mr. Ault's buying. One or the other takes a trip each month to the shoe centres so as to be in constant touch with the leather situation.

Mr. L. C. Wilson, who is co-manager with Mr. Ault, has been with the firm since its inception, and is doing the financing and is high mogul of the purse strings. A year so successful and profitable as 1916 for the A. W. Ault Co., speaks well for the efforts of Mr. Lloyd Ault and Mr. Laird Wilson in their new role of joint management.

SEVEN HUNDRED RUBBER MEN DINE

The seventeenth annual banquet of the Rubber Club of America was held in New York in the grand ball room of the Waldorf-Astoria on January 8th, and was a brilliant function. The guests numbered seven hundred, and there were several Canadians present who report having had a splendid time. H. S. Firestone of the Firestone Tire and Rubber Co., of Akron, Ohio, president of the Club, ably presided, and among the talented array of speakers were: Hon. W. H. Taft, former President of the United States; Frank A. Vanderlip, President of the National City Bank, New York; Col. S. P. Colt, President of the United States Rubber Co., and Right Rev. Frank Dumoulin, Coadjutor Bishop of Ohio, who was the orator of the evening and aroused much enthusiasm by his eloquent address.

It was decided to change the name of the club to the Rubber Association of America. Among those in attendance from Canada were: T. H. Rieder, R. E. Jamieson, and J. M. S. Carroll, of the Canadian Consolidated Rubber Co., Montreal; W. H. Miner, of the Miner Rubber Co., Granby; C. N. Candee, W. H. Galt and Wm. Seward, of the Gutta Percha and Rubber Limited, Toronto; R. F. Foote, of the Independent Rubber Co., Merritton, and others. Rev. Dr. Dumoulin is a former Canadian, his father being the late Bishop of Niagara Diocese who for many years was in charge of St. James' Cathedral, Toronto. His son has inherited all the gifts and popularity of his illustrious sire.

"I do not know where prices are going to terminate in the shoe line and the figures which some of the Eastern manufacturers are asking are appalling," remarked a leading wholesale merchant who has returned after spending some time sizing up the situation. "I did very little buying I can tell you. I will not pay present quotations on any more lines than I can possibly help. I prefer to get along with what I have and do less business than load up with a heavy lot of goods on the new basis. I will do less trade, no doubt, but I will take chances. On orders which I placed some time ago, I have had some firms write asking that I allow them from sixty-five to ninety cents a pair more as they cannot make the goods at the prices furnished, without big losses. Of course, I am not granting their urgent requests, and permit them to cancel their consignments in some cases, before I will meet the new schedule. Why here, for instance, is a line of children's McKays, the order being taken in October. I am requested to pay from fifty to seventy cents more for the goods, and the order is only partially filled. What is one going to about it? Contracts and orders do not appear to be worth in many instances the paper they are written on to-day, and prices charged at the factories are higher in several cases than we are getting here for the goods from the retailer. I really cannot tell where the present state of things is going to end, but I will plod along, and go very gingerly on purchasing. Fortunately I am well provided with stock for some months, and after that what? There is no use in crossing a bridge until you come to it."

WHY FELT SHOE PRICES HAVE JUMPED

Speaking of the increased cost in felt footwear for the coming season, a leading member of the trade said: "I know that the increase which, in some cases, amounts to forty per cent., but which on the whole will not average over twenty-five per cent., seems excessive at first glance. There is this to be remembered that the advance has been made all at once, and prices are fixed by us for many months ahead. It is not the same with us as with the makers of leather footwear who jump figures fifteen cents this week and then another ten cents next week and follow this up with another increase of twenty cents a couple of weeks later, etc., which spreads the raise over several weeks. Our quotations have not been elevated gradually and, when putting them into effect all at once, they appear to be very heavy, when as a matter of course, they are not yet what they should be taking into account the increased figure for wool, its great scarcity and other difficulties. Labor has been a vital factor to overcome in our diminished output and slow deliveries. Look at the prices on the English market for wool if you want some idea of how things are today. The best wool is practically a dollar a pound and only a few thousand bales offering daily on which bidding is brisk. The highest advance in our prices has been on men's and women's dongola vamp shoes, some of the men's lines having gone up a dollar per pair, but this is occasioned by the abnormal figure for kid leather about which the trade in general is familiar. The position of the felt footwear manufacturer today with the shortage of wool, dyes and leather supplies is anything but a rosy one and we are doing our best, under difficult conditions, to overcome every obstacle and all orders should be placed early."

SHOES OR BOOZE: CHOOSE

(Collier's)

According to the Seattle "Daily Times," election day was the quietest ever in that town. There were no arrests except two for violating traffic rules. Moreover, it appears that more shoes are being sold in Seattle than in those old wet days. Here is a letter that was addressed to the Seattle Dry Campaign Committee by a local business house:

It may interest you to know that we have opened three new shoe stores in this city since the dry law went into effect January 1, 1915. These stores are at 106 Pike street, 318 Pike street, and 201 Yesler Way, all of them locations formerly occupied wholly or in part by five liquor saloons.

We are employing more men than the saloons did—are doing a flourishing business in stores that are a credit to the city of Seattle.

The increase in the sale of shoes in Seattle has been remarkable since prohibition went into effect in the State. There are 50 per cent. more children's shoes sold now than there was when the saloons were in full blast. People are also buying a better quality of shoes than formerly.

Yours respectfully,

Dinham-Strehlau Shoe Co.

By H. T. Dinham, President.

P.S.—Our motto is: "Less booze means more shoes."

A Canadian dealer says that the Saturday after the Prohibition law went into effect in Ontario equalled the Saturday before Christmas in children's shoes.

MODEL N

THIS Outfit represents the highest development in shoe repairing machinery, and meets every demand of modern shoe repairing. It embraces all the essential processes for making new shoes from old ones, giving the maximum of equipment and efficiency in the minimum space. The Outfit has the Goodyear Stitching Machine with all its improvements, including a new style steam generator which uses gas or gasoline for generating the steam, and operates automatically, thereby insuring a uniform heat for keeping the wax in proper condition and requiring little attention from the operator. The Edge Trimming Machine has the new feature of the two shafts, being operated by a single belt, and the cutter grinder is attached directly to the main shaft. This arrangement gives better results with less power.

The Buffing and Scouring Machine has a shaft 57 inches long and carries the following equipment:

- | | |
|--|----------------------------------|
| 2 Split Bottom Buffing Rolls | 2 Flat X-Ray Hee Scouring Wheels |
| 2 "C" Shape X-Ray Heel Scouring Wheels | 1 Heel Breast Scouring Wheel |
| 1 Pin Wheel Pad Complete | |

A powerful Blower System removes the dust resulting from the trimming, buffing and scouring operations, and is designed to overcome certain objectionable features of other blowers.

The Finishing Machine has a 78-inch shaft which has all the necessary equipment for black or russet work:

- | | |
|--|--|
| 2 Corrugated Rubber Shank Finishing Wheels | 1 Corrugated Rubber Heel Finishing Wheel |
| 1 Corrugated Rubber Bottom Finishing Roll | 2 Shank and Bottom Brushes |
| 2 Heel Brushes | 1 Stitch Cleaning Brush |
| 1 Levelling Roll | 1 Bead and Wheel |

At the end of the Outfit is the Oscillating Edge Setting Machine which is fitted with union irons and in its motions duplicates hand workmen with quicker and better results.

Each of the machines is operated independently by a friction drive pulley, so that it is necessary to use only those machines which the operator may require. This feature means a saving of power.

All the machines are firmly mounted on legs and driven by a countershaft with carefully adjusted bearings, so that the Outfit runs with very little vibration, and is in every way most efficient.

ARROWSMITH

IMPROVED "FOOT-PAD"

STYLE I

THIS has recently been brought out for the purpose of supplying a particular want in the Arch Support line. This style was suggested by shoemen whose customers have been troubled with tired and aching feet although not afflicted with fallen arch. There are many people who seem to think they require nothing more than a "Pad" under the foot, securing a gentle uplifting pressure to the arch. The Arrowsmith Improved Foot-Pad does this, and being flexible and resilient can be worn from the outset without any discomfort. The trade name "Foot-Pad" is the trade mark used on this particular device and tells the whole story.

The "Foot-Pad" is shaped to conform nicely to the contour of the arch of the foot, and is composed of two lifts or layers of light, high-grade strap leather, a thin, highly-tempered plate being securely riveted between the two layers of leather. The leathers are cemented together and stitched around the entire edge with silk. The upper leather, which comes in contact with the foot, presents a smooth, unbroken surface on which the trade mark is beautifully burnished.

A SAFE BUYING POLICY

A Spirit of Hopeful Caution—All Sections of Shoe and Leather Trades Following Conservative Principles—Buying More Careful, Yet Steady—Prices Somewhat Easier, but Still Strong—What the Future May Bring No One Can Tell—Speculation in Leather and Shoes Eliminated

SINCE the first of the year there has been an entire absence of the feverishness and almost recklessness that characterized a good deal of the buying in the three previous months. With holiday trade over, retailers naturally settled down to calculate the results of the year's business, and take a look ahead. As one prominent dealer puts it, the year nineteen sixteen saw the largest and most profitable retail shoe business done in many years. But the conviction has been forced upon all sane dealers that its successor will witness a marked change for several reasons. The peak of high prices has been reached. The public has to a large extent exhausted its enthusiasm and exuberance, and seems inclined to take a breath. Then the uncertainty as to the continuance of the war through the year either through an early peace being brought about or victory being secured by the Allies later, is creating a spirit of caution with the public, that retailers already find apparent in their sales.

The effects of the recent peace whispers have not yet been dissipated in either wholesale or retail departments of trade, although this alone has not contributed to the easier situation that exists in leather and shoes. The pace in leather was too strenuous to last. Upper and sole stock took too rapid a movement not to leave room for the inevitable "cold feet" on the part of operators on both sides of the counter. The "slack" is being taken in, and it is well that such should be the case, and that the easement should be gradual and not sudden as might have happened if Germany's peace proposals had fallen on anything like willing ears.

The general impression seems to be that prices have been a little too speculative and, although upheld by extraordinary conditions for the time being, were bound to settle. At the same time the feeling prevails amongst buyers as well as sellers that there will be no drop of such a nature as to affect the general situation in either leather or shoes. Reports from all the centres in this country and the United States indicate a genuine scarcity of desirable lines of leather, and an absolute shortage of fancy leathers.

Shoe manufacturers in Canada, for the most part, have for some months past been only purchasing such supplies as they required to complete their orders, and there are very few establishments fortunate enough to have stocks of leather to go beyond the completion of their spring orders. All goods for immediate delivery are therefore feeling the effects of the high prices for leather purchased within the past couple of months.

There has not been much selling of leather during the past month, beyond the steady volume required for regular business, and a feature of the trade has been the absence of any disposition on the part of either shoe manufacturers or leather men to anticipate the market.

The policy outlined in the last two issues of the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL is being largely followed by the best retailers throughout the country. It is outlined in a conversation with a prominent city buyer who said recently: "I have quit buying in case lots. I have done speculating in shoes. It has become dangerous. I am just buying from week to week to keep up my stock to a normal level. What the effect will be when fall samples come out is what is troubling manufacturers just now. It would not be surprising if a good many manufacturers dropped the regular plan of 'placing' orders so far ahead. Time will tell."

Wear Other Materials and Save

How the Reject of Yesterday Becomes the Fad of Today—Necessity for Fabrics Now Exists as Never Before—New Materials and New Processes will Create an Artistry in Shoemaking of Which World Has Never Dreamed—Wearers Will Accept All Substitutes When Shown Advantages in Style, Durability and Economy—Leather Will Not Go Lower in Price and is Likely to Advance Even Further

THE first whisper of peace will not end the war, nor will high wages, high cost of living or high prices for manufactured goods suddenly drop back to normal. It will take longer to get to the low level than it has taken to get to the high level, remarked President John S. Kent at the National Shoe Manufacturers' Association annual held in New York City on January 17th and 18th. Barring foreign complications, there is nothing in sight to warrant a pessimistic view of business or cause a serious drop in prices for commodities. The purchasing power of the consumer was never so great. Our great steel, woollen and cotton industries have such a volume of business booked ahead as to insure steady employment and good wages. Railroads have more business than they can handle. Shoe manufacturers are no exception to the general rule and high prices of footwear have not curtailed sales. Stocks of shoes in hands of dealers are generally normal. Manufacturers have an abundance of orders and the great difficulty seems to be scarcity of material and consequent high prices.

Cause of Much Anxiety

The steady advance in price of leather during 1916 has been the cause of anxiety to leather men and shoe men. The strength of the market has at times been severely tested, but the actual scarcity of hides and skins and the enormous demand for raw materials as well as finished leather seem to warrant the high prices that prevail all over the world.

The fact that some of the largest and best informed tanners of sole leather in this country are today buying hides as fast as they are offered shows their confidence in being able to sell union leather at 90 cents to 95 cents per pound—for that is what leather will cost based on the price of hides they are buying.

Hides in South America in January mean sole leather for delivery to shoe manufacturers in the United States in September. It looks as if the regular demands of the shoe trade in this country, together with the requirements of England for war shoe contracts, will clean up the supply as soon as it is in sight and that prices will not be lower.

What One Year Brought Forth

A brief comparison of prices of a few staple leathers in January, 1916, and January, 1917, will make plain the increase during the last twelve months. The figures represent actual price paid by manufacturers at times mentioned:

	Jan. 1916	Jan. 1917	Per cent. advance
Union sole leather.....	.42	.80	90
Black calf.....	.35	.75	112
Colored calf.....	.34	.80	135
Black kid.....	.24	.70	191
Colored kid.....	.30	.80	166
Patent colt.....	.34	.60	78
Patent kid.....	.35	.65	85
Glazed kangaroo.....	.35	.75	112
Black side leather.....	.26	.50	96
Colored side leather.....	.28	.55	98

The advance in the price of leather seems in the main legitimate, and is based on scarcity and high price of hides and skins and increased cost of labor and tanning materials.

Another factor in high prices of leather is the leather buyer who has not only bid against his competitors for the stock he needed but has frequently bid against himself by offering more than was asked for future deliveries.

The old masters of markets, "Supply and Demand," are working overtime under unprecedented world conditions.

Wonderful Prosperity Will Continue

There is nothing in sight to show that prices of leather and other materials will be lower in the near future. There is every reason to believe that the wonderful prosperity of our country will continue during 1917. There is no reason why manufacturers or retailers should speculate in leather or shoes, or why one should expect the other to do so. Buy what you can afford to own, and be governed by what your customers demand.

The growing conservatism of buyers is a healthy sign and may have a tendency to check further radical advances in a market that has been at fever heat for more than a year.

It is impossible to see at this time where an adequate supply of hides and skins is to come from to make prices of leather any lower than to-day's quotations.

Recent peace talk has caused hesitation for a few days, but the record of the past twelve months shows that after every halt a firm advance has followed and prices have reached a higher level.

Undoubtedly the end of the period of increasing cost will come, but it is not yet in sight.

Act Upon Own Judgment

Every manufacturer, wholesaler and retailer of shoes should study the situation carefully and act upon his own judgment. One of the best authorities I know says:

"The Government statistics of the world on live stock show that the raising of cattle has not kept pace with the population of the different countries for some years, and the needs for cattle for beef purposes are not so urgent, as the consumers are feeding more on cereals than they did in former years; therefore, for beef requirements we do not need the amount of cattle we formerly did, and the world will never produce them on as large a scale as it did previous to 1900."

Cattle raising in this country is not profitable. Grain is too valuable to feed into cattle. Our growing population has less leather to use each year. The only relief in sight is the introduction of new materials into shoes. We cannot increase the supply of skins and hides for leather, but we can create a demand for other materials for shoes and thus relieve what threatens to be a most critical market condition.

Not Necessarily Skin-wear

Necessity, the great mother of invention, has compelled progress in shoe manufacturing during the past few years. We have been released from many of the shackles of tradition and custom and have done more in the line of efficient production in material for footwear since the war began than in twenty years previous. We have learned that a fully matured cow hide can be made into leather suitable in every way for fine shoes, and by allowing calves to grow into heifers and cows we will make a wonderful economic gain in a few years. We have learned that India goatskins can be retanned into strong and attractive leather for shoe uppers, and that sheepskins for tops and vamps are not to be despised. Improvements in tanning and finishing flesh and middle splits have turned out a product that will fill a place for serviceable footwear.

We no longer question the wearing qualities of fiber counters or felt boxes; of combinations of rubber and cotton or other material into the so-called fiber soles and heels. Imitation leather made with a cotton foundation and composition surface has been successfully used. Fabrics made of cotton or wool or both are entirely feasible for men's, women's and children's shoes, and particularly in tops of dress shoes. We have rubber welts and fiber welts, fiber taps and fiber top pieces for heels. We are less dependent upon leather to make satisfactory shoes than at any time since the world began.

New Sole Substitutes Wear Well

I do not advocate the use of materials other than leather except when such use does not cause a lowering of the accepted standards of durability, comfort and appearance. Fiber soles and heels can be used to advantage to the wearer in a majority of all the shoes made. Cloth tops can be used to replace leather in a very large proportion of dress and street shoes. If we could reduce the area of leather used for uppers from 3 feet to 1¾ feet by the use of cloth tops in a large percentage of the shoes we make, it would materially assist in steadying the leather market. Cloth has not been used extensively in uppers in shoes because leather has been cheap and the necessity for fabrics did not exist.

New Materials and New Ideas

If the wearers of shoes are willing to turn from the beaten path and use shoes made wholly or in part of other materials than leather it will mean the saving of millions of dollars annually in the cost of footwear. It will mean the invention of new materials and new processes; the development of new ideas in economy and comfort; the possibility of styles now unthought of and the creation of an artistry in shoemaking of which we have not dreamed.

The shoe manufacturers and the shoe retailers can lead an educational movement that will make possible the emancipation of mankind from the idea that shoes must be made from skins, and prove that progressive ideas shall not be banished from the industry in which we serve our fellowmen. Artistic styles adapted to the use of other materials and co-operation of manufacturers and distributors of shoes in the effort can accomplish wonders. Wearers of shoes will accept the new materials when shown the advantages in style, durability and economy.

The Present Call for Kid

What has made possible the present unprecedented demand for kid in men's and women's shoes? A few years ago it was the least sought after of all the staple leathers.

Largely through the efforts of a few men with imagination, energy and courage the shoe trade has been almost revolutionized and millionaires have grown where skillful manufacturers of goatskins have withered. Colored kid and black kid shoes have made womankind forget her milliner and pay homage to her shoemaker.

We seek to aim no blow at the leather manufacturer in advocating a diversity of materials for shoes. He is helpless to control the supply of hides and skins. The demand under present conditions is too great. The materials we have always thought a necessity in footwear has become a luxury.

It is our duty as manufacturers to lead in this great educational movement which has for its object the equalization of supply and demand by broadening the field from which our materials for footwear shall be drawn.

Why Shoe Prices Are So High

John S. Kent, of Brockton, Mass., President of National Shoe Manufacturers' Association, Tells Retailers in Assembled Convention at Cincinnati of the Scarcity of Skins, Rising Costs and Abnormal Requisitions—The Situation Generally Defined

MOST of the shoe manufacturers are sold up to April and May and could take orders from the shoe jobbers and retailers for shoes for delivery after June if they will only accept them, said John S. Kent, of Brockton, Mass., President of the National Association of Shoe Manufacturers, in a forceful and stirring address before the recent convention of the National Shoe Retailers' Association at Cincinnati, Ohio. The only safe course for the manufacturer is to cover on leather for every pair of shoes he sells; if he sells short he is likely to lose big money; then, again, if he takes orders, covers on his leather and the market drops off, he will have to sell his shoes over again in many instances, as the tanner will expect him to take the leather that he has contracted for.

It is difficult for the tanner or the shoe manufacturer to determine just what to do. He hesitates to speculate on the market, but he must go ahead and run his factory full in order to keep down expenses.

Get More Closely Together

The shoe manufacturer has a hard proposition before him, and it seems absolutely necessary in this crisis for the tanner and the shoe manufacturer and the distributor of shoes to get closer together than ever before.

Whatever is for the interest of one is for the interest of the other, and back of it all is the interest of the millions whose feet must be shod with American shoes.

Retailers and wholesalers should keep in touch with manufacturers, putting before them matters as they get them and expressing their views, and in return getting the situation as it looks from a different angle.

Expect Higher Prices

As long as the large tanning interests continue to buy hides at to-day's prices it looks as if they expected much higher prices for sole leather. Certainly the prices they are paying will make necessary a price of almost a dollar a pound for union sole leather.

Tanners of calfskins continue in the market right along, and while some calfskins have been purchased at less than previous prices, it must be understood that these skins are not like the summer skins, and the market price has always been less. They are long-haired, and long hair holds a lot of water, salt and sand, all of which makes weight.

A 5 to 7 pound calfskin will average 6 pounds. Such skins as have been referred to, with long hair and extra weight that this hair contains, would probably weigh $7\frac{1}{2}$ to 8 pounds, and as a 7 to 9 pound skin is sold at considerably more price than the 5 to 7, it seems easy to see lower value in a winter skin. Besides this, the winter, long-haired skin does not yield within half a foot of as much leather as does the summer skin, and, being coarser does not sort up with the better grades of leather, that are obtained from summer skins.

There seem to be a thousand and one reasons why the price of leather should be maintained or even go higher.

Suitable Leather Substitutes

Leather is not necessary for all the purposes for which it has been used in footwear. Other materials are suitable for service and appearance, but use must be popularized.

Create styles that will demand cloth for tops, cotton for vamps, felt for innersoles and welts and compounds of rubber and fibre for soles and heels. Use any material in place of leather in shoes that will not sacrifice wearing qualities.

Fibre soles and heels will outwear sole leather, and this has been proved in many tests. They are waterproof, flexible and comfortable. Shoes made of cotton are well adapted for summer wear, and the volume of business in such material should be largely increased.

The use of cloth for tops will cut down the use of leather for uppers nearly 40 per cent. in every pair, and the use of dress and street shoes with cloth tops can be made popular if retailers, wholesalers and manufacturers get together and make the effort.

Enlarge Supply Market

Instead of depending upon a restricted and uncertain supply of material for footwear, we can enlarge and add to markets from which our raw stock comes. We can draw from the great rubber plantations of the East as well as the forests of South America and Mexico; from the cotton fields of the South and the wool supply of the world. We should cast aside the prejudice that exists against innovation and demand progress in shoe materials and construction. We should offer premiums to inventive genius for uses of materials not now employed, for processes of manufacture not now developed, and for economy of production and distribution that will make for efficiency in manufacturing and retailing.

Get Away From Tradition

Necessity is the mother of invention and the father of economy. Modern progress has been hampered by tradition. We have continued making shoes of leather because shoes have always been made of leather.

For some purposes leather is superior to anything else for shoes, but not for all purposes. Use fabrics and fibres in their proper places, and use only the best quality. Don't simply try to make them fill a place in cheap shoes. Design patterns and styles that will make them popular in high-class footwear.

Our effort should be to reduce the use of leather 25 to 50 per cent. and not 100 per cent. Educate the public to know the value of fibres and fabrics and prove your own worth by wearing as well as selling and manufacturing shoes with these materials as a part of their construction.

We can take the public into our confidence and invite co-operation in this movement for better footwear and to make possible lower prices. It is not an attempt to increase profits but to stabilize our industry and in the interests of the people we serve.

Let those who choose to regard footwear as a luxury demand the most exclusive and highest priced materials in their shoes and let them pay the price. They are in the same class with limousine owners, opera patrons, tourists and metropolitan sightseers. Shoes can be made works of art if there is a demand for such luxuries.

The great American public, the men and women and children that comprise the vast majority of our population, want comfortable, sensible, attractive and honest footwear at prices that are fair to wearer, retailer and manufacturer.

Retailers Can Advise

It is not for the best interests of the shoe business that wearers of shoes are induced to buy the most expensive leathers or styles.

Retailers can advise customers to purchase black shoes instead of colored, regular instead of extreme heights, for economy; fibre soles and heels; cloth tops or anything that will give service and attractive appearance and not increase cost. Let those who insist upon art and exclusiveness in footwear have what they are willing to pay for, but help the average man and woman to economize; not by wearing cheaper, coarser shoes, for that diminishes self-respect, but shoes made of good materials, good style and good workmanship, with extravagance in leather or patterns eliminated.

Good men's and women's shoes can be retailed at $5 to $10 per pair. Exclusive designs and leathers may easily cost enough to command a price of twice as much. Let the public understand this.

Popular Prices Vanish

Shoe retailers and shoe wearers must get away from the old standards of value in shoes. It will be years before footwear will be as cheap as in the years preceding 1915. I doubt if we shall see the time when so much intrinsic merit in leather shoes can be retailed at what has been called popular prices.

We must establish new standards of value for footwear and make quality count rather than price.

A year ago we knew that leather would be in limited supply and higher in price. Today we are not sure of a supply at any price. Leather has been used most exclusively in shoes because nothing else was as cheap and good. Today other materials are cheaper and in some respects better.

Leather will never be entirely replaced because for some purposes it is superior to anything else used in shoes. We can't increase the supply of skins and hides in the world, but we can create a demand for new materials for footwear and thus relieve what threatens to be a most critical market condition. There is nothing like leather, but there are other things that will serve many purposes for which leather has been used.

Enthusiasm—Its Great Value

Message from J. Ogden Armour, Armour and Company, Chicago, to the Employees of that Concern

ENTHUSIASM is the dynamics of your personality. Without it, whatever abilities you may possess lie dormant; and it is safe to say that nearly every man has more latent power than he ever learns to use. You may have knowledge, sound judgment, good reasoning faculties; but no one—not even yourself—will know it, until you discover how to put your heart into thought and action.

A wonderful thing is this quality which we call enthusiasm. It is too often underrated as so much surplus and useless display of feeling, lacking in real substantiality. This is an enormous mistake. You can't go wrong in applying all the genuine enthusiasm that you can stir up within you; for it is the power that moves the world. There is nothing comparable to it in the things which it can accomplish.

We can cut through the hardest rocks with a diamond drill and melt steel rails with a flame. We can tunnel through mountains and make our way through any sort of physical obstruction. We can checkmate and divert the very laws of Nature by our science.

But there is no power in the world that can cut through another man's mental opposition, except persuasion. And persuasion is reason plus enthusiasm, with the emphasis on enthusiasm.

Enthusiasm is the art of high persuasion.

And did you ever stop to think that your progress is commensurate with your ability to move the minds of other people? If you are a salesman this is pre-eminently so. Even if you are a clerk it is the zest which you put into your work that enkindles an appreciation in the mind of your employer.

You have a good idea—don't think that other people will recognize it at once. Columbus had a good idea, but he didn't get "across" with it without much of this high persuasion.

If you would like to be a power among men, cultivate enthusiasm. People will like you better for it; you will escape the dull routine of a mechanical existence and you will make headway wherever you are. It cannot be otherwise, for this is the law of human life. Put your soul into your work and not only will you find it pleasanter every hour of the day but people will believe in you just as they believe in electricity when they get into touch with a dynamo.

And remember this—there is no secret about this "gift" of enthusiasm. It is the sure reward of deep, honest thought and hard, persistent labor.

Good Guessers and Good Shoemen

HERE are the fortunate prize winners in the great guessing contest recently conducted by the Tetrault Shoe Manufacturing Co., Montreal, in regard to their total sales for 1916. Much interest was aroused in the competition, no less than 875 guesses being received by the firm. The successful ones are being warmly congratulated and the reader will naturally be surprised that no salesladies were victorious, especially in these days when women are leading men in not a few national and mercantile undertakings.

"FINE! YOU GOT SPLENDID PRICE FOR JUNK"

Declared the Proprietor of Chain of Stores When He Heard Some "Shelf Warmers" Had Been Cleaned Out Quickly—Manager Was Congratulated and Was Asked to Give Details—Had Initiative and Executive Ability Which Was Rudely Shocked

"I PULLED off a great stunt here the other day," remarked the manager of a branch store, the headquarters of which are in another city. In the latter the purchasing is largely done by the central concern for the subsidiary ones, and the whole organization is supposed to work together in unity and harmony for the great good. Now, our advertising man, who is also on the buying force, directs the publicity policy of the concern, and thinks what he does not know about advertising, clearing out dead lines, presenting strong arguments and marshalling shoe facts, is not worth knowing.

"One of the invariable rules of our establishment is that shoes must not go through more than a quartette of annual inventories. By this I mean that if there is any stock on the shelves on which an inventory has been taken for four years in succession, it must be cleared out within sixty days. This proviso is imperative. "So, in going over our stock here," remarked Burton, the manager, "I ran across some 123 pairs that were past the age to live, namely, four years. Well, we handle a branded shoe of our own. Most all these remnant goods were all right in their day, but they were patent leather, which had dried out and become as hard and unyielding as a clay pipe stem.

Cleared Them Out en Bloc

"Now, I knew that we could not have any kind of a sale for these, without undermining the reputation of the store, the standing of our trade-mark shoes, or interfering with our regular custom. It would have done no good to have put these few pairs on sale, because they were all such odd sizes anyway that we could satisfy very few people, and we did not want to use the term 'sale' to mislead. So, after discussing affairs in the store here we heard of a dealer who makes a specialty of gathering in odds and ends and we cleared out the lot to him, lock, stock and barrel, at $2.50 a pair. In the selection there were some oxfords, cloth tops, Castle pumps, semi-high toes, high toes and other varieties too numerous to specialize.

"Well, of course, some of the shoes, at present replacement value, would be worth up to $5.00, but they did not cost us more than half of this at the time they were purchased, so we considered ourselves mighty lucky in getting rid of this aggregation of junk without injuring the fair name of our branded shoes, or undermining the confidence of our regular trade.

"So I wrote in to Linton, our advertising man, telling him that we had cleared out the shoes in speedy order, and had got $2.50 for them, and the only expense we had to pay was 50 cents cartage. Well sir, Linton went to Midler, the boss, and told him what had been done, and we received a complimentary letter from both of them in which they expressed gratification at our splendid showing and wanted to know how we had brought it all about. They commented upon the excellent all-round figure, the dispatch with which matters had been carried out, and said they wanted to use our plan of disposing of left-overs and 'has-beens' with the other branches to ginger them up a bit and show them what the S— branch could do.

Sure—Give Us All Details

"They made particular inquiries to learn how much newspaper space we had used, how long the sale had lasted, what window display features we had adopted and any other means of publicity, in order to clear out the footgear derelicts in such a brief time and secure such satisfactory results financially.

"Well, to make a long story short, I wrote back that they had some misconception about the 'sale' that we had pulled off, that there was no sale at all, but we had disposed of a lot of 'shelf warmers' holus bolus to a dealer; that there had been no special expenditure or outlay for extra clerks, window displays, dodgers, newspaper space, or anything of that character, but we had saved this money, and in addition had realized the handsome sum of $2.50 per pair. I also pointed out that the majority of these shoes were patent leathers which were dried out, and as hard as iron, that they carried our trade-mark name, and if we sold them to regular or casual customers they would think that these shoes should have our backing and guarantee. There was also danger of menacing the name and fame of this shoe, as well as jeopardizing our standing with our clients.

Took Them to Far-off Country

"I further pointed out that these shoes had been sold to a man who had taken them far away, so that they would never be recognized as coming from our establishment, or being sold in our community. Our regular trade was going on pleasantly and satisfactory and I thoroughly agreed with Linton and Midler, that we had been very fortunate in the foregoing transaction.

"Now, this has been a long story, but the humor of the situation is seen when I reveal to you the contents of the letter which I got in reply. It was to the effect that they had supposed that we had pulled off a sale and could have given the head store some pointers on window trimming, displays, handling left-overs, etc. While there was no direct disposition to find fault with us for getting rid of the goods holus bolus, there was a nasty little rider attached to the note, which is to the effect that 'Mr. Midler thinks, after all, $2.50 is a rather low figure.'

"This note was added by Linton, the advertising man. Well, sir, I got hot after being praised for our good work by him and receiving congratulations on the price realized for these shoes, which should have been cast in the junk heap years ago. Then to have a sudden, round-about face attitude on the part of the management, just because we did not follow out hard and fast stereotyped ideas of doing things, was exasperating. It was too much for me. I told him that their sense of gratitude was evidently spelt with a very small 'g,' and that, in their letter of such a date, they had felicitated me on the price obtained, thinking, of course, that I had secured this average by conducting a sale.

"Because I had not conducted a sale, had not paid $50.00 to the newspapers for extra space, half as much for extra clerks, and $10 to $20, perhaps, for cotton signs, dodgers, store cards, etc., they could not understand it at all.

"I told them the only money that we had been out was fifty cents for cartage. Yes, this is a strange world after all. Give a man a special job at a few dollars a day, and so long as he makes the work hang out, many bosses are satisfied. If the same man undertakes a certain thing on contract, pushes it through with might and main in a decidedly short time, and clears up $10.00 a day, then his employer begins to question him and his methods—cast doubt upon the quality of his work and give him no credit for anything he does."

TWO STRIKING HOLIDAY WINDOWS THAT SOLD THE GOODS

Two very handsome and attractive Yuletide windows were installed by R. E. Wilson, who, in company with G. Cloos, recently purchased the shoe stock of Johnson & McCormick, St. Thomas, Oht. The business is being continued under the old name. Mr. Wilson was manager for several years and is an adept in attractive and imposing shoe displays. The pictures, owing to the excessive light, do not do anything like justice to the inviting holiday trims. Suspended in the centre of one window was a very large set of electrically lighted moose horns. These aroused a lot of attention and the whole effect created no little comment. The arrangement was entirely original, and the residents of the city never saw just such a setting. While the details of the different windows cannot be seen as clearly as one would like, the general effect will afford some conception of the display accessories, the good taste and timely showing in seasonable footwear of all kinds, one window being devoted to men's lines and the other to women's foot togery.

HAD NINE FITTINGS THEN WANTED MONEY BACK

Persistent Annoyance of Woman Customer who Desired Exchanges, New Styles and Refund—Proprietor Grew Sore in End and Told Her to Stay Out of the Shop—Type of Shoe Patron that is More or Less Prevalent in Every Centre

THE most pesky and pernicky customer that I have had to deal with in a long period was a woman who came into my shop a few weeks ago, and bought a pair of high-lace, black kid shoes," declared a London, Ont., shoe merchant this week.

"The price was $7.50. She was fitted perfectly and took the shoes home, apparently satisfied.

"Judge of my surprise when, thirteen days later, she came back and asked me if I would not make an exchange of the footwear—that she thought she would like something else in the shop. I told her that I supposed I would accommodate her this time, although it was distinctly against the policy of my store, and so stated on all sales slips—that no exchanges would be made after one week.

"She thanked me and sat down, and I fitted her with various kinds of shoes for just one hour. She finally left, saying she guessed she would retain the pair that she purchased originally. Back she came three days after and asked my clerk if he would not exchange the original pair for a tobacco-brown, calf shoe, which she had seen in the window, priced at $8.50.

She Was Strong on the "Come Back"

"He told her that it was utterly impossible to make the exchange without the difference being paid. She thought that we should let her have the brown pair on the strength of her being an old customer. In fact, she used very specious pleas, but all to no avail, and finally took the black kid pair home again.

"Well, sir, in another week she was back again, thinking she would like something else, and wanting to know if we had any other kind, as the shoes did not appeal altogether to her fancy. In justice to her, let me state that she had not worn the boots. I pulled off my coat in order to keep cool and stem the current of indignation which threatened to break bounds, and after fifty minutes' service, she again went away with the pair that she had first bought.

"I do not want you to think that I am exaggerating matters, but this particular customer came in no less than four times later, not staying as long as on other occasions. In the meantime she was ringing me up now and then, and wanting to know when I would have in some new lasts, and if I could not procure one with a different heel, or a broader toe, or a higher instep, etc.

When a Customer Keeps Buzzing

"I told her frankly that I did not want to be bothered with her any longer, that she had tested my patience sorely and had better keep what she had. I also informed her that I was a very busy man and there were several customers in the store and for her to please ring off.

"Well, this woman is somewhat different to champion athletes when defeated. On subsequent trials it has been demonstrated many times that they have not the power or endurance to 'come back,' but this female had plenty of stamina in this respect. She 'came back' at me again the other afternoon for the 'steenth occasion and inquired, with suave assurance and simulated meekness, if I would not please take the shoes back and return the money, and, mind you, she had bought the footwear three months previously.

"I flatly told her no—and I am afraid I lost my temper in doing so—and not to enter the shop again on any errands such as she had been on during the last few weeks. Patience has ceased to be a virtue and serenity an asset under such distressing and annoying circumstances. She has not been back since, but perhaps I have not yet effectually silenced her.

Not a Door Mat for Cranks

"I will go to any reasonable length to please and serve a customer, but I will not be converted into a door mat by certain cranks, who seem to think a shoe merchant has nothing to do but wait on them from six to a dozen times, in order to effect a sale of a single pair—and then they will ask not infrequently if he will refund the money. Ye gods! What next?"

WORK AND WORTH OF YOUR CLERKS

Many employees feel at times that their work is not appreciated. And it is true that employers too often forget to give the credit that is due. Nevertheless, the wise employee will not become discouraged even if his best work frequently seems to go unnoticed.

The real evidences of appreciation are not words spoken with the purpose of showing approval. Nor do such evidences necessarily take a pecuniary form, as some might suppose that we are about to suggest. A raise in salary, a bonus or a gift, is, indeed an unmistakable form of appreciation—unless, of course, the raise is given, as has been done in extreme cases, in the attempt to nullify a contract. But the efficient employee can surely recall many incidents, many remarks casually let fall, which show more frankly and unmistakably than any premeditated or formal speech the favorable light in which his work is regarded.

Besides this, much of the satisfaction in work well done comes not from without but from within. "The man who has worked hard, and done his best, feels relieved and gay," says Emerson; and perhaps there is no pleasure equal to the consciousness of having accomplished a difficult task, or carried sustained effort to a successful conclusion.

It is well to bear these facts in mind, so that they will come promptly to the surface when our well-meaning but misguided friends tell us "what a shame it is that our work is not more appreciated." It is well to remember, too, that those who can work hard only when praised are unusually shortsighted in other ways, and that if their wish to be constantly patted on the back were fulfilled they would soon come to grief, since they would see little or no reason for making themselves more efficient.

Appreciation, in fact, is a sword—very useful if we grasp it by the hilt, but hurtful if we take hold of it by the blade. And, as the hilt offers just one point of contact, so appreciation should be desired only in a limited degree. Even if we had all the appreciation we could demand and even more, today, it would amount to little or nothing tomorrow: for it is what we are capable of doing, not merely what we have done, that makes us truly valuable.

Consideration of these suggestions will help many an employee to keep on working in the way that is best for himself, and for others. At the same time, we strongly advise employers to show due recognition of good work, and to show it not in a perfunctory, listless or artificial manner, but in such a manner as will produce the best results.

HANDSOME NEW STORE OPENS IN QUEBEC

Takes Rank as One of the Finest in the East—Fixtures Are of Mahogany and All Appointments of Most Approved Type—Attractive Front and Impressive Appearance Characteristic of Establishment Throughout—The Latest Walk-Over Boot Shop

A NEW Walk-Over Boot Shop, which was recently opened in Quebec, at 10 St. John St., is a handsome addition to the progressive business establishments of the Ancient Capital, and easily takes rank as one of the finest shoe stores in the eastern portion of Canada.

The building, which was formerly occupied by F. T. Thomas & Co., was transformed from an ordinary business stand into one of the most attractive and modern enterprises. R. J. G. Gore, of Quebec, who has had several years business experience in that city, and is a young man well-known and esteemed, is the alert manager.

The store, which is 70 feet deep, has a balcony running around the interior which is pleasing, roomy and artistic. The woodwork, shelving and seats are of solid mahogany, while the front is of the regulation Walk-Over type, the same as the stores in Montreal, Toronto, Vancouver, and other cities. The appointments and fixtures of Quebec's palatial new store were manufactured and installed by D. Spring-man, 52 Noble street, Toronto. The lighting system is indirect, giving a very soft and pleasing illumination.

The accompanying illustrations afford some conception of the beauty of the interior and the artistic nature of the store front, which is 24 feet wide and 19 feet high. All exposed woodwork, including the door ceiling in the entrance is of solid mahogany. The best British plate glass has been used in the show windows and four-inch square bevel plate glass set in solid copper, with two ventilators, are used in the transom. The top transom glass is four-inch square prism glass set in solid copper to reflect light into the store. Between the two transom glasses there is an awning box, covered with metal, the same as the entire front, which is constructed with the latest design of metal, the finish on the same being statuary copper. The metal construction is known as the Easysset System, and was designed and installed by the H. J. St. Clair Co., 27 Yonge street Arcade, Toronto. The bulkheads are Verde antique marble, and the tiling at the entrance is one-inch hexagon with a Grecian border. The hardware on the doors and the kick plates are of polished brass finish, and the electric lighting in the splendid show windows is the X-ray system.

During the recent Christmas period a splendid trade was done and very attractive trims were installed. Mr. Gore, the manager, reports that business has been very brisk and he is looking forward with every confidence to a most successful spring trade. Many of the leading citizens of Quebec have personally called to compliment him on the superb appointments of the Walk-Over establishment.

F. A. Guinivan, of Toronto, is proprietor of the Walk-Over Boot Shops in Toronto, Montreal and Quebec and is much gratified at the encouraging results so far secured from placing a "Walk-Over" in the Ancient Capital.

Speaking of prospects for the coming year, A. Brandon, of the Brandon Shoe Co., Brantford, Ont., says that the outlook for another advance in the price of shoes seems to be well founded. "The figure for leather is still climbing," adds Mr. Brandon, "more especially the colors, while sheep and kid skins are aviating all the while. We might advise you that kid skins, which we bought last September for forty-four cents, are now worth eighty-eight cents a foot and sheepskins, which before the war sold for six and seven cents, are now nineteen to twenty-three cents. Various other leathers are advancing in the same proportion, which means that the retailer and the consumer who want shoes of value will have to pay the advanced quotations for the coming season. All leathers will be more scarce than they have been in the past and people are demanding better shoes. It looks as though next season will see a very great shortage of leather. There is only one remedy for the hide market today and that is for the government to take up the question of killing female calves and prevent their slaughter. This would be the first decided step in remedying matters. There have been a great many substitutes for leather put on the market but they do not give the satisfaction anticipated," concludes Mr. Brandon.

TWO INDUSTRIES JOIN FORCES

The Sovereign Mitt, Glove and Robe Co., whose premises in Delhi, Ont., were recently destroyed by fire, have removed to Simcoe, Ont., where they have taken a portion of the large shoe factory of the Unique Shoe Co., of which J. W. Phillips is manager. It is understood that the two industries have amalgamated and will be operated in future along certain well defined lines.

NO SHOE AND LEATHER FAIR THIS YEAR

There will not be a Shoe and Leather Fair in America this year. The Eighth National Shoe and Leather Fair was held last year, 1916, in Boston. The Ninth Fair will be held in 1918. Date and location will be announced after consultation with exhibitors in previous fairs. The shoe and leather fairs in America were originally established in Chicago in 1906, by the Jacobson Publishing Company, publishers of "Hide and Leather." These fairs have been conducted in a thoroughly broad and successful manner by a large staff of experienced men in the east and west, well known for many years in the shoe and leather industries. In deference to the general wishes of exhibitors, and others, these fairs are run every other year—not yearly. The Ninth National Shoe and Leather Fair will be held in 1918—not 1917.

HOW WATERLOO SHOEMAN TALKS TO PATRONS

It pays to be frank and sincere in all your business announcements. Take the people into your confidence, give them timely information and lead them to an intelligent appreciation of present conditions and the contributing causes to the high cost of all kinds of footwear. The J. S. Roos Shoe Co., of Waterloo, Ont., is a live organization and does some forceful advertising. It keeps in close touch with customers and establishes a bond of union that is mutually beneficial.

Here is a copy of an excellent leaflet recently issued by the firm which speaks for itself:—

"Wholesale and retail shoe dealers are at the present time in a dilemma. Leathers all over the world are gradually vanishing and prices steadily increasing.

"Be prepared—don't get shocked at the prices when buying shoes during 1917. Adults may expect having to pay from $10 to $12 for shoes of similar quality sold before the war at $5.00. Prices of children's shoes will increase in proportion.

"Our advice is buy now and select only solid leather shoes.

"It is reported that Great Britain has contracted for all hides of cattle to be killed in Argentine Republic, the great cattle raising country of South America—to be tanned into leather for shoes for its immense army.

"The Russian Government has just closed a contract with an American Leather Company for $9,000,000 worth of leather to be used for shoes.

"There is at present a real stampede in leather. A Boston report says: Sharp rise in hide prices; solid leather advances another 5 cents a pound; present prices of certain leathers represent an advance of 13 to 20 per cent. within the last three weeks, 32 since the first of 1916, and over 66 per cent. since January, 1915.

"The Canadian Shoe and Leather Journal reports: Situation more acute; further strong advances in materials; leather concerns selling on day to day basis; manufacturers have to do quick thinking these days; those who hesitate are left.

"Some manufacturers have called in their travelers and say that they are only going to do business for the next six months by mail.

"Where will it all end? is the general question. It is hard to say. If matters keep on going as they are it is a difficult thing to conjecture what the prices of shoes will be six months hence. People laughed at the idea of there being any serious shortage of leather six months ago, and there are some lines today that money will not buy. To how many lines this may apply next April no man has the temerity to predict.

"Boston—The great demand for shoes throughout the country, particularly for makes where price advances have been only moderate, is illustrated by the fact that one big manufacturer this week received one order for over $3,000,000 worth of shoes.

"The same manufacturer was obliged to turn down orders at the rate of $150,000 a day last week. These orders were for shoes to be delivered in 1917, and it was left to the manufacturer to name his own price if they could be obtained. The sold up condition of plants made it impossible to accept these orders.

"Our stock at present is well selected and our prices, considering quality, will interest you.

"We are giving the public just a little inside information in connection with 'Why Shoe Prices are Soaring' which we feel will be interesting."

The New Stafford Establishment in Sudbury Embraces All the Latest Conveniences—Interesting Features of the Footwear Section—How Odds and Ends Are Cleared—Attractive Fixtures With Showcase Fronts—Getting Replacement Values

ONE of the palatial mercantile establishments of north-western Ontario is that of F. M. Stafford, of Sudbury.

He is a business man who knows no reverse, and, once making up his mind to carry out a project, goes ahead with it to a quick and invariably successful termination. To tear down an old store, buy more land and erect a large new structure in war time, is something that requires optimism, courage and executive ability. F. M. Stafford, of Sudbury, has just done this, and some idea of the splendid proportions of his new business enterprise may be gauged from the illustration on this page. Just ten years ago Mr. Stafford bought the dry goods business of Robert Martin, in Sudbury, taking a three-year lease of the premises, which he continued to occupy until 1912. He then bought the store and purchased an adjoining lot, upon both of which the new "Twin Stores" building has been erected. This substantial edifice has a frontage of 66 feet, is 100 feet deep, and three storeys high, with basement. Every modern convenience is provided for the comfort and pleasure of patrons. On the ground floor is a gallery, which affords a splendid rest room for customers, and here are located also the general offices and the "sanctum sanctorum" of Mr. Stafford.

F. M. STAFFORD, SUDBURY

Good Lighting and Imposing Fixtures

The furnishings and fittings of the store throughout are of oak and the establishment is well lighted, naturally and artificially. The "Twin Stores" carry boots and shoes, dry goods, clothing, women's and children's ready-to-wear garments and many other lines.

Frederick J. Lapp, who was for some years with S. A. Gray & Co., Meaford, Ont., is the aggressive general manager of the establishment. The shoe department is situated at the rear of the ground floor and runs the full width of the store—66 feet. Under the balcony at the back shoes are also kept. The shelving is all adjustable, two cartons to a shelf. The men's shoes are on one side, and the children's on the other, while the ladies' footwear occupies the centre. The various fixtures have showcase fronts and shelving on each side, making an attractive appearance, and yet a clear view to the shelving at the back can be obtained.

In reference to publicity Mr. Lapp states that they do not advertise shoes in every write-up. They frequently specialize, and have certain references to footwear alone. Special window displays are also put in at certain seasons of the year most favorable to selling pedal gear. The firm are not advocates of "sales" in any department, and at the present crisis and high prices, think every merchant should get the best possible figure out of his stock of shoes. The day may not be far off when a merchant's stock will possibly be not worth what he paid for it. Just as soon as there is a drop in the market (which may not be for some time, but come it will), this will be the case and, therefore, good profits should be made on present stock.

Eliminating Obsolete Lines

At all times the firm try to keep their stock clean and up-to-date. Small sales tables are scattered throughout the department, and this means many odds and ends are disposed of. Sometimes, of course, it is necessary to resort to a special sale, but this is only when there has been a "bad buy," or when the goods in a certain line become altogether too heavy. The average stock carried is from ten to twelve thousand dollars. Among the lines are those of Clark Bros., Limited, St. Stephen, N.B., the Sardon Shoe Co., Montreal, Minister-Myles Shoe Co., Toronto, and others. The firm do a large trade in winter in heavy lines and in summer the sale of sporting shoes is very satisfactory.

P. O'Brien, who is in charge of the shoe department, has had ten years' experience, and is not only a shrewd buyer, but an alert stockkeeper. He carefully follows all the latest styles, but does not go too heavy on them, maintaining an even balance in the various ranges.

Making Stock for Present Selling

"At the present stage of things it is very difficult to say how we mark shoes," remarked Mr. Lapp, "but when things are normal, we allow ourselves forty per cent. Today we are marking our stock for what it is worth based on to-day's prices and yet we do not think our quotations are too high."

The department system is carried throughout the store and the sales of each branch are kept, as well as those of each sales person—the one in charge being responsible for sales. Since moving into their new building, F. M. Stafford reports there has been a gratifying gain in business, not only in the shoe department, but in all other sections of the progressive establishment.

HIGH HONOR FOR SHOE WORKER

Walter Brown, who, for the past four years has been vice-president of the Toronto District Trades and Labor Council has been elected president and many friends will congratulate him on his well-deserved promotion. Mr. Brown in the business agent of local 233 Boot and Shoe Workers' Union, and is an energetic official, well-liked by all who meet him. He began his trade as a shoe cutter at Rushden, Northants, England, and came to Canada in 1907. His first position was with the Minister-Myles Shoe Co., of Toronto, where he worked for five years, when he resigned, owing to having been elected business agent of the Boot and Shoe Workers' Union, to which office he has been returned every year since by acclamation. Mr. Brown has been an active member of the local union from the date of his arrival in Canada ten years ago. There is no doubt that he will render distinct service to the Trades and Labor Council in his new character of presiding officer.

THE ISSUE WILL LIVE LONG

(From "Printer and Publisher")

The SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL, published by the Acton Publishing Co., Toronto, produced a Christmas issue of surpassing attractiveness and interest. It contained some very fine color work well done. A very large proportion of the advertisements were in two colors and were Christmas greetings.

The contents included, in addition to the usual class of articles, two special articles—"The Early Ontario Leather History," "Toronto as a Shoe Centre." A commendable feature, and one of great personal interest, was the publication of many scores of portraits of men connected with the Canadian shoe and leather trades.

This issue is likely to live long in many an office. It evinces long, careful and intelligent preparation, creditable alike to publisher, editor and associated staff.

A LINDSAY LIGHT

(See Front Cover)

R. M. Beal, with General Sir Sam Hughes, has helped to put Lindsay on the map, but to "Bob" Beal it owes an industry that stand out on the skyline as one of the marked characteristics of this well-known Ontario town.

Mr. Beal has spent a lifetime in the leather business, first down in Ottawa, later in Toronto, and finally at Lindsay, and although he is by no means as old as his picture makes him appear, he has seen a lot in connection with the development of leather production and shoe manufacturing in Canada.

The fact that he is still so often referred to by his friends as "Bob" Beal is an evidence of his personal standing with the trade, for, although in many respects he is "Jack Blunt," and says what he thinks, there is a depth of kindness and good humor in him that make him a likeable man, and which has won for him friends in Lindsay as well as amongst the trade.

He has been honored by his fellow citizens in various ways, and has filled the high position of Mayor of Lindsay, with credit to himself and the city. He is public spirited and is actively identified with every good work in and outside the leather business.

He takes a great interest in social economics, and is regarded as an authority on all connected with modern thought along this line. He is an enthusiastic believer in the right of the people as against autocracy in any form.

EASTERN SHOE FIRM IS EXPANDING

W. H. Plummer, who is manager of the shoe department for J. Wiesel & Co., St. John, N.B., writes that trade is most satisfactory and that December eclipsed all previous records. Several improvements are planned for the store, including a new fixture for the cash register, which will be in the form of a horseshoe and will include apartments for parcels. In connection with this there will be a wrapping counter with a young lady in attendance who will wrap all parcels and enter the same in a delivery book. Several new arm chairs and wire fitting stools have been added. The office will be enlarged and a stockroom installed for retail convenience. This room will be located at the rear of the children's department and will mean that the firm will have 2,500 pairs of women's shoes in close connection with the retail department. The firm are also installing two large mirrors and contemplate other improvements, such as an artistic arch dividing the men's and women's from the boys' and children's departments.

Mr. Plummer reports that close attention to stock prevents an accumulation of odds and ends, which are quickly disposed of through the efforts of a competent staff. During the holiday season a force of nineteen was employed. In taking stock this year they valued most of the goods on last quotations as there seems no likelihood of easier market conditions for some months to come. The members of the firm, J. and H. F. Wiesel, have been in business at 243-247 Union street, St. John, for eight years and, in that time, have built up a remarkably large business not only in leather and rubber footwear but in men's furnishings, etc.

AN AGGRESSIVE EASTERN TRAVELER

C. Hazen McGee has been appointed salesman in the Maritime Provinces for the James Muir Co., of Montreal. For the last four years he has been selling representative of the Murray Shoe Co., of London, which position he recently resigned. Mr. McGee will continue to represent the Mac-lane Shoe Co., of Montreal, with which firm he has been connected for the past eight years and has worked up a splendid trade. He reports that business last season was the best he ever had, that conditions at present are good and a general feeling of optimism prevails. Some fourteen years ago Mr. McGee started on the road for the Hartt Boot and Shoe Co., of Fredericton, with which firm he was for a long time. He is a former mayor of St. George, N.B., a lover of a good horse and has a splendid connection with the trade in New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island.

SHORTAGE IN LEATHER IS FELT

John E. Wilder, of Wilder & Co., Waukegan, Ill., says, "the price of the product from cowhide is doubled." "The year just closing has been a most unusual one," he adds. "The consumption of leather in this country, owing to our national prosperity, has been very large—and we have been called upon, too, to supply the nations at war both with sole leather and upper leather. The result of this enormous consumption was a shortage, of course, which was particularly felt over the last quarter of the year. The prices naturally went up. The price of leather from cowhides has practically doubled. Hides that in 1893, for instance, brought 4½ cents, now bring 32½ cents, and the hide producing cattle in the country to-day number about four-tenths per capita where formerly the average was about six-tenths to seven-tenths.

"The position the country is in with reference to the leather shortage is alarming considered in its various aspects—and a short meat supply is, of course, one of the aspects. Yet the year has been remarkably successful. There can be no doubt of that. I should call it a prosperous year with a question mark behind it. That is, there has been throughout an element of doubt in the situation. Yet as the year closes we see it has been unusually, remarkably successful. A feature I have not mentioned, by the way, accounting in some degree for the increased cost of the finished product, is the shortage in tanning materials, dyestuffs, etc., which we formerly got from Germany.

"As for the coming year, there can be no question that the prosperity will continue. All industries are going right on. The demand will continue even if the war ends. In Europe, for instance, if the war were to end suddenly tomorrow, the demand for civilian shoes would be tremendous, anyhow. So that, war or no war, I say our prosperity will continue and increase.

"There are many other leathers than shoe leather, of course. There are harness leather, belting, goatskins, sheepskins, auto leathers, fancy leathers and many other kinds. All are short and all have advanced in price. There is a decided shortage of sheepskins and the price is up several hundred per cent. Sheepskins that once brought 5 cents and 6 cents a foot, now bring 30 cents a foot. There is a scarcity of glove leathers, for prosperity consumes gloves rapidly. Fancy leathers for bags are scarce, belting is up in price.

"Summing up, I will say that the whole leather industry is on the highest plane in its history."

WILL COVER WEST FOR "THE REGAL"

R. M. Smith who has recently been appointed by the Regal Shoe Co., Toronto, to represent them in the Western provinces, has had an extended experience in the footwear game. He is an aggressive, alert salesman, has a thorough knowledge of shoes, and an ability to cover ground rapidly and satisfactorily. Mr. Smith is a native of Chesterville, Ont., in the County of Dundas, where he followed school teaching until 1886, when he started on the road for Messrs. Frank Stafford & Co. He remained with that firm until it was dissolved, when he went with Mr. Z. Lapiere. When the latter retired from the shoe business, the subject of this sketch joined the staff of Messrs. Geo. T. Slater & Sons, Montreal. That was in 1897, and every centre in Ontario was visited by Mr. Smith. When the Slater Shoe Co. was formed, he took part in the organization, and was on the board of directors for several years. He made his first trip to the West in the spring of 1899, which territory he covered thoroughly for the company until about two years ago, when he was obliged to remain at home owing to the illness of his wife. This illness continued until the end of August, 1916, when Mrs. Smith passed away.

R. M. SMITH, NEW "REGAL" MAN

Leather Trade Jottings

Items of Interest to Leather Producers and Users—What is Being Talked About in Leather Circles at Home and Abroad

THE usual January quiet has made itself felt in most lines of shoe leather during the month, although there has been a little more doing than usual during January on account of short stocks with manufacturers. So far we have not heard of any concessions worth while, notwithstanding the fact that prices have remained stationary or have sagged in some cases. The feature of the month on the other side has been the weakening of calfskins, attributed to the New York importation of Russian skins, referred to in last issue.

Canadian Shoe Trade.—Since stock taking, Canadian shoe manufacturers have been following a policy of "watchful waiting," and very little buying has been reported. Nevertheless, there has been some replenishing, and notwithstanding the statements of some shoe manufacturers that concessions have been made on fairly large lots, leather men claim that there has been no departure from prices asked for stock except in cases where quality has entered into account. Shoe manufacturers are busy completing orders for spring, and some have been busy with fall samples for jobbers. A number of the latter visiting the market earlier in the month. The fall showing so far seems to indicate marked conservatism on the part of manufacturers—several have proclaimed their intention of limiting new lines to the barest necessities of the case, and in some instances it is said that fall samples will not be shown till late in the season this year.

The Hide Market.—The hide market continues inactive, although there is some indication of a slight movement. Heavy steer hides have been selling at 32 cents, but concessions have been made on this figure. It is reported that a large lot changed hands at 30 cents. Tanners are holding off for these concessions, and it looks as though they were being given here and there. Country hides are unchanged, with tanners holding off and buying in a very desultory way. Buffs are quoted at 22½ cents for current receipt stock and tanners are offering 22 cents. Some lots have been sold on this basis. It is reported that the take off is not as large as usual at this time of the year, which makes it strange that the market should be so easy. A recent report of available cattle in the United States shows a considerable reduction for 1916, so that there does not seem to be much hope of further weakening and holders claim, as soon as the quality of the hide improves, prices will go back to the former high level.

Leather Conditions.—Sole leather is being held at old quotations, but reports indicate that a few concessions have been made. There is a good deal more activity than early in the month, and this helps to keep the situation rather firm. With the strong request for good tannages of sole leather, there does not seem to be much chance of the market weakening in the near future. The upper leather market has also improved, although there are reports of concessions in some lines. Tanners claim that the situation is altogether better than two weeks ago. Side leathers are in particularly good demand, and although calf has suffered somewhat from the recent effects of the drop in the Boston market, it is holding its own fairly well. Calf skins are now quoted at 65 cents in Boston, and colors from 75 to 85 cents, with fancy lines as high as 90 cents to a dollar. Shoe manufacturers are beginning to inquire more frequently for stock.

Serious Situation.—"It is without doubt the most serious situation that we have ever faced," said a well-known shoe manufacturer the other day. "We have managed to get along comfortably well thus far owing to preparatory measures, and the buying up of large stocks of leather against future business. But the situation has reached a stage now where with the end of the present manufacturing season most of the firms in this section will have exhausted the leather supplies that they have been providing during the past two years. It means that many of them will be obliged to go into the market for next season's trade. That means buying leather at the present high price level and a big advance in the price of footwear. The shoe that the retailer is to-day selling for $5 and $6 a pair to the consumer will probably cost the retailer himself $5 and $6 for the same grade next season. Everything else will be proportionately higher. This will make some of the advances in price that have been made in the past look rather small, but it has got to come. There is no other way out of it."

That the only remedy is some substitute for leather is admitted, and preparations are being made by nearly all manufacturers for the use of more cloth, fibre and other substitutes next season than has been before attempted. These substitutes will have to take the place of real leather where it can be effected in the cheaper lines of shoes.

New Boot Soling Process.—United States Consul Byington, Leeds, England, writes that the attention of the Leeds consulate has been called to a recently patented method of manufacturing boot soles from scrap leather. It is claimed that the soles are non-suction, non-slipping, and waterproof, and can be produced at a much lower cost than the ordinary leather sole. Owners of plants for heel building, it is believed, will find themselves in a position to conveniently adopt the new process.

It is also claimed that the novelty of the patent may be enhanced by an ingenious arrangement of strips of rubber attached to a thin layer of canvas the rubber strips fitting into the interstices of the reather sections. This is said to give a pleasing resiliency to the step of the wearer and to do away with the aching of the feet sometimes produced by purely rubber soles.

NEW POSITION FOR MR. MARSHALL

A. T. Marshall, who has been for several years in charge of the footwear department of Stewart's, Limited, Renfrew, Ont., has severed his connection with that firm, to take an important position with Jas. S. Fraser, shoe dealer, Pembroke, Ont. Mr. Marshall is an enthusiastic shoeman, who takes a deep interest in his work, and is a close student of styles as well as a shrewd buyer. He was born in Haldimand county, in 1887, and after attending the schools in that section, began his career in business at the age of sixteen, by serving for three years in the general store of Wm. Brown, in Caledonia. In 1907 he went to Renfrew, joining the staff of Carswell & Co., with whom he remained five years. He left their employ to take charge of the re-organized shoe department of Stewart's, Limited. Many friends will wish him every success in his new duties in Pembroke.

HISTORIC SHOE COMPANY DOING ITS BIT

This historic shoe firm of J. & T. Bell, Limited, Montreal, who have been in business for 103 years, are doing their share in the present struggle for the triumph of liberty and justice. Lieut.-Col. C. B. Keenan, president of the company, who was with the Princess Patricia Canadian Light Infantry, has recently returned from an extended experience at the front. He was Surgeon-Major in the Princess Patricias, which corps has such a gallant record and splendid achievement in the fighting ranks. Major Lavens M. Hagar, son of John T. Hagar (the former sole proprietor of J. & T. Bell, who passed away in 1909), who has been residing in Victoria, B.C., enlisted in the Transport Division, and is now in England, being attached to the 102nd Battalion at Bramshott Camp.

Chas. E. Fice, of Toronto, Western Ontario representative of J. & T. Bell, who has been associated with the company for sixteen years, has two sons who have enlisted for overseas service. Lieut. Harold T. Fice, who was taking a special course in Y.M.C.A. work at Springfield, Mass., joined the University Training Corps, Imperial Draft, and a few weeks ago crossed over to England. Mr. Fice's second son, Lieut. Percival W. Fice, who was connected with the Bank of Commerce, Toronto, recently joined the 228th Battalion, which is now being recruited in the Queen City.

Irvine Frederick, of Campbellford, Eastern Ontario representative of J. & T. Bell for the past eight years, has one son, Charlie, lately with the Canada Life Assurance Co., but now with the 166th Overseas Regiment, at present in England, while another son, Douglas, is attending the Royal Military College, Kingston, qualifying himself for active service.

HOW SHOE FIGURING IS DONE

The uncertainty regarding the price of shoes is well illustrated in the case of an eastern manufacturer who was asked by a western jobber to quote him a figure on a tan Russia calf blucher. The manufacturer replied, "I do not know whether I can secure the leather to make up the quantity which you require and until I find out I cannot give you a price less than five dollars a pair." The shoemaker went scouring the market and finally located enough leather and told the jobber that he would be able to fill his order at four dollars and a half a pair. At first sight this may seem like a comparatively moderate price but when it is considered that the figure for this self-same boot four months ago was only three dollars and ten cents a pair it will be observed that the raise is a substantial one. Remember this is the wholesale price to the jobber and not the figure at which the shoe would be disposed of to the retailer.

MR. SMILEY BECOMES PARTNER

P. C. Smiley, for the past four years head salesman with Fred. Sutherland, shoe merchant, St. Thomas, Ont., has purchased an interest in this old established shoe business, and will hereafter have complete charge of the selling end of the business. Mr. Smiley has been associated with the shoe game in St. Thomas for over seven years, is an excellent salesman and with his thorough knowledge of the business should make good in his new venture. He was born in St. Thomas, a son of G. W. Smiley, bailiff, and has spent his entire life in that city. He is one of the best known and highly respected young men.

The business will be conducted as in the past under the name of F. Sutherland, who will still be associated with it although not as actively.

RINEX SOLES

THE increasing scarcity of sole-leather has made it imperative for shoe manufacturers to provide an alternative for leather soles. Experts who have made tests and comparisons insist that is the one sole producing results that best meet the requirements of conditions in Canada.

RINEX is a composition fibre sole, possessing ingredients that insure the most serviceable wear. In every respect RINEX is the equal of leather, and in many respects far better.

RINEX is soft, flexible and non-slipping.

RINEX is uniform in quality, light in weight, springy in texture and, being absolutely water-proof, will not rot.

RINEX is cheaper than leather, and better, because it will give longer wear.

RINEX is guaranteed against breaking out at the stitching or stubbing out at the toe.

RINEX conforms easily to the process of sole laying and stands the stitching.

RINEX means a continuous supply, because the ingredients are absolutely under control of scientists and experts.

RINEX may be had in black, tan and white.

If you are a shoe manufacturer you need to investigate the merits of RINEX soles. If you are a shoe merchant it is equally important that you know all about RINEX soles.

It was decided to hold a dinner some time during March which will be a great get-together occasion. The function will be attended only by shoe retailers. Last year representatives of the allied lines, wholesale, findings and travelers were invited, but on this occasion the attendance will be restricted to shoe merchants or buyers. All will be welcome, whether belonging to the Association or not. The event promises to be a pronounced success.

The principal matter discussed was the rubber prices and the recent advance. The question was brought up in a letter written by Warren T. Fegan of the Big 88 shoe store, in which he said that he had hoped that a meeting of the shoemen would have been called immediately, following the action of the rubber manufacturers in raising prices. "I am disappointed," continued Mr. Fegan, "because I feel that, with the expenditure of a few dollars we could have secured the co-operation of every city in protesting to the Government against this injustice and could have secured from the Minister having charge of that branch, Hon. THE "PEERLESS" WAY

The growth of dealer interest in the "Peerless" line has been no less phenomenal than the sales growth of Dunlop "Peerless" Heels. We receive hundreds of requests every month for the empty box rebates.

If you have never sent in the empty "Peerless" cartons, to receive for each the one-and-a-half cents in cash by return mail, ask one of your cobbler friends to show you what his earnings from these returned boxes represent.

All this double-earning capacity of "Peerless" Heels is possible because the Dunlop Line sells readily through being a Quality product, backed up with a sufficiency of advertising.

Your jobber will ship you the necessary supply of "Peerless" Heels. Be sure to mention the name "Dunlop" to him.

Made in all sizes—and in colors Grey, Black and Tan.

DUNLOP SOLES ALWAYS LEAD

Rubber Soles are more and more coming into popular favor. Some people wouldn't be without them winter or summer.

Once a customer of yours knows from experience that Dunlop Rubber Soles are just as efficient, just as surpassingly good as Dunlop "Peerless" Heels you will find he will have no other make of rubber sole.

Freedom from cracking, most generous wear-well record, never a sign of drying out—these Dunlop features are bound to impress the user.

Manufacturers in great numbers use the Dunlop Rubber Sole in making up their stocks—another good sign of quality and consistent behavior reaping their just recognition.

Made in all sizes and in colors Grey, Black, White and Tan.

ber manufacturers will put over us unless we get busy and ginger up and make them feel that we are not in a trance," concluded Mr. Fegan.

Had Stopped Rubber Advertisements

Secretary Cook explained that the Executive had taken action and brought up the matter before the Vigilance Committee of the Ad Club, who called attention to the newspapers and the agency placing the announcements that the advertising came under the head of being unfair, as rubbers were not cheaper, etc. The result was that the publicity had ceased. Mr. Cook thought the Association should receive some credit for this work.

A letter was read by one of the members, from the Kaufman Rubber Co., Kitchener, which, in connection with the recent sharp advances in the prices of rubber footwear, said: "We feel that a word of explanation is in order. We regret that we are forced to make this advance but we in turn must pay an increase of an average of seventy-five per cent. over a year ago on all raw materials, including cottons, cashmerette, jersey, linings, compounds, colors, all kinds of shoe findings, and also leather for leather top lines. The only exception to the above is crude rubber, which has advanced only slightly during the last year, and it is fortunately due to this fact that we are able to keep present prices down to those shown in our recent price list. The higher cost and shortage of labor has not only assisted in forcing an advance in rubbers but has also made it very difficult for us to fill our orders. We trust that the present war conditions may soon be ended and the prices of all commodities again assume their normal values."

Alleged Wrong of Rubber Companies

The following correspondence also came up for consideration relative to the rubber footwear question. The Executive Committee of the Association sent the following letter to J. A. Connor, Division Manager of the Canadian Consolidated Rubber Co., Toronto:—

"At a meeting of the Executive Committee of Toronto Shoe Retailers' Association, held on the 10th inst., the problem of retailing rubbers came up for discussion and the existing conditions received much consideration. The opinion was that as, in the past, the rubber companies had advertised to the effect that rubbers were as cheap or cheaper than ever and that the public could purchase them at a more reasonable price than in the past, and while it was admitted that the advertisements later retracted this to some extent, yet it was felt that we, as retailers of Toronto, were entitled to the immediate consideration of the advertising department of the rubber companies in regard to further advertising the fact that the price of rubbers had been considerably advanced and that the public must pay more to receive the same quality of merchandise.

"We do not wish to appear 'grasping' or unjust in our demands but the feeling was exceedingly acute that the rubber companies should do something to further undo the wrong that was perpetrated upon the retailers and public in general by the first advertising. Trusting that this will receive your kind attention, or if out of your jurisdiction, that it will be forwarded to the proper channel and that we may have the favor of an early reply."

What Publicity Did for Retailer

J. A. Connor, Division Manager of the Canadian Consolidated Rubber Co., Toronto, sent the following response to President Blachford and the Executive:—

"Replying to your letter of the 11th inst. regarding rubber advertising, I cannot agree with you that any wrong was perpetrated on the Toronto retailers .

"Most of the trouble that they have experienced was caused by the fact that while other towns have been getting a fair profit on rubbers, Toronto dealers have been selling them altogether too cheaply, and of course this year they made a decided advance in price, altogether out of proportion to the small increase in cost. The very moment we found that they were in this position, we spent a lot of money in the Toronto papers setting them right and I believe, generally speaking, succeeded in doing so. At the present time I believe a list has been adopted, which among other things, calls for $1.25 for women's rubbers that wholesale at 66 cents.

"Without any desire on my part to even suggest what price the retailer will sell his goods at, it is my opinion that it would need some pretty strong advertising to justify a price of this kind, showing as it does a 90 per cent. profit on the cost of the staple article.

"In further reference to the advertising campaign which was carried on, I do not think the shoe dealers are alive to the fact that this advertising did them an immense amount of good.

"In the first place it created an enormous demand for rubber footwear, turning hundreds of sales that would otherwise never have been made; and secondly, and most important, possibly from the shoe dealer's standpoint, is the fact that it justified the extremely high prices which were being demanded for leather footwear and thereby prepared the mind of the public and made selling easy.

"It is not within my jurisdiction to make a final decision regarding this matter, and I am sending it forward to the proper authorities and if it is their intention to do further advertising, no doubt your claim will receive full consideration as we fully recognize the fact that you are our friends and we must support you in every way possible."

What Erroneous Impression Corrected

It was decided by the meeting that the Executive should meet at an early date and send a resolution to the Canadian Consolidated Rubber Co., Montreal, to the effect that further advertising in the press was advisable to inform the public of how rubbers had increased in price, to set forth clearly the cause and to correct any erroneous impression in the mind of the people about rubber footwear being cheaper, etc.

LIVING MODELS WORE LATEST FOOTGEAR

A very successful convention was that held recently by the National Shoe Travelers' Association at St. Louis, Mo. This was the fifth annual convention of this organization and was sure a winner, as all who attended are still talking about it. Especially interesting was the Style Show, the various kinds and styles of shoes being shown on living models. This show was held previous to and during the banquet. A runway was made in the dining hall and the models paraded up and down and around exhibiting the latest and snappiest creations that could be turned out by the shoe manufacturers. Many of the two-toned effects were shown, as well as solid colors in high boots, medium shoes and pumps of every description.

SHOE REPAIRERS' BANQUET ON FEBRUARY 21st

Wednesday, February 21st, is the date decided upon by the Toronto Shoe Repairers' Association for their first annual banquet. The event will be celebrated at the St. Charles Hotel, and it is expected there will be a large attendance not only of the members of the trade but representatives of the shoe supply houses, leather and other firms. The tickets have been placed at two dollars each and a competent committee has all the arrangements well in hand. Representatives from sister associations in the province will be invited to be present and a fine toast list and programme of entertainment is being prepared. Wednesday, February 21st, will be a great night in the history of the Association and the coming event is being enthusiastically taken up. It is expected that speeches will be made by Mayor Church and leading exponents of various branches of the trade. The Toronto Shoe Repairers' Association are making excellent progress and the membership is constantly increasing. Neat membership tickets are now issued to every one belonging to the organization and the officers are most energetic and aggressive.

VETERAN BOOTMAKER OF CAPITAL CITY

J. Schryburt, who is a leading member of the Ottawa Shoemakers' Association, and whose son, E. A. Schryburt, is secretary of that body, has resided in the capital city ever since 1885. He worked in some of the best shops in Ottawa and decided to take up business on his own behalf, which he did, in 1888. He has succeeded splendidly in making custom boots, but owing to not being able to get skilled help, his plant has not developed into as large a one as he originally planned. In 1909 Mr. Schryburt made a special hockey boot, with a steel toe, which gave hockey players great satisfaction, and in 1912 he substituted for it a fibre toe, which is still in great demand. Mr. Schryburt is the oldest shopkeeper in the custom and repair line in Ottawa, being fifty-eight years of age and next year will celebrate his thirtieth anniversary in business.

SUGGESTS FEDERATION OF SHOE REPAIRERS

S. Burnett, of the Toronto Shoe Repairing Co., 761 Yonge street, who was recently re-elected recording secretary of the Toronto Shoe Repairers' Association, is evidently the right man in the right place. The work is not new to him as he acted as secretary for three years for a similar organization in the Old Country, previous to coming to Canada in 1912. Mr. Burnett says that every town and city of any importance in England has a shoe repairers' association and all these are affiliated to the National Federation of Repairers' and Dealers' Associations. The trade press gives the association every assistance and encouragement. Mr. Burnett declares that he would like to see a similar association started in Canada covering all the shoe repairers' associations.

NEW SCHEDULE OF WAGES DRAWN UP

At a recent meeting of the Boot and Shoe Workers' Union, held in Toronto, it was reported that the Union had drawn up a new schedule of prices, which will be submitted to the manufacturers to go into effect in May. Walter Brown, business agent, stated that he did not anticipate any trouble on the part of the manufacturers, as, with the prices that they are now getting for footwear, he thought they could very well pay a little extra for labor, in view of the high cost of living. E. W. A. O'Dell, who was present, also addressed the meeting.

ECHOES OF THE BIG NATIONAL CONVENTION

Some of the Brightest Things That Were Said at the Recent Gathering in Cincinnati—How Leaders in Trade View Styles, Prices, Supplies and Profits—Excerpts from Addresses That Aroused Enthusiasm and Inspired the Rank and File

No Exorbitant Profits are Made

(By A. C. McGowin, Philadelphia, President)

Inventive minds are busy already in the development of materials to replace leather. We have soles for our shoes made of fibre and rubber combinations which easily outwear leather soles of equal cost. We have had since shoemaking began, fabrics for uppers that have been good looking, well fitting and serviceable. At the present time many beautiful and desirable things of this sort are being produced which will be shown you in the samples soon to be on the road. Study them with care. As these products mean a money-saving, without lessening the wearing quality of the shoe, it is our duty to the public to encourage their use in every way possible and you will soon find that your customers will back you in your efforts to help them take care of their shoe costs in a sane and sensible manner.

The public should understand that shoe retailers and manufacturers are not making exorbitant profits out of the present situation, for it is well known by those best posted that they have passed on to the consumer all their holdings and have only advanced prices when the increased cost made it absolutely necessary. Above all, we wish the public to know that we are doing everything in our power to solve the problem of high prices and that we are endeavoring to work in their interest.

Why Kid Shot So High in Price

(By C. F. C. Stout, Philadelphia)

The conditions that brought about the rise in the price of raw material, caused by the exhaustion and regulations of the war, and the large demand for leathers, was first felt in the spring of 1916, when the price of kid leather began to rise; but the real acute situation was not brought about until the fall of 1916, when the China market opened. It was then seen that the loss of supplies from so many countries that had been absolutely cut off either by war itself or embargoes, and that the extra supplies that Germany would have used had been exhausted, that China and India were going to be cockpits of keenest competitive buying that has ever been noted.

The glazed kid manufacturer has been powerless in the face of economic conditions to control prices, and it has been his policy as near as possible to have the selling price of glazed kid represent a profit on the replacement value, including all the uncertain charges of war traffic. The application of this principle in business has shown the leather manufacturer an abnormal profit on raw material purchased at low figures, but he is at all times obligated for six to nine months at the high figures on which his selling price would only show him a fair profit. I consider that every good business man, whether he be a retailer, shoe manufacturer, or leather man, should fix the selling price so as to give him a normal profit on top of his replacement value.

I have it brought to my attention practically every week that there will be a propaganda out to "knock kid," and substitute cloth. I am here today to praise kid, and not to "knock cloth," but I do not wish to let this opportunity go by without knocking the spirit that is expressed in that expression "knocking kid."

The price of kid today is not out of proportion to other leathers; sheepskins that used to sell from 7 to 12 cents are now bringing 15 to 30 cents; side leathers that used to sell from 14 to 22 cents, now sell for 25 to 55 cents calfskins are selling from 65 cents to a dollar, and black kid that used to sell from 12 to 35 cents, is today bringing from 30 to 75 cents, and colored kid that used to sell from 16 to 45 cents, today is 75 cents to $1.25.

Educate Public on Leather Substitutes

(By John O'Connor, Chicago)

Every manufacturer of fibre soles is anxious to increase the output for the simple reason that their profit is four or five times greater than in making tires or other rubber goods. The way sole leather has been increasing has caused the price of fibre soles to go up and there is nothing to cause this excepting the fact that the manufacturers of them have seen a chance to make an extra profit. We are at present betwixt the devil and the deep blue sea as far as prices are concerned, but by using fibre soles and heels in our repair shops we can force the price of sole leather down, thereby reducing the cost of the fibre soles. There is no question about the profit there is in manufacturing these soles and from what I can learn there is not a rubber plant in the country who would not like to make them.

These soles are made of about 10 per cent. rubber, new and old reclaimed, about 20 per cent. of ground rags, leather buckings, and the balance consists of zinc litharge, hydro carbon, sulphur and minerals, making the cost of making these very low, but the price has been regulated according to leather.

There is to my knowledge a large munition factory experimenting on a fibre sole. They intend to manufacture these in large quantities just as soon as the war orders cease. Thus they will be enabled to turn out anywhere from three to five hundred thousand soles a day, which thrown on the market will cause a big reduction and force down these soles where they could be sold at a legitimate profit.

The trouble with fibre soles and cloth shoes made on the last few years is that they have not had a fair showing with the public, for the very reason that in place of testing them out and putting them on shoes to retail from $5 up, they have been tried out mostly on shoes from $3 down, so that the public now looks upon them as a very cheap substitute for leather. This can easily be overcome by instructing salesforce as to the wearing qualities of the soles, and heels, also cloth tops, so that they can talk intelligently to the public when they meet them and not shake their heads and say they don't know.

By going carefully into the matter and using substitutes wherever possible, you will find that you will be enabled to save at least from 50 cents to $1.25 a pair.

Dealers Are Blind to Certain Facts

(By H. B. Seates, Boston)

Now then, it is a fact that consumers have hardly yet paid any appreciable advance in the cost of their shoes, compared to what they must pay for the same shoes if made up of leather bought subsequent to December 1st. Please bear in mind that I am now speaking of the kind of shoes that really form the backbone of our business, everyday sort of shoes for men, women, misses, children, boys and youths.

It is true that an immense amount in the aggregate have been sold in women's shoes at $8.00, $9.00, $10.00 $12.00 and a few even higher, but compared to our total sales, this is a smaller amount than we imagine.

I greatly fear that the vogue in women's novelty boots, and the ease with which we have sold them at high prices, has blinded some of us to true facts, and that we have underestimated the great general public's ability and willingness to pay 50 per cent. to a 100 per cent. more for their shoes.

It would probably be very interesting if we could take a poll of all the retailers who have increased their business in dollars and cents and find out exactly their total of pairs sold each month compared to past years. I hold that any retailers who have sold less pairs per month are going behind and losing customers. I don't believe we can figure it any other way. Therefore, I hold that our selfish interests, as retailers, must force us to work determinedly to accomplish two results.

We must not be stampeded into buying shoes so low in price as to bring quality to such a low point that it is business suicide to sell them. We must more than ever look to the quality of our merchandise. And we must work very hard to get our customers to pay us enough to insure quality, in their own interests as well as our own. That, I think, should be the watchword of retailers—"We will not sell shoes of a quality that will not hold our customers and build our business."

And our next job is the intelligent consideration and use of materials as substitutes for leather that will help hold down the price of shoes by decreasing the use of more expensive leathers.

I have no quarrel with any tanner or leather man, but if leather is as scarce as they claim, surely they can have no objection to our honest endeavor to relieve the consumption of leather, and work at the same time for the true interests of the people, from whom we get our living, our automobiles and yachts—the consumers of footwear.

I will cheerfully buy all the colored kid boots I think I can sell at $10 and $12, and no more. If I have customers who want them, I owe it to them to supply their wants. But if any maker of colored kid goes too far in full-page advertisements trying to prevent me from selling my mass of customers cloth-top boots at $4.00, $5.00, $6.00 and $8.00, I may decide to tell my customers that I think that they are foolish to pay $10.00 and $12.00 for colored kid boots. And I know that most of you are with me.

Fibre Soles Have Come to Stay

(By W. H. Palmer, U. S. Rubber Co.)

We thoroughly believe, however, that once the public has had a good chance to try out fibre soles they are not going to be satisfied with other soles again. Some of the advantages of fibre soles over leather soles are as follows: They are easier to the foot, they make walking easier, they conform more readily to the shape of the foot, thus doing away with the necessity of "breaking in" shoes; they are waterproof; they do not burn or draw the feet; being a non-conductor of heat and cold they will be found cool in summer and in winter warm.

This does away with the objections that have been made in the past against ordinary rubber soles. They will give better wear than the average leather sole. Of this we are convinced from countless wearing tests that we have made in ordinary usage, as well as a special device that we have adopted for testing soles. This is not only true of our soles, but of the other soles that are being manufactured. This test consists of measuring a distance near one of the factories, where men are employed to walk in relays so that any given pair of soles is walked on continually from morning to night, so that we can know in the shortest possible time the relative wear as between different grades and kinds of soles.

Under this test fibre soles have been found to be in good serviceable condition at the end of 500 miles walking. The average person is believed to walk somewhere between two and four miles per day. If two is the correct average, 500 miles would be the equivalent to 250 days' wear. If four is the correct average, this would be the equivalent of 125 days' wear, or about four months.

What Association Can Do for Retailers

(By A. F. Sloane, Ohio)

If I am a merchant I am a man who has ceased to be a storekeeper. If I am a storekeeper, I have not yet attained to the distinction of a merchant, and things look just a little different to me. To me as a merchant an association can be of much pleasure, some pride and some profit, but to me as a storekeeper, the association is bound to be of untold profit and a constantly increasing pride and pleasure. I may have a little bit of a shop in a country town, and by an advanced methods and policies of doing business be considered a merchant. On the other hand I may have my name over the door of the show places in a city square and be classed as a storekeeper. Now, these two retailers look upon Association work and benefits from an entirely different point of view.

The average retailer today wants to be identified with an organization engaged in the constructive work of National ideas, ideals and policies. He is no longer satisfied to pursue his own course, methods and policies. He needs and wants associated help and influence. He wants and is willing to exchange confidences. Trade and store secrets are no longer desirable or popular. In short, we all want a "hand upon our shoulder, in a friendly sort o' way." We need to meet our fellow merchants from every section of the country and listen to every problem and its solution. Where can this be done better than in an organized convention?

Cut Out Guess Work in Your Business

(By S. P. Davis, Cleveland, Ohio)

Some of us are so conscious of the appearance of things in business that we are unconscious of the disappearance of things in business. We haven't sufficient figures; we don't know; we are guessing. Yet I know, very much like the minister said, "So many people in an audience or in a congregation come here with a mental pitchfork, instead of a mental rake. Whatever I say to them they take that mental pitchfork and throw those words over their shoulder to the other fellow, "Get that, Bill; that's all right for you, not for mt." "Get that, Jim. Do you get that?" They throw those words over their shoulders instead of taking their mental rake and gathering these things unto themselves.

The science of business today means nothing, science is nothing, but knowledge that has been organized and collected and correlated, and classified; and then when we have this knowledge organized it is science, and we are making fewer mistakes. You want to learn to substitute all those negative factors for the constructive, positive factors, and then you are going to do better buying and less sighing; you are going to do better merchandising, gentlemen, because you know what you want to know about your business.

I want to know how much there is about my business that I don't know. Yes, we have overhead expense. How much does it cost me to sell shoes? Selling cost so much. Who are the clerks in my store who sell the better merchandise, and who are the clerks who sell the inexpensive, the cheaper stuff? What is the percentage of my clerks who sell the good stuff and what percentage have I? Eighty per cent. selling the cheap stuff or 80 per cent. selling the good stuff? What is the selling cost of each clerk in the store? Do I carry more stock this year than last year, and if so, am I doing more business? Is my overhead expense greater this year than last year, and if so have I figured my margin of profit accordingly?

I want to know what portion of my stock has been here 30 days and what percentage of this stock has been here 60 days, 90 days, and six months. Why, it was a revelation to a merchant when I got him to have the buyers submit that report. What percentage of your stock has been here six months, three months, and 30 days! What is the average selling price in this department, and that department? You want to departmentize your stock into as many units as you can, and then you will know where you are; then you are not guessing. A dry goods merchant showed me his shirtwaist stock. He said, "Here is the stock. I turn it six times and it is not making money. I can't understand why this stock isn't making money." I saw he had pretty good merchandise; in fact, the selling help, to my mind, was even below the standard of the merchandise carried. I said, "What is the average selling price of the shirtwaists you carry in stock?" He had to look it up, take a little hasty inventory. The average selling price was $6.50.

Service Important Thing in Retailing

(By J. A. Goldberg, Chicago)

The handling and the selling of merchandise, I believe, is very important. In former years an ordinary clerk could sell your shoes. We must encourage, from my point of view, the merchandising of shoes and elevate it to such an extent that the people who purchase our merchandise at these higher prices will appreciate this high grade and first-class service. Service is the important thing to successful retailing.

In the service in the past you will find that in the average shoe stores they would throw their new shoes around just like they would old shoes. Well, today we are selling something beyond shoes; for shoes merely cover the feet, but they are a merchandising proposition; shoes are now made of dainty materials and they must be handled in such a manner that they may be sold and shown to customers in healthy, clean condition. This is so important that when you show shoes, they should be handled just as you would an expensive gown, or an expensive hat, or some lingerie, because in the next showing, when the next person comes in, you are able to show them clean merchandise.

Getting Good Results From Saleswomen

(By H. H. Rogers, Cincinnati)

A salesforce composed of both men and women is not as efficient as all men or all women, and all women make the most efficient selling organization.

Many dealers employ a salesman for $20 or $25 a week, and he spends most of his time taking care of stock, and yet you wonder why your selling expense is so high.

A good, clean cut, intelligent salesman is hard to find, and if you happen to have one everybody else wants him. He is hard to keep, because dealers are looking for such men to become buyers of departments.

If any of you gentlemen have not had good results from saleswomen it is because you expected too much of them.

You cannot drive a woman. You do not even attempt to go into your home and make your wife do anything. You know better.

Neither can you go into your department and attempt to make a saleswoman do anything, and get by with it.

I treat my girls with respect, and in return I have the respect and confidence of every one of them.

You will have to agree with me, whether you have em-

DR. SCHOLL'S Anterior Metatarsal Arch Support

This scientifically designed appliance is built with an elevation at the anterior end, just beneath the heads of the metatarsal bones. This elevation, correctly adjusted, restores the anterior transverse arch to its normal state, and the cause of the ailment is thus eliminated.

Style No. 1

Style No. 1 has, besides the anterior elevation, a flange at the inner side for supporting the longitudinal arch in cases where there is slight weakness in that part of the foot.

Retail, per pair, $3.00

Style No. 2

Style No. 2 has no flange and is recommended for cases where the longitudinal arch is normal, but elevation is required at the transverse arch.

Retail, per pair, $3.00

Style No. 3

Style No. 3 has the flange and is longer than Nos. 1 and 2, extending farther forward beneath the heads of the second, third, and fourth metatarsal bones. All metal is cut away beneath the first metatarso-phalangeal joint so as not to interfere with the action of the great toe.

Retail, per pair, $3.50

"Watch Your Feet"

ployed saleswomen or not, women are natural born money getters.

I have tired to impress upon you the importance of organization, and now I am going to tell you briefly how I handle and develop saleswomen, and why they are superior to men.

First, my saleswomen are all placed upon the same basis, no one is more important than the other. There are no individual stars. They are all stars.

Turn-overs are not permitted, but we have very few walkouts, and few lookers who do not buy.

The girls are not called in turn, but the floorman tries to use good judgment in calling, so as to give them equal opportunity for sales.

With the exception of beginners, any saleswoman may be called to wait upon the most difficult customer. This gives them confidence.

Partiality and favoritism have wrecked many selling organizations. Saleswomen demand equal rights.

They are all instructed that the most important duty they have to perform is to sell shoes, and to sell a lot of them, and to put away the shoes they show.

Each girl has a small section of stock to attend to. I teach them to feel that stock work is not compulsory, but a sense of duty.

If for any reason they do not attend to their morning stock work, the head of stock comes along and does it for them.

In other words, my handling of saleswomen is an honor system. Each girl knows right from wrong, therefore nothing is compulsory. There is nothing they must, or must not do. They know that by asking permission they can do anything they choose within reason.

Square dealing with your selling organization brings the greatest results. Get closer to them, have more five minute talks with them, and take them into your confidence.

Roundly Condemns P. M. System

(By A. C. McGowin, Philadelphia)

Now, I consider this P. M. business damnable, because in my experience, and we paid it in my early career with the establishment I am now in, it is paid to the drone, because you pay it on top of the salary, whether he has earned the salary or not. Now, you can't pay these excess commissions to him until he has earned his salary. His salary must be as big as that of the best salesman in your line in your city, in your town, or cross roads. You must start with that as a drawing rate. Suppose you hire a new man. You don't get him for less because you are paying him on the commission basis. You are probably paying him more than where he came from, and if you get a good salesman, hold him. You can train the preacher's son if you get him early enough and get him into your business as a stock boy. If your training has not made a real salesman out of that fellow, then boost him into some other branch of the business, because if your training has been worth while from his youth up, it is worth while for you to bear with things that he may have made a failure of in the beginning.

In your P. M. system, as I said, you pay a premium to a fellow not to earn his salary, while by the commission plan you pay a fellow when he has earned his salary, and it is a beautiful thing to go around twice a year and hand out checks, ranging anywhere from $75 to $175 or $200 which pays your people from $3—a $75 check in 26 weeks, just roughly would be $3 a week—more than they had been drawing, and they had been drawing as good salaries as they can get in the best shop next door to you that was not on your commission basis. And that is how commissions work out. It takes a lot of work. If the fellow that starts it—I am not pointing to my own head for I had good hands behind me—but I was a crank in believing in it and I would like to see it established in every shoe store in the land, and if it were established, I want to say to you it would lift the shoe business on a plane above any retail business in the country.

Woeful Wastage in the Store

(By W. S. Byck, Atlanta, Ga.)

The wastage of wrapping and tissue paper, as well as twine, is also an item. Formerly these little expense items cost so much less that no one paid any attention to them. Today they are a big item and a considerable amount in their usage could be saved if the proper effect was put forth. The saving or cartons when shoes are worn out of the store, and re-labeling of them instead of buying new ones, will also be a considerable saving during the year.

Stop giving away laces and other findings. Instead of being an expense, they should be turned into a profit. Try to avoid the sending of so many special delivery packages which cost from 10c. to 25c. to deliver each one.

It costs more to sell goods than formerly, on account of the numerous colors and styles and the higher cost of merchandise. A customer thinks she has to try on both shoes apparently and then decides to look around, thus causing the same customer to be waited on two or three times. The remedy is better clerks, and greater profits on each sale.

Many stores have basements, or second floor departments, which are not utilized except for empty cases or reserve stock. Where there are second floors or basements, why not use the forward part, or half of them, for selling space. Put your children's department upstairs, and put your rubbers, tennis, and cheaper grades of men's, boys', ladies', misses' and children's in the basement. You will find that you can increase your volume of business considerably, and at a cost not exceeding 12 to 15 per cent., and the rent cost nothing. This will bring your profits up, and at the same time keep your ratio of expense down, and enable you to do business easier and relieve the congestion on your main floor in busy times.

How to Hold Farmers' Trade

(By A. Hermann, Chilcothe, Ohio)

Most stores in agricultural districts must carry from the lightest turn shoes for the ladies to the heaviest work shoe for farm use. The farmers in Ohio are fast learning that making up a long list of articles and sending to the mail order houses is a thing of the past; they realize that good service and values can be had in any progressive town and that they receive more intrinsic worth for their money than they can get by ordering by mail. They are learning that if they want good roads and good markets where they can sell their commodities they must help build up their own community; every dollar they send away is a boomerang to themselves, and they know by building up and making their nearest city a prosperous one they are also enriching themselves and putting higher values on their lands.

We have a Fall Festival each year, holding it the last week of September. It is largely attended. The stores make special displays and offer extra inducements at this time.

We have a corn show in December and prizes are offered by the bankers and merchants; we also have a farm institute held the first week in January and papers are read pertaining to farming by men who know. We have a canning factory which does a large business with the farmers. They give an annual dinner to all who raise products for them. They also give prizes for best results attained, and that is how we hold the farmer and his trade. We have a community interest. It pays him and benefits us.

CHARGING TO STOP THE SQUEAK

Speaking of shoes that squeak in the bottom, it may be said that there is very little of this today, but at the same time a pair is seen once in a while that has the same old trouble. Manufacturers who put shoes up in this manner have no excuse to offer as so much has been said on this subject in recent years that everybody ought to know how to avoid it.

Naturally when a repairer is putting a heavy pair of taps on a pair of shoes he will take certain precautions to stop the squeaking. Some of them scrape the flesh side of a tap more or less, and then they put in some French chalk or some felt. Felt appears to be the best to use as it stays there as long as the shoes are worn and will always prevent friction between the two soles, which friction always causes the squeak.

Those who happen to get a pair of shoes that make considerable noise, have to take them to the repairer in order to find a remedy for the squeaking. Some repairers are able to remedy the matter while others are not, but in any case it will cost twenty-five cents to do the job and then the job may not be complete. This is an extra tax which comes on the consumer and a tax that could be easily avoided if proper precautions were taken in the factory where the shoes were made.

Some people have an idea that you can stop squeaking by driving many nails through the soles but the writer has seen shoes that were just as noisy after the bottom was completely covered with nails. In fact, there is only one sure way to stop the squeaking and that is to rip up the soles far enough to get something under them to stop the squeak. That is why the repairer will charge at least twenty-five cents to do the work and even at that he is not making money.

NEWSY HAPPENINGS IN ST. JOHN

Corporal Harry Adams, who was formerly employed on the staff of Ames-Holden-McCready, Limited, wholesale boot and shoe dealers in St. John, has distinguished himself on the battlefields of France. He left Canada attached to a unit with the first Canadian contingent and served in France for nineteen months before he was eventually placed hors de combat by shrapnel from a high explosive shell. He was injured during one of the big engagements at Ypres, but as a result of conspicuous gallantry was awarded the D.C.M. and a Military Medal. He is convalescent at Crowborough.

Fred. P. Lawson, who was formerly employed as shipper with Ames-Holden-McCready, Limited, and who later joined the Customs staff in St. John, is a prisoner of war in Germany. During a big engagement on October 8th, 1916, he was wounded in both legs and taken prisoner.

The annual dinner tendered the employes of Waterbury & Rising, Limited, by the members of the firm took place recently. E. L. Rising, president of the firm, occupied the chair. After many tempting dishes had been disposed of, one of the employes proposed a toast to the firm and Mr. Rising responded. He spoke of the goodwill existing between the firm and the employes. A musical programme was then carried out, after which the gathering broke up with the singing of the national anthem.

Friends of R. J. Walsh, manager of King street store of Waterbury & Rising, Limited, will be pleased to hear that he is on the road to recovery. He has returned to his home after a serious operation in the St. John infirmary.

The firm of C. B. Pidgeon is no more, the last of the stock having been sold by auction a few days ago. Captain Donald F. Pidgeon, of a Canadian Ammunition Column unit, who was manager of the store who recently returned from England, decided to wind up the business as he would be unable to give it his personal attention. The firm was an old established one and many will regret its passing. The shoe department was one of the largest in Indiantown.

CLOTH TOPS AND FIBRE SOLES

That cloth will figure quite extensively in the making up of samples for next fall styles in women's footwear is gathered in a summing up of the expressions of leaders in the western shoe manufacturing industry. On a recent tour of the trade the manufacturers were asked point blank if cloth would be used to any great extent in the next fall shoes and the answer in most cases was that many of the samples would contain colored cloth tops, and every effort would be made to interest the dealers in buying these goods, but they had no assurance that cloth tops would "take" with the retailers and public and for that reason there was general hesitancy in predicting that cloth tops would prove popular.

Fibre soles are also going to be used quite extensively in shoe manufacturing plants. These soles will be shown in all the samples, in women's, men's and children's lines, according to many of the foremost Queen City manufacturers.

A number of the manufacturers were in New York City last week attending the annual convention of the National Boot and Shoe Manufacturers' Association, at the Hotel Astor, and they are expected back this week with a complete report of the happenings at the big meeting. Several dispatches from the meeting tell of the adoption by the convention of a recommendation to use proved substitutes for sole leather in the future, or until such time as this leather takes a tumble in price.

NOW OPERATING IN NEW FACTORY

The F. & B. Shoe, Limited, have begun to operate in their new factory at 86 Avenue Champetre, Montreal East. The new plant is an admirable one in every respect, the capacity being about 6,000 pairs weekly. Several new lines in McKays are being made in addition to the present range of turns. The building is 45 by 60 feet, three storeys high, with an extension 18 by 24 feet. It is erected of brick, possesses all modern conveniences, and is a decided step in advance on the part of this progressive firm, the founders of which are F. Favreau and J. A. Blais. A. LaPointe is the energetic manager of the company. Messrs. Favreau, Blais and LaPointe form a strong business combination and are thoroughly aggressive. The company formerly operated at 510 La Salle avenue, Maisonneuve, but business has been increasing to such an extent that it was necessary to secure larger quarters, and in their new home the F. & B. Shoe, Limited, will be in a better position than ever to make prompt deliveries.

THE MINER SHOE COMPANY FORMED

The interests controlling the Miner Rubber Company, Limited, have recently acquired possession of the wholesale boot and shoe business heretofore conducted under the style of Jackson & Savage, Limited, of Montreal. The title of the corporation has been changed to the Miner Shoe Company,

A. R. ANGUS, GENERAL SALES MANAGER OF THE COMPANY

Limited, and the same business policies will be brought to bear in the new organization that have made a success of the Miner Rubber Company's business in the Dominion since its inception a few year's ago.

While the factory and main warehouse of the company will be continued in Montreal as heretofore, it is the intention of the new management to open branch warehouses in the cities of Toronto and Quebec and gradually extend a chain of service depots from coast to coast in Canada.

The Miner Shoe Company will continue to act, in succession to Jackson & Savage, Limited, as the exclusive selling agents of the product of the Miner Rubber Company's factory in the districts of Montreal and Ottawa.

The organization is such that greater effectiveness in sale and distribution of the company's lines of leather footwear are assured. A. R. Angus continues as general sales manager.

AGAIN RE-ELECTED AS TRUSTEES

The annual meeting of the Commercial Travelers' Mutual Benefit Society was held in Toronto on January 27th. Reports showed the society paid during the year $34,753.70 in death claims, in addition to an investment of $23,000 in the Dominion War Loan. The total amount of the funds invested, and in the bank was $94,947.67. Among the trustees re-elected for the coming year are S. R. Wickett, of the firm of Wickett & Craig, leather manufacturers, Toronto, and A. J. Tipping, of the traveling staff of D. D. Hawthorne & Co., Toronto, both of whom have been trustees for many years.

CLOTH TOPS LEADING FEATURES AT ROCHESTER

The Rochester Shoe Fair, at Rochester, N.Y., was an event that attracted not only the shoe buying public, but also the consumer. The ladies of the Flower City were specially invited by the retailers to visit the displays arranged by the shoe manufacturers in the Powers Hotel, in the afternoons and evenings. The exhibits were put on by the manufacturers having separate rooms. In the evenings attractive ladies, who were beautifully gowned, gave a demonstration of the leading creations. Prevailing styles in the better makes were women's patent vamps, black cloth top, 8-inch, button and bal. Women's patent vamp, pearl grey cloth, 8-inch top, button and bal, and women's plain black kid. It was predicted by many retailers that these lines will be strong sellers for early spring and fall trade.

Pearl grey kid vamp and foxing, with pearl grey cloth top were considered extremely new and chic. Black vamps with white tops were also shown very prominently. Havana brown, with cloth tops to match, and also gunmetal, with black and grey tops to match were much displayed and attracted considerable attention. In sport shoes were observed many offerings in bewildering varieties—tan, gunmetal and white buck. The tanners of white buck are finding it impossible to supply the demand. Tan calf is considered a second and blacks a third. The Tuxedo pattern was shown very prominently. Eleven-eight inch on sport shoes was the prevailing height of heels. A number of Canadian manufacturers, retailers and salesmen were present at the styles show, which was well managed.

MINER RUBBER COMPANY EXTENDS BUSINESS

The Miner Rubber Company, Limited, has purchased the Canadian business of the F. S. Carr Rubber Company, of Boston, Mass., whose Canadian factory, a fine modern plant, was located at Granby, Que., on property immediately adjoining the Miner Rubber Company's footwear plant in that busy town. In addition to well known lines of rubber footwear they will manufacture staple lines of clothing, double texture cloths for automobile tops, etc., rubber soles, heels and other specialties for the mechanical and shoe trades. The Miner Rubber Company will no doubt win the success in this new undertaking that has characterized all its efforts in the past, in which quality has always been the watchword.

ANOTHER SHOEMAN HONORED BY ELECTORS

A. J. Gahagan, of the Woodstock Footwear Store, Woodstock, Ont., who was recently re-elected a member of the city council, has been made chairman of the Fire and Light

A. J. GAHAGAN, WOODSTOCK, ONT.

Committee, and a member of the Finance Committee for the coming season. Mr. Gahagan was one of the three old aldermen to be re-elected, and in his municipal experience has served on every committee on the council. He was first elected a civic father in 1913, was out of municipal life the following year, but was returned in 1915-16-17. Alderman Gahagan went to Woodstock in 1906 and started in the shoe business, where he has worked up a good trade in reliable and up-to-date footwear.

REMEMBERED ON HIS BIRTHDAY

Mr. Charles K. Palmer head of the John Palmer Co., and one of the leading business men of Fredericton, was recently presented with a handsome leather chair and a pipe by a number of his friends. The occasion was Mr. Palmer's birthday and he was tendered a surprise dinner party at his home. A pleasant evening was spent, Mr. Palmer being taken entirely by surprise when the presentation was made.

OLDEST SOLE LEATHER TANNER PASSES

A veteran leather man, who possessed the unique distinction of being the oldest sole leather tanner in the world, passed away on January 22nd, at his home, 77 Englewood avenue, Brookline, Mass., in the person of Mr. Brackley Shaw, aged 88 years. He was born at Cummington, Mass., in 1829, where he was educated in the district school until he was sixteen years old. In 1848, in company with his brothers, he made his first contract to tan hides for Moseley Poor & Sons. The contract was to convert a lot of Singapore buffalo hides into sole leather. The price for the work was 53¢ cents a pound for the leather delivered at their store on North street, Boston. From that early date until his death Mr. Brackley Shaw had been prominently identified with the leather trade, holding the office of President of the Anglo-Canadian Leather Co., who have tanneries at Huntsville and Bracebridge and warehouses in Montreal, Quebec and Toronto.

The firm are the largest tanners of sole leather in the British Empire, their plants having a capacity of four thousand sides a day. The tannery of John Pratt, at Roxton Falls, Que., was taken over in 1859, after he had spent several years at his trade in Maine, and the business was carried on under the name of F. Shaw Bros. At that time the province of Quebec was covered with hemlock growth which has since been exhausted. Foreseeing this contingency, Mr. Shaw's company began building tanneries in Ontario and the present extensive establishments at Huntsville and Bracebridge are the outcome of this progressive move. The Anglo-Canadian Leather Co. was formed about twelve years ago, succeeding Shaw, Cassils & Co., Montreal, taking over the interest of

Mr. Cassils. C. Thaxter Shaw, of Montreal, vice-president and treasurer of the company, is a son, and C. O. Shaw, of Huntsville, general manager, is a nephew of the deceased, whose passing will be genuinely regretted by a large number of friends. A pioneer in the sole leather business and a man of sterling worth, high character and progressive ideals has gone to his reward.

BE FIRM IN YOUR "PRICE TONE"

"If a man does not get a reasonable price for his goods, I attribute it largely to his own fault," remarked a shrewd retailer, who believes in getting a fair profit on all his lines and still keeps them on the move.

"Now, in connection with the recent increase in the price of rubbers," he said, "when clerks come to sell them, they adopt a half-hearted, apologetic, doubtful or timid sort of air, as much as to say—'We have to charge so much, but we awfully hate to do it, or we feel as if we were taking money which we do not deserve.'

"I have increased the price of all my rubber footwear to correspond with replacement values. When people come in to buy rubbers, or overshoes, many a salesman will say, on being asked the price: 'Oh, I am afraid I will have to charge you so-and-so,' or 'You know rubbers have gone up 12 to 15 per cent., or 'Rubbers are much higher in price now than they were last year.'

"When I am asked my price on rubber shoes, storm Alaskas, storm rubbers, lumbermen's goods, etc., I say briskly, $1.50, $2.00, $2.50, $3.50, as the case may be. Perhaps I will be met with the astonished exclamation—'What!' and I again repeat, in a distinct and decisive tone—although not in an unpleasant way—the figure, giving the impression that there is no dilly-dallying about my selling quotations. It is time enough if the price is questioned, or the cause asked, for a salesman to start in explaining how it is that these goods now cost more, and the reason that prices have gone up, etc. Name your price clearly and quickly, without any qualifying adjectives or subjunctive sentences. These can be added afterwards.

"I have had people say—'Oh, I will not pay the figure you are asking; I will go some place else,' but I find that nine out of ten of these patrons, realizing that I am only getting an honest profit, will not bother running elsewhere. They could not do much better any way, except perhaps with some Cheap John—and willingly hand me over the money. I had no fewer than three cases of this kind yesterday. Each person was going to walk out, but evidently they approved of my prices and service, or were impressed with my plain and simple manner of treating my patrons, and so I made my sales."

MAKING GOOD IN THE SHOE GAME

W. A. Colson is an Ottawa boy who went west several years ago and broke into the shoe game. For the past seven years he has been showing samples, closing sales and establishing an intimate connection with his customers. He covers the territory from Fort William to Regina and Saskatoon. His first position was with the Winnipeg branch of the Canadian Consolidated Rubber Co., with whom he remained four years. He was then with W. A. Marsh, Western, Limited, and when Arthur Congdon took an interest in the latter firm and it became Congdon, Marsh & Co., he remained on their selling staff. The company specialize in the "Marsh High Merit" shoes, "C.M." shoes, and Miner rubbers. Mr. Colson is of a genial disposition, a good salesman and has always taken an interest in athletics.

W. A. COLSON, WINNIPEG

MISREPRESENTATION MEANS LOSS OF POSITION

"The best stunt that I pulled off when I started business a few years ago," remarked a leading Ontario shoeman the other day, "was by selling twenty-five pairs of five-dollar shoes at half price. I sent out notices announcing the fact that, in order to get acquainted with customers, I would sell the first twenty-five pairs at exactly half price and I kept my promise. When I opened up in the morning there were already a dozen persons in waiting and, as each one entered he or she was given a numbered card. The feat was talked of among the people, for genuine bargains were secured. I calculated that the advertising, which probably cost me forty dollars, was among the best that I have ever done. The successful ones all spoke about their good fortune and soon trade began coming my way. I took in over a hundred and fifty dollars the first day which, considering the rather limited area I had to cater to at that time, was really a remarkable showing. I have never lacked customers since.

"One thing that I have always insisted upon is correct fitting and rigid honesty in all statements made about the goods that I sell. If I catch a clerk telling a lady that such and such a boot is 3-B and it is a 3½-D, I warn the offender that he will be released if ever such a thing occurs again. If a customer finds out that misrepresentation has been resorted to in the sale of a single pair, she at once starts talking among her friends and can do you an infinite amount of harm. Be truthful under all circumstances. I had another clerk once, when he was asked if 'such a shoe was American make' replied 'Oh, yes.'

"I was informed of the incident later and, when I questioned him about mis-stating matters he attempted to split hairs by explaining that he had really not falsified as the shoe was made in 'North America.' It was one that was manufactured in Montreal and, therefore, North America, according to the specious plea which this smart fellow put up. I soon got rid of him for he would quibble time and again on the make, sizes, and widths of footwear. Everyone in my employ must be above suspicion or a desire to misrepresent. Fair, square dealing pays every time in the building of permanent, paying patronage, which is the only kind that really counts.

THE FELT SHOE AND ITS SEASON

For quite a few years now certain factories, especially in the Beverly (Mass.) district, have been making a great specialty of felt work. This felt work is not confined to house shoes or slippers or that class of work, but runs in street shoes for both men and women in the majority of cases. Of course, a good many house shoes are being made in these plants, but at the same time, these are the factories that have been making a specialty of felt goods for street wear, and they have been doing it to a greater extent than factories located elsewhere.

They cannot make felt shoes all the year round in Beverly or elsewhere, or at least they have not been doing it up to the present time, as they run on these goods from March till December. Of course, the season may extend well into January in some of the factories, but it may start later in the spring. The regular run, however, will extend some eight or nine months each year, and during this time the plants seem to have all they can do on the felt line of goods.

The idea in making a felt shoe is not to make a cheaper shoe by any means, although it is likely that this sort of footwear can be made at less expense than the regular leather grades. The main idea seems to be to make a shoe that is warm for the foot, and because of this about all of these felt shoes go to that part of the country where the climate is most severe. The majority of them probably go to the Northwest, where the people seem to require warm shoes more than elsewhere, and it is a curious fact to note that the demand for these shoes holds steady in that part of the country to a far greater extent than it does elsewhere. Here in New England quite a few of these felt boots and shoes were worn something like twenty years ago. There are a few of them being worn to-day, but the demand is not nearly what it was two decades ago.

A felt shoe can be all felt, as the bottom can be made of that material as well as the upper. The heel can be of rubber, of felt or of leather, or it can be a combination of the three. Then again, the felt upper can be made extra warm by being lined with a heavy woollen cloth. Some of these are made that way, in fact, and they are often called wool-lined bals, but they can be made in a blucher bal, or any other particular pattern that may be called for. As a rule they are all made on wide lasts, on roomy lasts, and most of the shoes carry a low, broad heel, as they are put up for comfort as well as for warmth.—Shoe Topics.

SHOEMAN, SPORTSMAN, FRATERNALIST, FIREMAN

H. R. Scott, shoe merchant, of Seaforth, Ont., whose establishment is known as the "Home of Good Shoes," has been in the boot game for seven years, the first four being with Thomas Richardson under the firm name of Richardson & Scott. The cut on page 23 affords a good view of the interior of his store, where all up-to-date lines of footwear are handled, as well as trunks, suit cases and club bags. Mr. Scott has found business very satisfactory the past year and looks forward with every promise to a good trade in 1917.

He is a Seaforth boy and has always evinced a deep interest in many matters outside of the shoe line, having held the position of District Deputy Grand Master of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows in 1915 and taking a very active part in all branches of the order. He is also a Mason, and holds the position of secretary of the Seaforth Fire Brigade, being a former vice-president of Volunteer Firemen's Association of Ontario. Mr. Scott also held the secretaryship of the Beaver Lacrosse Club of Seaforth and of the Huron Football Club of that town, both of which organizations are well known for their records in past years.

MORE EQUIPMENT FOR SHOE FACTORIES

Many factories in Western Ontario are installing new equipment and getting ready for a very busy season. Among the machines recently installed by the U. S. M. Co. in the Kitchener district are:—The Hurlbut Co., Limited, Preston, Ont., 1 improved geared sole cutting machine, Model CC; the Greb Shoe Co., Limited, Kitchener, Ont., Pluma skiving machine, Model D, Crown tip punching machine, Model P, U.S.M.C. ESTABLISHES NEW WHOLESALE BUSINESS

E. J. Fleetwood, for many years connected with the St. John, N.B., branch of Ames-Holden-McCready, from which he resigned the management several months ago to enter business on his own behalf, has opened an office and wareroom at 154 Prince William street in St. John. He was busy all the fall establishing his connection with the trade, interviewing retailers personally and taking orders for spring. Mr. Fleetwood reports that he has been very successful and that trade in the maritime provinces has been exceptionally good. Heavier orders than usual were placed in anticipation of higher prices and also to ensure deliveries for spring. Goods are now coming in quite freely.

Mr. Fleetwood adds that he is well satisfied with the start that he has made and while his business has so far been confined largely to boys', youths' and little gents', misses', children's and infants' lines, he is now branching out in men's and women's. Manufacturers seem up in the air as regards prices and are reticent about quoting figures for future deliveries, which makes it hard for the jobber to know what to do, "especially one just starting like myself," remarked Mr. Fleetwood, "but I must say that, on the whole, they have been very reasonable and willing to do all they can, in view of the exceptional conditions, to assist me in getting under way and I am making fine progress."

WALK-OVER MEN IN SESSION

S. E. Wygant, of the Walk-Over Boot Shop, Montreal, F. A. Guinivan, T. L. Guinivan and Dr. G. L. Conquergood, of the Walk-Over Boot Shop, Toronto, attended the annual convention of Walk-Over shoe representatives, which was held recently at the Statler Hotel, Cleveland, Ohio. In connection with the gathering there was a representative styles show for the coming season, and many interesting educational and social features.

AMONG THE SHOE MEN.

At a recent meeting of the Executive of the Toronto Council of Women, a letter was read from the National Council pointing out the seriousness of the evil that arises from alleged "badly made boots." A good deal of discussion was aroused and the letter was placed on the table until further information was received.

An interesting feature of the Hotel Commonwealth, soon to be erected in the heart of New York's theatre and shopping districts, at an outlay of fifteen million dollars, will be the great display rooms for buyers and salesmen, to occupy an entire floor of the great hostelry, and designed with a special view to their needs and requirements. Here merchandise of all descriptions may be shown at any time, saving much time, bother and money on the part of both salesman and buyer.

The Lion Polish Co., Limited, 525 King street west, Toronto, report a splendid demand for their Lion Black Oil Dye. This dye, which has no disagreeable odor when used, is, as is well known to the trade, used for dyeing faded or soiled tan shoes black. Such shoes are made a beautiful black by application of this preparation, which is put up in any desired quantity from a very small to a gallon can. Any retailer who forwards his name to the company will be sent a free sample of the Lion Black Oil Dye which the manufacturers state is the best on the market today.

The Campbellton Tribune says a representative of a Massachusetts concern who was recently in Campbellton arranged with the Shives Lumber Co. to ship to their factory some two carloads of cedar bark. This bark which has heretofore been usually burned along with other refuse was saved from the cedar blocks from which the shingles are cut and the two carloads got together and shipped to the Massachusetts concern. This shipment was an entirely experimental one, and should it prove satisfactory no doubt the bark which heretofore has been of no value will now find a ready and profitable market. The concern to whom it was shipped expects to make from it through a cooking process an imitation leather, or rather a stock suitable for the counter and insoles of boots and shoes.

The east end shoe retailers of Toronto have come to an agreement by which their stores are closed every Wednesday afternoon, thus enabling the merchants and their clerks to enjoy a half holiday.

A recent despatch from Boston says that it is understood that a big contract for sole leather aggregating probably 1,000,000 sides and valued at $10,000,000 to $11,000,000 has just been closed by Russia. Central Leather Company is in all probability the principal in the transaction. It is thought that Central Leather Company may take half the order and that the balance will be split up among other concerns in the leather district. This contract is for delivery over the next three or four months and is the second huge order placed here by Russia within a comparatively short time. It has been known for some days that Russian agents have been negotiating with Central Leather Company and others for a large block of leather.

GIVING SUCCESSFUL DEMONSTRATIONS OF FOOT SPECIALTIES

R. J. Orr, Ontario representative of the Canadian Arrow-smith Manufacturing Co., Niagara Falls, Ont., recently gave a demonstration in the shoe store of C. E. Smith, Peterboro. Mr. Smith made judicious use of window display and other advertising matter, as shown in the cut, as well as by using the local newspapers, with the result that the demonstration was a pronounced success from every standpoint.

The Canadian Arrow-smith Manufacturing Co., intend giving a series of demonstrations in several towns and cities of Ontario, under the direction of Mr. Orr. The company report that business is booming with them, and that the January sales were greater than those of any single month since they began business in Canada several years ago. This is a most promising start for 1917.

Jerry Robinson, the widely-known department store owner, of Winnipeg, accompanied C. H. Newton, manager of the shoe department, and Mrs. Newton, was among the recent visitors to Toronto, Montreal, New York and other eastern shoe centres on a buying trip. They called upon many members of the trade.

In a serious fire, which broke out a few days ago in Athens, Ont., the shoe store of S. A. Coons was burned, with a heavy loss. The business portion of the village was saved after a hard fight, although the telephone exchange and lighting plant were destroyed. The blaze started in a hardware store adjoining Mr. Coon's premises.

The assets of A. Piche, shoe dealer, Quebec, were recently sold.

Among the recent callers on the trade in Toronto were Wm. Shore, Stratford; J. D. McArthur, Guelph; R. A. Briscoe, Galt; A. M. McPhail, Uxbridge; J. C. Sherin, Lakefield, and E. Graham, Guelph.

G. D. Christie, shoe retailer, of Victoria, was a recent visitor to the factories in Montreal and Quebec.

W. A. Moyer of Winnipeg, who has opened a new shoe store in that city at 266 Portage avenue, spent a few days in Toronto and other eastern points recently on business.

E. E. McIntyre, of Toronto, who represents the Brandon Shoe Co., Brantford, is spending a few weeks in New York City on a visit.

At a meeting of the National Fraternity of Shoemaker Mechanics, a local union with a membership of 1,500 in Quebec, a resolution was unanimously passed urging all the members to sign the national service card.

The many friends of E. W. McTear, who has been on the traveling staff of P. Jacobi, shoe store supplies, Toronto, for many years, will sympathize with him in the death of his father, which took place on January 15th in his eighty-fifth year. The late William McTear was born in Liverpool, England, and came to Toronto in 1883.

A. C. Clark, the practical shoe sales specialist, was in Toronto recently, having returned from New Ontario, where he has conducted very successfully some large shoe sales for merchants in Sudbury, Haileybury, Sault Ste. Marie and Cobalt. Mr. Clark, who has removed from Brantford to 491 Brunswick avenue, Toronto, is widely known to the trade in his line. He has conducted sales of surplus stocks all over the province and realized handsomely on them. All negotiations with him are strictly confidential.

The Regal Shoe Co., College and Bathurst streets, Toronto, are completely located in their new premises, which have lots of light, plenty of space and ideal working conditions. The company have installed large additional equipment, in order to bring the plant up to the last minute in facilities and to materially increase the output of the factory. A Goodyear upper stapler, a model C pulling over machine, a Rex upper trimming machine, a U. S. M. Co. insole tacker, a U. S. M. Co. insole heel seat trimmer and an Economy insole outfit are among the machines recently installed.

Walter Burnill, late vice-president of the Toronto Shoe Retailers' Association, and a member of the Executive for the coming year, who has not been enjoying good health for some time, has gone to Florida, where he will spend the remainder of the winter. His many friends hope that he will be completely restored to strength.

The Brandon Shoe Co., of Brantford, Ont., have recently added among other new equipment—a model K welting machine supplied by the United Shoe Machinery Co.

The shoe store of Cohen's Limited, 569 St. Catherine street east, Montreal, was recently damaged by water and smoke owing to a fire which broke out next door.

Sergt.-Major Steele, son of Mr. Harry Steele, superintendent of the Parker Shoe Company, Preston, has received the D.C.M. for valor on the field of battle. Sergt.-Major Steele went overseas with the first contingent as a private.

On November 11th last he was decorated with the meritorious service medal for valuable services rendered during the present war. Following this the cables announced on Wednesday of last week that he had been decorated with the Distinguished Conduct Medal for gallantry on the field. A very pleasant coincidence is the fact that it was his 28th birthday.

Mr. Van Orden, superintendent for Getty & Scott Limited, Galt, Ont., who has been ill for some time, is expected to be able to resume his duties in a few days.

Mr. Sturgis, representing the United Last Co., Montreal, spent several days in Toronto and Western Ontario with a snappy line of high-class lasts both in men's and women's.

There are 92 shoe manufacturing enterprises in Lynn, including the contract shops, according to American Shoemaking Directory for 1917. It is estimated that they make 100,000 pairs of shoes daily, and that to make the shoes they cut up more than 300,000 feet of upper leather and employ 15,000 shoe workers. Most of the shoe manufacturing enterprises of Lynn are small concerns, making from 1,000 to 2,000 pairs of shoes daily. Three firms have a capacity of 5,000 pairs, two of 6,000 pairs, and one of 7,000 pairs.

W. HEBERT, OF GAGNON, LACHAPPELLE & HEBERT, SHOE MANUFACTURERS, MONTREAL, IS BACK TO WORK AGAIN AFTER BEING ILL FOR NEARLY THREE MONTHS WITH TYPHOID FEVER

Shoe manufacturers with plenty of capital and good reputation for taking all they bargained for, state freely that they think now is a good time to place orders for next fall shoes and are backing up their opinion by obligating themselves for deliveries to be made in the early part of next summer.

Miss Fleming, forelady of the fitting department of the Blachford Shoe Mfg. Co., entertained the girls, one hundred in number, recently, and a most enjoyable evening was spent. Miss Fleming, previous to her present position, was for eleven years forelady of the Minister-Myles Shoe Co., Toronto.

F. E. Woodward & Sons, of Lachine, Que., have opened a sales office at 232 Lemoine street, Montreal. The office will be in charge of R. E. Woodward as sales manager.

Billy Sunday, the celebrated evangelist, visited Lynn, Mass., recently, and preached and inspected the shoe shops. In the factory of A. E. Little & Co. they measured the feet of Billy Sunday and "Ma" Sunday and made shoes for them while they waited, a matter of fifteen or twenty minutes. Shoes also were fitted on the Sundays in the factories of E. W. Burt & Co. and of Williams & Clark.

T. J. Mullins, of the staff of the Kaufman Rubber Co., Toronto, has returned from his former home in Halifax, N.S., where he was attending the funeral of his mother who passed away a few days ago at an advanced age.

The Saskatoon branch of the Saskatchewan Retail Merchants' Association recently held a window trimming contest among the business places of the city. The stores were grouped into three classes. In class A which included dry goods, clothing, dry goods, clothing, men's furnishings, tailor, hat, shoe and millinery establishments, the Royal Shoe Store, Second avenue, won honorable mention.

John F. Clark and Jas. F. Clark, of Clark Bros., Limited, shoe manufacturers, St. Stephen, N.B., spent a few days in Montreal last week on business.

H. G. Middleton, of H. G. Middleton Co., wholesale shoes, Winnipeg, was in Montreal, Quebec and Toronto last week on business and called upon a number of members of the trade. He reports business in the West as being good and the prospects excellent.

F. A. Woods, of the Cairns department store, Saskatoon, and formerly of the staff of the Regal Shoe Store, Winnipeg, spent a few days recently in that city on a visit.

The factory of Eugene Guay, 230 St. Marguerite street, Montreal, was visited by a serious fire recently. The two upper floors of the plant were wrecked and the machinery damaged by fire. The loss is estimated at $15,000. A large stock of leather counters, etc., was eaten up by the flames.

Ed. R. Lewis, of Toronto, spent a few days in Montreal, Boston and New York on business during the past week.

A. Brandon, of the Brandon Shoe Co., Brantford, is spending a few days in Philadelphia and Boston on business.

A recent despatch from Saskatoon says: "Percy H. Parrott, lately of the Parrott Shoe Company, of this city, American Hide and Leather in the quarter ended December 31st earned $1,069,962 for its $13,000,000 preferred stock, equivalent to 8.23 per cent. for the quarter, or at the annual rate of nearly 33 per cent. This breaks all previous records.

At the recent municipal elections in Victoria, B.C., G. D. Christie, shoe merchant of that city, was elected an

SUGGESTION FOR RUBBER COMPANIES

Enclosed please find express order for two years' subscription to the "Shoe and Leather Journal" which we regret was not attended to before this.

We are always glad to have the Journal, and pleased to see by a late number that the rubber companies are cutting out making second quality rubbers. If they would at the same time cut out guaranteeing rubbers of any kind it would be a great blessing to a large percentage of the retail dealers, and would be a great financial saving to the manufacturers.

Wishing the Journal every success, we remain, alderman, standing fourth on the list. Ald. Christie who was given strong support, he was formerly a member of the Board of School Trustees. Many friends in the trade will congratulate him on his new honor and are confident he will make an energetic and faithful representative of the ratepayers in the capital city of the Pacific Coast province.

Yours truly,

Miss Clara Burgess, who for some time past has been cashier in the Slater Shoe Store, King street east, Hamilton, has taken a position with the National Cash Register Co. of that city.

A recent despatch from Winnipeg says: "Albert Geller, a bookkeeper in the Quebec Shoe Store, appeared in police court to face charges of complicity in an alleged fraud committed by Abraham J. Taub, manager of the store. A. J. Andrews and A. M. Shinbane appeared for Geller and Taub. R. A. Bonnar, K.C., and H. P. Grundy appeared for the prosecution, which was conducted by Wilfred J. Pocock, of the Pocock Shoe Store. Evidence that an account opened in Taub's name, to be charged against his salary, was later transferred to his wife's name, and that he collected his salary without deducting the items in that account was introduced by the prosecution. The charge is that creditors were defrauded by that means. The case was adjourned before the prosecution had concluded. Taub will appear on a similar charge as soon as the case against Geller is over.

General Sales Co., Stair Building, Toronto

H. R. Hamilton, of Montreal, who has been manager of the eastern division of Gutta Percha & Rubber, Limited, has joined the head office staff, Toronto, being appointed assistant manager of the shoe department, under R. H. Greene, and has entered upon his new duties. Mr. Hamilton's successor in Montreal is R. B. Reid, who has been assistant manager for some time. Chadwick Mather, of the head office staff, Toronto, has been attached to the Ontario division, of which W. H. Alderson is manager, and will give particular attention to the shoe department. The Ontario division has opened new quarters at 45 Yonge street, Toronto.

L. L. Ward, who, for the past year and a half, has been on the staff of the Invictus Boot Shop, 93 Yonge street, Toronto, has just been appointed manager. He succeeds J. L. Chisholm, who has resigned to enter business with his brother, M. S. Chisholm, they having taken over the widely known establishment of their brother, A. Chisholm, 1680 Dundas street. The latter has retired, after sixteen years in the retail shoe line, in which he was most successful and built up a splendid connection. Mr. Ward, the new manager of the Invictus Boot Shop, has had eighteen years' experience in the shoe game, having worked in some of the largest stores in Bradford, Leeds and Liverpool, England. He came to Canada three years ago and has since resided in Toronto, having been on the staff of the Regal Shoe Store, Walter Burnill and latterly the Invictus Boot Shop.

Geo. A. Slater, of Geo. A. Slater Limited, Montreal, spent a few days in Toronto during the past week.

Major F. P. Myles, of the 170th Battalion, who has been in England and France, has returned home. Major Myles is a member of the firm of Minister-Myles Shoe Co. and will spend some time in Canada.

R. B. Chalue, of Toronto, who represents several eastern

J. F. Tobin, for several years in charge of the cutting room of the Brandon Shoe Co., Brantford, has accepted a similar position with the Regal Shoe Co., Toronto.

At a meeting of the Executive of the Toronto Shoe Retailers' Association, held this week, it was decided to hold a dinner on Thursday, March 8th, in the Board of Trade rooms, Royal Bank Building. There will be some noted speakers from outside points to address the gathering, which will be limited exclusively to shoemen. The tickets have been placed at one dollar each and it is expected there will be a very large attendance.

J. A. McLaren, of McLaren & Dallas, Toronto, and Hugh White, of the White Shoe Co., Toronto, have returned from an extended business trip to Montreal, Quebec and Boston. While in the latter city, they saw Walter May, one of Mr. White's side partners on his fishing trip of last year. It may be stated that already in company with Edgar Clement, of Quebec, Mr. May and Mr. White are lining up a plan of action for next summer, which is going to throw into the shade any fishing trip that has hitherto been attempted. Mr. Emile Gagnon's friends warn him that an attempt is going to be made to wrest his vigorously won honors from him, and that he must be on the alert to safeguard them. On the other hand, it is whispered that Fred Marois, of Quebec, and Mr. Gagnon have a certain scheme which they are now developing, but they will not divulge it for fear of it reaching the ears of Mr. White and his confederates, who, Mr. Marois says, would stop at nothing in their efforts to capture the much-coveted SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL trophy for 1917. It is murmured, however, that there are one or two dark horses who are going to enter the competition but "more of this anon."

W. F. Martin and W. E. Short, of the Kingsbury Footwear Co., Montreal, spent a few days in Boston and other shoe centres during the past week.

E. R. McBride, manager of the Haines Shoe Houses, Belleville, spent a few days in Toronto and Kitchener, lately on business.

Hugh Davidson, of the Macfarlane Shoe Co., Montreal, spent a few days in Boston and other shoe centres recently.

W. E. Woelfle, of the Woelfle Shoe Co., Kitchener, Ont., was a recent caller upon the trade in Montreal and Toronto.

The many friends of J. T. Lawson, shoe retailer, of Regina, Sask., will sympathize with him in the death of his mother which took place at Orangeville on January 15th, at an advanced age. Mr. Lawson has been spending some time in Ontario.

A number of jobbers are taking time by the forelock, and showing all fabric shoes for the coming season in brown, grey and black. They carry eight inch tops, Louis heel, and come considerably cheaper than all leather shoes. Several manufacturers will in their new samples include a pleasing and varied range of cloth tops and all cloth shoes.

W. G. Parsons, of C. Parsons and Son, leather merchants, Toronto, has returned from spending a few days at Atlantic City. Mr. Parsons was recently married in New York City to Miss M. E. Cruso, of Cobourg, Ontario.

Bennett, Limited, with a capital stock of $300,000, and headquarters in Chambly Canton, Quebec, have been federally incorporated. The company are empowered to manufacture, buy, sell, deal in fibre, any fibrous material, hides, leather, any and all leather products, fibre-board, leather-board, shoe-findings, counters, boots, shoes and footwear of every kind and description; and to carry on the business of tanners, dyers and bleachers.

Geo. C. Wilson, who for several years has been the Western Canada representative of the James Muir Co., Montreal, has entered upon his new duties as superintendent of the factory. Mr. Wilson is a thoroughly practical shoe-man, who has had a complete insight into both the selling and making ends of the business.

Harry Lyons, head of the firm of Lyons & Co., shoe store supplies, 122 Duane street, New York, was in Toronto last week, calling upon members of the trade.

D. D. Hawthorne, of D. D. Hawthorne & Co., wholesale shoes, Toronto, is, his many friends will regret to learn, confined to the house, seriously ill. For some months Mr. Hawthorne's health has not been of the best, but he has managed to come down to business most of the time.

H. D. McKellar, of Kitchener, was calling upon the wholesale trade last week in Montreal with a fine range of felt footwear samples.

Robt. D. Ayling, of Toronto, Canadian representative of Church & Co., Northampton, Eng., who has been confined in the hospital for six weeks, owing to an attack of fever, is able to be around again and is once more calling upon the trade.

Blachford, Davies & Co., Toronto, have issued a pretty calendar to their many friends and customers. It is entitled "Orchids," and depicts an attractive young lady, attired in evening dress, carrying a bouquet of orchids and waiting for someone. The coloring is most artistic.

Joseph Duffy, of the Yale Shoe Store, Winnipeg, has resumed his duties after two weeks holidays.

L. D. Farewell, of Winnipeg, who represents the Hartt Boot & Shoe Co. of Fredericton, N.B., is spending a few days in Fredericton, Montreal, Toronto and other points. He is a son of John Farewell, of the selling staff of D. D. Hawthorne, Toronto, who is the oldest shoe traveler in years of service.

The Sovereign Mitt and Glove Company, who suffered a loss by fire of their entire plant and stock at Delhi recently, are placing machinery and raw material in the plant of the Unique Shoe Factory at Simcoe, Ont. It is rumored that an agreement has been reached and that the new firm will possibly be known as the Simcoe Mitt and Shoe Co.

THEY COVER THEIR GROUND THOROUGHLY AND WELL

A profitable and successful conference was recently held by the travelers and heads of departments of Daoust, Lalonde & Co., Montreal, and the Metropolitan Shoe Co. They have issued a handsome calendar, presenting splendid illustrations of the shoe factory, tannery and wholesale warehouse, together with the officers of the company and heads of departments. The firm employ eleven travelers, who thoroughly cover their ground. In the accompanying illustration the following familiar faces of the members of the selling staff are seen. Reading from left to right: —1, J. Jobin; 2, H. Champagne; 3, O. Paiement, sales manager; 4, O. A. Lachapelle; 5, J. H. Auget; 6, E. A. Chalk; 7, L. Lamarre; 8, E. Desjardins; 9, W. F. Copp; 10, A. Champagne; 11, J. Larue.

In a $60,000 blaze in the business section of Strathroy, Ont., recently, in which two stores were burned and two flooded, Freel's Shoe Store suffered a heavy loss from water.

Frank Adams, of Adams Bros., Limited, of Winnipeg, spent a few days in Toronto recently on business.

G. J. Scott, Western Canadian representative for P. Jacobi, shoe store supplies, Toronto, leaves next week on an ex-

W. A. Lane, leather merchant, of Montreal, spent a few days in Toronto recently.

Several shoe manufacturers are already working on their fall models and among the firms which are well advanced in this respect is the Minister-Myles Shoe Co., Toronto, who are showing some of the latest creations in all-cloth boots and those with cloth top and grey or ivory kid, purple, mahogany and patent leather vamps. Among the new fabrics are broidiere, which has a raised effect, and is particularly attractive, crinkle cloth, art reignskin, diamond cloth, eve-cloth, corkscrew and tex-buck, the latter being an imitation of buck, in chamois and pearl grey. In the new colors for the coming season are seen silver grey, neutral grey, forest fawn, canary and electric. Many of the cloth creations have leather eyelet facings, collars, foxing, tips and other fancy effects. Fabrics are now being made to match any desired shade of leather.

Mr. Berger, of the Newcastle Leather Co., Montreal, spent a few days in Toronto last week on business.

The eighth annual ball of the Benefit Society of Getty & Scott, Limited, Galt, Ont., will be held in the city hall, Galt, on Friday, February 16th. This event has always been a splendid success, and will likely prove equally as enjoyable on the present occasion. Neat invitation cards have been issued, showing one of the new horn vamp pattern shoes of the firm, made with blue kid vamp and collar, and gold cloth top. The officers of the Mutual Benefit Society are:—F. S. Scott, M.P., and Wm. Chamberlain, honorary presidents; James Wallace, president; Geo. Peeling, vice-president; William Cudney, secretary; William Booty, treasurer. The following are on the committee:—C. Peacock, J. Palmer, H. Kelford, J. Hollis, A. Fenemore, and F. R. Delafield.

INTERNATIONAL SUPPLY CO. GROWING RAPIDLY

One of the striking successes in the shoe trade is exemplified by International Supply Co., Kitchener. This firm started in a small way in April, 1915. Messrs. H. O. McDowell and H. N. Lincoln, who have had years of experience in shoe machinery and factory supplies, saw the possibility of creating a successful business in Ontario and located at Kitchener.

Through their knowledge of the business and extensive acquaintance in the States, where they are highly regarded as responsible business men, they were offered Canadian agencies by some of the largest American manufacturers of machinery and supplies.

A year ago machines were installed for making pump bows and for the past five months they have averaged a daily output of 2,500 pairs which is a record that is really remarkable.

Compelled to seek larger quarters three times in less than two years, it was decided to provide for the future. The two-storey mill construction building at 37 Foundry street was purchased and is being prepared for their occupancy.

Many of the lines handled are on an exclusive basis, there being no other agent in Canada. These lines required attention in Quebec and the Maritime Provinces and a branch has been opened at 401-402 Coristine Building, Montreal. Mr. Geo. A. Butler, a practical shoeman, who has represented the Puritan Manufacturing Co. for the past five years, is manager of the Montreal branch where a fine business is already being done.

The company are exclusive agents for the Poole Process Goodyear innersole, which eliminates channeling and gemming. This process in connection with Spaulding's oak tan innersoling makes an ideal shoe.

Messrs. Lincoln and Butler are practical shoemen, both having held responsible positions as foremen. Mr. McDowell has had years of executive and office experience in this line of business and the slogan of the firm is "at your service."

DEFTNESS AND DEXTERITY OF IDEAL CLERK

In the shop where we buy our shoes the proprietor is an enthusiast in his own line, says a lady correspondent of a popular weekly publication. He never talks to you about the weather while nonchalantly harpooning a portion of the skin covering your instep into the buttonhole, as it is the custom with many of the bored young men who make a shoe clerk's living; neither does he gaze around the store abstractedly, or interestedly out into the street, while you are gauging the fit of the most highly priced shoes in his shop, which he has assured you with authority is the only style and last suitable to the peculiarities of your feet. And another thing he never does—and that is loudly announce for the benefit of all the other clerks and any customers who may be present, the humiliating result of his measurement of your pedal extremity—a most irritating custom, especially if your size calls for anything more unflattering than a four A. Shoe clerks should be drilled in the vital importance of the secrecy of their work, an absolute essential if they are to make a success in that department devoted to "ladies' footwear." But our shoeman is an artist; he does none of these things, and merely takes an absorbing interest in your individual case, and his remarks, a steady stream of them, bear altogether with the business in hand—or in foot, as the case is.

From him we learned, while being fitted for shoes the other day, the economy of buying expensive shoes. It seems that the price of leather has advanced so rapidly, that only in the best quality of footwear is the genuine material being used. In cheaper grades one may count upon deception from the best of the trade. To buy cheap shoes at this time is so much money thrown away. The shoes will not wear any length of time, and when another pair has to be purchased the price will be found to be higher still, for the greatest scarcity of leather has not yet been reached. Then, again, good shoes, properly cared for, will retain their shape and smartness for an indefinable period. By proper care, he explained that they must be kept in shoe-trees when off the feet, and that perfect cleanliness is necessary. Kid shoes, and especially the lighter shades, may be kept in excellent condition by the frequent use of gasoline, well rubbed into remove all dirt and stains of weather. Good shoes should not be allowed to lie about the floor or be dropped carelessly into a shoe box. A very good method of disposing of them is to have a long rail, such as is sometimes used as a towel rail, extending several inches from the wall and screwed into it at the back of the wardrobe, and on this your shoes may be hung by their heels in an orderly row. Or they may be kept in pretty shoe bags made of cretonne and bound with cotton tape, which also provides a hanger. This professional advice as to the eventual economy of apparent extravagance is very comforting when you feel that you simply cannot live without a certain pair of slippers which cost you just about double the sum you anticipated paying.

From our shoeman also we learned that there is a very intimate connection between gray hair and wrinkles and the fit of our footwear. He explained very convincingly that half the beauty doctors and "massage artists," as he was pleased to call them, would go completely out of business if the day ever came for the universal scientific and correct fitting of footwear. Hundreds of women cultivate wrinkles from uncomfortable shoes, and if we are to believe that discomfort and unhappiness are jointly responsible with age for the graying of locks, then badly-fitted shoes do their share in the process. His advice, too, was that women spend less time with the manicurist and more with the chiropodist, especially in the winter, when the sudden changes from outdoor cold to indoor heat are liable to make the feet very tender and sensitive.

WEAR 'EM LOW, GIRLS, AND GET 'EM CHEAPER

"It is not the high cost of shoes, but the cost of high shoes. If the women would consent to wear low shoes, which don't require so much leather, they would be as cheap as in your grandmother's day."

This was the statement made by John S. Kent, president of the Shoe Manufacturers' Association, at the annual meeting in New York.

"Whether the women like them or not," he continued, "they will have to wear low shoes this spring or else compromise on cloth topped boots."

The war is not the only reason for the high cost of leather, and there is little hope that when peace is restored the price of shoes will decline. The cattle industry in this country has fallen off so that there simply isn't enough leather to go round, Mr. Kent explained.

"If the wearers of shoes are willing to turn from the beaten track," he concluded, "and use shoes made wholly or in part of other materials than leather, it will mean the saving of millions of dollars annually."

Statistics were read showing the difference in the cost of leather between this year and last. In some kinds of kid there was an increase of 199 per cent.

A report by a joint conference of the shoe interests—manufacturers, jobbers, retailers and travelers—came before the convention for action and was approved. The report concluded:

"To preserve a just balance in the cost of materials in the construction of shoes we strongly recommend the use of commodities other than leather, whose wearing qualities and adaptability have been proved."

DECIDE WHAT YOUR WORK IS WORTH

Has your store a trade mark? Perhaps not, in the ordinary sense of the word trade mark; but a trade mark is only a symbol by which an article of merchandise can be distinguished from all others, and its value is in proportion to the quality and good will which it represents. You can mark your store in other ways than by the copyrighted symbol. You can give it the trade mark of quality; in fact you cannot help doing it if you are running your store on a quality basis. And when you have branded your store with the mark of quality people will come to know that mark just as well as they do the copyrighted trade mark of any standard article; they will be influenced by it, and they will influence others through it. To brand your store with the trade mark of quality you must turn out the best of work. You must use the best of materials. You must stand for all that is progressive in your industry. You must be an active worker for the best interests of the industry as a whole; which means that if your fellow workers are organized in a trade association you must be a member and do all in your power to boost the association and all it stands for; and if there is not an association in your community you must do all in your power to promote one. You must not indulge in cut-throat competition and charge 90 cents for a job because your nearest competitor charges $1.00. You must firmly decide to charge what your work is worth, and allow nothing to swerve you from this course; and you must strive to the utmost to promote fair dealing among fellow workers. You must keep your shop up-to-date, clean and well-lighted, and carefully study the demands of your customers. This is what we mean by trade marking your store.

CHILDREN'S SHOE TRADE BUILDER

The chart shown on this page is an idea that was originated by an Eastern store in connection with a sale of children's play shoes, says the "Shoe Economist Section." The shoe manager had made a large advance purchase of these shoes, on the understanding that he would be given enough advertising to justify his course. As a part of the advertising campaign a circular on which the chart appeared was mailed to the store's entire list, including charge and mail-order customers.

That the circular did good work was proved by the fact that many people brought the charts to the sale, marked to show the length of their child's foot.

The end of the sale was not, however, the last that was seen of the size charts. Many parents who did not use the chart during the special sale of play shoes had the foresight to take it along with them when they moved to their summer homes. Charts kept coming back to the store all summer long with mail-orders for children's play shoes, and, occasionally, for high shoes.

The shoeman saw that the idea was a convenience to customers and could be made a direct aid in the development of the children's shoe business. They should be issued every summer, he believed, and several copies should be sent to the mailing list, in addition to those distributed in the store's packages.

It will occur to many shoemen that this same chart holds far greater possibilities than the selling of play shoes. Why should it not be a business getter for the children's shoe department the year round? As a means of selling shoes for children under five years of age it should have its greatest use in the cold and stormy days of winter.

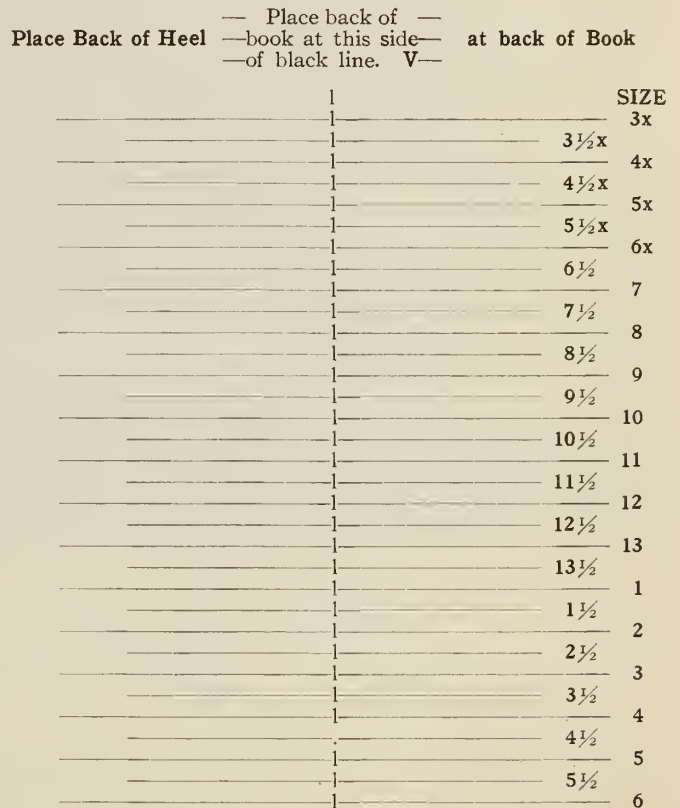

The need of shoes will not tempt a mother to take her child outdoors when the weather is severe and the going is hard. New shoes can wait, no matter how badly the old ones are worn. This is a serious condition for the shoe business, and this is where the chart can be made to do good work.

It is not uncommon, after parents have waited in vain for mild weather, for father or mother to go out and buy the child a pair of shoes, taking along one of the old pair, to show the size. Many satisfactory purchases are made in this way, and some even by the aid of a pencil outline of the child's foot. Both of these methods, however, are uncertain in their results, and, therefore, they are generally employed only when the purchase of new shoes has been delayed.

The chart, on the other hand, is not something that would be used as a last resort. On the contrary, it is a standing inducement to buy the child a pair of shoes, and, hence, should be the means of increasing the sale of children's shoes by hundreds of pairs a year in an average department.

It will be noted that the chart is made in a good size for an envelope stuffer, with one fold. On the reverse side there is ample space for the name of the store, and an advertisement of children's footwear, with a few small cuts.

Be sure that paper is smooth and touches the floor at every point. Do not smooth with flat-iron as the heat may contract the paper. Charts mailed free on request.

This chart corresponds exactly to the standard foot measure used by shoe stores. By following the directions closely a correctly fitting pair of children's play shoes can be purchased by mail or telephone. School shoes may also be purchased successfully by this same method.

DIRECTIONS

Lay paper on a smooth, hard floor, stand a book meeting exactly the place indicated. Then place the bare foot in the centre of paper with the back of the heel touching the book. Mark the cross line next beyond the extremity of the toe, seen by looking straight down from above. Send the number of the line marked to us with your order.

As the chart is set up in type and rule that are in the equipment of any printing office, there will be no expense for engraving. It will be wise, however, not to use too light a quality of paper. A weight and quality should be used that will hold its shape fairly well and not break in the crease.

We Have the Leather

The other day a leather man was accidentally overheard to say, "Those people are 'wise' to that leather."

Such a remark these days speaks well for a concern's buying power. We have no idea as to whom the reference was made, but it goes to show that some buyers are not "wise", and that leather of inferior quality is being "pushed off" onto a good many manufacturers.

YOU want to avoid the possibility of suffering through the mistakes of others. Buying leather these days is an enormous proposition. Safeguard yourself by dealing with people whom you absolutely know can give you real leather shoes.

A look into the future showed us that leather conditions were grave. We increased our supply to such an extent that now we do not have to buy and have to take what the market offers. We buy only when each individual member of our staff of buyers passes on the leather.

Don't doubt your shoes—your sales will suffer if you do. In the past you could guarantee your shoes. You can guarantee TO-DAY that REGAL SHOES are leaders in Style Appeal, Value Fulfilment and Price Satisfaction.

22-FOOT GOODYEAR SHOE REPAIRING OUTFIT

MODEL N

THIS Outfit represents the highest development in shoe repairing machinery, and meets every demand of modern shoe repairing. It embraces all the essential processes for making new shoes from old ones, giving the maximum of equipment and efficiency in the minimum space. The Outfit has the Goodyear Stitching Machine with all its improvements, including a new style steam generator which uses gas or gasoline for generating the steam, and operates automatically, thereby insuring a uniform heat for keeping the wax in proper condition and requiring little attention from the operator. The Edge Trimming Machine has the new feature of the two shafts, being operated by a single belt, and the cutter grinder is attached directly to the main shaft. This arrangement gives better results with less power.

The Buffing and Scouring Machine has a shaft 57 inches long and carries the following equipment:

- | | |
|--|----------------------------------|
| 2 "C" Shape X-Ray Heel Scouring Wheels | 1 Heel Breast Scouring Wheel |

At the end of the Outfit is the Oscillating Edge Setting Machine which is fitted with union irons and in its motions duplicates hand workmen with quicker and better results.

Each of the machines is operated independently by a friction drive pulley, so that it is necessary to use only those machines which the operator may require. This feature means a saving of power.

All the machines are firmly mounted on legs and driven by a countershaft with carefully adjusted bearings, so that the Outfit runs with very little vibration, and is in every way most efficient.

WHAT WILL COME AFTER?

After the War What?—Getting Ready for the Future—A Safe Policy for Retailers—Watch the Buying—Watch Expenses

IT is altogether likely that the war will come to an end sometime this year. Some think mid-summer will see the finish, and others not till late fall. The signs all seem to point in this direction.

What will be the effect of peace on business? This question is beginning to press for consideration, and wise men are just now putting on their thinking caps. The banks are encouraging everybody from the manufacturer down to the retailer to develop a spirit of caution with regard to the immediate future.

Canada's debt at the close of the war will be in the neighborhood of $2,000,000,000 on which the interest charges will be about $60,000,000 annually. This with pensions will make it necessary to raise nearly $100,000,000 a year for some time to come on account of the war alone. Our foreign trade has gone up by leaps and bounds until it is nearly four times what it was before the war. This will undoubtedly be considerably decreased as soon as Europe begins to raise its own food-stuffs, and quits importing munitions and other manufactures. It is true that there will be a considerable demand for some of our natural products for a while, but there is no doubt that we shall feel the effects of reduced exports which may be helped out by the fact that some of the imports will be cut off from the natural tendency towards home production.

At all events the safe policy for business people to follow from this out will be that of "watchful waiting." Buying should be done on a most conservative basis. From this out speculation will be as dangerous a policy in business as flirting with the real estate market at the close of a land boom. There will not perhaps be the drop this time that usually follows business inflation, but there is certain to be a period of caution and lassitude just as soon as the end of the war is definitely in sight.

Stocks are fairly good value at present prices, but the wise and prudent operator will see to it that he is not overloaded when the "stagger" comes. Above all he will see that he is caught with a supply of goods that will be "liquid" enough to enable him to realize on them readily.

There is little change in the leather situation, although conditions would appear to be somewhat easier. Hides are high, even at the prices quoted, considering the quality and tanners find it difficult to secure adequate satisfactory supplies.

Shoe manufacturers find it impossible to procure stocks ahead and the recent flurry occasioned by the break between the United States and Germany afforded an indication of the greater stringency that will result, should an open break occur and war ensue.

The discussion in this issue on the fall samples question is enlightening. The majority of manufacturers of staple shoes are prepared to curtail their lines, and follow a policy of selling for immediate delivery. Makers of high grade specialties seem to have decided to go out with samples at the usual time.

Fall Shoe Samples

Shall Manufacturers Go Out as Usual With Full Lines?—Will Leather and Shoe Conditions Permit Orders Being Taken So Far Ahead?—What Manufacturers, Jobbers and Retailers Have to Say on the Question

A SHOE manufacturer in the East rather surprised his sales staff early in the month by announcing to them that the firm did not intend to get out new samples for the fall season, but would merely make a shift in some of its lines and continue to sell for immediate delivery. "We are done garbling in leather, and although we are as well fixed for materials as any house in the trade we do not see why we should go out and sell shoes three or four months before they are made and guarantee the price." This was the statement given to the travelers who at first were rather shocked at the attitude of the head of the firm, but soon realized the sanity of his position.

The SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL to whom the conversation was repeated as the policy of the firm, wrote to a number of manufacturers, wholesalers and large retailers, asking for their views and we give herewith, on request of many of those written to, the opinions without names, for obvious reasons.

Manufacturers Against Sending Out Samples

The preponderance of opinion, especially amongst those handling a general line of shoes, seems to be in the direction of cutting out fall selling as it is usually done, while manufacturers of special lines seem to see no good reason for any change in the established custom of the trade to go out at the regular time with fall samples.

An Ontario manufacturer of staple lines says: "We are of the same opinion as you express in your letter. We can hardly conceive of a manufacturer placing orders in advance for prices such as will have to be obtained if present price of leather is to be considered. We are also holding back with our samples for fall for the reasons mentioned. It seems to us if there ever was a time when the way had to be 'felt' in the shoe trade, it is now."

Another Ontario manufacturer says: "We have on hand sufficient leather to complete our spring orders, and are going to cut it up and wait developments after that date. While we may have to change our minds it is our intention to book no fall orders but make shoes to order at prices at which they can be made, as we do not feel it is safe for us to assume the responsibility of booking a lot of high priced shoes which in the event of a drop in leather would be left on our hands or be sold at reduced prices. We feel sure that the retailers will look at it in the same light and refuse to buy fall goods at these advanced prices."

Another Ontario concern remarks: "We think that judging from the feelings we find prevalent among the jobbers generally, that they are holding off buying at this season, on account of the very high prices now quoted by the manufacturers, which they cannot as yet realize that will have to be obtained when the manufacturers have to go into the market again for their leathers. Most of the jobbers bought very freely last fall, and have quite a lot of goods yet to be delivered to them, and will only buy from 'hand to mouth' for anything they are compelled to buy, until there is a more settled condition in the leather market, either at present or higher figures. There are few manufacturers who have any large surplus of stock which they can offer at last year's prices, so that for any business taken on now, they will have to buy their leather in to-day's market at to-day's prices, so that there is no likelihood as far as we can see of there being any lower prices, as the tanners of both upper and sole leathers have their tanneries full of high price hides and skins, and further—should the war cease suddenly, of which there seems to be no probability, while there will no doubt be a very serious commotion in business generally, for a while, we do not see how it can bring about for some time to come, very much reduction in the cost of leather, so that summing it all up, we think it best policy to go slow in buying for the present."

Will Feel Out the Trade

Another Ontario manufacturer replies: "We have talked matters over, and have decided that we would go out when the time comes, and get the feeling of the retail trade. Everyone speaks of being filled up for months to come and may not feel inclined to place any further orders at this high point. However, our own idea is that prices of leather can not drop very much, on account of the tanners having high priced hides in their vats, and there seems to be no surplus leather anywhere, that is in sole and side leather. Also, the United States of America will, no doubt, now go in for preparedness, which will mean that they will require a lot of leather for shoes and other equipment. One thing we do hope and that is that the time is near at hand that shoe manufacturers, will soon be able to cut out spring and fall datings and sell on regular terms from date of shipment. There is no reason why we should start shipping fall goods in April and May, and date them 2 per cent. 10 days, or net 60 days, October 1st. We used to get such dating from the tanners, years ago, but that has been done away with, and we pay for leathers on the regular terms from date of shipment, and hold it for the accommodation of our customers."

A Quebec manufacturer observes: "Our policy is now one of watchful expectancy; the time for speculating on stock is now passed. We are working on our stock, and filling orders as quickly as possible. On account of the uncertainty of the leather market, we have decided not to put any new lines on the market for fall. We are only modifying our present lines."

Orders Only 60 Days Ahead

Another large Eastern firm replies as follows: "We have for the past eight to ten months adopted the policy as outlined in your letter. We have not been taking any orders ahead beyond 60 days, and we fill in our line of samples when the styles change sufficiently to warrant us doing so, and send our men again over the same territory selling for immediate delivery. While we have been able to keep our factory running at full capacity in this way and now have plenty of orders in the factory to keep us running full for the next thirty days, we do not anticipate any trouble in selling enough shoes to keep us going when we go out with a line for immediate Easter delivery. I do not consider it a safe policy for shoe manufacturers to sell beyond thirty to sixty days ahead of their output and neither do I consider it a proper policy for shoe manufacturers to book orders for four to six months ahead and buy the material in order to protect themselves against a raise in price and thereby clean up all accumulations, carrying the stock that was formerly carried by the tanner, and give him an opportunity to hold prices firm. Even though they are not turning over stock it would take them sometime to get as much leather on the floor as they formerly carried before the shoe manufacturer adopted the policy of buying large quantities of leather. While no doubt many manufacturers have made some money in speculating in leather, we have always felt that we could compete with the manufacturer who was buying ahead and buy our goods on the market and sell them at prevailing market prices, which we have been able to do."

Will Make No Fall Samples

Another far Eastern manufacturer declares: "We are very glad indeed to note that there are other shoe manufacturers besides ourselves who have decided not to prepare regular fall samples. Under present conditions we do not think, especially making a general line as we do, anything will be gained by doing this, and we will merely take out some lines, for which we are not able to buy raw material today and substituted others in their place."

A Quebec concern writes: "We wish to say that we quite agree with that shoe manufacturer you allude to, and believe that in acting as he intends, he will be as wise as we would like to be. Retailers we notice have bought very heavily this season, and are likely to have a heavy stock of high priced goods the coming season, and with the uncertainty that exist as to future prices of leathers, will likely not be very anxious to buy, and the manufacturer realizing this situation, will naturally do likewise, and for our part we believe this a good safe policy, and for this reason intend to follow it."

Manufacturers Should Go Slow

Another Quebec manufacturer writes: "We are planning to put out a very staple line this season, getting down to the principal lines for general trade and are planning to sell our goods only on short dates, and as near immediate delivery as possible, not looking for long dating ahead as we find it impossible to have any contract for future supplies of material. We carefully read over your letter, and also the printed circular enclosed and feel that the only thing for the manufacturers to do is to go slow and there certainly has been an unhealthy advance caused by over buying by retailers and manufacturers. Unless the retailers have an exceptional good trade this spring, it looks to us as if a lot of them are going to be overstocked and will find it somewhat hard to meet their payments."

A well-known concern says: "I will not put out any samples at all for fall, I will use the same ones as for spring, and I will accept no order unless I have the stock in the place."

Many Difficulties in the Way

A Montreal manufacturer opines: "We are not making samples to sell for fall delivery, but only putting new styles and lasts so to be able to sell only assortments. We realize that it is very hard for a manufacturer to make samples, and sell for fall delivery unless he had a stock of all kinds of leathers, but we doubt that there is one in Canada that could do this and we know that for our part that we will not take the risk of such a long delivery but will go on the road to sell for an immediate delivery and will certainly be pleased if our views of this situation correspond with others."

An Ontario manufacturing concern states: "We have as yet scarcely broken into our spring work, and shall have all we can do without taking another order until May 1st. It will certainly be absolutely necessary to get out some fall samples to take the place of the many leather lines which will have to be dropped for we do not think that any dealer will pay the prices for some of these lines which we shall have to charge if we make them. Just how we are going to find time to make these samples we do not know at present, as yet we have not even decided which lines we shall carry. As to our policy in selling, we do not think there will be any serious difficulty in fixing prices as, if they go any higher it will mean practically taking leather off the market altogether. The only difficulty will be to decide whether it is wise to take contracts at any price at all. However, the whole thing is up in the air at present, and we shall have to await further developments before we decide."

Adopting a Conservative Course

A large Ontario concern says: "We are seriously considering at present booking orders for such delivery as we can best give irrespective of whether

Pointers For Small Retailers

The Family Shoe Store Will Live Forever as People Like to Patronize the Neighborhood Shop for Several Reasons, Declared Ben Jacobson of New York, at National Convention in Cincinnati—Good Buying Means Knowing When and of Whom

NINETEEN HUNDRED AND SIXTEEN will be remembered as the greatest prosperous year in the history of the shoe business. It will be remembered as the year in which every branch of our business was revolutionized. It will be remembered as the year in which the high-price shoe market was created. Retail stocks increased in value so fast that extra profits were fairly forced on dealers. Yet during all this most interesting situation, the daily life of some of the average size shoe retailers is sometimes tiresome and monotonous because they do not know how to keep busy.

When I say "The Average Size Retailer," I mean the fellows who are usually known as the small dealers; the men who conduct family shoe stores. Yet it is estimated that about 75 per cent. of the shoes manufactured in this country are distributed to the wearer through these family shoe stores. Only about 5 per cent. of these small dealers ever become big dealers; the other 95 per cent. sit in their stores waiting for customers and watching the stock and cash drawer, if they have any—so that no one runs away with it.

Every now and then some friendly traveling man or a casual customer will talk of this or that shoe merchant doing a big business. The dealer and his clerk—if he has one—for the time being wish that they, too, could some day be big, but when the conversation is over and the deal closed or the sale made, all is forgotten, without ever stopping to investigate how the big fellow became big. What did the big fellow do to become big? Can I do the same?

There are a great many men in the shoe business who have never learned the necessity of counting their money—I mean balancing their accounts to see how much they are really worth—whether they are making money or losing it. Most of them know the amount of money they have in the bank, but they do not know how much money their stock represents nor what they owe against that stock. These are the men the Convention Committee had in mind when they asked me to talk on "Safe and Sound Business Methods" for small retailers.

How to Get Proper Profit

We all realize that if we succeed in teaching these men how to conduct their business properly, we will have gone a long way towards bettering the shoe business. There is no good reason why one dealer should turn his stock four times a year and his neighbor who caters to the same class of people, turn his stock only twice a year. There is no good reason why one dealer should make a net profit of 10 per cent. on his sales and his neighbor sell goods for less than they cost. It is the duty of each dealer to add his expense of conducting business to the cost of the merchandise. In other words, if a shoe costs $3.00 and if it costs that man 25 per cent. to do business, that $3.00 represents only 75 per cent. of the cost; therefore this $3.00 shoe, the minute it is on the shelf, costs the dealer $4.00 and he must figure the net profit on the $4.00 and not on the $3.00.

Family Shoe Store Will Stay

There was a time when the department stores began to spread out and people thought the days of the family shoe store's prosperity was over. It has since been proven that same is not so. Then came the chain store proposition and they do not hurt the family shoe store very much. In my personal opinion the family shoe store will live forever—people like to patronize the neighborhood store for more reasons than one. It is only up to the individual owner who conducts the family shoe store to do his business in a businesslike manner and not blindfolded.

An Ohio dealer had two sons in the business, besides two clerks. He had, perhaps, forgotten that as his sons grew older they needed more money; having kept no records of expense or profit he continued along the same way and his business did not grow very fast. From the figures I was able to gather from his son, I showed him that his selling expense was 15 per cent. and his regular overhead charges about 15 per cent., making a 30 per cent. expense to conduct the business and his profits were less than 25 per cent., with the result that one of the clerks was discharged and one of the sons secured a job elsewhere, reducing that selling expense to almost half. Instead of the two men, he then engaged an extra Saturday clerk. This man is again prosperous and is to-day a good merchant, for he knows enough not to spend any more money than his business can afford.

Don't Buy More Than You Need

In order to be successful in the retail shoe business, or in any other retail business for that matter, one of the principal things to know is financing. No man can afford to carry more stock than his business and his capital warrant. Over-buying is the cause of more ruination than any other fault a dealer may have. The small dealer must buy his shoes the same as he would his meals. If he has eaten a very good dinner and is perfectly satisfied and five minutes after eats another dinner because some one showed him where he could get a better meal for less money, he is sure to need the doctor the next day. If he buys more shoes than he needs he is sure to have as much trouble as the dinner would give him.

The safe and sound method for business financing for a small dealer is to own two-thirds of the stock. He can discount his bills, providing he makes a fair turnover, which should be at least three times—five if possible. If he owns only half of the stock and makes three or four times turnover, it will take him 60 days to pay his bills, but if he owns half of the stock and only turns it twice, he will soon have financial troubles. The best way to avoid over-buying is not to buy twelve pairs when he needs only eight, and not place orders for spring or fall merchandise for any larger amount than 50 per cent. of his sales for any particular month's delivery. In order to follow this advice, he naturally must have records of goods sold in previous years.

Neat Windows and Store Interiors

Next to financing, a successful dealer must study cleanliness and attractiveness. He must know how to trim his windows and keep the interior of the store always in a manner pleasing to the eye of the public. The window trimming must not be done spasmodically. Windows should be trimmed at least once a week and the shoes displayed must be fresh and clean, for plate glass will magnify any little fault of the shoe—such as burnt laces, crooked vamp seams or a spot on a colored shoe.

He must be a good buyer. Good buying does not always mean the shoes that sell quickly, but a good buyer must know when to buy, of whom to buy and how much to buy. In this connection the safe way of buying is to select a very few houses and give them all the business he possibly can. He will then be somebody's pet account, but if he scatters the buying, no one will take care of him the way he should be taken care of. The careful buyer must manage to have a full assortment of sizes on his staple lines and avoid extreme sizes on the extreme styles. It is better to do with a fewer styles and have more sizes and widths. It is a mistake to sell good shoes on one width as is done in many stores today. No small dealer should buy a straight run of sizes without taking his own stock into consideration. Thousands of pairs of good shoes are shipped out of this country at ridiculously low prices, because somebody bought too many of the wrong sizes. Men's shoes below six and above ten in narrow widths and women's shoes below four are the cause of many losses.

The wise buyer will get sufficient profit on his stock, while it is new, to act as a sort of insurance against these possible losses. Five per cent. extra profit on an individual pair is not much of an item, but five per cent. up or down on the entire stock will sometimes make or break a dealer.

He must be a good salesman. It is a very important point that the dealer or his clerk in a family shoe store be able to converse in a friendly way with the customers, because they are the ones who see the same faces over and over again. They must sell their shoes in a manner that will not make them ashamed to see the customer again.

He must be honest and truthful with his customer as he should be with his creditor. He must not make any promises he cannot fulfil. He must not praise the quality of an article he is not sure of.

Next to selling, it is most important for the dealer and his clerk to know the stock.

I do not like the word "stock-keeping". I think stock-moving ought to be the proper name for it. I saw a stock of shoes which inventoried at $12,000, sold for $3,800. Another costing $40,000 sold for $9,000. Each of these stocks was cleanly kept having tissue paper around each shoe, but if these dealers were stock movers instead of stock keepers, these stocks would have been sold before they became old and worthless.

The dealer must be able to analyze his business. He must compare his store with some other more successful store. He must have an aim to higher things in the business. He must be a friend to his neighbors. He should meet his competitor on a friendly basis; get him to join local associations; exchange ideas for the benefit of both.

Avoid all business mistakes, but if he should happen to get into trouble of any kind keep it to himself, not spread it through the neighborhood. If he needs advice, ask for it of his creditors. A dealer came to our credit manager about one year and a half ago and asked him how it was that he had been in business nine years and had never been able to discount his bills. After the manager asked him the usual questions as to his assets and liabilities, his expense and his profits, he found the figures this dealer mentioned should have netted him about $2,000 a year, or $18,000 for the nine years: yet this dealer carried a stock of only $10,000 and could not discount his bills. After showing him how to keep proper records of his business and how to regulate his expenses and increase his profits we have succeeded, in less than a year's time, in putting this dealer on a discount basis. He is now able to make a financial statement to the bank which will lend him sufficient capital to conduct his business.

In this connection you know that the bank is anxious to lend money—they cannot make money unless they lend it out, but in order to be able to borrow money from the bank, the dealer must make a statement that will stand the acid test.

Cut Out All Guess Work

I know a young man who is ambitious and will, no doubt, some day become a big merchant, yet the first time he went to borrow money from his bank, the banker was astonished at his statement and asked him where he got the figures. The dealer admitted that they were guess work—whereupon the banker advised him to install some sort of a system in his business that would tell him the correct figures instead of guess figures. Within two months' time this young man knew how to handle his own affairs. He was able to get the money he needed to finance his business.

No man can hope to succeed without proper records of his business. It is a common mistake among all small dealers for each one to think that his problem is the worst and that his neighborhood is the poorest. I hear it from dealers every day. "I do not need any system, my people are all honest, only my customers are rotten." But just as soon as one of them is helped out of some tight place he becomes a "rooter" for education and association.

BANKRUPTCY ACT FOR ALL THE PROVINCES

What the Canadian Credit Men's Association Desire—The Various Provisions Set Forth—Some Facts Concerning Assignments Which Everyone in the Footgear Arena Should Read With Interest and Weigh Carefully—Need of Uniformity and Expedition

THE Association has for some time past been urging the preparation and adoption of an uniform Assignments Act by the various provinces in Canada, but as this course would not overcome the present weakness of our insolvency laws, which do not provide machinery for forcing an insolvent debtor into involuntary bankruptcy, nor provide any method by which an honest debtor could obtain his discharge, and as there appears to be a strong feeling throughout the country that the time is now ripe for a Bankruptcy Act, the Legislative Committee of the Association decided to support a Federal Bankruptcy Act if the cumbersome and expensive features of the English and United States Acts could in some way be eliminated.

Exhaustive enquiries have satisfied the Association that the methods now in force in most of the provinces of Canada of closing up and realizing upon the assets of an assignor are less expensive and more expeditious than under the Bankruptcy Acts of England or the United States or Australia.

A rough outline of the objects of the Association in connection with this legislation is as follows:

1. To retain so far as possible the present method now followed in most of the provinces of realizing upon the assets of an insolvent and distributing of the moneys among the creditors, by having such assets vested in a trustee to sell and realize on them with the advice of the inspectors in each estate, and to declare dividends from time to time direct to the creditors whose claims are to be filed (not in court but) with the trustee, and without the necessity of frequent court applications.

2. Have one or more trustees appointed in each province with either limited or unlimited territorial jurisdiction, such trustees to furnish security to the Government in an amount sufficient to protect creditors in respect to all assets in their hands.

3. Provide that a debtor may always make an assignment for the benefit of creditors to a trustee appointed under the Act, and provide that an assignment may be made to any person other than a trustee so appointed with the consent of at least fifty per cent. in number and amount of creditors; the assignee, however, to give security if deemed advisable by the creditors.

4. Provide that if the debtor commits any act of bankruptcy (as outlined in the Act), he may, on a creditors' petition, be declared bankrupt, and a receiving order made by the court.

5. The receiving order is to direct that all the property of the debtor be vested in a trustee under the Act for sale and distribution among the creditors.

6. Provide that a debtor, whether he has made an assignment or been declared a bankrupt, is to have the right, after a specified period, to apply to a judge in bankruptcy for a complete discharge from his liabilities; the provisions of the English Act in this respect are to be substantially followed. See Sections 26 to 29.

7. Make provision for confirmation by the court of compositions, extensions or other schemes with creditors, provided that the same have been approved of by a certain percentage of the creditors, say 75 per cent.; the object being that if a debtor is justly entitled to a composition or extension, and such appears to be in the best interests of the creditors generally, a few small creditors cannot successfully oppose it.

8. Provide that the court having jurisdiction in each province will prepare general rules as to the practice in bankruptcy in each such province.

9. Dispense with most of the complicated and expensive machinery in the English and American Acts—a few illustrations of which are briefly as follows:

(a) There will be no necessity to make provision for the presentment by a debtor of a voluntary petition in bankruptcy, for the debtor's proper course will be to make an assignment direct to a trustee without the intervention of a court or referee in bankruptcy, or official receiver.

(b) Very few creditor's petitions to have a debtor declared bankrupt will ever be filed, because the debtor will generally make an assignment, for three very good reasons: First, with a view to obtaining his discharge he will desire to retain the good-will of his creditors by avoiding unnecessary expense; second, there will be a strong sentiment against being declared a bankrupt; third, the debtor will be subject to certain disqualifications if declared bankrupt until he receives a certificate of discharge.

(c) Under the American Act there are too many officials; for example, the referee, whose duties and compensation are set out in sections 39 and 40 of the American Act, and with whom claims are filed, and who declared dividends to creditors notwithstanding the fact that a trustee appointed by the creditors has charge of the disposal of the assets, whose duties and compensations are set out in sections 47 and 48 of the said Act. There seems no good reason for two officials, both of whom must furnish bonds, and for two sets of fees and remuneration, when one official could quite easily do the work. A somewhat similar provision exists in the English Act, where we have the "Official Receiver" provided for by section 7, a "Special Manager" provided for by section 10, and a "Trustee" to be appointed by the creditors under section 19, and although (unlike the American Act) these officials do not act concurrently, there seems to be no necessity for the appointment of an official receiver so far as Canada is concerned. The English procedure is further complicated by applications to the Board of Trade and the court.

(d) We see no necessity for the court to call meetings of creditors, or for a judge, referee or official receiver to attend the first of any meetings of creditors, nor for the public examination in open court of "every bankrupt" as provided by the English Act. There will be many cases where the examination of a debtor would be unjustifiable expense.

(e) In the "Appendix of Forms" to the English Act there are over 200 forms, and this alone is some indication of the complicated nature of the proceedings thereunder, while a perusal of the scale of "Solicitors' Costs" (see Williams on Bankruptcy, p. 677) convinces one that these costs, added to court disbursements, official receiver's fees and trustee's remuneration, make the system a somewhat expensive one.

(f) The procedure under both the American and English Acts appears to be somewhat similar to the proceedings under the Dominion "Winding-Up Act," and it is well known that the machinery under such last mentioned Act applied to insolvent estates would not be satisfactory to commercial interests in Canada.

10. Give jurisdiction in bankruptcy to the high court in each province, for as very few bankruptcy matters will come before a judge there seems to be no necessity for giving jurisdiction to the lower courts. Applications of debtors for discharges will be practically the only matters requiring a judge's consideration, except in the few cases where receiving orders are made.

AN ENTERPRISING WESTERN SHOE FIRM

The shoe establishment of Murray's, Limited, at 102A Eighth avenue west, Calgary, is one of the neatest and most progressive in the hustling western city. The proprietors are M. L. Savage and Geo. H. Ferguson, both of whom are widely-known travelers, who have demonstrated that they can sell shoes retail, as well as on the road.

Some three years ago they formed a partnership, under the title of Murray's, Limited, and have built up an excellent business in the better-class trade. Their store is 16 feet wide by 50 feet deep, and has an imposing front, as the accompanying illustration shows.

The fixtures are of white enamel, and the single carton system prevails throughout, imparting an impressive and uniform effect. All the latest styles in high-class footwear are carried, and a first-class service is given.

For several years Mr. Savage has represented the Tetrault Shoe Manufacturing Co., Montreal, and J. A. & M. Cote, St. Hyacinthe, Que., in Western Canada. He is one of the most successful salesmen on the road, and enjoys a splendid connection with the trade throughout the Prairie Provinces. R. L. Savage, of Toronto, who represents Clark Bros., Limited, in Ontario and Quebec, is a brother.

Geo. H. Ferguson for many years represented the Hartt Boot & Shoe Co., of Fredericton, N.B., in the west, and for the last year has been covering the Prairie Provinces and British Columbia for Clark Bros., Limited, St. Stephen, N.B. He is well thought of and well spoken of by the trade.

THREE GENERATIONS SELLING SHOES FOR 52 YEARS

All for the Same Firm and on the Same Territory—The Third Generation of Customers Being Called Upon—Veteran Traveler Tells of the Struggles of Early Days and Recalls Interesting and Exciting Episodes—How Styles, Selling Conditions and Manufacturing Have Changed

THREE generations of shoemen, all in the service of the one firm, covering a period of 52 years actual selling, and dealing with the third generation of customers, is a remarkable and outstanding record. It is probably without a parallel in the vending of footwear. No change in territory, no change in selling representation and no change in the old established firm except in the passing of the responsibility and activity from grandfather to son and on to grandson in the sales end, and from father to sons in the manufacturing end.

The house which has this unique history is the W. B. Hamilton Shoe Co., doing business in Toronto since 1848. The name at that time was Childs & Hamilton. Later the organization was known as W. B. Hamilton, Son & Co., and then the W. B. Hamilton Shoe Co., Limited.

From messenger boy to traveler, shareholder and director of this honored institution sums up the career of W. A. Griffiths, of Barrie, Ont., who is one of the veteran shoe salesmen of Canada, having been identified with the W. B. Hamilton Shoe Co. for the long period of 37 years. He is still covering the same ground, assisted by his son, W. D. Griffiths, jr., as he did away back in 1880.

Driving Tours of Three Months

Fifteen years before 1880 the late John Griffiths, father of W. A. Griffiths and grandfather of W. D. Griffiths, had looked after the same territory, starting prior to Confederation for the same firm. The mantle of selling shoes for a pioneer house has fallen from grandfather to father and from father to son, representing fifty-two years of continued, unbroken salesmanship and connection. The late John Griffiths, who passed away over a quarter of a century ago, was a saddler by trade, and two years before Confederation started selling shoes. He owned a team of horses and a wagon, and drove the country over. His son, W. A. Griffiths, sr., now in the sixtieth year of his age, who has been on the same ground for thirty-seven years, is still enjoying fairly good health, and for the last three years has been "breaking in" his own boy, W. D. Griffiths, to assist him in the work. W. A. Griffiths is one of the four oldest shoe travelers in Canada. He possesses a singular record, as already mentioned, in that he has sold all the time for the one house, while the other veterans have represented different concerns at various periods of their respective careers.

"Yes, they were great days, those early days," remarked W. A. Griffiths to the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL recently when recalling old times. "I remember I went to work in the warehouse when all goods were shipped loose. I was told to dump a load on a wheelbarrow and take them down to a certain establishment on King street east. The streets were very muddy and a policeman would not let me proceed on the sidewalk with my barrow, so I had to take the middle of the road. I said, 'Enough of this for me,' and I fired up the job.

"Well, it was not long after that my father, when coming out of a store in Kleinburg, Ont., one day slipped on the steps and broke his leg. The limb was a long time in healing, and he naturally had to have someone to drive around the country with him. So he engaged me and for several years I was his associate and helper. All trips were made by driving in the late sixties and early seventies. There was a railroad from Toronto to Meaford and another to Orillia, but there was no steel laid to Penetang, Midland and many other places which it was necessary to visit. Oh, those driving trips were great. They lasted from twelve to fifteen weeks at a stretch, the average distance covered being about 125 miles a week. Travelers never thought of returning home on Saturday to spend Sunday. We worked on Saturday the same as on any other.

"It was in 1880 that I bought my first commercial traveler's certificate. It then cost me $2.00, and today the fee is $10.00. Traveling away back in the early eighties was also two cents a mile—cheaper than today. My father removed from Toronto to Barrie in 1870. After serving fifteen years on the road, and being considerably over seventy years of age he retired in 1880 and I succeeded him. Although I had served an apprenticeship under him for several years I was not what might be called a regularly constituted salesman of the firm. However, I applied when he stepped down and got the job. It was not long after that I sold the team and wagon. It was recognized that the old method of driving was rapidly disappearing, as railroads had begun to branch out in every direction. We used to carry about 300 lines in those days and the style problem was not a vital factor in selling as it is today. We would sell a man a bill of goods for everything that he required—felts, rubbers, working shoes, leg boots, low shoes, gaiters, in fact anything in the footwear family.

There were no goods cartoned in those days. Half sizes were unknown, and samples were displayed without any fillers, laces, coverings, or other attractive accessories. Few, if any, of the hotels outside the larger towns had sample rooms, and it was not an infrequent occurrence for the traveler to gather up some boards and improvise a sample table as best he could. The boards were often covered with white paper instead of the fine, attractive draperies of the present. Except in Collingwood, Barrie, Orillia, Meaford and Owen Sound the hotels were $1.00 a day, and in the five places mentioned the rate was $1.50. The latter had sample rooms, but no charge was made for them.

When Refreshments Were Cheap

"On each sample table was a bell of some kind for use in ringing for refreshments, with which all customers were supposed to be entertained. All drinks were five cents in those days, and every cigar sold for a nickel. Our favorite brand was the 'Highland Lassie.' I remember the first ten-cent cigar that came out. It was the 'El Padre,' was thought costly for the average man to buy. Hotels aroused us early to be something super-excellent, and was regarded as too in the morning and a boy would pass down the corridor at six o'clock vigorously ringing a dinner bell as a signal for everyone to get up. Of course, times have changed greatly. The traveler is now the greatest patron of hotels, whereas in those days road representatives were few, and the lumbermen's and farmers' interests were more looked after than those of the commercial man. We used to leave our shoes outside our room door at night, with five cents put in them. The porter would come along, gather them up and return the footwear. In order to keep tab on the boots, he would put the number of one's room in chalk mark on the soles, but occasionally these would become mixed, and the shoes belonging to an occupant of room No. 12 would be left at room No. 15, and vice versa.

"You ask me how merchants received us in those days as contrasted with the present day reception. Well, they generally kept their appointments very promptly, as there were not nearly so many travelers. Now retailers are literally run off their feet by numerous representatives handling this specialty and that specialty. As I said before, we carried a general line in the days of thirty-five or forty years ago.

"Everybody wore long-legged boots in those times. They had colored sheepskin top facings, were made of kip and cowhide, and a few of the finer grades came in calf. Then we had a heavy pebble leather lace boot with a fleece lining for women. We showed one style of overshoe with a single buckle and fancy designs worked in the vamp, and one type of heavy gum rubbers, without buckles, constituted our lumbermen's goods. Prunella was a favorite material in shoes for men and women. When we went to call upon a merchant he would frequently ask, 'What is your lowest price in a prunella congress,' and if we would say '47½ cents,' he became interested at once, and would ask us if we had opened up yet. If so, he would be right down to see us. It was rather a strange coincidence, but if any traveler had a low-priced prunella congress or gaiter boot, it was his introduction to a favorable and prompt reception.

"Then we sold what was known as a men's split Bunkin for 72½ cents, which was a lace boot for rough work, and there was the old Cobourg, a low shoe, selling at 70 cents. Practically every boot disposed of was either pegged or McKay sewn and all were made on straight lasts, there being no rights or lefts. If one wanted a particularly fine dress shoe, he or she went to a shoemaker's shop for it, as many of the retailers kept a large force of shoemakers working in the back of their establishments, doing custom shoemaking. Some of the leading lines in the late seventies and early eighties were buff, wax calf, shell cordovan and fine seal (kid). The terms in those days were four months net, often running into six months or a year before settlement was made. We allowed five per cent. for cash in thirty days or 6 per cent. in ten days, the month following shipment. We had no such thing as samples or models in the present day meaning of the term. We took certain shoes from stock and these were all the 'samples' we required. There were no season styles, no variations in heels, vamps, patterns, stitching, foxing, etc., all of which were after developments. Today most shoes are sold at two per cent. ten days net, sixty."

May Sell Shoes by Aeroplane

"Yes," continued Mr. Griffiths, "I have had a number of interesting experiences. Today, we do no driving whatever except in an auto, and if the same progress is made in the next thirty years, as there has been in the past, I tell my son that he will be visiting some of the smaller towns in a flying machine. One cannot realize the changes and improvements that have taken place. In my thirty-seven years on the road, I have been off only twice on account of illness. Once I was in a serious railway collision at Beeton Junction, once in a fire at a hotel in Everett, escaping only in my night clothes. Fortunately my samples had not yet come up from the station, and another time I was in a runaway. Coming down a steep hill the reins broke and the horses descended at a mad gallop. Fortunately nothing gave way. On the whole I have had nearly forty years of pleasant, active life in the shoe trade, and now my son, who has been assisting me for the last three years, is going to look after a large portion of my territory, although I expect to see all my customers, at least once or twice a year. I am selling in many instances the second, and in some cases, the third generation of buyers, such as the A. Ronald Co., of Minesing."

Contrasting Conditions Then and Now

Mr. Griffiths, who has resided in Barrie for many years, covers the territory north to North Bay, west to Shelburne and Owen Sound, and the country around Midland, as well as the Midland division. "In the early days it was thought," concluded Mr. Griffiths, "that four times a year was plenty often enough to see a merchant, but now many of our customers are seen eight and ten times, in order to satisfy their wants. This is the age of specialization. Years ago, it was one of generalities. This is the period of comfort, swiftness, convenience, dash and style. That of four decades ago was remarkable more for leisure, solidity, conventionality and simplicity. The country was not nearly as prosperous then as it is today. The standard of retailing has been raised in every respect. Shoes have infinitely more beauty, grace,

Stray Shots From Solomon

There are some men who think they have a stock of truth when they pick up a few chunks of cheap wisdom from text books and sermons. Wisdom is dear because it is scarce and truth is scarcer than wisdom. Therefore, says the wise man, "Buy the truth and sell it not."

Truth is the result of picking that makes the fingers sore and the eyes ache. You have to pay for truth a price that the wise man says is "above rubies." Buy the truth let it cost what it may in perplexity, anguish of soul and weariness of the flesh and when you get the vision don't barter it for money, for influence, or even for life. What this age needs now more than any other thing is "truth." The man with the vision of eternal things that are not moved by the little affairs of man and his baubles.

Don't take it all out on the Germans. There are lots of Huns right here in Canada, and some of them are reading these "presents." Nietzsche has plenty of disciples in business and many of them subscribe to the doctrine of force shines in the Devil's saying "business is business." We heard the other day of a concern that stole away a competitor's clerk, then took his bookkeeper and followed up by making their victim a ridiculous offer for his business. The competitor was besides a man suffering with serious physical disability. No doubt this business harpy called his methods "shrewd business," but if any man can tell the difference between this sort of thing and the "thug" who holds up a pedestrian on a lonely road he is a pastmaster at the art of making black white. Men who resort to these tactics are thieves at heart and would put their hands in their neighbors' pockets if they were sure they would escape the penitentiary. "There is a way that seemeth right to a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death." The fellow who does this sort of thing will get his some day.

"thirty-nine articles" and the Westminster "confession." The

When you hear a man shouting you can put it down there is a slat loose. A man may be clever, he may have energy and may make a reputation for doing things but if he can't control his mouth he spoils it all. It is like a cow that gives a good pail of milk and kicks it over. "Let wisdom dwell with prudence." The fellow who lacks gumption may be as smart as can be but he will wind up at the scrap pile. The world is full of failures who have not known how to keep their mouth shut. Don't be one of those chatterers who speak first and think after. Don't be one of those fellows who always "says what he thinks" and keeps decent people busy picking up the beans he spills. A man's mouth is his own but when he lets it run amuck he can't complain if he gets it smacked. Prudence is the home of wisdom. The kind that comes forth from under such a roof is the brand that the world sits and listens to. We all talk too much and all need to be warned that it pays to think twice before we speak once. There is a kind of bravery, too, that is on the same level. He that "refraineth his lips is wise." So also with his hands.

World records are broken when conscience gets after a man. The distance a guilty man will put behind him when he thinks the avenging Nemesis is on his track is downright astonishing. Men have been known to run clear to Mexico without stopping because somebody looked at them in a way that seemed to reveal a knowledge of their secret crimes. A preacher who addressed a colored audience the other day had a good time until he incidentally mentioned chickens, when even the deacons began to look around at the door and shuffle their feet uneasily. The same restlessness may be noticed in almost any congregation when the preacher begins to get a little closer to common failings. Solomon realized this. You have only to load up with a good dose of moral buckshot and fire point blank and the birds begin to drop. It is like the old farmer who went out with his grandson squirrel hunting. The old gentleman's business was to shake the tree and the boy did the firing. After several ineffectual shots the old man asked a show at the gun, and with the remark that he "couldn't hit anything," the boy handed it to him. A squirrel was soon sighted and the old gentleman raised the weapon in his palsied hands and fired almost before taking aim. "I knew I would git him," said the old chap delightedly. "Of course you would," sneered the lad, "anyone who aimed all over the tree like you did would be sure to hit something." Truly "the wicked flee when no man pursueth."

Feeling is all right in its place, but a cabbage head is better than a mushy heart when it comes to keeping a fellow out of trouble. Use your head, HEAD vs. HEART but he that walketh wisely shall be delivered." A clear eye and a steady step for a dangerous road, and save us from the fool who trusts to luck on a dark night, on a swamp trail. There are a lot of people who are luckier than they think, for somehow Providence does seem to favor fools. "It is better to be born lucky than rich," nevertheless, lots of men would be richer if they had less luck and more brains. The man in business these days who trusts to luck rides an uncertain skate, that will land him sooner or later in the ditch.

Nine-tenths of the failure in life are good hearted fellows who never got down to bridling their foolish impulses.

A SHOEMAKER, A HUNTER, A FISHERMAN

(See Front Cover)

One of the finest men in the shoe manufacturing field of the east is Narcisse Gagnon, proprietor of Aird & Son, Montreal, who has made a remarkable success of his life work. Specializing in the manufacture of shoes for the jobbing trade of the country Mr. Gagnon has built a remarkably large business. In addition to sterling qualities of his own Mr. Gagnon has the benefit of the long experience and ability of his right-hand man, F. X. Leblanc, who looks after the financial and selling departments.

Mr. Gagnon was born at Rimouski May 18th, 1860, and received his education in that town. While still a boy he became apprenticed to his father, who conducted a shoe shop, and for several years learned the rudiments of shoemaking, under the exacting eye of his father. He came to Montreal in 1880 and was engaged in the retail shoe business until 1885, after which he went into manufacturing. In 1899 he bought out the business of Aird & Son, then conducted in a factory on St. Timothy street, which Mr. Gagnon enlarged. In 1912 the present factory was erected on Ontario street. It is 50 x 140 by five storeys and employs 250 hands. The extent of the firm's output can be estimated when it is known that annual sales are reported to be running close to a million dollars.

Mr. Gagnon, being a thorough shoemaker, has always taken an active interest in his business, but not to the extent of being a slave to it. He is a mighty hunter—in fact it is reported that he shot a bear last fall, although he never produced an affidavit to this effect. His prowess as an angler he comes by naturally, as everybody from the lower St. Lawrence district is taught from childhood how to lure the big fish from the salt waters of the wide St. Lawrence.

Mr. Gagnon was married in 1886 and is the proud possessor of two daughters and two sons. Emile, his eldest boy, is in the business with him, in charge of the order department, and the second son is at college studying law.

NEW POSITIONS FOR SEVERAL OFFICIALS

Several important changes and promotions have taken place on the staffs of the Canadian Consolidated Rubber Co., Montreal.

R. E. Jamieson, who has been general sales manager for the past few years has been made a director in charge of sales for the whole Dominion Rubber System.

J. M. S. Carroll, who has been manager of the Quebec Division for several years, has been promoted to the post of general sales manager, succeeding Mr. Jamieson.

Hugo Wellein, late manager of the Winnipeg Division, succeeds Mr. Carroll as manager of the Quebec Division, and will have his headquarters in Montreal.

Charles H. Holden, former Western sales manager, has been appointed manager of the Manitoba Division succeeding Mr. Wellein.

Two new divisions have been created—at Calgary and Regina, which were formerly under Winnipeg. A. C. McGiverin branch manager at Calgary, has been made division manager, and L. T. McGiverin, formerly manager of the Saskatoon branch, has been promoted to the position of manager of the Regina Division with headquarters at Regina.

George Bergeron is the new assistant manager, Quebec Division, and H. R. Nixon is chief clerk to director in charge of sales.

RUBBERS OR COUGH MEDICINE—WHICH?

"If I were a shoe dealer," says R. R. Thompson, in "System" magazine, "I would place in my window a pair of rubbers and a large bottle of cough medicine, one beside the other. Behind them I would place a display card reading something like this:

WHICH?

Safety first, or cough syrup—second?

Your health is too important to neglect by taking a chance in this weather.

Buy a pair of dollar rubbers.

I would play up this feature particularly on rainy, sloppy days. And, in addition, I would make up very small sample bottle of a cough cure for family distribution during bad weather. On these specimen bottles I would say:—

THROW THIS AWAY

You won't have to take this syrup if you buy a pair of Rogers' Rubbers now.

By thus catching prospects at the moment they were really likely to be suffering from a bad cold—due to the fact they had not worn rubbers—I would make a striking appeal.

THE HOUSE THAT PROTECTS ITS SALESMEN

"I have read in your paper of sharp practices and underhand tactics that have now and again been worked off on a retailer by a traveler, who possibly has not as much regard for his word, his record and his house as he should have."

"Let me tell you," remarked an eastern Ontario shoeman, the other day, "that I know of a merchant who sought to play a sinister act upon a well-known salesman. This footwear dealer lived in the city where the traveler makes his home and told the latter one day if he would send down his samples he (the retailer) would look them over. The salesman complied, and a portion of the stock room at the back of the establishment was used for showing the new models. After going carefully over the line, the merchant took a note of a few numbers and remarked very pleasantly: 'Well, I have a good idea now of what I want, and will let you know in a few days the quantities, sizes, etc.'"

"The traveler then had his trunks removed and taken back to his sample room, believing, of course, that a liberal order would be awaiting him within a short time. Judge of his surprise when a few days later he got a letter from his firm stating that they had received a communication from Mr. Retailer, who wanted such and such numbers—so many pairs of each—and asking their very best prices, since he was placing the order direct and not through a traveler.

"Well, to the credit of this house, be it said, they protect their travelers, and replied to Mr. Retailer that if he wanted to purchase shoes he could do it through their representative and not direct.

"The house had been informed of the rather sharp trick of the dealer in having samples specially sent up, looking them over, and then seeking to get a special price by eliminating the traveler, and depriving him of his commission."

Trying to Keep Down Commissions

"Now that is what I call a pretty mean characteristic," added the speaker. "For a retailer to ask a salesman to send up his trunks and cart them back (which must have cost the traveler anywhere from a dollar to a dollar and a half), gain all the knowledge he could of the line and then forward an order direct, in the hope of securing special concessions, is, to say the least, hitting below the belt. Such methods do not appeal to the open-minded, honorable man."

"Yes," spoke up another member of the company who was present, "I know the house from which this man sought to buy direct, and they have always stood loyally by their travelers, but there are some concerns who will not do this. A few years ago I was in the employ of a jobbing firm, and it was agreed that I should receive a certain percentage on my sales. Of course, I thought all the business that came in off my territory would be credited up to me, and I would get the commission, but no, I found out that the house endeavored several times to get a man to come in and buy personally, or to send in his order by mail. The result was that no matter how much work I might do in a certain town or what connection I might establish, unless I actually booked the order on the spot, I got no credit for the sale. Let me explain how.

How it May Work Out

"We will suppose that Mr. J— has opened up a new store in the town of S—. On my first visit I call upon Mr. J— and tell him whom I represent; what lines I have. Possibly I induce him to come down to my sample room and look at the shoes. He looks them over, but nothing appeals to him just at that moment, or he is not in a position to buy then but I and my goods have created a favorable impression. I leave my card with him and maybe the number and prices of certain lines, etc. In the course of two or three weeks, or possibly some months, when I am out on the road, Mr. J— comes to the city on business, and believing that we have something special in stock that he requires, or that it would be advisable to call, at any rate, he does so. Before leaving, he places an order for three to six hundred dollars worth of goods. Naturally, I conclude that, having done all the educational and pioneer work, I will receive any benefit accruing from the sale, but no sir, the house looks upon it as clear gain, and even goes so far as to tell Mr. J— that if he sends in any order by mail it will be all right—that it will get prompt attention and quick shipment, etc., all with a view of cutting or keeping down the commission of the traveler and giving him no credit for his enterprise, aggressiveness or preliminary efforts.

Get All that is Coming to Them

"I know other houses that use their men right, and all the business coming in off their territory is credited to them, and they receive a full commission. Some wholesalers are so mean that no matter how much diligent, faithful work is done by the traveler, unless he books an order then and there, nothing is coming to him in the way of a commission. It all puts me in mind of my experience the other day, when buying an overcoat. I went to one clerk and he waited upon me fully three-quarters of an hour but did not show me exactly what suited.

"Going out, I accidentally saw a garment which immediately caught my eye. I asked another clerk standing near how much it was and he told me the figure. It took me about two minutes to decide on taking this particular style of coat, and when making out the sales slip I told him that the credit for the transaction should go to clerk No. 1, who really spent much time on me and showed a great deal of patience, ness, as the advanced prices have put the factories in a more healthy condition than they have been for several years. In spite of the advanced cost for raw material, orders have been very gratifying and most of the plants are exceptionally busy.

The officers of last year were re-elected as follows:—Chairman, A. Brandon, Brandon Shoe Co., Brantford, Ont.; vice-president, J. A. Walker, Walker-Parker Co., Toronto; executive—A. Minister, Minister-Myles Shoe Co.; J. S. King, King Shoe Co.; C. B. Hamilton, W. B. Hamilton Shoe Co., Toronto; N. B. Detweiler, Hydro City Shoe Manufacturers, Limited, Kitchener; W. S. Duffield, John McPherson Co., Hamilton; Chas. A. Ahrens, Chas. A. Ahrens, Limited, Kitchener.

$45 SHOES ONLY FOR MUNITION MILLIONAIRES

"I've read so much in the newspapers of dollar-fifty kid, and $45 boots, that I took a little trip to New York and saw there not a single pair of $45 boots, but I did see a raft of shoes of good kid leather at $4 and $5 a pair. So I came back to my tannery and resumed my usual work of making kid leather for shoes for the masses; for those are the people we must please in the long run," says a Lynn, Mass., leather merchant in "Hide and Leather."

"There are only a few munitions millionaires who can pay $45 for a pair of boots. The bulk of the people have to plod along in shoes as cheap as they can buy them. When the newspapers feature, in their sensational ways, the few $45 boots, and forget the $4 and $5 shoes then they pile up trouble for us makers of kid leather.

"Already they have stirred up the competition of the rag and rubber shoe. Wherein is the economy of this shoe? It will never wear as well as a real leather shoe, no matter how many apologies and inducements and explanations may be offered with it. There is plenty of leather in this country, of which to make low-price lines of shoes, and it would be well if shoe manufacturers stuck to their last and continued to make leather shoes, instead of chasing to the new pastures that look green far away.

"We exported 100,000,000 feet of kid leather, at an average price of thirty cents a foot last year. If American shoe manufacturers had kept their eyes on this leather, and had bought it, they would have had material in plenty with which to make $4 and $5 shoes these days, and there would be none of the elaborate apologising for the use of substitutes for leather. There is still thirty-cent kid leather to be had, and even twenty-five and twenty-cent leather. Some shoe manufacturers are going to have plain common sense enough to buy it, and to make of it shoes for the masses, and I think they will win out.

"It's all right to feature $1.50 kid leather, and $45 boots, among munitions millionaires; but it is not business to talk about them as if they were the whole thing in the shoe and leather trade, any more than it would be sense to urge that the wheatfields be turned into gardens of American beauty roses.

"I believe that we should get back to a shoes-for-the-masses basis, and the quicker we do so the safer we will be. There will be less clamor over luxurious prices, and more argument for the tariff on leather that we will surely need after the war; also less disposition on the part of Congress to share profits with the manufacturer through new and almost piratical forms of taxation levied for the purpose of increasing the great national squandering."

GOOD BUSINESS IN TRENCH BOOTS

The John Palmer Co., of Fredericton, N.B., have made a large number of trench boots on private orders and have sent during the past few months many hundreds of pairs direct to the trenches and to the training camps in England. The company have also made some of these boots on army contract.

STRIKING DISPLAY BY WESTERN SHOE HOUSE

The Royal Shoe Store, 155 Second avenue south, Saskatoon, won "honorable mention" in a recent window dressing contest conducted in that city by the local branch of the Retail Merchants' Association. D. J. M. McGeary, manager of the store, was the skilled decorator and the accompanying illustration affords some conception of the attractiveness and beauty of his work. The background was of white flannelette and there was white enamelled lattice work around the top and around the built-up ledge at the back. There were also lattice forms on which were arranged roses and holly. The floor was covered with red velour and the stools and stands with skins of different colored leather. The shoes were arranged to show their individuality and graceful lines and there were neat, artistic tickets on the majority of them. The impressiveness of the display was added to by several vases of roses. All the accessories and the floor were sprinkled with "snow" and the holly was arranged so as to impart a genuine Yule-tide effect.

WHERE WILL SHOE PRICES END?

Writing to a leading Ontario shoe merchant a manufacturer of women's footwear who is never given to thoughtless speech or reckless forecasts, does not take a very reassuring view of the future so far as prices are concerned. He believes that every merchant, who is not well covered now for spring goods, should place his order as speedily as possible for whatever he requires. "If you are covered," he adds, "your shoes are worth two dollars a pair more to buy. The prices for raw materials are going up at a lively clip and our next revision of quotations will startle you. We will be almost ashamed to name the figures. Conditions are really getting something fierce. Just think of having to pay eighty to eighty-five cents per foot in the American market for black kid, and 20 to 25 cents more per foot for colored kid. Sole stock of the grade that we use is now 89 cents a pound and we cannot get a lining fit for a shoe under 27 cents a yard, whereas we used to pay only 16 cents. Sheepskin, that we used to put in our top bands, for which we formerly paid 8 and 9 cents per foot is today 22 to 26, and now that our good neighbors are likely to be mixed up in the war, it is certain that goods will not be cheaper."

DO TIGHT SHOES CAUSE FAT?

Miss or Mrs. Fat Lady, do you know that your feet may be responsible for your obesity? says "J. & K. Shoe News." Tight shoes cause avoirdupois, we are told, the explanation being as follows:

There are twenty-seven bones in the foot, which are "bound around" with various ligaments, muscles, tendons, blood vessels, nerves, etc. There is not enough room for all these in the average shoe unless it is the correct size to fit the foot. When the front end of a foot is cramped, the remainder is naturally spread so that corns and bunions result. With tight shoes go high heels, and as a consequence the wearer not only has the corns and bunions, but is presented with a few aches and pains in the calves of the legs.

Now, with all this suffering, what woman is going to walk more than is necessary? The answer is, "No one." She will sit around all day, fail to exercise, neglect her appearance, soon become flabby, fat and "forty"—and "good night" to that "girlish figure."

The chain of reasoning is as certain and as mercilessly cold as the fate of the movie heroine bound to the railroad track—there's no escape unless some hero comes along in time. And the only hero to save many a fair damsel or matron from a fatty fate is the shoe salesman with enough nerve to fit the foot in the size really needed.

INTERESTING NEWS FROM ST. JOHN

Percy J. Steel, who for many years successfully conducted a boot and shoe business in St. John, N.B., recently gave a demonstration of patriotism which evoked much favorable criticism from men high up in military and civic life. Although a well qualified officer he enlisted in a machine gun section, attached to the 165th Battalion, as a private. However, his superior officers realizing his ability soon promoted him to sergeant and in future he will look after recruiting for this unit in the province of New Brunswick. Sergeant Steel is a qualified captain in the infantry, a qualified lieutenant in cavalry and a qualified lieutenant in machine gun work. He has many friends in this city who are confident that he will soon rise in the ranks and eventually have the stripes replaced by stars.

Mrs. Emma Sabean, of Millidge, avenue, St. John, N.B., received a telegram a few days ago notifying her that her son, Private A. C. Sabean, had died from wounds sustained in France. He is a brother of Sergeant Archibald Sabean, who is at present in a hospital in England convalescing from wounds, and formerly was manager of the boot and shoe department of Bucknam & Colwell, of Eastport, Me.

Paul McAloon, one of the oldest and best known residents of St. John, died recently after a brief illness. He was in his 99th year, was unusually active, and maintained the full use of his faculties until his death. He was born in Ireland in the same year that the late Queen Victoria was born, 1819, and as a young boy learned shoemaking. At the age of twenty-eight years he migrated to this country and until a decade ago was engaged at the trade he learned in Ireland.

St. John handlers and manufacturers of leather differ in their opinion as to the trend of the leather market. A few days ago it was stated by one of the local firms, dealing in hides, calfskins and such commodities, that the leather market was weak and that reductions might be expected in a short time. Opposing this the head of one shoe manufacturing concern said that the market was far from being on the decline, although the manufacturers were holding off from buying and the price of hides was perhaps tapering off.

STAND UP FOR FAIR PROFIT

There is no line requiring more careful attention than the shoe business, and no line is so burdened with complaints. Now it is in addition a style line, with all the risk that goes with style goods. And yet shoe merchants have been taking thirty per cent. where the millinery people, for example, have been securing one hundred per cent. Millinery often turns as fast as once a month; shoes are doing very well indeed if they turn five times a year in the men's sections and three times in the women's—and still the shoe men take the narrower profit, says a leading western shoe merchant who operates several stores.

"But, as I say, a change for the better is noticeable. Shoe merchants are beginning to stand up for a profit that is fair to their business.

"They should get at least ten per cent. on their selling prices—then if they turn their stocks three or four times a year they will make from thirty to forty per cent. on their investments.

"The rising costs are not mythical, by any means, and justify a part of the adjustment in profits to which I am referring. The costs have been rising for the last fifteen years, but it is only within the last four or five years that merchants have been paying much attention to them. I have noticed an increase of from forty to fifty per cent. during the thirteen years that we have been in business. Of course the one best way to meet this increase is to turn the stocks faster. In our line, buying novelties for a quick turn —which is the only way they should be bought—will result in speeding up the combined rate of turnover for the entire stock of the store.

"The big items in these increases in costs are higher rents and payrolls. In addition to turning the stocks more rapidly, it is of course possible to fight the rising costs by working out ways to get more from the rental and payroll. Advertising is one means for making the rent charge produce more, for if it is successful it increases the use to which the space is put. But you must of course watch the advertising bills and not let them run away with the proposition.

"As for the payroll, I think profit-sharing is an unsatisfactory means for endeavoring to get more out of it. If you start sharing profits, you are likely to run into trouble because the employees will not understand the necessity of depreciating stocks, fixtures, and so on, properly. They will say: 'Here, these stocks, and so forth, are perfectly all right—they are worth one hundred cents on the dollar—it is not fair to reduce the profits by depreciating them.' Still, you know they must be depreciated.

"I think commissions and drawing accounts give the best satisfaction. Of course there is a danger that customers will be unduly forced to buy or given unsatisfactory stock. There are ways to guard against that danger, however.

"We give a drawing account and a commission. When we put a man on the payroll we ask him if he is single or married, and how much he thinks he can live on. Then we fix the drawing account to cover what he can properly get along on—sometimes it is too low; in other cases too high. Then we give commissions, over and above this drawing account, according to the sales.

"Our managers get a percentage of the increases in sales which they obtain over and above the minimum agreed upon. We figure out what we believe to be the lowest volume each store should get, and then say to the manager: 'Here is the smallest sales volume you should get. We will give you two per cent. on anything over that.' We have found that the best plan."

WHAT WOULD YOU HAVE SENT HER

Mail order customers are sometimes not very clear or explicit in telling what they desire in the line of footwear. Frequently they are more emphatic in giving instructions regarding what they do not want than they are in setting forth their exact requirements. A rather striking example of both negative and positive wants is noted in the following letter which was recently received by H. & C. Blachford, Yonge street, Toronto, from a woman residing in a town in Saskatchewan.

It reads as follows:—

"Enclosed please find bank draft $6.00 for one pair of shoes size 4½, not patent leather, gun metal or cloth, laced, low heels, broad last, in a narrow last. I take size 5, as my foot is broad. These shoes are to be worn only for walking and standing during business hours, and I am hoping that you can supply me with a wide-toed, sensible walking shoe. If the enclosed amount is not sufficient for a shoe of the style described, please let me know at once."

If the recipients had observed all the instructions in the letter following the word "not" it would have been difficult to know what to forward the writer. However, the firm sent a black kid bal, carrying a low heel and wide toe and as no complaint has been made, it is presumed that the footwear is giving the customer every satisfaction.

CLEVERLY CONCEIVED HOSIERY WINDOW

The remarkable window in the illustration below was arranged by the display manager for the William Filene's Sons Co., Boston, says "Dry Goods Economist." As the reproduction shows, the costume of the central figure is made entirely of hosiery. No less than sixty different shades and colors were employed.

The hat, too, was made of hosiery. The feet of the hose formed rosettes on the brim. The hair of the figure was puffed through, so as to form a crown.

The figure was posed before a drop curtain and the window was brilliantly illuminated by footlights. It will be noticed that the drop curtain did not extend entirely to the floor and in the intervening space are seen the feet and ankles of three ballet girls:

Each of the shoes arranged on the floor of the window was in some unusual shade and all matched the colors shown in the hosiery.

The display, which attracted much attention, not only served to emphasize the extent and diversity of the hosiery stock, but by its extreme novelty and originality must have created an impression most favorable for the store.

RETAIL SHOEMEN'S DINNER ON MARCH 8TH

Wednesday, March 8th has been decided upon as the date for the annual dinner and get-together meeting of the Toronto Shoe Retailers' Association at the Board of Trade headquarters. The dinner will take place at 8 o'clock and, it is expected there will be a record attendance of shoe merchants and their clerks. The event will not be open to any one else, and stirring and instructive addresses will be given on organization and salesmanship. The one for the benefit and "gingering up" of the employers, and the other for better service and greater efficiency in the store. There will be an interesting entertainment and a large number of tickets have already been sold. It is expected that the event will be the most helpful, entertaining, and well-managed of any that have taken place in recent years. At the regular meeting of the Association, which was held at the Temple Building on Thursday, February 15th, the city was divided into districts and enthusiastic members of the organization decided to canvass their respective districts. Everything augurs well for the success of the shoe retailers' dinner on Thursday, March 8th.

RUB AND THEN POWDER THE FEET

You can tell your customers that if they have poor circulation they should rub their feet briskly before retiring, then powder them, says an exchange. If they do, they'll be pretty sure to escape feeling the cold during the night. Talcum powder or corn starch will absorb the perspiration from the skin and also will fill up the pores and thus decrease the excretion of perspiration. Powder used too freely may start bunions, but it is perhaps better to chance bunions than to have cold feet, for feet thoroughly chilled are a menace to health.

THE ENTIRE COSTUME INCLUDING THE HAT IS MADE OF SILK STOCKINGS

MR. LYNCH JOINS "REGAL" STAFF

Ed. L. Lynch, who, for the past six years has been western Canada representative for Minister-Myles Shoe Co., Toronto, has joined the staff of the Regal Shoe Co., Toronto, and will cover eastern Ontario, as well as Toronto and Ottawa cities. Mr. Lynch has spent eleven years in Canada and previous to becoming identified with the Minister-Myles organization, was for five years a salesman throughout the Prairie Provinces for the Cook-Fitzgerald Co., London, Ont.

E. L. LYNCH, TORONTO, ONT.

By his genial nature, obliging disposition and devotion to the interests of the firms with whom he has been associated, Mr. Lynch has won a large number of friends in the trade. He is regarded as a most successful and aggressive shoeman. Born at Winsted, Conn., he pursued special courses in Worcester College, Mass., and Fordham College, New York, in which he took a prominent part in all lines of athletics. He was for some time on the staff of the Hanan Shoe Stores, in the metropolis, previous to coming to Canada. Mr. Lynch resides at 429 Wellesley street, Toronto.

WHAT NEXT IN NEW COLORS AND CLOTHS?

In the making of colors, shades, tints and hues there is apparently no end, and in the new cloths secured by shoe manufacturers for immediate and fall models, one notices silver grey, neutral grey, steel grey, platinum grey, gunmetal grey, forest fawn, electric, canary, periwinkle blue, Copen blue, tapestry blue, drake (a blue which bears a tinge of grey and green), myrtle, spruce green, pampas brown, clay brown, etc.

There are almost as many materials for tops as there are different colors. Among the leading cloths are crinkle cloth, broidiere, art reignskin, brocade cloths, Venetian cloth, diamond cloth, eve cloth, corkserew, box cloth, tex-buc, and half a score of other varieties.

There are firms who guarantee to supply cloth to match any shade or hue of leather, and before long, it is expected that some enterprising leather house will be sending out announcements to the effect that they will produce colored kid to match any shade of cloth. Thus there will be reciprocity of interests, until all the colors of the rainbow with numberless variations have been presented.

Many of the new cloth shoes have fancy leather trimmings in the way of foxings, facings, stays, vamps, saddle straps, inlays, tips, collars, cuffs, etc. The combinations and contrasts of leathers, which were so marked last season, are being extended to include both fabrics and leather. The result is some of the smartest and cleverest all fabric and leather and fabric creations that have been seen for years. The all cloth boot will also be shown—some having Neolin, Rinex, Tenax, fibre and other kinds of soles. Among the popular shades in leather are grey and ivory kid, mahogany, tobacco brown, steel grey, royal purple, briar, etc. Just how well cloth tops will take it is impossible to foretell, but certainly the high-cut offerings in the splendid and attractive fabrics which cost all the way from $3.00 to $9.00 per yard, exclusive of duty, should make a strong appeal to My Lady Fair. There is only one draw back, and that is, as soon as there is a steady, insistent demand for any particular fabric up goes the price, which makes its employment in shoemaking about as costly as fancy colored kid.

FATHER OF SOCOZY BOUDOIR SLIPPERS

Clayton E. Hurlbut, of the Hurlbut Co., Preston, Ont., writing to the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL, says: "In your last issue I notice a picture of John McCullough, 866 College street, Toronto, who is a retiring member of the executive of the Toronto Shoe Retailers' Association. This calls to mind that Mr. McCullough is the real 'father' of 'Socosy Boudoir Slippers.' Some fifteen years ago when I was selling the retail trade, Mr. McCullough outlined the idea of a soft sole bedroom slipper, and encouraged me to experiment along those lines. Mr. McCullough bought the first consignment of these slippers ever made in America. They certainly were a 'phony' lot, but he was pleased with them and ordered more. From this small beginning a large business has been developed on this line."

TURNING WASTE PAPER INTO MONEY

The appeal sent out a short time ago by the Trade and Commerce Department at Ottawa, urging upon the people of the Dominion that they save their waste paper material, has brought the question of the baling of paper very seriously to the attention of retail merchants.

Just at the present time there is a scarcity of paper material and high prices are being quoted.

Shoe dealers frequently find that waste paper accumulates very quickly about the store. It finds its way into the store from various sources, and the footwear man soon finds his storerooms or his cellar filling with waste paper. Not only is the danger from fire very great, but to burn such quantities in the furnace is but to clog it up, which proves a great source of annoyance and trouble. The General Sales Co., 203 Stair Building, Toronto, are distributors for Canada for the "Jewel" Baler. It is a compact affair, strong, durable, and easy to operate, in fact, it is so simple that any boy can operate it. There is always a ready market for baled waste paper, and the additional advantage of having the floors and premises tidy, while the risk of fire is reduced to a minimum. Full particulars regarding these balers can be had on application to the above mentioned firm.

SEEK MORE HIDES FOR CANADA

A deputation of leather dealers conferred in Ottawa recently with Sir Geo. Foster in regard to the scarcity of leather. Mr. F. N. Beardmore, of Montreal, and Hon. E. J. Davis, of Newmarket, asked that something be done to induce Australia to relax its restrictions on exports of hides to allow Canada to get a supply. They represented that the situation was serious, that boot leather was reaching impossible prices, and that even after the war was over it would be scarce in Canada.

The Shoe Repair Man

USELESS WORK FOR REPAIRERS

Shoe repairers have advanced their prices slightly, says the "Shoe Repairer." In the opinion of the writer their prices are very low compared with the rise in cost of stock. Sole leather used on the bottoms has advanced from 40 cents a pound to 95 cents, and all other requisites used in the repair shops have raised in price, but the repairers in the eastern cities have made a very slight advance. In the judgment of the writer, who makes an occasional skip around among the repairers, the machine repairers are the safest ones to employ. What work they do is sure and accurate and they use the best of stock, while some others who work by hand use very poor stock and dope. What is meant by doping is this: They use a peculiar grade of leather which is called "stuffed leather." They put a heavy wax finish on the bottom and sometimes light paint. They use a great quantity of wax on their edges and heels. Sometimes we see them with a cake of wax in one hand and the hot iron in the other, and they melt the wax on to the edge and heel. They dress the upper with dressing suitable for upper stock—if vici kid with vici kid dressing, if gun metal with gun metal dressing. The shoes look well when they go out, but after being worn one day they look as though they had been worn a month. Now the machine repairers use the best oak strips and they trim the edges nicely and set them up solid on the machine without any wax. Heels are treated in the same manner. There is no unnecessary or useless work on the bottoms, and if the uppers need shining the shoe shining artist does that. That useless work on the bottoms and super-abundance of wax is suggestive of inferior stock.

THE FINISHING OF BOTTOMS

The finishing process on a cheap grade sole is not the same as on a high-grade sole, and the writer noticed a repairer in a large establishment lately finishing the sole in the following way: First, a stain of brownish shade was applied and after drying, the stained sole was sanded lightly over and a second application of the stain was again applied and the sole was finished to a gloss. This was on a cheap sole leather and the stain was used in the first place to fill in the pores, not the surface pores, but the finer ones under the surface, which is soft and worthless. This repairer had a roll especially intended for this process of finishing, since the sand paper would readily fill up and get full of stain and be of no use for regular soles. This idea struck the writer as a valuable one, as the method is a quick one and entirely practical even in a small repair shop. A fan was used on the floor shaft to help dry out such stained soles, so that no time would be lost between the staining and sanding operation. Both the forepart and heel could be finished in that manner at bottom finishing.

FLAT vs. ROUND BOTTOMS

The idea of straightening out the shoe bottom during the application of a new sole is not to be encouraged. Leave the shoe in its original state, as the feet of the wearer will not be at ease for a long time in a shoe repaired that way. Especially is this true in the case of whole-soleing. A short tap will not hold the shank, so that even if the forepart is flat, the wearer will experience no difficulty in getting the shoe to adapt the shape of his foot. The question of flat and round bottoms is not yet decided, even in the largest repairing establishments. Some still claim that the people, generally speaking, prefer the round bottom to the flat. In the writer's opinion the kind of shoes one has in mind in speaking on this subject has much to do with it. Take the turn shoe, and the round bottom is the only kind, not only because the particular shoemaking process so demands, but also for the reason that the round-shaped bottom is the best for comfort. With a welt or McKay shoe the flat bottom seems to be the one most preferred by manufacturers, but is it so with the wearers? It is a well-known fact that people who once wear round bottom shoes are never satisfied with flat bottom shoes thereafter. Repairers would do well to inquire of customer about the shape desired, as it is entirely possible for repairers to bring about a round bottom. The writer has in mind the so-called "Napoleno Sale," which means a double sole, the outward sole having a rounded edge, due to the skiving down of the leather all around.

LEATHER AND SHOES OF HORSEHIDE

It seems to be just about as hard to get horsehide today as it is to get any other kind of stock. There are some tanneries that seem to be making a great specialty of this leather, along with sheep, and it is just about as hard to get one as the other at the present time, says "Shoe Topics."

All parts of the hide are used to make leather today and it is all used to advantage. In some cases it looks much like calf and many people probably take it for calf. But, however, when it is finished, it is generally pretty good stock to wear and it is always good leather when made right. It is a leather that should not be too dry, as it will have a tendency to crack. But this is something that can be said of most any upper leather, as it has long been a settled opinion among shoemakers that leather has very little wearing qualities once the oil has left it.

Horse has been used now for some time but it is likely that there were many shoemakers who never had heard of it as late as a generation ago. These were the shoemakers who had worked all their lives on the real heavy work, in which there was no colt or horse ever used. If such stock was run in the men's boots and shoes of forty and more years ago, the writer never heard of it. Cowhide was the regular upper in the working shoes and as there was plenty of it not much else was ever tried.

It seems that horsehide has been used in certain other lines for a long time and it has been adapted for some of these in a great measure, too. It was a great leather to put into a razor strop, for instance and for that purpose it has been a pronounced success. It makes a very smooth strop and there appears to be some quality about it that imparts a very keen edge to the razor.

There is a good deal of horse being cut just now in many of the men's cutting rooms and especially in those rooms where they are cutting a medium shoe. The leather is put into vamps and that there is a good demand for it may be judged from the steadily advancing price. Take some of the splits, for instance, and they are actually selling for thirty cents a foot at the present time, whereas if the leather men could get twelve cents for it, as late as three years ago, they would consider themselves extremely lucky.

The supply of horsehides comes from all parts of the world. Many people do not understand where all the stock comes from but it may be said that a tanner with plenty of money can get all he wants, even today. But this refers to the present more than to the future. The future is very uncertain, to say the least, and to make it more so the supply is growing shorter all the time. This, at least, is the opinion of the men who make leather and they are in a position to know more about it than most other people in the trade.

HAMILTON REPAIR MEN GET TOGETHER

The Hamilton Shoemakers' and Repairers' Association of Hamilton, Ont., has been organized with a strong membership and bright prospects. The regular meetings are held the second Monday in each month, and already the organization has over thirty members.

John A. Ross is President of the Association; Thomas Grayson, vice-president, and Fred. C. Tebbs, 662 King street east, is secretary-treasurer. The executive committee is composed of F. H. Revell, A. Miller, W. Greer, H. Henderson, F. R. Clark and H. Wood.

REPAIRERS' BANQUET WILL BE HUMMER

Toronto Shoe Repairers' Association have perfected arrangements for their first annual banquet, which will be held at the St. Charles, on Wednesday, February 21st. It is expected that about 100 members of the trade and representatives from jobbing houses will be present to enjoy the splendid programme of speeches, delightful entertainment, and sumptuous repast which will be provided. The committees have been working enthusiastically for the success of the gathering and visitors from outside points have been invited to attend. The regular fortnightly meeting of the Association will not be held on February 22nd, as everything is being centred on the banquet, which bids fair to be a big success.

WHY YOU SHOULD ADVANCE PRICES

they are required for fall sale by the merchant or not, and, of course, all prices are subject to the material that we have on hand. It may be possible that we will put this policy in force. Our salesmen will probably leave for their respective grounds during the month of March with instructions to sell from such samples as we have prepared for quick delivery, for what might be called immediate shipment from stock, and from such samples as we have prepared for what might be considered fall trade, according to the time that we can make delivery, and we will probably ask the customers to give us the latest date which they will accept delivery, and we ourselves will regulate any earlier delivery from our factory. Of course, the prices on our samples are subject to the approval of the company."

Manufacturers Favoring Fall Samples

A large maker of men's shoes states: "The writer has been east in Boston and other centres for the last week, and went through the leather market there thoroughly, also general conditions in the shoe business. From the information that I have gathered I think it will be a mistake for the manufacturers to hold back their samples and not go out as early as they have done in previous years. We were all a little late last fall, but last March we went out early and I believe it to be the better way to go out early as from the leather market prices will be higher before very long on sole leather and kid leather. Kid skins are very scarce and the prices to-day over last September are 100 per cent. higher, calf skins are not quite as high but calf skins are very scarce especially the light weights, cut sole leather is very firm so that there is no outlook for reduction in leather for the coming season. Orders at the present time in the East are not as good as they were last year at this time, but manufacturers are hopeful for a good season, and are making preparations accordingly. Buying has been very light during January and will also be light for the later part of February owing to the manufacturer having bought all his leather last fall in order to get correct prices. In March you will find prices jumping very high and the manufacturer who does not get in first will find himself handicapped getting his supply of leather that he requires. The retailer naturally retrenches when he has to advance prices, but the retailer that doesn't keep his stock up and buys from hand to mouth, will find that he has got to pay a higher price than the retailer who comes out and buys at the proper seasons. The retailer who does not buy in March and April will have to pay more for his shoes in May and June. It is almost impossible to get kid skins to-day since the United States on February 3rd has broken relations with Germany. The insurance rates have gone so high that a great many of the insurance companies refuse to insure boats from India. One manufacturer in Boston went his own security on his insurance to get his skins over as the insurance companies refused to handle it. In some centres the public have been buying two pairs of shoes where previously they only bought one pair, but that is an exception, the general public has not been doing this, and when a higher price is asked they will not hesitate to pay it. So that for the Canadian manufacturer I believe the one that goes out early, that is about the first or second week in March, will be better off than the one that starts later."

A large manufacturing and jobbing house says: "We are making only a few lines for our fall trade such as skating, hockey and a few fall staples. Our travelers will leave as usual with prices subject to change. We generally give our travelers a certain period to sell at ruling prices, say a month at the time, according to the leather we have on hand, and then we advance our prices and give them another month at these prices and so on. We have never been in favor making big jumps in prices, as the advances appear less when we increase our prices gradually."

A far East manufacturing concern answers: "We have been curtailing our line for some little time, and have reduced the number of samples we usually carry, very materially. We expect to send our travelers out for fall orders as usual. Orders must be placed some time ahead, so that the manufacturers may have time to make up the goods, if retailers are to have their merchandise at the proper time. Of course, manufacturers must see to it that their leather requirements are covered and prices will no doubt have to be changed from time to time, in keeping with the higher cost of the raw material. The situation is most critical, and requires careful watching."

A large Montreal house takes the following view: "As far as we are concerned, we intend to do just the contrary, our travellers are leaving earlier than usual, because we feel the longer we wait the more money our customers will have to pay for their goods. If the United States should declare war, we will get our men out as early as possible, as leather will then go higher than it is now."

Another Montreal concern says: "We are making our regular set of fall samples, because we have a certain quantity of material on hand to cover these orders only that will be given early, delivery to be made when the goods are made and terms to be regular; no special terms for early placing. Of course, these orders will be limited to the amount of leather or other material that we have in stock; all the other lines outside of this, will be sold for immediate delivery. We think this is the best policy to follow in the circumstances."

One of the oldest and best Eastern concerns writes: "It is our intention to send our salesmen out at the usual time, around April 1st, with prices which we hope to maintain throughout the season, with the exception, possibly, of a few specialties. So far we have been in a position as regards supplies, to enable us to maintain prices throughout each season, and in so doing, afford the same opportunity to our far Western and far Eastern friends, as to the local trade, who have the option of purchasing some two or three months earlier. We are in a position to maintain this policy for the coming sale and therefore see no necessity for 'holding back fall samples.' A service based on a 'hand to mouth' policy cannot prove as satisfactory to our friends the dealers, who should appreciate the opportunity of covering for their requirements on a definite price basis and in ample time to ensure seasonable delivery; and as we cannot hope for any recession from to-day's values, to any extent at least, there should be no risk in so doing."

Will Not Sell So Far Ahead

A well-known progressive Western firm of manufacturers says: "This is a question which we will be unable to decide until just before our men go out which will, of course, be some little time hence. We hardly feel in a position to give any general suggestion in a matter of this kind because we think every manufacturer, jobber and retailer will have to do as he individually thinks best. If a seller has ample supplies, he will be able to go out and take business pretty nearly in his usual method. On the other hand, if his stock is short, he would probably follow pretty much an immediate business policy. A purchaser on the other hand, if his stock is in good shape and he feels conditions warrant it, would still probably take advantage of any opportunity to secure an ample supply of his regular merchandise for fall business, while if his stock is large, he would only follow up purchasing as closely as possible to his selling season. We do not feel that any general policy can be recommended to either a buyer or a seller on the present market, but that each individual will have to do as his condition and judgment indicate best. We do not believe any manufacturer will go out and sell his product as far ahead as has been done in the past, but because one party may feel it necessary to sell only for immediate delivery is no reason why another party, whose foresight may have placed him in a better position, should not, to his advantage, go out and take fairly generous business for fall. While we feel that everyone should be exceedingly cautious from now on, we cannot see anything in the future which would warrant a pessimistic view of the future particularly in reference to any serious drop in the price of footwear. What we need now is good sensible caution coupled with the fact that everybody expects to be in business next season, and will require a certain amount of reasonable merchandise to do business with."

A prominent manufacturer of men's shoes expresses himself thus: "Notwithstanding the uncertain conditions, we have entered a full line of fall samples into the works, and, in fact, have been perhaps a little more elaborate in our method of lining them up, such as regards new lasts, leathers and patterns, than we ever have before. We are looking forward with confidence to an increased business regardless of the higher prices, and our salesmen seem to share in this optimism. The conditions which have arisen in the United States in the last few days may necessitate some change in our policy."

What the Jobbers Think

A prominent Western jobber writes: "From our standpoint, we would much prefer having the manufacturers make up their fall samples in the usual way, although we can quite understand that this season they would prefer to follow a different course. The trouble is that if they adopt this expedient then they might be disposed to continue it in future which I think would be quite against our best interests, and against their own interests. Manufacturers who sell to the retail trade only, make up a set of fall samples and visit the trade at the usual time, showing a large and attractive range from which the retail merchant may choose. If the jobber is unable to show a similarly attractive range he has little chance to compete with the result that the retail manufacturer gets the business and the jobber and wholesale manufacturers lose it. If the jobber is able to secure his samples in the usual way, he can send them out to the retail trade and get a pretty good idea of what the customer is going to buy for the coming season, before he is obliged to make large purchases, and this is the better way for the jobber. If the manufacturers do not make fall samples the jobber then is obliged to depend entirely on his own guessing and place orders accordingly. These goods he has to take into stock and consequently he is obliged to confine his samples to the lines that he has purchased. This increases his stock, reduces the selection he will offer to his customers and necessitates increased capital. This is the way the proposition looks to me."

A large Eastern jobber says: "It is our intention to have our travelers leave here in the near future and call on our customers in the regular way for next fall delivery. The uncertainty of the leather market at present has forced us to buy all our stock before the men leave here. This has resulted in the lines being cut down considerably, as we do not like to take chances in buying fancy shoes so far ahead."

A far Eastern wholesale firm declares: "Our intention is to show samples of all heavy goods for which we have provided the necessary raw materials. For some lines it is impossible to procure leather that will cut anywhere within reason as to price. The policy of selling for immediate delivery only during the approaching season is much safer than the policy of manufacturing a large stock in advance of what may be a falling market. Our policy has been to sell in advance any goods, stock for which has been provided by the acceptance of our orders by manufacturers."

Another Eastern jobber says: "As far as we are concerned we think that now is the time for shoe buyers to be very conservative, and we have decided that we will only buy for immediate delivery, goods that we may require from time to time. We might say that we will also instruct our travelers when starting out for fall to sell only goods actually purchased and that we are sure we will have in stock."

An Ontario jobber says: "We are of the opinion that the present price of leather is the high water mark, and we propose to shape our business in accordance with that belief. We feel that it is a time for conservative buying and selling. There is the crying need for shortening of credit terms and the discontinuance of fall placing orders. We are advising our customers and are ourselves, going on the 'hand to mouth' plan of buying. In any event, we are satisfied that there is no possibility of staple shoes or leather being reduced in price to any extent. Any downward fluctuation there may be will affect freak shoes only. It is very evident that the markets for both sole and upper leather are cleaned up of all old stock and the hides in the hands of tanners to-day cannot be tanned and sold below the present market price, and the fact of the tanners in the country being in a position to hold the stock, makes it reasonable to suppose that they will not sell below their cost, no matter what changes may transpire. To sum up, 'watchful waiting,' seems to us to be the best policy."

Another Ontario jobber writes: "It has been our habit in the past, to only put in new samples once a year, that is, for our spring trade, as we have never seen the necessity for changing our lines twice a year. As to whether the manufacturers do this or not will not affect us to any great extent, as it has been our habit and still is, to carry staple lines only, and there are very small variations as regards lasts in staple goods. At a time such as the present we feel that shoemen, from the manufacturer to the retailer, would be very foolish to insist on two style changes a year, as the leather situation is so exceedingly serious that it will be sufficiently difficult to get goods on any last, without insisting that the manufacturers secure new styles. We have found after different buying trips—that have lately been made—that manufacturers are already putting into effect, the taking of immediate business only, and if this is carried out by all manufacturers, it will simply mean that retailers will have to accept goods as they require them and will not be in a position to place orders for shipment three or four months later. We do not know as to whether the time has come that the retailer will stop buying in large quantities. We personally are finding that our sorting business is quite fair, considering that our placing business for spring was the heaviest that we ever had. There will, no doubt, be a tendency toward careful buying, but we have not yet felt the effect of any of our customers buying fewer goods. The most serious feature of the shoe business, at the present, is, that in the event of the participation of the United States in the present war, that their government will likely place an embargo on both the shipment of leather and shoes for export, and if that condition comes about there is no question that the price of boots will go up in leaps and bounds, and that it will be exceedingly difficult to procure sufficient quantities of goods for the jobbers to accept the large orders which they have been taking in the past and this in itself will make it entirely likely that orders will be accepted for immediate shipment only."

No Exception to Usual Practice

A Western Ontario jobber replies: "Both in the United States and here manufacturers for the past few years have made few samples for fall, and no doubt this year will be no exception to the rule. We are of the opinion that the shoe trade will be much quieter this year than for the past year or so, and as a consequence the manufacturers will no doubt experience a period of dull trade. As the merchants have bought freely the past season consequently stocks on hand or on order are heavy, it will make little difference to the prudent buyer if fall samples are held back as they are not now

DEATH OF MR. D. D. HAWTHORNE

After a gallant struggle of several weeks for recovery, D. D. Hawthorne, wholesale shoe merchant, Toronto, passed away on February 15th, aged fifty-seven years. Mr. Hawthorne had not been in good health the last few years. In 1912 he was attacked with peritonitis and recovered after several months' illness. He then took a trip south, where he had gone at different periods since. A few months ago, Mr. Hawthorne was seized with an affection of the bowels, but once more, pulled through. It was confidently expected that in his last relapse, serious as it was, he would again conquer his ailment, but it was not to be. The immediate cause of his death was septicemia.

"Dan" Hawthorne, as he was familiarly known, had a singularly successful career in the shoe trade, both retail and wholesale. Born in Toronto, he spent several years in his youth learning the trade of cabinet making. Thirty-three years ago, he went into partnership with J. W. Blair, in a retail shoe store on Queen street west, between Spadina avenue and Cameron street, where a most successful business was conducted for ten years, when Mr. Hawthorne retired, and embarked into the wholesale line in 1894. His first warehouse was at 41 Yonge street, Toronto, where he remained six years. He then removed to 71 Front street west, but his establishment was wiped out in the great fire some thirteen years ago. He resumed business at the corner of Yonge and Front streets, in two upper floors of the premises now occupied by the Canadian Consolidated Rubber Co. From there he removed to 24 Front street west, where he occupied a fine large building for nine years, and in August, 1915, the present commodious, and splendidly-fitted up warehouse at 27 Wellington street west, which was owned by him, became the home of his large interests.

For years the deceased had resided with his brother, J. D. Hawthorne, 94 Heath street west, who has been associated with the wholesale house since its inception. The surviving relatives are J. D. Hawthorne, brother, David Bain, (one of the city travelers for the firm), who is a nephew, and two half sisters. The late Mr. Hawthorne was of a quiet, genial disposition, and by his energy, thorough knowledge of the shoe game and high ideals of integrity and service, gathered around him a competent and pains-taking staff, many of whom have been associated with the establishment for a long period. Mr. Hawthorne had one of the largest wholesale shoe businesses in Canada, employing a staff of nine travelers, covering all parts of Ontario and the West.

During his long connection with the trade, he made hosts of personal friends, who held him in high regard for his many excellent qualities. He believed in calm methods and in industry, application and perseverance. These qualities had helped to place him in the forefront, and he inspired the same characteristics in others.

THE HIDE OUTLOOK IS NOT IMPROVING

T. S. Lough, of Buenos Aires, Argentina, is spending a few weeks in Toronto and renewing old acquaintances among the leather and shoe trade, after an absence of seven years. For the last thirteen years, Mr. Lough has resided in the metropolis of South America, which has a population of one million three hundred thousand, not including the suburbs which are very large. There are some thirty-seven thousand English residents in Buenos Aires, and they have sent five thousand men overseas to aid the cause of the Allies, which is a remarkable representation. Mr. Lough states that the war is the one absorbing topic of conversation in the city where he has made his home since 1904, and that the feeling against the German is very bitter, much more so than in Canada. Mr. Lough, who has been associated with Beardmore and Co. for the last thirty-four years was, previous to going to South America, sales manager for the firm, and enjoys a wide connection with the leather trade. He has been purchasing representative for Beardmore & Co. for wet salted and South American dry hides used at their tanneries in Acton and Gravenhurst, and also buys for some American leather firms.

Regarding the outlook for hides. Mr. Lough is of the opinion that the situation is not improving any at present, and prices, now the highest ever known, may further advance, but no one can foretell the future.

"If the war should end suddenly my personal opinion," said Mr. Lough, "is that there would be an agitation somewhat similar to what occurred at the outbreak of hostilities nearly three years ago. Values might fall for a month or two, but there would be a sudden recovery and prices would again go as high or higher than they are now and there remain for perhaps a year or more. When things settled down there might be a gradual recession in quotations. After every panic, when hides have taken a sudden drop, they have recovered more quickly than any other commodity. There have been numerous instances of this in the past."

Mr. Lough added that Argentina was essentially a cattle raising country, and that experiments in wheat, in certain parts, had not been successful. There was a long drought last season which caused the death of many thousands of cattle, but this was unusual. People would, in his opinion, go more extensively in the future into cattle raising than they had in wheat for the former was steadier and more certain of returns.

SHOEMAN BUYS FRUIT FARM

A. L. Bartlett, 596 College street, Toronto, has purchased a fruit farm of fifty acres in the Grimsby district. The property is on Barton street east, near the town line, between Saltfleet and North Grimsby, and is covered with peach, pear, cherry, plum and other trees. He intends spending a portion of his summer there, but will not neglect his shoe business on College street. Mr. Bartlett is a son of W. H. Bartlett, of Brampton, a veteran shoeman of that town and spent several years learning the shoemaking trade with his father, afterwards holding positions with Williams Shoe, Limited, Brampton; C. B. Dayfoot & Co., Georgetown; the old Excelsior shoe factory, Toronto; Aylmer Shoe Co.

Aylmer, and the J. D. King Co., Toronto. Some fourteen years ago he launched the United Vulcanizing Shoe Repairing Co., at 555 King street west, Toronto, a pioneer establishment in the repairing of shoes by machinery. Mr. Bartlett later opened shoe stores on Queen street west, Spadina avenue and Bathurst street, and has been located on College street for several years. He is an enthusiastic motorist and drives a high-speed "Sunbeam" car.

FIRST RUBBER FACTORY IN CANADA

The following interesting facts relating to the early rubber history of Canada were recently published in "The Dominion" and will be read with profit.

Many readers may not know that the Dominion Rubber system dates back its origin directly to the first rubber factory established in Canada. Building operations on the first rubber factory in Canada commenced in 1853 and manufacturing started in the spring of 1854. The factory was erected upon ground at the corner of Monarque and St. Mary's streets, Montreal, which to-day forms part of our Canadian Rubber Factory site. The development and history of this factory is almost identical with the history of the rubber industry in Canada.

In 1853 Edward M. Chaffee, of the National India Rubber Co., Providence, Rhode Island, an intimate friend of Charles Goodyear who discovered the process of vulcanizing rubber, formed a partnership with A. Hibbard and later accepted Thomas Brown as a partner. They conducted business under the firm name of Brown, Hibbard and Bourne Co.

The next oldest unit of the Dominion Rubber System is the Granby Rubber factory, built at Granby, Que., in 1883. The following year, 1884, the Maple Leaf Rubber factory was built at Port Dalhousie, Ont. This plant was completely destroyed by fire in 1889 but was re-built on a larger scale in 1900.

In 1897 the Dominion Rubber factory at St. Jerome was erected and in 1903 the Merchants Rubber factory commenced operations at Kitchener (formerly Berlin), Ont. In all these factories, rubber footwear has been the principal article of production, although at the Canadian Rubber factory, the manufacturing has been extended to mechanical rubber goods, druggist's sundries, fire hose and waterproof clothing.

The greatest undertaking of the Dominion Rubber System was brought about during 1912 and 1913 when the Dominion Tire factory was erected at Kitchener, Ont.

The latest addition to the chain of factories that comprise this great rubber organization, said to be the largest rubber manufacturing organization in the British Empire, is the Elmira Felt factory at Elmira, Ont. As announced in our last issue, this plant will be used for the manufacturing of "Fleet Foot" shoes.

In a later issue we hope to give some information about the early days of the rubber industry in Canada.

IMPORTANT CHANGE IN MONTREAL PLANTS

Greater efficiency and economy in production are the reasons given by N. R. Feltes, general manager of Ames-Holden-McCready, Limited, for a change which that company is making in its Montreal plants.

Plans are ready and contracts are now being made for extensive alterations and additions to the company's plant on Mount Royal avenue east, in order that the company may vacate its factory at Lagauchetiere and Inspector streets, and concentrate all its factory operations in Montreal at the former location.

This move has been contemplated by the officers of the company for several months, as the company owns 137,000 square feet of land on Mount Royal avenue east, only a portion of which is now occupied by its present plant.

Although the consolidation of the two plants will be effected so that they will remain two distinct factory units, with a capacity equal to the present output, a considerable reduction in manufacturing expense will be effected by the move. The east wing of the plant will be used for the manufacture of women's shoes, and the west wing for men's shoes. The company's offices will occupy the entire front of the first floor facing on Mount Royal avenue.

In making the change, considerable new machinery of the latest improved type will be installed, making this plant the most modern and largest shoe factory in Canada.

The company expects to be installed in its new quarters by May 1st, the Inspector street building having been leased from that date.

The Montreal Distributing Branch of the company, which is now combined with the general office in the Inspector street building, will be operated in the future as a separate unit. Its office, sample room and warehouse will occupy a five-storey building in the jobbing centre of the city.

The company's factory, located at St. Hyacinthe, Que., which manufactures staple shoes only, has been operated to capacity during the entire past year, and it may be necessary to provide for additional manufacturing facilities for that plant in the near future.

The factory and warehouse of Ames-Holden-McCready, Limited, on Inspector street, Montreal, have been leased for a term of years by the Canadian Consolidated Rubber Co., who announce that greater manufacturing facilities have been rendered necessary. The executive offices of the Canadian Consolidated Rubber Co. and the clothing manufacturing department will be transferred to the Inspector street warehouse in a few weeks.

SOME ATTRACTIVE SHOW CARDS FOR MARCH

As a rule March does not bring any too inviting weather. For centuries it has been noted for its winds and lamb and lion-like weather caprices. But for all of these uncertain and unsettled atmospheric conditions, everyone welcomes the month as a harbinger of spring. How appropriate then spring shoes should be emphasized in your advertising and window displays. In fact the advertising button, which keeps the current of commerce in constant contact, should be persistently pressed for the spring trade.

It is always well to be a little in advance of the season, by which we mean that one should not wait till spring actually arrives before beginning to boom spring lines. Start early that the public may be unwittingly educated as to what the prevailing styles will be, so they will know what to buy and where they can buy them when they are ready to purchase.

Only in extraordinary circumstances should you have any special sales in March. This may mean an over stocking, a special purchase, or some other out of the ordinary conditions that will warrant the sale.

The introduction of spring flowers and foliage into your store and window decorations a month ahead of the season will impress your up-to-dateness on the public, and being up-to-date in your store decorations will create the impression that your lines of shoes will be in advance.

March offers St. Patrick's Day, which is full of suggestions for decorations in both store and windows. The dominant color will be green. Among the emblems will be harps, shamrocks, pipes, hats, etc. The harp should be the feature emblem. Large ones may be cut out of some of the various wallboards or large cardboards. These are very pretty gilded. They should first be given a coat of shellac and then gilded. Green and gold harmonize artistically in decorating and give a most pleasing and brilliant effect. Ribbons and crepe tissue paper may be utilized in the decorating work and very excellent results are obtainable.

Small sizes of the various other emblems, hats, shamrocks, pipes, etc., are very pretty and appropriate for price tickets. These may be had at any good stationers or fancy goods store.

Some time during the month arrange your spring opening. It is then you should decorate with flowers and foliage, etc. These to a great extent will be artificial, but a number of palms and similar plants may be rented from your florist and will lend an air of springtime to your showing. Some delicate perfume sprayed throughout the store will increase the springtime effect of your efforts. Music should be dispensed at this event and its character must be determined by the size of your store. In smaller towns and cities these openings are sometimes preferable in the evening, or they may start in the afternoon and continue into the evening. Of course, these details must all be determined by local conditions. A little thought and planning will work wonders with a feature event of this character.

The cards shown this month will form a basis for ideas for other designs for your spring trade. The shamrock design is a simple air brush effect, the leaf being cut out of stiff paper and laid on while the background is air brushed. This color should be a pale green. The lettering may be in red or black. Another effect is obtainable by laying the mat on and air brushing the leaf a green shade. By "mat" is meant the part of the paper with the opening in it the shape of the leaf. This card is a suggestion for a St. Patrick's Day window.

The $6.00 new spring lines is a purely March design in character. The lamb and the lion and the March hare are all legendary associations of the month of the winds. These figures are little more than outline drawings and should not be hard to execute. This card will look well if done on a light brown ground and the centre and top part cut out and a white back pasted on. The top line may be in black and shaded with a light brown and the price may be in red shaded with the same tint as the top line.

The spring wear card is very simple in design and therefore very easy to do. It has two bands across it that may be done in almost any color so long as the color is well subdued. The words Spring Wear may be in any color to suit the taste. The shading should be the same as the tint used in the two bands across the card.

The spring opening announcement is more difficult to execute but it is possible to cut a figure of this character from some paper and paste it on to the card. This can be in very fancy colors and the banner may be a tint to harmonize with the colors dominating the window dressing.

A dealer with a large town trade says: "Judging from the uncertainty of the leather and shoe markets, because of the world wide conditions made so by the war, the manufacturers would be justified in holding back until this extraordinary situation adjusts itself. One would be safe in advocating a policy of the utmost carefulness, as I am personally of the opinion the aftermath of war is going to be a hard one for our country for a less or greater period. When the slump comes look out for disaster. Your warning on page 19 of the 15th December issue of SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL was a timely one."

A large Eastern Ontario retailer asserts: "It is not our intention now to buy any leather goods for fall; we will place our felt and rubber orders as usual and let the leather lines take care of themselves."

snap and novelty. Footwear prices are literally staggering now as compared with those at which shoes were sold in the early seventies.

"Traveling is now a pleasure, with every care and consideration shown for the road representative, whereas in the olden times, a man and his grips could shift for themselves. Shoes were handled very much the same as any staple commodity and supplies bought to last a long period. There were no fall and spring or mid-season selling trips. Any old time was a selling season, so far as taking goods from stock and shipping them out loose was concerned. If a man wanted a rush order, the footwear was tied together in pairs, dumped in a bag and sent out by express. I could recall many other interesting associations of the days that are gone, but I have already talked too long. You have asked me to contrast traveling, selling, buying, styles, etc., of forty years ago with those of the present and I have done so.

"I may tell you that I have taken the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL ever since it was first issued and have watched its progress with increasing interest and enthusiasm. I get many pointers from its pages, and read with eagerness the paragraphs which appear from time to time touching the movements of the men in the trade, the trend of footwear fashions, the growing scarcity of leather and the rapidly ascending costs."

All he did to make the sale was to answer a simple question regarding the price. He was, however, rather determined in his stand. I informed him that if he continued to maintain his present attitude I would not take the garment at all, but would go to the proprietor and tell him exactly how matters stood. He then yielded, and admitted that clerk No. 1 should get the credit, but I had to adopt the tactics already narrated in order to get him to see matters as I did."

AMONG THE SHOE MEN.

R. E. Young, shoe merchant, of Stayner, Ont., has sold out to A. Chrysler.

Basil Healy, who for the past year has been on the staff of the Murray Shoe Co., of London, covering northern Ontario, will represent the firm in the Maritime Provinces during the coming selling season.

Paul Roy, of J. Einstein, Limited, Montreal, was in Toronto, London, Kitchener and other centres in western Ontario last week on business.

Elmer E. Wilson, proprietor of the Criterion Shoe Shop, Stoney Creek, Ont., has sold his business to M. St. John, who has taken possession.

John Baker, who had attained the age of 92 years, died at his home in Paris, Ont., recently. He was engaged in the shoemaking business until he was burned out a few years ago and at the time was the oldest business man in the town. For twenty-seven years he served as a member of the Paris town council. One son and three daughters survive him.

W. A. Lane, leather merchant, of Montreal, was in Toronto, Kitchener and other centres last week on a business trip.

How much higher will prices for fall deliveries of shoes go? Many firms have not yet made out their price lists as samples are now only in course of preparation, but it is predicted that the advance will be all the way from fifteen to twenty-five per cent. higher on certain lines.

Jas. Heffering, of Toronto, spent a few days in Montreal last week on business.

Mr. Goff, shoe dealer, of Charlottetown, P.E.I., has returned from spending a few weeks in California and other southern States.

William Chamberlain, of Getty & Scott, Limited, Galt, spent a few days recently in New York, Boston and other eastern shoe centres picking up the latest pointers in styles and patterns for the coming season.

An athletic club has been organized among the employees of the Nursery Shoe Co., St. Thomas, Ont., under the leadership of Mr. Whiting, who is a great hockey enthusiast. An interesting game was played recently between teams of the employees captained by Mr. Whiting and Mr. Shanahan. The contest was a spirited one and the score ended by 5 to 2 in favor of the former team.

W. F. Martin, Kingsbury Footwear Co., Montreal, was in New York and Boston last week on business.

Wm. Edwards, of Edwards & Edwards, leather manufacturers, Toronto, spent a few days in Boston and New York recently on business.

The many friends of S. Mullett, of the Williams Shoe, Brampton, are congratulating him on the recent advent of a daughter in his home.

The McCrudden Shoe, 1747 Des Erables, Montreal, manufacturers of misses', children's and infants' McKays, recently made an assignment.

N. J. Collins, of Christie, Grant Co., Winnipeg, was in Toronto and Montreal last week on a business trip.

Hugh White, of the White Shoe Co., Toronto, and wife, are spending the month of February at Wilbur-by-the-Sea, Florida.

There has been an increase of about twenty-five per cent. to the retailer in the price of cork insoles, which are now selling at $1.00 a dozen to the shoe merchant. Heel plates have also gone up about ten cents a gross. Nearly every day jobbing houses are receiving advices of advancing costs in all kinds of findings.

A. Sachs, representing the New Jersey Footwear Co., Newark, N.J., was in Toronto last week calling upon the trade.

H. Cohen, of the Standard Shoe Store, Main street, Winnipeg, was among the visitors to the east during the past month.

J. W. McCready, city clerk of Fredericton, N.B., passed away recently, after an illness of several years. He was one of the organizers of the Fredericton Board of Trade and had

The shoe repairers of Hamilton have organized a live association and the prospects for the success of the new organization are very bright. F. C. Tebbs, of the East End Shoe Repair Co., is secretary-treasurer of the new body, which starts off with a live, growing membership.

The many friends of J. W. Hendry, proprietor of the Granite City Shoe Repairing Works, 2191 Queen street east, Toronto, are congratulating him on the advent of a daughter.

H. W. Parsons, of Nugget Polish Co., Toronto, is on an extended business trip throughout the Western Provinces. The company are showing some new preparations this year.

Western Tanners, Limited, Vancouver, B.C., have incorporated with a capital stock of $25,000.

George H. Anderson, manager of the Amherst Central Shoe Co., Regina, Sask., spent a few days recently in Montreal, Amherst and Boston on business.

W. L. Francis, sales manager of Gale Bros., shoe manufacturers, of Quebec, spent a few days recently in Toronto on business.

The assets of the Allies Shoe Co., of Montreal, were sold recently.

The curriculum has been extended at the Ontario School for the Blind, Brantford, Ont., and among the trades added to the course is that of shoemaking and repairing.

M. Silbert & Sons, leather dealers, of Winnipeg, have registered partnership.

F. W. Smith, of Weyburn, Sask., was in Toronto and Montreal a few days ago on a buying trip.

J. M. S. Carroll, sales manager of the Canadian Consolidated Rubber Co., Montreal, was recently appointed by the Board of Management of the Dominion Commercial Travelers' Association as official delegate to Montreal Chambre de Commerce for the coming year.

Ackert & Rathwell, shoe dealers, of Lucknow, Ont., have moved into a fine new store which is in every way a credit to this enterprising firm. The front entrance and show windows are of the latest style—deep, narrow entrance with large plate glass on either side. The interior is roomy and bright with every convenience for customer and clerk. The rear is fitted into an up-to-date repair shop.

Walter Binmore, treasurer of the Canadian Consolidated Rubber Co., Montreal, has been spending a holiday with his family in Florida.

The motor truck of Kitchener, Ont., responded to a call from the Gourlay & Fogelberg shoe factory, to extinguish a fire which had suddenly broken out among the contents of the big 18-inch blow pipe. Outside the cutting of a hole in the pipe no damage was done.

Edmund McDermand died of paralysis recently in Petrolia. He was in his 81st year and for many years conducted a shoe business in Petrolia, retiring in 1906. Mr. McDermand was a pioneer member of the town council and had been active in public affairs.

J. B. Pelletier, shoe dealer, Fort Frances, Ont., has sold out to L. Parade.

The new four-storey addition to the Canadian Consolidated Felt Co., at Kitchener, Ont., is nearly completed and will soon be in readiness for the installation of machinery and equipment.

R. E. Jamieson, director of sales for the Canadian Consolidated Rubber Co., and F. A. Todd, accountant of the Montreal branch, were in Winnipeg recently on a business trip.

Edmour Brosseau, who was on the selling staff of Corbeil, Limited, last year, has taken a position with the Walk-Over Boot Shop, Montreal, and entered upon his new duties.

George E. Chalk, son of E. A. Chalk, shoe traveler, 75 Sorauren avenue, Toronto, recently enlisted for overseas service. He is a former employee of the Kaufman Rubber Co.'s Toronto branch.

Sir Herbert Ames, of Montreal, M.P., has been named as chairman of the Special Parliamentary Committee at Ottawa, which has been appointed to consider during the recess the care, vocational training and re-employment of returned Canadian soldiers. The committee will hold its first meeting on February 21st.

George G. Gales & Co., shoe merchants, 481 St. Catherine street west, Montreal, are holding an amalgamation sale. For the past few years they have conducted a second store on St. Catherine street east, but have transferred the lease of the latter establishment and will henceforth have only the one store on St. Catherine street west, where they have been in business for many years.

A recent despatch from Chatham, Ont., says: The city council at a meeting decided to commence criminal proceedings against E. S. Hunt, of London, formerly manager of the defunct Chatham Shoe Company, on the grounds that he secured $7,500 from the city by reason of certain representations which were fraudulent, and the machinery placed in the building and on which he secured the advance was not his property as claimed, and was covered by liens. He secured $7,500 just before the company went into liquidation.

Geo. Poliquin, J. A. Lavoire and M. Gauthier, of the La Parisienne Shoe Co., Montreal, were in New York, Boston and other shoe centres recently, in search of the latest pointers on styles for the coming season.

W. H. Miner, of the Miner Rubber Co., Granby, Que., has again been elected a member of the council of that city.

The branch managers of Ares-Holden-McCready, Limited, Montreal, held a successful conference in that city during the past few days. The prospects for the coming season were discussed and matters of policy considered, while an interchange of views on styles for the coming season was most profitable and helpful. The different factories were visited and gratifying reports presented on the operations of the past year. The gathering was presided over by R. E. Dillcine, general sales manager, and among those in attendance were H. W. Pearson, Toronto; F. M. Morgan, Winnipeg; W. M. Angus, St. John; R. W. Clark, Montreal; E. P. Hall, Edmonton, and F. A. Richardson, Vancouver.

Eugene Guay, manufacturer of counters, whose factory was situated at 230 St. Marguerite street, Montreal, and was recently burned, has secured premises at 1870 St. James street west. Most of the machinery is installed and Mr. Guay expects to have the plant in full operation in the course of a few days.

J. A. Vallary, of Toronto, has returned from St. Louis, Mo., where he was spending the past three weeks. He has been appointed representative in Ontario, Manitoba and Saskatchewan for the Hamilton-Brown Shoe Co., and carries a comprehensive range of footwear in all lines as well as many attractive novelties. Mr. Vallary is also representative of the widely known brand of Daniel Green's felts and is showing a fine assortment of felt slippers. He has represented a number of leading Canadian firms in his sixteen years on the road and is a popular and progressive salesman.

Canadian soldiers will continue to wear Canadian-made boots so long as the troops are supplied with equipment through Canadian channels. That was the statement given out recently by the Militia Department, Ottawa, in reference to a recent press despatch from London intimating that a large order was being given out to British manufacturers for boots to be worn by Canadian troops. All troops in Canada and all Canadian units in England are supplied with rations, clothing, etc., through the Quartermaster-General's branch here. These supplies are, of course, obtained as far as possible in Canada. When the troops go to the front the War Office takes over the duty of finding for all the British forces in France, and the cost of supplies thus given is being defrayed by Canada on a pro rata basis of six shillings per man per day. Some of the equipment which Canadians at the front are given is, therefore, of British or United States manufacture, but until the men really get to the front Canadian-made equipment is provided wherever practicable.

Remember the annual dinner of the Toronto Shoe Retailers' Association which will be held at the Board of Trade rooms on Thursday night, March 8th. The tickets are one dollar.

NEWSY HAPPENINGS FROM QUEBEC

J. W. Matheson, representing the United Awl & Needle Co., West Midway, Mass.; Jos. Goyer, of H. B. Johnston & Co., Toronto; M. L. Ste. Marie, of Belding-Paul Corticelli Co., Montreal, and A. A. Deverell, representative for Novelties, Limited, Toronto, were in Quebec recently on business.

A. Isseman, of the Walpole Rubber Co., Montreal, was in the city the other day, showing the company's new line—Rinex soles and riddle soles for factories and Rinex tap soles for cobblers. He reports business as very good.

Leonidas Alain, shoe dealer, of St. Romuald, Levis, died suddenly from heart disease a few days ago at the age of forty-seven.

Business in general is good, but the recent snowstorms and cold weather have not assisted country trade to any great degree. Salesmen report that the roads are very bad, which makes traveling difficult.

Eugene Thivierge, shoe manufacturer, has reorganized his sample room and in a few days expects to show his new samples in heavy shoes.

Magace & Lepinay, the John Ritchie Co., O. Goulet and Ludger Duchaine are running to full capacity in their factories and pushing ahead with their new samples.

In a recent fire in St. Joseph the private residence of O. Goulet suffered damage from fire and water to the extent of $400. The family of Mr. Goulet had a narrow escape.

H. Picard, foreman of the cutting room of Tourigny & Marois, has purchased a new private residence on St. Ambroise street.

Railroads are away behind in their delivery of freight, goods shipped from Montreal on the 31st January being still en route for Quebec.

A new leather is being used by some shoe manufacturers, which is an imitation of kid, made of chrome split. It is very smooth and cheaper than the regular kid and can be used on medium shoes. The price asked is twenty-three cents a foot. The price now asked for sheepskins is thirty cents a foot.

FOUND ROLL OF LEATHER IN HIS HOUSE

When Mr. Narcisse Gagnon, proprietor of Aird & Son, Reg. shoe manufacturers, Montreal, returned to his home in that city on New Year's Eve, he found a roll of sole leather blocking the passage way in the hall. At first he could not believe his eyes and thought that some one must have mistaken his private dwelling for his factory on Ontario street west. Coming a little nearer the large bundle he discovered a sign dangling therefrom which bore an inscription in French as seen in the accompanying illustration. Translated it reads, "New Year's Day, 1917—to Mr. Narcisse Gagnon, champion hunter and fisher of Canada. Wishing you a very happy New Year. From a friend." This startling and novel incident recalls an interesting tale. It appears that about four years ago Mr. Gagnon and party were on their way to a summer camp up near Mt. Laurier in the Laurentians. They stopped for lunch at St. Agathe de Monts where they met William Davidson, of the Marlatt

& Armstrong Co., Montreal. The shoe manufacturer informed his friend, the leather salesman, that he was going on a hunting expedition. "What," exclaimed Mr. Davidson in well feigned surprise. "On a hunting trip? Why you could not hit a door let alone anything on foot or wing."

"Can't I," responded Narcisse. "I'll bring you back a brace of partridge."

The good natured banter passed at the time and nothing more was thought of the incident until last fall when Mr. Gagnon was hunting, and among his quarry were some nice partridge, which he sent to Mr. Davidson on returning to Montreal. In recognition of the kindness, and the fact

Mr. Gagnon had demonstrated that he could hit something besides a barn door, or the side of the Laurentian hills, Mr. Davidson sent up the large roll of leather to Mr. Gagnon's home. Mr. Davidson is now pleased to admit that Mr. Narcisse Gagnon is the champion hunter and fisher of the Province of Quebec. The event has stirred up considerable rivalry among other members of the trade, who intend to try and wrest the honor from Mr. Gagnon as soon as the spring days arrive and nature is once more in a joyous mood. Mr. Gagnon is open to all comers and is confident he can defend his title.

TO ENLARGE ITS FACTORY SPACE

The Scholl Manufacturing Co., Chicago, manufacturers of patent appliances and remedies for the feet, have just taken on another floor of approximately forty thousand square feet, to cope with its fast increasing business.

Dr. Scholl, the president of the company, states that in addition to greatly increasing the present output of the company, provisions will be made for several new features. They will install a complete pharmaceutical laboratory in charge of an expert chemist, new cylinder press will be added for the printing and advertising department, and it is proposed to have lunch and rest rooms for its employees. There will be big enclosed space devoted to the educational features—lecture rooms, demonstration room, chiropody departments, etc., all conducted for the benefit of retail merchants. The company's goods have become a staple with practically every shoe dealer throughout the country, which accounts for the needed increased quarters and facilities.

CONDITIONS IN THE SHOE AND LEATHER TRADES

Still Playing a Waiting Game—Each Section Watching Its Neighbor—
The Situation Practically Unchanged, but the Feeling Steadier—The War Situation the Prime Factor

DURING the last two weeks the general situation has been steadier. Retailers have been more inclined to buy and seem willing to pay the prices asked for shoes. This has given manufacturers and jobbers confidence, and there is not the disposition to push sales there was a month ago.

Leather men, shoe manufacturers, jobbers and even retailers seem to talk as though there were little hope of the situation easing to any extent in the near future. Both jobbers and retailers admit they are heavily stocked, but do not seem to be giving way to any fears as to the outcome.

Leather prices do not weaken at all, if tanners are to be believed, and shoe manufacturers seem to back up their statements. The belief that as soon as the quality of hides improves, prices will stiffen has prevented leather men flirting with manufacturers who have tried to sound price possibilities on large orders. Stocks of desirable tannages especially in light leathers are small and manufacturers even at the price cannot get all they would like to secure.

The announcement of the embargo in Great Britain on leather, and shoe imports has created widespread interest. The United Kingdom has been a heavy importer recently of both leather and footwear from the United States and undoubtedly the effect will be felt across the line, although not to the extent some predict. The amount is not sufficient to make any appreciable difference in either leather or shoe prices there, and will be more than offset by the requirements of the United States Government in connection with proposed military equipment.

There can be no immediate effect upon prices in Canada as we have not figured to a sufficient extent in this class of trade with Great Britain. The result may be easing of the sole leather situation to some extent, but not enough to be worth consideration. The only thing that can have any appreciable influence upon shoe and leather conditions is the chance for an early end to the war, which will undoubtedly mean at least temporary dislocation of business and prices. But the chances for this are not at present very promising.

The rubber footwear companies are venturing forth with their new season's samples, and next week will endeavor to get retail shoe dealers to place orders for next winter's supplies. The recent advance will likely preclude the necessity for new lists or any changes of terms. With the exception of such lines as cashmerettes and others in which dearer materials are involved, there will not likely be any upward movement in prices. In fact, from what may be gathered the tendency will be rather in the other direction. There will, therefore, be little need for buyers holding back, although no doubt it is realized that rubber would be the first to experience the effects of a cessation of present hostilities in Europe.

Few Changes in New Lists

Rubber Schedule Which Went Into Effect in January Prevails With Small Increases on Jerseys and Cashmerettes While Certain Other Lines Have Been Reduced—Past Winter in Rubber Selling was Largest ever Known—Companies Had to Face Many Difficulties and Never Caught Up on Orders—Placing Season Starts March 5th and Big Rush of Business is Looked For—Review of the Present Situation

THE placing season for rubber footwear selling starts this year on Monday, March 5th, and will continue until May 5th.

It is understood that the new price lists will show little change from the figures which went into effect on January 5th last, when quotations were advanced, owing to the high cost of materials, shortage of labor and unprecedented demand by an average of twelve and a half per cent.

On some lines there has been a small reduction while in others there has been an increase. On the whole, however, there is a decrease of between one and a half and two per cent. Owing to the constantly ascending quotations for cashmerette and jersey cloths, there has been an advance on these lines of goods, while rubber boots, men's plainovers and duck lumbermen's are a few cents cheaper. Other lines remain practically the same as announced in the price lists of January 5th last.

Crude rubber has been ascending in price and during the past few weeks there has been an augmentation of fifty per cent. It is expected that the coming placing season will reveal the largest business ever known in the history of the trade.

A Record Demand for Rubbers

Since the elimination of the so-called second quality or heavier rubber, and the one price, any brand, going into effect some months ago, there have been few if any complaints heard. The past season has been the busiest one ever known in rubber selling game on the part of the retail trade. There have been days and days of wet weather and slush which called for the wearing of rubber shoes and, owing to the high cost of leather footwear, thousands of persons who never thought of protecting their leather shoes in the past have gone in for the use of rubbers.

They also realized, owing to the prevalence of pneumonia, la grippe and other diseases, which often have their inception in damp, chilled feet, that it was both wise and profitable to go about dry shod. The most casual observer riding in a street car or railway train could not help but have his attention drawn to the greater use of rubbers than ever. Persons, who never bought a pair before, did so this winter, and there has been no let-up in the demand for this class of goods while the factories have never been able to catch up with the abnormal business. When people are called upon to pay from seven to fifteen dollars for leather togs, which they formerly purchased at from five to eight they believe in the policy of protection, and economy—not only in the matter of physical well being, but in safeguarding leather from the deteriorating effects of wet and slush.

What Companies were Up Against

The reason that the rubber companies have not been able to overtake the numerous requisitions from the trade has been primarily owing to the scarcity of help. If all the plants had been able to obtain sufficient labor there would have been no shortage in goods. Enlistments for overseas service have drained heavily the ranks of experienced workers while the munition factories with their liberal scale of wages have proved an irresistible attraction to hundred of girls and boys. Although rubber concerns have advanced wages on the average of thirty-three per cent. and advertised in every available medium for help, they have been unable to secure anything like the number of workers required with the result that production has been curtailed fully one-third. Green labor of all kinds has been pressed into service and the very best possible has been done under the trying circumstances to meet the demand. There were many other obstacles to contend with such as the shortage of supplies, delayed shipments due to the freight congestion, etc.

Advisability of Early Ordering

The numerous difficulties which the rubber manufacturers have had to meet were fully reviewed in a recent issue of the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL and since then there has been no material change in conditions of manufacture, shipments, labor, and increasing costs. The companies have done their utmost. The one safeguard for the securing of the necessary stocks required for next season is in placing orders now and not deferring the matter as has been done in many instances in the past.

Some retailers have been in the habit of holding back thinking that they could secure the goods at any desired time. The inevitable result, even under normal conditions, has been that they have made requisitions too late, each one perhaps thinking he was the only person whose order was being sent in at the time, and forgetting that scores of others have been doing the same thing. Then wonder is expressed at the delay.

"I tell you," remarked a leading manufacturer the other day, "it is like this. Persons who should have got in their coal last summer did not do so thinking that they could have delivered whatever number of tons they required at any time. In the past they have got away with this practice. But what has been the result this year with thousands of householders all over Canada. They have been having the most anxious times of their lives and many homes have been on the verge of having no fire at all in them. The coal companies owing to the freight congestion, lack of deliverymen, cars, engines, etc., have been unable to fill individual orders for a single ton while some fuel merchants have had to deliver in quarter and half ton lots. I will guarantee that the people during the coming summer will put a full stock of dusky diamonds in their cellars, and it will be easy on the part of a coal salesman to take orders. In past summer seasons he has been given none too cordial a reception. People would say what is the use of me buying now when I can secure what I want at any time and the difference in price for present delivery is too small an inducement to warrant me tying up my money. 'No thank you I will come around when the cold weather arrives.'

Forewarned is Forearmed

"In a certain parallel sense this has been the practice of some shoe retailers in the matter of ordering rubber footwear. With the barriers that the factories have had to cope with in 1916, and the utterly unforeseen and abnormal state of affairs in the way of transportation, labor, supplies, etc., I am looking for the greatest placing season ever known. Across the border where the placing order period starts on January 1st, all records for volume of business were broken during the first two weeks. The companies never saw such an inrush of orders and I am of the opinion that the lesson of the past season will result in more business being placed in our line during the next two months than was ever known in the history of the trade. This will arise from two reasons—to be assured of the goods when wanted and also to the fact that the sale of rubber has and will continue to increase at a rate never known before.

"Regarding prices I am no prophet, but this one thing I do know that, considering the advance in quotations in all other lines of wearing apparel, rubber shoes are cheaper comparatively than anything else. The cost of leather shoes has, I am safe in saying, increased all the way from fifty to one hundred per cent. and the new prices for fall are not yet out, while rubber footwear has been advanced on the average of about twelve per cent.

Will Take Orders only to Capacity

"Another thing that contributed to the shortage of rubber footwear during the past season," declared another manufacturer, "was because the factories were virtually called upon by the Canadian government to furnish the soldiers with trench rubber boots, two buckle overshoes and tanovers to the extent of hundreds of thousand pairs or more. These contracts had to be executed within a certain time and taxed the capacity of the plants. All war work had to take precedence. The industry may be called upon again to supply the militia authorities with thousands of pairs of rubber shoes and I would advise every member of the shoe trade to place his order as early as possible."

It is stated that some factories will only book business this season to the extent which they can produce the goods under the present labor conditions and other obstacles and will then stop short. There are some 1916 orders which have never been touched so great was the demand for rubber footwear during the past season. Rather than disappoint customers, the factories will not undertake obligations which they can see no way of meeting in an operating or productive way.

How Britain Controls Rubber Supply

The fact that rubber has not increased in the same proportion as other lines of goods was set forth very clearly in an address delivered last week in Montreal by A. D. Thornton, of the Canadian Consolidated Rubber Co. He described the steps taken by Great Britain to corner the rubber supply of the world at the outbreak of the war, thus preventing the enemy securing a portion of this very necessary commodity.

The first action taken by the British Government was to declare rubber contraband, but this did not stop Germany receiving a certain amount through neutral countries. Then Great Britain

AN AUTHORITY IN SHOE TRADE

Enclosed you will please find postal note for two dollars for two years' subscription to the "Shoe and Leather Journal."

I must say in reference to your Journal that it is improving rapidly, and have no doubt if the supply of paper holds out, your publication will continue to improve. I find the Journal is quite an authority on leather and rubber goods, and gives the cause of advancing prices, etc. This should enable the retailer to convince his customers why he has to advance prices.

Trenton, N.S.

Yours truly,

ordered that all crude rubber be shipped direct to London. There was, however, a supply of perhaps 50,000 tons per year which Britain did not control, so the final step was to buy up this supply.

"There was a furore in Canada and in the United States at that time," said Mr. Thornton, "for the lack of rubber would have put the industry out of business. The rubber men of the United States went to Washington, but Washington could do nothing. Finally the Rubber Club of America sent a delegation to London, and it was arranged that rubber would be shipped to the United States on the understanding that all manufactured products should be shipped from the United States via London. Thus to-day Great Britain absolutely controls the world's supply of rubber, and supplies it at a lower price than it was before the war."

Mr. Thornton gave a most interesting address on the general question of rubber, its sources, methods of manufacture, etc. The rubber industry, he said, was to-day competing with the cotton industry for second place among the industries of the world, steel being the first. He described the miracle of Ceylon, where rubber trees, imported from Brazil, had outdone the trees of South America, and given Great Britain a tremendous hold on the rubber industry.

Special Sales Plans for Dealers

Making Surveys of Market Possibilities in a Locality and Showing How a Merchant May Take Advantage of Them

By CHARLES KAYE

FROM discussions of the subject I've had with possibly 250 merchants during the past months, it is evident that the next development along dealer-service lines will not be so much the physical things but practical merchandising service. Evidences of this are cropping up everywhere—the retailers' attitude toward the work of the A. A. C. of W., various trade publications, college short courses in merchandising, and more recently the work of two or three influential corporations.

With most manufacturers the present extent of their dealer helps ends abruptly with what they term "a complete assortment of store displays, window cards, electros and lantern slides." These things are important in their place.

The manufacturer can be of more vital assistance, however, by telling his dealers how to cooperate with other merchants in the promotion of community enterprise, conducting Special Farmers' Days, Spring Openings, Dollar Sales and various stunts that attract the trade to town. The dealer wants to know about mail campaigns and the manufacturer can help by multigraphing letters for the retail merchant when such facilities do not obtain locally. Where a foreign population dominates he can assist in the translation. These are little things that the merchant appreciates.

We have lately read how several general stores in cross-road towns do a business running into the hundred thousands by broadening their selling radius until it takes in most of the country. Few small-town merchants, even the most ambitious, realize their business possibilities and all these ideas can be passed along by the manufacturer if he is keenly alert to the fact that anything that stimulates the merchants' general business will boost the sales of his particular merchandise.

Be Awake to Your Opportunities

This applies to the larger towns as well. Recently the agent in Fond du Lac for a large builders' hardware manufacturer complained that he couldn't sell the goods. He said there was no demand. Yet when the sales manager secured from the local newspaper a survey of business conditions he found that eighty new residences had been built during 1915—not to mention several large buildings, movie shows, stores, etc. The merchant was not awake to his opportunities. When the sales manager confronted him with these facts and told him who to go right out an interview the proper people he agreed to make another try. Advertising would probably not have helped him. It was a sales plan he needed—not mere window displays or store cards or literature, but practical merchandising advice.

Help Which Increased Sales Twenty Per Cent.

Another merchant in Kansas City wrote that he was thinking of putting in a cheaper line of kitchen utensils and enameled ware. He liked the line—a well-known, advertised brand—but complained that his neighborhood seemed particularly irresponsible to all his efforts to attract business. The case was placed in the hands of the manufacturers' merchandising expert, who, after making a complete study of conditions, reached the conclusion that nothing was wrong with the neighborhood or the character of merchandise sold, but in the type of the store and the merchant's selling policies.

The merchant was situated in a high-class residential neighborhood and was making a price appeal instead of a service appeal. Formerly located in a cheaper section of town, he had not adjusted his sales tactics to the needs of the new community. No thought was given to the finer features of service that are needed in catering to a high-class trade.

The result of the merchandise man's findings were tactfully submitted to the merchant. He was not merely told to improve the appearance of his store, study his windows, arrangement of show-cases and cultivate the feminine appeal. He was told how to do it. Sketches for window backgrounds and materials for decoration were submitted, together with catalogues of standard fixtures. A floor plan for departmentalizing his store was made with suggestions for a model kitchen where various utensils could be demonstrated. The merchant was instructed how to emphasize those finer touches of courtesy that are appreciated in the better residential sections. Special service features, such as free telephone and deliveries, were emphasized. A definite sales policy was suggested—based upon a knowledge of the community's needs.

Here is an interesting thing, too. In studying the store location it was found to be situated almost next to a popular high-class moving-picture theatre. Yet the merchant's windows were not illuminated after 6.30, although the audiences did not commence to arrive until 7.30! He was losing this splendid chance to attract people to his store.

Advertising alone would not have accomplished much. It needed a business analysis to point out the merchant's weak spots so he could adjust himself better to his trade. I had the privilege to read some of the correspondence that passed and recall a letter in which the merchant said, "I now realize the fault was chiefly mine. I must make my store less like a junk shop. I must arrange my merchandise into departments. I must display seasonable goods in my windows and change them every week. I must cater to the needs of the community. So far I am glad to say my sales have jumped 20 per cent. over the previous months."

Better Stock Arrangement Which Sells Goods

Let me relate what one manufacturer is accomplishing in coaching merchants to make effective arrangements of stock. Many stores had not been making an individual display of his goods. A few packages were placed on the counters, some in the rear and often most in the basement. The impression on the customer was negative—he did not realize that a complete assortment was carried, and consequently went to the store selling these goods exclusively. The dealer usually complained he had no room. Hence many sales were lost.

This went on for a long time until the manufacturer conducted a special campaign for the more prominent display of his goods. Several sets of blue-prints of model shelving were prepared to fit various spaces. For instance, there was one of a seven-foot shelving, one for a ten-foot shelving, etc. They were made in units so the dealer carrying a hundred-dollar stock would need two sections twenty-eight inches wide and seven feet high; a two-hundred-and-fifty-dollar stock would fit into four sections of ten feet high. The shelves were all of the right measurements to fit different-sized packages, the weight was evenly distributed, the most popular-sized articles placed within easiest reach.

The dealers were amazed to see what could be done when the shelves were so arranged that no space was lost. They could never figure this out themselves. Then when the manufacturer explained the convenience, elimination of lost motion and the improved appearance of his stock, it was not difficult to get his goods into the most prominent position in the store. This was a real service to the merchants—something they appreciated and for which the manufacturer secured immediate returns in increased sales. For merchants who had no available wall space, plans for two simple portable display racks were designed so the stock could be moved to a conspicuous position during the active buying season.

Frequently dealers complain that they don't secure proper returns from their investment in certain kinds of merchandise. Yet if the manufacturer makes a study of the situation he will often find this is due to the fact that so many dealers carry parallel lines. Take paints and varnishes, for instance. Instead of sticking to one single standard brand you will find many dealers carry two or three kinds of furniture polish, varnish stain, floor varnishes, etc., not because their trade demands them, but because some clever salesman has slipped in a case or two. This is also true of other lines. To the firm whose exclusive agency the merchant happens to represent, the problem is a serious one. It cuts down the volume of sales and makes the merchant dissatisfied with his general return. He says there's no margin in paints and varnishes.

A Stock-keeping Help

A simple stock-keeping system will often eliminate this difficulty. But it must be presented in the right manner and devoid of all red tape. It must be workable in a few moments each day. Such a plan will give the merchant an accurate record of his sales, mark-up and net profits, and he will quickly realize that if he carries parallel lines he is increasing his investment, slowing up his turnover without making extra sales or larger profits. Incidentally you can show how by sticking to your single line he reduces slow-moving colors and odds and ends, cuts down valuable shelf space and is able to make a better impression on his customers. Consequently he will discontinue competing lines.

The amazing increase in mail-order business presents a serious problem to manufacturers selling through retail channels. Yet few have made an actual study of the situation and given the dealers sound advice and selling knacks to use in counteracting the local influence of the catalogue houses. A pocket sales manual giving specific arguments for the dealer to use is something much appreciated. Instead of "knocking" the mail-order concerns it gives a dozen quick tests and selling stunts that demonstrate the advantages of the particular brand of merchandise he sells. A recent check-up in small-town general stores indicated that 90 per cent. considered the mail-order house their most serious business problem.

When it comes to store and window equipment to display their merchandise, many manufacturers have the impression that it is necessary to furnish everything gratis. Most of this is of stereotyped design, suited for stereotyped stores. Yet if you explain to the merchant how he can construct racks, panel displays, signs, etc., he will often be glad to do it himself in order to give his store an individual touch. Moreover, the things he makes himself he will appreciate far more than anything you can supply him with. Give the subject some study and present it through the pages of your house-organ. You will be surprised how the merchant takes to it. Moreover, there is no objection to mentioning various articles of store equipment that can be purchased from the manufacturers—such as window-display units, artificial flowers and other decorative ornaments, showcases, etc. Often the dealer is at a loss to know where to get such things.

How Help Is Given the Clerks

We all recognize that the retail clerk is one of the most important factors in successful merchandising. But what have you done to educate the clerks in the stores that sell your goods? There is great opportunity for constructive work here. One manufacturer I know has perfected a series of ten weekly lessons with the privilege of asking questions concerning any phase of retail salesmanship. He is in intimate personal touch with seven hundred enrolled clerks. Think what an asset this represents! —Printers' Ink.

WASTE NO TIME ON "HA HA" WOMEN CUSTOMERS

They Like the Shoes, the Price, the Fit and Everything Else but Can't Just Make Up Their Mind or Do Not Know Whether They Really Need Them Just Yet—Do Not Deliver Without Getting Deposit and Give Curiosity Seekers Little Encouragement

I LIKE a man who can close up a sale when he has spent sufficient time in waiting on a customer," remarked a London, Ont., shoe retailer the other day. "How long he should spend with a customer must, of course, be governed by circumstances. No set time can be laid down.

"There are many salesmen who know how to properly approach a customer, get her interested and fit her correctly and then when all is said and done, cannot assist her in coming to a decision. They belong to that class of unfortunate people which you meet now and then. You have known public speakers who did not know how to close an address after they had said all that was worth while, or persons call at your home and not know when or how to depart. They linger and linger and remark that they must be going, but they never go. They talk on about everything and yet really nothing, after topics of interest have long since flagged. There are scores of salesmen in every line good at meeting and discussing efforts or propositions with prospective clients yet can never bring affairs to a head.

"They dilly dally, they lack the reserve force to reach a climax, to get the signature on the dotted line of an order or induce the prospect to say the necessary word that terminates the transaction.

"Well, the other Saturday night a stylishly dressed lady entered and wanted to see a pair of grey suede, high-cut bals that we had on display in the window. The store was pretty full at the time and the figure for the shoes was ten dollars. In this transaction, let me say at the outset, the woman did not object to the quotation, so there was no reason for delay on that score.

Close it up Right Away

"Well, I am not going into the minute details of the negotiations touching upon the sale of this particular pair of shoes, but John, one of my clerks, had fooled and fussed around the caller for fifty minutes and all of the rest of us were on the jump. People were starting to leave because they could not get served. Going over to John I told him in an aside that it was about time to close up the deal, that he had already spent too much time. Still he kept at it and seemed unable to do anything. Instead of handing over the woman to me or to another member of the staff to deal with, as he should have done when he found that he could not make the sale in reasonable time, he was still talking and fitting on shoes.

"I then took a hand in the game and asked the lady rather pointedly if she had not obtained a fit, and she said, 'O, yes, they are perfect in that respect.' She knew by my intent look and serious demeanor that I meant business and inquired casually if I could send the shoes up to a certain address.

" 'Yes, I can,' I remarked.

" 'To-night,' she further ventured.

" 'Yes, to-night—within an hour,' I replied distinctly.

" 'Well,' she drawled, 'I can scarcely make up my mind whether I want them to-night or not.' She showed a disposition to linger longer and I showed equal determination that she should not.

"I remarked you can think the matter over. I have a full stock of the line and telephone me on Monday if you take a notion to buy.

" 'All right,' she said and out she went.

"The following Monday morning she called me to the telephone and remarked, 'Mr. K——, can you send me at once that grey suede pair, size 3, B width, which I was looking at Saturday night?' I was in the store alone at the time and told her the messenger was out but that I expected him back any minute. I would have the shoes up to her dwelling within an hour as requested. She retorted, 'Do not fail me, will you?' and I replied, 'Certainly not.'

"One of my clerks who had been out a few minutes then came in, the messenger boy not returning. 'Here, Joseph,' said I, 'take this pair of shoes up to No. — and collect for them. Here are car tickets.' And off he went. He was there within twenty minutes and was met with a bland smile by the fair plausible one, who declared that she did not want them now, that she had changed her mind, and in this short interval. Here I was out car fare, the clerk's time and all the bother and attention bestowed the previous Saturday evening. I took particular pains to remember the address in the event of the female calling me up again and I certainly was going to give her a piece of my mind.

Could Not Say Just Then

"The next day another lady entered and wanted a beaded kid slipper which I sell for five dollars. She told me that she had observed my window displays of footwear and that I had a fine representative selection. She had been comparing my prices with others and thought that I was selling shoes more reasonable than they were. I told her that we made only a fair profit and that we always gave good value for the money. After being fitted she began to wonder if she really wanted the shoes or not and inquired if I would send them in case she telephoned later in the afternoon. I inquired where she lived and found that it was fully two miles from the store and in a district plentifully supplied with footwear establishments. Remembering my previous experience I narrated the facts to her. She disclaimed that she was the kind of woman to put a retailer to so much trouble and go back on him.

" 'Did you not know when you left home whether you wanted a pair of kid slippers or not?' I inquired.

The Dealer Was Very Firm

" 'No,' she replied, 'I thought I might and saw these in your window. I really do not know yet whether I should take them.'

" 'Well, if you will pay a deposit on the shoes I will be pleased to send them up,' I continued, 'but otherwise, no. I cannot agree to deliver to such a far off point as you reside and then you not know whether you will take them or not.'

"Finally she left, stating that she would call me up later by telephone. This she did and wanted to know if I would send the shoes. 'Oh, yes,' she really wanted them and would pay the money and all that sort of thing. Promises are seductive at best and I told her that I could not agree to send the footwear that night as I was alone in the shop and it was nearly the closing hour—nine o'clock.

"Well, she must have the slippers at once as she was going to a dance. She wanted to know what time I closed and I told her. 'If you will not send the shoes here,' she went on, 'will you have them go out right away to another and nearer address?' She named it. It was the identical num-

VALUE OF COST MARK SYSTEMS TO RETAILER

Code Words Are Convenient and Used by Many—How Key Figures May be Used to the Best Advantage—Often Decided Detriment to Business to Have Clerks Know Cost Price of Your Goods—The Way Invoices and Lines May be Numbered

"DO I let my sales force know what my shoes cost me? Well I should say not," remarked a leading Western Ontario retailer the other day. "I know that some merchants may not agree with me in this attitude but I have found out that if I secure a good-looking, snappy line of shoes at a special price—ones that will command a good figure—if a clerk knows that I am making more than the usual profit on such a range, he will not put heart or enthusiasm into the selling of them. He is apt to think that the boss is getting too much out of the public and unless a clerk has conviction and confidence he makes a poor attempt in many instances at disposing of a particularly profitable line. Thus the effect of a fortunate purchase is negated to a certain extent. I maintain only the buyer or the head of each department, but not others, should know your costs or cost code. If it is common knowledge, a clerk on leaving your service may carry away valuable information to your detriment and tell tales. I believe in keeping such matters as the cost of each line of footwear to myself. My cost code is secret, not public or store property.

The majority of progressive retailers believe that there is real necessity in having the cost mark on the carton as well as the selling figure. The latter may or may not be in plain figures as the merchant decides, but the larger number of shoe houses have the selling price written or stamped in plain figures. The cost price is, of course, always in cipher and there are many occult character marks and figures which cannot be understood or unravelled by every person in the establishment.

There are a great many schemes used to disguise even the fact that the cost prices appear on the goods at all.

An ideal cost mark must be one that can be spoken. That is why some of the best character marks are not suited for some businesses. It should be one that is easily remembered and one that cannot be deciphered in any but the right way, as mistakes are often very costly.

The Use of Key Figures

One that is decipherable at sight and well suited to the shoe business is the following:

Use the figures, 1, 2, 3, and 4 as key figures. Let the figure "1" placed before a figure or set of figures mean that that figure is to be doubled to give the cost price. Let the figure "2" placed before a figure mean that it is to be divided in two. Let the figure "3" placed before a figure mean that it is to be divided by three. Let the figure "4" placed before a figure mean that it is to have half of itself added to itself to give the cost price. There may be other key figures used, but the more there are the greater the confusion.

Examples of the above are: "150" would mean that the cost is "100" or twice "50." In the next case we have "2350" making the cost "1.75," or the half of 350. "360" would mean that the cost is only "20" cents. "4230" would make the cost price "3.45."

These figures can be preceded by the abbreviation of the word "number" in this manner: "No. 4230"—$5.00-- and a very effective blind is secured.

By varying the use of the keys the customer will often be confronted by several sample numbers of different value at the same selling price. Should there be any suspicion that this "sample number" is only a "dodge," the variety of figures will be misleading. For instance, if the cost is $4.00, it might be expressed in either of the following different ways: "1200," or "2800." It will be found that to express this figure in either the third or fourth method it will involve fractions which are likely to give the plan away. If the cost is $3.00, it can easily be stated in all four ways, as follows: "1150," "2600," "3900," "4200."

Even a clear-headed clerk may be kept from suspecting such a cost marking system if the figures are varied from time to time so that the same "sample number" does not appear on too many lines of shoes at the same time. At any rate he may not figure out the cost as easily as from a code word. Yet code words are convenient and are used by a majority of merchants.

Should Clerks Know Cost Price?

If the store is a strictly one-price store, there is no reason on earth why the clerk should know what the cost mark is. It is often a decided detriment to the business to have the clerk know the cost price. If a clerk finds that one shoe costs a quarter less than another, he immediately decides that it is of that much less value, when as a fact it might be the better value of the two. This is one of the reasons why some merchants are advocating a change from the code word system. It is so easily decipherable that it does not keep secret the price of anything. But in the small store the use of a cost marking system is the sorest trial because it so soon becomes public property. Tom Jones, a clerk, knows the cost mark. He leaves and goes to work for Brown, and he tells every customer of Brown that Smith's code word is "blacksmith," and soon every one is telling Smith that he is asking too much for his shoes, and telling him what they cost him. The only way to avoid this is to have a new cost mark used often or to employ a different system altogether.

It is surprising what a little thing will throw the curious off the track in this matter. If the above system should be used and further reduced one-half, the mark would be undecipherable to those who know it in its original form. Take the above examples: "1150" would become "575," "2600" would be "1300," "3900" would become "1950," and "4200" would be "2100." This would soon be easily read, as one would remember that "575" meant $3.00. But in the main this would be likely to cause trouble and create errors in figuring. Any system that is likely to result in error should be avoided.

The objection to any system, in which the cost price is not placed on the shoes that the writer has, is the fact that when it comes time to take inventory, the labor of looking up the items is almost unthinkable.

Such a system leads the retailer to guess the cost in a great many cases, and to guess wrong.

Inventory at Selling Price

In some of the large department stores the inventory is taken at the selling price only. The buyer, or head of the department, figures upon making a certain per cent. on his wares. When the stock inventory is taken it is taken at the selling price, as all selling prices are constantly being revised and are supposed to represent actual selling values. The estimated percentage of profit is then deducted from this to give the cost price. Where this is done there is no reason why a cost price should be placed on the articles. But in place of the cost price there are certain other figures that give information of considerable value to the one who is in a position to find out their meaning.

In some of these stores, as well as in some smaller stores, the system adopted is more than a cost system as it includes the following information that is often of value in looking up an article. The figures show: first, the season in which the article was purchased; second, a reference to the price as it shows where the price can be ascertained. This is usually an "invoice-and-line" number, a reference to which will give the cost price.

Numbering Invoices and Lines

Here is a plan in a nutshell: All invoices as they are received are given a consecutive number. This may be preceded by a season letter if a letter is thought advisable. At any rate the first is numbered "1," the second is numbered "2," and so on. These are pasted in an invoice book, or placed in a file in the order in which they are numbered so that they can be easily found if wanted. Each item on each invoice is numbered from "1" up to the end of the list. If there are ten lines there will be ten numbers, and so on.

As an example, let us suppose a case. Let us suppose that we are beginning the year and the first invoice of the year comes to hand. We number the invoices in the upper left hand corner "1," and we proceed to number the items from "1" to the end of the list. We get another invoice, and number this "2" in the same upper right hand corner. We also number the items from "1" to the end. When the goods arrive and are to be marked we take item "1" on invoice "1" and placing the season letter first follow it by the figure "1," then a stroke and another "1." It is then "J1-1." This means that the item is from invoice number one and is item one on that invoice. The cost price is to be found by looking up that particular invoice. Each season's, or each year's, invoices are kept separately thus facilitating finding the cost price at any time, even years afterwards.

This is an effective manner of hiding a cost mark, but it is of very little use in a small, or in an exclusive store. Cost prices are often wanted in a moment's time, and this will necessitate keeping the office records away from the office. The items can be copied into a stock book, and this is done in some stores, but the labor required is never repaid in any manner or form of value to the establishment.

A Combination Cost System

Where a dealer finds he has trouble in keeping his mark secret, he can use a combination cost mark that will puzzle the most of those who may wish to ferret out the real figures.

1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9	0	R
a	b	c	d	e	f	g	h	i	j
k	l	m	n	o	p	q	r	s	t	y

If we take the above table as a combination mark we can baffle almost every one who attempts to figure out our cost mark.

The cost price $3.25 can be represented in any of the eight following combinations:

cbe cbo cle clo mbe mbo mlo mle

The cost price $3.00 can be represented in as many ways by the use of the repeater, and two other ways by not using the repeater, as follows:

cjy cyj mjy myj cty cyt mty myt cjj ett.

Having this number of marks for the same figures will be confusing if the cost is to be known at all times, but in the majority of stores it is not necessary, except on exceptional occasions. When one gets accustomed to this combination and knows that a and k stand for 1, and that b and l stand 2, and so on, it is an easy matter to figure these costs out in the head. A cost code can be carried in the vest pocket for handy reference, as it need not take up any more room on a card than as shown on this page.

One might continue to quote systems that are in use by showing the minor variations of each system, but it will be found that all systems are founded on, or are variations of those already shown.

CANADA'S OLDEST SHOE RETAILER DIES

LATE L. BILODEAU

After sixty-six years in the shoe selling line, Louis Bilodeau, who was Canada's oldest footwear retailer, passed away in Quebec in the 87th year of his age. He started as a bench shoemaker and his first store was situated in the locality known as the "Breakneck" stairs. After ten years in this place, he removed to larger quarters at 45-47 Sous-le-Fort street. In fifty-six years he made no change in premises, which in itself is a remarkable record, and previous to 1880 his store was the largest in Lower Town. Mr. Bilodeau had of late years not taken an active part in business owing to his advanced age, but he could recall numerous incidents of the early days of shoemaking and shoe selling. He attributed his success to the fact that he always gave his customers full value for their money and never sought to misrepresent goods. He found his practical knowledge of the trade of great help to him in buying and conducting his business. Mr. Bilodeau was fond of recalling the changes that had taken place in merchandising methods. Thirty-five years ago, when lasts and styles were not changed so frequently as they are now, he kept less than half the stock that he had of late years, and yet did practically the same volume of business. He had numerous customers from all parts of the north and south shores of the St. Lawrence, as well as in Quebec city. Farmers had dealt with him for several decades, even unto the third and fourth generations. The passing of Mr. Bilodeau marks the severance of another link, connecting the present with the past, and the death of this pioneer in shoemaking and shoe retailing will be learned with wide regret.

SHOULD TAKE UP SUBSTITUTE SOLES

A great deal of discussion is now going on among the various trade associations as to the steps that shall be taken with regard to sole leather substitutes. The opinion is generally expressed that the vast majority of repairers (and shoe manufacturers, too) are adverse to the use of any kind of substitute while real leather can be got, says an English exchange. But with the prospect of a greater shortage of sole leather than has ever been known, the possibility of many repairers having to use substitutes is by no means remote.

In these circumstances the Federation has to bear in mind that an important subsidiary business is open to their members, and the time has actually arrived for a prompt decision as to whether they will thoroughly investigate the value of the new business offered them or whether they will allow it to pass into other trades as occurred in the case of rubber articles for shoes.

Even now we have information that fibre soles are being taken up by trades not really connected with the shoe and leather industries, and no time should, therefore, be lost in coming to a decision as regards the value of substitutes to our trade. We believe there is still the opportunity to secure and hold this business, which is now being strongly pushed by the makers of the various products offered.

In this country it is highly probable that these materials will be used to supplement the leather supply rather than to replace it; but in America they are entering into strong competition with leather, and are freely advertised not as substitutes but as products superior to leather. Our Government has again requisitioned all sole leather except bends under 10 pounds, and a large quantity of light bends is being sent to France, we believe, for military purposes, while it is quite possible that supplies of the same class will later on be sent to Russia, likewise for army work.

LEATHERLESS SHOE WILL SOON BE ON MARKET

New Footwear Will Have Composition Sole and Heel While Upper Will be of Various Kinds of Cloth, Soft and Durable and Resembling Leather—Public Cannot Afford to Pay Present High Prices and Manufacturers Cannot Afford to Buy Leather

DETERMINED to do all within his power to combat "unreasonable" leather prices and to prevent the price of shoes from further advancing, E. W. Burt, of the E. W. Burt Shoe Co., Lynn, Mass., will within the next two weeks place upon the market an innovation of his own, the "leatherless" shoe.

Already Mr. Burt has orders for about 25,000 pairs of these new shoes, and he said recently that he believes it will be an easy matter for him to sell 100,000 pairs of them within a year. The leatherless shoe is to be made in black, white or tan and will retail for about half the present shoe price, or $5.00, says "Lynn Item."

A Pioneer in New Line

Firm in his conviction that present prices being charged manufacturers for leather, and which promise to go even higher, are unreasonable, if not prohibitive, Mr. Burt cited that staple footwear is now costing $7 and $8 to the public, and he predicted that shoes are soon likely to be $9 or $10, let alone prices already being demanded for fancy footwear.

"Now, the public, the masses, cannot afford to continue to pay any such prices for shoes," said Mr. Burt, "and I do not believe people will do so for any great length of time. Yet shoes are one of the prime necessities of life. Folks have got to have them, and what are they going to do about it? It is as though bread were advanced to 50 cents a loaf.

"Manufacturers cannot any longer afford to buy leather. The public has got to get over the old idea that a shoe cannot be made of anything except leather. I cannot control the leather market, and admittedly there have been some legitimate causes for advance of leather prices. Some kinds of leather manufacturers can no longer obtain at all.

"I am vitally interested, however, in keeping shoe prices down where the public can wear shoes, and it interests me to do business in a way which will benefit the people, for the pleasure I take in business is not all confined to the dollar.

Will Retail at Five Dollars

"I am determined to prevent further advances in shoe prices so far as possible, and I hope to bring staple shoes to not more than $7 a pair. At any rate, I am going to put a shoe on the market which has all the good qualities of staple leather footwear and which will not retail for more than $5."

Mr. Burt expressed the belief that once people get wearing them this leatherless shoe is one that should remain permanently on the market even if shoe prices some time do go back to the old normal figures. He expressed his idea that while shoes are having enormous sales at present, there is bound to be a break sooner or later, Mr. Burt thinks by spring. He thought both the present leather and shoe prices have soared too high; leather so high that, as he put it, "The leather men are hurting their own business, because we manufacturers cannot buy." Mr. Burt's idea is that present shoe prices, or higher ones, will ultimately mean a dropping off in shoe sales.

Prices That People Can Pay

"Henry Ford," said he, "has made his success through placing upon the market cars of the sort demanded at prices the masses could afford. I want to do the same thing in the shoe business. I do not believe shoes are going to go $20 a pair, and I know that I am not going to close down my factory. We are going to continue to do a lot of business, and we can do more business by producing good footwear at prices the masses can afford to pay."

Mr. Burt has been at work for many months on the leatherless shoes which he has perfected and tried out by actual wear to an extent that he is willing to place it on the market bearing the name of his firm.

Said he, "my agents laughed at me when I told them that before long we were not going to buy leather. Since then we have seen what has happened in the leather market. It was this soaring and prohibitive price of leather and the growing demand from my agencies throughout the country for a shoe made from some substitute for leather on the Ground Gripper principle that set me to work with my leatherless shoe as the result."

How the Shoe is Made

"This leatherless shoe," continued Mr. Burt, "is made to supply the public with a durable, flexible shoe for street and rough wear in all sorts of places where shoes are now being worn. It is made at the same labor expense and on the same last as our other Ground Gripper shoes. It has the same medical features, only more of them, because of even greater flexibility than can be secured in leather. Its greatest feature, however, is that it will retail at about half the price of the leather shoe."

The new leatherless shoes as produced and designed by Mr. Burt may be described briefly as follows: The sole is of composition instead of leather. The upper is made of various kinds of waterproof cloth, soft and durable, as near in appearance to leather as possible. The heel is of a composition of rubber and other ingredients.

Many Orders Now on Hand

E. W. Burt & Co. have already received orders for about 25,000 pairs of these shoes, 20,000 pairs of these in a single western order. The new shoe will undoubtedly also be introduced in the 30 exclusively Ground Gripper stores which are scattered about the country.

The first of the leatherless shoes will be put on the market within the next few weeks, although the firm will continue its manufacture of leather shoes as formerly.

The new shoes are made in both high and low cuts and for both men and women.

WHY SHOULD SHOES BE CHEAPER?

Occasionally the question is put to the manufacturers and others in the trade as to when the retail price of shoes will come down, and will the ending of the war affect the present level of prices, wholesale and retail. On this point the opinion of a western salesmanager of shoes, is in line with the feeling that the manufacturers have. He says:

"Why should shoes be cheaper, if it were possible to make them for less than they are costing the shoe manufacturer and the shoe dealer today? The farmer is getting the same price for three bushels of wheat that he formerly got for five, and this is typical of nearly all commodities. The cost of production, transportation and distribution of all commodities is higher than it was two years ago.

"In all lines of commodities better retail prices are being obtained, not necessarily on the increased cost of materials, but, better still, on a basis of better merchandising. The retail dealer, whether it is of shoes or some other line of wearing apparel, should sell his stock of goods on the basis of values and style, getting for them a price which the consumer willingly pays where he is getting what he wants. Shoe merchants never had a better opportunity than today for selling footwear on a basis of real values and getting the right price for the shoes sold.

"While shoes cost more to produce, and the retail price necessarily must cover the advance in cost of materials and manufacturing, there is something more than this basic cost to be figured in by the dealer who really merchandises his goods instead of merely swapping dollars with a fixed retail profit, irrespective of the value attached to the shoes sold because of the style, pattern or design. These elements are just as intrinsic in value to the consumer as the actual materials put into the shoe.

"In the past the retail price of footwear was practically arbitrarily fixed on the basis of cost of actual materials in the shoe plus a profit. Retail prices in fact became fixed for grades to the extent that the shoe dealers insisted upon a shoe being made to fit that retail price. In other words the retail price was a fixed quantity in the shoe dealer's mind toward which he operated. Today he has his opportunity, and thousands are acting accordingly, for retailing shoes at prices which take into consideration wholesale cost, style, value and a successful working or business profit.

"The shoe merchant does not ask himself the question, will shoes cost or sell for less, but how best can he present to the consumer the real values found both in styles and materials in the shoes he is selling. He should not worry about how little he can get for the shoe he is selling, but how much they should sell for on the basis of values, styles and materials offered. This attitude of mind or merchandising ability makes for the success of the shoe business."

CAN CLOTH BE REALLY TANNED?

If supplies of hides and skin get too scarce, can tanners put cloths in their vats and tan them at a profit to themselves and to the public generally?

To tan cloth would be nothing new. It would not be a new means of tanners for combatting the growing use of cloth in place of leather in shoes, or in auto tops and other articles.

Cloth has been tanned for centuries. Fishermen of the Mediterranean have for generations tanned with sumac the sails of their fishing boats. So have other people. Gambier is applied, says George E. Anderson, U. S. consul at Hongkong, China, to sails, fishing nets and similar fabrics, to prevent rot. Silk treated with gambier is one of the standard cloths of China, he also adds.

Now is there a possibility of modern American tanners applying the ancient Chinese idea, and tanning cloth? Cloth, like leather, is a fibre, and it's the tanner's business to tan fibre. Is the time coming when Gambier & Sumac tanners will hang out a sign "tanners of leathers and cloths"?

FIVE PER CENT. TOO LOW FOR SHOE TRAVELER

The Recent Cancellation of Passenger Trains and Advances in Hotel and Sample Room Rates Greatly Increase Expense Bills and Wholesalers Should Take Cognizance of These Conditions, Declares Well-known Salesman Who Furnishes Facts

"I SEE that you are discussing the matter of turnover of stock, profit figuring, store help, trend of styles, replacement values in shoes, overhead expenses and many other live issues in your paper," remarked a well-known shoe traveler who has covered the same ground for twelve years.

"I read these articles with interest in order to talk them over with my customers, for practically every one that I call upon takes your valuable Journal." There is a matter regarding which I do not see a great deal and that is the commission and salaries paid to shoe travelers.

"I have no complaint myself on this score, but I know of many who have. Fortunately I am with a liberal minded house which gives me a commission on all business coming off my territory, whether by mail or personal buying, but others, I understand, are not in the same position. I know a young man who had been eleven years in the retail game and knew shoes backwards and forwards. He had an alert, pleasant manner, the faculty of making friends, and was ambitious and energetic. This chap would, so far as I am able to read character and recognize capacity, have turned out to be an excellent salesman on the road. He knew of an opening in an Eastern house, and went after it. The matter of his coming on was all arranged, but the salary and when it came down to that, the proprietor told him that he would start at fifteen dollars a week and expenses for the first six months. 'No thank you,' remarked the applicant. 'I have been getting seventeen where I am selling shoes by individual pairs, and I do not think that I will make a change for less money when it comes to disposing of footwear wholesale.'

Vital Importance of the Salesman

"Now," continued the speaker, "having informed you plainly that I have no personal grievance to air through your paper, I cannot be accused of any bias or narrow mindedness in what I have to say. Too few manufacturers adequately appreciate the value or importance of their travelers. Certain firms, if doing a good paying business, are apt to lull themselves into the false conception that the goods are so stylish and well made, so widely advertised or so attractive in appearance and price that they virtually sell themselves. The traveler after all is a mere order taker or a visitor pleasantly saluting customers with, 'Well how many pairs of such and such a line do you want,' and the retailer literally falls over himself to place business with the house. Now no goods sell themselves and never will do so, no matter how exceptional the value, reliable the make or widely recognized the trade-mark or the house. Shoes are not like postage stamps, railway tickets or express money orders, which persons must have. True there is bound to be a certain steady demand for some lines of footgear, but I have never found a dealer sitting up nights or tearing his hair in his anxiety for you to come around and sell him.

The Strongest Link in the Chain

The shoe traveler is, I maintain, the most important link in the footwear manufacturing chain to-day. He is the ambassador of trade, the developer of business, and the current of merchandise transmission. Let any house take travelers off the road to-morrow and seek to sell the goods by mail, or wire and the demand would fall off so suddenly and so flatly that they would wonder what had struck them.

Hugh Chalmers, one of the shrewdest business men on the American continent to-day, once made a remark to the effect that most any concern could make good goods, but the main thing was to sell them. Therein many a good house has gone under. They have not looked after the selling end properly, and have secured cheap, inefficient men, or have not used good ones as they should. A good man may work for a low salary for a while as he has to keep the home fires burning, even if coal is ten dollars a ton and potatoes nearly five dollars a bag, but he will not put his whole heart and soul into his work. The best will not be brought out in him. There are numbers of mediocre chaps, who are willing to try anything and get away with it for a while, but I have noticed that where a progressive house pays well and extends fair treatment, there are few changes in the staff. Changes are expensive and undermining to say the least.

No Increase in Many Years

"I do not suppose that there has been an increase given to the ordinary salesmen of shoes in the matter of commissions in the last thirty years. The most of them still get five per cent. and in the West six and seven per cent. for there the distances are greater and traveling and hotels more expensive. Now I know a clothing house which pays its travelers ten per cent. on sales. If a man sells fifty thousand dollars in a year he gets five thousand, less his expenses, and he would not be out only about half the time that a representative of a shoe firm who gets only five per cent. on sales would be. The latter would earn only twenty-five hundred dollars on this total, and over half of it would go for expenses, covering say forty weeks. It takes much more effort to sell shoes at about one-third the average price of ready-made suits and overcoats, and the aggregate does not pile up nearly so fast.

Too Few Trains are Running

"You know that the railways have cancelled a great many trains of late which has increased the difficulties, delays and expenses of the average shoe salesman to an extent that one who does not have his hand in his pocket all the time cannot understand. Until the 1st of January, one was able to cover many towns in a week by catching trains, and so get over a good deal of territory without losing many hours. Now in most small places there are only one or at most two trains a day in and out, and after a traveler, has finished with his customers he has either to sit around half a day or more, waiting for the next train, and thereby lose time or secure a livery rig and drive with his trunks to the next nearest place which he formerly could reach at most any time with the splendid train service.

How Traveler is Up Against It

"Last week a friend of mine in having himself and trunks transferred by liveries to a number of these small places, spent at least twelve dollars more than he formerly would have to, had the transportation service been what it was last season, and he did not sell any more shoes than usual.

"Another matter is the increase in rates for sample rooms, transfer of baggage and the raise in hotel fees which are at least thirty-three and a third per cent. Salesmen are not disposing of any more goods than they were a year ago, and the commission is the same in spite of all these extra outlays. You see how the representative on commission is effected not only by the high cost of living on the road, but, also by the train handicaps which I have mentioned.

"Is it not about time that wholesalers and manufacturers took cognizance of these facts, at the present time when a dollar buys only a little over half as much in foodstuffs and fuel, as it did two years ago. Shoe merchants are getting more profit on shoes, and makers figure all things into the cost of production when setting prices on their lines, but the traveler is the last one to come in for consideration. I would like to hear from others on this question of commission on sales. The five per cent. basis is altogether too low for a man to make any thing, live decently, and put a little aside. I could not do it myself only that mail and house orders on my ground amount to several thousand a year. I get credit for them, otherwise I would have to borrow money to make ends meet."

SOME FIRMS NOT ANXIOUS FOR ORDERS

It is always interesting to learn how the other fellow views matters, and the following from the Montreal Star is readable.

By way of attracting attention from the price of eggs and the price of coal, the price of potatoes, and the price of milk, and rent, and canned tomatoes, it has been decided by those who control these things that seven-dollar shoes are to sell for twelve dollars in the spring.

This announcement, which will add a spice of zest, not to say zip, to the problem of providing the family with bread and cheese after fitting it out with shoes, was made by Montreal shoe retailers. They declared they were selling shoes from stock now at a lower price than they were paying wholesale for the new spring ones.

The increase will be more noticeable in the cheaper lines of shoes. The day of the four-dollar shoe, retailers say, is past. This spring, they declare, a $6 to $7 shoe will be very cheap indeed, while the average price will be from $10 to $12.

"The increase in the retail price of shoes is to be from $2 to $5," said the Walk-Over Boot Shop, "and there is no hope that the price will go down again before the end of the war. It keeps on going up, steadily."

They attribute the rise to the impossibility of getting leather from Russia, and the difficulty of importing it from the East Indies, now shipping is so scarce. The European embargoes against leather also have a great effect on this side of the Atlantic, he says.

"Dealers and manufacturers in Montreal are refusing to take orders," another merchant said. "They have all they can do to get leather to supply old customers. A shoe man from Lethbridge came to me to find out where he could buy shoes wholesale. I recommended him to a firm from which I buy 12,000 pairs a year. They told me they were not anxious to take any orders, particularly new ones, and could not supply the Lethbridge man with what he wanted."

In the United States substitutes for leather are being tried out on a big scale. Shoe men in Montreal are not very ready to adopt such substitutes. "There's nothing like leather," they say.

"We are not using any more substitutes now than a year or two ago," one dealer said. "Perhaps the reason is that the substitutes have got dearer as well as leather. A well-known composition did very well at first. There was quite a rush on it, but it is gone off now. Perhaps the fact that the price of the substitute has advanced twenty-five per cent. has something to do with it."

HOW HE KEEPS THINGS ON THE MOVE

Joseph McGillivray, manager of the shoe department for the 2 Barkers, Limited, Amherst, N.S., who conduct one of the largest department stores east of Montreal, has been with the firm for the long period of fourteen years. He attributes the success of the footwear branch to the fact that all customers are met with a handshake or a smile, and that their business has been built up strictly on the cash principle and one price only and money back if not satisfied. If the goods are returned in proper condition the purchase price is willingly refunded. Mr. McGillivray says that he finds by doing this more people can be waited upon and goods sold more quickly. "Our motto," he adds, "is quick sales and small profits," and strictly cash, even to our own employes of whom we have over forty altogether. We always offer special lines every Saturday and Monday, and our prices are about cost or ten per cent. above on the sale days and whatever stock is left goes back to the old figure after. I find this a good way to clear up odds and ends that are left over from the week's business and in this manner we keep our stock in good order, and properly sized up. I am a firm believer in making a big display of shoes on tables and on our moving cabinets. Often customers walk through the department and seeing a shoe will buy it at once whereas if all the goods were in the cartons and on the shelves they would never think of making a purchase. I change the tables every two or three days, and I find that this plan works out to advantage. Something new and different is put on each time. Last year was the best we have ever had in the shoe game, but we expect that the present one will beat it out. I find that people are buying better footwear all the time and they have now more money and spent it more freely than they did a few years ago."

CALFSKINS LIKELY TO STAY IN RUSSIA

While New England shoe manufacturers are scouring the world for leather and prices of footwear are soaring, there are millions of calfskins in Russia under an embargo, says Dennis J. Haggerty, recently secretary of the American Consul General at Moscow, now connected with the Russian-American Commercial & Industrial Joint Stock Company, who was in Boston recently.

These calfskins will probably remain in Russia while the war lasts, says Mr. Haggerty, though all sorts of offers have been made by Americans for them. Still, he says, clothing and shoes in Russia are expensive and hard to obtain by civilians. A pair of shoes costs $20, an ordinary business suit from $65 to $75 in Moscow, while fuel and foodstuffs are scarce.

Due to the tremendous influx of refugees from the war zone and the constant arrival of wounded soldiers and prisoners of war, Petrograd and Moscow have for many months been overpopulated. The hospitals, Mr. Haggerty says, are packed and the treatment anything but thorough and scientific.

Special Announcement

WE desire to announce that the Wholesale Shoe and Rubber business, conducted by the late D. D. Hawthorne under the style of D. D. Hawthorne & Co., for the last twenty-three years, will be continued by his brother, J. D. Hawthorne, who has been closely associated with the business ever since its inception.

There will be no interruption in the service to our customers, or in the very large and representative stock carried in every line, while the same competent and painstaking staff will be retained in all departments.

It will our aim to maintain the splendid facilities, efficiency and progressiveness, which have marked the expansion of the business for nearly a quarter of a century.

We assure the trade that we appreciate their many favors and trust the same pleasant and satisfactory relations may continue in the future.

RINEX SOLES

The Best Alternative for Leather Soles

The good qualities of leather and rubber are combined in "RINEX" Soles. Shoe and leather experts claim that the "RINEX" Sole is the one sole that best meets the needs of Canadian conditions. Our own experts say that "RINEX" is the best composition sole on the market to-day.

"RINEX" is a composition fibre sole that wears better than leather and costs less. It is superior to leather because it is uniform in quality, weight and thickness and it is absolutely waterproof.

"RINEX" Soles will stand up under the severest test. That is why we want every shoe manufacturer and every shoe dealer to put them to the test.

SUDDEN DEATH OF W. P. FRANCIS

On the morning of Tuesday, Feb. 20th, Quebec as a whole, and more particularly the shoe industry, lost one of its most progressive and eminent factors in the person of Wm. Parsons Francis.

Mr. Francis was vice-president and general manager of the John Ritchie Shoe Co., and since his advent to Quebec some three years ago had made a host of friends through his genial personality and kindly treatment of all with whom he came in contact.

The deceased had been ailing since before Christmas, but nothing serious was anticipated, although he had been confined to his home for a little over a month. However, he seemed to be fully on the way to recovery and had made arrangements to leave for a short stay at Atlantic City prior to resuming his duties at the factory, but he was suddenly taken with a relapse and passed away a few hours later.

Messages of sympathy and condolence with the afflicted wife and family have been coming from all over Canada and the United States. Amongst the floral tributes received were wreaths from the Quebec Shoe Manufacturers' Association, H. V. Gale, The Robson Leather Co., Oshawa, E. A. Shee, the employees the John Ritchie Co., the Collis Leather Co., Aurora, Ont., and the United Shoe Machinery Co.

Wallace Francis, sales manager of Gale Bros., Quebec, son of the deceased, accompanied the remains to Brockton, Mass., where interment took place.

WILL EUROPE GO BAREFOOTED?

A recent despatch from Rome says: "A barefooted Europe is not improbable if this war continues," said John F. Stucke, vice-president of the American Chamber of Commerce in Italy and general manager of an American shoe machinery company, in an interview concerning supply and business conditions met by Americans abroad.

"At the present time a pair of heavy mountain shoes lasts a soldier but six weeks," he said. "These shoes have their heels and soles studded with nails at that. The shoes are largely made in Italy, but with American machinery and American leather, and the quality of the materials is the best we can furnish, but that quality is, of course, inferior to that sold before the war. When manufactured by the hundred thousand, these shoes cost the Government about four dollars each. But the supply is always behind the demand, since materials arrive very slowly from America. On one ship, the Palermo, which was torpedoed in the Mediterranean, off the coast of Spain, in early December, the material for nearly half a million pairs of shoes was lost.

The retail shoe trade in Italy is now obliged to pay nearly seven dollars wholesale for shoes that before the war cost three and a half, and it is probable that American shoes will be selling in Italy soon for ten and twelve dollars the pair because of their shape and fit, having long been the chief product on the market here, and particularly since the war, as the hand-made shoe cannot be made quickly enough."

OUTING SHOE SALES WILL BE ENORMOUS

The accompanying illustration represents one of the new outing shoe cards, in six colors, that will be supplied by the makers of "Life-Buoy" footwear this spring. The increase in cost of leather soles has resulted in an exceptionally heavy demand for canvas shoes with rubber soles, and the sale this season will probably double or treble that of any previous year. The trade, of course, recognize the immense improvements that have taken place in this class of footwear and the many different varieties that can now be procured for practically every purpose.

Not only have the manufacturers endeavored to take care of the demand for lined shoes used in the past principally for sporting purposes, but extra attention has been given to lines with heavier soles and solid heels for street wear and also for the workingman for every-day wear. Some of the lines are made of exceedingly heavy duck and of a quality of soling whose wear will compare favorably with the average leather shoe.

Canvas shoes with rubber soles have some advantages over leather shoes that can not be overlooked, such as the protection of the foot against dampness, and the ease and elasticity while on the foot. These shoes are also noiseless, and will not mar floors like the heavier grades of leather shoes sometimes do.

The demand for this class of goods will no doubt be sufficiently heavy to take all that the manufacturers can possibly produce, and the merchant who is wise enough to protect himself at this time against such demand will find it to his interest.

RUBBER SOLES

RUBBER HEELS

Abounding in Merit

It had to come—a rubber sole that could really stand the “gaff.”

We put our experts on the job and the picture you see herewith is the result of long deliberations.

- Dunlop Rubber Soles wear indefinitely.
- Will not crack.
- Will not dry out.
- Give maximum resiliency.

Dunlop Rubber Soles have gone to the front, the same as Dunlop Rubber Heels. Quality, with an organization back of it, did that.

Why not Dunlop Rubber Soles and Soleing for your line now? All sizes—colors: Grey, Black, White and Tan.

“Peerless”—At the Front

The sensation of the rubber heel business is the buying reception given to Dunlop “Peerless” Heels.

Of course, Dunlop Rubber Heels have always led, as far as quality is concerned.

But the advertising campaign back of Dunlop “Peerless”—combined with the non-varying reliability of the heel and the dealers’ big inducement to sell—gave the public the impetus to buy.

You know the rest—that is, if you are one of the hundreds of dealers who earn good money each month by selling Dunlop “Peerless” Heels and by returning “Peerless” empty heel boxes.

All sizes—colors: Grey, Black and Tan.

We make a full line of Cements for rubber heels and patching purposes.

"GREET BROTHER REPAIRER AS TRUE FRIEND"

Toronto Shoe Repairers Hold First Annual Banquet—The Spirit of Unity and Co-operation Emphasized—Better Men, Better Conditions and Better Prices as Result of Organization—Numerous Greetings From Outside Bodies and Allied Interests

THE spirit of enthusiasm, unity and co-operation was manifest on every side at the first annual banquet of the Toronto Shoe Repairers' Association which was held at the St. Charles Hotel on Wednesday, February 21st.

The proceedings were enjoyable, the menu appetizing and the hospitality pronounced. It was a rather ambitious undertaking for an association only eight months in existence and that it was a distinct success and admirably managed was the expression of every one of the ninety-two guests who sat around the festive board to partake of the many good things provided and join later in an interesting and delightful programme of speeches, songs and choruses.

There were visitors from the newly formed Hamilton Association in the persons of Fred. C. Tebbs, secretary-treasurer, F. H. Revell, and Fred Wilman, who conveyed hearty greetings and gave voice to the hope that at no distant date they might return the compliment.

Pleasing Mementos for the Officers

One of the features of the evening was the gift of beautiful gold watch charms, suitably engraved and bearing the trade mark of the Toronto Shoe Repairers' Association, to President Charles F. Robertson, Recording Secretary S. Burnett and Secretary-Treasurer, A. Butterworth, as slight tokens of appreciation for energetic and faithful work on behalf of the organization. The presentations were made in a neat speech by H. K. Hayward on behalf of the members of the trade.

The wish was uttered by several speakers that, at no distant date a Federation of Shoe Repairers' Associations might be formed in the province of Ontario for the elevation and welfare of the members of the craft. Associations are being formed in other towns and cities. The co-operative movement—the get-together idea—is gaining strength and support from week to week. The weal and welfare of each and all is being sounded.

Harvey Lloyd, entertainer, contributed several humorous songs during the evening and was warmly applauded. His funny stories put every one in the best of humor, while the piano selections of Bert Spence were much appreciated. The choruses from the "hymn sheet" were sung with vim and heartiness and the remarks in response to the various toasts were bright and instructive. There was not a dull moment during the entire evening and everything went off with a swing and precision that was most commendable. Wm. Skilling gave a couple of cornet solos in good style. A telegram was read from Walter Burnill, who is spending the winter in Florida, conveying best wishes.

President Charles F. Robertson made a capable and popular chairman and kept things on the move. After the toast of the King had been honored, the toast-master expressed his pleasure at the large attendance and referred to the marked progress of the Association, which had been organized in July last. Today they had a membership of ninety-six which was steadily increasing. The improvement in conditions of the trade was touched upon. The interchange of ideas and experiences at the regular fortnightly meetings had been profitable and helpful. In union there was strength and all were coming together for the uplift and betterment of the trade. Sister associations were being formed in many places and he hoped the day was not far distant when there would be a federation of associations for the greater good of the craft and the welfare of every brother repairer. The cost of all kinds of materials had been going up rapidly and it was necessary to secure higher prices for all their work and also to make operating conditions more agreeable in the way of shorter hours, more progressive methods and brighter shops. In this the Association had been doing an effective work and he had been assisted by every officer and every member.

The Welfare of Every One in Trade

A. Butterworth spoke along similar lines and told of the advancement that had been made. Each one was necessary and could do his part to further the interests of the Association. Leather and other materials had increased all the way from fifty to two hundred per cent. during the past year. Although the schedule of prices of the Association had been raised three times the figures were still too low, showing an advance of only about twenty-five per cent. Either the members were losing money now or they had been making money before the present conditions had to be faced. He felt that they should all get a fair return for their work, and it was to foster the spirit of co-operation and mutual helpfulness, to become better acquainted all around and unite for the advancement of the trade that the Association had been formed. It was difficult to satisfy everyone but there had been broadmindedness and fairness shown on all sides and the future of the work looked brighter than ever. The relation between jobber and tradesman had been improved. Each was necessary to the other and no one could not prosper alone. The membership was growing all the while and all were doing their share to give matters a boost.

S. Burnett stated that when the association was formed he knew very few men in the trade but now he was acquainted with a large number whom he was pleased to meet. He had found them good, fair-minded fellows. They should all hold together. The repair men had been fighting one another long enough and now that they were coming together frequently, they had become better friends and more efficient business men all around. The craft of shoemaking was the oldest in the world and they had every reason to be proud of its history and association. The trade was being elevated and broadened by the work in which they were engaged and conditions made much better.

Harry Moore, of Rochester, N.Y., representing the Campbell, Bosworth Machinery Co., of Boston, who had been attending a convention of the Harness Makers' Association, was accorded a cheerful welcome and expressed his pleasure at the success of the gathering and the animation and enthusiasm of those present. He said that working together meant success. Nothing caused as much trouble in any trade as bickerings and misunderstandings and by association these were cleared up. Men in the same line who got to know one another found that the chap across the way or down the street was not such a bad one after all when met in a proper and friendly spirit. The greatest study of all was humanity and getting together brought out all the best thoughts, sincerest efforts and most friendly qualities of every man. Of course, there would always be a few who would hold back but the most progressive members of any trade were ardent supporters of co-operation and good-natured competition as well as the spirit of "live and let live."

Good Wishes from Sister Associations

"The toast of Sister Associations" brought forth greetings and best wishes from Messrs. F. H. Revell, Fred C. Tebbs and Fred Wilman, of Hamilton, who referred to the success of their new organization and how it was developing rapidly.

Mr. Revell incidentally dwelt upon conditions years ago when men worked fifteen and sixteen hours a day around a tallow candle with dirty aprons and in shops that were anything but inviting. The improvement in working conditions, hours of labor and methods had been most marked. The repair man today was getting better prices, had more tact and courtesy in dealing with customers and his equipment was such that he could turn out neat, well finished jobs. He thought that any man owning a shop should get sufficient returns for his work that he earned at least four dollars a day for himself which, after all, was small considering that unskilled labor was receiving as high as twenty-five cents an

SHE DID ALL THE TALKING FOR HER HUSBAND

Purchased Size too Small for Him and then Accused Retailer of Misrepresentation and Falsehood—Irate Wife Even Visited Police Station in Search of Vengeance—Bargain Hunter Wore Boots for Some Days and then Wanted Her Money Back

"TALKING about experience," said a shoeman the other day, "a woman came into my store recently, and wanted a tan lace boot for her husband—at least, she said it was her husband, although no male biped was along at the time. I asked her what size her husband wore and she said 'six,' and I showed her a whole quarter blucher with a slip sole.

"'Oh my!' she exclaimed, 'that is altogether too large—ever so much.' I then took down a 5½. She did not ask what the size was, neither did I tell her. She thought that pair would answer very well, and out she went.

"About two weeks later she entered the shop, followed by a rather meek looking man, who appeared more like a son than a protector and provider. She informed me that I had sold the shoes under misrepresentation. She demanded a new pair, although they had been worn for several days.

"It appears 'hubby' had tried them on, and while they were loose enough at first, they grew a little tighter and began to pinch him, and his spouse took up the cudgels on his behalf. With violent tongue and wild gesticulation, she insisted upon a new pair. I told her I certainly would not give her another pair, and that I had sold the shoes under no misrepresentation. She declared I had. I said I would do my best to satisfy her, and would stretch the shoes. She clamored that this would not answer at all—I was either to give her a new pair of shoes, or hand back the money.

"This I refused point blank to do, and she said she would make me, and, leaving her husband in the store, she went out to the police station. She came back somewhat subdued and got the shoes, and, with her husband, marched out again, evidently to constabulary headquarters. What they said or did over there I do not know, but on their return to the store some twenty minutes later, hubby was very cool. He had subsided considerably while his loquacious better half had a little of the fighting spirit taken out of her, after raising such a scene, and calling me everything that tongue could utter. However, the whole matter was wound up by my agreeing to stretch the shoes, and on this understanding we parted.

"How unreasonable some people can become at times and what unjust accusations they can make against a shoe merchant, only one who has been many years in the trade can rightly comprehend."

Lovely Woman—Hard to Please

"Yes," declared another retailer, who was standing by, "I meet all classes and conditions of people. A woman was in my shop the other night, who had been in pretty nearly every store in the city in search of a $5.00 high-cut kid boot, and not being able to get one, she came here. I had nothing to her liking in the way of an eight inch bal, except a McKay in black kid, which I sold at $5.50. I had made a fortunate purchase and was able to clear them out at this figure and make a little something. After much indecision and cross-questioning, doubt and hesitation, the lady finally paid the $5.50 and walked away.

"Four days later she came in again and told me that the boots did not fit properly, that they were 'slouchy and flabby,' and that I had misrepresented the size. I told her size five was what she asked for, and that she had got five. She wanted to know if I would not take the pair back and restore her the money. I told her that I certainly would not—that she had gone away satisfied, and that what she was evidently looking for was an eight or nine dollar shoe for five dollars, with all the snap, finish, appearance and distinctive characteristics of the higher priced goods.

"I finally appeased her, and she came to the conclusion that after all she could stand the looks of the shoes better than she could stand for a bigger price, and out she went, and we have never seen her since.

"We are well rid of a certain class of women customers. Any shoeman who makes a dollar out of such bargain hunters and cranky fault finders will please hold up his hand."

CUT OUT SOME OF THE "GUSHERS"

Since January is the most acceptable time of the year for making resolutions, why not corner this idea for your 1917 advertising: cut out the "mosts," says the J. and K. Shoe News.

* * *

Those "mosts," "greatests," "grandests," "most remarkable," and other forms of exaggeration get to be awfully stale and UNBELIEVABLE. They work on a customer's nerves until he or she resolves to look for some store where modesty gets a show once in a while.

* * *

Your advertisements will be more impressive and sound many times more sincere if they have an air of absolute conviction and ring true with sound comparison.

* * *

While the majority of the advertising of the shore retailers is showing a distinct improvement, some still sounds mushy, gushy and slushy. There are too many bargains of the "biggest" and "best" variety. It's all right to wax enthusiastic once in a while to use words which convey that your merchandise is really excellent, but a little self-praise goes a long way. So take this hint and make your resolutions accordingly.

JUST KEEP A-GRINNIN'

By RALPH GORDON

If troubles come and sorrows too
As life's silk thread you're spinnin',
Just throw 'em off, an' don't get blue,
And keep right on a-grinnin'.

There ain't no good in bein' glum
When other folks are winnin';
Get up and push, and you'll win too,
So keep right on a-grinnin'.

The Lord ain't been no worse to you
Than others who've been sinnin';
You've got stack loads to thank Him for,
So keep right on a-grinnin'.

Don't let the troubles of last year
Spoil this from its beginnin';
A little leaven spoils the lump,
So keep right on a-grinnin'.

Make every season of this year
Pure white with charity's linen,
And everyone will love you more,
For keepin' on a grinnin'.

SOLVING THE PROBLEMS FACING SHOE DEALER

Retailing is Divided Into Three Operations, Good Buying, Good Stock Keeping and the Careful Handling of the Three C's, the Customer, the Clerk and the Cash, Declared S. P. Davis at the Recent Great Shoe Convention in Cincinnati, Ohio

YOU can't be any bigger than your business; if you are not big your business is not going to be big, and if you are a big man you are not going to remain long in a small business; you are going to get out, or build that business.

What you are and what you can be depends entirely on what you know and what you do and how well you do it. This is the thinking age; it is the thorough age in business, and as you become more constructive in your thinking you are going to build better, because you are going to plan and think better. The science of business is not a dream, it is not a theory—the science of business is not an experiment. Sometimes a man says to me, "Oh, well, I can get along without all these scientific things. I am right without it." Don't you know that a clock that doesn't go at all is right one minute every twelve hours, but it isn't a good clock? Why, even a dog can run awhile on three legs. But the one-line dealer, the small-town dealer who would catch the scientific spirit of the times through just such splendid organizations as this, if he wants to be a bigger merchant, a more profitable merchant, I want to say to him that he has to get rid of that self-complacency and that smug confidence; he has to substitute interest for indifference. He has to substitute receptivity for independence and the more psychology you put into business the less apology there is going to be.

Business at Loss—Don't Know It

Some new conditions and many problems are facing the modern retailer today; perhaps this year may be an exception, but I want to say that thousands of dealers are doing and have been doing business at a loss and they don't know it! And they can't trace it! Because they haven't the figures. Retailing is divided into three operations—good buying, good stock keeping and careful handling of the three C's, the Customer, the Clerk and the Cash. You know some speakers divide their talk into three parts; firstly, they choose a subject; and secondly, they stray away from it; and thirdly, they never get back to it. I want to stick to my subject.

Look at Figures, Not Fixtures

The more we observe the methods, the actions of successful men in commerce, in finance, the more you will recognize this fact, gentlemen, that they analyze. They know. They have figures. They are looking at the figures, not merely at the fixtures. They have their charts and records and comparative tables in front of them and they have results and not regrets. They have statistics and not guesses. The successful business man today is not guessing; he has all sorts of figures in front of him and when you credit men with good judgment or good foresight it is invariably because these men analyze; they look before they leap, they aim before they fire. It means that ton of preparation before the ounce of effort; analyzing means that hour of thought before the minute of talk; it means the weeks of planning before the day of action; and then you can come to conclusions instead of confusion; then you know what might happen, instead of having to relate "how it happened."

The man who analyzes is not afraid of having a thorough and complete account of his business from every standpoint. He is knowing in advance, because you know if you are going to take a long walk or some journey up a road you want to know before you go whether you are on the right road or not; you don't want to find out at the end of the road.

And yet you know so many of us analyze our failures, we analyze our mistakes; we don't analyze our successes sufficiently, because we credit ourselves with knowing; it is a natural matter of course, it must be a success. But the merchant who analyzes his success as he goes along knows every day and he knows every hour where he is, where he stands, where he is going to arrive and when he is going to arrive.

I say to you that the slow progress of thousands of dealers is due to the personal blindness, to the personal ignorance of the true condition of their own affairs. Local conditions and competition haven't anything to do with the years that you spend in personally just making a living, because if your individual business isn't growing it is dying, but you have to know more about your business.

Success Means Expert Analysis

Profits come from the efficient and economical administration of your business. It means knowing where the leaks are and stopping the leaks, because if there is a leak in the rowboat, no matter how hard you row, you are not going to get very far. You can't go broke making a profit. Make a profit on your goods. When you have this information these comparative tables, these charts, these statistics, these analytical records of everything that you want to know, when you have this information then you are visualizing your business, you are looking upon your business as an investment and not an enterprise merely; you are looking at the figures, not the fixtures. You are looking at your business with your mind, not merely with your eyes. If a man asks me, when I go into a store, "What do you think of my business?" I say, "I can tell you better when you show me the figures."

Some of us are so conscious of the appearance of things in business that we are unconscious of the disappearance of things in business. We haven't sufficient figures; we don't know; we are guessing. Yet I know, very much like the minister said, "So many people in the audience or in a congregation come here with a mental pitchfork, instead of a mental rake, and whatever I say to them they take that mental pitchfork and throw those words over their shoulder to the other fellow, 'Get that, Bill; that's all right for you, not for me.' 'Get that, Jim. Do you get that?' They throw those words over their shoulders instead of taking that mental rake and gathering these things unto themselves."

Correlating Business Knowledge

The science of business today means nothing. Science is nothing but knowledge that has been organized and collected and correlated and classified; and then, when we have this knowledge organized it is science and we are making fewer mistakes. We want to learn to substitute all these negative factors for the constructive, positive factors, and then you are going to do better and sigh less; you are going to do better merchandising, gentlemen, because you know what you want to know about your business.

I want to know how much is there about my business that I don't know. Yes, you have overhead expense. How much does it cost me to sell shoes? Selling costs too much. Who are the clerks in my store who sell the better merchandise and who are the clerks who sell the inexpensive, the cheaper stuff? What is the percentage of my clerks who sell the good stuff and what per centage have I? Eighty per cent. selling the cheap stuff, or 80 per cent. selling the good stuff?

What is the selling cost of each clerk in this store? Do I carry more stock this year than last year, and if so, am I doing more business? Is my overhead expense greater this year than last year, and if so, have I figured my margin of profit accordingly?

How Long Has Stock Stood?

I want to know what portion of my stock has been here thirty days and what percentage of this stock has been here sixty days, ninety days, and six months. Why, it was a revelation to a merchant when I got him to have the buyers submit that report. What percentage of your stock has been here six months, three months and thirty days? What is the average selling price in this department and that department? You want to departmentize your stock into as many units as you can and then you will know where you are; then you are not guessing. A dry goods merchant showed me his shirtwaist stock. He said, "Here is stock I turn six times and it is not making money. I can't understand why this stock isn't making money." I saw he had pretty good merchandise; in fact, the selling help, to my mind, was even below the standard of merchandise carried. I said, "What is the average selling price of shirtwaists that you carry in stock?" He had to look it up, take a little hasty inventory. The average selling price was $6.50.

"Now get your sales slips for ninety days; I want to know what has been the average sales made in this department."

You can apply this to shoes; I don't care whether you are selling shoes or slippers, or hardware, or liver pills, or locomotives, or pickles; the principle is the same. The sales check for ninety days showed an average sale, gentlemen, of $2.25. I said, "There are your profits in the 60 per cent. of the stock that you have turned about once. This 40 per cent. of the stock you may have turned seven, or eight, or nine times, but your money is locked up in that 60 per cent. that you haven't sold."

He says, "Well, then, I could have made just as much money with less stock. I see I could have done just as much business with less investment." I said, "That is not your problem; your problem is a bigger sales check. If it cost you 6 per cent, Mr. Brown, for Mamie Jones to sell that $2.25, it will only cost you 3 per cent. if you can educate your people to selling 7, 8 and 9 dollar waists."

Increase Ability—Decrease Cost

The same thing applies to shoes, to footwear, and when you increase selling ability you decrease selling cost, and you are getting something else; you are giving your customer a certain satisfaction in quality that permanentizes your business. The average sales-persons lack that ability; they are not efficient; do not have sufficient confidence in themselves to show and tell about, and sell the better merchandise. That is why this merchant wasn't making money. That is why he didn't have the figures in front of him.

That sales slip tells you so many things. I have asked a merchant to get a lot of sales slips together; for instance, of one man, one salesman, and later on the others. Look at that sales slip. Here, in the last thirty days, Jim Wilson has sold about 95 per cent. single-line items; these sales slips show that he hasn't sold an additional article to the same customers; on 5 per cent. of his sales he has sold them some extra article.

Sometimes the sales slips will show nothing but low-priced goods. Another sales slip will show that this is the man who sells good stuff. Sometimes you will see a fellow very busy; oh, he makes more sales than anybody else in the store; they may be small sales; he is making sales, but is he making friends? The profitable business man, the profit-maker in a store today, is the friend-maker, not merely the sales-maker; the friend-maker, the man who can sell quality merchandise, the man who can sell more than one article.

You know there are waiters and chefs; a waiter fills your order, he supplies an existing demand; that is all the average waiter salesman does. But a good cook can create an appetite, even if you are not hungry. Salesmen should be more like chefs, and as they sell more they decrease their selling cost. But, gentlemen, unless you have all these figures and facts and statistics and comparisons in front of you, daily records, weekly records, why, you are in the dark and you can't see the light. I don't want to talk here today on the turnovers; it is a fact that too many merchants today are doing altogether too little business on too much capital.

I believe in good merchandising, and good merchandising means good figures. It means turning the losses of yesterday into the profits of today. When you don't know you are going to have an accumulated stock which means cut prices, and special sales, and you know what special sales do—they breed and develop a waiting list of chronic bargain hunters, who live on your profits throughout the year. "When are you going to have another sale? When are you going to have a special sale on this?"

Standardize and Concentrate

Twenty-two years ago I wrote a four-page article to Printer's Ink, at that time decrying the practice of special sales and cut prices, which means cut profits. I believe in concentrating and standardizing my lines. A shoe merchant buys out a dealer who had failed. He finds ten lines of shoes selling for $3, $3.50 and $4.00 (that wasn't recently). This man cleaned out that stuff and he put in four lines of shoes instead of ten, to sell at these prices. What is the result? He did a better business on a smaller stock because his lines were complete, and he did not lose sales through broken sizes and broken lines; he made a better profit because he was not compelled to sell goods at cut prices.

His lines were complete, his stock was always fresh and with these four complete standardized lines he could satisfy his trade and permanentize instead of having broken lines. That is one of the advantages of concentrating, but another is—

He had wholesalers or manufacturers who took an interest in his business, who knew about his business, who could help him if he wanted help. Isn't it far better to have ten or twelve loyal creditors than twenty-five hundred poor ones? Standardize and concentrate and make a profit.

When you underestimate what goes into your expense of doing business you are undermining your financial health. In a little town in Indiana a man proudly told me that his overhead expense was only 18 per cent. and it looked it. He showed me his check book where he and his younger partner had each taken out $1,500 in "dividends," as he called it. I said, "How much do you allow yourself a week? What do you draw?" "Oh," he said, "I live in my own house; I draw only $15 a week and my partner boards with us and he draws $12 a week." "And you call this check here 'dividends'? Why that is nothing but back wages, that's all. Would you work for $15 a week managing a store?" "No." "Could you hire a man to manage your store for $12 or $15 a week?" "No." "Then why didn't you charge your business with what it cost to run business?"

It is no wonder that he could not afford to put in a new front or new fixtures or beautify his store in over fifteen years.

Cultivate Executive Ability

The average small-town, one-line merchant is a very poor executive. He hasn't time, he hasn't time to do this or that, and when I ask questions, he does not know. Last night I asked a shoe dealer "How many school children, boys and girls, are in your town, are going to school?" "Oh," said he, "there must be 30,000." "Well, how many pairs of boys' and girls' shoes do you sell?" "By jingoes, a mighty small proportion of that 30,000!"

Figure! "How fast does your town grow?" He said, "It has increased 60 per cent. in the last three years." His business has increased only 5 per cent. Now, if you have the statistics, not merely about your merchandise but about your community, you can tell whether you are going ahead or whether you are getting your full proportion. Do you ever furnish your salesmen, if it is only once a week, with their quota or what is expected of them to sell as compared with last year? If your business is increasing 20 per cent. or if you want to do a business based on an increase of 20 per cent., if your clerks in your store know that a year ago this week you sold so much, that your daily average was so much and your average sale was so much, they will know by twelve o'clock on Monday or one o'clock on Tuesday, or two o'clock on Wednesday whether they are going to make good or not. These young men are living in an atmosphere of figures; they become saturated with the idea of records; but no, your clerks are in the dark; you tell them after it is too late instead of ahead.

Develop Responsible Employes

Now, if every one of your clerks can know from week to week what is expected of them to sell today, and this week, just the same as our large buyers get this information daily and weekly from our successful department stores, they will know, hour by hour, where they stand. But no, the retailer is too busy, he is a poor executive.

The reason why so many dealers get along so slowly is because they do not put their co-workers on their own responsibility and let them develop their initiative and get into their confidence and deputize them. Then you can supervise and realize. But the average retailer is a plodder instead of a planner, and the ability of the business man to-day lies in using the ability of other people. I have seen business men, or dealers, so busy making mistakes that they haven't time to make a profit. They are so busy from the neck down—$2 a day—that they haven't time to make money from the neck up—where their thinker is located. I have seen them so busy checking goods coming in at the back of a store that they haven't time to get a check on customers going out of the front of the store.

He Plans Big Undertakings

Now, what is the use of trying to sell a pair of shoe-strings or a box of blacking upstairs, if you don't know a box of shoes is missing downstairs? It is very much like the country grocer, who so busy outside selling ten cents worth of turnips he did not know a barrel of molasses was leaking in the cellar. And when you retailers do so blamed much $10-a-week work, why, you are only going to work a weak $10 business.

The successful man builds because he plans big; he thinks in bigger units of results; he soars to greater heights because he interprets himself in a higher key. He doesn't remain a piker; but you are going to be small if you think small, if you underestimate the ability of your co-workers.

There was a time when we thought that the retail man knew his business, the average retailer, that is, and we found out differently, and the credit men and the bankers to-day are asking a different set of questions than they did years ago. They can judge from the statement that you make out whether you understand your business and whether you have the facts and figures in front of you.

Getting Most Out of Business

It is the man who has the figures who knows all the details; he is the fellow who gets the most out of his business and is an executive; the best boss doesn't boss. He instructs and enthuses and inspires.

The successful merchant does not make a training school out of his business and your brains are no good to you if everybody else gets more out of it than you do. A fellow was operated on for appendicitis some time ago and after he was sewed up the doctors missed the little silver scissors. They opened him up and got out the silver scissors; they then missed the silk sponge and rather than take any chances they had to open him up again and they found the silk sponge. Then they missed something else and were about to open him up again, when he opened his eyes and said, "Doc, don't sew it up again, just put buttons on it."

Too Much Merged in Detail

The average retailer is so completely sewed up with detail that he hasn't any time to put on buttons of executive ability in his business. Oh, he is awfully busy! Do you know the average man who has to look after everything hasn't time to look forward to anything? He is always behind. Now, don't be so busy making mistakes and making a dollar and a half a day. Let your brains and your hands, your brains and your eyes, supplant your hands and feet. Why, for years the average one-line-small-town dealer, the man that has two or three clerks, has been waiting on the customers himself until now the customers wait for the boss. I told a retailer that instead of getting down on his knees to fit the feet, he should get up on his own feet and fit his mind.

The Boss as a Salesman

There is too much of this boss waiting on the customers; it is all right enough to bring your personality before them, to see that they are properly served and so on, but you can't be an executive and you can't be a merchant and you can't find time to look after the figures if you are doing something that you should have someone else do for you. That is why the human element is playing such an important part in the great drama of business to-day.

Get good men and get good out of men. Use the right employes and then use the employes right. You are the higher source and the clerks should get their inspiration from you.

AN OUTSTANDING FIGURE

THERE is a name which the last quarter of a century has given to the shoe trade of Canada, which is one of the most outstanding of the whole period.

James Robinson, who began as a shoemaker, graduated into wholesale shoe selling in Quebec, and twenty-five years ago launched his little jobbing enterprise in the basement of his residence in Montreal.

The unlimited energy and push that have been his characteristics in everything he has touched, soon took the shoe enterprise down town to more commodious quarters, where in time it became what it is to-day, the most representative shoe jobbing establishment in Canada.

Meanwhile rubber shoe manufacturing interested its head and the Port Dalhousie mill was taken over and reorganized into the Maple Leaf Rubber Co. When this was merged with the "Consolidated," the Independent Rubber Co. was formed, with the same "go" that characterized its predecessor. For a while Mr. Robinson was also identified with the Bowmanville rubber industry, but finally centred his efforts upon footwear at the Merritton Mill.

"Jim" Robinson has become personally identified with the shoe trade of Canada, perhaps, more intimately than any other man in the trade. His strong individuality—his aggressive business methods, his unbounded optimism have made him one among a thousand. He has the reputation of being as strong in his friendships as in his antagonisms, and while he is a hard fighter he has gone out of his way again and again to help enemy as well as friend.

He has been a relentless foe to meanness and chicanery, and his record in the Montreal City Council was one of persistent and constant fight against graft and incompetency. In spite of recent illness he is still "going strong," and can voice an opinion or tell a good story with the best.

The Dependable Rubber Footwear of Exceptional Merit and Value

THE INDEPENDENT RUBBER CO.
 LIMITED
 MERRITTON, ONT.

INDEPENDENT Distinctive Quality

Independent Heavy Service lines are made by a special process the same as used in the making of Automobile tires. These goods then are capable of standing the same terrific wear to which auto tires are subjected.

That's where they stand out in quality—distinctive quality. It's THE WEAR they give. That means much to a dealer, for his customers will ask for Independent lines by name.

The Independent
Rubber Co., Limited
Merritton, Ont.

INDEPENDENT EXTRA VALUE

Quality and Value are almost inseparable. Independent lines are a guarantee of quality because of our watchful care in the special processes of making. Their splendid wearing qualities, stylish models, and excellent finishes, coupled with the fact that they are always priced within the reasonable range, make them in every respect EXTRA VALUE.

That's why so many dealers prefer INDEPENDENT LINES, because of their Distinctive Quality and Extra Value.

The Independent
Rubber Co. Limited

REFUND MONEY ONLY WHEN SHOES DON'T FIT

Retailer Declares That Trade is Too Ready to Hand Back Cash to Fickle-Minded or Bargain-Hunting Customers—Such Practice Undermines Steady Business and Gains Merchant Nothing in the Long Run—One Indignant Patron Called Policeman

THE refund problem is one that perplexes all retail shoemen. Like its brother, approbation, it bobs up serenely nearly every day.

The question naturally arises how far is a dealer supposed to travel in the direction of refunding money? Can any hard and fast regulation be laid down by the average boot merchant. As long as the sun shines and water runs there will always be persons of changeable mind, easily influenced by what others say, or not knowing three hours in succession just what they want. On the spur of the moment they buy one style and on getting home conclude that they do not really need the footwear. Perhaps they have seen something in the window of another shop which has caught their passing fancy. Then they rush back to the store which made the sale and demand their money back, furnishing any sort of flimsy excuses.

Getting Others to Do Dirty Work

Too often it is not the purchaser who returns with the goods. A man will send his wife or a wife her husband; a brother will send his sister or vice versa and, on some trumped up charge or thin pretext, will request that they be rebated the purchase price, forgetting for the nonce that they were perfectly satisfied with the fit, value and style when buying and that the shoeman or one of his salesmen may have taken a long time to fit and serve them.

There are, of course, cases where the money should be handed back without question or quibble. If a husband buys a certain style of shoe for his wife—say a dove grey kid bal, size 4½, E width—and makes the remark that he thinks that will suit her admirably. He goes home and finds that his better half cannot wear this size, and while she likes the footwear in every particular, she must have a half size or a size larger or smaller and of different width; then a refund is advisable, if the retailer has not that particular size in stock. It would be ill-timed to try and induce the purchaser to take something else.

Stamp Refund on Sales Slip

"I refund money only when I cannot properly fit the party with the size and style of boot desired," said a Toronto footwear merchant the other day. "I make no exception to this rule, unless the shoe is faulty in quality or workmanship, or the purchaser has taken the precaution to say, 'If I do not like these when I get home or they do not seem to me as nice as they appear in your store, can I get the money back?' I always say, 'yes,' and stamp the sales slip with the word 'Refund.' This is kept on file in my office and I allow ten days for a return of the shoes in good condition to be accompanied by the sales slip so marked.

"I will, however, not exchange shoes on which the buttons have been moved or the soles soiled. I have had many interesting experiences in this exchange line. Not so many weeks ago a woman came in and bought a mahogany walking boot for nine dollars. The next day she came again and said that she thought that she would prefer a button boot. I knew she was fishing around to get her money back and I told her that I would get the shoe for her, which I did. She came a little later and added that she did not like the button style as well as she thought she would and would I give her her money back. I told her positively no, that I had gone to considerable trouble to secure just what she desired and now she coolly requested a refund.

"She declared that I was taking a pretty firm stand and

I added that such was my policy, as if I gave back money we would have to keep a special staff to undo all the business that we did on Saturdays and other busy days, when I employ special clerks.

She Brought in Policeman

"Well, she grew very obstinate and said with considerable anger that I was 'a confiscator, a tight-wad and a mean, contemptible fellow.' I stood all this but did not recede from the position that I had taken.

"She then said that she would show me and would call in the police. Out on the street she went and soon returned with a blue-coated minion of the law. Carrying her head high in the air she once more demanded her money. I paid no attention to her whatever, but stepping up to the constable I asked him what I could do for him. He remarked with considerable show of authority that he was not in the store to buy boots but to see 'that this woman got her rights.'

"I told him there was the door and to get out at once.

"He replied that he would do so 'when I had dealt out justice to the woman.'

"I once more told the constable to go but he budged not.

"'You have no right to enter this shop,' I firmly informed him, 'except in the case of robbery, murder, or some violation of the city bylaws—unless it is to buy shoes.'

"'I'll show you that I have,' he impudently exclaimed.

"'And I will show you that you have not,' I answered.

"I took his number and stepping to the telephone remarked with vigor that I would communicate with the chief of police and see whether he had any right to intrude.

The peeler started for the door and left the woman. I think he was a green 'cop' and wanted to show off a bit, or he did not rightly understand his duties. The woman, when she saw that she had been deserted, she wilted and said that she guessed she would keep the button pair after all. She went out and I have not seen her since until last week when she came in and bought a pair of school shoes for her eight year old boy.

"I am willing to go to any length to oblige customers but I will not be imposed upon. This was a clear case of imposition. The retailer today needs a little more backbone. I have noticed before entering business here that, if you hand back the money easily and without any queries, the news soon travels around. The party who receives the cash will tell some one else and thus half your time will be taken up in putting shoes back into stock and traveling to the cash register for refunds.

Buying is Matter of Choice

"Did any one ever get on a street car, put a ticket in the box and after riding a block say to the conductor, 'Oh, I guess that I will not go down town after all; please give me back my ticket'? Did any one ever enter a theatre and after staying fifteen minutes or half an hour, wander to the box office and secure a refund of the admission fee? You say that the thing on the face of it is absurd. Not a whit more so than in the shoe business, only the amount is smaller.

"My customers are never importuned by my staff to buy and are under no obligation when entering the door. I blame the department stores for most of this refund craze. If they want to build up their business in that way, all right, but they have so many lines they know that the cash returned will be spent in another department before a woman leaves the premises. Not so in shoes alone."

JOINS STAFF OF BRANDON SHOE CO.

R. J. McAllister, who has been with Geo. A. Slater, Limited, Montreal, for the past seven years, has joined the staff of the Brandon Shoe Co., Limited, Brantford, Ont., and will cover the Western Provinces in the interest of that firm, succeeding J. J. Tilt, who, some time ago, took a position in the service of the T. Eaton Co., Toronto. Mr. Mc-

SHEEP SKINS SOLD ONLY TO THE ALLIES

Regulations governing the sale of sheep skins, which will be of interest to Canadian importers, have been adopted by the Commonwealth Government in Australia, according to the report of the Canadian Trade Commissioner there. After provision has been made to meet Australian demands, 4,000 bales of skins will be sold monthly to the Imperial Government. The balance of sheep skins will be sold by public tender, a reserve price being fixed by the Central Wool Committee, to approved buyers, who will be compelled to furnish evidence that the exports are to other parts of the Empire or allied countries. It is stated that consideration is being given by the Canadian Trade Commissioner to the situation in the hope that the time is not distant when conditions will have improved to such an extent that permission to ship to Canada hides, especially those suitable for military purposes, will be granted by the Commonwealth Government.

KNOWS SHOE GAME IN ALL BRANCHES

One of the most successful and aggressive shoemen of the West is Charles H. Newton, manager of the footwear section of Robinson's large department store, Winnipeg. He has been engaged in the shoe game all his life. Coming to Canada from England, in 1884, he took a position in the cutting room of the J. D. King factory in Toronto. Later he worked in Rochester, Chicago and other cities, learning all departments of manufacturing. He still looks back with interest to the days spent in the plants. Then he branched out in the shoe business on College street, Toronto, where he spent several years. His next position was with the T. Eaton Co., Toronto. Six years ago he went west and was manager for some time for C. F. Rannard, of the Rannard Shoe, Winnipeg, and entered upon his present duties four years ago—in 1912. Recently the slipper section of the Robinson store was extended by an addition of 650 sq are feet, making 1,370 in all. This is slightly elevated from the spacious main boot and shoe quarters which are on the ground floor, 35 feet wide by 280 feet deep, while there is also another department devoted to misses' and children's footwear. A large and representative stock is carried embracing all the latest and most exclusive ranges in both Canadian and American makes, men's shoes selling as high as twelve dollars per pair and women's up to eighteen dollars. Mr. Newton looks for even more advanced prices in the very highest quality lines. He believes in keeping things on the move, is a splendid manager, a shrewd, discriminating buyer and possesses executive ability. Surrounded by a competent staff he gets encouraging results and by harmony and co-operation has placed the shoe section over which he presides in the forefront of service and achievement.

SHORTAGE OF RAW MATERIAL ACUTE

Canadian industry and ultimately Canadian consumers, are facing an acute situation in the shortages of a number of commodities needed in production by the Dominion. The latest heard from in this connection are the leather men, who waited on the Government lately to ask that something be done to meet the scarcity of hides. A situation almost equally serious exists with regard to wool, while there is also a growing scarcity of machine parts, tool steel, tin sheets, wire rope and a number of other such articles. These were formerly obtained from England and their import has been stopped by the English restriction of exports.

Hides and wool, however, are obtained from Australia and New Zealand. Here again restriction of exports is the cause of Canada's needs, the Antipodean countries having recently taken such a step.

F. N. Beardmore, of Montreal, and E. J. Davis, of Newmarket, saw Sir George E. Foster on behalf of the leather interests to ask that an effort be made to have the regulations relaxed to allow hides to come to Canada. They represented that the situation was serious, that boot leather was reaching impossible prices, and that even after the war was over it would be scarce in Canada. It is understood the prospects are that the situation will be met.

FIGHTING MAIL ORDER HOUSES

Some local merchants have a habit of bemoaning the large mail order business done in their district, but themselves do very little advertising in their local papers. It might be well to draw the attention of any such to the following statement, reported to have been made recently by the manager of a large mail order concern:

We have a bureau whose duty it is to read the country papers. There is not a paper of any consequence in our territory we do not get. The bureau looks over these papers and when we find a town where the merchants do not advertise in their local papers, or where advertisers do not change their advertisements regularly, we immediately flood that section with literature. It always brings results far in excess of the same effort put forth in territory where the local merchants use the local papers.

VETERAN MONTREAL SHOEMAN DIES

One of the oldest and best known retail shoe merchants in Montreal died on February 19th, in the person of John Dwane. Mr. Dwane had been in the shoe business on McGill street for forty years, during all of which time he occupied the same shop. He was an expert in leather and did much appraising for the fire insurance companies in that connection. He was also interested in real estate and had a wide acquaintance in Montreal.

Mr. Dwane was born in Montreal. In politics he was a Conservative, in religion a Roman Catholic.

Shoe Retailers, Jobbers and Manufacturers

THE Wingfoot "Whole Heel" for men's shoes is now ready. Some shoe manufacturers are already filling orders. New shoes with Wingfoot "Whole Heels."

¶ The Wingfoot "Half Heel" Made-in-Canada has been sold for more than a year. You may recall the advertising, the guarantee, the price. The same guarantee applies to Wingfoot "Whole Heels."

¶ Guarantee: "We guarantee Goodyear Wingfoot Air Heels to outwear any other rubber heels that you have ever worn, or any others you can now buy. Should they not meet with this guarantee, return them to us at Toronto or to any Goodyear branch, and get a new pair free."

¶ The retail price of Wingfoot Half Heels is 60 cents—10 cents more than any other heel, much more than some heels.

¶ So you see the advertising, guarantee, quality, and price of Wingfoot Heels have placed them into an extra-value class.

¶ The Heel is one part of a shoe which is a separate article in itself, trade-marked, and known by the public. People generally do not pretend to know much about upper stock and shoemaking. They may not be able to recognize upon examination just how much better your shoe is built in various ways. But when they see Goodyear Wingfoot Heels on your shoes, they recognize extra value. They recall the guarantee, the extra price, the good things people have said about those heels. It helps convince them of the good things built into the rest of your shoe.

¶ Wingfoot Heels enhance shoe value and shoe sales.

¶ Will you talk this over with your sales people before you order, then order enough.

“MEANEST SHOE FIRM I EVER WORKED FOR”

One was Tighter than a Gun Wad on Expense Money, Another Wanted a Traveler on Salary Basis to Bear Part of His Personal Expense, and a Third Reduced a Profitable Territory and Ousted Alert Salesman Earning Big Returns on Commission

“HE was the meanest boss that I ever worked for,” declared a well-known traveler of a group who were seated in the smoking car on a Friday evening, not so long ago, returning to their homes after a busy week.

“I knew him through and through. He was in the jobbing business some ten years ago in —, but is now living in California. While I wish to speak no evil of the departed, every time I think of that chap, whom I will call ‘Judkins,’ I can scarcely restrain my temper and I want to get even with him for all the dirty tricks that he played upon me. He told me that he would give me a certain, but growing salary, and allow me so much a week for expenses, and he never kept his word. I had to come home several times before the week’s work on my ground was done because my expense appropriation had run out, and I was not going to take my own good cash to build up his business. He gave me a fine territory. ‘It was great,’ he enthusiastically observed, but had not been covered for some time. He pictured it in such glowing colors, that I thought I could do something with the goods. He told me that it had been neglected simply because the house had not sufficient men to supervise the area, but the ‘prospects were immense.’ I followed the directions given as closely as possible and stopped at the cheapest hotels, and rode on second class tickets in an effort to make my limited expense allowance hang out. Oh dear! not even the archangel Gabriel could have satisfied that man. He growled incessantly, scrutinized my expense sheets, and went over everything with a fine tooth comb. I resolutely stood for it all for some months. To make a long story short, I finally quit the unproductive field. The boss had bought a commercial travelers’ certificate for me, which had cost ten dollars. I had been with the firm eight months. When we parted he even deducted the pro rata balance on that certificate. In other words he kept back four months out of that fee for my certificate. Yet, he was owing me money for expense outlay.”

They Parted Right Then and There

“Yes,” spoke up another member of the company. “I met a man somewhat similar. He was a wholesaler in an Eastern city where I had a small sample room. He came after me wanting me to take out his lines. He offered a very fair salary, and we had the territory all mapped out, when I was to begin work and all that sort of thing.

“Now,” quoth my would-be employer. “We come to the matter of expenses. There must be no extravagance, you know. I do not believe in a man padding his expense sheet, do you?”

“No,” I replied.

“Very well,” he added, “I do not think that he should get a shave, a shoe shine, a cigar, a neck-tie or a drink and charge it up to the firm under some other guise. You know these little things amount to a great deal in the course of the year, and if you have to buy a customer a supper in order to secure his order you should, I think, in all justice, pay that out of your own pocket. He continued on this line and I listened to his restrictions for a while longer.

“Stop right here,” I asserted, “I would not work for you under any consideration, not even if yours was the last job on earth.

“Why,” he asked in amazement.

“Simply because you suspect and distrust me from the first. I will not work for any man who thinks that I am going to try and get ahead of him for a few cents or items each week.

“He pleaded but I was firm. I foresaw there would be friction right from the start. If an employer has not confidence in the good judgment and economical use of expense money allowed a traveller, without querying him like a scolding parent would a child over the disposition of a few pennies, the less he has to do with such a house the better.”

A Plausible Plea That Failed

“I can tell you a more exasperating experience than that,” remarked another veteran of the road. “I started in seventeen years ago with a new firm because the future seemed bright, and one of the principals was a personal friend of mine. Well, I was put on commission, and the first year after paying my expenses and introducing the goods I earned only seven hundred dollars, and I had to keep my wife and family out of that. However, I was not discouraged, and the next season I cleaned up nine hundred dollars. This was not much of a gain, but I thought I could foresee a future in my connection and territory with the firm, and I stuck to the job like a pup to a root. The third year I earned a little over eleven hundred and then stringent times came. Merchants were pretty well stocked up and bought sparingly, owing to the complete failure of the crops, and my net income fell off to eight hundred and twenty-five dollars.

“I thought I had to take the bitter with the sweet and counted on the next year to make up for the deficit. It did in a measure and totalled fourteen hundred. The firm were now well established and making some feature lines which took splendidly with the trade in the larger cities, especially. From that on things came my way rapidly and I earned several thousand dollars the next few years, disposing of as much as a hundred and sixty thousand, and one year two hundred thousand dollars in goods. I could see that trouble was brewing, for when we came to settle up at the close of the year, one member of the firm incidentally remarked that he thought I had altogether too large a territory to cover thoroughly, that I could not do it justice, and they wanted to get into some of the smaller towns. They felt that I was overworked, that I would ruin my health, and that it would be fairer to me and to them to put me on a straight salary, and then I would know exactly what was coming to me. They had it all figured out that in nine years I had earned so many thousand dollars in commissions. Dividing it by nine my salary on the average for the period was something less than two thousand dollars. They would be very generous and give me about two-thirds of my former territory and attach to my position a remuneration of twenty-five hundred, which they considered very liberal.

You Will Know What You Get

“I told that firm they could not put any arrangement like that over on me, that I had done all the pioneer work and pathfinding, and to rob me now of the fruits of my early efforts was nothing less than high handed injustice and rank treatment.

“The trouble with you,” I asserted, with some heat, “is that you are small minded, and cannot bear to see any one in your employ make a good thing. The more money that I make for myself on a strictly commission basis the more goods I sell and the more I make for you, do I not?" I inquired with pertinence and indignation.

"They started in again using several specious arguments about the value of knowing that I would have a fixed liberal income in good years as well as bad—for they wanted me to sign a contract—and said I was altogether too thin skinned. I surely did not realize that they were making a proposition of direct personal benefit to me, etc., etc.

"I told the firm that I could not see it their way at all, that I was prepared to take chances and run with the bad and the good years. To make a weary story brief, I resigned on the spot, and soon after took out an opposition line and won away half their trade, for they had put a cheap man on the road, thinking that the goods which were branded would alone sell themselves on their reputation. But they made an awful mistake, and it was too late. Good-night gentlemen."

HELPING THE CUSTOMER BUY MORE

"Advertising personal in its effect pulls best. If you can show a woman that you have something which especially suits her in style, quality and size, you are more apt to bring her into the store and make her a purchaser than your competitor who advertises in a general way," says Marshall Bredin.

The best way to gather information for personal advertising is to begin at once and take full details of every sale you make. Get the address of the customer. This is easily done if the goods are delivered. A polite request for the name and address generally brings the desired information under other conditions. As fast as these sales slips with addresses are obtained, the information may be transferred by the cashier to cards and arranged alphabetically in a suitable box. While, from greater familiarity with that branch of retailing, I have used the selling of shoes as an illustration, the system explained is applicable as well to all other branches of retailing.

Have the cards in a convenient size, with space for the name of the head of the family. This, when it comes to buying, is usually the wife and mother, for she buys for herself and the children, while the man, as a rule, buys shoes only for himself. The point is one to be settled according to the circumstances in each case.

Having the name and address of the head of the family, place on the lines below the names of each member of the family to whom you have sold shoes. If you cannot get their names, simply write "youngest girl," "son," or "little boy," opposite the sales made. When you sell a pair of shoes, record the size and stock number.

This will give you a valuable record for use during clearance sales. You can then refer to the cards and write a timely letter or circular, stating that you have shoes of sizes and styles that will fit some member of the family. This is specific advertising and will be practically a personal letter.

The saving in printing and postage which this concentration brings is worth while, and the adoption of the card system will be found the easiest way in which to keep such a list up to date, for if a customer changes his home address it can easily be corrected on the card or a new card made. The changes in sizes of the children's shoes should always be noted, for the little feet will surely grow, and if the list does not keep pace, errors may be made.

One of the disadvantages with which the retailer has to contend is the fact that he may have a large stock of a certain style of shoe and yet be out of the one size necessary to complete a sale. And he may have twenty different styles which fit the customer's foot, but do not suit in some detail or other.

Many unsuccessful attempts have been made to systematize shoe stores and overcome this difficulty. A bright shoe man down in Texas has seemingly solved the problem.

Everyone is familiar with the appearance of the average shoe store. The shoes are in boxes, one pair in each box.

This Texas man has a difficult plan in operation. He has had the first-section of his shelving—that nearest the door—arranged into a sample case very similar to those used by manufacturers and jobbers selling shoes from samples. In this case the retailer places one sample of every shoe which he carries in stock. Inside of the shoe is placed a card, telling the number of pairs in stock by sizes.

Now, when a customer comes in the salesman does not have to take down a dozen or twenty different boxes; he simply takes the customer to the sample case to pick out the style desired. A glance at the card shows whether or not the desired size is in stock. If it is in stock, the shoe is quickly found and the sale completed.

If the assortment is badly broken, the sample shoe is taken out of the case and customers prevented from choosing a style in which they cannot be fitted. This is an advantage in one way, and a disadvantage in another, for it would seem to favor the breaking up of regular sizes and the accumulation of odds and ends. To avoid this, all the broken lines are placed in the section next to the sample case, and there is a "PM" placed on every pair in that section. "PM" means that a premium or a reward of a certain amount of money (ranging in shoe stores from 10 to 25 cents) will be given a clerk for selling a particular article, which, being out of style, or otherwise difficult to dispose of, is not likely to be brought to the customer's attention by the average clerk under ordinary conditions, owing to the unusual difficulty of marketing it. This premium is an incentive to the clerk to make extra exertions to sell these "stickers."

The two plans, worked together, enable this dealer to work his stocks out very clean and sell nearly fifty per cent. more goods per hour in busy times than he could with the same force and his old methods.

WHAT CARD INDEX DOES FOR HIM

"A small retailer would do well to try out some of the plans adopted by the proprietors of the larger stores in pushing their business to the front," said a Guelph shoe dispenser. "A great many large stores maintain a card system of the sizes worn by customers. About two years ago I started one of my own, and do you know, it has more than repaid me for the trouble I have been put to in getting it in shape. Not only is this of great help in filling such orders as I may receive by mail, but better still when I get down to a few sizes in a particular style, it only requires a minute to locate the names of those customers who might be interested in the shoes. It is then an easy matter to call their attention to the fact that we have a pair of shoes of the size they wear and in a style that will appeal to them.

"I believe these letters sort of flatter the people to whom they go. There is an appeal to discriminating tastes, and that brings results. This same thing is true when we get in a new lot and desire to push it. Naturally, each is an individual letter and is given the personal tone that shows our interest in our customer. The small storekeeper usually looks upon such plans as this as beyond the scope of his business, but pretty generally plans of this kind that are good for the big fellow can be made good for the little man as well."

COST OF DOING SHOE REPAIR BUSINESS

THE subject of the cost of doing business is a rather dry one, and possibly this will be the article last read in this issue of the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL; but it does not alter the fact that it is one of the most important problems of everyday business life. Show me a shoe repairer who makes a study of this question and I will show you one who makes a success of his business.

To be sure the subject of how to get business evokes more enthusiasm, but if due consideration to the present subject is not given, the other is liable to fool us, and lead us into false ideas of profit. Too many business men think because trade is good that profit necessarily follows, and with this thought in their minds habits of extravagance are developed. The well-balanced business man will, therefore, always take an interest in what constitutes the cost of doing business; and when he has reduced that cost to a percentage he will have that percentage in mind when he is figuring on the cost of a particular article or job, and the right price he should charge.

Must Do Some Calculating

A great many repairers think that the only cost involved in putting on a pair of half soles is the actual expenditure for leather and other materials, and perhaps for labor; although many repairers figure that if they do the work themselves there is no cost for labor. It is not upon this theory that men who conduct big profitable businesses become prosperous.

If shoe repair shops are to succeed they must do more calculating to find the cost. When a customer brings a job to the shop they figure on it, they must not only mentally compute the amount of material the job will use, but add to that a sufficient amount to cover overhead expenses and labor; regardless of whether the repairer does the work himself or has a helper do it. It is legitimate, however, to figure this cost for labor at the rate which you would pay a helper; for if you do the work yourself it is worth just what you would have to pay a helper; but the cost of doing business, the overhead expense, should also be computed. It's an expense just as infallible as the cost of material, and to overlook it means careless loss.

To be sure each time that a customer brings a job to your shop you cannot even mentally start in and figure on all such items as rent, insurance, taxes, advertising, postage, freight, loss for bad debts, and so forth, but you can do this: Keep track of all these expenses for a year, and also keep track of the volume of business that you do during the year. If you will do this thoroughly and systematically your first awakening will be to the fact that these so-called overhead expenses are greater than you think; but having attained their total amount it is easy for you to determine what percentage of your total receipts for the year has been expended in overhead expenses. If you find this amounts to say 20 per cent., then when a customer comes to the shop with a job you have this percentage in your mind, which you should add to the cost of doing the job with just as much reason as you will also add the cost for material and the cost for labor.

Where Your Profit Begins

For simple illustration, suppose that you are charging 75 cents for a half sole job. What profit are you making on this job? If your overhead expenses, or cost of doing business, is 20 per cent., then the first item of cost on this particular job would be 15c. for overhead expense. If then you compute the cost for material at say 23c., and labor at 18c., you find that the cost of doing this job is 56c., and that your profit does not begin until this 56c. is deducted.

Turn these figures over in your mind frequently. Let them become fixed there. They are not submitted as being absolute; they fluctuate with changing conditions, and are used for example only. Possibly you can do this job for a little less cost for raw material, but probably you are paying out more. The chances are that the charge for labor is insufficient, as wasted or intermittent time allowed for; and it may be that you have overlooked items which should have been computed in the overhead expense; but whether these figures are accurate or not, the principle remains the same.

Assuming the accuracy of these figures as indicating your profit, all remuneration for the extra time you are giving the customer, the money you are paying out for family expenses, recreation and all other expenses that you are personally put to, have to come out of this amount that is between the 56c. and the 75c.; or 19c.; and if at the end of the year you have a surplus for the bank, that also has to come out of this 19c. margin. It does not take much high life to spend 19c.; but figures do not lie, and if the repairer has all these matters in mind every time a customer brings a job to his shop he is apt to have more courage to ask a reasonable price. I find, after all, the price we charge is simply a reflection of our courage.

Your Own Pay and Interest Return

No two cases are alike. Some repairers, due to location, have higher expense items; some have to pay more for wages; there is a little variance in the cost of raw material, as some repairers buy in large quantities and pay cash; but we hope that every repairer who does not now do so will plan to begin with the first of March to keep a complete record of the amount of business done each day of the year, and will likewise keep a record of all operating expenses.

This list of expenses should first call for a salary to be paid to the proprietor. You ought to be worth a little more to the business than a helper, and therefore first figure on a salary for yourself which is a little higher than what you would have to pay a helper. The next item which you should figure is the interest on the capital you have invested in the business. If you have $1,000 invested in a repair shop it should pay you 6 per cent. interest just the same as though you had loaned it on real estate. Now fix in your mind these two important items, salary for yourself, and interest on the money invested, as being legitimate items for operating expenses. Next comes the item of wages for workmen and all other helpers about the place. Then come such items as rent, interest on borrowed money that is used in the business, taxes, insurance, light, heat, advertising, stationery, repairs, postage, freight and express, bad debts, association dues, depreciation in stock on hand, machinery, fixtures and so forth, and last but not least, watch miscellaneous items and see that they are all included in this matter of expenses. When you determine the total amount of this expense, then add up the total amount of business for the year and you will know what percentage of this volume comes under the head of this overhead expense. You are then in a position to easily figure this item every time you figure the cost to do a job.

Here we want to direct your attention to one other important feature in figuring this cost however. You must remember that this per cent. cost for doing business is computed on the total sales, and therefore in figuring a job you must not first figure the amount of the cost of raw material and labor and then add your overhead percentage to that amount. You must figure that percentage from the price you charge for the job. In other words, on a 75c. repair job, if your overhead expense was 20 per cent., you must figure 15c. in your estimate of the cost, and not simply add 20 per cent. to the total of the cost of material and labor.

Repairers are not in the business to simply make a living. To "get past," so to speak. They are in business for the same purpose as great corporations, and that is to declare dividends. It is these dividends that make you a successful business man. It is these dividends that make possible the enjoyment of the better things in life.

GREET BROTHER REPAIRER AS TRUE FRIEND

hour in other lines. Many difficulties in the trade were being overcome and the future looked much more encouraging than it had for some years. Very few customers had objected to the increased prices which had gone into effect in Hamilton. Do good work and get a fair figure for it should be the object of every tradesman. More confidence and sympathy with one another was what was needed and this was being brought out in association work. To help and understand one another was a fine ideal to which they all should aspire.

To the toast of the "Wholesalers and Allied Industries" many timely and congratulatory addresses were made and best wishes extended to the Toronto Shoe Repairers' Association for its continued success and usefulness. Among the speakers were A. E. Wallace, of P. B. Wallace & Son, H. S. King, E. D. Pretty, of the United Shoe Machinery Co., W. H. Alderson, H. A. Mahaffy and J. W. Shaw, of Gutta Percha and Rubber, Limited, F. E. Holland, of the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Co., Limited, G. A. McLennan, of Charles Tilley & Son, Wesley Allen, of C. Parsons & Son, J. R. Thompson, of the Dunlop Tire and Rubber Co., Limited, G. B. VanBlaricom, of the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL, and others. A vote of thanks was tendered Gutta Percha and Rubber Co., for the donation of several boxes of cigars and rubber cigar holders and a highly successful banquet closed with the singing of the National Anthem.

ber and street of the woman who had sent back the grey suede pair. I informed her of the fact.

"Well," she continued unabashed, "keep open half an hour later and I will be down for sure."

"You had better hurry up," I replied. "I will stay here a few minutes after nine."

"Strange to relate she came down to the shop in a cab, bought and paid for the slippers and went away. Had I not been so firm with that lady she would have also put me to the trouble of delivering the pedal-wear and then have sent it back.

"Deliver me from the people who come into a shoe store and, after being fitted and satisfied regarding price, last, leather, etc., begin to ask all sorts of evasive questions and put forth convenient pleas for not paying for the goods then and there and having them sent up. They will bear watching. Life is too short and time too valuable to fritter it away on curiosity seekers."

RUBBERS

The phenomenal growth of the demand for Independent Rubbers, in addition to the lack of labor created by the large number of Independent employees having enlisted for Active Service, made it extremely difficult for us to make shipment of our last season's rubbers in our usual, prompt manner.

For the coming season, however, we can promise our customers that every possible effort will be made to improve the labor situation to the extent of allowing shipments to be made in good time for the opening fall and winter trade.

You can depend that everything that is humanly possible in this respect will not be overlooked.

SHOES AS A STYLE COMMODITY

Many extravagant and "hysterical" statements have appeared of late regarding the price of shoes, says a leading kid skin manufacturer. Such exaggerated statements can only redound to the detriment of the shoe business. It should be the persistent effort of every shoe manufacturer, merchant and leather manufacturer to prove in public print and by other means at his command, the falsity of such statements. "Hysteria" of statements and likewise "hysteria" of price should be combated by all those having the interest of the shoe and leather trade at heart.

"Business to be on a plane of safety, must be stabilized to the greatest possible degree." Conditions over which none of us have had any control have forced up the prices of commodities in general.

It should be the endeavor of all of us to try to keep prices within the "realm of reason" so as not to lessen consumption.

This can only be done if we all enter into the spirit of "co-operation" and "co-ordination," even if for the time being the net results will be less encouraging, but such action will surely redound to the ultimate benefit of the trade in general by keeping shoes as a "style and necessity" commodity, instead of only as a "necessity."

Into this spirit we have entered heartily, and we trust and believe the outcome will be the continuous and steadily increased consumption of ———, and will to a great extent put the "death knell" to the employment of "makeshifts and substitutes."

The woman of the United States had been taught to "dress" her feet to the utmost degree, in conjunction with "clothing" her person with distinction. In our publicity propaganda we shall continue to advocate the desirability of smartness in footwear, and ask the continued co-operation of our friends in our endeavor to keep the plane of the shoe trade up to the high state of efficiency which it has reached.

THE "FEATHER" PUMP IS UNIQUE

Here it is, the latest thing in women's footwear! And it originated in St. Louis, says "American Shoemaking." It is called the "feather" pump, and twelve different styles and colors have already been developed, although the shoe has not yet been placed on the retail market.

The pump was designed by a St. Louis house. It is of fine kid leather and is adorned with a flat rosette of natural feathers. The dark green pump bears a rosette of iridescent feathers, from the centre of which peep the two glistening yellow eyes and the jet black beak of the eagle owl. Other rosettes run from plum color into red, then purple, and are tipped with black.

The feather pump is designed along modish lines. It has a circular vamp and foxing, Louis wood-covered heel with an aluminum heel plate. The ornamentation is different for each of the twelve different shades of leather. It will retail from $10 to $12 per pair.

MAKING DEAD-BEAT COME ACROSS

If you happen to have money owing you from a proverbial dead-beat and he doesn't pay up or profess any ability to do so, why, just become his financial backer and lo, the bill is paid. At least, that's the way the retailers of Iowa are working out the bad debt problem, and according to the report of Secretary Judd, of the Des Moines Chamber of Commerce, it is a great success.

There's nothing new about the idea, except in the way it is worked out as a somewhat novel proposition under the name of "Morris Bank" plan. The whole idea rests on the assumption that men are "dead-beats" because they can't raise the money to emancipate themselves, and if they could put debt on the same basis as the business man does they really possess enough of the spirit of fairness to make a good attempt. So much for the debtor; from the standpoint of the creditor, it is no worse to be an endorser on notes, the proceeds of which you are using, than to be a creditor without the money at all.

As an illustration of the way the plan works, Mr. Judd cites the following:

"A man who owes seven or eight merchants a matter of $150 in small accounts, and who can only pay a matter of three dollars a week, can pay it at one place and not of necessity have to dodge six or seven of them until pay day again. In this way the merchants get their money and the debtor's mind is free to do better work for his employer. Statistics show us that very few of the borrowers fail to make their payments and if one should, it is prorated and the merchants will have to pay the bank the balance.

"There are very few business men but what will agree to go security on these old accounts. They are dead as it is

THE RIGHT STAMP OF A PAPER

We want to congratulate you on the very great improvement shown in the "Shoe and Leather Journal" during the past year. We feel that all possible encouragement should be given trade papers of your stamp, and in this way, help to encourage Canadian enterprises.

Your recent well written articles on the leather and shoe situation cover the ground admirably.

With all best wishes for the future, we beg to remain,

Yours very truly,

BEARDMORE & CO.,

Per W. A. Moore.

and it is merely giving them an opportunity to have the use of this money, and it also gives the individual an opportunity to pay fifteen or twenty merchants at the rate of four or five dollars a week, where, if it was necessary for him to call separately and settle these accounts, they would probably never be paid."

Mr. Judd also states that the association runs advertising regularly in the daily papers, headed, "Pay Your Bills." This advertising copy is written by an expert who continually hammers home the fact that the dead-beat is the most despised of mortals and urging people to pay their accounts promptly.

The association started the campaign by sending out a letter enclosing the form of a notice which employers were requested to hang up in their establishments, as follows:

The employees of this firm must pay their bills.

Please do not allow any information of this character to be filed against you by the Retail Merchants' Bureau.

This rule must be observed.

Note—To observe this rule the Retail Merchants' Bureau will gladly assist any worthy employee to settle his accounts.

According to Mr. Judd, he received replies from more than 800 firms of the city, who agreed to post the rule and insist that the help observe it.

At the present time about 1,800 business houses are using the notice.

FOR EFFICIENCY AND WELFARE WORK

Steps will be taken to form a general or central body in connection with labor efficiency and welfare work in Montreal as the result of a luncheon tendered to fifty employers of labor held by the Canadian Consolidated Rubber Co., Limited, in Montreal last week.

Dr. E. J. Mullaly, who presided at the luncheon, in his introductory remarks outlined the work that was being done by the labor efficiency and welfare department of the Canadian Rubber Company's factory. T. H. Reider, vice-president and general manager of the Canadian Consolidated Rubber Co., Limited, welcomed the guests and the representatives of large industries in Montreal and spoke of plans under way for improving the conditions and the surroundings of the workers in the different plants of the company. J. N. Doyle, of the Dominion Bridge Company, spoke on accidents and their prevention and adjustment. H. M. Williams, of the Montreal Light, Heat and Power Co., spoke of the advantages of educational classes for the workers. A. D. Thornton, of the Dominion Rubber System, spoke of the encouragement of thrift among the men, and W. H. Goodwin, managing director of Goodwin's, Limited, spoke of social service and welfare work.

The discussion resulted in the unanimous decision that something should be done to have a central organization for the efficiency and welfare of labor established in Montreal, and Dr. Mullaly was asked to consider ways and means to make such an organization possible.

WILL BROWN SHOES BE POPULAR

In the styles now being shown one number is being featured more and more as each store shows its new lines. It is the whole quarter boot with slightly squared throat and stitching underneath in a double row. It is shown in solid effects of kid suede and buck, in combinations of patent and dull leather with colored kid or suede, or in colored kid and suede and in colored kid and cloth. Whole quarter boots have been popular up to the present time and there are indications that they will continue throughout the coming season.

While it seems a foregone conclusion that light shades of kid and suede will have the call, it is well not to overlook the selling possibilities of the darker shades, for instance, brown. One of the best known and largest shoe shops in New York has stocked up heavily on brown, both in high and low cuts. This concern is one of the leaders and naturally in nine cases out of ten predicts correctly.

In the latest spring display at the store of Lord & Taylor, New York, a number of models in cloth top effects are shown. Among them are several numbers of colored kid with circular foxed vamps and whole quarters of cloth to match the vamp. They have covered Louis heels to match the quarters. They are also showing several numbers of all cloths shoes, circular foxings and whole quarters with covered Louis heels to match.

NEWSY NOTES FROM ST. JOHN

Walter T. Dunn, formerly of Dedham, Mass., but for the last year foreman of J. M. Humphrey & Co.'s boot and shoe factory in St. John, N.B., has joined a Canadian Engineers unit.

Richard J. Walsh, manager of Waterbury & Rising's King street store, who was recently operated on in the St. John Infirmary, is convalescent. It will be some time before he will be able to resume his former duties.

William Gray, father of Messrs. George and Joseph Gray, proprietors of Gray's Shoe Store, Main street, St. John, N.B., passed away February 21st, after a brief illness of pneumonia. He was one of the oldest and most highly respected citizens.

There are few young men in any position in life throughout the Dominion, who have tried more diligently to join a Canadian overseas unit, than Walter B. Trueman, formerly of the staff of Ames-Holden-McCready, Limited, St. John, N.B. After applying on ten different occasions he was at last accepted and has donned khaki. Since he joined he has proven his worth as a soldier and already has been promoted to the rank of Corporal. Although desiring to proceed overseas the military authorities are retaining him to assist in recruiting 5,000 men, which the Army Service Corps is at present calling for.

Recent advertisements in local newspapers, announcing a large sale of boots and shoes by the Great Eastern Sales Co., caused quite a stir among retail dealers in St. John. The advertisements announced that Kelly, representing this company, would arrive in the city to conduct a sale for six days and during that time he would sell at comparatively small prices. A protest was sent to the Common Council by the Retail Merchants' Association and as a result an amendment to the license law was given a first and second reading and was passed providing for a special license of $500 for outside concerns coming to put on such sales. The sale was well patronized, a large number of people taking advantage of the cut in prices of shoes.

A quest which extended over thousands of miles of raging ocean, and many miles of shell-torn France and Flanders was successfully concluded a short time ago, when under the most unique conditions Walter Brindle, formerly a prominent shoe manufacturer in this city, now a member of a railway construction battalion in France, met his two boys who are also in France with combatant units. Mr. Brindle learned of the whereabouts of his boys during Christmas week and he was fortunate enough to get three days' leave to go and see them. Under heavy shell fire Mr. Brindle made his way through ruined villages for miles until he found the rest billets of his fighting sons. There a wonderful reunion took place.

A serious fire broke out in Halifax a few days ago and did damage in the business district to the extent of $40,000. The Club Shoe Store, owned by M. A. LeBlanc, was destroyed, and considerable damage was done to the stock of Harrison L. Hart's boot and shoe establishment. Fortunately both merchants were well protected by insurance. Mr. LeBlanc was in his store when the fire was discovered, and had barely time to place some valuable books and papers in his safe when the flames burst through the walls. His stock was valued at $20,000. He was fortunate in having it nearly met by insurance. Considerable smoke entered the upper portion of the building in which the Hart's shoe store was situated, but the damage was slight.

The Canadian Columbia Counter Co., has been incorporated under the laws of Massachusetts, and Mr. Walker, who is their attorney in Montreal is looking after the registration of the company in Canada.

AERO-PEDS RAPIDLY COMING TO FRONT

Aero-Peds, Limited, are being incorporated with headquarters in Toronto and are taking over the business of the Aero-Peds Manufacturing Co., 30 Adelaide street east. The new company, of which John A. Adams, who is well-known to the shoe trade, is manager, are already doing an export business in Aero-Peds and report the Canadian demand is increasing rapidly. Arrangements are being made for increasing the production of these light, ventilated, heel cushions, or pneumatic tires for the feet, as they are frequently called. Aero-Peds are handled by all the leading jobbing concerns in the Dominion, and will also be sold to the retail trade through special representatives. Although only in operation a few months, the fact that the company are placing their goods in the larger cities of the United States, as well as every province in Canada demonstrates the merit and popularity of Aero-Peds.

MR. WHITE CATCHES 450 POUND FISH

Concerning Hugh White, of the White Shoe Co., Toronto who is expected home this week after spending a winter holiday at Wilbur-by-the-Sea, Florida, the Daytona Morning Journal, of February 21st, says: "That Hugh White, a prominent wholesale shoe merchant, of Toronto, is successful in other lines was proved on Monday at Wilbur-by-the-Sea. Mr. White, who is a guest at the Toronita Hotel, in addition to making a record breaking catch of fish, landed an enormous porpoise weighing four hundred and fifty pounds and measuring seven feet four inches in length. Although Mr. White's hands were severely cut with the line, he pluckily held on and the boat was towed for over a mile before the porpoise was landed. A. Z. Campbell has tanned the skin which makes an ideal trophy for Mr. White to display to his northern friends."

Writing to a Toronto friend, Mr. White says: "I have Narcisse Gagnon, of Montreal, and Fred Marois, of Quebec, beaten to a frazzle and will produce the proofs that the dimensions of the fish have in no way been exaggerated. I now am the champion fisher of Canada and until this capture has been equalled will all other claimants please keep silent."

"PONTIAC" FOOTWEAR IS DECIDED NOVELTY

The latest novelty presented to the Canadian trade is "Pontiac" footwear, which is being made by the Reliance Shoe Co., Limited, 350 Sorauren avenue, Toronto. The new samples are much admired for their beautiful lines, neat workmanship and attractive appearance. The Pontiac range embraces sandals, Indian slippers, trail shoes, sporting shoes, semi-outing shoes, boys and girls skuffers, bowling, tennis, camping and gymnasium shoes. The most popular colors are mahogany, brown and pearl while the favorite leathers are chrome elk, mule skin and buck. All the goods are hand stitched and made in one piece in moccasin style, with welted or McKay soles. "Pontiac" footwear is unique, artistic and comfortable, and altogether different from anything ever offered to the trade. Many models, all of which are light and flexible, carry light elk soles, with or without spring heels, and low heels, while others have no soles at all, especially the slippers. The accompanying illustrations of a sporting oxford, a canoe slipper, a non-skid sandal and a sporting blucher afford some conception of the inviting character of this new make of footwear. All sandals, skuffers and gymnasium shoes carry mule, non-skid soles. There is also being turned out a beautiful range of boys', girl's and misses' Indian slippers with fancy tips, which for holiday presentations are both striking and handsome. The manufacture of "Pontiac" footwear by the Reliance Shoe Co., is under the personal direction of P. A. Forbert, who comes of a shoe making family, his father and brother having been for many years in the shoe business in Lindsay, Ont.

"PONTIAC" AUTO BLUCHER

Mr. Forbert spent seven years in the leading factories of Brockton, Mass., specializing on this kind of footwear which for the first time, is presented to the Canadian trade. "Pontiac" footwear embraces a range of over fifty samples, half coming in sporting shoes and the remainder in slippers.

MAKING FRIENDS OF CUSTOMERS

The modern merchant is neglecting few opportunities for making a friend of his customer. One example of methods used to this end is the practice of a large department store that specializes in articles for the younger generation.

When a purchase of children's clothing or shoes is made there, the store gets the address from the delivery slip, and it is then an easy matter to find out all about the child for whom the goods are bought.

On the youngster's next birthday a neat card, addressed to the little one, arrives congratulating him or her on having reached such or such an age. This sort of thing is calculated to, and unquestionably does, appeal strongly to the parents, and makes a permanent out of a casual customer.

WILL RUBBER HEELS OUTWEAR LEATHER?

Rubber heels are being worn more and more every month, for people are waking up to the fact that they are as serviceable and much more comfortable than leather heels. It is even claimed that first quality rubber heels will outwear the average leather heel on account of its resiliency, for when a leather heel is brought down hard on a paved or cinder walk, there is no give to the leather and the action is something like the grinding of an axe on a grindstone. With the rubber it is different. The heel gives under the weight of the body, and, being of a tough wear-resisting nature, the concrete or gritty walk does not use it away as readily as it would the leather heel. Furthermore, the rubber heel is almost noiseless, and being springy, saves the feet as well as other parts of the body from the little nerve-tearing jars at every step.

HIS SHOES MUST PINCH HIM

The following letter appeared recently in the Toronto Star and was signed by "A Crippled One":—

Has it ever occurred to many of the readers of this article that the manner in which the shoe business in all civilized countries is handled is a disgrace, and should be considered a matter of grave national concern? That while the sale of opium, cigarettes, poisons; the sanitary conditions of living and working quarters; the purity of food we buy, and the water we drink, etc., are controlled by well regulated laws, so that the health of the people will be protected, the shoe manufacturers are permitted to manufacture the most amazing and crippling shapes of shoes, which are afterwards handed out to we poor dupes of citizens through the retail stores by clerks who too often are only paid to sell shoes, and who are seldom, if ever, asked by the retailer to understand the simplest requirements of the human foot in order that it shall remain perfect and render reasonable service in a comfortable way?

Our teeth would probably be safe in a dentist's hands; our horses' feet would likely be properly shod by almost any blacksmith, and our dog or cat would be considered safe in a veterinary's hands. They know their business. But what chance have your child's feet or your own in the modern shoe store with their shelves laden with shoes unsuited in almost every particular to our feet?

the deformities in the same manner they have been told about their teeth in the last few years. For self-protection they should know these things. Efficient laws should control the shapes of all lasts on which shoes are made. Shoe dealers and salesmen should be required to pass some standard of examination in respect to the foot as a propelling machine and its relation to the body, and should understand the many unhealthy conditions arising from twisted bones and wrong balance, and their resulting interference with occupations through which livelihoods are to be gained.

BOOKLET WELL WORTH POSSESSING

The new catalogue just issued by Gutta Percha & Rubber Limited, Toronto, is the handsomest and most complete they have ever presented to the trade. The illustrations are clear and distinct and a description is given, in both English and French, of every rubber shoe, the English being printed in black and the French in red. The catalogue is very convenient in size and is a valuable work of reference for the retail trade.

McGee, sales manager of the company, will look after his old ground in Eastern and Northern Ontario and take over the Province of Manitoba. J. A. Cameron will represent the firm in Western Ontario and J. H. Moore will in addition to the Maritimes, cover Montreal and Quebec Province.

The eighth annual assembly of the Benefit Society of Getty & Scott, Limited, Galt, Ont., was held on Friday, February 16th, in the city hall which was gaily decorated for the occasion. There were over two hundred couples in attendance and a very merry time was spent. The officers and committee of the Mutual Benefit Society deserve much credit for the splendid manner in which everything was carried out. Among the guests from Toronto were, L. W. Hanson, E. D. Pretty and Fred. Taylor, of the U. S. M. Co. George F. Hennessey, Richard Irwin and Oliver Brooks, of the U. S. M. Co., Kitchener; Harry Moore, of Rochester, and R. Tompkins, of Boston, representing the Campbell-Bosworth Machinery Co. The officers of the Mutual Benefit Society are:—F. S. Scott, M.P., and Wm. Chamberlain, honorary presidents; James Wallace, president; Geo. Peeling, vice-president; William Cudney, secretary; William Booty, treasurer. The following are on the committee:—C. Peacock, J. Palmer, H. Kelford, J. Hollis, A. Fenemore, and F. R. Delafield.

The examiners of hides and leathers appointed by the Toronto Board of Trade for the year are: G. P. Beal, L. J. Breithaupt, Percival Leadley, C. G. Marlatt, and S. R. Wickett.

E. T. Wright & Co., of St. Thomas, Ont., are opening on March 15th a new In-stock Department for the benefit of their numerous customers. Complete new lines on their best selling lasts and leathers will be ready for delivery on March 15th, in widths A to D, which means better service and improved facilities.

The date of the 1917 convention of the National Leather and Shoe Finders' Association has been set definitely for July 10th, 11th and 12. The place will be Milwaukee.

A. Beland, of Montreal, has joined the staff of Peck's Shoe Store in Prince Rupert, B.C.

The shoe store of M. B. Young, 924 Bloor street west, Toronto, has been extended by twenty feet making the depth ninety feet. The interior improvements are particularly noticeable and are in keeping with the imposing front of the establishment which is one of the finest to be found anywhere.

G. J. Trudeau & Co., Limited, Montreal, have started to manufacture white heel and sole finish as well as patent leather tip repairers, brush method.

Hayward & Canning, 1658 Dundas street, Toronto, who have been in the shoe repairing business for several years are now making several custom shoes and turning out about one hundred pairs of men's wels a week. Considerable new equipment has been added, and the plant has been installed in the basement. The firm are adding a line of men's and boys' footwear and will conduct an up-to-date store in the space formerly devoted to the repair department.

M. Stewart, shoe dealer, of Ottawa, has been succeeded by John Stewart.

W. A. Hamilton, of the W. B. Hamilton Shoe Co., Toronto, spent a few days in Montreal and Quebec on business last week.

The Retail Clerks' Union, and the Retail Merchants' Association, of Toronto, will co-operate in petitioning the City Council to pass an early closing by-law. At the present time the hours of labor for the retail clerks are very long, in some cases from 8 a.m. to 10 p.m., five days a week, and from 8 a.m. to 12 p.m. on Saturdays. The retail merchants are anxious to have an early closing by-law adopted, and applied to all retail merchants, including shoe retailers, grocers, fruit dealers, dry goods merchants, etc. Merchants who are inclined to close early now are prevented from doing so because fruit dealers who deal in groceries insist upon keeping their stores open till 11 p.m.

Stockholders of the United States Rubber Co. at a special meeting, held at New Brunswick, N.J., authorized the $60,000,000 bond issue. They also voted in favor of the taking over properties of various subsidiary companies, all of whose stock, or a majority of whose stock, is already owned by the United States Rubber Co.

C. F. Rannard, president of the Rannard Shoe Limited, Winnipeg, recently returned from a business trip to Chicago and Minneapolis. He states that during the coming season white shoes will be in greater demand than ever, and that he found prices on all lines of footwear advancing rapidly.

Fire in the premises of the Great West Saddlery Co., Winnipeg, recently caused damage to stock and building estimated at $40,000.

L. Farewell, of Winnipeg, who represents the Hart Boot and Shoe Co., spent a few days with his father, J. J. Farewell, Toronto, during the past week and left for Fredericton, N.B., and other points East, before returning home.

R. L. Savage, of Toronto, who represents Clark Bros., Limited, in Ontario and Quebec, has been spending some time at the factory in St. Stephen, N.B.

The managers of the various branches of Ames-Holden-McCready, who recently held a conference in Montreal, spent a few days in New York and Boston after the gathering. They were looking into the trend of styles for next season, the state of the leather market, stock keeping methods, and many other subjects of interest.

A. E. Marois and son Alfred, of Quebec, Joseph Daoust, P. A. Doig, Narcisse Gagnon, Emile Gagnon, W. F. Martin, James Muir, Jr., N. Macfarlane, Ralph Locke, J. Goyer, Montreal; George Robinson, John Lennox, George Finlay, Hamilton, and many other representatives from outside points were among those in Toronto on February 17th to attend the funeral of the late D. D. Hawthorne, which took place to Forest Lawn Mausoleum. There was a large number of members in the Toronto wholesale and retail ranks present to pay their last respects to one who enjoyed a very wide measure of esteem and respect in a connection of over thirty years with the trade. The floral offerings were beautiful and included tokens from wholesalers, retailers and many other bodies as well as from numerous personal friends.

W. H. Denham, of Boston, leather buyer for the Regal Shoe Co., spent a few days in Toronto last week on business.

J. Shifton, manager of the Wm. Galloway Co., of Canada, Limited, Winnipeg, is on a business trip to Toronto, Montreal and other eastern shoe centres.

Messrs. Locke and McGregor, of the staff of the T. Eaton Co., Winnipeg, have been visiting the shoe factories of Toronto, Montreal and Quebec on a buying trip.

The shoe store of Solomon Wise, 1962 Papineau avenue, Montreal, was visited by fire recently and damage done to the stock to the extent of one thousand dollars before the flames were extinguished.

It is expected that over a hundred and fifty shoe retailers and clerks will be in attendance at the second annual dinner of the Toronto Shoe Retailers' Association which will be held at the Board of Trade headquarters on Thursday night, March 8th. An interesting and instructive programme has been prepared and everything betokens a big night. There will be two splendid addresses, one on "Salesmanship" and the other on "Organization." An entertaining programme of sketches and music will add to the enjoyment. Other important matters will make the evening one long to be remembered.

The W. B. Hamilton Shoe Co., of Toronto, have issued a neat spring booklet which sets forth very attractively a fine and comprehensive range of white canvas shoes in which the firm are specialists. They advise retailers, with leather so dear, to push the sale of canvas shoes and predict the biggest white season ever experienced.

H. W. Parsons, of the Nugget Polish Co., Toronto, has returned from an extended business visit to Winnipeg Calgary and Edmonton and leaves next week on a trip to the Maritime Provinces, going as far as Halifax. Word received from T. W. Hart, a former member of the Nugget Co's staff, who enlisted with the 95th Battalion for overseas service, states that he has been in a number of engagements at the front but so far has escaped wounds from shot and shell and is feeling fine.

E. S. Willmarth, representing the John Ebberts Shoe Co., of Buffalo, was in Toronto, last week with a fine range of fall samples, among which were several attractive all-cloth shoes and artistic combinations of kid and fabrics. The leading colors shown were white, grey and brown, while suedes formed a striking feature of the snappy line of women's welts.

RUBBER MEN HOLD CONFERENCE

A conference of the representatives of the Canadian Consolidated Rubber Co., Ontario Division, was held at the Queen's Hotel, Toronto, on Feb. 27th, at which twenty-four branch managers and salesmen were in attendance. J. A. Connor, of Toronto, manager of the Ontario Division, presided and selling plans, service and efficiency for the coming season were thoroughly considered. J. M. S. Carroll Montreal, the new general sales manager of the company, P. Y. Smiley, of Kitchener, general factory manager and A. Dwyer of Montreal, who is in charge of factory production, were present. In the evening the visitors were entertained to dinner by Mr. Connor and afterwards formed a theatre party at Shea's. R. E. Jamieson, director in charge of sales spent a few days in Toronto during the past week.

It is expected that the former plant of the Elmira Felt Co., at Elmira, which has been taken over by the Canadian Consolidated Rubber Co. and will specialize in Fleet-Foot outing shoes, will begin operations next week. Complete new equipment has been installed and the daily production will be about fifteen hundred pairs of tennis and sporting footwear.

H. D. Lewis, who represents the Murray Shoe Co., of St. Thomas, the Lady Belle Shoe Co., and Chas. A. Ahrens, Limited, of Kitchener, Ont., in the Maritime Provinces, has removed from Pictou to Yarmouth South, N.S.

The Club Shoe Store, of Halifax, of which M. A. Le Blanc is proprietor, was completely destroyed by fire on February 14th. The loss, which is heavy, is nearly covered by insurance.

The Amherst Boot and Shoe Co., Limited, of Amherst, N.S., lost one of their oldest travelers recently, when Mr. Sears passed away. He was a native of Antigonish, and the funeral took place on February 20th.

Ben Gill, of Pictou, N.S., opened a retail shoe store in that town, and owing to the strides that his business has made during the last few months, he will soon be obliged to open out on a larger scale. Mr. Gill has had a lot of experience in the retail game, and his popularity and courtesy, while in the employ of others, are two valuable assets in his success, now that he has launched out for himself.

E. David & Sons, New Glasgow, N.S., are moving into larger and brighter quarters.

Teefy Mulcahy, of Orillia, was in Toronto last week calling upon the trade.

E. W. Carrecabe, manager of the Canadian Columbia Counter Co., Montreal, was in Toronto, Hamilton and Kitchener last week calling on the trade.

Superintendent W. H. Cunningham, of the Oakville Leather Company's tannery died this week as a result of being crushed between the elevator and one of the floors of the tannery. His son, Wm. Cunningham, who is also an employee of the company, found his father in an unconscious condition. A physician was called to attend the injured man, but he died shortly after being hurt. Mr. Cunningham was seventy years of age and resided in Oakville, where he also conducted a shoe store. He is survived by his wife, one daughter, Ethel, and one son, William.

The Miner catalog for 1917 is a handsome and attractive publication, admirably illustrated and well printed. It contains a fund of valuable information on Miner rubbers and Greyhound outing shoes, as well as illustrations of the style of leather boot which each one of the company's lasts will fit. They believe this is an improvement over the old method of showing the old last through illustrations of the rubbers only, as it enables the retailer to choose the required lasts with more certainty. The company announce that the Miner productions for 1917 will be 50 per cent. greater than heretofore, as additions to their factory plant and equipment make this possible.

The Canadian Columbia Counter Co., Montreal, have installed a new box toe machine and are starting to make felt and leather box toes.

W. J. Wayman, who was recently appointed manager of the Calgary branch of Gutta Percha & Rubber, Limited, has been identified with the house in that city since 1905. He has occupied positions in all departments of the branch, in the warehouse, general office and sales department, and for the last two or three years has been assistant to W. G. Fowler, who was recently made manager of the company's branch in Vancouver.

Ant. Joannette & Co. have opened offices at Room 32, 55 St. Francois Xavier street, Montreal. They are Canadian representatives for Lathrop & Co., selling the Zapon Leather Cloth Co.'s lines and shoe laces, as well as the products of the Peters Manufacturing Co., makers of white reignskin shoe cloth, cravenette and backing cloths. The firm have already developed a good business for their lines and the prospects are bright. Mr. Joannette is well known to the shoe and leather trade, having started several years ago with Fisk, Limited, and gained a thorough acquaintance with all branches of the business in the service of several other houses. It is understood that last year he was organizing a large company to build a tannery at Cote des Neiges, but the conditions of the raw material market were so unsettled that he has had to postpone the enterprise. His partner, Charles Pesant, is an energetic young man with experience in the manufacturing and business line, who will look after the inside work.

The Independent Button Fastener Machine Co., who have offices in Toronto at 5 Wellington street east, report that business is very promising with them. The Independent machine is one that is giving splendid satisfaction and meets every requirement of the retailer, setting all sizes of buttons quickly and neatly. It is sold outright to the trade with 100 coils of wire, and the machine is kept in good condition without any cost, from the service station in Toronto. Any machine is returned the same day as received, which means a great deal in the way of convenience and service to the shoe dealer who is fortunate to enough own one.

William Campbell, Western Canada representative of the Slater Shoe Co., Montreal, spent a few days in Hamilton recently on a visit.

Lieut. John McLaren, son of J. A. McLaren, wholesale shoes, Toronto, who is attached to "A" Company, 58th Battalion, C.E.F., and saw several months' service at the front before being invalided back to London, Eng., where he spent several weeks in a hospital, has rejoined his company at the front. On February 18th, Lieut. McLaren was married in London to Miss Rita Harvey, daughter of Mrs. W. E. J. Dixon, 28 Rowanwood avenue, Toronto.

"Please Lady, have you got a pair of rubbers or overshoes about you anywhere? I want to save these boots and do my bit to help win the war."

A well-dressed female customer in the shoe section of one of Toronto's department stores quietly walked away with a twelve-dollar pair of colored kid shoes the other day forgetting to pay for the footwear. She induced the attendant to fit both shoes to her feet and then sending the saleslady to another part of the store on a message, quickly made her way to the elevator and was soon lost in the crowd downstairs. When the saleslady returned she found the old pair that had been removed lying serenely on the floor and the patron had flown.

"I maintain that steel shanks should be used in all shoes that are for street wear," writes a Northern Ontario dealer. "They should be longer and project more over the heel seat. Fibre shanks are not strong enough and long enough when it comes to carrying the weight resting on the arch by a woman customer who weighs from a hundred and fifty pounds up. The result of using inferior shanks is that the shoe loses its rigidity and 'doubles up.' I know for I have repaired scores of them in my repair department. The shoes that I have had the most trouble with are those which have been selling in the past from three dollars up. Steel shanks, I contend, should be used and run back half an inch farther than they do."

Early Buying

There is more truth than poetry in that homely old adage "The early bird catches the worm." That is why we encourage shoe merchants to place orders NOW for their rubber needs next Fall and Winter. Those who do will be sure to have their wants supplied. They will know exactly what their rubber footwear is going to cost.

To avoid disappointment in deliveries when the season is in full swing, arrange to have orders shipped in advance of requirements.

OUTLOOK IN SHOES AND LEATHER

WITHIN the next two or three weeks, we will know more as to what the current season holds for those who make and sell footwear. So far there has been very little fine weather, so that retailers have not had a chance to try out their new season's stocks. Should the next three weeks turn out propitious there ought to be a brisk trade in shoes as the people seem to have plenty of money, and are still willing to spend it. Should the demand for shoes be at all active, travelers will experience a start in both sorting and fall placing business that will carry them into May. It seems safe to state that retailers have bought rather carefully, and as soon as the spring rush really starts they will feel the need of replenishing.

This will mean a good demand for goods for immediate shipment so that manufacturers and, particularly jobbers, are likely to have a very busy April. Wholesalers seem to be well provided with stocks, but the chance for them refilling their shelves at anything like present prices is very slim. The result will inevitably be a stiffening of conditions, and a complete cessation of the lull that has existed for some time past in both leather and shoes. Shoe manufacturers have been preparing their fall samples, and some are already out with their new productions. Most of them have followed a conservative policy, and have cut down the number of lines elaborating and remodelling those that remain. There are a number of new features shown by makers of high class lines, but the tendency is decidedly to go slow on novelties. Most of those who have gone out, or are going out, have their arrangements made for leather, and are quoting prices for delivery in the regular way, while some have notified their customers that the prices are subject to change, and are selling on a basis of immediate delivery.

The price question is still "in the air." Leather has been hovering around the prevailing level waiting for any excuse to resume its upward career. It was thought that the British embargo on imports would throw a lot of leather on this and the American market, but it does not seem to have had any appreciable effect. Leather is still going forward under permits, as it is practically a war requisite, and the only purpose evidently has been to bring the importations under more direct control.

Should the United States enter actively into the present world conflict it will mean not only a greater demand for leather, but for all kinds of manufactured products. The present extravagant spending tendencies will be further enhanced by the increased earning capacity of the people who will pay almost any price for what they want.

Looking at the situation from every angle, the chances seem long in the direction of higher prices. The outlook for the speedy ending of the war does not seem as promising as a month ago, although Great Britain has almost disposed of the submarine menace, as she has of the Zeppelins. The nations on both sides seem to be making preparations for a long hard struggle for supremacy which will not likely culminate before autumn.

On the other hand should decisive actions be fought either in France or the North Sea, the end may come sooner than anybody expects. It is quite reasonable to think that failing the submarine, Germany will probably stake her next throw on the navy and a great drive in Western Europe. Until action of this kind develops, in spite of all that may be done in the East there will be no chance for peace.

In the meantime production in war materials and supplies goes on, and the safe policy for buyers of either leather or shoes is to nail down whatever they can secure at present prices. It looks as though inside this next month both products will have considerably advanced in price.

Early Closing—More Business

How the Regulation Has Worked Out Successfully in Other Cities—No Shoe Retailer has Suffered, Customers are Satisfied and Clerks are Brighter and Quicker—Fourteen Hours is Enough to Kill the Ambition and Constitution of Any Salesman

“DO you know that the long hours take all the vim out of me?” remarked a 26-year-old shoe salesman the other morning. “I am often tempted to leave this business because of the length of time that we have to work daily. Here I am in a leading store on Queen street, and I have to labor four nights a week—three nights until ten o’clock, and on Saturday night until 11 and sometimes 12. I do not even get half a day off, the same as many clerks do in the suburbs, and I have to get down at eight. When a shoe clerk toils from eight a.m. to ten p.m., putting in fourteen hours a day, is it little wonder that he is not bright and alert, smart and active? We can hardly drag ourselves home, and no sooner retire, than it is time to get up and begin work again.

“I wish that you would endorse the early closing movement to your utmost. Is there any reason why the stores cannot lock up at seven o’clock? This keeping open for the accommodation of everybody, and making slaves of salespeople on the so-called ground of accommodation and convenience does not result in the proprietors getting any more business than they would if they ceased operating at seven o’clock. It has been shouted that shorter hours mean lessened receipts, but the experience of department stores, Yonge street shoe establishments, and stores on other streets, which have closed early, is that there has not been any diminution in turnover, but on the other hand, an increase is steadily shown.”

Thankful for Any Move

“Yes,” said another clerk in a Bloor street store, “I work very faithfully, three nights a week until ten o’clock, and on Saturdays it is often midnight before I get home. I am thoroughly tired of the whole thing. Why should a shoe clerk be compelled to toil ten, twelve and fourteen hours a day when other trades, which yield far more to their members than we get, labor only eight hours a day? Of course, we get a half holiday in the summer time, but it is only for a couple of months. We have no leisure time at all. If the shoe stores are going to close at eight o’clock, this would be a welcome move. But seven o’clock is far better. If one has to work until eight o’clock, he possibly has to go without his supper, and by the time he gets home and has something to eat, it would be too late for sport or recreation, to visit the theatre or some place of entertainment. The proper hour of closing is, to my mind, 7 or 7.30 every night except Saturday. This gives a fellow a chance to have the evening to himself and to go somewhere, if he so desires. However, eight o’clock is preferable to nine or ten o’clock, and we will welcome any move in the way of lessening the hours of duty, and assure the bosses that we will more than make up, by increased diligence and activity, for their kindness in cutting down the day’s work.”

It is Going With a Swing

Early closing was so thoroughly discussed at the second annual dinner of Toronto Shoe Retailers’ Association that little new can be said in its behalf. The movement is, however, gaining strength and shoe retailers are beginning to see that there is no reason for them being white slaves, in order to oblige an often ungrateful public. There are few people who cannot make purchases before eight o’clock. It is said the working man or working girl has no time during the day to buy their footwear. Well, they can easily call on their way home early in the evening and make the purchase of shoes required. If stores keep open till twelve o’clock there would always be somebody wanting to buy at twelve or five minutes before the midnight hour. It has been the experience of those who have adopted early closing that they have lost nothing by instituting shorter hours. In most of the smaller cities of Ontario, the shoe stores close every night at six o’clock and in the larger places also. What Winnipeg merchants, Ottawa merchants and London merchants think of the early closing movement is well expressed in the following interviews, which contain much timely comment in view of the agitation that is now going on in Toronto in favor of shorter hours.

Rowland Hill, of London, Ont., says: “There is no by-law requiring shoe stores to close at six o’clock every night of the week except Saturday in London. For about the past two years and a half all the shoe stores in the centre of the city have been closing sharp at six o’clock each night, except Saturday. Though practically all other lines of business do the same, this hour for closing was agreed on by the local Shoe Retailers’ Association of which all the shoe dealers are members. Previous to this agreement it was the custom to close anywhere from six fifteen to six forty-five with no definite time.

Has Been Decided Success

“Saturday the hour for closing is ten o’clock sharp and we find these hours very satisfactory. We may say that when these hours for closing were first suggested it was thought by some that it would be a failure on account of the old custom of keeping open till after eleven at the earliest on Saturday nights, but such was not the case as it has proved most successful in every way and we would never consider going back to the old hours.

“Of course we have Wednesday half-holiday for June, July and August as well and we are rather proud of the fact that the London Shoe Retailers have the best working hours of any of the bigger cities in this part of the province. I wish the Toronto retailers every success in their effort to lessen the hours of work."

Works Well in Capital City

A. J. Stephens & Son, of Ottawa, Ont., reply: "Are pleased to advise you that the six o'clock early closing movement is working perfectly in Ottawa. It is governed by Ontario law which requires a petition signed by three-quarters of the firms in each line of business. On this being presented to the local city council, a by-law is drawn up and then all stores, in each line which present petitions, are compelled to keep closed from the hour stated in the by-law until the following morning.

"The shoe stores, and all other lines governed by six o'clock closing in Ottawa close at 9 p.m. on Saturdays, and this hour is also governed by the same by-law. So you see all stores, big or small, are compelled to close once the law is put in force, and if they do not do so are brought to court and fined. Practically no complaints have been made since early closing came into force in Ottawa, and we think we are safe in saying that not one merchant wants to see the by-law repealed. In fact many other lines which are not governed by the early closing have fallen into step. Outside the drug stores and restaurants it is impossible to purchase after six p.m. in Ottawa, and nobody is suffering. At the Christmas season the stores are allowed to keep open (from the 20th to 31st) as long as they choose."

Early Closing in Winnipeg

C. F. Rannard, of the Rannard Shoe, Ltd., Winnipeg, writes: "I hereby attach a copy of the early closing by-law which has been in force for several years. This applies to all retail businesses with the exception of drug stores, etc. All other stores close daily at 6 p.m. and at 10 p.m. on Saturdays.

"They are permitted to sell to customers who enter the store before 6 o'clock but they are not permitted to sell to customers who enter after hours. If they do, and the matter is reported, they are summoned before the court and charged, usually for the first offence $1.00 or $2.00 and costs, and heavier fines upon the next offence.

"This early closing movement has been in force for about 16 years and has been of great benefit, as the same amount of business is done, making shoppers do their buying earlier, and allowing each employee to get away, thereby giving them time for recreation and outdoor pursuits, which, to my mind, enables them to come to their work next morning with more vitality and vim than if they had been on duty for several hours the previous evening."

Stray Shots From Solomon

Don't let people walk over you, but don't be "giving the shoulder" to everybody that passes or you may find yourself in the ditch. Pride is all right in its place but the man who is always asking "do you know who I am" stands a chance of being answered some day in a way that will not add lustre to his name. There are people who are more interested in their dignity or their name than they are in what should be behind these. Not every man who smites himself on the breast and proclaims the fact that has paid a hundred cents on the dollar is fit to put on a church board or to be made chairman of the Red Cross Fund. Why shouldn't a man pay his just debts? Why should he pat himself on the back because the police have never caught him in a bagnio or his name has never come out in a crooked deal? These days some people want a latch-key to heaven because they have never been in the police court or fallen into the hands of the assignee.

There is another kind of pride that makes the angels weep and devils chuckle. There are a good many men like the old lady who boasted that she was open to conviction but she would like to see the man who could "convict" her. Men have lost property, home, friends and their immortal souls because they would not "give in." "He never knows when he is beaten," is said of some men. It often means that they have heads like a mule and a tempers like a hyena. There is not much credit to a man when he doesn't know enough to quit. "A man's pride brings him low." There are some men with the toes out of their boots and wearing last year's socks who, if they had less pride and more horse sense, might today be enjoying comfortable homes and the respect of their fellows. Come down out of the tree when you are at the business end of a loaded gun.

Beware of the day when you settle down on the jog trot to the scrap pile. "I have been in business for nearly forty years and never took a trade paper and don't need one now," said a retailer the other day. He is still practically where he began on a little back street, although he has by dint of saving and scraping laid away enough money to pay his funeral expenses. In that forty years what have some of his fellow citizens done, both in business and otherwise? He has barely kept the wolf from the door and his name is unknown to any enterprise for the betterment of his day and generation. "Where there is no vision the people perish." Get the vision. No man will make a success in any calling unless he "sees things." If you are a clerk "get the vision" or you will be selling goods at ten dollars a week when you are sixty and living on your friends at seventy. Get the vision if you are a merchant or you will be working your fingers to the bone and your brain to the skull for some wholesaler to the end of your days. Get the vision if you are to be of any use to God or man.

Some men need a crack on the head or a good kick under the coat-tails to start them thinking. An ordinary jolt does not phase them. No fault can be found with a man for making a mistake, but when he makes it twice he is inviting trouble. There are people who spend their days stumbling over the same obstacles and bucking the same opposition. "He that being often reprov'd hardeneth his neck shall suddenly be destroyed and that without remedy." When you are hit on the head with a brick change your habitat. When the boss gives you a hint that you think too much of your bed or your dinner get your watch regulated. When your friend tells you that you are getting too fond of the scarlet woman or the bottle don't cut his acquaintance or tell him to go to Halifax. These bricks and sticks are our friends if we know how to use them. They may prevent a whole house falling on us some time.

* * * * *

Some of the best things in life come to us through bitter experience. We never forget the lessons that have been learned at the cost of suffering. "The rod and reproof give wisdom." If it were not for the hard knocks we had in our youth some of us would be as weak and senseless as the sons we have spoiled through making the path easy for them through life. The visit we paid in those early days to the woodshed when the wickedness of shirking school was vividly impressed upon our anatomy has helped us to be more particular in attending to other and later responsibilities of life. The stinging rebuke administered by the teacher after some "smart" saying has had a wholesome effect all through life in keeping our tongue from wagging too much. That resounding smack on the cheek that met our forwardness and sent the blood to our cheek on the way home from school has been a lifelong lesson on familiarity that has been productive of a wholesome regard for womanhood. Some people need a good wallop more than a talking to or a crack on the head more than the grace of God.

Leather Trade Jottings

Items of Interest to Leather Producers and Users—What is Being Talked About in Leather Circles at Home and Abroad

AS shoe manufacturers have been busy completing their spring orders during the past month there has been a little more activity in leather, and although there has been no noticeable upward tendency in leather prices generally, there has been a marked hardening of the market and some increases have been asked and obtained on specialties. Stocks seem to be low as tanners have been following the policy of keeping production down to a minimum. The recent peace talk and the consequent unsettling of the market have caused leather producers to go slow, although some seem to have the conviction strongly in their minds that leather is going to be more and more in demand at even higher prices than those that ruled up to the first of the year.

American Conditions

With the cutting off of the relations of the United States with the Central European powers there has practically been precipitated a state of war which is resulting in a quiet activity in leather as well as in other lines. The announcement of the embargo in Great Britain on imports would have had a most disquieting effect were it not for the fact that the probability of the military needs of the country will more than cover any shortage in the shipments across the sea. The reduction of shoe exports will be considerable, but manufacturers seem to think that the increased demand at home will absorb any surplus production. On leathers more sales and better prices have been reported in the past two weeks. The outlook in calf and side leather grows stronger every day. Prices are firm and advancing in sympathy with raw stock. Glazed kid is picking up again and prices are moving ahead. Army shoes are in the air and this is tending to keep sole leather strong in spite of the caution of buyers.

Hide Conditions

The packer market continues weak apparently but prices are well maintained. There is a quiet movement underneath that gives the impression that something is on foot. Reports are made of large sales of December hides at concessions, but little can be learned of them definitely. It is thought that a bona fide offer for large lots would secure concessions. Tanners are holding back for better hides. Cattle receipts show a falling off and this helps to strengthen the market. The whole market in both native and foreign hides is off for the present. It is said that tanners, especially the larger ones, are well stocked ahead and as they are only putting down enough raw stock for a hand to mouth business and are afraid of the future of leather. Hides will be lower before they are higher. There is no doubt that the leather men feel they have gone as far as is safe in hide speculation and are now playing a waiting game. Heavy native packer steers are held at over 30 cents with no buyers, and country buffs quiet at 22½ cents. Dry and salted foreign hides are quiet and in only moderate demand.

Glazed Kid Situation

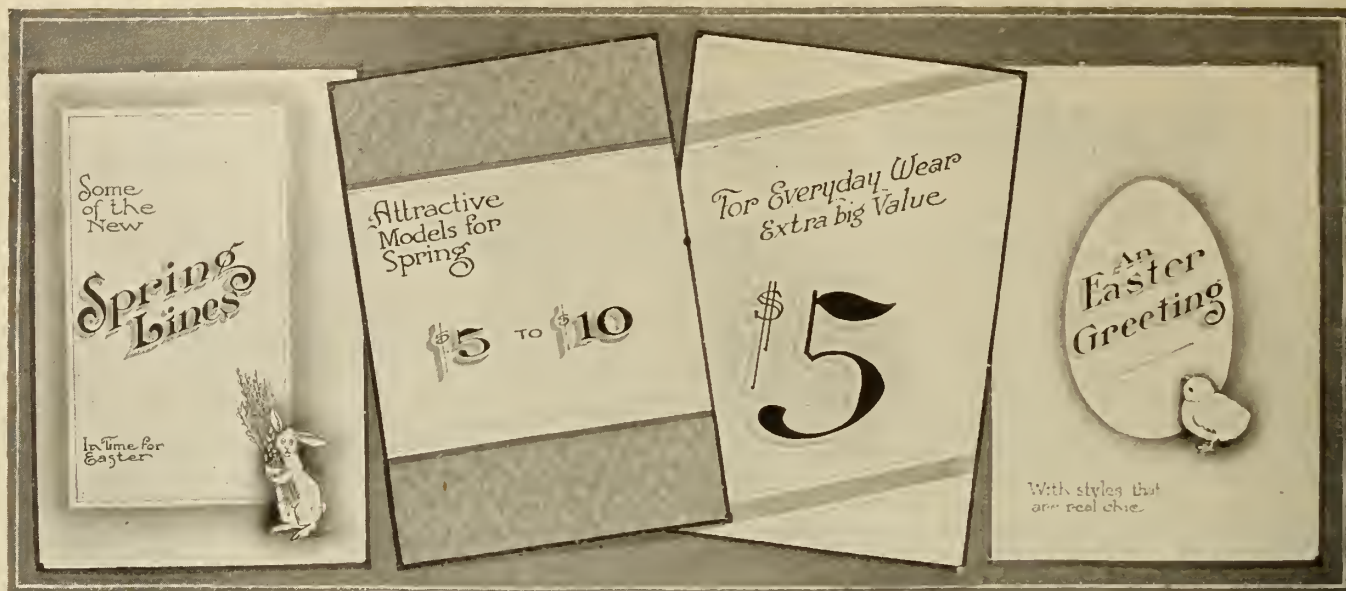

There is a strong demand for the fashionable colors such as gray and ivory, but the situation is easing considerably as to blacks, although as the season proceeds no doubt the movement will strengthen. There has been a reduction in some lines but in desirable selections it is a matter of getting them at any price. The best selections of Patnas and Brazilians are held at 75 to 80 cents, while whites and colors run from 90 cents to $1.00. Cabrettas in the latter class are still selling from 65 to 85 cents. There is a somewhat easier situation as to raw stock, but the decline in prices is fully offset by the increased freight and insurance rates. It is almost impossible to get space in steamers from certain localities. The cutting off of leather exports to European countries is having some effect upon the glazed kid situation, but not much. The continued demand for high-cut shoes is using up the manufactured stock about as fast as it is produced and although there is rather more inclination to seek new customers the "fad" trade is still quite independent.

Patent Coming Back

A noticeable feature in the new samples across the line is the revival of patent leather in both men's and women's shoes. It is now several years since shiny leather enjoyed its great popularity and some felt that it would be a long time before it would regain its lost ground. In spite of its drawbacks as to wear and its alleged effects upon the feet, there is no leather as dressy or as easy to take care of as high-grade patent. It has no superior as a vamp leather and the ease with which it may be kept fresh and attractive looking is what gives it its popularity with women particularly. The lines for fall will have quite a goodly showing of this material and no doubt there will be considerable demand for spring shoes shown in shiny leather.

Leather Substitutes

In spite of the high cost of good leather and the incentive to the production of all kinds of substitutes, there does not seem to be any great danger of any other material encroaching on leather as a footwear covering. Fabrics will have their vogue as long as the love of variety and change prevails in shoes as well as in millinery, but frills and fads are short-lived in footwear and we get back to the inevitable leather. It is the same with sole leather. There will be a vogue in this as in upper leather, but it will take years of hard argument to convince people that there is anything that will quite take the place of well-made sole leather for the human understanding.

EASTER CARDS AND TRADE PULLING PLANS

APRIL is the month that brings us right into spring weather and Easter trade so far as the selling of shoes is concerned. Everything is now ready for present showing. February and March are the months for advanced showing, and January and February are the months that should have finished your clearing sales, special sales, etc., in order that you may be in a position to push regular lines during the month of April.

We are all familiar with the old couplet—

April showers
Bring May flowers;

and as it is absolutely impossible for anyone to determine one month ahead what the weather may be, the retail shoe business, like various other businesses, is largely a gamble from a weather point of view. We merely mention this because, should April be a wet month, we think that a good window display of light rubbers would not only be appropriate but would sell goods. It is just possible that many retail merchants pass up the rubber trade as being too insignificant to display in windows. With the fine styles and shapes and models in which rubbers may now be had, a really attractive window trim can be arranged.

By way of suggestion, one idea would be to take a shallow glass dish, fill it with water and place it in the centre of your window. Put a woman's rubber into this and weight it so it will stay down in the bottom. This will prove that you have such confidence in your rubber footwear that you can submit it to a severe test of this kind. On a neat card you may put such wording as "These rubbers will protect you from dampness and cold," or "Your health is an important feature—protect your feet from dampness and insure good health."

It may be well in connection with this window and your other window displays during the month to introduce flowers. Various bulbs in bloom are obtainable at this time and will add very materially to the attractiveness of your window.

You should also take advantage of Easter, which comes on April 8th, as it affords splendid advertising opportunities. The time is now past when a woman considered that an Easter bonnet or an Easter suit was all she required for the Easter occasion. Shoes are recognized as much a part of a complete costume as a hat. Therefore, your very finest lines should be featured strongly for the Easter trade.

For your store and window displays various emblems of Easter afford abundant latitude for you to work on. Chicks, eggs, rabbits, etc., may be obtained in various forms and sizes, and utilized in all the decorations which you introduce. We do not advocate the use of the cross for display or decorative purposes as its associations are too sacred to be introduced into commercialism.

Easter colors are lilac, purple, violet and white. These may be used in ribbons, crepe tissue paper, etc. Flowers which should be used, whether artificial or natural, are forget-me-nots, lilacs, lily-of-the-valley, Easter lilies, violets and sweet peas that have the colors mentioned above.

A little thought and care will enable you to arrange one of the most effective window displays of the season at this Easter time.

The four window cards which are shown with this article are quite easy to execute. The rabbit card is made by simply cutting out a square piece of card smaller than the other card, laying it on top and with an air-brush spray the background on as shown in the illustration. If you do not have an air-brush you can get the same effect with an ordinary tooth-brush dipped in a little color and rubbed over a piece of window screen wire so as to cause a spray. If you are not able to draw the rabbit you will possibly be able to get one from a children's toy book and paste it on the card. The color that you may use for this will be violet in its various shades.

The Easter greeting card with the chick and egg will be treated the same way as the one just mentioned. The only difference is the shape of the egg instead of the square card of the rabbit design.

The five and ten dollar card is exceedingly easy to make. Across the top and bottom paste pieces of fine pattern wall-paper. Letter in dark blue and do the shading in pale blue. The line drawn across where the paper is pasted on should be the same shade as the shading of the letters.

The five dollar card is the easiest one of all to make. Two bands are painted across the top and bottom on a bevel as shown in the design. This should be of violet or purple. The lettering may be the same color, only a little darker, and the figure five may be in black, shaded with subdued purple. The size of these cards should be about 14 by 22 inches.

You will understand that these are merely suggestions upon which you may elaborate or make simpler according to your own requirements.

RETAIL SHOEMEN ARE STIRRED BY HIGH IDEALS

Inspiring Addresses Delivered at Second Annual Dinner of Toronto Shoe Retailers' Association—Co-operation, Fraternity and Unity the Spirit of the Occasion—Early Closing Movement Given Decided Impetus—What Organization Has Done and Can Do

ONE hundred and fifty shoe merchants and salesmen gathered around the festive board at the cafe of the Toronto Board of Trade, on the twentieth floor of the Royal Bank Building on Thursday, March 8th, at the second annual dinner of the Toronto Shoe Retailers' Association.

The function, which was confined to members of the retail trade and their staffs, was a pronounced success from every standpoint, educational, social and gastric. Everyone was in the best of spirits and there was a swing and zip about the proceedings which made the time pass all too quickly. The dinner was all that the most epicurean footwear dispenser could desire and the programme of speeches and entertainment features were beyond criticism. The memory of the gathering will not soon fade while all the diners heard much that was elevating, stimulating and instructive.

The early closing movement received considerable impetus and was heartily endorsed while the strong points and forceful suggestions brought out by A. L. Boyd on "Salesmanship" made everyone realize the best that was in him. Every hearer was animated with a firm desire to become more efficient and progressive than ever in his life calling.

The Toronto Shoe Retailers' Association, as a result of the admirably managed dinner, cannot fail to enlist many recruits and to inspire old members to continue the good work for the welfare, influence and prosperity of the trade, collectively and individually. Many excellent ideas were brought out along the lines of what the Association could accomplish President H. C. Blachford presided and under his capable direction there is little left to tell except to record what was said and done.

What the Association Stands for

The toast of "The King" was loyally honored and then came the address of the chairman. In opening the proceedings, Mr. Blachford said when he presided at the first annual banquet, which the organization held a year ago, he thought that his duties as chairman and speechmaker were finished. "But here I am again," he added, "and I consider it a high honor to preside over the most representative gathering of shoemen ever held in Toronto. We are all either retailers or retail salesmen, and the outside members of the trade do not outnumber us as they did a year ago. when all branches were gathered around the festive board. The assembly here to-night is representative of all districts in the city."

PRESIDENT BLACHFORD'S ANNUAL ADDRESS—"GENTLEMEN . . ."

Proceeding he added that his conception of the Association was that it should be co-operative in character. Without this little could be accomplished, and the members could not work profitably unless they labored together. The three particular outstanding features should be co-operation, unity and fraternity. As an Association they must be able to co-operate not only with the retail trade but with the trade in general, including manufacturers, jobbers and travelers. Unity is strength, and the only way to have it was to get together and learn the other man's views and the only medium by which this could be done, was through the Association. To have unity and to co-operate, they must have fraternity, knock off the rough corners, and prove themselves to be friendly and broad-minded as they were all engaged in the same line of business.

Mr. Blachford referred to the time when his firm had opened their new store up Yonge street, and also to the occasion on which F. A. Guinivan, of the Walk-Over Boot for the retailer and what the retailer could do for the Association in the matter of co-operation, unity and fraternity, laboring toward higher ideals, lessening trade abuses, better working conditions, and greater achievement and service.

The tables were prettily decorated with flowers and the spacious room was filled with mystic melody as the assembled body participated first in the more substantial things and subsequently in the "feast of reason and flow of soul."

Shop, had started. He told how they had exchanged cordial greetings and both were doing business side by side in the spirit of "live and let live." (Applause.)

"There are about 150 shoe retailers in Toronto and over 120 belonged to the organization the first year. It has been the experience of myself and others in association work that the second year is the hardest to survive. In the first year there is always an abundance of enthusiasm and everything looks rosy; in the second year there is generally a falling off in interest and things are rather dark, and not until the third year do we have clear daylight. We are now passing through the second year of our history, and I ask you all to become live and earnest members of our organization. It may be asked of us, what have we done? What has the Association accomplished? Let me tell you that it has done many things."

The speaker then went on to narrate the proceedings in connection with stopping the rubber footwear advertising which had appeared in the daily papers some time ago, on the ground that this publicity, while well-intentioned, was misleading. It had the effect of making the public feel that the shoe retailer was "doing them" in the matter of rubber footwear. This was not the real purpose of the advertising, which was creating an inference that it should not have done. Through the aid of the Ad Club, of which body several shoe retailers are members, the announcements in the press had been stopped. These would re-appear in the near future, and be more in accordance with the present state of affairs in the rubber arena, and give some well-directed publicity to this end of the business, without conveying erroneous impressions as had been the case in the first newspaper campaign.

"I ask you," said Mr. Blachford, "if the shoe retailers of this Association can go to the big daily papers and cause these powerful institutions to cease publishing certain unfair advertising, and these publishers have to yield, does it not show that we have some standing and ability to protect your interests. We have done many other things, but I have not time to dwell upon them at this moment. In conclusion, I invite you all to become members of the Association and help further your own interests and those of your fellow retailers."

The Power of Salesmanship

"Salesmanship" was the subject ably treated by A. L. Boyd, of the Sheldon School of Business Science. His address was logical, cogent and instructive, and left the conviction in the minds of his hearers that he knew his theme thoroughly. Mr. Boyd was at all times master of himself and his subject. He considered it a great honor to speak to a body of men so intelligent as the members of the Association really were. He believed they were men of worth and work and in talking to them on "salesmanship," he might say at the outset that he knew very little of the boot and shoe business. It was not on this that he was to speak, but on "salesmanship" which was the power to persuade people to purchase your products at a profit, rendering the buyer satisfaction.

"Never lose sight of the last clause," added Mr. Boyd. "Rendering the buyers satisfaction creates confidence in you and your establishment. Confidence is the basis of all trade and without confidence and giving satisfaction you cannot build up a business. I believe in all forms of advertising—newspapers, billboards, mail literature, etc.—but let me tell you that the best advertisement that any merchant can have is a wagging tongue of a satisfied customer, especially if that customer is a woman. Salesmanship is the power to persuade people. It is a personal power with you. You are all salesmen. Any man who makes a living as a result of honest effort is a salesman, and the kind of living he makes depends on his personal power to persuade people to deal with him, and in the absence of that power he cannot make a living. We are all salesmen and possess power. How can we best increase that power?"

"If you are going to be a successful persuader of people you gentlemen must know the boot and shoe business, and other things being equal, the more you know about that business the greater power you will have to persuade people, to their satisfaction and to your profit.

"Now, I am not going into the matter of overhead expenses or the nature of the sale, but the one point remains—how can you increase your power to persuade? In order to do so there is one thing you must know and that is the shoe business. Other things being equal, the better the salesman the less he will say. If you know your business you will not have to talk much about it. I do not like a silent salesman, a man who does not know how and when to talk about the goods he sells, and on the other hand I detest a fellow who talks too much and does not know when to stop.

"Some say, why gain a knowledge? I do not know whether I will stay in the shoe line or not. Study yourself and your business or you may wake up some morning to find you are a round peg in a square hole. There are too many men between the ages of 35 and 40 and 45 and 50 who are changing their occupation. This is the age of specialization. A man must be a genuine specialist to serve the public as it ought to be served. If you are not making money as a clerk, get busy and find out the cause and you will probably discover you are not rendering your firm genuine service. Do you retailers ever stop to consider whether you are rendering the public genuine service. Know your own business and be a specialist in regard to your knowledge of boots and shoes. You may know much about the footwear game and yet be a failure. There are several successful shoemen before me who have made money through their own effort, and not because their average knowledge of the boot and shoe business is greater.

"Ask any man why he has been successful and generally you do not receive a very illuminating reply. Take a man who has made money in business, who has been successful and you will find one who, consciously or unconsciously, has attended to three things entirely and apart from the boot and shoe business. What are these three things?. Attend to them and you will increase your power to build up your trade and influence the buying public to come to you.

"The first is a knowledge of how the human mind works. A sale is a mental thing and first takes place, not in the pocket book, but in the mind. The exchange of money and goods is the result of the sale and not the sale itself. Salesmanship is in reality causing another to feel and think as you feel and think. What you must do is to cause the mind of another to act favorably to you. Many a good salesman, when appointed salesman, has fallen down, as when required to tell others how to do things, he could not do so. Although giving attention to it himself and developing considerable skill in the performance of selling, he could not pass his knowledge along.

Study Carefully Human Nature

"Other things being equal, the better judge of human nature you are, the better salesman you will make. The second thing is to learn how to judge human nature at sight. Study the outstanding characteristics of other people. This is just as capable of demonstration as the multiplication table, and as exact a science as chemistry or zoology. The third and last thing is to study yourself. Learn your weak points and your strong ones. Get an introduction to yourself, and proceed to correct your weaknesses and develop your faculties. Know yourself, and when I say know yourself, I have reference to knowing the qualities of your life which make up your personality.

"One side of your personality is your body enabling you to have the necessary endurance, so that you feel as well at six o'clock as you did on going to work in the morning. Another side of your nature is ability. The mental possession—the power to think quickly and accurately and to be good at remembering things may be termed ability. Another side of your nature is being honest, upright, just, kind and cheerful, and if you have these qualities you are not likely to neglect the religious and social side of your life. This side may be termed reliability and it creates confidence on which the sale takes place. You possess the power of personal control, to come to quick decisions, to be a man of despatch and initiative. This side we will call action. We have now the four sides—ability, reliability, endurance and action, or the intellectual, emotional, physical and volitional.

"Personality is the biggest factor in persuading people. Ability, Reliability Endurance and Action—by taking the first letters of each you have area, and the size of a man is his area. He may have all the qualities of ability, reliability, endurance and action, either short or long. What determines the value of a man outside of the actual results in dollars and cents which he produces? It is his area.

The Square of Your Shortest Side

"These four sides form a square, and one's value is equal only to the square of his shortest side. Develop the short side and the square grows, and your value in dollars and cents equals the size of your square. With the great majority the tendency is to lengthen the long side and leave the short side short, and in the words of Robert Burns: 'Oh wad some power the giftie gie us, to see oursels as ithers see us.' If certain retailers could only see themselves as their clerks see them, and if some clerks could only see themselves as their employer sees them, what a difference it would make in all of us. Do not neglect the short side. Two or three times a week I attend the physical culture classes at the Y.M.C.A. and the strange part of it is that those who go there could stay away, as they are such healthy and well developed men. Those who need the exercises the most don't go. Every man should know in a definite way which is the shortest side of him and give that side attention.

"Your real, true value in every sense is represented by the square of your shortest side of your nature. Make it the business of your life to develop the faculties lying along your short side and thus increase your personality. If you increase your power to persuade people you make more money. While life is not made up of dollars, still it takes the dollars to make life large, and the more you increase your power the more valuable you become. Know your own business through and through, know how the human mind works, learn to know human nature, and learn to know yourself, and how to develop those faculties which go to make up your personality," concluded Mr. Boyd who, during the latter part of his address, used a blackboard to bring clearly before his hearers the square of Ability, Reliability, Endurance and Action.

During an intermission in the proceedings, J. C. Budreo spoke briefly on the interesting social occasion which had brought together the largest assembly of retail shoemen ever gathered in Toronto. He referred to the fact that there was an agitation going on among the retail clerks and the Retail Merchants' Association in favor of early closing. Their proposal was that all stores should be closed at six o'clock every night and at one o'clock on Saturday afternoon. He thought this was rather too radical a move for the retail shoemen to endorse, but there was no doubt that their hours were far too long. Keeping open to a late hour every night unfitted both proprietors and clerks from being at their best the following day. It deprived them of social evenings and many happy hours with their families or in their homes. Mr. Budreo spoke of the many benefits of a shorter day and announced that he was heartily in favor of some concerted movement to lessen the time for business each day and to elevate and uplift conditions generally in the trade. He thought that the Association as a body might very well take up the matter and come to some better arrangement than prevailed at present.

More Leisure Means More Action

George St. Leger, sr., remarked that there was nothing like leather, for he had been in Toronto for forty-five years and in the retail shoe game for forty-three years. While he might not have all the qualities of a well-rounded man, as enumerated by Mr. Boyd, he was certain that he possessed one of them and that was endurance. (Laughter.) "He that endureth to the end gets the reward," and to have endurance there must be action and if a clerk had action he would not be a clerk all his days, but would in time be working for himself. They had been called an intelligent body of men by one of the speakers. By merely looking at the assembly, Mr. St. Leger said that he could not tell whether or not all were intellectual. Shakespeare declared "Speak that I may see you," and he hoped that some would be heard along the line of early closing.

"I thoroughly believe in the necessity of shortening the hours," added Mr. St. Leger, "although I am now over seventy-four years of age, a living proof that long hours are healthy. (Laughter.) My memory is good for I can repeat fourteen pages of a book which takes me twenty-three minutes and I can do it correctly too. You see that I have kept my stomach right for I was raised on porridge and potatoes, although the latter is a luxury today. A retailer would be more effective and so would his clerks if they took more exercise, had their evenings to themselves and went to see a good play now and then. Shorter hours would mean more action. You would be able to lift your feet higher, cover more ground quickly and thus do more work. Why, when I first started in business we kept open until ten, eleven, twelve and sometimes thirteen o'clock. But that day has passed. My son started closing first at ten o'clock every night and now all our stores shut up at nine every night, with the exception of Saturdays and we are doing more business than ever. I think that you retail shoemen can go further than that and I would suggest that the closing hour be eight o'clock every night and ten o'clock on Saturdays and later, if the movement is a success, as I am confident it will be, seven o'clock might be made the time for turning the key in the door. In all my years in the shoe trade I have never seen a banquet equal to this and I congratulate you on its splendid success."

What a Small Retailer Thinks

George Blake said that in the Old Country he was secretary-treasurer of an association for early closing, and that too, in a day when prejudice was much stronger and ignorance greater on this subject than it was today. The movement was then in its infancy but it was growing rapidly. Early closing was bound to come as all over the world progress and advancement marked every line of industry, and surely the long hours in the retail trade were not going to be the weak link in the chain of enlightenment which was pulling humanity up to higher levels. "It all lies with us," he continued, "whether or not we keep march with the spirit of the times and this forward movement is made a success. I represent the small retailer who lives on his premises and does business with the assistance of his family. We probably represent seventy-five per cent. of the trade in Toronto, and there may be a feeling on the part of some here that if we keep open it does not hurt anybody but ourselves. But we must remember that we cannot do anything in this world alone, without affecting the social status and uplift of our fellows. We are all dependent one upon another and for our good and welfare I would appeal to every shoe merchant, big and little, to fall into line and close earlier. The increased leisure and opportunities for social life and self-improvement which we will enjoy will more than repay any temporary loss that may be sustained in daily receipts."

This closed the discussion on this point and later in the evening President Blachford, referring to the shorter hour movement, asked all those who were in favor of a modified measure along this line to stand. All the diners arose. W. T. Fegan said that he thought this measure should be taken up by the Association as a body and no snap verdict secured. Mr. Blachford assured him that the vote was merely a referendum on the question and early closing would be considered at a general meeting of the Association with a view to taking concerted action along the lines proposed. This satisfied everyone and the announcement was received with applause.

The Importance of Organization

Charles E. Howarth, for many years with A. R. Clarke & Co., and now with Imperial Life Assurance Co., who was to speak on "Organization," was warmly greeted. He expressed his great pleasure at being permitted to attend a gathering of the nature that he saw before him. It was the first time that he had ever spoken to an assembly of shoemen, although he had been present at many functions of a similar nature. He congratulated the Association on its marked evidences of progress and spoke briefly on the benefits of co-operation and unity. Organization was an arrangement of forces by which the best results may be obtained. The average retailer wanted to be identified with an organization engaged in constructive work of ideas, ideals and policies. He wanted associated help and influence and required and was willing to exchange confidences. Each one needed to meet his fellows and listen to every problem and its solution and all felt the necessity of a hand upon the shoulder in a friendly way and where could this be done better than in an association such as the shoe merchants of Toronto had formed. To be a complete success a business must be square and deal squarely. There were four departments of any business—the executive, the purchasing, the financial and the selling, and to be successful there must be co-operation and unity among these departments. Mr. Howarth announced that, owing to the late hour he would not take up any more time but, at the request of the President, he would speak further along these lines at the next monthly meeting of the Shoe Retailers' Association on Thursday, March 22nd. He endorsed the early closing movement in which he had always been a believer, as being in the highest and best interests of the retail trade.

"To our Boys in Khaki" was the toast proposed by T. S. Young, who congratulated the retailers on the success of their gathering and wished them every prosperity and increasing usefulness. His one regret was that, not being a shoe merchant, he was not eligible for membership. He spoke of the broadening and uplifting effect of such an

HOW SOME SHOEMEN REPAY LITTLE FAVORS

Examples of Ingratitude that Make One Reflect on the Meanness in Human Nature—Acts of Kindness and Assistance Which are Soon Forgotten—How Certain People Make Use of Others and Having Gained Their End Are Insufferably Independent

DID you ever have a friend in the shoe business play you a mean trick or deal with you in an underhand manner? After such a jolt you wonder if there is anything like gratitude in human nature and if too many persons appreciate you only to the extent to which they can make use of you. Do the average man a favor and he seems to forget it more quickly than he would an insult or injury.

Every traveler knows this, so does every shoe retailer, jobber and manufacturer. Special favors will be extended or certain concessions granted and the recipient is very thankful at the time, but as soon as he rounds the corner, financially, too often he is inclined to forget all that has been done for him. But it takes all kinds to make the world.

A leading Canadian jobber, speaking of persons kicking down the ladder by which they had climbed, said, "Fortunately, we have ceased to worry much about this thing now as we get enough business to not bother over the slights and rebukes which we receive. Some years ago, and this case is only one in many, an eastern retailer failed in business. His credit was gone but the fellow had brains, experience and ability, and, after the crash, was anxious to continue in the game. He got about five hundred dollars together, and came to see what we could do for him. He wanted a stock of two or three thousand dollars to start again. Of course, if he had no money we would not have given him any credit for we would have all the risk and he nothing; when a good man has some capital and is willing to make the venture, we think that he will strive harder to score a success, for he is anxious to protect his own.

How He Threw Them Down

"Well, things went on until the dealer owed us something like ten thousand dollars, but at certain times he would reduce it to six and seven thousand. Then, as his business grew and his credit became better, travelers from other houses, principally in the manufacturing line, began to call on him, but mind, they had let him severely alone when they thought he would never get on. Just to induce him to purchase, they quoted a little lower price on certain lines on which they specialized than we were able to do. The dealer paid these houses up promptly and took advantage of the discounts to keep his credit good. He began buying less and less from us.

"Finally, he ceased to give us any orders and told us that we had been charging him too much. We pointed out to him that, in order to secure the goods a few cents cheaper direct from the makers, he had to buy in case lots, order the merchandise weeks and even months ahead, and that he could not sort up on them the same as he could with us, and, as a consequence, had more odds and ends at the close of each season, which had to be cleared out at a big reduction. This offsets any advantage he might have in buying a few cents less per pair. We emphasized that, in dealing with us for years as he had been, he was able to get six, ten, or fifteen pairs, had the benefit of having them shipped at once, could assort on them at any time desired, took less risk, and could get along with less stock. Surely these concessions were worth something, but he could not or would not see it in that light, even after we had carried him for years. He used us until he was independent of us, and then he had no further concern for our establishment. We took all the chance, sold him the goods at the same rate as we had others, and might have lost thousands of dollars. But this was of no avail as soon as things began coming his way," concluded the jobber.

Took Credit—Paid Others Cash

Now for the retailer's side of his woes. A Hamilton shoe merchant said, "Yes, we have many glaring cases of thanklessness. I will give you just one instance. A customer, whom I shall call Kennedy, had been dealing with me for some time. He was a moulder by trade, and had a wife and family of five children. One day he was severely burned about the arms and breast with molten metal and had to lay off work for some weeks. In the meantime the children were getting out of footwear. The family, who had little or no money laid by, secured credit from me and ran up a bill of sixty-three dollars for shoes. The father finally got well and went to work again.

"We noticed that none of the members had been in for several weeks and wondered what was the reason. One afternoon I called around to the house and questioned the wife. She said that they were not patronizing me any more, that they were going to R——'s for their shoes as they considered he gave them better value. Now this dealer happened to be a particularly good friend of mine, although a competitor in business. I dropped into his shop and asked about the Kennedy family. He told me they had paid cash for all their goods and had never asked for credit. I tried for weeks to get that bill, and even put it in the hand of a collector. From that day to this, not a Kennedy has entered my door, and I have never been able to secure a dollar of the money, although the father is working every day at a fair wage. They had used me as much as they could and this single act, along with some others I might name, drove me into doing a cash business. I determined never to be caught again, and I now have shut down on any credit, for I have been bitten too often. People would come to me for credit, when they had no money, but when they had the cash they would go somewhere else."

Now He is a Friend No Longer

"Yes," declared a traveler, "we all are up against the same thing. A friend of mine, who had no experience in the shoe business, but had accumulated several hundred dollars capital, was anxious to know if I could put him next to a good thing. Now, in my territory, which I had studied closely, I happened to be wise regarding a fine opening for a high-class shoe store. There was not a live dealer in F——, and the best people were sending out of the place to the city for their footwear, evening shoes and dress shoes particularly. I told Brown—that name will answer—for he certainly did me up brown, of the chance, and he was keen to make a start. I went down with him to the town. We secured a fine, well laid out store at a moderate rental, and then we came back to the factory. I picked out the lines that I was sure would sell, and made favorable arrangements with the house for the payment. Then, for his women's and children's goods we went to other firms, for we make only men's.

"It happened to be in June. I was through with my fall selling trip, and took particular pains to see that Brown was rightly launched. I wrote his opening announcements for the papers, dressed his windows, and stayed with him for several days, helping him arrange his stock and installing the best system that I knew, for I had been in the retail line myself in the early nineties. Well, sir, things came the way of Brown much better than he had expected. He engaged a couple of capable clerks, and was on the job every day. He gave good value for the money, and thanked me warmly for seeing him off to such a fine start, promising to never forget what I had done for him. The next season or two he gave me nice orders and then he began to grow lukewarm. I noticed that other lines of men's shoes were on the shelves. Now, I did not expect to "hog" his trade and made no complaint. Each season his order for my stuff grew perceptibly less and today I get the go-by. That's Gratitude with a big G."

LEATHER MANUFACTURER ELECTED PRESIDENT

At the annual meeting of the Kitchener, Ont., branch of the Canadian Patriotic Fund, it was shown that $92,370.30 had been paid into the fund by subscribers since the first campaign in October, 1914. Over $51,000 had been turned over to families of soldiers who have enlisted in Kitchener since the commencement of the war. L. J. Breithaupt, vice-president, in opening the meeting told of the inception of the fund, and the success which attended the first campaign, held for three days in October, 1914, during which $96,000 was subscribed, when the amount aimed at was $75,000. At that time, Mr. Breithaupt pointed out, it was expected that the war would be over in a short while, but Lord Kitchener's prediction that the contest would last over three years is proving a true one. It is now two and one-half years since the commencement of hostilities, and it is hoped that this year will see the end of the struggle. In the election of officers for the ensuing year, Mr. Breithaupt was elected president. He referred to the fact that the executive had lost several of its valuable members since the last meeting and among them was Mr. Geo. Rumpel. He also paid a tribute to the ladies' committee, in connection with their work during the past two years.

LOVELY WOMAN AND HER FANCY SHOES

Here is new ammunition for the breakfast table grouch: the high cost of shoes is largely due to the cost of high shoes, and the high cost of short skirts. It is directly traceable to Lovely Woman. Blaming Eve for all ills is as natural as eating, and this high shoe discovery is a fine thing to remember when the toast is cold, says the Montreal Star.

"The main reason for the present high cost of shoes," said R. E. Dildine, general sales agent of Ames-Holden-McCready, Limited, "is the fact that people are wearing more shoes than they were a few years ago. War or no war, it stood to reason that the price of shoes should go up when more shoes were being worn."

But people are not in the habit of wearing more than one pair of shoes at a time. The deep significance that underlies this cryptic utterance of Mr. Dildine's is explained by him as follows:

"Once upon a time, in the days before short skirts were worn, ladies thought no more about their shoes than men did. They wore their shoes until they wore them out, and so long as a shoe was presentable it was good enough. In those days men's shoes were the equals of women's. They brought the same price."

At this point the tempter enters the Garden of Eden; the short skirt comes in.

"Up went the price," said Mr. Dildine. "Women became extravagant. They began to spend all the money they could on shoes. They even cut down their hat bills to buy shoes. Formerly content to spend six or seven dollars on their feet every five or six months, they began to plunge into all kinds of expense. High shapely shoes, made of the finest leather, pricked out in patterns and colored, began to be demanded. The prices went up, up. The women who were paying six dollars for their shoes three years ago are paying twelve dollars today. And they want them oftener. Shoes go out of fashion before they get down at heel.

"A retailer told me of a lady who came to his store the other day, bought one pair of shoes at $10 and another at $8 and asked the shopman to charge them at $9 each. She explained that her husband would not let her give more than $9 for a pair of shoes."

And this spending jag is to continue, says Mr. Dildine, Ladies shoes may be a little plainer this year than last, and skirts may be a little longer, but high shoes will still be the rage. One feature has been made necessary by the enormous consumption of leather: cloth tops and imitation leather tops are to be popular. But these will be expensive, too. They will be colored and decorated and beauty costs money.

Mr. Dildine declares, however, that apart from the present rage for high shoes there has been a steady increase in the price of shoes for the last ten years, largely because of the constant change in fashions.

All this, of course, provides ammunition for only one side of the breakfast table. Here is some for the coffee-pot side: The shoe fashions are fixed every now and then by men and the pattern makers who design the shoes are men, and the short skirts themselves, which are the direct cause of the high boots, are designed by—and made for—men. So Eve has a come-back.

All this apropos of the fact that Britain has put an embargo on Canadian leather, which, say those who should know, won't affect the price of shoes in Canada this spring or summer by enough to buy a shoelace.

A VETERAN WHO STILL KEEPS STEP

(See Front Cover)

A veteran in the shoe manufacturing ranks is Avila Corbeil, head of the firm of Corbeil, Limited, Montreal, and it has been frequently remarked that very few of the older shoemen are as conversant with recent developments in the trade as he. Although of late years, he has turned over the active management of the business to his son, Emile Corbeil, he is a frequent visitor to the factory where he takes a walk around and keeps closely in touch with present day affairs. Mr. Corbeil is one of the last, if not the last of the old guard, having been in the footwear game during the time of the late James Linton, James McCready, James Whitham, Fogarty Bros. and others.

Next year will mark his golden anniversary in connection with the trade and naturally he is looking forward to the event of celebrating half a century in the art of St. Crispin with considerable interest. It was away back in 1868, after completing his education, that he joined his uncle, the late Paul Pepin, under the style of Corbeil and Pepin. They had a small factory on St. Catherine street east, Montreal, and turned out infants' shoes. The subject of this reference, who is now seventy-six and enjoying splendid health, later branched out for himself in premises on Notre Dame street and in time the space occupied became too small for his rapidly growing requirements. Some eighteen years ago, Mr. Corbeil removed to the present commodious quarters on St. Paul street. He was then making only McKay shoes but has since added new lines and now manufactures a complete range of women's, misses' and children's medium priced McKays, as well as men's, boys' and youths' wels and McKays.

All his life Mr. Corbeil has been interested in public affairs and is a member of the Board of Trade, the Chambre de Commerce, and a governor of the Notre Dame Hospital. At his home in Outremont he likes to have old acquaintances call around for he loves to talk of the old days and to have a game of euchre or five hundred, of which he is very fond.

HONEST COMPLAINANT DOES DISTINCT SERVICE

When Anything is Wrong in Workmanship, Quality or Fit the Customer Who Makes the Defect Known Should be Thanked by the Retailer—Too Many People Let Such Matters Pass and Trade Somewhere Else Without Giving the Merchant a Chance

THE man who has a just complaint, and ventilates it it quietly, in any shop where goods which he has purchased have turned out unsatisfactory, is doing the merchant, the manufacturer and himself, what might well be termed, a public service.

How many people buy a shirt, a collar, a hat, a tie, shoes, rubbers or some other item of apparel, not running into so large an outlay as a suit of clothes, and when they get the article home, find it is not exactly as represented—perhaps defective in workmanship, fit or material or faulty in construction. Comparatively few persons take the time or opportunity to return to the establishment from which the goods were purchased, and make known the short coming in the merchandise.

The average man sums up the matter thus: "Oh, everything in life is more or less of a gamble—you have to take chances on tram cars, or railway trains, in crossing the street and in operating, or dodging automobiles, and it is largely the same in making purchases. If you have seen the goods, examined them, and they suit you, and when you get them home, you find you have not been shrewd enough to detect some flaw, or that there has been misrepresentation, why, you simply say: it is a case of profit and loss, and the odds are against me in this case. I am too good a sport to 'welch' or become 'a kicker'—I will simply pass the matter up, and not buy again from Green. I will go to Brown, instead."

Complainant Not Necessarily Kicker

Of course, there is the proverbial kicker, the crank, the grumbler, the grouch and the eternal fault finder, as well as the person who can never be or is satisfied, and the one who never knows exactly what he or she wants. It is not in reference to this class that these observations are directed. It is to the ordinary, quiet, honest, unassuming individual, who expects to pay full value and get full value, and in some instances, is deceived, not wilfully, of course, by the merchant, by the goods going wrong in some particular. It may be, perhaps, the retailer does not know about the defect, and, if complaint is not made to him, when things go awry, how is he ever to learn that his wares are not up to the standard in quality, material and craftsmanship represented by the manufacturer?

"I knew a man once, who, no matter what happened to anything that he bought, never took the time or the trouble to go back and make a complaint. He said life was largely a game of chance and to be running back on this score and that plea, whether justified or not, consumed a lot of valuable moments, tried one's patience and temper, and often resulted in misunderstanding, and altercations. "The game was not worth the candle." He bought a trunk for $13.75, and in less than a month, it went to pieces. He simply passed up that store and went to another dealer, and even then, he did not mention his unsatisfactory experience with the previous purchase.

Modest Man Was Warmly Thanked

A quiet, modest, married man, who generally accomplishes things in his own unobtrusive way, purchased a couple of silk undershirts at a leading department store recently, and carried them home. After wearing them he discovered on their return from the laundry, that one garment had emerged when dry, full of pin holes, as if a stitch had been dropped here and there in the weave. This garment was taken back to the department manager, who was told of the circumstances. He was genuinely surprised to find that it had gone wrong, and stated that the goods were of English manufacture, and this was the first complaint that had reached his ears. He told the customer that he would keep the garment and show it to the company's traveler, who would be along in a few days. He gave the courteous patron another piece of underwear, thanked him frankly for coming in, and thus everything was adjusted satisfactorily. The traveler, coming along a few days later, had to admit that this garment was not up to the mark, and immediately gave the firm credit to the extent of the invoice price.

"I never went back with anything in my life," said a leading business man this week, "I use my own best judgment when making purchases and if I get 'stung,' why I attribute the fault, not so much to the goods as to my own shortsightedness, and lack of observation," but the man who returns when anything goes wrong with his shoes or his clothes is doing a distinct service in drawing the merchant's attention to the defect."

Left Him Rather Than Tell Trouble

"I thoroughly agree with you," said a shoe dealer, who was listening to the conversation, "I have had at least, half a dozen good customers leave me within the last year and a half. I am not referring to women, whose patronage is often more or less ephemeral, and is frequently drawn from one store to the other by the magnetic influence of bargains or sales, but to men—fellows who have dealt with me more or less regularly for the past three years. I met one of these chaps on the street the other day, and asked him what was wrong that he did not happen to come in and see me. 'Oh,' he said, 'that last pair of shoes I got from you did not come up to the mark—a couple of hooks pulled out and the eyelets wore brassy, and a few days later, the heel came off. I thought if that was the kind of footwear you sold, why I would say nothing about it, and go somewhere else.'"

The merchant quietly asked the patron how he (the dealer) could expect to know whether all the shoes sold were giving satisfaction, if no complaint was made to him when things went wrong. It is assumed, of course, that quality goods always give good service, but now and then, there is a slip, and in the exceptional case, attention should be drawn to the deficiencies, in order that the retailer may bring the matter home to the manufacturer. Most every reasonable minded business man is willing to adjust troubles if the complainant does not grow excited or sarcastic, but quietly and honestly states what is wrong.

Be Truthful and Even Tempered

To return to a store on the assumption that the merchant has tried to "do" you, and that you are going to "get even" with him by giving him a piece of your mind, telling him derisively "where to get off at," and that you will "take his measure publicly," etc.—well—all this generally ends in an unseemly squabble, or an undignified discussion, in which passion plays a more or less prominent part, friendships are undermined, and distrust created.

"Like begets like" in this world, and we generally get in return what we give. If we throw off sarcasm, scorn, vengeance and vituperation, we usually are paid back in kind.

"I was in a shoe store in Western Ontario the other evening," declared another member of the group, "when a young man, immaculately attired, entered. He had purchased a pair of shoes, soled with material which to a large extent has taken the place of leather. There are some ten or more varieties on the market, and this material had been widely used by manufacturers. Mr. Caller went quietly up to the head clerk, and uncovering both shoes, showed where one had cracked across just back of the ball of the foot. The clerk, appreciating that he had a difficult case to deal with, called the proprietor, who came down with eager interest and courteous mien, and on seeing what had happened to the seven dollar pair of shoes, bought only four days before, remarked very pleasantly:

"We are very sorry that they have gone wrong, Would you mind giving us your name and address, please?" This was taken and the information imparted, that on the morrow, if Mr. Caller would leave the boots at his home, a messenger would go for them and take them to the best repair shop—have full oak tanned leather soles put on them, and return the footwear to the owner without one cent of expense.

"That will fix you up all right, I think," added the merchant.

"Mr. Caller had been quiet up to this point, evidently agreeing with the proposition, but some men have the faculty of coming to an abrupt decision, which partakes somewhat of the nature of a climax."

"No, that will not be satisfactory," he replied. "To take these soles off and put on others would, at best, be only a piece-meal proposition. I wear nothing that has been repaired, and I want a new pair of shoes—nothing else will satisfy me."

"The retailer saw that this youth, whose linen was spotlessly clean, and whose clothes betokened acquaintance with the best toggery and sartorial shops, wanted the same quality of neatness and finished appearance in his footwear. As he was a good customer, a new pair of shoes was handed out—the old pair was taken in and sent back to the manufacturer, who will have to stand the loss or make the company supplying the soles do so.

"Now this particular firm is not one who listens quietly to every complaint, and says it is justified, and that the customer is always right and then passes on the loss, whether fancied or real, to the manufacturer to swallow. It seeks to protect the manufacturer in every way. But here was a case where it could not be done conscientiously. Some merchants are very ready to try and get claims of one kind or another, rebates, credit notes, etc., from wholesalers and manufacturers, but others endeavor to satisfy the customer without shoving everything, unjustifiably or weak mindedly, on to the house from whom the goods were bought. They sometimes stand the loss themselves rather than have any altercation with the makers.

"But this is a matter apart altogether from the personal question of how far the average man or woman should neglect making complaint when shoes, etc., go wrong, and say nothing about it. If a boot or a hat, or a shirt or underwear, or anything else, is not exactly as represented, does not fit or has not given a reasonable amount of wear, any reputable merchant will welcome information of this character. Instead of looking upon the whole thing as so much trouble, he will regard it as a barometer of the satisfaction that the goods are giving and the deep interest taken by the customer in the stock and service of his establishment."

WHAT THE TANNER IS UP AGAINST

"All Canadian tanneries will soon be full of very dear hides and when the decline comes, as come it will some day, it will take some scheming to keep from loss," said a leading sole leather tanner the other day. "During the past year prices were very deceiving and you could make what looked like a bank-up contract today, and before it was finished it looked as if you were going to give the goods away. We have been filling contracts at twelve cents per pound less than the market price and presume that every other sole leather manufacturer has been doing similar stunts. This will explain why some of us are not making the fabulous profits that would appear on the surface. No doubt if we could sell only from day to day at current prices, we would be making enormous profits, but no tannery can run its business on these lines and expect to continue. Coal has been a very serious proposition with us and our bill is going to be just double of last year, providing prices go no higher, and then we cannot depend on the supply. Recently we had to close down a few days owing to lack of fuel. The congestion of freight has also caused us considerable worry, while bark has gone skyward. If one buys a hundred cords he has no assurance that he will get it. Probably the seller sends you word that some one has come along and offered him fifty cents more and the seller wants to know what you are going to do about it. The fact that he has sold you the bark does not seem to bother him in the least. It needs a good deal of faith nowadays to go ahead and stock up with forty and fifty cent hides which will take six months to convert into leather, and yet that is what we are all doing. We have faith in our country and faith in our cause and are determined to stick to it until we overcome. We are working to capacity and expect to do so this year if we can get the materials."

STYLE NOT DURABILITY REIGNS

It does seem too bad that so many frills and fancies must be added to footwear. All this fanciness does not increase the wear of the shoe, but instead increases the cost to a great extent. There are many items in shoe manufacturing that are an absolute waste of energy and money. The frills, however, are necessary nowadays for the sake of appearance and to aid in selling the shoes, says "Shoe Topics."

Service does not count so much in a shoe today; appearance is what is wanted and what the public is paying for.

Looks are the big factor in selling. Graceful lines do not necessarily cost any more than ungraceful lines. Comfort in a shoe is no added expense either. The last governs the comfort, and therefore, this causes no added expense.

The added expense for the sake of looks starts from the top of the factory. For instance, everyone knows that a plain edge is stronger than a folded one. A folded one looks better, however, so the additional three-eighths of an inch of leather is used for a fold. Then much perforating is done in the stitching department. A shoe without perforating is stronger, but perforating looks prettier. Top-bands, meaning extra cost in labor and material, do not add to the serviceability of the shoes, even if they do add to their length of wear. In fact, if the expense of stitch separating had been eliminated the shoes could be repaired more satisfactorily.

Again, the material and labor of buffing shoes takes some wear out of them. A shoe not sanded will wear longer as the sanding cuts off the grain of the sole, and the expense of coloring the sole again is added. The shoe is now practically finished, but there are still some unnecessary frills to be added. The soles and heels are wheeled. Often a top-band stamp and a bottom stamp are put on, but how much do these stamps add to the wearing quality? The cartons are also an expense. Years ago when the cheaper shoes were sold without cartons this was saved, but no manufacturer today would be foolhardy enough to try to sell shoes without each pair in a separate carton.

If all these unnecessary items could be omitted it would be enough for the manufacturer's profit. If, however, one of them should neglect these things he would make no profit at all, because he would not sell any shoes. The public get educated to wanting a certain thing, and they are willing to pay for it; they must have it. If, however, the serviceable shoe without the frills and fancies were manufactured and worn more, more comfort would be obtained.

WHO IS NOW CHAMPION FISHERMAN OF CANADA?

Narcisse Gagnon, Holder of the 1916 Leather Medal, Dethroned by Hugh White, Who Captures 450 Pound Porpoise off Coast of Florida—Vigorous Protest Entered on the Ground that Porpoise is Not Genuine Fish—James Robinson Enters the Race

HUGH WHITE, of Toronto, champion fisherman of Canada, is home after spending a month in Florida, where he captured a porpoise weighing 450 pounds, and measuring 7 feet 4 inches in length. As proof of his prowess he has been displaying to his friends a snapshot of this prodigious marine trophy, an illustration of which is presented on this page.

It will be observed that while the whole of this gigantic porpoise appears in the picture, only a portion of Mr. White is seen. The fact is that the sudden success and amazing nature of his capture caused him to partially lose his head.

The scene of this historic episode was at Wilbur-by-the-sea, Florida, and several newspapers there contained the news of Mr. White's marvellous feat. Now, with the photograph which Mr. White brought home, backed by the unimpeachable veracity of the press, and the evidence of thousands of spectators from the various fashionable resorts of the sunny south, who gathered around, there is no doubt that this is a genuine, simon-pure, thoroughly authenticated and duly verified performance on the part of the angling wholesale shoe merchant of Toronto. The magnificent capture was made on February 21, and scores of friends of Mr. White will congratulate him on his remarkable showing and accord him the honor of being the champion fisherman. He rightfully claims the distinction and maintains that he has Narcisse Gagnon, of Montreal, and Fred Marois, of Quebec (who went on the famous St. Lawrence Gulf salmon fishing expedition) beaten to a standstill.

It was generally conceded that the leather medal, donated last year by the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL—now more valuable than ever owing to the scarcity and high price of this commodity—was honestly earned and conscientiously won by Narcisse Gagnon. When it was pinned upon his manly breast last October, before the assembled thousands in Windsor Square, Montreal, a mighty cheer rent the air and it was a memorable day in the annals of Canada's commercial metropolis. His wonderful achievement in the autumn of 1916, while down the St. Lawrence, stood unchallenged and even unassailed until the recent spectacular exploit of Mr. White.

Details of the Stupendous Feat

While strolling along in the morning air enjoying a matutinal cigar, Mr. White's eye, ever on the watch for anything above or below the surface of earth and water, noticed a tremendous upheaval in the ocean. "A cetacean mammal," said he to himself. Nearby was a motor-boat. Calling to a friend, and telling him to manage the engine, Mr. White jumped in the craft and put speedily out from shore for the porpoise. Mr. White was almost upon the monster of the deep before his approach was noticed. With rapid flaps of his sickle-shaped flippers the porpoise started for the open sea, heading straight for Europe. He swam at a break-neck pace, with the Toronto shoeman in hot pursuit. The race was continued a distance of probably fifteen miles and it was a nip and tuck struggle, with Mr. White, however, steadily gaining on his prey. After a desperate spurt the porpoise looked back to see how far he was in advance of his adversary and that gaze was fatal, for he saw who was behind him.

Knowing the international reputation of his pursuer, he gave three wallops of his caudal appendage and slowed down, for he realized that further effort was futile. Coming within close range Mr. White unerringly aimed two or three harpoons at the denizen of the waters. The weapons took effect and the hunted prodigy rolled over dead. A rope was fastened around his tail and the tremendous sized trophy slowly dragged back to shore. Before leaving Wilbur-by-the-sea the enormous mammal was skinned. When the hide is tanned and shipped to Toronto, it is expected there will be some relief in the leather situation, which has been acute for months past.

Strong Protest Comes to Hand

It is regretted for Mr. White's sake that, since his great capture has become known, a protest has been entered by both Mr. Gagnon and Mr. Marois, on the ground that his exhibit is an unfair one and that a porpoise is not a fish at all but a mammal.

Mr. Gagnon writes that he feels perfectly justified in his contention for, as he very clearly and simply says, "the porpoise belongs to the extinct cetacea such as plesiocetus, herpetocetus, cetotherium. The family eurhinodelphidae is typified by the European miocene eurhinodelphis, and also includes the contemporary Patagonian argyrocetus and the nearly allied European cyrtodelphis. An unadulterated, authenticated porpoise is a delphinine cetacean of the genus phocaena, without a distinct beak or rostrum. It is gregarious and piscivorous."

The contention of Mr. Gagnon is a very reasonable one and is further supported by Mr. Marois who, in a letter of March 10th, says: "To put the matter so that anyone can readily understand, it let me inform you that the predominant characteristics of the porpoise are his anterior and sternal ribs, and his cervical vertebrae. In the skull the pterygoid bones are inflated and the symphysis of the mandible is short. The blow-hole is single and crescentic in form and the cetacea are entirely aquatic animals. Though piscatorial in appearance, they are mammalian in structure. The cervical region of the vertebral column is extremely abbreviated and there is a horizontally expanded caudal fin the lateral expansions of which are designated flukes, and often a fatty dorsal membrane indigenous to aquatic denizens, while there is developed and discernible beneath the external epidermis in the subdermal cellular tissue considerable outund obesity."

National Board of Arbitrators

The logic of Mr. Marois and Mr. Gagnon is irresistible. They have put the facts plainly and convincingly, and some is left doubt as to where Mr. White really stands in this great contest. In order to facilitate settlement and that a prompt decision may be reached covering the point in dispute, the question has been referred to a national board of arbitration. Mr. Gagnon has named as his representative "Billy" Martin, of the Kingsbury Footwear Co., Montreal, and Mr. Marois has selected Captain "Jimmy" Scott, of Quebec. Mr. White asked that Edgar Clement, of Quebec, be his man on the board. This name was promptly ruled out by the others on the ground that Mr. Clement had had some previous fishing relations with Mr. White and might be prejudiced in the arbitration. Accordingly the latter has requested "Phil" Pocock, of London, to sit on the tribunal to adjudicate on this perplexing problem. In the event of this judicial commission not being able to agree upon a verdict, after due deliberation, a fourth piscatorial authority will be chosen.

"THE KING OF JOBBERS" AND THE LARGEST SILVER TARPON EVER CAPTURED.

New Contestant for the Distinction

Since the foregoing accurate report was put in type a new phase of the situation has loomed up. More complications have suddenly arisen and it appears to be a case of "confusion worse confounded."

"Jim" Robinson, of James Robinson, Unlimited, Montreal, who, along with his bosom friend, "Jim Young," of Toronto, is hibernating in St. Petersburg, Florida, has incidentally been doing a little fishing. Although not aware of it, he has put on a rival attraction to Hugh White that completely eclipses his "porpoise" escapade. Pictures have been received in Toronto from Mr. Robinson, the "king of shoe jobbers," showing that he is also the king of anglers, on the basis of weight, and on the ground that his capture is a strictly piscatorial prodigy and not a hybrid creation, the same as a porpoise.

Thought They Had Been Torpedoed

It looks at this writing as if Mr. Robinson is now the legitimate holder of the title of "champion fisherman of Canada." It is true Mr. White claimed that honor for a few days, until a protest was entered against his assumption of it, by Messrs. Gagnon and Marois. While this matter is being adjudicated, Mr. Robinson stands forth quite unexpectedly as the man with the best credentials for the distinction of premier angler. He does not pretend to have corralled the huge fish seen in the illustration all alone and gives his associate, Mr. Young, some praise. This fish was 8 feet 7½ inches long and weighed 75 lbs. 13 ounces. Its splendid proportions may be judged when compared with the height of Mr. Robinson, and the latter is no dwarf, either physically or mentally, while he is a giant piscatorially.

It appears that Mr. Young and Mr. Robinson were out in a motor boat with the latter handling the trawling line. All of a sudden there was a jolt, such as their craft might have got from a German U-boat. Mr. Young shouted, "Torpedoed! By gosh." but Mr. Robinson was a little calmer, and with a look of resource and determination, knew the menace was even more pronounced than that from a German submersible. He was in imminent danger of being hauled out into the deep, when it was decided that the launch was not too far from shore to throw out a strong anchor and hold her steady. Then Mr. Robinson, assisted by his faithful cohort, Mr. Young, started pulling on the line.

The Greatest Pull in His Career

In describing his experience, the Montreal jobber states that he never had such a pull in his life as he did to cause this marine isospondylous or colossal silver tarpon to surrender. The specimen captured was, as already stated 8 feet 7½ inches in longitude and 75 pounds 13 ounces in avoirdupois. Mr. Robinson would gladly have sent his numerous friends in Canada generous consignments of tarpon steak, but the transportation congestion and freight embargoes intervened.

However, this does not detract from the stupendous character of his amazing achievement. Who said that "Jim" Robinson was in poor health? His capture demonstrates beyond cavil or peradventure that he is in fine fettle and able to bear lightly and pleasantly his new title of "Champion Fisherman of Canada," which he will no doubt continue to hold unless the National Board of Arbitrators decide that Mr. White's trophy may be classed as a genuine fish, of which there is grave doubt at this present juncture. There the matter rests at the time of going to press, with Mr. Robinson and a real live fish leading and Mr. White and a harpooned porpoise following some distance in the rear.

AGAINST SLAUGHTER OF YOUNG CATTLE

Viewing seriously the danger of the depletion of the country's stock of cattle, caused to a large extent by the slaughter of so many young cattle to be sold as meat, the City Council of St. Catharines, Ont., unanimously adopted a memorial to the Dominion Government to take steps to stop the slaughter for meat of all cattle under the age of 20 months and to prohibit the sale of veal. Every town and city in Ontario will be asked to co-operate in bringing the matter to the attention of the Minister of Agriculture. The council feels that the continued increase in the price of footwear is also related to this question.

The Shoe Repair Man

THESE ARE DAYS OF EXPANSION FOR AVERAGE SHOE REPAIRER

The shoe repairers today are a progressive body of men, in every centre where they have been organized. They do not say so themselves, for there is no need to do so. The outside man does it for them.

"Why," exclaimed one of the visitors at the recent banquet of the Toronto Association, "since this body has been established, I notice an entirely different status of the men in the trade. Apart altogether from increased prices for their work, the shops are kept cleaner, windows are neater, parcels more carefully done up and the long duster put on more neatly. The effect has been little short of wonderful. Make a man in this world, either employer or employee, feel that he is somebody, that existence is worth while, and that he is a factor in the industry, and you inspire him with hope and confidence. He strives to be a better man himself and to serve the public better."

Another feature of the Association is that the members have grown to know one another and appreciate the worth of the fellow across the road or down the street. Very often two men doing business within a block were not acquainted, but how different is all this since they have been meeting in regular session every two weeks. It is gratifying to see what a representative attendance there is at these sessions, which begin at nine o'clock and often continue till after eleven. So interesting is the discussion and so wide-awake the topics. There is something doing every minute, and while there may be cross-firing and some clever moves and counter moves all, are good friends, realizing that in the multitude there is wisdom and the highest welfare, both of the individual and the association, is being evolved by the interchange of thought, experience and ideals.

"Why," remarked one of the most respected shoe repairers in Toronto, "until this association was formed, I knew only seven members of the trade, and now I am acquainted with pretty nearly every man. We feel that we are brothers in the full sense of the word, and it is pleasant to meet fellow workers and talk over trials and difficulties. It brings out the very best that is in us. I hope the day is not far distant when there will be a federation of shoe repairers' associations in Ontario and the movement which is now local, will become provincial, and in time, national. The shoe repairer today enjoys a wider measure of patronage and a better standing in the community than ever. He is advertising in the newspapers, sending out neat circulars, distributing attractive literature and everything in the line of publicity that tends to bring trade to his door. In every parcel he is enclosing possibly a price card or a pamphlet giving instructions on the methods of keeping shoes trim and neat, how repaired footwear can be made to look equally as good as new, and its comfort and appearance retained, and all for a small outlay, compared with the expense for new shoes, which may not be as good as one's old "understandings."

Another point emphasized is that while shoe repairers' prices have gone up on the average only about 35 per cent., the prices for high-grade calf and kid shoes for men and women have ascended from 60 to 75 per cent. and by next fall the advance will be 100 per cent. There are many arguments of a convincing character and timely nature that the shoe repair man can use to make the people come to his shop. He can also talk on thrift and economy during war time, and tell them the best way to practice these virtues, in the matter of foot togger, is to go to Brown's Shoe Repair Works.

Other repair men are using billboards and metallic signs posted throughout the country, with good effect. Another man had a large shoe stenciled on the sidewalk one Saturday morning. The big black footmark attracted a good deal of attention, and on the shank, in plain letters, were the words, "I get my shoes soled at Howard's."

These are the days of opportunity for the shoe repair man if he will only awake to his opportunities, and watch closely the suggestions appearing on this page from time to time. Get a good price for your work, do the very best job possible and have it finished or delivered when promised.

DEATH OF VETERAN SHOEMAKER

Edward Morrison, for thirty-three years a shoemaker in Orillia, died at his home in that town recently, aged 82 years. Mr. Morrison had been in poor health for the past five years, but only for two weeks previous to his death was he confined to his bed. The aged gentleman was born in Medonte township, March 1st, 1835, being the only son of the late John Morrison. He learned the trade to which he gave such honest labor in after years with Casey, the shoemaker at Craighurst, and fifty-five years ago was employed in the late Josiah P. Henderson's shop in Orillia. Later he went into business for himself, just west of Jarratt's Corners, where he remained until May 28th, 1884, when he moved to Orillia, having a shop on the Coldwater road and a downtown branch in the Hussack block. Subsequently the plant on Coldwater road was moved down town and a few years later the building at present occupied by Morrison's shoe shop was purchased. During all these years the late Mr. Morrison was very actively associated with his sons in the business life of Orillia, and until five years ago was quite regular in his attention to the shoe repairing branch of the business.

Edward Morrison was an upright, straightforward citizen, who took a keen interest in public affairs, and whose influence was always for good. He was a member of Orillia Methodist Church.

YOUR SHOW WINDOW HAS A VALUE

Too many shoe repairers lose sight of the value of their show window as an advertising medium. They clutter it up with a lot of odds and ends, allow the glass to get in a condition that would lead one to suppose that it had never been cleaned, and then expect to attract trade, says the "Shoe Repair Shop." Some of them have the mistaken idea that the public does not expect a shoe repair shop to show a clean exterior—or interior. This may have been the case years ago, but in the present time, when the majority of the shoe repairers have awakened to the idea that the public likes to trade at a place with an inviting appearance, they will find that a dirty, dingy store will cost them many dollars' worth of business. It is human nature to size a person up by his surroundings and if a stranger seeking a place to have his shoes repaired sees a shop which puts forth a nice, neat appearance he will naturally conclude that he will get nice, neat work in that shop. This is particularly true of feminine trade as very few women care to go into an untidy shop, and will always pass up such places for the more particular one.

J. S. POULTON AT WORK IN HIS SHOE REPAIR SHOP, 1809 BATHURST STREET, TORONTO

It takes but little time and effort to fix up your show window attractively. Have the woodwork painted a clean, bright color and display some of the findings which you carry; or failing to carry the latter, show some shoes before and after repairing. This is always a good drawing card as it shows just what you can do in the way of reclaiming worn out shoes. Keep in mind that an expert window trimmer never overstocks his window. Too much on display is far worse than not enough, as it prevents the onlooker from concentrating his attention to any one thing in particular.

If your shop is open after daylight has waned, which it probably would be during the winter months, keep your show window well lighted, as people are naturally averse to going into an ill lighted place; especially if they are strangers to your shop.

Improper cleaning of your window will detract very much from the attractiveness of any display, not only making the glass less transparent than it should be, but giving a displeasing impression as well.

SOME POINTERS WORTH WHILE

Shoe repairers who turn out unfinished work and criticize others who believe in a good finishing job, may soon have themselves as their only customers. Shoe repairers who saves the cost of some bottom finish might go further and save the cost of heel and edge finish. There would be just as much sense in letting the heel go as it comes from the nailing machine, and the sole go as it comes from the leveling machine, as there would be in letting the bottom go unfinished. A good finish means a good trade.

When the half-sole is nailed first at the shank part it will fit better and be fastened on the shoe more easily if the toe part is first leveled by a piece of leather properly skived for that purpose, says one repairer. This piece should be nailed to the shoe first and then the outsole top placed over it and held in position with a few nails. If this extra piece is first cemented down it is almost unnoticeable after the shoe is finished, which makes for a neater operation at edge setting. It makes a big improvement also to pound down hard on the toe.

Some repairers say it improves the appearance of sole leather to wax over the grain side of the soles before applying, as it fills in the pores and glosses up the entire surface in a firm manner. In rubbing in the wax a high speed brush is necessary. When applied to nice clear stock it helps to preserve the stock from color deterioration, or from absorbing dirt and dust if set aside for a while before using.

BLACK THE EDGES CAREFULLY

Blacking the edges of shoes after they have been repaired should be done just as carefully as any other part of your work. If you perform this operation in such a hasty and careless way as to daub it all over the uppers you not only waste a lot of ink but you also waste a lot of time cleaning it off the uppers. We have seen repairers turn shoes out to their customers with the edge blacking remaining smeared over the uppers, but needless to say that such gross negligence never brings a customer to such a repairer for a second job. A tooth brush is far more suitable for applying edge finish than a camel's hair brush, but buy a new one for the purpose, and do not get one that is too cheap and too coarse to do good work.

FIRM LEATHER PRICES STILL PREVAIL

Apropos of leather and hide conditions the following review of the situation across the border as sketched by a Boston authority is interesting.

"The past thirty days has been a period of extreme dullness in shoes, as well as in leather and hides. It is the between-seasons period in shoes and the factories which for several months past have been running at capacity have begun to slow down on account of a lack of sufficient new business to counterbalance the orders completed. Shoe manufacturers having sufficient supplies of leather to carry them through the present run and being very uncertain as to what the coming season will bring forth are not keenly interested in leather and tanners in turn have gauged their purchases of hides by the demand for the finished material. The dullness has produced no decided weakness in hides and as deliveries on old orders for leather absorb practically all that is becoming available, the tanners are not over-supplied and have firm price ideas. The new German submarine campaign is having its effect on the export demand for leather but as an influence on prices it is offset by expectations that the United States Government will be a free buyer of shoes and leather in the event that the break between this country and Germany is followed by an actual declaration of war. The loss of export business in leather would not be important if there is a large Government demand; it would be merely a change of customers. The export demand naturally has contributed liberally to the high cost of leather and of shoes.

An Attractive Easter Window Background

It is pretty generally conceded that the average shoe merchant recognizes the value of having good window displays, but the difficulty is in not knowing just how to arrange these displays without the expenditure of much time and material, all of which means expense.

We are endeavoring in these articles to furnish suggestions that will enable the retailer to arrange his window trims with material he may have on hand and not entail great cost. The background we are showing for an Easter window trim can be arranged by anyone who is at all familiar on quite a bit darker than you want them to dry, because they always dry out much lighter than when first put on. To lighten, add a little white after it has been mixed up separately, and to darken, mix dark color separately and add to the color you wish darkened. Always try these colors on a piece of separate paper and let it dry before you use it on the background, as then you will know the color that you have.

The lily design is a simple conventional design. It can be outlined with heliotrope, and leaves and stem painted green, leaving the lily white.

with window dressing. As we have intimated before, the most convenient material is some of the many wall-boards that are on the market. Some of these can be had in the following sizes—32, 36 and 48 inches wide, by 5, 6, 7, 8, 9 and 10 feet long. Assuming that you have the background made, as described in the previous articles appearing in the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL, this background can be arranged on the same frame work.

You will notice there are three panels with circle tops, the centre panel being wider than the two outside ones. This wallboard material is heavy enough to project above the square frame work and keep its position after being cut in circles at the top.

As arranged this background is suitable for Easter. The colors should be as marked on the design, white panels with heliotrope border and division pieces in yellow. Use water color paints for doing this ground. There are a number of fresco or wallpaints to be had at very little cost at any of the stores handling painters' and decorators' supplies. These are mixed with clear cold water, directions being given on each package. Various tints may be obtained, but it is well to remember that you should always put water colors

We think, with a little ingenuity on your part, that you will be able to fix up a very effective Easter window with this ground at very little cost.

EARLY CLOSING MOVEMENT GROWS

A meeting of the shoe merchants of Bloor street west and vicinity, Toronto, was held on Wednesday night, March 14th, at which there was a representative attendance of seventeen out of twenty shoemen present. Alfred Neale was elected chairman and George J. St. Leger, secretary. A round table conference was held, and the early closing movement was discussed. Various proposals were put forth and after much consideration, it was unanimously decided that a resolution be presented to the Toronto Shoe Retailers' Association at its next meeting on March 22nd, asking that all shoe stores close every Wednesday and Thursday night the year round at 6.30 p.m. The Bloor street footwear merchants also agreed to close their places of business every Wednesday from May 1st to October 1st, at 12 o'clock noon. It is understood that the shoe retailers east of the Don will hold a gathering next week to consider early closing.

association and the splendid work that it could do and was doing. Too much recognition could not be bestowed upon our boys at the front who were gallantly and unselfishly fighting for King and Country in defence of liberty, justice and right and no more favorable reports had come from the battle line than those of our own brave Canadian lads. The toast was drunk in silence. Many shoemen have their sons overseas "doing their bit."

"To our boys who have fallen" was the last toast. It

With the singing of the National Anthem the gathering dispersed at twelve o'clock and never was a more successful, enjoyable and profitable assembly held by any trade in Toronto than the second annual dinner of the Toronto Shoe Retailers' Association. Much credit is due to President H. C. Blachford and Secretary Edward Cook for their unflinching courtesy and energetic work, supported as they were by a capable and faithful executive. Mr. Blachford made an ideal presiding officer and kept everything operating smoothly, while a vast amount of detail duties was executed by Mr. Cook, who is never weary in well doing.

The menu cards were unique and the humorous refer-was presented by James Acton, who expressed his pleasure at seeing such a representative gathering of shoe salesmen and shoe retailers. He referred to the wonderful progress that the trade had made during the past thirty years and what could be accomplished by association and organization. Many in the shoe and leather ranks had gone to the front and had made the supreme sacrifice, while others were going to take the places of those who had died for us, in a cause, which was as widespread as humanity itself, and in upholding the principle that "greater love hath no man than this, that he lay down his life for his friend." Mr. Acton said that he could not trust himself to speak further on such a subject. All honored and revered the fallen heroes and mourned with those to whom the war had brought great sorrow. They felt that the sacrifice had not been in vain and of the ultimate triumph of the cause of liberty, toleration and freedom, there was no doubt.

A Memorable Occasion Ends

After silently honoring the toast, a cordial vote of thanks was tendered all those who had taken part in the programme, particular mention being made of Mr. Boyd and Mr. Howarth and the splendid orchestra under the leadership of Samuel Salt (who, by the way, is a shoeman employed by H. & C. Blachford), while F. B. Utley, cartoonist, whose witty remarks and clever crayon sketches put all in fine humor, came in for a generous measure of appreciation. Mr. Utley appeared twice on the programme and was enthusiastically received. It was generally conceded that the entertainment part of the evening could not have been excelled.

ences to the Association and some of the individual members aroused much merriment. One life-like figure of a stripling carried the words, "How I appeared before joining the Association—lean and narrow." Below was the picture of a full, rotund, complacent individual with the inscription, "Look at me now after joining—well developed, broad in body and mind, happy and prosperous."

Getting After Shoe Recruits

Cards were also distributed which all were asked to sign and a strong membership campaign will be conducted as a result of the gathering of the shoe forces in such number and under such auspicious circumstances. Although organized only two years ago, the Toronto Shoe Retailers' Association, like the current of a mighty river, is gathering strength as it flows.

ST. PATRICK

Fill your cups running o'er, 'tis St. Patrick's great day,
And our memory goes back o'er the sea;
Where we played on the moorland the harp of our youth,
And our young lives were happy and free.

Let us sing of the Shamrock, that dear little flower,
And our hearts will be glad as of yore;
And in memory we'll look on those dear childhood scenes,
Far away on old Ireland's shore.

MANUFACTURING AS RELATED TO RETAILING

Difficulties of Production Increased Owing to Unusual Conditions—Style Changes Have Brought Buyers Into Closer Touch With Factories—The Stock Shoe Feature—Some Instructive Points Presented by John A. McKeon, of Laird, Schober & Co.

“MANUFACTURING as Related to Retailing,” pre-supposes, as I take it, either an unsatisfactory condition, or one open to considerable improvement. By this I mean the relationship is apparently distant, and should be closer. While it is not always the case that the manufacturer is bigger, from a commercial and financial standpoint than the retailer, it is frequently so, therefore, the burden of this closer relationship is dependent upon the manufacturer in a great measure. This, however, is not a convention of manufacturers, so in dealing with this big question of co-operation, I shall endeavor to point out the various factors in co-operation that must be observed by the retailer to accomplish results.

Buyers Brought Close to the Factories

With the assumption that a great deal of retail buying is direct from the manufacturers, to accomplish co-operation and positive results the retailer must take thorough cognizance of the difficulties of production, subdivided, primarily, into two classes—Labor and Material—as well as the shortness of the productive season. By this I mean, that in placing his spring order the average dealer will follow the usual custom:—he will receive the salesman during October, November or December, as the case may be, and place at that time the bulk of his spring business. He will naturally expect his goods, particularly in the high grade class during February and the early part of March, certainly before the Easter period, perhaps not all but the greater part of the order, and more particularly the novelties which, in view of the perfecting of patterns and other details, are usually the last to proceed along normal lines.

It has become a custom and a desirable one, for buyers to visit factories. This has been rather accentuated during the past three or four seasons owing to the decided fluctuations in price, and while it entails for the buyer some little time, trouble and expense, still, by making the buying trip a general one, by getting away from home, keeping his eyes open, gathering in all the commercial costs, supply and demand, and the general information available through other people's ideas, he benefits enormously. It is the concensus of opinion that the expense is well worth while. Peculiarly enough, this custom originated with the Pacific Coast and Texas trade, and taking Pennsylvania, New York and New England as pivotal points, the success of this plan is being proved by the experience for dealers for whom it entails the greatest hardship in the way of time consumption and actual expense.

Advantages of Being on the Ground Early

There is always an advantage to the buyer in getting on the ground early, and particularly in following the plan of covering, on an advancing market, his staples at least. I put it in this way as, at the time when price protection is possible, novelty styles may not be set, and it would be a risky game to delve too deeply into novelties bought far in advance. With staples, however, it is different, as there are many lines carried an entire season, and for years without change. Aside from the price protection, there is the benefit derived from early delivery. However, it does not follow that the early buyer on the ground is given absolute preference. Naturally a point of honor is involved for every manufacturer, particularly with old established trade.

Many conditions which effect some dealers make it imperative for them to await the salesman's arrival, and certainly entitles them to at least normal consideration in the way of deliveries. The price protection, in this case, cannot be controlled, inasmuch as when the manufacturer buys a certain amount of material, and disposes of it in shoes, it is gone. On a rising market, he must make additional purchases at the market price.

Dealers, in a general way, should consider the suggestions of the manufacturers regarding factory conditions; as applying to women's lines, for example, turn labor is now and has been for some time somewhat scarce. However, conditions are slightly helped in this respect through the element of straight hand or bench work, which provides quite a little extra remuneration for the turn worker, and, at the same time, upholds quality.

With welt work, either men's or women's, it is different, the wonderful improvements in the welt machine line overcoming many difficulties; in other words, in the welt class normal efficiency will solve practically all the difficulties, with the exception of the new and unforeseen, such as sickness, accident, occasional shortage of material findings and other things.

Elements of Uncertainty in Production

It must be borne in mind that the bulk of material used in footwear is dependent upon natural productiveness, the animals producing the hides or pelts must exist, must breed, and as a major portion of the raw stock comes from foreign lands, transportation is a big factor. Just now we face the necessary high cost of finished leather brought about by various conditions that apply to all goods traveling by sea, the shortage of freight space, the increase of war risk insurance and the uncertainty of sailing dates, etc. Further than this, in buying raw materials from which to produce finished leather, particularly upper stock, the tanner has little idea of what sorting, grading or hefting he is going to accomplish. When it is expected that a considerable quantity of full weight, sturdy skins are available, the result may be just the opposite or a top heavy proportion of bee's wings or kitten's ears. All these are conditions the manufacturer has to contend with in filling a retailer's order, conditions that point out the element of uncertainty which permeates the production of footwear at all times. Therefore, it seems fitting to bring in at this particular point a reference to stock lines.

It surely must be of some benefit to be able to obtain just the sizes required of certain lines at, practically, a moment's notice. Therefore, the custom, which is yet in its infancy, of carrying stock lines should be encouraged by the retailer. The notification that a manufacturer's stock lines are available, should be acknowledged, and the correspondence, filed for future consideration, if not interested immediately.

This also applies in a great measure to the Style Letters which are frequently mailed by the manufacturer, a matter that should be encouraged. While, for the manufacturer, these letters are in the line of soliciting business, at the same time they keep the retailer abreast of the new things assuming that the manufacturer is on the job and includes in his Style Letters, as nearly as possible, correct detail. Admittedly, retailers are busy people, but if a man is too busy to give courteous or reasonable attention to his correspondence, there is something wrong with his organization. The one-man proposition, as applied to business, is antiquated. It is organization that counts, and while the personal touch of a president, manager, salesman or clerk is a decided factor, it should not prevent the perfecting of a practical organization. Many details do not require other than ordinary common sense to round-up or adjust, but it has frequently been claimed that common sense is a jewel, for the reason that its possession is so uncommon.

The Price Question

It is hardly within my province to introduce the matter of retail profits, or policies, but I should like to give you, in a general way, the result of an investigation made toward the latter part of 1916 by a prominent journal, for the purpose of an advertising campaign. The figures involved would be too lengthy and too varied to enumerate, but one fact brought out by this investigation is the large increase in the actual sale at retail of higher grade and higher price footwear. The report shows this as particularly applicable to grades at $10.00 and $12.00 and up, and it indicates that while the public is not feeling the real pinch, it is apparently prepared for it. Assuming that $10.00 and $12.00 and upwards represent value received, it is a strong point in favor of quality improvement, and the encouragement of novelties.

Higher Prices are on the Way

I cannot too strongly urge upon you the necessity of preparing for advanced prices. It is possible all this may not develop. International complications may take a decided turn for the better, the supply may exceed the demand, but indications are not favorable at present. Therefore regulate your retail prices to provide for a safety valve profit. The element of high price must increase the depreciation account as applying to the left-overs. The light, airy footwear of fashion in the women's class does not possess the sturdiness of the old time ten-iron soles, and through this there are certain claims that the retailer must provide from his profit, so that I say again, keep awake to this necessity. If there is money to be spent by the individual, let it be spent on footwear instead of millinery.

ALL LEATHER PRICES NOW LEGITIMATE

One of the largest shoe manufacturers in the country has written his customers along the following lines, says a Boston despatch:—

"A forecast of the future cannot be made with any degree of certainty on account of unprecedented conditions, but it is necessary to arrive at conclusions based on facts as they present themselves from day to day and to outline a business course accordingly. These conclusions must be changed as new conditions and new facts present themselves.

"For the past two months the trade has been going through a period where there has been some doubt as to the permanency of values. During this period there has been a recession from extreme high prices both in upper leather and sole leather, but not sufficient to make a fundamental difference. This recession in staple lines has probably run its course and prices will undoubtedly be maintained and possibly will go higher.

"The question has been asked as to what effect the new international complications will have on the price of leather and shoes. It will undoubtedly cut off to some extent the exporting of merchandise, and will also cut off imports. What merchandise is imported will cost a great deal more on account of the increased cost in insurance and freight rates. Fifty per cent. to 60 per cent. of the raw material used in this country is imported. If we go to war, or even make preparations, it will undoubtedly mean greater demand for material made from hides.

"The conservative policy which has been pursued during the past six weeks has had a tendency to squeeze out inflated values and undoubtedly prices asked by tanners today are in most instances legitimate."

MAKE HIGH-CUT SHOES ILLEGAL

Chairman Hodgson, of the Board of Works, Hamilton, who is a retail shoe merchant in that city, is asking why most of the members on the city's food commission are interested only in the grocery business. He thinks all kinds of commodities should be gone into, and suggests that the aldermen ask for evidence from various dealers as to the cause of high prices. Ald. Hodgson said he could tell a few things.

ALD. J. A. HODGSON, HAMILTON

"One reason for high prices of shoes is that the ladies want such high shoes," he declared. "I think the government should, while leather is so expensive, prevent young girls and others wearing such a style of footwear. Of course, there is no doubt that the new kind of shoe is warmer and that it allows shorter skirts, but leather is much dearer than cloth and further, in my opinion, longer skirts are more desirable."

MR. HAWTHORNE LEFT LARGE ESTATE

D. D. Hawthorne, wholesale shoe merchant, of Toronto, who died at his residence on February 15th last, left an estate of $710,472. This includes real estate valued at $119,500, business and stock in trade, $428,832; book debts, $162,135, and $5 cash. The real estate consists of a warehouse at 27 Wellington street west, Toronto, $116,000; a vacant lot at 1922 Queen street east, Toronto, $1,000, and a Winnipeg property, $2,500.

By his will dated September 30th, 1916, testator leaves $50,000 to Mrs. Kirby Hawthorne, his sister-in-law; $20,000 each to his nephews, Jack D. Hawthorne and David H. Bain, and $5,000 each to his half-sisters, Mrs. Herbert Reynolds and Mrs. Jack Winterfield. Legacies of $5,000 each are left to the following friends: Mrs. Henry Clark, Kate Thornton, Jack Abernethy and Robert C. Winlow; $2,000 each to Mrs. Frank Robertson and Dr. Samuel Johnston; $1,000 each to Agnes, Sarah, Mary and Martha Abernethy, and $500 to Archie Watson. The remainder of the property is left to John Dawson Hawthorne, a brother, who is appointed sole executor.

EVERYTHING IN LEATHER MARKET ADVANCING

One of the Most Important Things that Will Happen After the War is the Increased Demand for Hides—How Present Leather Shortage Has Been Brought About—Diminished Herds in European Countries and Enormous Demand for Hides.

EVERY traveling shoe salesman should be as well posted as possible. It is not enough for even the most earnest salesman to state sincerely and emphatically that his house must get more money for their shoes, because it costs more to make them, but he does not know why. It is easy enough for those who want to learn to find out why.

John Schanzle, who is sales manager of Howes Bros. Co., Boston, one of the largest shoe leather houses, has been particularly active in looking after their large export trade and therefore is well posted on the requirements of foreign buyers and the conditions prevailing abroad as to the supply and demand of hides, skins and leather. He gave a talk lately in Boston which is well worth perusal by every shoeman.

"There is a world's shortage of sole leather and for the first time in many years," he said, "we have no stocks of leather on hand. Previously we have always carried some leather during the first few months of the year.

"I will try to explain what causes this shortage, but I first wish to say something about hides.

"Previous to the war Germany was one of the largest importers of hides in the world, importing about 300,000,000 pounds per annum and re-exporting approximately one-third of this amount, leaving 200,000,000 pounds of principally dry hides net importation. This is between 6,000,000 and 8,000,000 hides that were thrown on the world's market as soon as the war began and at that time it was impossible to see how the price of hides could be maintained with this additional supply to be disposed of. A large portion of these hides came to New York City and were finally absorbed by the American tanners. This has since then proved to be the main factor in holding the prices of leather down to where they are today, as all the heavy hides produced are evidently being tanned into leather the same as they were before the war, so that the actual supply of leather has been changed very little.

Millions of Shoes

"The change has come through the increased destruction of leather and diminished herds in some of the European warring countries. I have heard it said that a soldier in active service requires eight pairs of shoes per year, and if there are 20,000,000 men in uniform today in the belligerent countries, this would mean a demand for 160,000,000 pairs of army shoes, requiring more than 320,000,000 pounds of sole leather per annum, which is more than the total production of the two largest sole leather tanners in America, which means the two largest producers in the world.

"If we keep this one item before us we can readily understand why leather has advanced and why it must continue to advance as long as the war lasts.

"England claims she has produced for her own army in the past two years about 25,000,000 pairs of shoes, and if 15,000,000 of these were manufactured during the year 1916, it would mean a production of 50,000 pairs per day, or about the capacity of the largest shoe manufacturer in America.

Competition Has Ceased

"We are supplying leather to practically every country in the world where leather shoes are worn, excepting Germany, Austria, Turkey and Bulgaria, and as Germany, Austria, also France, were our competitors in the world's market previous to the war, this competition now having ceased creates a larger demand for our leather.

"Today if a large extra amount of sole leather is required, it is necessary for it to come either directly or indirectly from the United States.

"I expect an unusually large demand for sole leather from the entire world after the war, as the neutral countries in Europe are today restricted as to the amount of leather they can import, and I understand there is a shortage in all of these countries, and there is no question but what there is a very great shortage of sole leather in the countries blockaded by the Allies.

"France is becoming a large customer for our leather, England even larger and Russia a very important factor. Their requirements this year will be larger than in the past.

Condition in England

"Last year England was able to supply Russia with a liberal quantity of sole leather. However, this will be impossible during the present year, as there is evidently a shortage of leather in England, she having recently requisitioned all of the heavy imported leathers and for the past eighteen months has used all of the heavy home produced sole leather for her army.

"The demand for leather is steadily increasing and as the Asiatic countries take up our kind of footwear, this increased demand will be more marked. I understand there are several million Russian soldiers wearing leather shoes for the first time, as leather shoes are a luxury, I am told, enjoyed by less than 20 per cent. of the population; and as these soldiers return to civil life their ideas will have shown quite a change from 1914.

Increased Demand for Hides

"One of the most important things that will happen after the war is the increased demand for hides. Today the world's total production of hides is being tanned.

"As soon as the seas are open we will probably have Germany as a competitor in the hide market again, as she has a large amount of tanning capacity lying idle. The hides that she purchases the first three to nine months after the seas are free will be a new demand, as this quantity, of course, will be in the process of production continuously. After a few months, when the leather is finished, this will replace leather to some extent that we are producing here.

"There are sufficient customers for all the hides and leather produced today and with this added large buying capacity from the Central Powers no one knows what the prices will be.

"You have probably heard of the large profits sole leather tanners have made during the past two years, particularly 1916.

"I would like to tell you what is becoming of a large portion of this money.

Much Money for Hides

"In case the hide market stays where it is or advances, it will be necessary to use a large percentage of it to purchase our raw material. If we could sell our sole leather and discontinue tanning today, or whenever the market is at its height at some future day, and dispose of our tanneries at a fair price, we would make a handsome profit.

"However, as we expect to continue in business, it is necessary to buy hides at an advance in price of from 40 to 50 per cent., and it requires a great deal of courage to carry one year's supply of merchandise based on to-day's cost. This is what every sole leather tanner is facing. In short, a large portion of the extra profits we are making is being paid to the domestic and South American hide producers and dealers for high-priced hides, which we hope will eventually be sold in the form of leather at a profit.

Chinese Business Increases

"Our Chinese business is increasing, for as the Chinaman progresses financially he adopts our style of footwear. The European and Asiatic peoples must pay today higher prices in gold for shoes and leather than we here in America. If paid for with labor the contrast is still greater, as our workmen, compared with theirs, can purchase two to four times as much leather for a day's labor, and this is the only fair comparison.

"In summing up, everything indicates an advancing shoe and leather market, and while there may be some recessions the general tendency of prices should be upward."

PROGRESSIVE FIRM IS EXTENDING

Duclos & Payan, St. Hyacinthe, Que., have grown to such an extent that a new building has become absolutely necessary. This will be devoted entirely to the manufacture of counters. The structure will be situated next to the present building and will be a two-storey brick one, 44 by 150 feet, equipped with the latest machinery and operated by electricity. Duclos & Payan, who have been established since 1873, will have a capacity of from 75,000 to 100,000 pairs

"ON THE JUMP"

On the jump—that's what they're made for,
Shoes of all descriptions, thus,
Clerks should worry if they're paid for,
Let the wearer make the fuss.
Leather isn't manufactured,
Tell them when you "tell the tale"
To the irate bargain seeker,
When you're "stuck" to make a sale.

Poor retailers, worse than sailors,
In a German submarine,
Squirm and writhe in queer gyrations,
Wish the "game" they'd never see;
Others smile and kick their heels up,
Saying things are not so bad,
'Cos the folks have lots of "Cobalt,"
What's the use of getting mad.

Travelers smiling, optimistic,
Though the "price" is on the jump,
Knowing many other nations
Have some cause to get the hump;
Even though a grouchy buyer
Acts as though he'd like your hide,
Don't flare up and call him "nutty"—
Not until you get outside.

Manufacturer—here's the goat, boys—
Trailing round from morn till night,
Looking for the precious raw stuff,
Playing "hide" and seek all right.
When he reaches his Vallala,
After many a weary mile,
Finds that some poor meddling galoot
Went and launched another style.

DO YOU KNOW THE FIGURE FACTS ABOUT YOUR BUSINESS?

Do your books tell you what it costs to operate your stores?

Do they show which departments or lines are profitable and which, if any, are not paying?

Do they prove beyond the possibility of a doubt that selling prices cover expenses and leave you a fair margin of profit?

Can you tell from them how your gross and net profits for this year compare with those of last year?

Do they tell you how often you turn your stock; how much stock you have on hand today and what this stock cost you?

Do they show you when and from where your profits and losses come?

These questions may seem harsh and inquisitive, but they are not intended to be so.

They simply state some of the problems that are confronting business men today.

NEWSY BRIEFS FROM ST. JOHN

Private William O'Connor, formerly of the staff of Waterbury & Rising, wholesale boot and shoe dealers, in St. John, N.B., now attached to the clerical staff of the 236th, New Brunswick Kilty Battalion, arrived in St. John a few days ago for two weeks' furlough. He is convalescent from a recent operation for varicose veins. Upon his arrival from Fredericton Private O'Connor received a letter from his brother, Sergeant O'Connor, who left Canada attached to the 21st Battalion, and was quite seriously injured last year. After his recovery he was appointed signalling instructor with the 6th Reserve Battalion, quartered at Bramshott Camp, England. A few weeks ago ahesked to be sent back to the front and recently he crossed to France with a draft for a Canadian unit.

Harry Campbell, shoe dealer in Fredericton, N.B., was in the city during the last few days on a buying trip. He is no stranger to local dealers and is always cordially received.

C. S. Sutherland, of the Amherst Boot and Shoe Co. was in the city recently on a business and pleasure trip combined.

Owing to the uncertain condition of the leather market few travelers are coming here this spring.

MAY GET ONLY FIVE CENTS ON DOLLAR

A recent despatch from Winnipeg says: "Wholesalers of Winnipeg will lose heavily in a case that is creating considerable interest," Henry Detchon, general manager of the Canadian Credit Men's Trust Association, says in the March number of the association's journal.

"About a year ago," according to Mr. Detchon, "a company was formed in Winnipeg by the name of the Quebec Shoe Company, Limited, with headquarters in the Bon Accord block. This year the company made an assignment to the official assignee, C. H. Newron. Upon investigation of the circumstances made by Mr. Newton, it looks as though the creditors—whose claims amount to something like $24,000—will not receive more than five or six cents on the dollar.

"It is said that one of the causes of the financial condition of the company was the heavy drawings for salary made by the manager and accountant during the six months immediately preceding the assignment, which drawings totalled about $9,000.

"The final result of these cases is being looked for with great interest by the creditors. The manager and accountant were arrested and had their preliminary hearing before Magistrate Sir Hugh John Macdonald, who committed them for trial."

PERTH SHOE STYLES ARE DISTINCT

The new samples of the Perth Shoe Co., of Perth, Ont., are decidedly artistic and are seen in a wide variety of colors and combinations. The long recede forepart is still the chief characteristic and the new 12-8, and 10-8 Cuban heels are decidedly neat. Brown calf bals in various shades are shown, with golden buck, Imperial and pearl buck tops—some with plain toes and others with wing tips. There are several models with tops of English box cloth in fawn, slate and dark grey, with gunmetal, patent and nigger brown calf vamps. Fancy colors on a number of offerings are a pleasing innovation, and there are seen nine and ten-inch cavalier cut tops. A novelty shoe is a white buck walking last, with black and white check top, white eyelet facing, and carrying a white Neolin sole and rubber heel. Another is a white buck vamp, nigger brown cloth top, white leather sole and heel. A mahogany Russia bal, with golden buck top, blind eyelets and 12-8 heel is pretty. English walking boots in brown and black calf, 8-inch tops, some with Neolin soles and rubber heels, are featured. A number of offerings are shown in silver grey and golden buck, either in whole, or with various colored vamps, with fine perforations on the tip and artistic pinking along the vamp and eyelet stay. A new bottom finish in the natural leather is also observed, while in cloth tops, chamois and buck cloth are the leaders. White and black are also pleasing combinations, and the entire white offerings in reignskin, buck and kid, are very acceptable. A mahogany calf bal with buck top and white Neolin sole, 10-8 leather heel with white top-piece, is much admired. There are also exhibited several shoes for growing girls, in tan and black, with leather and Neolin soles. Among other offerings is a golden kid bal, with a gold buck top and a Burgundy calf bal, with pearl buck top, blind eyelets, and sole and Louis heel to match the upper. In sport shoes there is shown white buck with colored ball straps and facings, mostly with Neolin sole and heel. The whole range is representative of expert shoemaking, artistic presentations and snappy, graceful lines.

WILL LOOK AFTER WHOLESALE AS WELL

James Heffering, of Toronto, who for the past thirteen years has been Ontario representative of the Tetrault Shoe Manufacturing Co., Montreal, and has permanent sample rooms in the Lumsden Building, will in future look after the wholesale end of the firm's business as well throughout the province. Owing to the fact that Mr. Tetrault and his son, Albert Tetrault, are kept so busy supervising the constantly growing production end at the factory, the wholesale trade has not been given that personal attention for some time

SOME ARTISTIC MODELS PRESENTED

The new fall models of La Parisienne Shoe Co., Montreal, now being shown in Toronto by W. C. Myers, Ontario representative of the firm, embrace all the newest effects and colors in cloth tops, including various shades of grey, canary, ivory, champagne, etc. The new Stag pattern is attractive and in high cuts there are a number of choice offerings in mahogany, tobacco brown, silver grey, tan and black. There is a nice line of English walking shoes, with wing tips, among them being one with mahogany vamp and golden buck top, one of dull calf with grey buck top and a white buck with wing tip and ivory sole and heel. A Havana brown kid boot with full Louis heel is another distinctive presentation. The firm are using nothing but the very highest quality leathers in all their shoes, and the walking models carry a higher heel than usually seen. The popular height of top is $7\frac{1}{2}$ and 8 inches. The company are also making a fine range of turns in all the popular shades. The new sport oxfords are winners and should command a ready sale. They come in all popular colors. The new offerings in pumps are plain, neat and effective with unadorned foreparts and imitation collars. The fall models of La Parisienne Shoe Co., who are expert shoe makers, are the neatest and smartest they have ever produced and touch a high water mark in achievement. Mr. Myers is also representing James Robinson, of Montreal, in Toronto and Western Canada, carrying that firm's ready-to-ship goods and a very comprehensive range is shown.

BUNIONS AND OTHER DEFORMITIES

There are some people who complain more or less of bunions which always ache to a certain extent when there is a storm coming on.

The bunion is different from the corn, or the callous on the bottom of the foot, but there is a cause for it just the same as there is for the corn and the callous. There may be other causes, but the main one seems to be that those people who have bunions were in the habit of wearing shoes that were too short in their younger days.

A shoe too short is bound to give the wearer a bunion or it may give a toe which is pushed out of place more or less. A tight shoe is really not half as bad as the short shoe. The latter will double the toe up by pushing the joint back and at the same time it brings the bunion on the foot. On the other hand, the tight shoe may make a corn or two, and may also bring on ingrowing nails.

WHAT ARE SHOES WORTH TO-DAY?

The title of this article was the subject which John A. Bush, President of the Brown Shoe Co., of St. Louis, took for an interesting discourse on shoe manufacturing and retailing which he indulged in at the recent meeting in St. Louis of the retailers of Missouri when they organized a State Association. Among other statements by Mr. Bush was one in which he gave the figures of the manufacturing cost of a man's and woman's shoe for the two selling seasons of 1915 and 1916, and the cost of the same shoe as of February of this year. The "Shoe Retailer" gives these figures as follows:

Lady's 8-inch Glazed Kid Lace Boot

Feb. 1915 cost.....	$2.45
Feb. 1916 cost.....	2.50
Aug. 1916 cost.....	3.30
Feb. 1917 cost.....	4.77

THE CARE OF RUBBERS

(From Foot Prints)

Keep rubbers cool. Never stand them near a radiator or stove.

Keep rubbers in the dark. Sunlight is very bad for rubbers.

Keep rubbers clean. Oil or grease, in particular, should be washed off with soap and tepid water before the rubbers are laid aside.

Keep rubbers upright. This applies especially to boots. The reason is that the perspiration, if not allowed to evaporate, will rot the boot lining.

Keep telling these things to your customers; it will interest them and inspire confidence in you and your goods.

THE FITTING OF RUBBERS

Watch the heel. Never fit a high-heel rubber on a low-heel shoe. If the heel is run down, urge customer to have his shoes re-heeled. It will add life to rubbers.

Watch the toe. This will enable you to avoid fitting rubbers that are too short or too long.

Footholds for high-heel shoes. If you are out of the correct last or width of high-heel rubbers, fit Footholds.

Avoid "oversize" in boots. This is right for tires but wrong for boots.

Do not wear Arctics over sox. They are constructed to be worn over a leather shoe with heel. You can get excluders especially made for sox.

Arctic uppers do not stretch. Therefore, avoid jerking them on and off.

Keep telling these things to your clerks; it will mean satisfied customers and increased patronage.

DEATH OF MR. FRANK McKENNA

Many friends in the shoe trade will regret to learn of the death of Frank J. McKenna, which took place in Montreal recently, after an illness of six months. Mr. McKenna was for twenty years connected with the old firm of James McCready & Co., and latterly was purchasing agent with Ames-Holden-McCready, Limited. He was forty-three years of age and leaves a widow and three sons. He was a charter member of the Canadian council of the Knights of Columbus, taking a warm interest in the progress of that organization. The funeral took place on March 12th from his late residence, No. 5 William David street, Maisonneuve, to Cote des Neiges cemetery.

THE GROWING DEMAND FOR WHITE LEATHER

There is such a demand today for white leather that in some of the tanneries the production is actually eighty per cent. white. And this, too, in tanneries where they had not been making white leather to any extent up to a few years ago, says "Shoe Topics."

And in these plants it is felt that the demand for white is just beginning as more is to be made next season. This seems to be the general opinion, at least, and it would not be held to such an extent if it was not based on solid ground.

It actually looks as though white is to be a staple in the future and, on the whole, there is nothing about it to cause surprise. White looks better in a shoe than any other leather, not excepting black itself. It also corresponds to the prevailing dress of women and it has been the custom to have the whole wardrobe alike as far as possible.

Up to the present no white shoes have been made for men with the exception of shoes for golf and tennis wear. Here and there white may have been cut for other uppers, but these were not in street shoes. Still no one can say what will happen in the future as the men's lines generally follow the women's in all styles where it is possible to do so.

In women's, white is now an all-the-year-round stock. It may not be seen in every town and city of the country, but it can be seen in some of the great centres—in New York and Boston, for instance. In a few cases the whole shoe is white, but there is some white in a large part of the shoes seen in ordinary wear even if the whole upper is not white.

A white shoe may be the hardest of all to keep clean, but it makes a lot of difference how the leather is tanned. If it is tanned properly in the first place it will not be a difficult matter to keep the shoe looking white. It is said that the atmosphere will affect white leather if it is not made right. If white leather remains in the sun any length of time it will be discolored more or less.

The price of white calf is higher now than at any time in history. Some of the best grades of the stock sell as high as eighty cents a foot. White lamb is also away up and the best of it is probably worth something like forty cents a foot.

When one talks about the price of leather today the only thing to do is to go by the actual figures. The actual sales tell the story and every day there seems to be less leather offered and at an advancing price. But it is the same with all other stock and white is no different from any of the other staples.

As for the wearing qualities of white leather it seems to be about the same as other stock. Of course, it is to be worn in its place. It is not a shoe to be worn as a working shoe but it is all right as a dress shoe and, when everything is considered, there is no neater looking shoe being made at the present time.

AMONG THE SHOE MEN.

J. G. McDiarmid, of Toronto, western representative of the Murray Shoe Co., of London, left recently with a fine range of samples on an extended selling trip throughout the Prairie Provinces.

W. W. Lindsley, who covers the Prairie Provinces for E. T. Wright & Co., St. Thomas, spent a few days in Boston, Haverhill, Lynn and other shoe centres recently.

Norman E. Ingram is now representing Coates, Burns & Wanless, of London, in Toronto and Eastern Ontario and has sample rooms at 56 Yonge street Arcade, Toronto, where a full range of samples is carried.

E. E. Donovan, of E. T. Wright & Co., St. Thomas, Ont., was in Toronto recently calling upon the trade.

Mann & McLennan, of Aylmer, Ont., have recently put in a stock of shoes, as has also C. W. Clark, harness dealer, of that town. Another exclusive shoe store is being opened up. The three recent additions raise the number of stores handling shoes to six. Aylmerites are being well served and backed by the live shoe factory. In their town they need never go about unshod.

J. P. Walters has bought out Mr. Krotz's interest in the shoe business for some time conducted in Goderich, Ont., under the name of Walters & Co., and managed by Mr. Krotz.

A. W. Bedard, shoe dealer, of Quebec, has removed to 121 St. Joseph street, where he has attractive and commodious premises. The store is well laid out and well lighted and is a credit to that part of the city.

In a bowling contest recently, between the Marsh team and the Ritchie team in the Industrial Bowling League, at Quebec, the latter won by two strings to one. The first string was very close as the Marsh rollers had only four points more than their opponents, but in the second string they managed to lead by 33. In the third they lost by 95 points.

J. T. Walters, 103 Shuter street, Toronto, has installed a model N 12 foot Goodyear repairing outfit. E. Gadsby, Bathurst street north, Toronto, has put in a Model N 22 foot outfit with stitcher. Both equipments were supplied by the United Shoe Machinery Co.

H. G. Middleton Co., wholesale shoes, Winnipeg, Man., recently assigned to C. H. Newton.

A. Gilbert, shoe dealer, of Black Lake and Thetford Mines, Quebec, recently made an assignment.

Otto B. Duhn, shoe dealer of Arnprior, Ont., lately passed away.

The Regal Shoe Co., Toronto, have installed a hand folding machine supplied by the United Shoe Machinery Co.

The death occurred recently in Toronto of Henry Arland, a former well-known Hamilton business man. The late Mr. Arland had resided in Hamilton for several years, conducting a shoe business in various parts of the city. Many years ago he commenced his successful career by the purchase of a building on East King street from J. C. Mahoney. He was later on King street, near James. Deceased was 74 years of age and pneumonia caused his death.

Wilfrid Pocock, of Pocock Bros., Winnipeg, was in Montreal recently on business.

The Northern Hide Co., Limited, with a capital stock of $5,000 and head offices in Toronto, has been formed to buy, sell, export, import and handle hides, skins, leather, tanning materials, tanning supplies, etc. The incorporators are Geo. W. Beardmore, A. O. Beardmore, N. G. McLeod and Edward Job, Toronto, and F. N. Beardmore, of Montreal.

The buying of Central Leather is traced to some of the most substantial private banking interests in the eastern states. They are apparently fully convinced of the stability of the company and are understood to have recommended Cent. Leather pfd. and common for speculative investment to certain financial institutions. The trouble between the United States and Germany is regarded as the final thing needed to put the company in a position of great strength likely to be permanent for many years.

Elijah B. Moore, one of the oldest residents of St. Thomas, Ont., died recently. He was born in St. Thomas 78

A Word to the Wise About Shoes

In these times of extraordinary shoe prices, it is well for the heads of families to know just what to look for, where to look, and to choose their footwear for its wearing value and the reputation of the man behind the shoe.

That leather is already high we all have reason to know, but our constant keeping in touch with leather conditions in the early stages of the war forewarned us as to what to expect and we bought heavily and to-day are selling our good solid leather shoes at only slight advance over the prices of a year ago.

Some of the people will of course insist on paying no more than formerly paid for a pair of shoes, but the wise man or woman will pay the little more and buy solid leather shoes for their school children and themselves. Buy the better shoe it is the cheapest in the long run. Insist on a shoe that has a solid leather sole, solid leather slip sole, solid leather in sole and guaranteed counter. Those are the special features about Mulcahy shoes that earned for us a reputation for having the best in footwear. Our aim is to sell shoes, particularly school for boys and girls of every size and age, that will bring the customer back again and yet again. The shoe must be good to do it, the wearing quality must be there, it must have style and it must be reasonable in price.

years ago. His father, Marshall Moore, organized the first tanning and leather factory in the district, which was carried on for many years by his son, Elijah.

T. Y. O'Neill, who for many years was manager of the Montreal branch of the E. B. Eddy Co., has been appointed assistant sales manager of the Miner Rubber Co., of Montreal and has entered upon his new duties.

Tom Kelly, manager of the Sample Shoe Store, Dundas street west, Toronto, recently spent a few weeks in the United States and was in Washington at the inauguration of President Wilson.

Walter Powell, who for several years has conducted a shoe store at 1682 Dundas street, Toronto, and also owns the Sample Shoe Store a few doors further west, has closed out the former establishment, his lease having expired. He will concentrate on the Sample Shoe Store, which is one of the largest retail footwear establishments in the Dominion.

Arthur Butterworth, of the Practical Shoe Repair Co., Yonge street, Toronto, who is secretary-treasurer of the Toronto Shoe Repairers' Association, has returned from spending a few days in New York city.

L. Perelam is starting a boot and shoe business in Ridgetown, Ont.

Alex. Chisholm, who was for several years in the retail shoe business at 1687 Dundas street, Toronto, and disposed of his interests recently to his brothers, M. S. and J. L. Chisholm, has been requested by the National Council of the Y.M.C.A. to take charge of the outside work in connection with the Red Triangle Club. This club is for the benefit of returned soldiers and those passing through or remaining for some time and has been attractively fitted up. There is considerable administrative work to do and Mr. Chisholm will devote his entire attention to it.

The Miner Rubber Co., of Granby, Que., will open a new warehouse in Regina in the near future in order to minister more efficiently to their numerous customers in Saskatchewan. It will be remembered that over a year ago a branch was opened in Edmonton and the results have been most satisfactory. R. R. Macaulay, secretary of the Miner Rubber Co., Montreal, was in Winnipeg on business with Congdon-Marsh, Limited, who are sole agents in Western Canada for Miner rubbers.

Thomas Fitzpatrick, of Gendron & Fitzpatrick, shoe retailers and manufacturers of shoepacks, Penetanguishene, Ont., who was operated upon some time ago in the Toronto General Hospital for appendicitis, was able to leave that institution a few days ago for his home and is now well on the road to recovery.

Robert Foster, of Hamilton, has been appointed representative of the Canadian Shoe Findings Novelty Co., of Toronto, to cover the trade in Hamilton.

A. E. Cudmore, who has been in the retail shoe business at 952 Gerrard St., Toronto, has sold out to Albert Chadwick, who also conducts a store at 1560 Danforth avenue. He will run both stores. Mr. Cudmore has joined the Royal Flying Corps for overseas service.

Fabien Tourneur, shoe retailer, of Montreal, passed away recently.

Perry Horsman, of Clinkskill's, Limited, Saskatoon, was in Montreal and Toronto last week on business.

P. R. Corson, of Toronto, has been appointed special representative of Neolin, and is now covering Toronto and the province of Ontario in the interests of this well-known soling material, which is manufactured by the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company.

Samuel Purvis, manager of the wholesale shoe department of the Hudson Bay Co., Winnipeg, was in Montreal, Quebec and Toronto last week on business.

C. E. Lepine, who was for several years superintendent of the Kingsbury Footwear Co., of Montreal, has been appointed superintendent of Canadian Footwear Co., Limited, whose factory is at Point Aux Trembles, Que. Mr. Lepine has had a wide and successful experience in ladies' fine shoes, and previous to coming to Montreal was in Lynn and Rochester with some of the most progressive concerns. Many friends of Mr. Lepine will wish him every success in his new position.

Joseph Watson, shoe dealer, of Sarnia, has sold out to P. J. Taylor & Son.

S. Levine, shoe dealer, of Brantford, Ont., has assigned.

Charles Emery, shoe retailer, of Ottawa, assigned recently.

Ed. M. Foster, dealer in shoes, Edmonton, recently assigned to James A. McKinnon.

John Codallis, shoemaker, of Rivers, Man., has discontinued business.

A federal charter has been granted to the C. E. McKeen Shoe Co., Limited, with a capital stock of $48,000 and head offices in Montreal. The incorporators are Alice B. McKeen and Charles Edward McKeen, of Vancouver, B.C., W. W. Ingledeu, of Kerrisdale, B.C., and others. The new company is empowered to acquire the retail shoe business of Alice E. McKeen, which is being carried on under the style of the C. E. McKeen Shoe Co., in Vancouver.

M. S. and J. L. Chisholm, successors to Alex. Chisholm, shoe retailer, 1687 Dundas street, Toronto, have moved across the street to the store formerly occupied by May Bros. at 1680 Dundas street. The new premises are being elaborately fitted up and will be finished in Belgian grey. When completed the establishment will be one of the most up-to-date of any in the Dominion and embrace many new features.

L. M. Stock, representing the Walker, Parker & Co., Toronto, left recently on an extended trip throughout the Prairie Provinces.

The Department of Militia and Defence has opened a school of shoemaking instruction for returned soldiers at the old Agricultural College, Winnipeg.

Geo. Locke, of Calgary, Alta., spent a few days in Montreal, Quebec, Toronto and other shoe centres recently.

A western shoe store received its price tickets the other day from headquarters and they certainly were some tickets. The lowest priced one $8.00 and the highest $16.00, which is going nicely, compared with the old days of $5, $6 and $7 dollar shoes.

C. S. Corson, manager of the Regal Shoe Co., Toronto, is spending a few days in Boston, and attending an important conference of the various department heads of the company.

A charter has been granted to Aero-Peds, Limited, with a capital stock of $60,000 and headquarters in Toronto. The company is empowered to manufacture, buy and sell in every way goods, wares and merchandise and to purchase the business now being carried on by the Aero-Peds Mfg. Co., manufacturers of ventilated rubber heel cushions.

Fred. P. Beemer and S. A. Bell, of the traveling staff of Blachford Mfg. Co., recently spent a few days in New York and Boston. They report that conditions are in a rather unsettled state and that there is a tendency on the part of the manufacturers to hold back samples. A number of all cloth and cloth top shoes are shown, but it will not be known until the Easter trade is over, how the introduction of fancy fabrics alone and, in combination with colored kid, will take. As for prices, there is another heavy advance, the percentage of increase being higher on the majority of lines than in any previous season.

The rubber issue of "Foot-Prints" is a handsome and neatly arranged publication with a pleasing cover, clear illustrations and excellent letter press. The edition is in every way a credit to the Dominion Rubber System, whose lines are splendidly featured. "Foot-Prints" is a handy work of reference.

At the annual meeting of the Perth Shoe Co., Limited, Perth, Ont., which was held last week, gratifying reports were presented on the business of the past year, which showed a very large increase. The plant is exceptionally busy at the present time and the prospects for the coming season are most encouraging. All departments are thoroughly equipped and Perth lines are now sold from coast to coast. J. A. Stewart was re-elected president. G. H. Ansley, the efficient general manager of the company, was made vice-president and M. J. Sheehy, the capable superintendent was appointed a director. The other directors are George E. Boulter, Toronto, F. W. Hall and W. E. Danner. Hugh O. Donnell was re-elected treasurer and T. J. Maher, secretary.

G. A. Blachford, of the Blachford Shoe Mfg. Co., and C. A. Blachford, of the same firm, Toronto, spent a few days in Boston, New York and other shoe centres in search of the latest style pointers and newest novelty effects.

Smith Bros., of Collingwood, Ont., have removed their shoe store to more central and commodious premises and now have one of the finest establishments in Northern Ontario.

Messrs. Stillman & Wiggins have joined the staff of the Perth Shoe Co., Perth, Ont. The former, who has been engaged with George E. Keith's ladies factory across the border, is now foreman of the finishing room. Mr. Wiggins, who has had an extended experience in large American cities, is in charge of the treeing room.

Alexander Ross, manager of the shoe department of T. C. Watkins' department store, Hamilton, Ont., who has been confined to his room with an attack of pneumonia, is improving.

C. A. Davies, of Blachford, Davies & Co., Toronto, is on a visit to Montreal and Quebec on business.

Spurgeon & Co., of Picton, Ont., will open a shoe store in Campbellford in the near future.

John F. Clark, of Clark Bros., St. Stephen, N.B., and R. L. Savage, of Toronto, eastern representative of the firm, spent a few days in Boston, New York and other shoe centres recently.

J. A. McLaren, of McLaren & Dallas, Toronto, is in Quebec and Montreal on a visit to the trade.

William Harper was found dead in his room at 52 Jackson street west, Hamilton, on March 7th. He had been ill for some time and had resided in that city all his life. Under the name of Harper Bros., along with his brother, J. W. Harper, he conducted a retail shoe business on King street east for some time, selling out to E. A. Cooper. The deceased then went into the grocery line and disposing of that business, he had since been engaged with the Spence shoe store, King street east, Hamilton.

The shoe business which has been conducted by Joseph Watson, Lochiel street, Sarnia, has changed hands, being taken over by T. J. Taylor and son, E. C. Taylor. Mr. Taylor, sr., has been engaged for a number of years in the store of Callum & LeSueur, Sarnia, during the existence of that partnership, and since with R. E. LeSueur. The business will be conducted under the name of the Taylor Boot Shop.

The West End Cut Rate Shoe Store has opened at 1140 Queen street west, Toronto.

The Goodyear Rubber Co. will issue $6,000,000 new preferred stock and $3,370,000 of the unissued common. The preferred has been sold to bankers, and the new common will be offered at par to stockholders to the extent of 20 per cent. of their holdings.

A recent despatch from Calgary says: An information has been laid by S. G. Freeze, president of the Calgary Ad Club against J. B. Douglas, boot and shoe merchant, 234 Eighth avenue west, in which he is charged with having, on two occasions, one in the month of November last, and the other in December, inserted in the Calgary News-Telegram advertisements which imitated those of Richardson's Limited, also boot and shoe merchants, in such a manner as to deceive the public in that he advertised shoes which he did not have for sale and could not get and which he knew he could not get. The case will be heard in police court next Wednesday morning by Magistrate Davidson. A Macleod Sinclair, solicitor for the Calgary Ad Club will prosecute the charges.

The next monthly meeting of the Toronto Shoe Retailers' Association will be held in the Temple Building, Toronto, on Thursday, March 22nd at which Charles E. Howarth, for many years with A. R. Clarke & Co., and now with the Imperial Life Assurance Co., will give an address on "Organization." Mr. Howarth was to have spoken at some length on this subject at the second annual dinner of the Toronto Shoe Retailers' Association on March 8th but, owing to the hour being rather late, voluntarily offered to defer discussion until the regular meeting. It is expected there will be a large attendance. It is probable that the subject of early closing, which received some attention at the recent dinner, will also be considered. The movement in favor of shorter hours for retailers and their clerks is growing rapidly.

An interesting proposition has been made by Montreal East to Clark Bros., Limited, shoe manufacturers, of St. Stephen, N.B., to establish a factory. The firm have been offered exemption from taxation for a term of years and other attractive concessions to build in Montreal East and will, in all likelihood, erect a factory 200 x 50 feet, three storeys high and capable of turning out two thousand pairs a day. While all the details have not been settled as yet it is probable that the new plant will specialize in white goods. Since locating in St. Stephen, N.B., some four years ago, Clark Bros. have enjoyed a wide measure of success with stylish and distinctive creations in women's high-grade McKays. A second plant would enable them to branch out still more and specialize to a much greater extent than in the past. The present well equipped factory at St. Stephen will be continued by Clark Bros.

E. Larose, salesmanager of the Canadian Footwear Co., Montreal, spent a few days in London and Toronto during the past week, showing a fine range of cloth shoes in Cafe-au-lait, Broadway grey and Briar brown, and also some pleasing combinations in Broadway grey and Cafe-au-lait Briar brown and Cafe-au-lait, Briar brown and white, as well as black and white. The models carry Louis heels and eight-inch tops. This style of footwear is particularly attractive for spring and early summer wear, and the company are very busy on all fabric shoes at the present time. They are also showing a nice range of black kid shoes, three-quarter fox and eight-inch top, and black kid with fabric tops, which are taking well.

James Keenan, a veteran shoe salesman, who had been identified with the Slater Shoe Store ever since it opened up business in Toronto many years ago, passed away on March 10th, at St. Michael's Hospital, aged sixty-two years. He had been in poor health for some time but was able to attend to his duties until a few days ago. Pneumonia was the immediate cause of his death. Previous to entering the service of Charles C. Cummings, who conducted the Slater Shoe store until his retirement from the trade in 1914, Mr. Keenan was for some years with John Guinane, selling Slater shoes, and prior to that period was with the old firm of Cooper & Smith, shoe manufacturers. He was born in Brock, Ont., and was unmarried.

The new Easter samples of Clark Bros., Limited, St. Stephen, N.B., show a wide range in all the new cloth tops in silver gray, champagne, chamois, dark grey, and black. The leading colors in kid are silver gray and champagne with cloth tops to blend. The new collar effect on many of the offerings adds a distinctive touch. There is also a nice representation with black vamps and colored tops. The new sport oxfords, with wing tip and higher heel than is usually seen, are very inviting. Dark brown calf and white buck are among the leaders, while the line carries ivory soles and heels as well as other colored soles and heels to correspond. There are several other dainty creations in the new models.

The Provincial Cut Sole Company, who have been doing business for some months on Richmond street west, Toronto, intend removing on April 1st to Kitchener, Ont., where they have secured larger premises on Queen street and will be right in the shoe centre of Western Ontario. The company which is composed of Gregory Hoye and E. B. Pagi, are now cutting both men's and women's inner and outer soles and also counters. They have made splendid progress and, with their new facilities, will be in a better position than ever to take care of the interests of their customers.

The way prices for fall shoes are soaring is something that will startle the retailer, arouse the public and make future buying, to some extent, uncertain. Nearly all lines of women's shoes carry an advance of from one-fifty to two dollars per pair over last season, and in some instances the increase is greater than this, particularly on colored kid high cuts. Men's shoes also show an advance of one dollar

The many friends of Richard J. Walsh, manager of Waterbury & Rising's King street store, St. John, N.B., will regret to learn that he has taken a turn for the worse and is critically ill at his home in Clarendon street. He was recently operated on in the St. John Infirmary, but the relief was only temporary. He is one of the best known shoemen in Eastern Canada.

John Affleck, of the Yale Shoe Store, Winnipeg, spent a few days in Toronto recently on his return after an extended visit to New York, Boston, Haverhill, Lynn and Montreal on a special buying trip. He was accompanied by his wife and little daughter. Mr. Affleck reports business in the west as remarkably good, and the past year was one of the most successful that he has ever enjoyed. He states that he found prices on the other side of the line showing even greater increase than in Canada, and that while cloth and combination cloth and kid shoes are being shown, there has been no great rush for them as yet. People do not seem quite ready to buy. However, it is expected that there will be a fair demand for cloth tops, although others maintain that the selling of kid shoes will not be materially interfered with, as the new fabric creations are only from 50 cents to $1.00 cheaper than the all-leather models. There is a tendency to hang back in the matter of new samples until it is known more definitely what lines are likely to move most freely.

HIGH CUTS WILL STILL REIGN

It looks now as if high shoes will be the reigning style for spring and even into the summer. Of course when the real warm weather comes, it will be high "white" shoes. Pumps will not be side-tracked by any means; they will be worn as much, if not more, than ever. Light grays, champagne and other pretty light colored kids, in the high boots, will be worn throughout the summer, it is thought. The dresses are so short now that it is almost essential to wear the high boots.

All patent leather shoes have been seen recently which are attractive and a novelty. Many pumps, both in the plain and in the Colonial styles are also made up of all patent leather. Browns in combinations and in solid colors will be popular and are seen in many of the leading retail shoe shops.

The sale of women's shoes is not as brisk now as it has been or as it will be. Milady is waiting for the warmer weather and weather that is more pleasant under foot, before buying pretty footwear. Large orders are being placed, however, and there is no doubt but when the proper time comes, shoes will be sold in large quantities, and probably larger than ever before. Markdowns of the past season's styles do not attract the women today. They want shoes that are right up-to-date and they are willing to pay for them.

Cloth tops are being displayed and pushed for all that is possible by the retailers. It is a bit too soon yet to predict just how popular they will be, but the boots with the cloth uppers seen today are certainly attractive and stylish. Some samples have been sold with gray and ivory tops.

In men's footwear the medium shades of tan are being displayed to take the place of the darker shades which were shown to such an extent last year. Wholesalers have large orders on their books for spring delivery.

22-FOOT GOODYEAR SHOE REPAIRING OUTFIT

MODEL N

THIS Outfit represents the highest development in shoe repairing machinery, and meets every demand of modern shoe repairing. It embraces all the essential processes for making new shoes from old ones, giving the maximum of equipment and efficiency in the minimum space. The Outfit has the Goodyear Stitching Machine with all its improvements, including a new style steam generator which uses gas or gasolene for generating the steam, and operates automatically, thereby insuring a uniform heat for keeping the wax in proper condition and requiring little attention from the operator. The Edge Trimming Machine has the new feature of the two shafts, being operated by a single belt, and the cutter grinder is attached directly to the main shaft. This arrangement gives better results with less power.

The Buffing and Scouring Machine has a shaft 57 inches long and carries the following equipment:

- | | |
|--|----------------------------------|
| 2 Split Bottom Buffing Rolls | 2 Flat X-Ray Hee Scouring Wheels |
| 2 "C" Shape X-Ray Heel Scouring Wheels | 1 Heel Breast Scouring Wheel |
| 1 Pin Wheel Pad Complete | |

A powerful Blower System removes the dust resulting from the trimming, buffing and scouring operations, and is designed to overcome certain objectionable features of other blowers.

The Finishing Machine has a 78-inch shaft which has all the necessary equipment for black or russet work:

- | | |
|--|--|
| 2 Corrugated Rubber Shank Finishing Wheels | 1 Corrugated Rubber Heel Finishing Wheel |
| 1 Corrugated Rubber Bottom Finishing Roll | 2 Shank and Bottom Brushes |
| 2 Heel Brushes | 1 Stitch Cleaning Brush |
| 1 Levelling Roll | 1 Bead and Wheel |

At the end of the Outfit is the Oscillating Edge Setting Machine which is fitted with union irons and in its motions duplicates hand workmen with quicker and better results.

Each of the machines is operated independently by a friction drive pulley, so that it is necessary to use only those machines which the operator may require. This feature means a saving of power.

All the machines are firmly mounted on legs and driven by a countershaft with carefully adjusted bearings, so that the Outfit runs with very little vibration, and is in every way most efficient.

We Have the Shoes

This has been proven by our enormous output last year, which has never been equalled by any similar factory in Canada before. And because we have always made shoes with A SNAPPY STYLISHNESS, GOOD MATERIAL, HIGH CLASS WORKMANSHIP and SUPERIOR FINISH, and at a price that makes them extra value, is another reason why TETRAULT GOODYEAR WELTS are the most reliable welt shoe in Canada to-day.

We Have the Styles

We have always been alive and alert to the prevailing styles and have been quick to make what the mode of the great fashion centres decreed. At the same time we have never allowed style to blind us to popular demands, all of which are reasons why TETRAULT GOODYEAR WELTS stand out so prominently in the retail shoe trade.

Independent Invincibles

Those who carry the Independent Brands, say they seem to stand apart from other lines, in the impression they make on the purchaser.

Love at First Sight

Is a good thing in the shoe business, and more especially in rubbers, particularly where APPEARANCE is backed by QUALITY.

The Rubber of Reliability

Style is essential in Rubber Footwear, but Quality is even more important, in a climate as severe as Canada's.

"Independent Rubbers" have Character—that combination of Style, Material and Good Shoemaking, that means satisfaction to the Consumer, and Satisfaction means Sales and More Sales, which is, after all, what interests the Retailer quite as much as the makers of

Independent Rubbers

You can get Independent Rubbers from any of the following:—

What's the use of putting a good shoe on a poor, defective, tortured foot?

The best shoe in the world can not give any satisfaction in a case like this

Fix the foot first. Correct the conditions that cause suffering. Then, your shoes will give satisfaction, and your service will bring rewards. Bear in mind that

There is a
Dr. Scholl
 Appliance or Remedy For Every Foot Trouble

You are only half in the shoe business if you neglect the important Foot Comfort phase. It's profitable and it sells shoes.

Your customers can wear the stylish

Dr. Scholl's Foot Comfort
 Week
 June 18 to 23

At least 20,000 dealers will have Scholl window displays and run local advertising.

HOW ABOUT YOU?

shoes they like, and that reflect credit on you, when Dr. Scholl's appliances are recommended with them.

Interest in Foot Comfort is now at a high pitch because of which is bringing it home to the millions of magazine readers.

Our Tremendous Advertising Campaign

Never was there such an opportunity as now confronts the live dealer who takes up Foot Comfort Service earnestly and ties up to the big Scholl campaign. Ask us for details.

22-FOOT GOODYEAR SHOE REPAIRING OUTFIT

MODEL N

THIS Outfit represents the highest development in shoe repairing machinery, and meets every demand of modern shoe repairing. It embraces all the essential processes for making new shoes from old ones, giving the maximum of equipment and efficiency in the minimum space. The Outfit has the Goodyear Stitching Machine with all its improvements, including a new style steam generator which uses gas or gasolene for generating the steam, and operates automatically, thereby insuring a uniform heat for keeping the wax in proper condition and requiring little attention from the operator. The Edge Trimming Machine has the new feature of the two shafts, being operated by a single belt, and the cutter grinder is attached directly to the main shaft. This arrangement gives better results with less power.

The Buffing and Scouring Machine has a shaft 57 inches long and carries the following equipment:

- | | |
|--|----------------------------------|
| 2 Split Bottom Buffing Rolls | 2 Flat X-Ray Hee Scouring Wheels |
| 2 "C" Shape X-Ray Heel Scouring Wheels | 1 Heel Breast Scouring Wheel |
| 1 Pin Wheel Pad Complete | |

A powerful Blower System removes the dust resulting from the trimming, buffing and scouring operations, and is designed to overcome certain objectionable features of other blowers.

The Finishing Machine has a 78-inch shaft which has all the necessary equipment for black or russet work:

- | | |
|--|--|
| 2 Corrugated Rubber Shank Finishing Wheels | 1 Corrugated Rubber Heel Finishing Wheel |
| 1 Corrugated Rubber Bottom Finishing Roll | 2 Shank and Bottom Brushes |
| 2 Heel Brushes | 1 Stitch Cleaning Brush |
| 1 Levelling Roll | 1 Bead and Wheel |

At the end of the Outfit is the Oscillating Edge Setting Machine which is fitted with union irons and in its motions duplicates hand workmen with quicker and better results.

Each of the machines is operated independently by a friction drive pulley, so that it is necessary to use only those machines which the operator may require. This feature means a saving of power.

All the machines are firmly mounted on legs and driven by a countershaft with carefully adjusted bearings, so that the Outfit runs with very little vibration, and is in every way most efficient.

This is THE PACK for winter wear. The LONG LIFE RECORD OF CHROMOIL Shoe Packs and Moccasins will hold first place forever.

One year of CHROMOIL seems to mark it the permanent leading type. Many other oil tan leathers have had their day and departed. But CHROMOIL gains prestige every month, and it comes too close to a PERFECT LEATHER to ever be far excelled. For your own sake don't get the wrong conception of CHROMOIL. It is an OIL-TANNED leather, but not like other oil-tanned leathers. This basic invention, controlled by patents, has doubled our products efficiency.

Here is our NEW FARM BOOT, for summer wear around the farm, stable or workshop. Made like a boot, with sole-leather sole, and insole fitted with counter, yet has all the comfort of an Indian moccasin. Made with CHROMOIL VAMP, comes in Men's and Boys' 6 and 10 inch tops. This boot is controlled by our patents and is one of our foremost sellers and is a dividend payer to live dealers.

 Morris & Smith,

J 375 K.....$5.00
 Women's black glazed kid welt boot, 8 inch height, full quarter lace, black satin top facing, fudge edge welt, plain toe, 17-8 inch leather Louis heel. Madison last. AA, 4 to 7; A, 3 to 7; B, C and D, 2½ to 7.

The Next Train Going Your Way

That is the service offered on these attractive Spring Boots. No delay is permitted under any circumstances—the shoes MUST be on the next train going your way, without fail.

J 172 E.....$4.00
 Women's black glazed kid, flexible McKay boot, 7½ inch height, circular fox, lace, plain toe, leather half Louis heel. Belmont last. A, 3½ to 7; B, 2½ to 7; C, and D 2½ to 8.

But the big feature about these shoes is their worthiness—the splendid way they perform in the wearing—the stylish fit—the fine stuff of which they are made—their long-lasting good looks, caused by the fact that they hold their shape. These are the things which make them profit swellers and make customers friends.

HEELS

The Greatest Range of STYLES and SHAPES for WOMEN'S FOOTWEAR

Our machines are carefully thought out and built by expert mechanics to overcome the many difficulties often experienced in the manufacture of heels. Many of our customers in Canada will endorse our statement that our heels are mechanically constructed, thus eliminating any troubles resulting from heels not properly constructed.

EFFECT

The heel that gives the finishing touch essential to the success of high-class models in Women's and Young Ladies' Shoes.

The Silvery Aluminum, or Red, Pink, Black, Blue or White Ivoryoid, give all the appearance of a wood heel.

Prettier than the wood heel, they are also better and more substantial. They scour and cut as easily as leather and take on a beautiful finish.

Rochester heels warrant the careful inspection and consideration of every manufacturer and merchant.

THE QUALITY OF

is such that the British Government cannot seem to get enough of these goods. This fact, combined with the shortage of Men and Ships through the war, has made it somewhat difficult to meet the demands of North British Customers in Canada.

THE OUTLOOK BRIGHTENING

With the prospects of an Early and Satisfactory Ending of the Great War, the chances are improving with the North British Goods and Service. We extend our for their Loyalty and Patience, and hope for a speedy resumption of those conditions that will permit our Canadian Customers to carry their full complement of these British Made Rubbers.

IN SOLID LEATHER

Our shoes are built to meet the demand of the greater portion of the General Public. People who, although not calling for extreme styles, yet demand style and neatness combined with real wearing quality—which means value.

And this class of trade, being steady and reliable, is a mighty good class to which to cater.

And then Solid Leather in shoes means something. The customer paying $6.00 for shoes, instead of probably $3.00, wants the real thing for his money, and will not so easily countenance substitutes for Leather.

Three Dollars was considered an expenditure. Whereas Six Dollars is an investment and must pay.

RINEX SOLES

“DESERVE success and you shall win it,” runs the old adage. That explains why the trade has taken so kindly to our new “Rinex” Sole. It completely fills a long felt want and gives such genuine satisfaction that those who investigate its merits have no hesitancy whatever in using and recommending “Rinex” Soles as an alternative for leather soles.

We have the fullest confidence in the merits and good qualities of “Rinex” Soles. We invite the keenest tests. We urge comparisons. The more this is done the more you will be convinced that the “Rinex” Sole is the one sole best adapted to meet Canadian conditions.

If you are a shoe manufacturer and have not put “Rinex” Soles to the test, write at once for full information. If you are a shoe dealer, send for a sample and judge for yourself what this new composition sole means to your trade.

BUSINESS OUTLOOK ON LEATHER AND SHOES

Spring Business Starts Out Well—Everybody Anxious as to Spring Sales —Wholesale Conditions Somewhat Quiet, But Steady—Influence of the War Situation On Conditions

FOR some months the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL has been advising conservative optimism—pushing sales and keeping stocks up to fall requirements. Those who have followed this policy have had reason to congratulate themselves upon their wisdom.

Just now the watchword of the shoe dealer should be “push sales to the utmost while the spring sunshine is with us.” During the next three months the tale will largely be told of success or otherwise in retailing. The people are still in a spending mood, especially in the manufacturing centres, where employment at high wages still prevails. It looks, however, as though in the near future there might be an easing off in industrial activity, and there will therefore be less of the spending enthusiasm. In fact, retail merchants in some districts already note a falling off in the general willingness to pay about any price to satisfy buyers’ whims. It will take a little more pushing to sell goods in the next three months than last fall, and dealers will need to put more ginger into their methods if they are to keep up their sales.

Wholesale trade is feeling the effects of a greater caution in buying on the part of the retailer, and within the past two months has found it difficult to keep goods moving without making concessions. Complaints are heard that retailers have become over cautious and are letting their stocks run low in anticipation of lower prices. From what the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL can gather this is not the case, but dealers naturally have, in the past six months, kept their staple lines well bought ahead and are waiting to see just what effect spring selling is going to have on their reserves. There is no doubt that stocks are somewhat ahead of last year at this time, but they cannot be said to be abnormal.

Shoe manufacturers claim that the situation is easier in some respects and that they have been able to purchase some lines of upper and sole leather to better advantage than hitherto, but that this will not affect the general situation. In all light upper stock there is still a scarcity bordering on famine in some cases, and those who purchase high class goods will have to pay the price. This applies to both men’s and women’s lines, but more particularly to the latter. Fall lines show no tendency towards reduced cost, although the leather has already been bought for them, and manufacturers are selling in many cases subject to change at time of delivery.

The leather situation is practically unchanged and, although hides are easier, the control is really in the hands of packers. Tanners are only buying what they need to keep their plants moving and are finding it difficult to get hides on account of freight congestion, as well as the impossibility of securing the quality required. There may be stocks ahead in some lines, and some of the talk about scarcity is no doubt due to the natural disposition to “bull” the market; but it is safe to infer that any abnormal demand just now for leather would soon make itself felt in increased prices. Nevertheless the general leather situation is easier and unless something untoward occurs there will not be much enhancement in the immediate future.

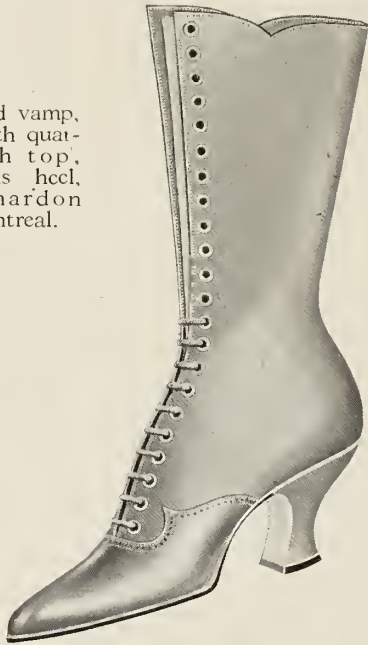

It is a time when everybody might do well to make it his motto to SELL, not recklessly, but persistently. What is needed to clear the atmosphere is the moving of present retail stocks, bought at high prices, and a careful replenishing of standard lines at prices that the wholesale trade will be inclined to offer on account of a similar policy of clearing up these stocks.

The New Effects in Stylish Shoes

The Longer Forepart for Men and Dark Shades of Brown are Features—Some Fancy and Buck Tops—In Women's Foot Toggery Buck Quarters and All Buck Shoes in Grey and Deep Brown Hues are Shown—Fair Representation of Fabrics

THE style changes in the new models of footwear for fall are not nearly as radical as the prices. The retailer will discover this fact soon enough without being apprised of it far in advance. And talking of prices one wonders how much higher they will go. There seems to be an undercurrent of opinion, although no one will come out openly and say so, that the quotations for quality footwear have about reached their limit. There has been a general advance on all lines of men's fine shoes from seventy-five cents to two dollars a pair over last season's figures while the average will likely be about one dollar. In the matter of women's foot toggery, the opening statistics show an all round increase of from one dollar to two dollars and fifty cents. From six to ten dollars per pair will probably cover the different varieties in women's leather foot equipment for autumn and from five-fifty to eight dollars in men's fine black and colored calf shoes.

But this is to be an article on styles and not prices, and to give the reader some idea of what Canadian shoe manufacturers are showing for summer and autumn wear. The majority of the makers have their models completed and while some travelers have been out for the past two or three weeks, it is not probable that all the firms will start their salemen on the road until after the Eastertide period when the business of booking orders will begin in earnest.

In men's footwear the alterations and innovations are never as pronounced or ornate as in women's on which the shoe retailer in Canada has done his greatest business during the past two years owing to so many thousands of Canadian youth being at the front. These were the fellows who spent the money, and went in for all the new effects and artistic combinations. There is probably not a footwear establishment in Canada but has experienced a decrease in volume in the number of men's shoes sold. Perhaps the aggregate receipts, by reason of the higher prices prevailing, may reach the total of the years before the war. Then the average chap seldom paid more than five dollars for a pair of boots. To-day men's shoes are selling all the way from seven dollars per pair up to twelve and fifteen, while eight, nine and ten dollars are the figures which the lords of creation must on the average hand over if they wish an all calf or kid boot, and not a side leather production.

A number of manufacturers, in order to meet the medium priced lines are substituting side leather. The manner in which it is finished and dressed and treated and polished makes it in many instances difficult to distinguish from calf leather. No matter how high a degree of perfection may be reached in the tanning and working up of side leather it remains to be seen whether it will, after a reasonable amount of wear, preserve the texture, lustre, mellowness finish and beauty of calf or kid leathers. There are, however, a number of gun metal and matt sides which cut well and have a remarkably good texture, finish and appearance.

The mahogany, tony red, African brown, cherry, cocoa brown, nigger brown, Zulu and royal purple are right to the forefront. For fall many of these carry full double soles and slip soles, and some are leather lined. The bal is still the reigning favorite, with blind eyelets and plain, stitched and folded tips and perforated wing tips. It would appear that the darker shades which are now much admired will retain their selling predominance for fall. Edges are about the same as last season and shanks have the square effects on all flat lasts.

Heels range from seven-eighths to nine-eighths. A number of buck tops are seen with black and brown vamps, the tops being in fawn, grey, ivory, tan, beige, cinnamon, imperial and castor. There are also some cloth tops in various weaves and colors, the materials being chamois, meltons, broadcloths, haircloths, etc.

Neolin, fibre, tenax, rhinex, leatherex, vulco and many other composition soles are being shown along with solid rubber heels. On the whole composition soles appear to be gaining in popularity, giving as much wear as leather and the fact that there is a big future for the substitutes of leather appears almost weekly when some new product under a new name is announced.

More Extended Foreparts

In lasts the narrow pointed toe is the newest feature. It is probably carrying a four and half inch vamp, and has more character, and individuality than the medium round, recede and semi-recede toes. The effect may be described as the torpedo shape. Practically every firm has put in one or more lasts of this type. The recede drop is brought forward considerably and the new narrow toe last is attractive, being the most radical change in men's footwear.

Across the line many novelties are introduced in the way of fancy tops and quarters, such as alligator, pig skin and other grain leathers, but such pretentious creations are not likely to be worn much in Canada, neither are the elaborately pinked, perforated or scalloped wing tips, foxing, eyelet facings and top bands.

Why? it may be asked. Well, if a youth went around the streets of a Canadian city at the present time with a pair of shoes that make the on-looker wink and blink or so loud in pattern and design that you hear him coming a couple of blocks away, he would speedily be accosted by a recruiting officer and invited to enlist. Among sober, serious thinking men in the Dominion, it is felt that this is no occasion for display or ostentation in footwear, and the element of novelty as it is called, the introduction of spice and gaiety, blend and blase, contrast and combination—which may and does find encouragement and arouse enthusiasm on the part of women wearers,—all this will not appeal to young men at the present time at any rate. Should a youth sport such foot togery at this juncture he would be told many times that he should pay more attention to the needs of his country in this hour of trial, sacrifice and conflict than searching out the bewildering adornment for his pedal limbs.

Patents are coming a little stronger than in the past, and still form the real dress shoe for evening and other social functions. Recede toes are very strong. A number of smart combinations in leather are shown in men's sporting, golf, bowling, and outing shoes with tips and quarters of one color and saddle strap, foxing and eyelet facing of another.

On the whole it may be said that in men's shoes there is little new to be recorded and making masculine footwear to-day is a much more conservative, staple, and steady proposition than catering to the taste and fancy, the fads and foibles of My Ladye Fayre.

Color and Character in Women's

Women's shoes continue to hold the centre of the stage, so far as color and combination, picturesqueness and versatility are concerned. It may be mentioned that, while a number of cloth tops are shown, and there are some wholly fabric creations, these are not being featured to any very great extent just at present time, but may be an after development. Cloth tops are being tried out rather gingerly, and a number of retailers, who have been approached to buy them, will not place an order until after it is seen how the Easter trade pans out.

There are many contrasting shades and blending colors seen in the new samples. The long, slender forepart still holds sway and the vamps show a tendency to lengthen. Many of the models carry from $3\frac{1}{4}$ up to $3\frac{3}{4}$ inches. Toes, for the most part are plain, but on several models, there are wing tips with miniature perforations, and elaborate effects, such as the square throat, wave lines, pointed and circular vamps, ornate and slashed collars, fancy saddle straps, perforated heel foxing, pinked and scalloped eyelet stays. Enamel colors on heels and soles, to match the uppers, add much spice and variety to My Ladye's footwear.

Buck is Decidedly Strong

One of the new things is that buck, either used in toppings or the entire shoe, is coming and is seen in silver grey, pearl grey, smoke grey, taupe, cinnamon, imperial, golden, cocoa, cherry, fawn, ivory and many other colors. In the whole leather boots, there are several new colors, among them the rarest being Burgundy. While colored kid still holds the predominance, yet colored calf is a close runner for popularity.

Cloth tops, several of them carrying chic collars, corresponding with the color of the vamps, are observed in all samples. Heels are slightly higher than last season. This refers more particularly to the pedestal on the English walking shoe or sport last, as it is sometimes termed. Last season the highest heel was about 10/8, but now 12/8 is observed, imparting more snap and dignity to the offering. Walking boots are stepping more and more into favor, and never were so many shown as in this season's presentations.

The High Cut Reigns Supreme

The heights continue to be 8 and $8\frac{1}{2}$ inches, while a few with Cavalier, Hussar, Langtry, Wave, Cascade and other fancy cuts are 9 and even 10 inches. The ebonized Louis heel, half Louis, concave, Colonial, Cuban, Opera, modified Cuban and peg are still in the lead. The leather Louis heel and the modified Cuban appear on the most of the lines.

Another important feature is the number of Neolin, fibre and other soles which are shown on women's boots, as well as rubber heels. Black and white are a strong combination, and patent is coming once more to its own, with toppings of white cloth, white buck, white calf and white kid. On some models there is elaborate stitching, pinking and perforations, but one does not notice inlays, insertions and overlays to the same extent as in previous years.

The Colors which are Presented

In the solid colors, Burgundy, ivory, silver grey and mahogany have a strong representation. Some very pretty shoes are shown with patent vamps and golden or imperial buck tops. Other toppings of cloth are seen in castor, chamois, cornstalk, African brown, pearl grey, beige, plum, brown, taupe, canary and electric. The difference in price between cloth top shoes and leather ranges from 60 cents to $2.00, according to the quality and character of the vestments used. Some of the fabrics come at a reasonable figure, while others, which have distinctive patterns, weaves and shades, cost almost as much as leather.

A number of heels have an aluminum plate, which adds to their attractiveness. Many cloth tops are finished with leather eyelet facings and top bands, to match either the fabric of the quarters or the leather vamp. The lace bal still holds sway, although a few button styles are seen.

White Cannot be Displaced

The darker colors will be worn more for fall, and whites are again to the forefront and come in all kinds of fabrics, buck, kid and calf, carrying ivory soles and heels. There is a wide range of new colors, most of which have been outlined, and while some show shoes or circus boots are made in very deep colors of red, pink, purple, blue and green, they are not likely to find any large call.

The delicate, pretty shades and hues, tints and colors, that are now shown by Canadian manufacturers, make the offerings for summer and fall very chic and neat. Sport shoes of white calf and tan calf or entirely white and tan, and in cherry, mahogany and African brown, have come to save. The demand for walking boots which now have so much style, snap and distinction, makes them decided favorites with My Ladye Fayre. All these shoes carry medium high heels, and the foreparts are not as elongated as in what might be termed the dress shoes, on their slim, slender pointed lasts. Kid, buck skin and suede calf leathers are seen in many models some with cloth tops, worsted and corkscrew being used on the better lines. The whole foxed lace boot and the whole quarter bal appear to be about evenly divided in popularity. There is an imitation Blucher effect and circular vamps are dominant features of many offerings.

Fashion has decreed that the short skirt will continue, and while it may not be so abbreviated as in the past, still My Ladye Fayre is still going to have a chance to reveal her trim ankles, and clothe her feet as becomingly and artistically as she has her head in former days.

Brief Resume of Some Features

The characteristics of the new spring styles are the larger number of cloths of dainty weaves, patterns and design, that are being made up in spring and fall samples in combination with leather, which form an attractive and irresistible appeal. Among the new shades in leather are royal purple, silver grey, stone grey, ivory, eanary, electric, forest fawn, drake, taupe, pampas and coeoa brown. Although it is thought that darker brown hues, such as mahogany, tobacco, African, Havanna, which have been exceptionally popular, may, in a measure, slacken down, nevertheless, for fall, as well as for immediate, they are right to the forefront. Toes are a little narrower than last season, and a little longer, and the slender, narrow front still holds sway in the majority of high class models. The popular heights are $7\frac{1}{2}$ and 8 inches—the extreme altitudes of $8\frac{1}{2}$, 9 and even 10, which were seen last season, are featured to some extent. One of the new things is having the heel and sole enamelled in the same color as the leather trimmings. Another novelty is that the quarters of the shoe, while made up in a certain colored cloth, will be turned out in any other desired shade, to match Miladi's costume, so that she can gratify whatever color scheme may appeal to her as being the most pleasing and becoming. Heels are about the same height as last season, although on the English walking boot, and others for outing purposes, the low heel has given place to one of $12/8$, which imparts more grace and dignity to them.

"I am enclosing you an advertisement by a leading New York shoe retail shoe firm," writes a leading manufacturer of women's quality shoes. You will notice by it this concern is offering white, Paris brown, slate grey and black kid shoes in fine tops carrying Louis Sixteenth heels. They also say: "Concerning the high cost of wearing shoes and the merits of leather vs. cloth for shoe tops, this advertisement is intended to make our position clear on the question of colored leathers versus cloth for women's shoe tops. We hold no brief for tops made entirely of leather—since, as we see it, our sole duty is to sell women the type of footwear they prefer, at prices they like to pay. Cloth topped shoes are perfectly desirable in every way—but the fashionable woman is asking for colored leather shoes. The present extraordinary price of leather has made it impossible for the unprepared retailer to sell this type of shoe, except at absurdly high prices. Hence—a general showing of cloth topped shoes at prices that average about $8.50."

Glazed Kid Will Not Be Cheaper

"If any of our friends or customers are holding off in the belief that they will be able to get glazed kid cheaper, than they will at the present time, we believe they are bound to be disappointed," writes a leading Philadelphia firm.

"During the last few weeks the domestic demand for glazed kid has been light owing to the shoe manufacturers being uncertain as to whether their salesmen could sell the usual quantities of shoes made from leather at current costs and, owing to the difficulties there have been in shipping glazed kid to Europe, where otherwise it could have been easily disposed of right along. The greatly restricted shipping facilities and the enormous cost of marine and war insurance have greatly operated against and, in fact, have made almost impossible the export of glazed kid. Notwithstanding these conditions we have sold good quantities of kid leather, and are now pretty well cleaned up on account of running our works to fullest capacity during this

"I went by the shop of the slothful and the window of the man void of ambition; and lo, it was all grown over with moss and dust had covered the face thereof and the shelves and furniture were all broken down. Then I saw and considered it well: I looked upon it and received instruction. Yet a little laziness, a little shuffling, a little sitting down and waiting for things to turn up. So shall thy poverty come as one that travelleth; and thy want as an armed man."

* * * *

My son, if travellers entice thee consent thou not. If they say come with us, let us load thee up with goods; let us help thee beat the market; let us help thee swallow up thy competitor alive; cast in thy lot among us, let us have a fat cigar to celebrate. My son, walk not thou in the way with them, refrain thy foot from their path. For their feet run to evil and make haste to pile up bills. Surely in vain the net is spread in the sight of any bird, and they lay wait for their own blood, they lurk privily for the axe. So are the ways of everyone that is greedy of goods which taketh away the success of the owners thereof.

* * * *

Say not to the traveller, go and come again and tomorrow I will order when thou hast it by thee. Devise not evil against the traveller seeing thou makest money by him. Strive not with him without cause if he hath done thee no harm. Envy thou not the rough-neck and choose none of his ways, for the churl is an abomination, but prosperity is with the man with the glad hand. A curse is in the house of the growser; but the establishment of the smiler is blessed. He shall receive favor from the traveller and consideration from his creditors, but the name of the kicker shall rot.

* * * *

A wise dealer heareth his neighbor's criticism, but a know-it-all heareth not rebuke. A man shall eat good by a civil tongue but the soul of the harpy shall eat violence. He that keepeth his mouth keepeth his life, but he that sets his mouth going and goeth off and leaveth it shall have destruction. A decent man hateth lying, but a foul-mouthed man is loathsome and cometh to shame. Straightness keeps a straight man on the road but crookedness trips up the shyster. There are dealers that are rich but are as poor in soul as a spring crow, and there are men that are poor outside that are as rich as Croesus inside. There are some dealers that make a traveller thank God for being able to get away from a town, there are those who make him want to pitch his tent and say "it is good for us to be here."

* * * *

A false balance is an abomination to the Lord and a just weight is his delight, but the man who stores sole leather by the furnace and claims short-weight is a brother to him that continually maketh demands upon the wholesaler for shortage. The integrity of the upright shall guide them but the crookedness of crooks shall at length destroy them. The righteousness of the perfect shall direct his way but the wicked shall fall by his own wickedness. The crook assassinates his neighbor with his mouth, but the just shall be delivered by his character. Everybody rejoiceth when a good man gets on and they throw up their hats when the crook gets it in the neck. There are some men so bowlegged in spirit that if they could buy a bill of merchandise straight and make thirty per cent. on the deal they would rather make ten and flim flam the man who selleth them.

* * * *

"Wisdom crieth without; she uttereth her voice in the streets; she crieth in the chief place of concourse, in the openings of the gates in the cities she uttereth her words saying: How long, ye simple ones will ye love simplicity, and the scorers delight in their scorning and the fools hate knowledge? Turn ye at my reproof, behold I will pour my spirit unto you, I will make known my words unto you. But ye have set at naught all my counsel and would none of my reproof. Therefore shall ye eat of the fruit of your own way and be filled with your own devices. For the turning away of customers shall slay you and the prosperity of others who advertise shall destroy you. But whoso harkeneth unto me and advertiseth shall dwell safely and shall be quiet from fear of evil."

Leather Trade Jottings

“WHAT do you think of the prospects of the leather market?” is the question that is asked on every hand these days. The SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL has put the query to some of the best informed and most reliable men in the trade during the past month, and has invariably met the answer in some form or other. “Who can tell?” The men most deeply interested have given up the problem as hopeless under the circumstances and are simply waiting for the next move in the game to develop.

It was thought that the British embargo upon shoes and leather would mean an abrupt change in the situation. In spite of the fact that provision was made for permits, the regulation practically killed two or three million dollars worth of shoes and leather on order. The result was that disposal had to be made of at least a part of this export business, and in some cases prices were naturally cut and the market on this side thus affected to some extent. But the growing probability of the United States entering the war has stimulated the demand and thus offset any tendency towards permanent weakness in the market.

Reports from Russia set afloat since the revolution in that great country have it that large quantities of hides and skins will be freed for export, and some odd shipments that have come from that direction seem to lend color to the theory. But Russia has been using up her raw materials for leather quite as freely as all the other combatants, and with war equipment, shoes and similar requirements pressing, she will need more leather many times over than she has hitherto used. It may be taken for granted that most of what leaks through, will in any case, get to Britain or the other Allies.

In this country and in the United States there is still a large demand for footwear on account of the marvelous agricultural and commercial prosperity. There is no reason to expect any abatement of this situation unless there be a falling away of the industrial activity or a marked fall in the prices of agricultural and other commodities. There may be a little hesitation apparent, but it is quite safe to predict that spring business in shoes will be larger than ever.

Manufacturers of shoes have only been buying for their regular requirements. There may be a few concerns that have bought ahead, but the great majority are depending upon tanners for their supplies for the approaching sorting and fall season. They do not seem to expect any great weakening of the market.

There are reports of surplus stocks of leather of some lines. Sole leather is instanced as being particularly affected by the British embargo since which there has been accumulations of certain grades. But British export business in sole and some other lines has been more than made up by American business which has grown in the past year to such dimensions as to absorb quite a large proportion of any surplus. There has been a slight weakening in certain lines, but for high grade selections the price has still to be paid.

When it comes to the hide question it is difficult to arrive at any definite understanding of the situation. One of the largest hide concerns in the East admitted the other day that it has more hides in its cellars than at any time in two years. In the West there seems to be plenty of packer hides offering and lacking bids, although country hides which are easier seem to be picked up readily. There are a few tanners who are known to have enough hides to last them for several months, and some larger ones who have only enough to keep them going. Undoubtedly the large kill resulting from the war is piling up hides in the hands of packers, who are holding them and are endeavoring to let them go so gradually as not to affect the market.

On the whole the opinion prevails that while the period of extreme prices on leather has passed, there will not be a reversion to former conditions. Leather being produced and marketed to-day is made from high priced hides, and this with the increased cost of labor and tanning materials, precludes any great drop at present or in the near future. In the meantime tanners fearing the immediate result of a sudden cessation of hostilities have been quietly pushing sales which accounts for the present easier situation. The dizzy height attained by both shoes and leather has had that element of danger inherent in all movements of the kind and everybody is planning to get a little nearer earth.

No doubt the next month will clear the atmosphere considerably. Retailers are enjoying the largest spring trade for years. Shoe jobbers are in the market for goods.

With Orders Pouring in, Why Advertise?

To Answer This Question Ask Another: "What is the Assurance of a Normal Demand After the War Worth to You?"

EDWARD S. LABART, of Morris & Company, Packers, Chicago, U.S.A.

IN these days of carload orders, says Edward S. LaBart, of Morris & Company, Packers, Chicago, difficulty to obtain raw materials, transportation facilities or machinery to increase capacities, many manufacturers are viewing their advertising expenses with indecision and doubt.

When a manufacturer is unable to fill all orders received and when every condition affecting his business is abnormal, there is a tendency by many to diminish or cancel entirely their advertising. Yet many hesitate before taking this step, and by that token indicate their allegiance to the tremendous power and influence of advertising along sane and intelligent lines.

Never before, it is safe to say, have similar conditions existed, and a careful analysis and considerable thought is warranted before definite conclusions can be made. The greater the time given to a careful survey of the situation the more convinced one will become as to, not the advisability, but the necessity of continuing to advertise in the face of the very worst conditions possible.

So far advertising has been viewed as being but an immediate force; that is, it is like a piece of raw material, finished, sold and consumed—it has lost its value entirely. This viewpoint, of course, is erroneous. It it were true, then advertising would lose much of its prestige and value.

The effect of advertising done last year is being felt now and will be felt next year and even beyond then. Advertising done now will have its effect later and will be found exceedingly valuable and beneficial when more normal conditions obtain.

Abnormal conditions are necessarily temporary; the usual volume and natural increase continues, unobtrusive and scarcely noticeable, in the flood of abnormal business. Not the entire volume of business is abnormal, and the usual volume of business must and should be protected. Natural increases are obtained through sales and advertising efforts and represent a substantial and definite element in any business. If an increase in business warranted an expenditure of $10,000 or $100,000, then it is surely worth while to continue the investment to protect that increased volume and maintain leadership in the field.

Scattered about the country are many competing concerns, which, too, are running to capacity. They are enjoying prosperity due to decreased overheads and greater sales resulting from a volume of business. They are eager to continue their prosperity, and it is up to the bigger and better known concerns to watch their business details.

The man who is in good health and is pronounced free from symptoms would be regarded as foolish were he to cancel his life insurance policy. So, too, should be regarded any manufacturer who cancelled his advertising because of above-named conditions. In justice to his business the manufacturer should not, at this time, discontinue his advertising forces. They are just as essential to future success as any other element.

Next year, perhaps sooner, more normal conditions will exist, and then there will exist a merry scramble for business. New buildings and added machines to take care of present business, as far as possible, represent investments of many dollars. Naturally, it would be folly to allow that new equipment to stand idle. The manufacturer must have a market to keep his buildings and machinery in operation.

Then advertising done during these and other times must prove its efficiency. This because many new dealers have come during the abnormal times. They have been encouraged and have been served as generously as possible. They must be encouraged to use even greater quantities when normal conditions again prevail. If the concern supplying them continues its advertising policy and loses none of its goodwill, there is little likelihood that many customers will be lost to "the other fellow" who was wise and courageous enough to continue his advertising.

To discuss advertising at any time on the basis of present conditions always is dangerous and leads to nothing definite. As has been stated many times much of the advertising will have its force felt in future years—if continued—when the children of today become consumers and preside over their own homes.

It is well to pay a greater amount of attention to the normal volume and natural increase in business than to the abnormal volume.

Don't overlook the normal volume, nor be blinded by the present abnormal conditions.

Manufacturers must not permit themselves to allow the present to outweigh the future. Advertising done now can accomplish results quicker than at any previous time in the past decade.

And when abnormal conditions do again obtain, those who continue their advertising in these times will find themselves firmly entrenched and in a good position to sell much of the output from their added equipment.

The cumulative value of advertising is inestimable, as is attested hourly.

In conclusion:

If it pays to advertise in dull times, when business is slow, and it is hard to maintain volume, then why shouldn't it pay during times like these, when business is brisk and the demand large?—Printer's Ink.

WHICH MARGIN DO YOU GET—PROVE YOUR PROFITS

Do Not Labor Under any Misconception—How Some Retailers Make Serious Errors—Know That You Have a Profit in Your Till—Don't Imagine Where You Should Be Certain—Figure on Selling Price and not on Cost—How Some Mistakes Arise

THE necessity of watching profits in the shoe business is greater than ever today.

It takes nearly twice as much money to carry the same stock as it did a year ago, by reason of the increased prices of all lines of footwear, particularly novelty shoes. There are many seasonable offerings in colored kid, colored calf and fabrics which the average dealer must stock or he cannot expect to keep business on the move. These shoes cost him all the way from $6.00 to $10.00 and he must, on such lines as these, get a profit of at least 35 to 50 per cent. In fact some footwear merchants are getting from 75 to 90 per cent. They know that the reign of various hues is precarious, that the demands of My Ladye are often very fickle, and something new is emerging all the while. If the retailer has to carry novelties at high prices, he must get a profit corresponding to such investments and what the insurance companies might call "moral hazard." It is now less than a year ago the "Gypsy" button and the "Gypsy" lace boot were all the rage, and today the dealer could not give away "Gypsies" for a song. Various colors have come in and gone out, and the man who takes a chance must get a reward accordingly. On safe, certain investments, like staple "bread and butter" lines, a profit of from 25 to 35 per cent. on the selling cost is sufficient. The SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL maintains that on all novelty boots—giving a broad interpretation of the term "novelty"—the dealer should get a profit of not less than 40 to 60 per cent., and in extreme novelties not less than 100 per cent. Some shoeman perhaps holds up his hands in horror at the thought of asking ten and fifteen dollars for women's shoes, but he must either get that figure for his higher class lines or mark time, be left in the race or find himself not meeting his overhead expenses.

Do Not Deceive Yourself

It is well in figuring profits not to be cheated as many a man is who thinks if he is buying a shoe for \$6.00 and selling it at \$9.00 he is making 50 per cent. profit. He is so far as cost price is concerned, but on the selling price he is only making 33 $\frac{1}{3}$ per cent., and that is not enough these days. All profits must be figured on the selling price, or in other words, the money which you take in. Everything has to come out of the selling price—wages, rent, light, heat, insurance, advertising, delivery, repairs, etc. It does not come out of the cost price, which is frequently a misleading basis or foundation on which to figure.

More and more the alert, watchful business man is figuring his profits on the selling price, in order that he may know where he is at. His cost of doing business and all overhead expenses are based on the selling figure. These facts have been pointed out so often that it seems scarcely necessary to dwell upon them again at great length.

The main thing in buying shoes nowadays is to go carefully and watch your profits. Do not plunge, but, on the other hand, do not be afraid to put in some seasonable selling lines, in order to give a little variety and color to your business, and to show your customers that you have some enterprise and are not afraid to take a reasonable chance.

Of course, there is much diversity of style, but if it were not for these changes in lasts, patterns, colors, trimmings combinations, etc., much of the business that is now done in women's pedal toggerly would disappear. My Ladye Fayre would be inclined to wear one pair of shoes until they became shabby. Now she wears them only until something new and striking is presented, and as she is inclined to spend a certain sum of money anyway on habiliments the shoeman might as well have his profit in the apparel game, as the milliner, the corsetiere and the modiste.

A Chart to Steer By

A thirty-five per cent. profit is carried out in the sub-joined chart which may serve as a guide to what the retailer should pay for shoes selling up to $20 per pair. On all lines retailing at $8 and up to $12 the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL submits that the profit should not be thirty-five per cent. on the selling price but fifty per cent., and from $12 up the margin should not be less than sixty to one hundred per cent.

The foregoing table for convenience sake is made 35 per cent. on the selling price and may help some shoeman to look their business squarely in the face.

A leading Winnipeg footwear dispenser says: "Putting thousands of dollars into shoe stocks is one thing. Putting personal time and services into the shoe store is another thing. We ought to draw a salary from our business each week. The other expenses are bound to be paid. By this item we mean insurance, rent, light, heat, advertising, clerk hire, taxes, 10 per cent. annual depreciation on fixtures, bad accounts, depreciation on stock, interest on money invested in your store, etc. Freight and express can properly be figured as expense or cost of merchandise. After you take your business under consideration, if this chart does not fit your business, make one on the same plan that will; then take out your shoe invoices and see if your mark up will produce the desired result."

Make Certain You Are Figuring Correctly

It is unfortunate but nevertheless true that a good many merchants do not figure their profits correctly. Just recently I was in a shoe store and saw a shoe which I am acquainted with priced at $4.50. The shoe in question sells to the retail trade at $3.60, and as this dealer had told me not long ago that it cost him an average of 20 per cent. to do business, I protested with him that he was not getting enough money for the shoe to give him a profit.

"I am so," he replied in a confident manner. "It only costs me 20 per cent. to do business and I am making 25 per cent. on that shoe."

I asked him to explain how he was making 25 per cent. and he replied, "Why 25 per cent. of $3.60 is 90 cents and 90 cents added to $3.60 is $4.50—the exact figure that I am selling the shoe at."

Do Not Deceive Yourself

He was making the same mistake as myriads of other dealers are—that of figuring his expenses on selling prices and his profits on cost price. The truth of the matter was, it cost him 20 per cent. of selling price to do business, which in this case would be 20 per cent. of $4.50, equalling 90 cents. That was just equal to the gross profit that he was making on the shoe. And he thought he was making a clear profit of five per cent when he was only breaking even.

Let us take another case to show how a dealer may easily fool himself regarding this all important problem of figuring profits. Suppose a dealer buys goods to the amount of $10,000 during the year, selling them at an advance of 25 per cent. on cost, which would make a selling price of $12,500.

THE FIRST AND NINTH VERTICAL COLUMNS SHOW THE COST PRICES; THE HORIZONTAL COLUMN AT THE TOP, THE SELLING PRICES; THE FIGURES FORMED AT THE INTERSECTIONS OF THESE PRICES SHOW THE PER CENT. OF GROSS PROFITS BASED ON SELLING PRICE

Say he figures his cost of doing business at 19 per cent., and forgetting the difference between percentage of profit on cost and selling price, believes that he is making a net profit of 6 per cent. He would, therefore, believe that he would net $600 for the year.

Let us look into the problem and see what he actually makes. The goods are sold at $12,500. The percentage of expense—always figured on selling price—is 19 per cent. Nineteen per cent. of $12,500 is $2,375—the amount it costs to sell the goods. They were sold at an advance of $2,500, leaving a net profit of $125. Yet this dealer mistakenly believed he was making $600. Why? Because he did not bear in mind the all-important fact that 25 per cent. on cost is only 20 per cent. on selling price.

Understand the Profit Problem

In regard to this latter statement, how is it figured out? If an article costs $1 and sells for $1.25, the dealer has made 25 cents on the cost price of $1 or 25 per cent. on cost. But, figuring on the selling price of $1.25, he has made 25 cents, which is only at the rate of 20 per cent. on selling price.

In the same way $33\frac{1}{3}$ per cent. on cost is only 25 per cent. on selling price. Therefore, it will readily be seen that if cost of doing business is 20 per cent. and a net profit of 5 per cent. is desired, or a total of 25 per cent. on the selling price, that $33\frac{1}{3}$ per cent. will have to be added to cost. If the article costs \$1 it would have to sell at $\$1.33\frac{1}{3}$, a profit of 25 per cent. on selling price.

To know what percentage to add to cost price to give a desired percentage on selling price is a problem for not a few merchants. This is the manner in which it is figured out. To know what per centage to add to cost to make 25 per cent. on selling price:

If you make 25 per cent. on $1, goods would have to cost 75 cents.

Figuring on cost:

On 75 cents you make 25 cents.

$$100 \times 25$$

On \$1 you make $\frac{100 \times 25}{75}$ which equals $33\frac{1}{3}$ cents.

$$75$$

Which is $33\frac{1}{3}$ per cent.

By the same line of figuring you will find that to make:

- 22 per cent. on selling price you add 28.2 per cent. to cost.
- 24 per cent. on selling price you add 31.58 per cent. to cost.
- 28 per cent. on selling price you add 38.9 per cent. to cost.
- 30 per cent. on selling price you add 42.85 per cent. to cost.
- $33\frac{1}{3}$ per cent. on selling price you add 50 per cent. to cost.
- 35 per cent. on selling price you add 53.846 per cent. to cost.
- 40 per cent. on selling price you add 66.67 per cent. to cost.

Shoeman Coming to Bat

The shoeman is at last coming to his own. The day of the five, six and seven dollar shoe in fashionable, snappy lines is over. There is no good of quarreling with conditions that have contributed to the present status of footwear prices. They are here to stay, possibly for a long time. No doubt shoes will drop at a later date, but what that date is no man can tell.

Too many dealers altogether are losing money by incorrect figuring of profits. I would advise every dealer to take a short time to really make certain that he understands the profit problem. It is better to spend half an hour reasoning out the correct figuring of profits than to go on sacrificing profits daily as so many dealers are today. I have known dealers to be positive that their method was right when it was absolutely wrong and they were losing money daily.

How to Find Cost Price

The figuring of profits continues to be a big problem with retail merchants. One of the questions that frequently puzzles merchants is how to proportion percentage of profit on selling price to percentage on cost. A Montreal reader writes us as follows:

When I want to make, say 20 per cent. profit on the selling price of goods, what percentage do I add to the cost price, and how do you find it?

We will take 20 per cent. on selling price and follow the method of reasoning by which it is reduced to percentage on cost. You want to make 20 per cent. on selling price or 20 cents on $1.

Cost of article must, therefore, be 80c.

Therefore, figuring on cost:

On 80 cents you make 20 cents.

$$100 \times 20$$

On \$1.00 you make $\frac{100 \times 20}{80} = 25c$.

$$80$$

This equals 25 per cent. Therefore 20 per cent. on selling price equals 25 per cent. on cost. If an article cost $2.00 and you want to make 20 per cent. on the selling price (which you always figure expenses on) you must add 25 per cent. to the cost price, which is 50 cents. Therefore the article sells at $2.50.

A much simpler method of securing the percentage to be added to the cost price is to use the following formula. Let "X" represent the percentage of profit it is desired to make on the selling price. Then:

$$\frac{x}{100-x} = \text{percentage to be added to the cost price.}$$

Working it out in actual figures, if a dealer wishes to $$20$$

make 20 per cent. on selling price he adds $\frac{20}{100-20}$ or

$$20$$

— of 100, equalling 25 per cent. to the cost price.

$$80$$

Suppose a dealer buys goods at \$2. His cost of doing business is 17 per cent. and he wants to make 5 per cent. net profit, or a total of 22 per cent. on selling price. He must add or $\frac{22}{78}$ of 100, equalling 28.2 per cent. to cost.

28.2 per cent. on $2 equals 56 cents, so that the article will have to sell at $2.56.

This formula will greatly facilitate the figuring of the selling price of shoes for the merchant and he would do well to memorize it or paste it up in a conspicuous place in his office.

Remember the percentage of cost of doing business and profit are figured on the selling price.

ALDERMANIC SHOEMAN STARTED SOMETHING

Ald. J. H. Hodgson, of Hamilton, Ont., who is a shoe retailer in that city, and also chairman of the Board of Works, apparently started something, says a Hamilton despatch, when he remarked recently that the price of shoes would come down if the women would be content with tootsie coverings of normal height. Recently the alderman received an important communication from Toronto asking for further information and the action which the city council took in the matter.

The alderman's reply will not be encouraging. The council nor the special high cost of living committee have not even considered the suggestion.

"I still think it's a good scheme," said the alderman. "Some of these shoes the women are wearing are so high not more than two pairs can be made from a hide." But he ducked when it was suggested that they were made high to "hide" what the abbreviated skirts would display.

KNOW HOW YOUR STOCK STANDS—DON'T GUESS

The Value of a Simple Workable System—Advantage of Using Numbers to Represent Different Lines—Method Outlined for Keeping Tab on Sales and Facilitating Sorting—Using White and Red Cards or Book with Two Sheets for Each Number

By G. W. BROCK

"I WOULD just as soon try to sell shoes without display windows or competent clerks as to endeavor to get along without a proper stock-keeping system," remarked a leading Hamilton shoe retailer the other day.

"In these days when footwear, even in staple lines, runs into double as much money as it did two or three years ago, the importance and necessity of efficient stock or record keeping is more vital than ever to success in the retail shoe line. How can any merchant expect to clear a reasonable sum each year on his invested capital if he keeps tab on his goods only in his head or by means of guess work. He must know what lines bring him a handsome return and what ones are causing him a loss. He should, by a process of elimination, get rid of all stickers, shelf warmers and hangers-on. He should know at any moment how many pairs of such and such a range he has on hand, how many he had sold in the last week, month or six months. In order to realize intelligently just in what position he is, he must have some reliable system or he is taking big chances on coming out at the small end of affairs sooner or later, overstocked and short on cash."

Of Systems There is No End

There are systems galore, some complicated, abstruse and involved, taking more time to carry them out in all their details than the average retailer can spare. One can systematize a business or a selling staff to death and commit as grievous errors in this way as in having no system at all. There are so-called systems which tell the operator nothing that he really wants to know. They give him returns that he has "about" or "in the neighborhood of" or "around" so many pairs in stock and has sold "approximately" so many pairs. There is nothing definite or certain and at best they are not much better than guesswork or mere estimates.

The object which I have in view in this article is to outline a simple and effective plan suitable for both large and small retailers. Of course, any system that is worth while will require a little time, patience and effort. If it did not its value would be a negative quantity. One of the biggest things in the retail shoe business today with its many perplexities regarding styles, prices, sales, turnover, profit figuring, sorting, help hire, etc., is for the dealer to keep his lines in such a way that he may be able to find out at any moment just what he has on hand, what ranges of footwear are moving and how many pairs he has sold, etc. It is almost impossible for any shoe merchant to know where he is at if he simply sells a pair of shoes and puts the money in the cash register, without making a record of the kind that he has sold, the stock number, size, width, selling price, etc.

Check Books Are Essential

The use of check books is advisable for every man. They cost but little and without them, or some similar method of tabulation, the shoeman is likely to be at sea, drifting here and there like a ship without a rudder or compass. Many a store-keeper—we will not dignify him by the use of the term merchant—has been doing business for years, thinking he has made money, and some day he wakens up to the fact that he has nothing ahead of him and his life work has been in vain. All he has got out of the game is a living and perhaps a precarious one at that. Of course, in the discussion of this question, the proper figuring of profits and shrewd, careful buying are potent factors, but it is not within the province of this dissertation on stock-keeping to enter into a discussion on these phases of the subject. They have been dealt with time and time again in special articles.

One wonders why so many men in the shoe game do not have more system. They seem to look askance at any reasonable, feasible proposition in the line of method, arrangement and order. The result is that they never know where they stand and frequently are at sixes and sevens in the location of some particular shoe, size or width which they desire. They flounder around and think it must be here or there and the customer who is kept waiting forms an unfavorable impression not only of the man but his business qualifications. It costs practically nothing to do things by system and whatever is worth doing in this world is worth doing well or not at all.

The Use of Stock Sheets

Think what it means to your success and standing to know just where you are at all the time. I will endeavor to show the use of stock cards or stock sheets. The same may be converted to suit any merchant in the shoe line trade either by taking out different widths or by making such ruling of the sheets as will meet his particular requirements. On the stock sheet illustrated is given an idea of how sizes should be put down and crossed off. Each mark means a pair and each line crossed off means one less in that size and width.

I will begin with the man whose store is large enough to use standard size cartons to fit his shelves and has his own label put on them.

For this man it will be easier to establish his system of stock-keeping than for the one who uses everything as it comes from the manufacturer.

Why not have a system of numbers? The following I think would be useful and practical. Numbers from one to ninety-nine should be used for men's high cuts; from one hundred to one hundred and ninety-nine for men's low shoes including house slippers; from two hundred to two hundred and ninety-nine for ladies' high cuts; from three hundred to three hundred and ninety-nine for ladies' low shoes; pumps from four hundred to four hundred and ninety-nine; ladies' evening shoes and house shoes from five hundred to five hundred and forty-nine; for boys' high shoes from five hundred and fifty to five hundred and ninety-nine; for boys' low shoes and house slippers from six hundred to six hundred and forty-nine; misses' boots from six hundred and fifty to six hundred and ninety-nine; misses' oxfords, pumps and slippers from seven hundred to seven hundred and forty-nine; youths' and little gents' boots from seven hundred and fifty to seven hundred and ninety-nine; for youths' and little gents' oxfords and slippers from eight hundred to eight hundred and forty-nine; children's high shoes from eight hundred and fifty to eight hundred and ninety-nine; children's slippers and oxfords from nine hundred to nine hundred and forty-nine; infants' boots from nine hundred and fifty to nine hundred and ninety-nine. Use from one thousand for different articles, such as moccasin slippers, moccasin and skating boots if the dealer handles same.

By using your own labels, which will be put on your special size cartons at the factory, and giving your salesmen one of your own numbers for each new line which comes in, so that your shoes will come from the factory stamped with the proper number and size, all that is left for you to do is to put on the selling price. The dealer should have a stock book in which are numbers from one to one thousand and over—as high as his numbers go—in which he can keep track of the cost of each line, from whom he buys it, selling price and description of same.

If the following season he buys a shoe to take the place of one of a previous season, and from a different manufacturer, he should make the change in his stock book so that he may know what he has on hand. Do not wait until the shoes have been ordered three months before you send numbers for the lines; give the particulars to the salesman so that there will be no mix-up. It would be wise for any dealer using this system to keep all the numbers for tans, patent leathers and calfskins separately. By doing it this way, it would be easier for him to remember that a certain section of numbers is for tans, etc. The cartons should bear no descriptions whatever, and you will find the salesman will get accustomed to the numbers, and the cartons on your shelves will look much neater than with a whole lot of writing or stamping. After the salesman has made a sale he should put down the number of the shoe, the size and selling price.

Go Over the Checks of the Day

In order to keep tab on the stock a set of cards such as the one shown should be printed, and each night the checks of the day should be gone over and the different sizes of each line crossed off the sheet. After the checks have been gone over they should be tied together, with a slip bearing the date and filed in a box for further reference. If the stock comes in all the sizes in different widths, they should be entered on the stock card, so that when the sizes are marked off at the end of each day the dealer can tell just how many pairs of each line he has left. By using this carefully, the retailer will be in a position to tell just how he stands at the end of each day. He will also find it very handy for finding out which line sells better than the other, and will know just what to do when it comes to re-ordering.

If an exchange is made, the pair returned should be put down on the check and also the pair taken so that, if in making up the day's business one pair of ninety-four—seven D has been crossed off, when it comes to the exchange it can be added again and a pair of another number crossed off. The system may appear confusing but it will be found much easier than it seems, and will save thousands of dollars to a shoeman. It requires very little time and expense. If the dealer prefers to make this system more perfect, he should have red cards printed the same as the white stock cards, to indicate the stock on order. For instance, have a white card for number one and a red card. When ordering put down on the red card the different sizes in different widths, so that you can refer to it any time and be able to know just what you have coming in.

Say, a dealer finds that a good selling line number ninety-five should be sized up. He looks up number ninety-five red sheet and finds that he has forty pairs coming in. By comparing the white stock sheet, telling him how many pairs he has in stock and the red stock sheet telling how many are coming in, he is in a position to know just what sizes he will be short after the first order arrives. On the white check sheets, the date a certain line came in should be put down, and on the red sheet the date that the sizes were ordered and when he expects them. If necessary to make extra sheets for each number when more goods come in do so, so as to be able to tell just how long it takes to sell the best part of a number of pairs. If the dealer uses white and red cards they should be about five by nine inches and should be kept in a box built purposely for them. If he prefers he can use red and white sheets in a loose leaf book.

Stockkeeping for Small Retailer

Now we will take up stock-keeping for the small retailer who doesn't buy enough to have standard shelving cartons and his own labels. This man puts everything on the shelf as he receives it from the manufacturer. He can have sets of cards in white and red exactly as described in this article, or a book made specially for it in two colors, or an ordinary book in which he can use two sheets for the same number, one for shoes in stock, and one for shoes on order. As we understand that shoes from manufacturers are marked in all sorts of numbers he should arrange a certain portion of his cards or sheets in his books for men's shoes and other portions for ladies' shoes, boys', youths', misses', children's.

Carrying out the system in this way and using check

SHOE RETAILERS INAUGURATE EARLY CLOSING

Petition Will Be Circulated Asking Toronto City Council to Pass Necessary By-law—The Step Enthusiastically Endorsed—Inspiring Address on the Benefits of Organization—Business Man Who Neglects to Support the Association is Criticized

EARLY closing has been given an impetus in Toronto and the shoe retailers have at last made a move in the right direction.

At the regular monthly meeting of the Toronto Shoe Retailers' Association held in the Foresters' building, on Thursday, March 22nd, the proposition was thoroughly discussed.

It was decided that a petition should be presented to the city council asking that body to pass a by-law, to the effect that all shoe establishments close at six o'clock every Wednesday night during the entire year, nine o'clock on Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday nights and eleven o'clock on Saturday night.

These hours are to apply to every week except those in which a holiday occurs, when stores may keep open as late as they do on Saturday night.

Under the provisions of the Ontario Act if three-quarters of the firms engaged in any line of business sign a petition and present it to the municipal council, that body is compelled to pass a by-law which is enforced by the civic authorities and every one has to fall into line. It is expected there will be no difficulty in securing the requisite number of signatures. Messrs. W. T. Fegan, S. B. McCall and J. A. E. Snider were appointed a committee to act with the executive in prosecuting this matter and seeing that the proper steps are taken. While the early closing movement is not as radical as many would like, still it will ensure shorter days in many of the district and residential stores, which have been in the habit of keeping open until all hours every night. Of course, most of the Yonge street dispensaries have for years been in the habit of shutting up at six o'clock every night except Saturday night.

In reference to a Wednesday half-holiday it was left to the shoemen in each section of the city to come to some mutual arrangement for the summer months and already the east end stores are enjoying a weekly respite from duty one afternoon and evening each week.

President H. C. Blachford presided and there was a very large attendance, the most representative for many months. The effect of the recent dinner has been to "ginger up" the members and set them to work. R. S. Ritchie, 357 Roncesvalles avenue, resigned as a member of the executive, and J. H. McLelland 297 Danforth avenue, was elected to succeed him. The success of the second annual dinner was referred to and very favorable comment heard.

Organization and Business Building

Charles E. Howarth, who was for many years with A. R. Clarke & Co., and now with the Imperial Life Assurance Co., gave a highly interesting and edifying talk on "Organization," for which he was tendered a hearty vote of thanks. He said that organization was an arrangement of forces by which the best results might be obtained, and that business building was the power of making permanent and profitable patrons. In union there was strength and in every business there were four departments—the executive, the financial, the purchasing and the selling. All were independent and each an integral and indispensable part of the whole. There must be co-operation between these departments and nothing could be accomplished unless all worked together for the common good. No institution was stronger than its weakest department and the combined efforts of all departments made profitable distribution possible. If then any given institution would serve well, to the end of getting and building profitable business, it must look well to every department. Every branch had a bearing upon the success of the institution, which was not a one man concern and one department was not more important than the other. All were important and dependent and if one lagged, or fell, all would suffer. All had a place and part and must fill it.

Progressive, Aggressive and Earnest

For an association to be successful, it must be progressive, aggressive and earnest. The members must have sincere faith in themselves and in their fellowmen. Frequent change of methods was desirable, as they must not get in a rut nor slavishly follow old proceedings. The Association must be made attractive. Each man must go out after new members and create interest and enthusiasm. "He profits best who serves most."

C. E. HOWARTH, TORONTO, ONT.

Mr. Howarth dwelt upon the benefits of Association and told how the members must feel a sense of ownership and be part of the organization. They must render service, report all complaints and difficulties, make suggestions and ask questions. He was a firm believer in a question drawer.

Man worked more cheerfully in company than he did alone and the reason that members did not accomplish more was because they did not attempt more. There was no such a thing as standing still. The executive and the officers must lead and inspire the others. To sell to others in business the goods must be well sold and the customer satisfied. The same fundamentals and principles held good whether in leather, shoes, groceries, hardware or in association work. He referred to the necessity of system, method, organization and efficiency. The more efficient an organization was the less costly it was to conduct. Efficiency involved three elements—intelligence, ability and energy—so related and organized as to most economically produce the largest desired effects.

Improve Ethics of the Trade

“What is the precise purpose of the association—what is its aim, what is its goal? It is to improve the conditions and ethics of the trade. What is meant by ethics? It is that science which seeks to determine the fundamental distinction between right and wrong in human conduct. The mere fact that a certain practice is customary is no longer accepted as evidence that it is ethical or moral. There is often a great gulf between morality and conventionality. Men closely associated are apt to experience the clashing of self-interest, which gives rise to moral problems. Honesty cannot be regarded as the sole necessary virtue in business and duty often demands much more of a successful business man,” declared the speaker.

The old saying of “let the buyer beware” is losing its significance today and any big business was impossible if allied with humbug, deceit, or misrepresentation. Legally the buyer must still be on guard to be sure that the goods received are what they are believed to be, but because of rising standards of ethics, buyers find markets where they can place implicit confidence in the representation of the seller. Ralph Waldo Emerson had said “that every man takes care that his neighbor does not cheat him, but the day comes when he begins to care that he does not cheat his neighbor,” and then all goes well.

Golden Rule and Square Deal

The essence of practical ethics was found in the golden rule, the square deal, and when this is practised on every side there will dawn a brighter day in business. The man who does not co-operate with his competitors in an effort to raise the standards, enforce the laws and prevent unfair practices is ethically recreant. Mr. Howarth spoke of the splendid work of trade journals in elevating and inspiring high ideals. A general desire to raise the standard of business accounted for the great increase in the number of business associations, and one of the objects was the establishment and maintenance of codes of ethics or honor. A business man, who neglects to support the association organized for the good of his line of business, neglects a real duty and passes up a great opportunity for service, mutual improvement and benefit.

In conclusion, the speaker emphasized the principles of organizing, harmonizing and sympathizing and congratulated the Toronto Shoe Retailers' Association on the excellent progress it had made, the enthusiasm which characterized its proceedings and the high representation of its membership. He felt that it was doing a great, useful work for the welfare of the trade, individually and collectively, and wished it increasing power, prestige and development.

WHY SHOES ARE SO HIGH IN PRICE

F. A. Guinivan, of Toronto, proprietor of the Walk-Over boot shops in Montreal, Quebec and Toronto, recently spent a few days in Quebec. In a recent issue of the Quebec “Telegraph”, an interview with him on shoe and leather conditions appeared and his review of the situation will be read with interest. Mr. Guinivan said that the increase in the price of footwear is perfectly legitimate and quite logical, considering the circumstances. It would be difficult to find a product the price of which had more justification for increase than leather.

The price of boots and shoes to the retailer has doubled and shoe dealers are now buying their stock in the United States at prices for which they retailed the same boots a year ago. As for the cause it is common knowledge that every soldier who goes to the firing line carries leather in some form as part of his equipment. Besides his boots, he has a belt; and, if he is a cavalryman his saddle, etc. The cavalry regiments of Russia use a whole calfskin as a saddle blanket and when one thinks of the thousands of skins used in this manner alone it is easily seen that an enormous supply is needed to fill the demand.

The shoe industry of this continent has long depended on Russia for the greater part of its supply of calfskins, but since the beginning of the war the government of Russia has not permitted the exportation of any hides as they are needed for army purposes. In the finer grade of footwear nothing older than calfskins is used. When the calf goes to graze for the first time it ceases to be a calf; its skin is classed as cow-hide, for the skin quickly becomes tough. Owing to the need of preserving food supply there are naturally restrictions concerning the slaughter of young animals which also adds to the scarcity of that class of hides.

The Balkan States are the principal goat raising countries and leather manufacturers have always looked for them for their kid leathers; but, since the outbreak of war, they too have ceased to export. As they are killing the goats for food they do not kill them when young so that it is next to impossible to get kid skins.

Australia being the greatest sheep raising country in the world has, hitherto, supplied all the necessary hides but it will be remembered that the drought last summer killed millions of these animals. It is also well known that the British and Russian governments each ordered one million sheep-skin coats for their soldiers. Since three skins were needed for each coat, six million sheep will be needed to fill the order.

Mr. Guinivan said high prices were bound to prevail for some years after the war had ceased. It would take at least three or four years he thought for conditions to become normal again. Substitutes for leather are being experimented with but as yet nothing practicable has been developed. At a recent shoe and leather convention a man had a shark skin which he proposed as a substitute for leather. Some of the coastal waters of the United States abound in sharks and perhaps it will not be long before their hides will be used to make footwear. However, one point about the use of substitutes is that once they become popular and in demand the producers will raise the price until it is as high as the price of the original article.

SABOTS NOW WORN IN ENGLAND

England, faced with an acute leather shortage, is adopting wooden shoes, commonly known in the Netherlands as clogs, says a recent despatch.

This situation, which before the war would have been hooted by John Bull, today is faced calmly. Measures have been taken looking toward the development of the already established business of making clogs.

To quote the Textile Mercury, of Manchester, on the subject: Hundreds of London school children are now wearing clogs, which cost about three shillings a pair (73 cents) and London County Council school teachers have been providing clogs for ill-shod pupils, who have been paying for them by weekly installments of three pence.

The price of leather, states a writer in the paper mentioned, suggests that the city man of the future will clatter to business in his clogs. “For country wear one can buy an elegant pair of lace-up clogs at a quarter the price of equally efficient boots.” Apart from the attention that they would attract, there is no reason why these should not be worn in “town.” There is nothing undignified in the clog worn by the Lancashire or Yorkshire textile worker. Not a few of the captains of the textile industry have themselves worn clogs, and some at least would not be ashamed to wear them again.

The present home demand is so great that an order for 100,000 pairs of sabots for the Belgian government has just had to be declined by a British clog-making firm.

HOW TO GET BEST RESULTS IN SELLING FINDINGS

Live Section of the Shoe Business in Which Every One Can be Much Interested — Carry a Representative Stock, Have Neat Show Cases and Make Attractive Displays—Trade is Worth Going After as Most of the Articles are Easily Handled

By C. H. LAKER

A DEPARTMENT too frequently overlooked in the ordinary shoe store in these days of high priced footwear is the findings.

"Too small to bother with," "have not the time," too much detail," "not enough turnover," or "I am selling shoes not trinkets," are the excuses often given by certain retailers for not devoting more attention and care to this branch of their calling.

If you have adopted such an attitude is it not about time that you changed it and gave the "small or trifling things," as you are pleased to call them, a fair chance. The profits run all the way from thirty-three to over a hundred per cent. and that is more, Mr. Retailer, by a good deal than you clear on your shoes. Put in a special findings window now and then and give your articles a chance. Many excellent arrangements can be made and any specialty manufacturer or findings house will lend you assistance and attractive show cards.

The sale on findings is a constant, steady, remunerative one. There are always seasonable articles that can be pushed. What steps are you taking to improve your findings department this spring? If it is at the back of the shop, move it up to the front. Have you a neat display case or do you let things find a place where they will? Do you ever adopt any consistent and up-to-date method to bring these small items of merchandise before the public? Now is the psychological moment to introduce specialties and different brands of polishes, creams, cleaners and pastes, daubers, brushes, round and rifle laces, polishing outfits, heel pads, etc. Never were so many colored shoes worn as at the present time and never let your findings department lag behind in interest, supervision or proper representation.

Many stores impart a good deal of interest to the findings department by allowing clerks a P.M. on their sales. This has been found to work out to advantage, to both employer and employee.

One enterprising Toronto store has a blackboard erected in the rear portion of the establishment where the sale of findings of each clerk is posted every Monday morning. They do not allow "spiffs" on the sales in this department, but a record is kept of the business done in findings by each man and, on the total for the month, the salesman who tops the list gets a prize of ten dollars and the next five dollars. At the end of the year the clerk showing the greatest personal interest in the findings branch and having the largest string will be given a trip to the leading shoe centres along with the buyer and thus have a splendid opportunity of seeing many things in the factories and metropolitan stores. The blackboard idea has more than doubled the sale of findings during the past few months and promotes a friendly rivalry among the members of the staff. So far no less than five clerks have won premiums and they find the extra pocket money very useful in these days of costly living.

No matter how small the store there is a profitable business to be done in findings. Why should the trade in polishes, brushes, rubber heels, cleaning outfits, laces, etc., go to the variety store, the druggist or the grocery.

Why Not Handle These?

Here are a few footwear auxiliaries on which you can specialize. How many of them do you carry?—Rubber heels, heel pads, insoles, laces, arch supports, foot powder, foot balm, union protectors, toe straighteners, shoe trees, brushes, foot soap, polishing outfits, ankle supports, heel plates, toe plates, leggings, dubbin, fancy buttons, attractive bows, ornaments, patent leather restorer, colored kid cleaners, shoe horns, soft soles, boudoir slippers, skate straps, corn plasters, ice creepers, rubber soles, leggings, dressings, traveling kits, cleaning holders, button hooks and many other things too numerous to mention.

Turned His Stock Eight Times

One western dealer who realizes the profit possibilities of the findings department, stated that he had turned over his stock eight times last year. "We gave to salesmen who disposed of findings and handled them to best advantage liberal cash prizes. Naturally the boys got on the alert to earn a little extra money for their summer holidays. They did not, however, carry any suggestions to extremes or become too insistent, which might result in driving away the customer. They offered real service by mere mention, pointers or inference, but did not make themselves disagreeable to a customer. In this way I maintain that my clerks rendered good service, both to the customer and to the firm and learned a good deal in selling initiative, originality and efficient salesmanship."

The enterprising retailer should carry practically everything in findings, not a large stock of any one article, but half a dozen or a dozen articles of every kind, so that he can catch the nimble 5, 10, 25 and 50 cent pieces, the same as the variety or notion stores. There is little danger of a findings stock, if it is carefully watched, growing shop worn, or getting out of style. In fact, to have real pleasure in selling findings, the retailer should put in a silent salesman showcase. If you can only afford one in your store, place it directly across the entrance of your establishment, a few feet back of the doorway. If you can afford two show cases, it is well to set them diagonally—one on each side of the entrance, and if your stock cannot be contained in these display containers, glassed-in shelves are very helpful in the matter of surplus goods.

We find that it is a trade worth getting after, especially as most of the articles are easily handled and sales quickly made. There is no fitting, no argument over widths and sizes and no long discussion on styles, lasts, shapes, height of heels, thickness of soles, etc., which often enter into the sale of a boot, and consume a lot of time. We find that findings are the easiest articles to sell, but you must give the department some sort of decent treatment.

The Pulling Power of Findings

Not only in financial returns are findings worth while, but they are one of the greatest feeders that a shoe store can have. They induce people to come to your establishment, and once persons get the habit of dropping in on you for small things—as dressings—for every kind of colored leather that is now on the market has a special preparation—polishes, rubber heels, shoe trees, insoles, heel treads, over gaiters, leggings, arch supports, brushes, laces, fancy button hooks, ice creepers, heel plates, fancy buttons, insoles, ankle supports, skate straps, bunion protectors, corn plasters, etc., they are going to come for their shoes as well, for we all are largely creatures of habit.

The shoeman or any enterprising salesman does not lack opportunity to exercise his talents with such materials to work on. Naturally, the sale of findings can be developed by initiative and executive ability, and several employers judge the selling talent of a clerk by the amount of business he works up for the findings department. Findings are largely an index of the initiative and foresight of any salesmen, who are often rewarded according to their showing in this department.

Many of the leading shoe stores in the down town section of large cities have separate findings departments, which are generally in charge of a lady, who possibly has the sale of the hosiery, garters and other accessories in connection therewith. The department pays, and pays well, but in the ordinary small city or town shoe shop, the volume of business to be done in findings may not prove sufficient to warrant the placing of a special clerk in full charge of the department, and it is for the average shoeman that these pointers are presented, and timely suggestions offered.

It is better, however, as already stated, to keep the department separate, and let one or two clerks have supervision over this section. A careful record should be kept of all findings, so that in the matter of stock, there is no running short on certain lines. Boom findings every day in the year.

Little Opportunities With Big Possibilities

Oh, there are many ways in which the public may be taught to appreciate the comfort and convenience of findings which should prove a big profit element in your store. Shoe and foot requisites should ever be kept to the front, as the handling of these is the means of developing little opportunities that mean much in the aggregate. There is no earthly reason why people should go to a drug store when seeking relief for foot ailments such as corns, bunions, chilblains, burning or sweating feet. The average findings house can supply suitable remedies and, once a shoe merchant has given a remedy or an article to a patron that affords relief, then the recipient becomes a fast friend of the store, and recommends it to others.

In these times every lever that the retailer can bring to bear upon his business should be grasped. Every facility, convenience or contrivance that will tend to display findings to better advantage may well claim the serious attention and consideration of the shoeman. There is always something new being offered, and when the traveler for a findings house comes along, listen to what he has to say. Accord him a respectful hearing, for he is often the bearer of good news in the way of ideas on how to increase your findings sales, how to display your goods, and how to open up new avenues of business.

"Now," observed another shoeman, "I might tell you a great deal on the facilities of showing findings. Never let your showcases or wall cases get littered or badly mussed. The top of the showcase may be devoted to good use, as various handsome receptacles are frequently given by the findings houses to their good customers. Every facility that can be used to advantage in exhibiting findings should be adopted."

It may be pointed out that retailing consists of three important elements—sales, expenses and profits—and it is well known that extra sales make extra profits and findings are an augmented source of revenue. One enterprising retailer suggests that a neat price card or price button be attached to findings articles when displayed in the window, the same as is done in showing most lines of shoes. Such an announcement arouses the interest of the public and conveys just the information that many want.

Seasonable and Timely Lines

Another pointer on the display of findings is that all articles shown in this department should be seasonable and timely. As one humorously inclined clerk put it—"It does not pay to show ice creepers or skate-strings in August, or cricket or golf spikes around Christmas time." There are enough all-the-year-round staples to fill a window at any season. Occasionally, for the sake of variety, by dressing a window with one article alone a good eye-catcher is provided and sales stimulated thereby. With laces, dressings, polishes, overgaiters, arch supports, insoles, leggings, shoe lifts, bows, hooks and buckles, the resourceful window artist does not lack material for contrast and can arrange his display in telling combinations, and these remarks apply to inside showcases as well.

Again I say, boom findings. It is the most profitable department in the shoe store and profit is what you are after these days. See that you get it.

RETAIL SHOE BUSINESS IS GOOD ALL OVER CANADA

How are Stocks, What are the Prospects for Spring and Summer Trade and of Placing Orders Now for Fall Shoes, and How are the People Taking to the Increased Cost of Footwear?—Here are Views from Every Part of the Dominion

“WE have found business for the last few months very good—in fact, better than corresponding months of previous year, and prospects for a continuance of good business appear to be bright for the spring trade,” writes a leading retailer from St. Thomas, Ont.

“The public, generally, seem to be reconciled to the advanced prices which they are compelled to pay for footwear. This is especially true in regard to novelties, in which case, as a matter of course, prices are very much higher. In regard to conditions in shoe stocks, I am not prepared to speak with authority, but only in a general way. Traveling men tell us it is an exception to find retailers overstocked. In our case, we are carrying more than our usual stock, but this surplus is composed of staple shoes, bought at prices of a year ago, and so you see we have nothing to worry about in this respect. Regarding fall buying, I do not think it would be wise for any retailer to buy at present prices anything more than required to fill his actual needs. Should the war close in the meantime, prices might take a temporary drop, during which period stocks would, no doubt, be replenished.”

Not Doing Much Fall Placing

A Portage avenue dealer, Winnipeg, says: “I saw the high prices coming and bought heavily in all lines. I am not giving big orders for fall just yet, but may do so after Easter. They will be light and on safe, conservative lines. Business has been very good with us since the first of the year, and we had the largest holiday trade on record. Our total increase in 1917 over the previous year was thirteen thousand dollars. People, especially the ladies, make no complaint of eight, ten, twelve and even fifteen dollar boots, if the footwear has the snap, go and character to it. They recognize that the days of the five, six and seven dollar shoes are a thing of the past. In return for their extra outlay they get style, dignity and glove fitting qualities in novelty footwear which they never did before. The eight and nine high cuts are very popular, and our best sellers have been various shades of grey and African brown, with a few ivory and champagne. The lighter hues will likely prevail through the summer. The prospects are that white will be more in demand than ever. The English walking boot with the higher heel and wing tip is much admired. I am prepared to take chances on future supplies, and think prices have reached their highest level. Footwear will never go back to the low figure at which it sold before the war. This is my opinion, and I may be wrong, but there is a limit to all things.”

Likes the Immediate Ordering

A Barrington street merchant, Halifax, takes the following view: “My stock is very heavy, and I am not going to place any orders months ahead as in the past. Styles change so rapidly that one does not know where he is at for a very long period. I think that the tendency of leading firms is to make samples, especially in women’s footgear, about four times a year and then go out and sell for immediate. Who can tell what women will wear next fall. I am doing some immediate ordering, but that is all. Trade has been fairly good during the past two months and we look for a record turn over at Easter. The high prices for novelties are freely paid by those who want style, dash and distinctiveness in their footwear. I regard values at present as being too high to carry any more stock than I have at present. If the war should end quickly now and I should be caught short, the loss would be greater than having to pay any increased figure for orders taken later. You know that there is a limit in all things and I think the top notch has been reached in shoe values.”

What Fine Weather Does

A Peterborough shoeman declares: “I am full up, am not placing any business just now for fall, only doing some sorting. Trade is opening up fine and the few nice days that we had recently when persons could go around without rubbers, gave us the biggest week’s receipts that we have had since the Christmas rush. Regarding prices no one can tell where they will go and one man’s guess is as good as another’s.”

“We look forward to a real good business this coming spring,” asserts a Smith’s Falls, Ont., retailer. “Our business for March this year was away ahead of the same month last year. High prices do not seem to bother the people very much. In fact it seems a good deal easier to sell a woman a seven dollar shoe than it was a five dollar boot a year ago. As far as we are concerned our buying for next fall was done last fall, and we are stocked up to the hilt. Consequently there will be no buying by us to amount to anything in leather goods for the coming autumn. Trade during the winter and so far this spring has been good.”

Time for Cautious Action

A well-known firm in London, Ont., remarks: “Regarding stocks we would say that in our experience they are extra heavy with most retailers, and we cannot see where a shoeman will use his best judgment in going ahead with purchases for fall as in the past seasons. We believe this to be a time for cautious action, and the merchant who buys for his immediate needs only is not going to feel the pinch as severely when the reaction sets in. We do not anticipate that prices will ever recede to where they were about a year ago, but believe they are altogether too high at present. Business with us is good and we do not experience much difficulty in selling the expensive lines. We look forward to a very satisfactory spring and summer trade.”

Stock Twenty Per Cent. Heavier

A Chatham, Ont., shoe dealer, takes the following perspective: “I think retailers are pretty well bought up on staples and perhaps have somewhat more than usual of fine goods as well. Our stock is 20 per cent. heavier than at this time last year, but we will have to do considerable buying for fall, on mostly fine shoes and rubbers. Trade for January and February was good. The first half of March was very quiet, but this week with fine weather is picking up fast. We look for as good or even a little better business this spring and summer than a year ago, although 1916 was 30 per cent. better than anything we ever had before. We find six dollar and seven dollar shoes good sellers for both men and women, but over that price pretty slow.”

As Readily As At Old Prices

“From what I have seen and in my own case I would say that retailers are pretty well stocked up with goods,” writes an Ingersoll, Ont., bootman. “I do not intend to go in for much buying for fall. As far as customers buying the higher cost footwear, I would say that they are purchasing quite as readily or more so than they did at the old prices.”

MONTREAL, QUE.

They are now educated to present conditions in the shoe arena and are anxious to get a pair or two before they go up some more. I think that spring and summer business will be good, especially in white canvas goods. Of course, this town has been pretty steady and there is a lot of work for all, which no doubt makes trade better than it is in some places."

Put on Sales to Finance Things

A Talbot street merchant, Aylmer, Ont., observes: "I think retailers are stocked to the limit with shoes, in fact, so much so that they have found it necessary to put on sales in order to get money to finance their business. If a shoeman to-day has a large stock and could finance his business all right, why should he put on a sale when goods are so high in price, and so hard to get in certain lines. Business from January up to the present is a little less than last year for the corresponding period. While the volume is about as usual there are not so many pairs sold. Many people come in and expect to pay more for their shoes while others again will think the lowest priced boot you have is too dear and go out. The prospects for spring and summer business are very fair but had the farmers in 1916 a prosperous year, the outlook would have been much better. Collections since January have been the best that I have ever known. I am not purchasing any goods for fall, and as long as the present high prices stand I will sell from my stock as long as I can, and sort very carefully. My stock is about four thousand dollars heavier than last year, mostly on staples."

Will Do Some Fall Buying

A Calgary merchant says: "Business is now good, and prospects fine. Our stock is heavy, but we will do some fall buying especially on heavier and staple lines. The high prices do not appear to adversely affect trade and are paid quite willing with but few kickers. You will always get them anyway no matter at what figure you sell goods. On the whole we view the outlook with confidence and courage, and have little cause to complain."

A Voice from the Coast

A big firm in Vancouver say: "We have done more business during the past two and a half months than last year by $4,600, but we have not sold so many individual pairs. The higher prices result in the augmented receipts. Our stock is very heavy and we are ordering only a small amount for fall. As far as we can learn others are in the same position as ourselves. The one thing which has made business good with us is the novelty shoe on which we average 50 to 60 per cent. profit."

Fifty Per Cent. on Novelties

"Business good—ahead of last year for the same period. We will order some goods for fall but more for immediate use. It seems to us quotations have reached a level. There are mighty few customers who are going to pay over ten dollars for shoes, eight is a more popular price. Spring trade is opening up fine. We get 50 per cent. profit on the selling price of all fancy colored kid boots which is thirty-three and a third on cost. This is none too much." writes a St. Catherine street east shoeman from Montreal.

From Edmonton comes the following: "Trade with us very fair so far, March shows big increase. I think most shoe houses are overstocked. We are going to sort up on the lines we have, and what people we cannot satisfy will have to go elsewhere. A shoe man has to buy carefully, use good judgment, and not plunge in these days of distracting prices."

Down by the Sounding Sea

"Yes we are overstocked or we would not have held a big sale last month," replies a St. John shoe house. "On all shoes bought a year ago which are good sellers we get replacement values. What is the use of doing business at no profit. Considering the high cost of living shoes are not dearer than anything else in comparison. The people know that the present time is an abnormal one and values are naturally higher in practically every necessity of life. We do not think that the old popular price of five dollars will ever return. The seven dollar shoe will be the best seller, and as the people are all earning more money they can afford to pay a fair figure, if they get good shoes. We are looking for a big Easter business. Trade since the first of the year has been fair, but with nice spring days there will be a decided stimulus given to things."

Says Stocks are not too Heavy

"I think there is no truth in the report that is going around about retailers being over stocked," is the opinion of a Brockville shoelist. "In my own case I am down to normal. In my opinion there will be no heavy buying done for fall. The fact that manufacturers, to a great extent, do not intend making new fall samples is an indication. I think that they do not expect the retailers to buy excepting as they need the goods. I presume that there are a great number of retailers like myself who are not buying very liberally, particularly in ladies' fancy goods, because they expect the manufacturers will produce a strong line of cravanette shoes in the near future. We find the public are offering some objection to the high prices within the last month, more so than they did some time ago. Contrary to the general opinion I believe the public will wear low shoes earlier than usual on account of the extreme prices of the high shoes. It does not seem to be any question about this season going to be the biggest white one we have ever had."

Will go Very Carefully

A Goderich, Ont., shoelist, writes: "I think, generally speaking, the retailers of boots and shoes through the country are carrying pretty heavy stocks. The reason for that is that there have been advances so often that they were buying heavier, while the prices were lower. We ourselves will buy a little in most lines for fall, with the expectation of the war being over this year, and possibly things becoming somewhat easier. In regard to trade during the past six months it has been exceptionally good with us, and it looks as if we would have a fine spring and summer business. People are expecting higher prices and we are not having much trouble in getting them. The hardest lines to get the advances on are boys', youths', misses' and children's goods."

Will Buy Them as Needed

A Wyndham street dealer, Guelph, Ont., replies: "I do not think at the present time that the retailers are doing any extensive buying. While it may be alright to do so even at the prices as they are to-day, I think that the majority of them, at least, as far as I am concerned, are going to take a chance on the high price shoes and buy them as needed. A year ago I did considerable speculating in heavy placing. Any one who did made money, but I am going to be one of those not placing to any considerable extent for fall business. Business at the present time is exceptionally good, and people seem to have the money, I do not see how any retailer can buy shoes for six or eight months in advance at least, and I do not intend to do it. While the jobbers have had a big business in the past few months I think they will find it hard to get business in future as prices are so uncertain that it greatly hampers the sorting trade."

A Belleville, Ont., shoe firm say: "As far as we are concerned, and as far as we know about other retailers, stocks are very heavy. We do not intend to buy any leather goods for fall, only what we are forced to have. We do not believe it a safe investment for any man to lock up his money in the new fancy shoe prices. Trade is good with us and people pay the new prices with not much complaining. There will be an immense tennis trade done this year on account of leather goods being so high."

A Brantford footwear concern observes: "Our stock is exceptionally large, and our buying for fall will not be as heavy as in former years. Our business for the past months has been extra good, and our customers take very kindly to the higher prices. We have prepared for a big business for spring and summer."

Buy Now—Why Not He Says

A Kingston shoe dealer writes: "My stock is not too heavy and I intend to give placing orders both for immediate and for fall. I do not see why I shouldn't. There is no money to be made in hanging off as I am of the opinion that the longer one hesitates the higher the price of footwear will go. There will be no reduction in prices until after the war, and just when the European strife will end, no man knows. I am selling more eight and ten dollar boots than I used to at five and six. People expect to pay high prices and if they get style, snap and attractiveness that is all they are looking for. Business has been very good during the past few months and the recent warm days have sped up trade to a considerable extent."

The Procrastinators Will Suffer

A Yonge street merchant, Toronto, said: "Of course, I am going to order for fall in the more staple lines. I have done so already. What is the use of hanging back. I hear a great many merchants declaring they are not going to do this and not going to do that and will take chances, but I am proceeding along in the regular way. True our stock was heavy, but the recent nice days have cleared it considerably, and we will have to do a lot of sorting. I am going strong on dark browns for fall as I believe they will be good sellers. The popularity of African, Havana, nigger, tobacco and other shades of the brown family is undoubted. Nine and ten dollar shoes to-day are as popular and saleable as those at half the price before the war, and if quotations ascend I am confident the people will pay the figure without murmur or complaint."

There is Danger in Delays

A Sherbrooke, Que., firm writes: "Yes we are ordering some for fall. Why shouldn't we? There is danger in delay in the present state of the market. In our opinion shoes will not be any cheaper for a year at any rate. We know several have been declaring ever since the advance started that footwear was bound to decline, but somehow or other the figure has kept aviating, and is likely to until the war closes. I am no prophet, but I think one who buys now judiciously, even if he is a little heavily stocked, will be glad that he did so. Our stock has been pretty heavy right along, but we reduced it considerably by a successful sale in February while the recent delightful weather wrought wonders."

A Kitchener firm, who have been doing business for many years, observe: "While we are pretty heavily stocked at present, we are doing some ordering for fall. It is always good business to buy a moderate amount on a rising market. Trade has been very fair so far this season, March loomed up particularly well. We are getting the price for expensive footwear without much kicking. We do not look for any decrease in shoe values for some time."

A Dundalk, Ont., man says: "I would say that I have heard merchants discuss the difficulty they experience in getting enough goods, their orders for boots and shoes being filled by instalments. Owing to the unsettled conditions at present, and the uncertainty of the future, merchants are not ordering extensively for future delivery, being governed largely by the idea that prices cannot go 'very much higher.' The buying public are pretty well reconciled to the fact, now that everything is dear, and will pay the extra price for their footwear as gracefully as they do for other things, with the exception of potatoes. As there is almost a boom in agricultural and commercial Canada this spring and summer, the boot and shoe industry should naturally be right in line. Trade has been steady, but lacking in volume to make it active."

Big Things for In-Stock Houses

"I can only answer for myself," responds a St. Catharines retailer. "I have a full stock and still the people are clamoring for all new fads. Millinery ain't in it compared to the novelties in shoes this year; the colors and shades

THE JOURNAL BRINGS RESULTS

The Shoe and Leather Journal,
Toronto, Ont.

Dear Sirs,—We wish to express our appreciation of the splendid results obtained from the insertion of our "Pontiac" ad. in March 1st issue. The numerous inquiries and requests for samples we have received, prove beyond a doubt, that your valuable Journal is well read by the trade, and is the proper medium for the advertiser to reach the retailer.

Respectfully yours,

THE RELIANCE SHOE CO., LTD.,
Toronto, Ont. (Signed) P. E. Rivett.

of the rainbow fall into insignificance, with all the htes the ladies ask for. It is mighty hard to do business these days, years ago a shoe was a shoe. I do not believe any extensive buying will be done for fall, the high prices and changeable ideas will, I believe, put it up to the 'In stock' houses. I would imagine the limit is reached, and with the uncertainty of the world's great changes, one scarcely knows what to do, but I for one am going to try and get my stock down.

"We have found trade good during the last few months, the reasons everybody is working who wants work, wages are high, many complain about the price, but what's the use. It is a case of take them or leave them. Some customers go out saying, 'I won't pay that price for those shoes,' but frequently they come back. One man came back after we quoted a certain shoe at $6.00. He said he would only pay $5.00. He went to other stores and when he returned he said a clerk that waited on him, when told what he would pay, remarked abruptly, 'you don't want shoes very bad,' and turned away from him. This fellow came and paid us $6.00.

"One other reason for more money in circulation is the closing of the saloons and liquor stores. I know men who were beer soaks and would grouch at paying $2.50 or $3.00 for a pair of shoes, who now willingly pay $6.00 to $7.50, and no grumbling. Their wives and families are better provided for and are living happier. NEVER AGAIN for the liquor game, with capital letters, is our sincere wish; other crimes are lessened as crime goes with the boozier.

"The spring and summer business looks good at the present time, if some sudden panicky feeling don't come to put in a set back. Our advice is to go cautious and have the sails ready to take in a reef if occasion demands."

HOW TO SELL MORE SHOES TO THE MEN

The Time has Come When the Boot Business Can Develop More Rapidly Along the Lines of Sales to the Lords of Creation by Introducing Some Striking Effects— Many Want a Boot a Bit More Attractive by the Use of Contrasting Colors

The fact that retailers have been slow to realize the advantage of featuring novelty shoes for men is brought out in a recent letter from a leading manufacturer to the "Dry Goods Economist." It might have added that many manufacturers are equally slow to see the value of such a development.

"We will never get all that is possible in volume and profits out of the men's shoe business until we do with it just what we are doing with the women's business," he writes. "In other words, we have got to introduce the novelty element in men's shoes. The sale of dressy shoes for men is on the increase because retailers in larger cities have started to feature stylish shoes for men.

"The dealer must be prepared, however, to put through a campaign of education. He cannot expect to put over novelty shoes for men as he did for women. It takes longer for a man to change his habits. One season a man looks and doubts; the next season he decides that stylish shoes are not so bad after all and purchases a pair for himself, or decides that he will have a pair the following season.

"In buying novelty shoes for men, however, care must be taken to select shoes which will not offend because of effeminate color combinations or gaudy ornamentation.

Keep Stocks Moving

"The merchant who starts to sell novelty shoes to the men of his city must be prepared to find his progress disappointingly slow. In my first season, for example, I found a considerable portion of the stock left on hand at the end of the season, but I cleaned it out. The stock had been bought with the full idea that part of its cost should be charged to advertising.

"I hesitated at first about cutting the price to clear out the stocks. A cut price on women's shoes, I know, will go a long way towards killing the style. The cut price did not, however, have the same effect in the case of men's shoes. On the contrary, we found that most of the men who bought the shoes at a cut price like them so well that the next season they bought at the regular prices; and, of course, it is only a step from this before they get into the much desired 'extra pair' class.

Keep to the Middle Sizes

"One difficulty in the handling of novelty shoes for men is the problem of fitting. I recommend that the retailer take the bull by the horns and confine himself to the middle sizes in novelty shoes, at least until such time as he gets a good percentage of his customers educated to fancy footwear.

The question of selling more pairs of shoes to men is pretty well summed up in this manufacturer's statements. The time has come when the shoe business can develop most rapidly along the line of sales to men. To show how great the opportunity is it is worth while to consider the the recent census showed 104 males to every 100 females in this country. Yet the sale of women's and misses' shoes, according to the same census report, outnumbered those of the men's and boys' shoes by over 20,000,000 pairs per year.

For Business Wear

In selecting novelty shoes for men just remember that the shoes are not for "Sunday-go-to-meetin'" wear. You want to sell men's novelties for every-day wear.

Don't let your experience with women's novelty shoes mislead you into thinking that men will also "go the limit."

No style is too extreme, no color combination is too gaudy for some women to buy and wear, but men have been taught for the last century to be conservative in the matter of their clothes. And you have got to seek the conservative, rather than radical, shoe styles if you are to make a success of men's novelties.

The very word "style" suggests change. The difference between lace and button shoes, for instance, may seem a small matter; yet it is just such small matters that go to make up your first step toward creating styles for men. Since men have been in the habit for the last few years of wearing lace shoes, to the exclusion of button shoes except for very dressy evening wear, a considerable percentage of your novelty men's shoes should be of the button variety.

Comfort Must be Considered

In short, what men want is an ordinary, durable, comfortable, every-day shoe, made a bit more attractive by the use of a top of contrasting color to that of the vamp.

Some few men will buy patent leather, but the majority want a calf shoe with calf or fabric top—a shoe that will look "nifty" but feel comfortable and give satisfactory wear.

With the stocks well selected, the balance of the fight to get men to accept novelty shoes sums up in constantly displaying the shoes in the window and talking them and showing them to customers in your department.

HOW TO FIGURE TURNOVERS

What is the correct way to figure the number of times a stock has been turned in a year?

Divide the average stock on hand during the periods, at cost, into the sales for the period at cost. Or divide the average stock on hand during the period, at selling prices, into the sales for the period.

For instance: Suppose the sales are $100,000 a year and the goods these sales represent cost $50,000. There are four inventories during the year, showing the stock on hand at each time to have cost $12,000, $10,000, $8,000 and $14,000, and to have been marked to sell for $24,000, $20,000, $16,000 and $28,000 at those times. The annual rate of turnover would be figured either this way:

$100,000

$24,000 + $20,000 + $16,000 + $28,000

4

Or this way:

$50,000

$12,000 + $10,000 + $8,000 + $14,000

4

Which in either case is 4 6-11; since

THE GREAT WEST AND WHAT IT STANDS FOR

Business is on a Firm Basis and Prospects for the Coming Year Are Exceptionally Bright—What the Abundant Harvests Have Meant—Many Prosperous Cities Which Are Becoming Live Distributing Centres—Wonderful Progress on the Retailers' Part

WESTERN CANADA, the great inland Empire of the Dominion, is, was, and ever will be, the one great last West of the civilized world.

Like all pioneer countries, it has gone through its epochs of ups and downs; its times of prosperity and adversity; its periods of inflated values, serious depressions, real estate booms, crop failures, oil discoveries, "Come On" literature, and "Hip, Hip, Hurrah" enthusiasm, and slow reaction. But now its speculative and artificial aspect has disappeared, and it is on a sound, normal progressive basis.

The prairie provinces and British Columbia are marching forward with a solidity of a battalion, and the sweep of a siege gun. Much has been written about the West, much more will be written—figures telling of its vast area, its steady increase in population; the thousands of acres under cultivation and thousands yet to be upturned by the plow share. The great coal districts, the navigable streams, the available water powers, the splendid timber resources of the far West, the wealth of its mines, the value of the fruit in the Pacific coast province—all this and much more has been rehearsed so frequently that perhaps something along a different line would be more readable.

In years gone by, it was the practice of every man who paid a visit to the illimitable stretches beyond the great lakes, to return East and make an estimate of the probable wheat crop. In 1901 when the present King of England, then the Duke of York, visited Canada, he was enthusiastically received at every spot which the royal train touched in its route to the coast. In fact, it is reported that in those days, the greetings were a little too effusive to be altogether relished by His Royal Highness, for a veteran Alderman in one of the cities, who had lived in the East all out 1860, (the time that the late King Edward, as Prince of Wales, toured Canada), was on the reception committee that greeted the Royal visitors. He was presented to the then Duke of York and extending his long, lean hand, grasped that of the present King heartily. After looking it for several seconds, he exclaimed, in a burst of confidence: "Glad to see you, your Royal Highness—very glad, indeed. I had the pleasure of meeting your old man in Eastern Canada, over forty years ago."

However, in that year, the Duke of York was about the only man returning from the Western Provinces who didn't talk about wheat. In a humorous reference to his visit a Montreal paper said: "The Duke of York had returned East after an extended tour to the Great West. So far as we are able to learn, he is the sole traveler of any note who has not made an estimate of the Western wheat crop. This fact alone would single him out for distinction."

That great Western wheat crop may be taken over by the government this year, if present plans are carried out, and used for the feeding of the armed hosts in the fighting zone. The cry has gone out to "produce, produce," and the West is nobly responding. All the cities and towns have recovered from the boom period, the frenzied real estate carnival, when values increased one hundred fold over night, and the all encircling lot environs of many a town of 2,000 population were spacious enough to house a London or a New York.

The legitimate channels of business are now being pursued; the land will be worked for what it can produce, and not to create artificial wealth.

"Why, had not the war come on or something of that character struck the country, there was danger," remarked a humorist, "of every province being laid out in suburban divisions." However, the boomster, the speculator, the fakir and the shark have disappeared by the process of elimination and now things are on a suitable, substantial basis. Cities are growing steadily, in spite of the large number of enlistments, and building, while not being undertaken on the tremendous scale that everywhere existed before the war, is nevertheless going on at a satisfactory rate. Business has been improving each year and the outlook for the coming season is exceptionally bright. In no line is this more in evidence than in the wholesale boots and shoes. There are more than eighteen shoe jobbing concerns between Winnipeg and the Coast, who carry heavy and representative stocks and have travelers regularly visiting all the smaller towns and cities. This is not taking into consideration the Western branches of the rubber footwear manufacturers, which number fully a score.

The West is getting to be a great distributing point for footwear of all kinds and although there is only one shoe factory—that in British Columbia—still the day is not far distant when there may be several shoemaking plants all across the expansive West. Winnipeg, Brandon, Regina, Saskatoon, Edmonton, Calgary, Moose Jaw, Vancouver and other cities have well-equipped warehouses stocked with representative goods, and lines peculiarly adapted to meet the needs of the teeming population of the boundless prairies.

Speaking of trade conditions generally, a thoroughly conversant authority says: "Nineteen hundred and sixteen was one of the most surprising years that Western Canada has ever experienced. The cereal crop was not very much more than one-third of 1915. We were in the throes of war. We had a shortage of manual labor, and by all the rules of the game we should have been suffering commercial depression. The actual facts, however, were just the reverse. Business has improved by leaps and bounds, and it has taxed the energies of the wholesalers to take care of their orders; in fact, they have not been able to do so.

The torrent of commercial liquidation that threatened to engulf us two years ago has dried up almost entirely.

"The records in our offices show wonderful progress on the part of the retail merchants; instead of carrying overdue accounts, retailers are now taking their cash discounts, or, at any rate, paying their bills at maturity or within reasonable reach of maturity. The Credit Men's Association takes to itself some credit in helping to bring about this state of affairs.

"Wholesale stocks are cleaned up so far as old lines are concerned. It has not been a question of the retail merchants picking and choosing what they wanted; it has rather, owing to the shortage of goods, been a question of taking what they could get, hence the happy position of most wholesalers to-day of having absolutely clean stocks. There is a tendency in some quarters to believe that retailers have unnecessarily loaded themselves with high-priced goods, and if this is so, 1917 will tell the tale. Nineteen hundred and sixteen has brought prosperity to the farmer, to the retailer and to the wholesaler. It is rather peculiar that notwithstanding the shortage in labor, salaries if anything, had a downward tendency; the wave of economy that set in in 1914 not yet having receded. The prospects for 1917 are abnormally and rather overwhelmingly satisfactory."

SASKATOON—TWENTY-FIRST STREET, LOOKING EAST

Once called the "Postage Stamp" province, Sir John A. Macdonald said that nothing could check Manitoba. This prophecy, made many decades ago, now rings true throughout the sister provinces of Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia. "It will not be many years," said a speaker who has closely studied western conditions, "before the balance of population will be west of the great lakes, and the preponderance of inhabitants will give the prairies the majority of representatives in the federal house."

It is an interesting question whether Winnipeg will not some day be the capital of all Canada, by reason of her central situation and her entrance at the gateway of the prairies. Some years ago the late Sir Richard Scott, secretary of state, aroused considerable interest in Canada by a discussion of the probability of the seat of the federal government being removed to a western city. It was in connection with the nomination of his son, D'Arcy Scott (now vice-chairman of the Dominion Railway Commission), as mayor of Ottawa.

Although the matter was taken up by Sir Richard merely as a pleasantry or an interesting speculation, his utterance was reported in the newspapers at that time and received wide comment in the press. Not that anyone took the suggestion too seriously, but the subject afforded an excellent one for discussion. The prediction was then made that within the next quarter of a century, western Canada would outnumber eastern Canada in population. It may take a little longer to outstrip the east as originally predicted, by reason of the war and other drawbacks—then not foreseen—but the west is coming. Perhaps some sinister-minded individual will say: "Yes, a long way off." But often long distances grow very short in this accelerating and expanding period. The rapidity with which things move in the west is an encouraging movement on all sides.

In this edition of the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL will be found the announcements of several leading western Canada wholesale shoe houses. Their advertisements appear in the forepart of the book and are well worth perusal. They contain much timely and interesting information on what different firms have to offer to their customers at this season of the year.

EMBOSSSED LEATHER MEDAL FOR MR. WHITE

"The Champion Fisherman of Canada" Honored at Trade Function—Will Wear the Decoration Suspended from Porpoise Necklace—His Valor and Achievement in Angling Pursuits Appropriately Recognized—Other Contestants to Challenge Him

HUGH WHITE, of Toronto, is the champion fisherman of Canada. He has received the embossed leather medal donated by the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL for this unique distinction and proudly wore it on his breast when calling upon the shoe manufacturers of Montreal and Quebec, last week.

The Board of Arbitration composed of "Billy" Martin, of Montreal; Capt. "Jimmy" Scott, of Quebec, and "Phil" Pocock, of London, were unable to agree upon a verdict. After taking due consideration of the protest entered by Narcisse Gagnon, of Montreal, and Fred. Marois, of Quebec, on the ground that a porpoise was not a fish, but a "cetacean mammal," Mr. Pocock, of London, who represented Mr. White, contended that the weight of evidence was in favor of his man. Finally the others offering no tenable objection, the award was duly made, although not signed by them. Mr. Pocock on his recent return from Quebec to London, spent a day or two in Toronto and spread abroad the glad news. Mr. Gagnon is not altogether satisfied with the verdict, as he claims that some fifteen years ago he caught many a porpoise weighing in the neighborhood of eight hundred pounds, while that landed by Mr. White tipped the beam at only four hundred and fifty.

As for the aspirations of "Jim" Robinson, his entry not being in true and regular form, has been declared null and void. Upon investigation by eminent experts, it is learned that the proportions of the fish that Mr. Robinson is alleged to have captured, were greatly exaggerated, and that what he and "Jim" Young landed was only a 23 pound muskalonge instead of a silver tarpon weighing 75 pounds and 13 ounces and standing eight feet seven and a half inches in height, as recorded in press despatches from St. Petersburg, Florida.

The Presentation Publicly Made

At a well attended meeting of the trade, held in the offices of the White Shoe Co., 48 York Street, Toronto, on Saturday, March 24th, Mr. White was presented with the leather medal "to have and to hold till death do them part." It is a handsome and appropriate memento of his prowess and stupendous powers as the greatest fisherman in all the nine provinces of the commonwealth of Canada. The presentation was made by Mr. James Acton of the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL, who warmly congratulated Mr. White on his splendid success. "It was a feat," declared Mr. Acton, "of which any mortal might be pardonably proud—to capture a porpoise weighing nearly three times as much as yourself, and to have chased the monster fifteen miles out to sea, especially in the face of the unrelenting German submarine campaign. The fact that you eluded the treacherous U-boats and landed your prey demonstrates beyond the power of words to express, your daring, resource and valor. You preserved a cool head and a complete mastery of yourself in this titanic battle, and are worthy of all the honor that can be accorded you. While others may seek to detract from the distinction, still we all feel that you will be able to defend the honor for many moons to come."

The medal, an illustration of which appears, was specially designed by a well-known jewellery firm on Yonge street, and is very chaste and attractive in pattern. It is of the highest grade oak sole stock, about four inches in diameter and is worn attached to a leather chain, made from the hide of the porpoise captured by the wearer off the coast of Florida. Mr. White made a grateful and modest reply, thanking the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL for its great interest, not only in upholding the highest welfare and traditions of the shoe and leather trade, but also in promoting the popular pastime of fishing, and affording some incentive to footwear exponents to enter in a friendly rivalry each year for such a valuable premium. He would, he trusted, do honor to the new decoration and would wear it, suspended from the porpoise necklace on every public and state occasion.

Ready to Defend His Title

In conclusion, Mr. White announced his willingness to defend his title of "Champion Fisherman of Canada" under any and all circumstances, but all entries must be made in due and regular form. No more hearsay or current rumors would be accepted as evidence of any achievement or performance. The proofs must be furnished and attested by creditable witnesses and photographic evidence submitted if it were not possible to have the original captured trophy on view. He regretted in this moment, which was the proudest in his life, that there might naturally be a feeling of depression in the hearts and minds of Messrs. Gagnon, Marois and Robinson, but he asked that they take fresh courage and enter the fray once more. They should not be dissipated or downhearted, but remember the old refrain that "He who fights and runs away may live to fight another day."

ANOTHER PROTEST IS ENTERED

Editor, SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL.

Being somewhat of a fisherman myself, I have taken great interest in your piscatorial competition, and more especially the article which appeared in your last issue. Let me here say right at the beginning, that I desire to register a great big protest against this contest being carried into foreign waters when we have thousands of miles of salt water coast line on both the Atlantic and the Pacific, if it is considered advisable to include sea fishing.

I did not mind the big fish that the Montreal party loaded on to the waggon truck, and the extraordinary catch of trout by Mr. Hugh White, in the lake back of Quebec, and I could even stand for that big fish which Mr. Goff brought down from the Georgian Bay (which somebody else caught for him), but when it comes to Florida tarpon, and giant porpoises, which are mammals, to say nothing about the time you have to consume in hunting up all those unpronounceable mammal words, such as those used in your last article on this subject, and then taking the chance of having some shoeman up on the prairies dig up a giant dinosaur, which also is a mammal, and send a picture of it down here for publication, is carrying the thing a little too far don't you think? We have plenty of good fishing waters right here in Canada, and I would like to see the contest confined to our own country. Messrs. "Jim" Robinson, and "Jim" Young, and Messrs. Gagnon and Marois, and all the rest, have the whole Gulf of St. Lawrence, and the whole coast of Newfoundland to fish from, and there are some big fish down there as well as in Florida.

I now give you fair notice that I am in this contest for keeps, and if it is fish pictures you are after, I will endeavor to give you some this coming season that will please you.

I had intended to sign my name to this letter, but on second thought I will create a guessing contest as to who I am, merely concluding with the fact that I have been in the shoe game for about forty years, and in the fishing game longer than that. The first person who guesses who the writer of this letter is, will receive a prize of the best fishing bait for the capture of black bass on the market.

Yours truly,
PISCATORIOUS CANADAENSUS.

AN AVERAGE OF EIGHT DOLLARS PER PAIR

A recent despatch from Edmonton, says: "A statement from the head office in New York of one of the large boot and shoe firms in the United States shows in a striking manner to what an extent the price of footwear has soared within a year. An average of $8 per pair was obtained in 1916 for all ladies' footwear sold, this including all classes, from canvas pumps to the fancy high tops. This statement was made to E. P. Hall, manager of Ames-Holden, McCready, Edmonton, who has just returned from a trip to the east, where he attended the annual convention of the firm in Montreal.

"Shoes can be bought cheaper in Edmonton to-day than they can in New York City," said Mr. Hall. Even at exorbitant prices the trade in the Eastern states has never been so brisk, some of the small houses in New York handling from one to seven million dollars' worth of goods in a year. 'Never has there been such substitution as is going on there, and the people appear to be satisfied.'

"In regard to the year's styles, Mr. Hall says there is a little likelihood of the high tops being lowered as there is of a lowering of prices. Heels are higher on ladies' shoes, and fabrics are particularly popular, the shoe showing merely a leather vamp in many cases."

A HANDSOME SHOE PUBLICATION

The annual 1917 catalogue of the London Shoe Co., Limited, London, Ont., is the brightest and most complete ever issued by this enterprising firm. The booklet is filled with excellent illustrations and descriptions of the many kinds of leather, sporting and rubber footwear carried, and it also has a numerical stock number and price list of the various lines, but quotations, are of course, subject to change without notice. The company announce that in this, the third year of the war, with shoe prices soaring to heights previously unknown to this generation, with passenger transportation facilities curtailed, and hundreds of traveling salesmen withdrawn from their territories because of abnormal conditions, they believe this year's catalogue will be of still greater benefit to the trade than previously. The mission of the catalogue is to be of service to the retailers, and the 1917 edition by the London Shoe Co. is certainly the most ambitious, admirably arranged, and comprehensive publication in shoeology ever issued by a Canadian wholesale firm. The front cover is embossed, bearing an African brown shield surmounted by a beaver, and on the back cover are the words "Something in Shoeology worth while."

VETERAN RETAILER PASSES ANOTHER MILESTONE

Robert Wilson, of Hamilton, the oldest shoe retailer, in that city, celebrated his 84th birthday recently. He has been in the footwear game in the Ambitious City ever since 1863, and nearly four years ago celebrated the 50th anniversary of his wedding. His sons, Charley and Arthur, look after their father's successful shoe business at 73 King street east. Mr. Wilson has occupied four different locations in Hamilton, and has been in his present stand fourteen years. He came to Canada from Ireland at an early age, secured his first job making shoes in Quebec, and located in Hamilton four years before Confederation. He also traveled for some time, until he received a kick from a horse, which broke his arm, and caused him to retire from the road and re-enter the retail line. Mr. Wilson can recall many interesting reminiscences of former days and believes that shoe conditions generally were never more encouraging than they are to-day. Contrary to his usual custom, Mr. Wilson has not been enjoying good health for some time past, but his many friends hope that, with the advent of spring, he will regain his accustomed vigor.

THE NEW LEATHERETTE BOOT

"Have you seen the near skin shoe—our latest laboratory product?" asked the boot and shoe expert.

The boot that he set down on the table seemed to be made of calfskin. It would certainly pass for an ordinary black calf boot if displayed in any shop window. Perhaps not one person in one hundred thousand or even one million would have discovered its true identity without an exceedingly careful inspection.

"There isn't a bit of leather in it," said this unfold of mysteries, "and I'll bet you can't tell the difference."

He enjoyed my astonishment for a moment and then he said: "Smell it."

I put the seeming box calf toe to my discerning nose and inhaled. Ah! There was rubber in it! At least it had the smell of a rubber factory around it. It might perhaps have come from some tire works or garden hose plant.

"Here is the story," the boot and shoe philosopher went on. "There you have a near skin or leatherette shoe. You can call it what you please. It is a laboratory masterpiece. The vamp and top are made of imitation leather, a rubberized product with a fabric base. Sole and heel are composed of what they call fibre, and this fibre is a mystery and masterpiece all by itself. The box toe counter is made of the same material. You will find felt welting and inner sole, imitation leather back and lace stays and top facing.

"That's the whole story, and that is what one part of the world is coming to as regards boots and shoes."

books for his sale, he will be able to cross off at the end of each day what has been sold. In this case also the number of the shoe should be put on the check, also whether men's, women's, boys', children's or misses' as he is using the numbers used by the manufacturer. If the dealer finds that his business is too small for check books (I might add that any business of any kind is large enough to use check books) why not have slips or a book in which each sale is put down so he can check his stock from this daily memoranda. Any merchant who goes to the expense of buying check books will find that he is doing business in the proper way. He gives his customer one part of his check and keeps the other. In this way there is no chance for an employer to overlook a charge sale or forgetting to put the money in the drawer.

PUTTING COBOURG ON THE MAP

A. J. Kimmel, president of the Cobourg Felt Co., Limited, who put Elmira on the map with Kimmel felts, is now giving Cobourg a new lease of life so far as felt and felt footwear are concerned. It is just a year ago that Mr. Kimmel and his associates, A. C. Kimmel, managing director of the company, John F. Kimmel and A. D. Vice, took over the plant of the Cobourg Felt Co. Mr. Kimmel began his career with the Berlin Felt Boot Co., with whom he remained for fifteen years, and ran the Elmira Felt Co. for another ten years. Then the Kimmel Felt Co. in Kitchener was organized by him, and both the Elmira Felt and the Kimmel Felt were taken over by the Canadian

A. J. KIMMEL, COBOURG

Consolidated Felt Co. a few years ago. Mr. Kimmel is thoroughly conversant with the felt business, from the wool to the finished boot, and in the Cobourg plant for the production of men's and women's felt goods, he is achieving the same measure of success that has attended his past efforts. The mill has been rushed to capacity for many months, being utterly unable to fill all orders.

period. Despite this latter fact, however, we have not been able to accumulate anything whatever in the LM and M weight, still having orders ahead for these grades, and, therefore, have only been able to accumulate some of the HM and PM weights. We can only see the market in the light of the present almost impossibility to export goods, and act in exactly the same manner concerning importations. We know that many firms may be obliged in the near future to shut down their works entirely for lack of goat skins, as it is almost impossible to get shipments from the Far East, China, India, etc., and many cargoes of goatskins, which have been afloat from these countries, have not been heard of for some time. Owing to our having made a specialty for many years of the Mexican and South American varieties of goatskins we are in a more favorable position and have been enabled to get out supplies right along, although the bidding for these skins is compelling us to pay high prices for them. As you have undoubtedly noticed by the reports lately, goatskins are again advancing in price and we are very surely facing a considerable shortage in these skins, and it will no doubt come to pass that very soon we shall be having more demands for glazed kid than we can take care of. We can see nothing whatever that will make glazed kid cheaper in price."

How Colored Kid Aviates

"As far as the leather market is concerned at the present time, and also leather for the coming fall season, many lines have advanced from last trip to an alarming extent, particularly in kid," says an Ontario firm making women's high grade shoes. "We are making shoes in colored kid to-day on our spring run that cost laid down 62 cents whereas the same leather to-day costs $1.04. Figuring 3½ feet to the 8 inch shoe you can see what advance will take place just in the upper stock. Now this is leather that very few people had any stock ahead, as it was impossible to get it from the tanners in any quantity as they were simply reserving it and dealing it out in small lots in order to get the highest price possible, so that we feel on fancy shoes there will be a considerable advance in prices. Sole leather from last trip has jumped from 60 cents to 90 cents, findings and everything in proportion, so as we said before it looks as though the prices would have to advance considerably over last season unless a manufacturer had very large stocks on hand. We think it would be well to mention this fact and prepare the retailer for this."

Neat Effective Models for Men

The Hartt Boot & Shoe Co., of Fredericton, N.B., are presenting the finest range of samples they have yet shown to the trade. The styles, for the most part, in men's shoes, particularly in high grade lines, such as they make, are moderate and of a quiet character. The firm report that there has been a considerable demand for colors during the past season, and believe that there will be a reasonably large requisition for them next season. The darker, rich brown shades of tan seem to be most asked for. The Hartt Co. think that while there will doubtless be a certain demand for fabric top boots, yet it will be rather limited. In the high grade lines, consumers are looking for modest styles of real good workmanship and quality now that the prices of shoes have gone up to such an extent. There have not been any radical changes in lasts. For dignity, individuality, graceful lines and superior craftsmanship the Hartt line establishes a new achievement.

Long Drawn Out Foreparts

E. T. Wright & Co., of St. Thomas, who have completed their fall line of samples, are showing to the trade some new recede toes, on which the line is very strong. The new lasts have the long drawn-out fore part, which is so much in demand at the present time in the large centres. The firm expect that patents will be a little stronger than for some time past, and are showing a fair sprinkling of them. Dark browns have a large place in the line, and there are various degrees of shades. Fabrics are being shown in both topping and whole shoes. The firm are featuring some of these models with fibre soles and heels, in order to meet the demand for a medium priced boot. The new models of E. T. Wright & Co. are "Just Right" in every respect.

Cloth Tops are Featured

The new models of the Murray Shoe Co., London, in both men's and women's are very smart and attractive. In men's four new lasts have been added. The Pall Mall with a drawn out vamp and full fitting qualities, the Rex with square front and semi-French effect, the Belmont carrying a staple, modified recede toe, and the Governor, a rather full round toe. Among the offerings are gun metal, Havana brown and mahogany brown calf. A number have buck tops in fawn, grey and cinnamon with perforated eyelet facings. Others have perforated wing tips and perforated stitched tips. One interesting shoe is a Havana brown blucher with imitation wing tip and perforated whole quarters, with flange heel. In the women's lines, which embrace both welts and McKays, there are inviting showings in cloth tops in cinnamon, fawn, white and grey, while buck also appears in a similar range of colors. The eight inch top prevails. There are several pleasing creations in black and white, with fancy foxing. A patent bal with white buck top and square throat effect is very smart. Four new lasts have been added and all makes come in A to D width. In sport shoes there is a superior range. A white buck with Havana brown calf tip, saddle and eyelet facing, with perforations and white heel and sole is fetching. Another shoe with white buck tip and quarters bottle green saddle, heel foxing and perforated eyelet facing, with white leather sole and heel is a decided novelty. An outstanding presentation is an all white buck whole quarters, with square throat, perforations on quarter and tip, with white leather sole and heel. Among other shoes of note carrying Louis, Vanity, Cuban or modified Louis heels are an all white buck quarters, heel and sole with black kid vamp, and another with white buck quarters, heel and sole with briar calf vamp and perforated tip, both being on English walking lasts.

Dark Colored Leathers in Demand

The John Ritchie Co., Limited, Quebec, have added four new lasts for the coming season, all of which are on the lines of a high grade shoe. The company report that these will round out their range, making it as complete as possible, so that they can supply promptly anything that is required in a man's welt. In order to cover these requirements thoroughly, they are making all lines in widths for which there is a growing demand in popular priced shoes. The Ritchie samples this year, owing to the fact that the firm are specializing in men's and boys' welts, are the most attractive and complete they have ever put out. The firm believe in making one particular line, and making it right. They also state the demand at the present time seems to be very strong for the dark colored tan leathers with the long narrow toe lasts the favorites. They have found patterns with plenty of perforations and winged tips to be in good demand. Fabrics do not seem to be taking, as far as men's shoes are concerned. They have sold very few blacks during the last month or so, probably because there is a good stock of black shoes throughout the country on the shelves, whereas the new shades of tans are proving ready sellers and the dealers are buying these quite liberally. They do not expect the big rush of business this fall that there was a year ago, but cannot see with present prosperity throughout Canada that the demand will be less than normal during the rest of the year.

Splendid Range in Men's

In the new models for fall of the Tetrault Shoe Manufacturing Co., Montreal, the leading leathers are gun metal and velours calf, African brown, mahogany and box calf. There are several new lasts, one having a longer drawn out forepart with a smarter and more recede toe giving greater character and individuality to the shoe. Another last is a wide foot form with round toe, very suitable for those who have much walking to do. A large number of models carry Neolin, vulco and other soles, and rubber heels, as well as full double leather soles, and slip soles for fall wear. The majority of the offerings are bals, but there are a number of blucher and button. Several models are leather lined and the range represents every desirable style of toe and pattern. A number of bals and buttons have cloth tops in a wide

Are You Particular Enough?

Shoe Manufacturers are particular about measuring their leather—every small square inch of it—for it affects the profits.

Why not measure your employees' time—every small minute of it—just as accurately? for it affects profits also.

One square inch of leather lost don't matter much, but many inches make a hide.

One minute's time lost don't matter much, but many make a day. What would it cost you if you lost only one minute each employee, each shift?

variety which will attract the trade of young men while for those who wish quiet, conservative effects, there is a comprehensive showing. African brown and mahogany are right to the forefront and bid fair to be strong sellers. The Tetrault line for fall leaves nothing to be desired in fit, finish, neatness or variety. The foreparts carry wing and stitched tips, plain and with perforations.

Believe Cloth Tops are Comers

Ames-Holden-McCreedy, Limited, Montreal, say in regard to styles for the coming season:

The demand for colors and two tone effects continues as strong or perhaps stronger than during the past year.

WALNUT calf bal on new medium recede toe, low heel, by Regal Shoe Co., Toronto.

Some women who can afford to pay from $12 to $20 for shoes favor styles made entirely of colored kid, but the indications are growing stronger daily that the large volume of business will be on styles that combine leather vamps with colored cloth tops.

The shortage of kid and the fact that its price has now reached a point beyond the reach of most consumers has forced manufacturers to seek other materials.

Investigation and experiments have shown that the new cloths on the market are just as satisfactory in every way for shoe tops as leather; in fact, the use of cloth offers distinct advantages from both the shoemaking and the merchandising standpoints. It means greater variety in colors and more uniformity in shades and the opportunity to produce better style effects in footwear than ever before.

While cloth is cheaper than kid, the better grades cost more than staple leathers did a year ago and its use does not mean materially cheaper shoes.

In other words, shoes with cloth tops are selling on their merits from both the practical and style standpoint. Both black and colored kid will be used extensively for vamp materials in all the new styles, with cloth tops in harmonizing shades of canary, fawn, grey and white. Patent vamps with the same variety of colored cloth tops are also proving good sellers and there is some demand for gun metal calf in vamps. In new lasts for women the outstanding feature of the season is a strong demand for the new, long vamp, recede toe last carrying a 12/8 heel that was introduced late last season. The popularity of this last is based on something more substantial than a passing style fancy, and most shoe men predict that it has come to stay and may really be classed as a staple last. The demand for this last has been developing for several years among both growing girls and women who wanted a smart street shoe with a medium low heel.

The so-called sport last was only partially successful in filling this demand because, while it was satisfactory as a shoe used strictly for vacation or sport purposes, it did not have the stylish lines required for a regular street boot, and the demand for such a style has grown steadily. In the effort to meet this demand a great variety of modified sport lasts were put on the market last season, very few of which were suitable for the purpose because they were too close to the sport last idea and therefore too "pluggy," too flat in the shank and with too low heels. It is only in the past few months that any except custom shoemakers have succeeded in designing this type of shoe correctly. This has been accomplished by eliminating the sport last idea entirely, and, by using a stylish last as a basis on which to work, the smart low heel last has been successfully created. In its present form it is adaptable to practically all the changes in patterns or materials that the style trend may dictate in high heeled shoes.

Fabric Tops will be Successful

The Lady Belle Shoe Co., of Kitchener, have added a number of new lasts for the coming season, one of which is the new sport last, on which they are featuring a 10/8 heel which has been meeting with success among the trade.

AFRICAN brown bal, with perforations on tip, eyelet row and vamp, 8 inch top, leather Louis heel, by Clark Bros., St. Stephen, N.B.

Regarding colors, the firm find that ivory, brown and black are the popular shades in kid and dark brown in calf. They are also featuring perforated wing tips and eyelet facings. A number of models are shown with fabrics tops, in grey, brown, white and chamois, which they think will meet with success. The company have been exceptionally busy on spring orders, especially for the Easter trade, and have found it impossible to complete all business in time, owing to the great rush. They believe that the coming season will be a live one for them.

J. A. & M. Cote, St. Hyacinthe, report that they are very busy this season, and have been kept going at such a pace that they have scarcely had time to create any new lines. They are devoting their attention to the improvement of the lines that have made a success, both for their clients and themselves, and intend to still maintain that policy, realizing that the good of their customers with the "Yamaska" brand has been, and will be their future success. The firm make mostly staples for working people, and are proud of being the producers of solid leather footwear that gives service and can be relied upon on all occasions.

offerings in gun metal calf, box calf, royal purple, African brown, mahogany and tobacco brown are smart and attractive. A number have colored buck and cloth tops, and will make a special appeal to those who want the very latest in masculine foot attire. In women's shoes, foreparts are a little longer and among the new shades are burgundy, briar, steel grey, silver grey, electric and forest fawn. A number of cloth tops are shown in broidiere, crinkle, cork-screw, tex-buk, eve cloth, and art reignskin and the combinations with leather are very pretty. Several models carry Neolin soles, and an all-cloth boot is attracting considerable attention. There are combinations of grey and ivory kid, browns, white and black, and other colors, while the showing in white is particularly strong. A number of shoes are observed in fabric and leather corresponding in tone. There is a nice line of English walking shoes and sport shoes in all the leading combinations of leathers, and in all-kid bals of different colors, the showing is very striking. The models of Minister-Myles in feminine footwear practically take in everything that is being presented in kid and calf leathers, cloths and combination effects affording a very wide selection and a splendid presentation of the season's snappiest offerings.

Not Strong on Fabrics

Dupont & Frere, Montreal, say that they consider mahogany leather shoes, with tops in various colors, will be in great demand for the coming season. "We do not think that fabrics will sell very well at the present time. They may move freely for next fall but retailers are not ordering very many for immediate," they add. Dupont & Frere make a fine range of nubuck colored, both in men's and women's lines, which represent the very latest styles so much in demand in all fashionable shoe centres. Their English walking boot in various colored leathers, and their high-cut bals, in all the popular shades are very attractive.

Some Outstanding Designs

The fall samples of the Blachford Shoe Manufacturing Co., Limited, Toronto, are now complete, and certainly make a very handsome display. In summer shoes is a showing of a number of attractive new pump designs, both in black leathers and in several color schemes, prominent in which is tan and cream kid, also grey and white kid combinations. These same effects are being carried out in many attractive boot styles. For strictly summer wear, white reignskin boots, pumps and colonials are prominent, also

Oxfords in white and colored calf. For early fall, popular styles in black kid, tan and mahogany calf are prominent, and a very effective range in patent leather shoes with black, colored kid and colored calf combinations. Patent with white kid tops or with cream kid tops, and with an attractive shade in tan calf are exceedingly stylish. In patterns, many novelty styles are being shown, one of the newest of which is a new Russian top boot for an all leather shoe, and a new high cut Polish with panel facings being worked out in leather and cloth combinations. A number of different designs in panel facings and collars reveal very smart effects in combinations with colored cloth tops, the chief shades in which are canary, pearl and Cafe au Lait.

Fabrics for Soft Soles

The Hurlbut Co., Limited, Preston, are adopting fabric for soft sole shoes instead of leather, for fall. The company have opened a new department which they call the Hurlbut welt repair service, which gives retailers a strong selling argument. The company put on a new bottom for $1.00 for sizes 3 to 7½;—$1.25 for sizes 8 to 10½, making the shoes all look like new. A feature of the policy of the firm is to add half or full size to the shoe and so repair it. This is an important item for growing children.

Lady Luxury Shoes

Added interest will be taken in the semi-annual announcements of the new styles by foremost Canadian manufacturers, when the introductory advertisement of Lady Luxury shoes published on another page has been read. The name Lady Luxury in itself implies something dainty—something out of the ordinary—and suitable for women with refined tastes.

Undoubtedly with the present prices which women have to pay for their footwear the question of wear and fit will enter, to a greater extent, into their consideration when purchasing shoes than heretofore. Up to the present time, seemingly, appearance alone has counted with the average women, but lately with economy so widely preached our better-halves may come to appreciate, as much as we do, the necessity to consider the quality of wear as well as that of style when paying ten or twelve dollars a pair for shoes.

The idea has prevailed that style and wear as qualities in footwear are not synonymous, but that both features can be incorporated in a good shoe selling at a reasonable price is the idea on which the makers of Lady Luxury shoes have worked, and if heritage counts for anything the Lady Luxury line promises to be a success, because it is sponsored by Mr. Geo. A. Slater, whose reputation as a maker of fine shoes stands high in Canada. His interest will count for considerable, and the production of Lady Luxury shoes will be under new management, which should cause the line to develop to the ultimate advantage of the retail trade and the makers.

The new line is a most attractive one, and includes the most up-to-date patterns and lasts. AA and A widths are features which will appeal to the city trade, but the line as a whole will prove attractive to practically all dealers handling high-class women's shoes. Prompt deliveries will be a strong point with the Lady Luxury selling organization, and this should count for something.

One of the prettiest new effects shown in the Lady Luxury line is an eight inch Olive Ooze, with Louis heel, long forepart, flexible sole and fudge edge. Colored suedes are shown in combination with gun metal, black kid and cherry brown. The square throat pattern which promises to be very popular next season, is shown in both laced and button. In conformity with the latest style dictates for high grade women's shoes, the new samples show a large range of colored uppers, and the richness in coloring, as well as the wearing qualities of this leather will, no doubt, meet with the approval of the trade.

Choice Range in Colors

The new autumn models of the W. B. Hamilton Shoe Co., Toronto, reveal some very attractive showings for men in black, chocolate and mahogany calf, and a number of black and colored cloth tops in both bals and bluchers, on all the popular range of toes. Some are leather lined, and others have full double soles. In women's there is a very inviting presentation of all black calf and kid bals, and an unusually varied range of cloth tops in chocolate, pearl, ivory, chamois, cocoa and black. A number have fancy foxing. One particularly beautiful shoe is a bal with wine kid foxing and chamois top, and a gun metal with grey top, is also a favorite. The Cuban and half Louis heel is seen on most models, while the tops run from seven to eight inches. There is an excellent display of white canvas shoes of all kinds in which the white canvas sport boot for women is a leader.

Snappy Range in Sport Shoes

Getty & Scott, Limited, of Galt, are right in the vanguard again this season with all the newest effects and most artistic combinations. In sport shoes, with heels from 8-8 to 12-8, some twenty different lines are embraced. One striking shoe is Zulu brown with cinnamon brown top; another is a fawn with white buck top, a gun metal with ivory buck, and combinations of black and white, tan and white, black and tan.

Among other models of note is an imposing shoe with Burgundy kid vamp and foxing, tiffany pattern, gold cloth top and celluloid, covered wood Louis heel. The Cuban and modified Louis heels predominate with seven, eight and nine inch tops, there being a representative assortment of colored kid and cloth quarters. A large number of square throat bals are observed, and a few button boots are shown. Fancy foxing and perforated imitation wing, and imitation straight tips and long pointed foreparts impart diversity to the array. In the main, the plain toe effects still hold sway. An eight inch bal with ivory vamp and foxing, and high, light grey cloth top; an African brown, with scalloped vamp and grey kid top, button; a nine inch cut with black kid vamp and foxing, and grey kid quarters, with Cuban heel; a silver grey kid vamp with dawn grey top; an African brown calf with cocoa buck top, button, and square throat; a black kid vamp and foxing with Burgundy kid top; a brown buck with heart shape throat, tuxedo pattern, and cinnamon buck top, and a patent vamp, with imitation tip, white stitching and grey buck top, and other lines in patent, with cloth and buck top of various hues, embody everything that is original and stylish in feminine footwear, in both welts and McKays.

In the children's line there has been a distinct advance in patterns and combinations. Patent with different colored cloth and buck tops are right to the forefront. A red kid vamp with white buck top and red buttons is a decidedly pretty shoe. The range in welts and McKays in high cuts in tans, blacks and patents with various tops are pleasing. Buck tops are particularly strong. A grey kid vamp with whole cloth quarters to correspond is exceptionally nice, and there is a splendid range of ground grippers for the kiddies. The Getty & Scott line never achieved its present standard in quality, merit and variety, and is being shown in Toronto by S. J. Anderson, who is most enthusiastic over the display.

Featuring the Narrow Back Last

Scott-Chamberlain, Limited, London, are presenting several choice lines in Zulu brown, Havana and mahogany brown, and the various shades of tan in recede, pointed recede, round and full wide toes. A feature is the number of wing tips and saddle straps, and also plain tips, with perforations. A number of models carry white buck tops, dark tan, dark brown and mouse grey buck in both button and lace making very attractive combinations, which are sure to delight all fashionable dressers. The firm are featuring the new narrow back last which is "C" width at the ball "B" at the instep and "A" at the heel. It gives comfort, trimness and glove-fitting qualities. Many feet which are normal at the ball are narrow at the heel. Owing to this recession in width, the foot is prevented from slipping forward, while there is plenty of room for the instep and heel in the new last models. Several shoes carry "Oko" fibre soles, in white and colors, and rubber heels. This material can be bottom finished in any color and edge set, and so closely resembles leather soles that it is almost impossible to tell the difference. The "Oko" has a resiliency and water-proof and non-slip qualities not possessed by leather. In quality, fit, finish, superior shoe making, graceful lines and attractive patterns the fall lines of Scott-Chamberlain are exceptionally strong. The models are being shown in Toronto by Wm. Fryer.

Darker Shades are Leading

The Brandon Shoe Co., of Brantford, report that the darker shades in calf are selling strong, and light colored leathers are entirely gone. The outlook for the coming season will be the dark shades. Cloth tops will not take as well, on account of the prices of shoes to-day, the cloth tops not giving the satisfaction that leather does. "The general trend of business for the coming season looks as if it will not be as bright as it was a year ago. On account of high prices merchants are buying closer and are trying to keep their stocks down. When the summer opens up, toward May and June, business will be just as good as it was a year ago. One thing certain the merchant who does not purchase his goods now will pay more in May and June as leather will still go higher. Should the war stop to-day it would make no difference in the price of leather, and should the United States decide to raise an army to send to Europe the price of leather would advance over night, making the present figure for shoes much stiffer. The shortage of hides, both in Europe and America, will still continue. Even for two years after the war you will find that the price of leather will not be less than it is to-day as the cattle are not in the country and the population is getting larger; the people are wearing better and more shoes than they ever did. All this means in place of having more leather we have less," conclude the firm.

COMMODIOUS AND ATTRACTIVE WAREHOUSE OF VANCOUVER WHOLESALE SHOE CONCERN

WESTERN FIRM HAS ENJOYED STEADY GROWTH

Damer, Lumsden Co., wholesale shoe merchants, of Vancouver, are a distinct product of the west. They occupy a unique position in that, although established only 11 years, they have grown to their present status, and now, at 123 Pender street, occupy a commodious and admirably appointed warehouse. The members of the firm are John Damer and Fred J. Lumsden, who have been residents of Vancouver for nearly twenty years. They have witnessed much of the development and expansion of the important business interests on the Pacific coast, and have themselves kept pace with the progress of events. The success of the house is attributed to the fact that they have looked carefully after the wide clientele they have established, and their sales have shown a gratifying increase from year to year. They formerly did business at 411 Cordova street west, but a few months ago found it necessary to move into more spacious premises. Their present warehouse—an illustration of which appears on this page—is bright, modern and well-equipped, and the firm are enabled to carry a much larger and more representative stock of fine and staple footwear and rubbers and furnish an exceedingly prompt and satisfactory service.

Mr. Damer, the senior member, has had a life-long experience in the footwear game, and for many years represented the J. D. King Co., of Toronto, in the west. By uprightness, industry and perseverance, he has earned the well-merited regard of the trade generally. Mr. Lumsden, while not so long in the trade, has acquired wide experience with the merchants of British Columbia, and is a former resident of Toronto.

The firm have specialized on lines particularly suitable for British Columbia, and to this policy of concentration, initiative and service they enjoy their standing and prominence today.

SHOE TRADE IS GOOD IN MONTREAL

"We certainly do not find any falling off," said Mr. F. J. McCann, of Goodwin's Shoe Department, Montreal, "but on the contrary are doing twice the business of other years and the big trouble is to get shoes at reasonable prices. The railway situation is bothering us considerably, some shipments from up in Ontario being delayed five and six weeks. Rubbers are a big difficulty, the trouble being shortage of labor; raw material is plentiful but the factories find they can't get girls to do the work."

Geo. G. Gales Company, reported an exceptional trade for this time of year. "Undoubtedly," they said, "people are buying as an investment rather than from necessity. Boots are going to go higher and the public are laying in supplies. Repair shops are doing an abnormal business—the largest in years, because people now have repaired footwear, that they formerly would have thrown away. Rubbers are worn out and not discarded when they become smooth as formerly. We have more trouble getting rubbers than we have getting boots."

The Brockton Shoe Co., Limited, also report a good trade. "People are buying ahead of time," they declared. "We notice also that the boots left by customers as useless are much more worn and repaired than was the case before the war. Boots are now worn till they simply have to be replaced."

HOW LEATHER KEEPS ON THE UPWARD MOVE

While There Are Some Improvements in Supply and Conditions of Manufacture, Tanners do Not Look for Any Drop in Price—Some Authentic Figures Which Tell a Tale of Rapidly Advancing Values—Way the Top Notch Has Been Gradually Ascending

IT is interesting to compare how leather has steadily advanced in price since the commencement of the war in August, 1914, up to the present. The embargoes placed upon hides, the shutting off of many sources of supply, such as Russia, France and Germany, the difficulties and dangers of transportation, the heavy war insurance risk, the decreasing herds of cattle, the tremendous demands made by the armed millions of fighting men, the extreme high cut in women's footwear, not to speak of the various uses to which leather has been put in recent years, and the imperative requisitions made upon this commodity in equipping cavalry and even the ordinary infantryman—all these, and many more that might be mentioned account for the tre-

A leading sole leather firm says: "It is very hard for us to give you anything intelligible. At the present time there is an embargo on all classes of tanning materials coming via either Detroit or Buffalo. We are short, and apparently are going to have to run on short time if the railroad conditions do not improve immediately. We are also finding it very hard to get space for either hides or tanning materials from abroad. Labor conditions are also very serious. We do not look for any lower prices on leather for some time to come."

Another sole leather house declares: "Boston market reports, March 3rd, quote leather similar to our hemlock leather, as to-day selling at from 60/63 cents per pound in mendous advance in the price of leather during the last three years which, it will be noticed, is over 100 per cent. in some instances, and as high as 150 per cent. in others.

In order to supply the shoe dealer with reliable statistics, the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL has gathered from various sources an authentic statement of the selling price of various Canadian made leathers during the past few years. It is interesting to note the quotations that prevailed in August, 1914, at the outbreak of the war, compared with those that hold sway at the present writing. Whether leather prices will still ascend, no man can foretell, but every tendency seems to be in this direction. It is also edifying to note what others have to say on the leather situation and the supply of hides.

the side, so that we are considerably under the United States market, but have practically no leather available for export. With regard to the outlook for supplies during the coming season—we may say that we have recently paid for hides the highest price in the history of our company, and as these hides will not be available in the shape of leather for some months—we cannot see that they are going to make cheap leather. The fact that the class of labor required in sole leather tanneries is now impossible to get in Canada, necessitates ours and all tanneries working in very much less than our normal quantity of hides. We anticipate having a very short supply of leather during 1917, probably less than half of what we would produce in a normal year."

The Russian Government definitely placed a contract last week in America for 750,000 sole leather sides. It is understood that terms of payment were finally arranged on a satisfactory basis, and the leather will go forward. The contract was placed chiefly with the United States Leather Co., and Howes Bros. & Co.

Wants Export Duty on Hides

A maker of oak tanned harness leather asserts: "Owing to abnormal conditions, such as extremely high prices for all kinds of tanning materials and hides, and scarcity as well as high prices of labor, we find it more difficult to make a profit than before the war. Not that only, but there is a further handicap in the 7½ per cent. war duty on hides and tanning material, which gives the foreign tanner a big advantage. In our opinion there should at least be reciprocity in hides. If the Canadian tanner must pay 7½ per cent. duty on hides that he imports—and he must import some in order to get what he requires—then the same amount should be put on hides going out of the country. With the 7½ per cent. duty on hides coming in, the Canadian hide dealer can ask a price equal to the price asked in the foreign markets, with 7½ per cent. added, and if the Canadian tanner cannot pay the price, they are sent out of the country."

The Outlook is Some Better

"The outlook for supplies of hides during 1917 is better than for some months and other materials necessary to our trade appear more plentiful, although prices still remain high and will undoubtedly continue so until such time as the world's commerce can be handled by the transportation companies more expeditiously," observes another manufacturer in the same line.

A firm making finished sides and grain leather remarks: "Many kinds of tanning material are now in better supply at much reduced prices than prevailed a year ago. Hides of all kinds are considerably higher and deliveries slower. We anticipate a good demand for all kinds of leather."

A calf skin producer states that conditions are worse now for getting raw stock than for many months past, owing to the embargoes. We have just received a car of skins from Chicago which took over five weeks to reach us.

How Hides Have Aviated

A patent leather manufacturer replies: "You must appreciate that even to-day we are delivering some leather as low as 36 cents and 38 cents on old contracts, which is really No. 1 leather. No doubt you will realize that the price of hides in 1914 was about 19 cents a pound, while during the good season of purchasing in November and December of 1916 the price went as high as 34 cents a pound."

NEWSY BRIEFS FROM ST. JOHN

A spectacular fire broke out in the business district of St. John, N.B., on Sunday, March 25th, and did damage to the extent of $20,000. McRobbie Shoe Co., Limited, retail boot and shoe dealers, were practically wiped out. On Sunday afternoon about 3 o'clock, John A. McKay, secretary-treasurer of McRobbie Shoe Co., went to the store, and as he turned the key in the lock and opened the door a great puff of smoke rolled out into the street. An alarm was immediately sent in. The flames, however, had made considerable headway and dense clouds of yellow smoke gushed from the building preventing the firemen from getting near the seat of the blaze. The fire spread and soon the store of F. E. Holman, which adjoined McRobbie's was in flames. Mr. McRobbie who is unable to account for the origin of the blaze, said the damage to the firm's stock would be $12,000. This is fortunately covered by insurance.

Measured by the upclimb of the leather markets and the increased cost of production in the manufacture of shoes, persons desirous of obtaining the last minute in styles for the fall will have to pay anywhere from twelve to fifteen dollars for their footwear according to present indications. Of course, this does not mean the conservative dressers who are satisfied with a box calf sensible shoe, but to those whose inclinations carry them a step ahead of the style designers. High cuts are being shown by local shoemen for fall and the style tends to a higher cut than that worn this spring.

Hazen McGee was in St. John, recently, visiting shoemen in the interests of the James Muir Co., of Montreal. This is a new line for him.

Travelers from local wholesale houses are returning from visits to shoemen along the North Shore, N. B., and report a bumper sale of rubbers for the fall. They also report a good demand for other lines of footwear.

Percy J. Steel, who recently joined a machine gun section, and who was promoted to a sergeant, recently returned from a trip through the province. He is assisting to recruit volunteers and is meeting with success.

WOODEN SHOES BEING WORN IN ENGLAND

The photograph shows one of the makers of clogs finishing up a pair of dainty wooden shoes. His occupation may soon be a lucrative one. He is shown working in an English shop and is an expert in handling the peculiar knife which cuts the block into shape. Over in England they can hardly get leather shoes even by paying high prices, for there is no leather to be had, comparatively speaking. The situation is so serious in Great Britain that measures have been taken toward the development of the already established business of making clogs, as they are familiarly called in the Netherlands. The present demand is so great that an order for 100,000 pairs of sabots for the Belgian Government just had to be declined by the British clog-making concern.

Your Customers May Not Always Be As Prosperous As They Now Are

Sooner or later there will be a recoil. Will it be good or bad? Will your customers feel that they have had their money's worth or will they condemn you for sacrificing service for style?

LADY LUXURY SHOES can make your "good will" more valuable by rendering service, consistent with their cost, to your customers. They are produced in a factory equipped, with men and material, to turn out only good shoes.

LADY LUXURY SHOES are welts—every pair—made with such good material and so carefully as to be durable, and therefore economical, but modeled so daintily that they are bound to satisfy the most discriminating taste.

Widths A to E—lasts, staple novelty—patterns of many kinds—are features which make LADY LUXURY SHOES adaptable to large city or small town.

LADY LUXURY SHOES ARE MADE "TO ORDER" ONLY, BUT DURING THE NEXT THREE MONTHS OUR SPECIAL "RUSH SERVICE" WILL ENSURE PROMPT DELIVERIES.

The Shoe Repair Man

SHOPS WILL CLOSE EARLY AND MAY ADOPT PIECE WORK AS WAGE BASIS

TO close their repair shops at eight o'clock every night the year round is one of the progressive moves of the Toronto Shoe Repairers' Association.

At the last fortnightly meeting a vote was taken on the proposal and there was not a dissenting voice. It is probable that a petition will be circulated at no distant date with the object of presenting the same to the city fathers, and having a by-law passed. It is felt that the signatures of the required seventy-five per cent. of the trade can be secured without any difficulty. Some members of the Association have already started the practice of closing at eight o'clock and told the others at the regular fortnightly meeting held on March 22nd that they did not think they had lost a dollar, and had found the time left for recreation very beneficial and helpful, physically and mentally.

As one member remarked, "I open my shop at eight o'clock in the morning and I close at the same hour in the evening, and if twelve hours' work will not give a living, and a little more beside, I think it is time I got into something that will"—a remark which met with hearty applause.

Will Eliminate the Price Cutters

The Association now has over a hundred members, although organized only nine months, and a real, live, aggressive lot they are. The discussions are breezy and bright, the topics interesting and instructive. The majority of the members will inaugurate the weekly half holiday during the summer time, closing each Wednesday at noon.

President C. F. Robertson presided, and among the matters discussed was price cutting. It appears that one or two members have not been holding up the schedule and, if the practice is persisted in, it is probable the offending ones will be dropped from the list, after a thorough investigation has been made. It was stated that all the shops which got the scale had as much work as they possibly could attend to and business was growing all the while. In the matter of stitching Goodyear welts it has been the practice of members of the Association, who have stitchers, to do the work for other members for fifteen cents per pair while outsiders were charged twenty-five cents. This plan has resulted in some joining the Association just to save the ten cents, not upholding it in any way, and merely using the membership to save a few dimes. A resolution was passed unanimously to the effect that henceforth no Association man would do stitching for any person in the trade who was not a member. While there is no thought of coercion, the members feel that they must stick together in their co-operative work for the weal and welfare of the craft.

Among the interesting things brought out in the discussion on various topics was that, as a result of the recent successful banquet there was a surplus of over thirty-two dollars. The Association has nearly a hundred and fifty dollars in the treasury and all accounts paid. The membership fee is three dollars a year.

Western Men Want Suggestions

S. Burnett, recording-secretary, read an interesting letter from F. W. Eastwood, who is manager of the shoe findings department of the Great West Saddlery Co., Calgary, and stated that an association had been formed in that city known as Master Shoemakers' and Repairers' Association, officers had been elected and the writer had been instructed to correspond with different associations in the East to find out if they could give any help in regard to the best lines on which to conduct matters. A copy of the By-laws and Constitution of the Toronto Association was requested.

The question was asked how members who cut prices were treated? Mr. Eastwood is a former resident of Toronto, having worked a few years ago with Beal Bros., and later with the Anglo-Canadian Leather Co., and he conveyed hearty greetings to his old friends. The letter will be answered and full information given the inquirer from Western Canada.

The Discount on Rubber Heels

The matter of the discount on rubber heels was taken up. It appears that one of the manufacturers who formerly gave a discount of 20 per cent. in three gross lots, 15 per cent. in one gross and ten on small lots, has reduced the discount to 15 per cent. on three gross, 10 per cent. on two gross or over and 5 per cent. on small lots. It was decided to ask the firm to continue the discount of 15 per cent. on any order over half a gross. A conference will be held with the company to adjust the matter. No objection has been taken to the decrease in the discount on large lots, but many a man cannot order the quantity required to secure the best discount.

A suggestion was made by one of the members that a gilt lettered glass sign bearing the trade mark of the Association should be got out and hung up in each shop, that the emblem of the Association should be given to members to wear on the coat, and that leaflets should be distributed throughout the city telling the citizens what the Association stood for—good work, good service and clean shop, etc. These matters will be taken into consideration.

It is proposed to have a programme of songs and music in connection with the various meetings. This summer a picnic will be held by the Association to some lake point and a whole day devoted to the outing.

Basing Wages on Piecework

The matter of wages for men who work in the shop was taken up. A member stated that he had advertised for a week for a man and had not one application, so scarce was help in the shoe making ranks. Many members of the trade are serving overseas or laboring in the shoe shops in connection with the militia. What assistance could be secured at the present time was indifferent and inefficient and wages had gone up from twelve and thirteen dollars a week to seventeen and eighteen. Labor was very independent. In order that remuneration may be gauged on a piecework basis, it was felt that the executive should draft out a schedule of prices for labor alone. While the piecework system may not be put into effect, still it may form the foundation of what repairers in the shops may be expected to receive.

Some humorous incidents were touched upon where men were so independent that they rolled cigarettes, ate lemon pies and even ice cream during working hours and the bosses could like it or lump it.

Financial Secretary A. Butterworth told of a recent visit to several cities on the other side of the line, and how the repairers there were much interested in the work and progress of the Toronto Association.

The Price Basis on Piece Work

One member stated that he had paid his hands on a piecework basis for several years, and had found that it worked out very satisfactorily.

For preparing or stocking the work he paid twenty-five cents for men's half soles and heels, sewn, twenty cents for men's soles and heels, nailed; sixteen cents for all kinds of women's soles and heels; boy's fifteen cents; children's ten cents; for men's heels alone seven cents each; women's heels five cents, and 50 per cent. on all patches and rips.

He had the stock laid out carefully and correctly for each man so that he lost no time. Another member stated that in the Old Country he had been paid entirely on piecework, and that the cost had run about one-third of the finished job. It was on machine work, but when done entirely by hand the cost of labor had been roughly speaking about 50 per cent. This basis would not answer to-day when wages were higher. The Toronto Shoe Repairers' Association will look carefully into the piecework proposition. Most of the members considered that while it might not be put into effect, it would serve as a basis of remuneration for employees. The working hours in each shop were said to be around fifty-four hours a week. In the summer with a weekly half-holiday there will be about six hours less.

One Trade Mark for All Associations

It was suggested that in connection with the proposed federation of shoe repairers throughout Canada, the trade mark of the Toronto Shoe Repairers' Association, which is a splendid one, might be used by every association, the only change being that the word "Hamilton," "Ottawa," or any other association, could be substituted for "Toronto." This would give a national significance to the emblem of the trade, which would be the same in every city. The two shoes, one on each side of the maple leaf, surrounded by a circle, would be easily recognizable wherever seen, and might become as widely known among shoemakers in a trade sense, as the maple leaf is in a national sense.

The Association presented Mr. Gordon Robertson with a box of cigars for his kindness in conveying the executive members to different points on business, in his automobile, which he has always placed at their disposal.

DON'T MAKE PRICE AGREEMENTS

It frequently occurs that shoe repairers organize as a branch of the labor union, and our attention is called to the fact that they adopt a scale or prices and publish the same, says the "Shoe Repair Shop." The question is frequently asked, "Why can an organization that is a branch of a labor union do this, and not an organization which is not affiliated with the labor unions?" To this we would reply that neither class of organizations have a right to adopt a rate scale as a uniform price to be charged by all members of the organization. Such an agreement is illegal and in restraint of trade. It is in violation of the anti-trust laws. Many states also have statutes or legal precedents which hold that such agreements are in restraint of trade.

We are aware that legislation has been enacted favorable to union labor organizations, but that affects labor only. If a customer brings to your shop a pair of shoes to be half soled and heeled, and you, as a business man, charge him, say, $1.50, this charge is not for labor, but for the job, the production of which includes labor, material and overhead expense. In other words, the repair shop is a business, not an individual occupation, and the work it performs is not simply one of labor. We would advise organizations of all kinds to refrain from publishing a price agreement. The way to do it is to recommend a scale of prices as being equitable and just, and based upon the cost of material, labor and other expenses, and when such a price is recommended it behooves the members of an organization to individually get that price or a higher one; but do not enter an agreement because it is the agreement which makes the act illegal. The courts, of course, recognize not only actual, but implied agreements, and this is a cause for greater caution. Make the distinction between an agreement and a recommendation, and apply it to every act in reference to price scales.

HAMILTON REPAIRERS ARE GROWING

The Hamilton Shoemakers' and Repairers' Association, of Hamilton, Ont., is making splendid progress. At the last monthly meeting of the Association, John A. Ross, president, presided, and there was a good attendance. Nine new members have been added since the last meeting, making a total of over forty, with several more in prospect. This is very encouraging to the new organization, of which Fred. C. Tebbs is secretary-treasurer. Messrs. F. H. Revell, Fred. C. Tebbs and Fred. Wilman who were guests at the recent banquet of the Toronto Shoe Retailers' Association, told of the splendid time they had had, and referred to the remarkable success of the gathering. Mr. Revell spoke at considerable length and expressed the hope that the Hamilton repairers might undertake a similar function at no distant date. He stated that the spirit of good fellowship and co-operation reigned supreme.

Mr. Tebbs also expressed his pleasure at being present and stated his one regret was that the Association of repair men had not started years ago, for he was fully convinced that organization is the only sure way of knowing your neighbor and of him knowing you. Associations eliminated the envious feeling which used to exist among men of the craft. He had seen men meet in jobbing warehouses, and although they knew one another well enough by name, they would not speak. He had also seen them pass one another's place of business, and not even bid the time of day, but now things were changed—the outlook much brighter, and confidence and esteem were more to the front. A brotherly feeling existed among all true members of the Association, which he said was doing a splendid work for the uplift of the trade, and the betterment of conditions generally.

HAVE THE WORK DONE ON TIME

"I took a pair of my own shoes over to a repair man the other day," writes a Western Ontario retailer. "They were ripped at the welt and the heels required attention. I asked the repairer if he could have them done for me on the morrow, and he replied that he was very busy, but if done to them, and when I had left them. I produced the counterfoil of the ticket that he had given me thinking that, of course, he could locate the boots at once. This afforded him no guide or clue and he floundered around here and there vainly searching for the shoes. I asked him what good a stub kept by a customer was if he could not find the dup-

I could leave them until Monday, it would be a source of great accommodation to him and he would have them finished for certain. Although I needed the footwear I obliged him. When I called on Monday night I found that he did not know whether they had been touched or not. He asked me what kind of shoes they were, what was to be licate on the shoes. He grew very insolent and as much as told me to mind my business. Finally, after half an hour search, he discovered the boots somewhere out of the heap, in the back of the shop, and they had not been touched. I think that a little more order and promptitude on the part of the average repair man would be appreciated."

WHY LEATHER IS SO HIGH IN PRICE

The demand for leather is greater than the supply—on account of the decrease in number of cattle, increased population and the European War.

Cost of tanning materials has increased 100 to 1,000 per cent. owing to blockade of certain ports.

Decreased supply of raw skins by curtailment of some of the supply centres due to the European war.

The freight embargo of Eastern railroads, due to the shortage of ships for carrying.

Increased marine freight and insurance charges owing to the war.

Export of huge quantities of sole leather to Europe.

Increased leather consumption in America, due to greater employment of labor all over the country and more money in circulation from increased business earnings.

WOMEN TO CATCH WOMEN

Women customs officers are again very active along the borders, and woe to the ladies who are detected by them. If the female watchers find a pair of shoes even on the feet, they go the limit, charge the price of the shoes and the duty as well. They have great power. On one Saturday recently, over 200 women were taken into custody in the Niagara Falls district.

HUSBAND AND WIFE DIE TOGETHER

A most sad occurrence transpired in Brampton on Saturday, March 10th, when Mr. Hugh Birss, vice-president of the Williams Shoe Limited, passed away early in the morning, suddenly, from heart failure, and at noon of the same day his wife, Catharine Hossack, succumbed to heart failure as a result of shock.

Mr. Birss was sixty-six years of age. Born in Aberdeenshire, Scotland, he came to this country at the age of twenty, settling in Ingersoll, where he married. Soon afterward he moved to Walkerton, where he conducted a boot and shoe business for twenty-three years, after which the family moved to Brampton to become connected with the Williams Shoe Co.

The parents are survived by three sons—John and James of the traveling staff of the Williams Shoe Limited, Brampton, and William in the automobile business in Galt.

The double funeral took place on Monday, March 12th, to Brampton cemetery.

ADVISED HIM TO WEAR TAN BOOTS

A young man was complaining bitterly to a lady friend, so the story goes, about the high price he had to pay for his last pair of shoes. Whereupon she advised him to wear tan boots and let the Government pay for them. We reckon this girl is a pretty fair recruiting officer.

During the last heavy thaw that caused quite a number of puddles on the streets of Ottawa, one afternoon a smartly dressed young man was trying his best to avoid wetting his new tan shoes. As he came to a rather large puddle he hesitated a few moments before crossing it.

Two boys were walking behind him, and one said to the other: "Gee, Ted, look at that guy, he's afraid of getting his feet wet." To which the other replied: "You bet, Bill, that's why he hasn't enlisted, he's afraid of crossing the water."

DEATH OF MR. W. S. LOUSON

The many friends of Wm. S. Louison will regret to learn of his death, which took place at his residence, 364 Metcalfe avenue, Westmount, Que. He passed away on March 27th after a short illness. Mr. Louison was born on November 12th, 1865, in Montreal, and was manager of the Granby Rubber Co., for a number of years, after which he became connected with Ames-Holden, Limited, and later, Ames-Holden-McCready, Limited, of which he was assistant general manager, when he retired from the shoe arena some time ago to become president of Asch, Limited. The late Mr. Louison was a prominent member of the American Presbyterian Church, and later of Melville Church, of which he was on the board of management. He leaves a widow and two sons. The deceased was a member of the Country Club, the Canadian Club and a life member of the M.A.A.A. He was a gentleman of genial, kindly disposition, wide sympathies, and splendid business ability, which made him well thought of and well spoken of in every relation of life.

F. O. Robinson, one of the firm of the Boston Leather Stain Co., of Boston, Mass., makers of the well known line of bleach known as "Cyclone" stains, edge inks, blackings, etc., will leave Boston on the 15th of April for Montreal, where he will be located at their Montreal office, the International Supply Co.. Mr. Robinson will be accompanied in his calls in this territory by Mr. Butler, of the International Supply Co. Both of these men are largely acquainted among the shoe factory buyers and manufacturing trade. The territory about St. Hyacinthe and Quebec will be thoroughly covered. This firm are meeting with excellent results in Canadian territory, and now that their products are to be manufactured on Canadian soil the sales should rapidly increase. From Quebec, Mr. Robinson will go to Ontario territory, and will be accompanied by Mr. Lincoln from the Kitchener office of the International Supply Co., the exclusive Canadian selling agents.

RUBBER COMPANY MAKES BIG PROFITS

The annual statement of the Canadian Consolidated Rubber Co., presented to the shareholders at the annual meeting this week in Montreal, shows net profits, after providing for bond interest and war tax, of $827,580, as compared with $534,978 a year ago, an increase of $292,602. These are the equivalent of 29.49 per cent. on the common stock, as compared with 18.99 per cent. last year. After providing for preferred dividends of $617,601, as compared with $192,123 the previous year, an increase of $425,478, a balance of $209,979 was added to profit and loss account, as compared with $342,855 in 1915, a decrease of $132,876. It can easily be seen from this that the preferred shareholders could not be otherwise than satisfied at the large distribution they received when the disbursement of the previous year is taken into consideration. The balance now standing at credit of profit and loss amounts to $2,900,097, as compared with $2,690,118 the year before.

The profit and loss statement for the year compares with 1915, as follows:—

AD CLUB WILL ENTER APPEAL

A recent despatch from Calgary says: "The Calgary Ad. Club on the advice of their solicitor, A. M. Sinclair, has decided to appeal the decision of the police magistrate in the Douglas case to a higher court, and if the contention of Police Magistrate Davidson is confirmed by the higher court, then to procure an amendment to the criminal code at Ottawa, as it was intended when parliament passed this Act at the instigation of the Calgary Ad Club, that it should be an offense for a man to advertise goods for sale which he did not have in stock. The finding was as follows:—

Court: "On the evidence which was produced, I find that the boots which were advertised in the particular part of the advertisement of which complaint was made, were not in stock at the time of the advertisement, or on the day following. Under the section of the code under which this charge is brought, I do not think that is an offense. I do not think the section covers a case where a man advertises goods he has not in stock. It may be that this is not the interpretation of the section intended by parliament, but after reading it over and studying it carefully, I find no way in which to interpret it to find a man guilty in case he has not the goods which he advertises. I consequently dismiss the charge."

A GREAT NUMBER

This issue of the SHOE AND LEATHER, while not the largest it has ever issued, is the best and most representative in many ways of any of its previous efforts. Our 1890 spring trade number probably represented the high water mark of trade journal advertising, consisting of over

AMERICA TRUE TO HERSELF

The address of President Wilson to Congress, calling upon the United States to join hands with those nations in Europe that are fighting upon the side of civilization and democracy, is worthy of this great nation, and its ideals. It takes rank with the loftiest utterances of public men of all times, and its sentiments and deliverance are worthy of a Washington or a Lincoln. Its conclusion has the ring that will give it immortality.

"It is a fearful thing to lead this great peaceful people into war, into the most terrible and disastrous of all wars, civilization itself seeming to be in the balance. But the right is more precious than peace, and we shall fight for the things which we have always carried nearest our hearts—for democracy, for the right of those who submit to authority to have a voice in their own governments, for the rights and liberties of small nations, for a universal dominion of right by such a concert of free peoples as shall bring peace and safety to all nations, and make the world itself at last free. To such a task we can dedicate our lives and our fortunes, everything that we are and everything that we have, with the pride of those who know that the day has come when America is privileged to spend her blood and her might for the principles that gave her birth and happiness, and the peace which she has treasured. God helping her, she can do no other."

two hundred pages, without including the engraved plates which we reproduced a few months ago.

This number is unique as having represented every class and section of the trade, giving special prominence to the development of the shoe trade in the West. The Buyers' Guide is the outcome of frequent requests for classified lists of shoe manufacturers, and has been compiled with great care from returns made by individual concerns.

The cover of this issue is one of its unique features, representing, as it does, very thoroughly the sport idea in shoes. The "Tony Red" imitation leather background throws into relief the Golf Girl with her fashionable colors of purple and gold, and the high cut sporting shoes.

The articles are thoroughly up to the minute, and should be read by every wide awake leather man, shoe manufacturer and retailer throughout the country, as bringing thought and opinion on shoe matters up to date.

It is fitting, also, that the issuing of this SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL's Easter Special should occur just at the time when the United States has taken its place side by side with those who are fighting the great fight of democracy. On this account the concluding words of the President's great speech quoted above are worthy of permanent place in the thoughts of all who wish to retain this number as a souvenir of the occasion. Hang it up for reference.

JOLLY GATHERING OF LIVE SHOEMEN

The annual dinner tendered the staff of the Rannard Shoe, Limited, Winnipeg, by the officers of that organization took place at the Fort Garry Hotel, on March 22nd. Among the guests of honor was Mr. Nap. Tetrault, of the Tetrault Shoe Manufacturing Co., Montreal. Mr. Tetrault and Mr. C. F. Rannard, president of the company, have always been warm friends, and have had large and satisfactory business relations for years. Among others present were A. B. Rannard, M. L. Savage, Western representative of the Tetrault Shoe Manufacturing Co., and about twenty-five members of the selling staff of the three Rannard shoe stores.

CHAS. F. RANNARD, WINNIPEG

After the numerous tempting things on an interesting bill of fare had been disposed of, an evening of speeches, song and music followed. Mr. C. F. Rannard, who was chairman, told of his experiences in the shoe trade and referred to the splendid results of the past year, and the gratifying gain in the business of the company. He spoke of his boyhood days when he shined shoes in Winnipeg, and among the many business men whose "understandings" he used to polish, was H. G. Middleton, wholesale shoe merchant. Mr. Rannard dwelt upon the success which had attended his efforts since starting in the shoe game, and thanked the members of the staff for their co-operation, enthusiasm and energetic work in helping to make 1916 the biggest and brightest in the history of the company.

Mr. Tetrault expressed to his hosts his very great pleasure at being present, and added that it was rather unusual for a shoe retailer to be entertaining a shoe manufacturer at a banquet. Naturally the invitation had taken him somewhat by surprise, but he was pleased to see such a fine gathering, and thanked Mr. Rannard, his brother and the members of the Rannard staff for their many kindnesses and consideration.

After the banquet, considerable time was spent by Mr. Tetrault and Mr. C. F. Rannard in talking over shoe conditions, and the latter placed with Mr. M. L. Savage, the Western representative of the Tetrault Shoe Manufacturing Co., an exceptionally large order for fall.

WHAT ABOUT BOOTS THAT LEAK

"Yes we get many peculiar requests for allowances or credit notes," remarked a Montreal shoe manufacturer last week. "I will not say that we are perfect neither are our customers. Here is a pair of shoes sent in by one of our Western patrons with the request that we give him a credit note for five dollars and seventy-five cents. The shoe, as you see, is a storm calf, with bellows tongue and full double viscolized sole and rubber welting. It is as nearly wet-proof as any boot can be. No boot was ever made that I know which will absolutely shed water. The dealer writes that the 'shoes leak,' and they have 'bcen worn only a week.' I replied that if the purchaser wanted to get something for wading through the streams and lakes he had better buy hip rubber boots. I know there are leather shoe manufacturers who claim that their storm boots will shut out water effectively. Judging by the use this pair had been put to, the test would have caused a galvanized steel reservoir to spring a leak."

DEATH OF J. B. THOMPSON

John Barker Thompson, died in Toronto, on March 20th, aged eighty-seven years, from an attack of pneumonia. He was a son of the late Thomas Thompson, sr., who founded the Mammoth House in 1834. For many years, the deceased continued the boot and shoe business established by his father. He also learned the printing trade in his youth, and was a frequent contributor to various publications in Toronto, possessing considerable facility as a writer of poetry. Mr. Thompson's wife died three years ago and he leaves several sons and daughters.

American Views on Styles for Fall Footwear

Men's Fall Footwear

PERFORATIONS will be seen all over some shoes and it is believed this style of ornamentation will prevail on high grade lines for sometime to come. Vamps, front stays, counter foxings and tops all come in for more or less perforation. Regular whole vamp lace boots will predominate, with circular seam bals, also going good. Blucher cuts and button boots will be seen in the usual proportions.

Instep and ball-saddles, lace stays, counter foxings and wing tips all will assist in directing attention to the new lines.

New shades and weaves in cloth topping never attempted before will add style and distinction.

Last season some new lasts with real narrow, almost pointed, toes with a recede drop were brought forth, but retailers did not then consider that the time was right to buy heavy on new lasts. Now the factories are going to bring them forth again, and with more confidence that the time is at hand to interest the trade in these new lasts.

Combinations in cloth and leather and two-tone leathers are featured and it is predicted that they will sell readily. A number of the cloth top samples will be trimmed with edge binding to match the vamp, or will be of a different color than either the vamp or the top, but the binding and buttons will harmonize.

Vamp lengths still stay at 4 to 4½ inches. Heels range from 7/8 inch to 9/8 inch with broad base effects. Edges and shanks are about as last season, with the square shank trim on all flat lasts.

Colored cordovan is featured strongly and used in combinations with pigskin, alligator and other grain leathers. All patent colt shoes, Scotch grain and various shades and weights in boarded leathers are shown in each line.

In upper stocks, colored shoes lead, with dark brown, cherry, mahogany and light and medium tans, comprising about 35 per cent.; gun metal and domestic wax calfskin 30 per cent.; patent colt and kid 15 per cent.; black and colored kid 5 per cent., and the balance in colored cordovan, pigskin, alligator and other grain leathers.

Women's Autumn Creations

Longer vamps will be called for. Three and three-quarter inches will be the average length, but many will be sold with almost a four-inch vamp. With long vamps will come pointed narrow toes. The tooth pick last will most likely prevail. For covered heels nothing is prettier than the Louis. It will be used extensively in two and an eighth inches heights. Light weight welts will be prominent, women preferring light to heavy shoes. Stitching instead of perforations will be more popular. Imitation straight tips, wing tips and other fancy frills will be made with the stitching. This stitching will also go on vamps and lace stays. Wave tops will be used on extreme high shoes, as extra high cut shoes are hard to fit around the calf. Hence the wave top, high in front and cut away in the rear. Eight and a half and nine inch straight tops will have the preference, unless wave tops prove so popular that the demand forces them into lower cuts.

Cloth, buck and suede look good, especially when used in combination with kid, patent and dull leather. These loom up as likely sellers. Such combination as patent leather vamp, full foxed, with white cloth top, or grey suede top should sell. These combinations with dull leather vamp or colored kid vamp should go. Cloths, specially to the trade that features $7 and $8 boots, looks strong. While combinations may have the call a lot of preference will be given to harmonious effects, such as grey kid vamp and grey cloth or suede upper. Certain shoe merchants are now predicting that black and white combinations, all white and all grey and grey in combination effects will be the best sellers for early fall. Grey footwear has been having a wonderful run. There is every expectation of its continuance during the spring season and through the fall and winter. Grey is such a neutral color that it may be worn with almost any costume. Retailers have bought heavily of this color for spring and those placing orders for fall have taken to this shade. Everybody is expecting white footwear to have its greatest run this coming season. This wave of popularity will probably carry white footwear into the fall.

PROPER APPLICATION OF CEMENT PATCHES

In this article I will endeavor to outline a correct and successful manner of applying cement patches, giving several points which will be of interest to all, and to those that are fully acquainted with the work will be a great help and time saver, making possible a lasting and satisfactory job, says the "Shoe Repairer and Dealer."

The points are to make the patch first, not to prepare the place on the shoe beforehand, as I have seen done, as it is a harder matter then to prepare the patch to fit and to make it stick well and to be invisible. The great trouble with the cement patches is the peeling of the edge. This is caused mostly by the patch being a trifle large and the edge of same lapping over the prepared surface of the shoe and coming in contact with the glazed surface or finished smooth surface of the stock of shoe. As a matter of fact, the least overlapping of the edge of the patch will spoil the job. The feather edge turns up, and various causes, such as cleaning, shining the shoes, etc., will bring them off.

The first thing to do is to cut the patch the exact shape and size, then skive down the edge of patch and lay it on the place on the shoe to be covered. Every shoemaker should have a small amount of regular blackboard chalk. A good big thimbleful will last a long time. After laying the dry shaped and skived patch on the place to be covered, while holding firmly with one hand, dip the finger into the pulverized chalk and wipe the edge of patch all around, making a plain chalk ring. The chalk will then cover the edge of the patch and will make a chalk ring around the shoe surface also. Now, before removing the patch, take a blunt soft lead pencil and make a heavy straight mark across the chalk line at one side of the patch. This pencil mark gives an exact position and starting point for replacing the patch. Now the patch may be removed and the chalk mark will show the exact line of surface to be prepared for the cement. Upon replacing the patch ready to stick, get the pencil marks exactly in line, then you are sure to get your patch placed correctly. After smoothing down patch, use a hot heel burnishing iron, working from the centre of patch out toward the edge. The edge is the main place to work on; the heat of the iron will help move the edge and shift the same to its proper place. The patch can be tapped lightly with the hot iron, which makes the work more firm and helps to complete the work of an invisible patch.

I have seen a great deal of work that was not satisfactory because the plan of process and work was not uniform and scientifically carried out.

John White, of Toronto, passed away on March 27th, in his 80th year. He was born in Edinburgh, Scotland, and came to Canada at an early age. For thirty-four years he was shoemaker for the Ontario Government in the Central Prison, retiring only a few years ago. He leaves five sons and four daughters. Two of the sons, Hugh White and John White are members of the White Shoe Co., Limited, wholesale shoes, Toronto. The late Mr. White, whose wife died some nineteen years ago, was a member of the Presbyterian Church, and a great temperance worker.

E. E. Bird, of Boston, Mass., who represents the Davis leather plants, spent a few days recently in Newmarket and Kingston.

Hon. E. J. Davis, of the Davis Leather Co., Newmarket, and Harold W. Davis, of A. Davis & Sons, Kingston, are spending some time in California.

The new lines of the Independent Rubber Co., Merriton, Ont., are taking exceptionally well with the trade. Travelers for the "Kant Krack," "Dainty Mode," and the various other brands manufactured by this firm, report that placing business is coming in as never before in the history of the trade. The Independent Rubber Co., which was established six years ago, has had a splendid record of success and expansion, and the coming season bids fair to be the best that it has ever enjoyed. The placing business has been exceptionally active so far, and Independent lines are meeting with not only increasing sales, but a large number of new customers will handle them in 1917.

James Holmes and G. H. Murdoff, who opened a new shoe store in Trenton a few weeks ago, have a very attractive establishment and are doing a splendid business.

Jos. Johnson, shoe retailer, 479 Parliament street, Toronto, who was laid up for several weeks with an attack of pneumonia, is able to be around again.

of the staff for some time, has joined the Walk-Over Boot Shop, Toronto.

The style of the Toronto Leather Co., has been changed to the Toronto Leather Novelty Co., and a new partnership formed.

James Patterson, Limited, has been incorporated with a capital stock of $50,000, and headquarters in Montreal. The company is empowered to carry on the business of tanners and manufacturers of and dealers in rubbers, boots, shoes, etc.

William Sharman, shoe retailer, of Goderich, Ont., is spending a few months in California, where he will remain until the end of May.

R. J. Orr, special representative and demonstrator of the Canadian-Arrowsmith Manufacturing Co., Niagara Falls, Ont., left last week on an extended business trip throughout the Western provinces. Mr. Orr will be absent for five weeks, and will visit all the leading towns and cities of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

Leather for shoe manufacturing purposes comes under two broad classifications, upper leather and sole leather, these, as their names imply, being used respectively for the sole and for the other portions of the shoe. The upper leathers most commonly used are calfskin, coltskin, or horsehide and kid. Calfskin comes in various finishes, patent, wax, bright, dull, boarded, and velvet. Coltskin and horsehide are used principally as the bases for patent leather, but they are also employed in dull finish for men's high-grade shoes. Kid may be glazed, patent, pebbled, or morocco, according to the tanning process.

At the funeral of the late W. P. Francis, of Quebec, vice-president and general manager of the John Ritchie Co., which took place to Brockton, Mass., wreaths were sent by the Quebec Shoe Manufacturers' Association; Beardmore & Co., Toronto; Davis Leather Co., Newmarket; Richard Freres, Quebec; H. V. Gale, Quebec; Robson Leather Co., Oshawa; E. A. Shee, Quebec; Collis Leather Co., Aurora; United Shoe Machinery Co., Quebec; employees of John Ritchie Co. and others.

Cobourg ratepayers carried a by-law recently, granting the Cobourg Felt Co. a loan of $10,000 which is to be repaid in ten annual consecutive payments.

President Walter Brown of the Trades Council, Toronto, who is also business manager for the Boot and Shoe Workers' Union, reports that all the local contractors but one have signed contracts with the union. In Hamilton the same state of affairs exists, as only one firm refused to sign, the others having agreed to arbitration. The arbitrators selected are Judge Snider, of Hamilton (chairman), J. Valentine, Waterloo, for employers, and Walter Brown, of Toronto, for the union.

A. J. Beer, of Summerland, B.C., dealer in boots and shoes, is closing the West Summerland branch.

W. Cathcart & Co., dealers in boots and shoes, of Victoria, B.C., contemplate re-organizing.

Philip Pocock, of the London Shoe Co., London, Ont., was in Montreal and Quebec on business last week.

J. B. Douglas, of Calgary, was a recent visitor to the trade in Toronto and Montreal.

A decided note of confidence runs through the institution of Coates, Burns and Wanless, London, confidence in the demands the season of 1917 will bring and in the provisions they have made to meet them. Four large flats and the basement are heavily stocked with selected and reliable shoes, embracing men's, women's, children's and infants' lines, in heavy and fine goods. The firm reports that business this year, so far, is away in excess of what it was in 1916.

The Rosedale Shoe Repair Co., has started business at 1155 Yonge street, Toronto. Charles Culbertson is the proprietor and has had many years experience in this line. He has added a 22-foot outfit, with stitcher, supplied by the United Shoe Machinery Company.

Ed. R. Lewis, of Toronto, has been appointed special representative for the Boston Woven Hose and Rubber Co., of Boston, for their well-known lines of Fibre Soles and Heels. The general appearance and style of these lines are very attractive. The fibre sole is a composition of high grade rubber into which a considerable quantity of prepared fibre is worked. This serves to stiffen and lighten the sole and give it as much as possible the appearance of leather. It also adds to the durability and service of the shoe. This new material waterproofs the bottom of the boot and makes the shoe safe and comfortable. Fibre soles will take the close stitch of leather, preferably eight to the inch, will edge trim and finish as attractively as leather. The soles come in various thicknesses and styles and also in different colors.

Stirring tribute to the memory of the men of the J. Leckie Co., Limited, Vancouver, B.C., who have donned khaki was paid by the employees of the firm recently, when the honor roll was unveiled in the company's offices. The ceremony which was conducted by Mr. W. H. Leckie in the presence of about one hundred employees, was solemn and impressive and recalled to mind the sacrifices which are being made daily by the boys at the front. Sergt. Wells, who has already seen much fighting overseas, related some of his experiences on the battlefields of France when he unveiled the honor roll and also made appropriate reference to the former members of the J. Leckie Co., Limited, who are actively engaged fighting the Huns. All told twenty-five members of the firm have enlisted, four of them having paid the supreme sacrifice.

A recent despatch from Sydney, N.S., says: "The shoe dealers of the city called on the Mayor this week to ask for protection for their interests. This was on account of a representative of an outside shoe concern who is coming here to open up for business, they claim for a short term only. According to their story this man handles stock which he claims he can sell at a lower figure than local dealers. His plan, they say, is to come to a city or town, get assessed and pay only the usual fee for business, whereas he should come under the Peddler's Act, as he stays but a short time, and pay the license required under the Act. This should be made commensurate with amount of money he would take from the city. The dealers requested that the city protect the citizens. Mayor Muggah stated that nothing could be done in the matter as the man had complied with all

A. W. Dubois, representing Charles K. Fox., Inc., Haverhill, Mass., is spending a few days in Toronto on business.

S. Gloud representing the Leach Shoe Co., Rochester, N.Y., was in Toronto and other cities this week.

P. J. Kelly, men's furnisher, of Stratford, Ont., has added a shoe department for men.

Chisholm Bros. have moved into their fine and splendidly equipped new shoe store at 1680 Dundas street, Toronto. The new home is admirably lighted and well laid out, while the fixtures are in Belgian grey and represent the last word in neatness and attractiveness. The opening was held this week amid music and flowers, and a splendid showing of smart footwear models for spring.

The George E. Keith Shoe Co., Brockton, Mass., have manufactured a sample "leatherless" shoe which it has been exhibiting. This shoe can be manufactured so as to sell at a reasonable price, and may be sold for $4.50, while the same shoe made up in leather and kid would cost at least $10 or $12. The shoe represents one of the new high top spring models with vamp and uppers made of clothoid.

NEWSY BRIEFS FROM QUEBEC

John Pothier, of Redmond & Co., Limited, Montreal, was in town on business recently. He reports that the company is very busy in the manufacture of gloves and mitts.

F. X. Mineau, representing the F. F. Dalley Co., and A. Isseman of the Walpole Rubber Co., both of Montreal, were in Quebec recently on business.

E. Fournier, of the Plessisville Shoe & Leather Co., Plessisville, was in Quebec on a business trip some days ago. He states that the firm is keeping very busy.

Luc Routier, Elie Jobin, and J. M. Stobo, were out of town recently on business.

L. Trudel of this city, has been appointed representative of the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. for the Quebec District.

Mr. Trudel has been successful in booking large orders for the company, and finds Neolin soles are taking well in this territory.

Business in town is generally good. The windows of the shoe retailers are being decorated for Easter, and prospects are bright for a good week.

Edgar Clement, wife and daughter, are on a trip to Florida. Mr. Clement having been appointed one of the referees in the matter of awarding the leather medal for the capture of the famous fish by Mr. White, is anxious to proceed to the scene of the fray to verify the weight of the fish. He expects to have his report ready for publication in the April 15th edition of the SHOE AND LEATHER.

THE NECESSITY OF GOOD TOPLIFTS

Of late years, on account of the high prices of sole leather shoe manufacturers cut a good many toplifts out of the poor, soft parts of sole leather and then compress them, making them hard. They look nice, and work and finish good, but they do not give the wearing quality, especially when they get wet a few times. They then spread out, swell up and wear off at the side, so that the shoe has a bad appearance. Then, too, the lift soon falls off and the heel soon goes to pieces and is ready for the repair man.

Years ago shoe manufacturers always took the best of a side of a heavy slaughter or dry hide sole leather, cutting off practically a bend out of the side, trimming off the belly and shoulder; they then wet the stock, put in a temper and rolled and made it as hard as possible. They evened it through the splitter and assorted the lifts for grades, making a toplift that was equal in wear with the best sole that could be put on a shoe.

Now, understand, I do not say there is none of this kind of toplifts used now, for there is, on some of the best high-grade shoes. Manufacturers are as particular now as ever; but I speak principally of ladies', misses' and children's shoes, where the cheap, compressed toplift is used.

Years ago we used on all high-heeled slippers and fine shoes a light brass top-lift sometimes to ornament the shoe. There was a heart shape cut out of the centre of the brass lift and a piece of red sheepskin was put under the brass lift, which was fastened on with three brass screws and the effect was very tasty.

Brass at the present time is very expensive and also mighty heavy, but as a suggestion for a change, why not use an aluminum toplift in the same way as we used the brass? It would be light in weight, wear well and at the same time not cost so much, and it would surely keep the heels flat so the shoe would wear straight and look better.—Hide and Leather.

Shoes of Superior Quality Priced Remarkably Low

For the Fall season we have selected a number of new designs of which the two illustrations are fitting representatives.

Every one of the new creations are right up to all the style requirements that the present vogue demands, and if you have particular customers, customers who appreciate the right-up-to-the-minute things in footwear, then these lines will fill your every need.

Now About Prices

We were actually so fortunate in having an immense stock of leather before prices soared that we are able to make the prices on our every line unusually attractive.

Ask to see our lines, they will be shown about April 16th

Special Incline Elevator

There's a big advantage with an elevator of this type. It saves much handling through the factory. Rolls of leather can be elevated immediately through the window right on to the floor where needed.

In time alone, to say nothing of its labor lessening powers, this elevator will soon wipe out its initial cost. Send for our complete catalogue of all kinds of conveyors, carriers, elevators, etc.

We can supply every carrier need whether horizontal, inclined or vertical.

The Retail Merchant—a Wonderful National Asset

There are more than 50,000 retail merchants in Canada. They employ more than 250,000 people. Half a million more people are directly dependent on the retail business for a living.

Each year goods pass across their counters worth more than a billion-and-a-half dollars.

A vast army of distributors—no less important in the Nation's work to-day than the great army of producers.

These 50,000 merchants and their quarter of a million employees are a most vital factor in the existence of Canada—but they could become a still greater factor if they worked at 100 per cent. efficiency.

At this very hour the Nation is asking the utmost efficiency in every line of business. This means that all of us must change our gait and do more than an ordinary day's work.

This applies to the merchant who distributes, as well as to the farmer and manufacturer who produces.

In order to become thoroughly efficient, there must be no waste motion, no lost energy, no needless labor, no careless use of money.

What a wonderful opportunity there is for the 50,000 retail merchants in Canada, to become personally efficient, and enable their quarter of a million employees to become more efficient—to work better, faster and more accurately.

The National Cash Register Company have utilized years of experience, brains and energy in devising a mechanical means of accomplishing this most necessary efficiency.

This machine stops losses, prevents mistakes due to carelessness and inaccuracy, and saves time. They are indispensable to the merchant who desires the highest possible efficiency in running his store, and are helpful to every ambitious clerk.

Our new model Registers stop losses, mistakes, temptation, and carelessness.

They save time, worry and money. Without obligating yourself in any way, write us to-day for full particulars. We will gladly furnish these.

ADJUSTABLE ARCH PROP

Style C

The Bridging Piece

In the arch support trade this style is acknowledged to be the standard of excellence. It is constructed for endurance under the most severe service of the heaviest person, each pair being guaranteed against breakage or damage of any kind excepting wear. The Arch Prop has but three parts: the plate, the bridging piece and the leather covering the upper plate. The plate is made of Nickel Silver, somewhat smaller than the plantar surface posterior to the ball of the foot. It follows the lines of the foot, except on the inner side, where it is extended and slit into digitations or fingers. The whole plate is hammered into approximately correct anatomical shape. The bridging piece is narrower and considerably shorter than the plate which it serves to strengthen. The leather portion has the shape of an insole abbreviated at the ball, and is made of the best oak-tanned strap leather.

Each pair is put up in an attractive box with full directions for fitting and adjusting. Retail price.....$3.50 per pair

Our travellers are now out covering every portion of the Dominion and displaying the finest, most representative and distinctive line of men's fine shoes that we believe has ever been presented to the retail trade.

Evidences of Expansion

It is now six years since the new REGAL factory was established in Canada. The output within this period has increased over 400%, and REGAL agencies—a worth-while proposition for any alert shoeman—have multiplied by the score.

What It Means to You

Back of all this there is a reason which, in its broad interpretation, means service, value, style and prestige. We were never as proud of the REGAL models as we are to-day. You will say so, too, when you see them, and note their exceptional value.

22-FOOT GOODYEAR SHOE REPAIRING OUTFIT

MODEL N

THIS Outfit represents the highest development in shoe repairing machinery, and meets every demand of modern shoe repairing. It embraces all the essential processes for making new shoes from old ones, giving the maximum of equipment and efficiency in the minimum space. The Outfit has the Goodyear Stitching Machine with all its improvements, including a new style steam generator which uses gas or gasoline for generating the steam, and operates automatically, thereby insuring a uniform heat for keeping the wax in proper condition and requiring little attention from the operator. The Edge Trimming Machine has the new feature of the two shafts, being operated by a single belt, and the cutter grinder is attached directly to the main shaft. This arrangement gives better results with less power.

The Buffing and Scouring Machine has a shaft 57 inches long and carries the following equipment:

- | | |
|--|----------------------------------|
| 2 Split Bottom Buffing Rolls | 2 Flat X-Ray Hee Scouring Wheels |
| 2 "C" Shape X-Ray Heel Scouring Wheels | 1 Heel Breast Scouring Wheel |
| 1 Pin Wheel Pad Complete | |

A powerful Blower System removes the dust resulting from the trimming, buffing and scouring operations, and is designed to overcome certain objectionable features of other blowers.

The Finishing Machine has a 78-inch shaft which has all the necessary equipment for black or russet work:

- | | |
|--|--|
| 2 Corrugated Rubber Shank Finishing Wheels | 1 Corrugated Rubber Heel Finishing Wheel |
| 1 Corrugated Rubber Bottom Finishing Roll | 2 Shank and Bottom Brushes |
| 2 Heel Brushes | 1 Stitch Cleaning Brush |
| 1 Levelling Roll | 1 Bead and Wheel |

At the end of the Outfit is the Oscillating Edge Setting Machine which is fitted with union irons and in its motions duplicates hand workmen with quicker and better results.

Each of the machines is operated independently by a friction drive pulley, so that it is necessary to use only those machines which the operator may require. This feature means a saving of power.

All the machines are firmly mounted on legs and driven by a countershaft with carefully adjusted bearings, so that the Outfit runs with very little vibration, and is in every way most efficient.

IT is not too late to make sure that your Rubber Footwear needs for next Fall and Winter have been adequately covered by your Placing Order. You can protect yourself, in that respect, if you act promptly.

And remember that your order placed with the Dominion Rubber System gives you the benefit of the unequalled service and the manufacturing facilities of the largest rubber organization in Canada. That fact merits more than passing consideration.

TO HELP FOOD PRODUCTION

A Great War Necessity—Everybody Should Help Speed Up—What the Shoe and Leather Trades Can Do To Help—A Serious Situation

TO most city and town people the agitation about the scarcity of farm labor and the excitement about a food crisis is mere newspaper talk, but to those closer in touch with agricultural conditions the famine scare is no bogey. This year is going to witness a serious situation in the production of all kinds of farm produce.

There are farmers who are unable through the impossibility of securing adequate help to put in certain kinds of crops at all, and most of them are putting in as little as they can of important food products.

The depletion of the country's supply of farm labor through the war is serious enough, although perhaps not sufficient to bring about a serious impasse. But wages for ordinary unskilled help in the cities and towns where munitions are being made have risen to such an extent that it is impossible to keep men on the farm. When they can get thirty to forty cents an hour for comparatively easy work they naturally turn their backs upon the more strenuous kinds.

There must be some way of helping the farmer out or we shall face the inevitable aftermath of war, if we do not seriously hinder the results of the war by putting the men who fight for us on half allowance of food. In this greatest of all wars science has eliminated the usual concomitant of pestilence, it remains to be seen whether scientific management of agricultural production shall obviate the twin evil of famine.

The work of the "National Resources Committee" should be backed up by all who wish righteousness and truth to prevail in this great conflict. There are men who cannot take their places on the firing line who ought to do their part in providing those who fight with the necessities of life. There are few men, young or old, who cannot give a portion of their time to this serious matter of food production without even interfering with their ordinary work. The Toronto Board of Trade has inaugurated a scheme by which the usual vacation of office and warehouse employees will be extended a week without pay, so that those who desire may offer their services to farmers needing help. The plan calls for the payment of the same wages by the farmer as the soldiers receive on active service, namely, a dollar and ten cents a day and board. Rightly handled this scheme ought to afford a measure of relief, although it will no doubt be attended with some necessary friction.

During the two months of summer when there is very little business doing in retail stores, throughout the country, and when the pressure is at its greatest upon the farms, no doubt a good many clerks as well as proprietors could be well spared from the stores to take a hand in the harvesting of the crops. It should be put up to them in the strongest possible manner that this help is as much a matter of duty to the country as taking up a gun and crossing to France.

We would go a step further and make the suggestion that stores in rural parts might close for certain days during the week to permit employees or proprietors, with or without experience in field work, to take hold of this pressing matter of getting everything possible out of the land. It would be no doubt appreciated fully by farmers, who would not only reserve their trade for such stores during the days set apart for business during the summer, but co-operate later by regular patronage.

We have now quite generally the Wednesday half holiday, why not make one or even two days a week this summer "Farm Day," when "all hands" could turn out to gather and house the crops. No doubt the shoe trade would join in a movement of this kind.

Helping Shoe Customers Purchase Wisely

Instructing Patrons How to Save Money in Buying New Shoes—How Personal Service will Assist in Keeping Retail Prices Down—Ways and Means that are Being Adopted to Meet the Continued Upper Trend of Shoe Prices

OWING to the general upward trend of shoe prices and anticipating still higher prices, shoe dealers will be interested in any suggestions whereby any decrease in the volume of sales can be prevented. Shoe retailers generally are giving this matter no small amount of thought at present.

We know of at least one large shoe retailers' association that is making extensive efforts to meet the new and very unusual conditions that face the trade due to the possibility of still advanced prices. Among other things destructive newspaper publicity is being dealt with. A great deal of publicity has been given through the newspapers to the idea that shoes will be yet sold at from twenty to thirty dollars per pair. Such publicity is not only untrue, but it is most misleading, and has a tendency to limit the number of pairs of shoes that are purchased.

Relieve the Demand on Leather

Since prices of all kinds of leathers have advanced to unprecedented figures over which retailers have no control, it has been suggested that the use of materials that are suitable for various uses in the making of shoes other than leathers be increased. By encouraging such materials to the fullest extent the leather market will thereby be relieved and the tendency prevail to keep prices more within reason to the average purchaser.

Conservatism in placing future orders is strongly favored, that whereas it has been the practice in the past six months, to place orders far in advance of immediate requirement, during which time the leather market has advanced to very enormous high costs, realizing that a turn in the situation is liable to occur at any time, it is suggested that speculative buying be discouraged and more moderation be shown in placing orders, at least not so far in excess of requirements that buyers are likely to be burdened with high priced stocks in case prices should recede.

The campaigns conducted by some shoe retailers are meeting with much success. One large company recently issued to customers a four-page leaflet in which the conditions responsible for the increase in prices were carefully explained. This leaflet also contained suggestions for customers to follow in buying their new shoes. The company planned to circulate this leaflet until all their customers had received one and had thoroughly digested its contents. From time to time during the year, similar leaflets are to be issued and customers will be informed of any changes that are taking place in the markets, which are likely to have any bearing upon the shoes they purchase.

An Instructive Leaflet

This interesting leaflet read as follows:

"Don't talk about the high cost of shoes—

DO SOMETHING!"

Our old enemy, high-cost-of-living, has increased shoe prices to the breaking point.

Some of the causes are the increase in the cost of raw materials, the increase in ocean freight, the hides that have been sunk in ships, the scarcity due to the impossibility of getting needed leathers from Germany and Russia.

These are conditions we cannot change.

But another cause is that PEOPLE ARE NOT BUYING SHOES WISELY. THAT we can and should correct, with your help.

The success of our attempt to reduce the high-cost-of-living depends upon the co-operation of our customers. Consequently we are making the following suggestions, by the use of which we believe you will save money on your shoes.

Suggestions in Buying Women's Shoes

1. Buy practical shoes.
2. Buy heavy-sole shoes.
3. Buy black shoes in preference to tan for long wear.
4. Buy cloth-top shoes.
5. Buy fibre-sole shoes.
6. Buy lower-cut shoes.
7. Our $5 to $8 shoes for women will give longer and better wear than our $10 and $12 shoes, which are made for style.

Suggestions in Buying Men's Shoes

1. Buy black shoes in preference to tan for long, hard service.
2. Buy fibre-sole shoes and save 50 cents to $1 a pair.
3. Look into the men's shop whenever you are around, for odd pairs we are constantly closing out.
4. Do not buy unless you want to. Look as often as you choose.

Suggestions in Buying Misses' Shoes

1. Buy black shoes instead of delicate colored kid-skins, which are not only expensive, but do not give long service.

2. Buy black kid or gun metal in preference to patent leather, which is always liable to crack.

3. Get daughter to see the wisdom of wearing rubbers on wet days. Shoes that get wet through are never the same after. The time to buy rubbers is when the shoes are bought.

4. White canvas shoes cost much less and are almost as good-looking as buckskin.

5. Cloth-top boots wear well, look well and help keep down the cost of leather if worn generally.

6. Do not buy tan shoes while the price stays so high.

Suggestions in Buying Boys' Shoes

1. Do not buy tan calf shoes while they are as high as they are now.

2. Impress upon your boy the fact that shoes are very expensive.

3. Try to get him to treat them decently—boys are notoriously hard on shoes.

4. Buy heavy knock-about shoes for everyday wear and a dressier pair for lighter wear.

5. Investigate the merits of fibre-sole shoes.

6. Look at our specials for school wear.

7. Don't buy ahead on boys' shoes, because the chances are he will outgrow the size and it will prove to be a loss.

Suggestions in Buying Children's Shoes

1. Save ALL the children's shoes for outdoor wear while shoe prices are high.

2. Let them wear moccasins or felt slippers in the house while shoe prices are high.

3. While tan shoes are so very expensive, buy black instead—better still, BUY CLOTH TOP BOOTS and help keep the cost of leather down.

4. Instead of white buckskin, buy white canvas if you want to get around the high cost of shoes.

5. White canvas is as dressy, even more hygienic, and costs much less.

6. When warm weather comes buy ankle-ties and strap pumps. Save money by not using boots in the summer months.

Suggestions in General

Be moderate in your demands.

If a great number of customers want any one style, that style will become higher in cost. And the more people want them, the higher they will cost. This applies particularly to fancy colored leathers, very high cut boots, buckskins and shoes with covered heels.

There are 240 difficult operations in putting a shoe together. The human equation enters largely into the problem of producing shoes.

The increase in the cost of shoes has a tendency to make people expect longer wear. We want to be very frank and have our customers understand the facts.

Because you are paying more for shoes than formerly, it does not mean that you can get longer wear—the same shoes (and sometimes shoes not as good) cost more, due to the causes outlined.

Items of Interest to Leather Producers and Users—What is Being Talked About in Leather Circles at Home and Abroad

THERE has been nothing unusual in leather conditions in the past two weeks, notwithstanding the fact that the United States have come into the allied forces arrayed against Prussianism. There has naturally been considerable speculation as to the effect upon the leather market on account of the necessarily large orders that must ensue for American army purposes, but so far there has not been anything like the excitement or interest that was expected. There has been a little increased activity in some lines and some Canadian concerns are reported as receiving large orders for sole, but otherwise the leather business seems to be pursuing the even tenor of its way.

Business in Canada.—The large Easter trade done by retailers has sent them to the market for more shoes with the result that both manufacturers and jobbers who a month or so ago were inclined to go a little slow in ordering supplies, have limbered up. There has thus been a decidedly better enquiring for all kinds of stock of the better class, particularly for light leathers, prices of which show no immediate signs of abatement. Leather men claim that a strain has already been put upon the better selections, which is resulting in a stronger market. A good deal of enquiring has come in the last two weeks from the other side for certain classes of upper stock as well as sole, no doubt due to war conditions, but so far there has not been much actual movement.

Hide Excitement.—Packer hides have taken on considerable strength during the past week. No doubt packers have been following a policy of using up surplus stocks for the production of their own leather anticipating a large war demand, and this with a persistent bullish policy has resulted in higher prices as soon as any regular demand started in with tanners. The market has been quite active with a strong demand for heavy and light native cows followed by native steers. Both the Western and Eastern markets have been in sympathy. Country hides are moving up in sympathy, and the feeling prevails that as soon as definite orders are placed for shoes on a large scale for army purposes there will be a strong advance.

No Excessive War Profits.—A despatch from Washington says: "The United States Government invoked for the first time its drastic powers to strike a death blow at exorbitant war profits. Under authority of the last naval appropriation bill a manufacturer was directed to furnish a large order of war supplies at a price fixed by the government, far lower than the figure voluntarily submitted. If the order is not obeyed the plant will be taken over and operated by the government.

"It is understood that the concern against which these statutes have been invoked refused to meet the government's requirements as to price when the orders were tendered originally and in the regular way. So far as known this is the only case of the kind yet produced by the present emergency.

"Officials would not disclose the name of the manufacturer nor the agency through which the order was given. It was admitted, however, that the action had been taken and that President Wilson and his advisers were firmly resolved that only fair and reasonable charges should be paid by the nation to its citizens for the things that are necessary to make ready for war.

"European governments are paying an average of 10 per cent. profit on war materials purchased in the United States. It was asserted authoritatively that the government of the United States intends to buy its own supplies at less than that rate of profit to the seller. The law invoked is section 3 of the last naval appropriation bill, as follows:

"The President is authorized to require the owner or occupier of any factory in which the ships or war material are built or produced to place at the disposal of the United States the whole or any part of the output of such factory, and, within the limit of the amounts appropriated therefor, to deliver such output or parts thereof in such quantities and at such times as may be specified in the order at such reasonable price as determined by the President."

British Army Contracts.—"Many ugly rumors regarding naval and military matters, have been circulated during the last few days," says the Shoe Trades Journal, "but there seems to be very little truth in them. What, however, is true is that the last Russian Army boot contract is held up for the moment, despite the fact that it was officially stated that big quantities were wanted during the next few months, and that deliveries were urgent. There is a deal of speculation as to the course that events are likely to take, especially as there seems to be no pressure for the new order for Roumanian boots.

"Coupled with the fact that the government have lately bought a very big quantity of both sole and upper leather, presumably for export, it may be that the Russian manufacturers and small bootmakers are about to undertake contracts for their own government. We believe they are in a better position than they were to deal with this task, and it would be in accordance with the policy of other countries to produce their own army boots. If such were the case, English manufacturers would not be seriously disturbed, and many would even be glad to be relieved of army contracts, so that they may pay a little attention to civilian business, and especially the export branch. Shippers are at their wits' end to get boots and shoes, even when they are favored with licenses to export the goods. Indents have to be turned down with heartrending frequency, and it is next to impossible to get any supplies at all for overseas trade.

WHAT ARE YOUR PROFITS?—A LIVE QUESTION

Philadelphia Dealer Advocates Exchange of Information—85 Per Cent. of Retailers in all Lines in the Country Said to Lack in Proper Business Methods—Tremendous Waste Caused by Bankruptcy

By A. H. GEUTING

AT a recent convention of the Pennsylvania Shoe Retailers' Association in Philadelphia, Mr. A. H. Geuting made an interesting address on securing profits. He prefaced his remarks with an invitation to the assembled members to call at his store. He would show make no mistakes. The day of such far reaching co-operation is already in sight, for, under the deft hand of Mr. Sloane, our national organizer, we expect to boast a membership of 10,000 in the N.S.R.A. soon.

"I talked recently with Ed. W. Hurley, formerly chairman of the Federal Trade Commission, who told me that 85 per cent. of the country's retailers are ignorant of proper business methods. He further said that the government wants these dealers to flourish, to make a legitimate profit, in short, to get out of the failure class. Bankruptcy is a bugbear. The quiver of its reaction is felt all along the line from wholesale house to bank, and, eventually, the consumer has to pay. There is a tremendous waste here, and much of it is due to not knowing the cost of doing business and figuring profits accordingly.

"I have placed on the wall before you several charts. These are self-explanatory. In preparing them, I based my figures on a business doing $100,000 a year, because that is an easily divisible amount. Chart Number 1 treats of the selling expense of such a business. You will note that the total selling expense arrived at is 25 per cent. This may seem a little skimpy to some $100,000 dealers, so on

He needs a business doctor. The difference between success and failure is often a matter of only 4 per cent. or 5 per cent. Keep an eye on your profits."

HISTORIC SHOE FIRM PASSES HALF CENTURY MARK

A. J. Stephens & Son, of Ottawa, Observe the Fiftieth Anniversary of their Career in Business—The Principles upon which Expansion and Success have been Based—Values, Service and Fitting, the Three Great Pillars—Firm have Grown with the City

THERE are possibly not more than half a score shoe houses in the Dominion of Canada who have been in business continuously for fifty years, but the number is gradually growing.

On April 1st last, A. J. Stephens & Son, 187 Sparks street, Ottawa, passed the half century mark, and they are to be congratulated on their progress and development. A large announcement of this enterprising and historic establishment, setting forth the record of fifty years, recently appeared in the dailies of the Capital city.

The founder of the business was the late A. J. Stephens, who passed away about five years ago, after being identified with the footwear game for forty-five years. The present owner and proprietor is E. A. Stephens, and the manager is Frank W. Bedard, whose portraits are both presented in the advt.

The firm have one of the most attractive and best appointed shoe houses in Eastern Ontario. The present proprietor was born in the Capital city in 1870, where he attended the public school and Provincial Model School, and afterwards the Collegiate Institute. He then entered business with his father, the late A. J. Stephens. E. A. Stephens stands high in the business community and the esteem of the residents of the Ottawa Valley, and a couple of years ago, was appointed a member of the federal committee, to investigate the complaints regarding the army boots supplied the first Canadian contingent.

The house attributes its long record and outstanding success to the fact that it has always kept before it three essentials, values, service and fitting. It is an interesting fact that they have scores of customers three generations back, who have never known any other shoe store but Stephens.

In their announcement the firm say, "If there is one thing we have aimed for more than another, it has been to give the public polite and courteous service. The test of time has proved that this efficient, conscientious service has resulted in success."

They also add—"We pride ourselves on the splendid reputation we have for fitting our shoes in an intelligent and proper manner. We positively will not fit feet improperly or misrepresent the shoes. This has meant a great deal to our business. We are always ready to tell the maker's name of the shoes we carry, and will not sell Canadian shoes as an American product."

The firm are agents for the district for Regal, Bell, Invictus, Sorosis and other lines.

On the occasion of their golden jubilee numerous friends in the trade will warmly congratulate A. J. Stephens & Son on their standing in the commercial world, their high ideals of service, methods and system, and their steady development, on a sound, progressive basis ever since the historic year of Confederation, 1867, when Ottawa was little more than a scattered lumbering centre. To-day it is a bright, busy city of over 100,000 people, with many great industries, splendid wholesale and retail establishments, and a system of parks and driveways along the Rideau and Ottawa rivers which impart to it a dignity, solidity and attractiveness of which every Canadian is justly proud.

Fifty Years in the Shoe Business

IT IS WITH PLEASURE that we announce to the public of Ottawa that this old established firm passed the half century mark on the first day of this month. Our doors have swung open to the people of this city for fifty years and we take pride in knowing that during this time, this business has shown a steady and increased volume from year to year owing to the confidence which the public has placed in us.

Late Mr. A. J. Stephens, Founder of the Business.

WE ARE PROUD of the fact that very many of our present patrons have never purchased shoes excepting from this firm; in fact there are grandfathers and grandmothers to-day who tell us that as children they were shod in this establishment. We have scores of customers three generations back who have never known any other shoe store but ours. Is not this a record to be proud of? Very few if any shoe stores in Canada can boast of such a record.

Here Are a Few of the Many Reasons To Which We Attribute Our Success

Values

We have always tried to give the largest amount of value for the least money, and have never failed to maintain our reputation for the best shoes at fair prices.

It will be our endeavor in the future, as it has been in the past, to keep prices within the realm of reason and furnish the citizens of Ottawa with the best possible footwear values.

Service

If there is one thing alone we have aimed for more than another, it has been to give the public polite and courteous service. The test of time has proved that this efficient and conscientious service has resulted in success for our firm.

Fitting

We pride ourselves on the splendid reputation we have for fitting our shoes in an intelligent and proper manner. We positively will not fit feet improperly, nor misrepresent the size. This has meant a great deal to our business.

Merchandise

Our fifty years in business has caused us to be chosen by some of the largest and most reputable manufacturers to act as their agents for this district and include such firms as Sorosis, Regal, Bell, Bell, Invictus, etc. We are always ready to tell the maker's name of the shoes we carry, and will not sell Canadian shoes as an American product.

SHOEMAN WENT HUNGRY TO START BUSINESS

The Way that the Leading Footwear Retailer in City of 170,000 People Launched Out for Himself on Capital of Less than Two Hundred Dollars, and To-day Occupies Seven Storey Building—The Ideas and Working Habits which Helped Him to Win

HOW a shoeman went without food for thirty hours, having spent his last nickle for goods in stocking his new store and, how to-day, this same man occupies seven floors of a building in Indianapolis, Indiana, and does the largest retail footwear trade in that state, is the subject of an interesting—almost romantic story—in the April number of "System," the magazine of business. The recital which deals with the man and his methods is so inspiring and stimulating that it is well worth reading. It should appeal powerfully to the fellow of to-day who is met now and again, complaining that he never had a chance, that luck has been against him, that there are no good openings in the shoe game, and that there is no money in business or any scope for expansion.

Here is the narrative of George J. Marott, of Indianapolis, who started several years ago with a capital of one hundred and sixty-seven dollars, and to-day carries a shoe stock of two hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars. His business has been built up by hard work and unflinching honesty.

When a man saves one thousand dollars in three years while he is earning a salary of only ten dollars a week—starts in business with a capital of $167 and makes a net profit of three thousand dollars the first year—succeeds markedly in the first eight years, while twenty-eight of his thirty-two competitors fail, and two of the remaining four go out of business—builds up a retail shoe trade to one of the largest in the United States, occupies all the floors of a seven-storey building—when a man does all these things in a city of 170,000 there is pretty sure to be something besides luck back of his success. And George J. Marott, of Indianapolis—who has done all these things and more—doesn't count luck in with the factors that have helped him succeed.

Marott entered the shoe business because it was about the only method of making money with which he was familiar. His father was a shoe manufacturer in England, and he set George to work in the factory at eleven years of age. When twelve years of age he was given one year's school education. With a few odd months of "time out" Marott has been in one or another branch of the shoe business ever since; and, in making his unusual success, he has developed a lot of interesting methods.

Saved $5 Every Week

Marott's father, eager to try for his fortune in a new country, sold out his shoe factory in England and came to the United States. He and his family arrived in Indianapolis one day in April, 1875. Marott senior promptly went into the business he knew best—but this time he sold shoes instead of making them. And he took in his son as a clerk, at ten dollars a week.

When young Marott first came to America he was past seventeen years of age. A little over a year later he went back to England for a visit. On the return journey, he says, he began to think over his circumstances more seriously than he ever had before. He realized he was getting on to be a man, presently he would be wanting to spread himself a bit and perhaps get married; yet he hadn't a penny. Then and there, on board the ship, he set his teeth and resolved that during the next year he would save five dollars out of his weekly salary, and that nothing but sickness would prevent him.

He kept that resolution. He began to save, economize and deny himself everything that he could do without. For eight years he did not see the inside of a theatre or any place of amusement that had any cost. He bought socks at five cents a pair, and wore celluloid collars and cuffs.

He saved $260 during the first year, according to schedule, and at the beginning of the next year he renewed his resolution. But now, having a small capital to loan, he so far relaxed as to permit himself to spend the interest. The rate of interest at this time was 10 per cent. By saving and loaning, also discounting commercial notes of several merchants, his assets, at the end of the third year, reached a total of $1,000 in cash and two lots in Emporia, Kansas, which had cost him one hundred dollars.

At this point Marott got married, and used all his capital in furnishing a little home and buying a piano for his wife. His entire capital was gone. He was still earning but ten dollars a week. He found it impossible to maintain a cottage on that salary. So with the cheerful co-operation of his wife they rented one room and became boarders. Upon reaching this status, he again determined to save something. He could not decide upon a definite amount, but he resolved grimly that it would be something; and it was. Sometimes it was twenty-five cents a week, and again it was fifty cents. At rare intervals it rose to one dollar a week.

With a Capital of $167

By these means Marott accumulated, after nearly five years of married life, the sum of $167, in addition to the two lots in Emporia. With this capital, $167, he decided to enter the retail shoe business. It was Marott's idea that the way to begin is to begin. His resources consisted largely of confidence in himself, and a pretty thorough knowledge of the shoe business.

Marott showed his sound business sense at the start in his choice of a location for his store. He selected a room in the very heart of the retail district of Indianapolis. With the sum of $167 in his pocket, he agreed to pay a rental of $1,800 a year. It required sound nerve to make such a contract, but Marott felt self-confident and argued that in selling he must be where there were customers.

Out of his capital Marott transferred $150 to the landlord, one month's advance rent, but was allowed ten additional days in which to clean up the rubbish left by his predecessor. His next step was to call upon ten jobbers and manufacturers with whom he had become acquainted while working for his father. He proposed that each one should extend him a credit of two hundred dollars, on the consideration that it would never exceed this amount. On the other hand, the creditors were not to press him unduly, but were to permit him to pay off the original indebtedness when he could. Marott had a hard struggle with pessimistic jobbers. One pointed to the appalling failures which had occurred in the shoe business in Indianapolis, cited the case of the man who had failed in the very room Marott had rented, and hesitated so long that Marott's heart sank. Nevertheless, this jobber and the other nine finally agreed to extend the credit Marott asked.

How He Financed His First Order

Next, he applied for a loan of three hundred dollars on his household furniture. He needed a line of shoes to complete his stock which he could not buy in Indianapolis, and for this cash was required. He succeeded in securing two hundred dollars, for which he gave a chattle mortgage, and this, with the few dollars left from his original capital, gave him $217 dollars. He took a train to Cincinnati. There he gave an order amounting to $228. He had $217, minus his railroad fare, with which to pay it. He asked the jobber's consent to send a check for the balance when the goods arrived, which was granted.

Marott had selected his stock by twelve o'clock, but he had given the jobber his last nickle. He had eaten nothing since the night before, but he could not afford a meal, so he walked the streets and looked at show windows to while away the time. It was midnight when he reached home. He had not eaten for thirty hours. But Marott promised his stomach future rewards for the present sacrifice. He asked the Cincinnati jobber to ship his goods immediately. The carpenters were putting up the shelves in the store and he could not pay them until he had moved some stock.

As soon as the shoes were in the storeroom, he plunged into them, verified the invoice and prepared to receive customers. Then he went into the highways and byways, detained his friends wherever he found them, as well as nearly everyone to whom he had ever sold shoes, and announced that he was going to open a store. He solicited their immediate custom. In this way he sold enough shoes before the formal opening to pay the carpenters, the drayman, and the owner of the shelving, and sent a check to Cincinnati.

With a Staff of Three

The organization when the store opened consisted of three persons: Marott's wife, Marott himself, and a boy. They sold $84 worth of stock that day, and closed a few minutes before midnight. The profits, above all expenses, were eleven dollars—exactly one dollar more than Marott had ever earned for a week's work. That night was almost the happiest of Marott's life. After closing the store he bought three stogies for five cents, smoked until two o'clock and made plans.

Marott soon began to introduce novelties into his business. He strove to give better values, superior goods, or in some way to be in advance of competitors.

The number of Marott's storeroom was 22. He was eager for his patrons to remember the number, and so he sold a line of shoes at $1.22 a pair. They were of $1.50 value.

Keeping up appearances without violating economy has always been one of Marott's principles. When he began he had over two hundred feet of shelving and a storeroom which would easily have accommodated a stock of $40,000. In those days shoes came in large pasteboard "cartons." They held twelve pairs of shoes. During the noon hour, or whenever business was quiet, he sent his boy to the different stores to ask for the empty cartons which the merchants usually threw away. These he put on his empty shelves. Marott wanted his salesroom to look like a shoe store, and he gained his purpose.

Cleared $3,000 the First Year

Marott cleared over three thousand dollars the first year. When he knew that success was assured, he resolved not to increase his salary of ten dollars a week until he could take the cash discount on all his purchases. Before the end of the first year he had lifted his chattle mortgage. At the end of the fifth year he had made $25,000 clear of debt.

During the first eight years that Marott was in business all of the downtown shoe stores in Indianapolis but four—thirty in all—failed. The capital of two of the remaining four was so much impaired that they presently retired. More money was lost by shoe merchants who failed during this time than Marott made.

In 1890 Marott was compelled to give up his original location; and he moved once again in 1911, when he leased a seven storey building for 25 years, at an average rental of $20,000 per year, making an investment of more than $200,000, which he had made in the shoe business.

It has always been Marott's policy not only to keep up to date, but to be a little ahead of it. His children's playroom is not only the largest, but one of the only two in Indianapolis. And he has a department where women may have their shoes "shined" for five cents.

Marott's business, which started with a capital of $167 and increased to an investment of $225,000, has been built up by hard work and unflinching honesty. Once he kept his word at a cost of $60,000. He is sure it paid.

NEWSY BRIEFS FROM ST. JOHN

Mayor R. T. Hayes, president of the firm of J. M. Humphrey & Co., Limited, wholesale shoe dealers in St. John, N.B., has returned home after a business trip to Quebec, Montreal and Toronto.

W. J. Simpson, of the Miner Rubber Co., of Granby, Quebec, was in the city the last few days visiting the local dealers.

Appraisers inquiring into the loss sustained by the McRobbie Shoe Co., Limited, in a recent fire, fixed the damage to the stock at $14,000. This was covered by insurance. Since the fire the company have opened up a temporary stand near the foot of King street where they have been conducting a fire sale. Their former store is now in the hands of carpenters, painters, etc., and should be ready for occupancy in a couple of weeks.

Andrew Moore, representing the Minister Myles Shoe Co., of Toronto, was in the city recently.

Frank Laskey, of the Tetrault Distributing Co., of Montreal, passed through the city a few days ago. He reported business exceptionally good along the North Shore.

Hazen Magee, who is representing the James Muir Co., of Montreal, has been placing large orders throughout the province.

THE TALKING POINTS IN SUCCESSFUL SHOE SELLING

Some Otherwise Good Clerks do not Know How to Tell a Customer in the Right Way Just what is Required to Effect a Sale—Concentrate the Patron's Mind upon One or Two Good Points and Tactfully Assist the Doubtful and Hesitating

MANY salesmen and salesladies in shoe stores know the stock like a book, are well posted on values and styles, competent in fitting and attentive and polite. They have a good address, can interest the customer and neglect none of the apparently fine details in establishing confidence between the store and its patrons.

There is just one fault and, that is, numerous persons go out without buying. It is sales that count. Sales make up the volume and expansion of any business, not the number who enter the establishment, look about or try on shoes and walk away without making a purchase.

The fault with some clerks is that they talk too much, others talk too little, and some can not readily adapt themselves to any unusual incident or sudden circumstance that may crop up. It does not pay to argue with a customer as such disagreements generally end in the former departing dissatisfied, perhaps never to return. You may have gained your point but the honor is a doubtful one at best.

General rules can be laid down, but not specific ones that will cover every case. In all retail transactions the personality of the salesman and that of the customer enter largely.

The Great Law of Average

In all human beings there are many points in common. They have to a great extent the same ideas, the same emotions, the same prejudices, the same superstitions, and the same mental feelings. What one feels, the other is likely to feel under similar circumstances. If it were not so there would be no law of average and the average is broader in its application and conception than most of us perhaps care to admit. In numerous big organizations selling talks are laid down by an expert sales manager, who defines the line of action to be followed in certain cases. He may give his staff the exact words to be used in explaining or defending a proposition or setting forth some situation or state of affairs. Too many of less experience this may look like a hard proposition to follow, and one that if pursued very closely means failure instead of success, yet the sales organizations of some automobile firms and other specialty concerns such as the National Cash Register, have succeeded along these very lines, cut and dried arguments being given the credit for the immense volume of business done.

Talking on the Styles Points

May not some of these methods employed by them be equally as successful in selling shoes. Selling has been reduced to scientific lines in some departments of commerce; why not in the shoe store? There are lots of selling points in footwear. Let us look at a man's box calf, Goodyear welted, slip sole, solid leather shoe for a moment, and pick out a few of them.

Take the style points first. These may be new and snappy, the latest novelty, smart, swell, dressy, etc. Broad toe, narrow toe, medium toe, knob toe, English receding toe, etc. High heel, medium, low, etc. Blucher, lace or button. Black, tan, etc. Dull or shiny, contrasting leathers, cloth top, etc., and everything else that goes to make up the appearance of a shoe.

Quality is of great importance. Note these points: Our shoe standards are unusual, they must be better for us, honest values, best materials and highest grade of materials, not made at a price, but the price made to fit the quality, after the shoe is built, solid leather, high grade inside and out, etc. The material used can also be shown and made up into a selling talk.

Fit means a whole lot. Why not tell why they fit? Because left on last long enough to shape, not rushed through a cheap factory, but made as in a custom shop, plenty of sizes, half-sizes and widths, your feet can be fitted, no matter how hard they are to fit, we can do it, if a shoe is not comfortable, it is not a proper fit, corns usually begin in the lasting room of a factory, tired feet are due to poor fitting shoes, etc.

The above are merely suggestions, ideas rather, to be woven together in forming selling talks. The idea should be selected that it is thought will bear most fruit in the customer's mind.

Let us presume a customer seated with a shoe on his foot. He is apparently in deep thought—and the Lord knows what he may be thinking of. Let the clerk state in positive and pleasant tones that, "You will recognize the goodness of these shoes at a glance. They are built to give the utmost service and to stand the most trying wear. The soles are of oak-tanned leather, heavy enough to stand wear, yet flexible and comfortable. The upper is genuine calf, soft as a glove and as tough as a nail. Every part of the boot is solid leather and we guarantee it to give entire satisfaction."

Such a sales talk will swing every man, who considers value as of importance, into line and effect a sale. But it would be foolish to use such a sales talk unless the shoe fits and is apparently what the customer desires.

A Poor Rambling Talk

The following is a poor sales talk because it rambles. It does not concentrate the mind upon any one point, but drags it from one to the other before any real decision can be arrived at.

"Those are the best shoes we carry at that price—they are solid all through. We could get more money for them; other dealers do but we sell them at the old price because we do not like to change when once we establish a price. It's against our principles—that's all. That last is a comfortable one and just suited for your foot. We don't go much on styles that are freakish and new-fangled. We stock the best of the established styles. Prices of shoes are advancing, etc., the same style in a kid makes a neat dress shoe, etc."

A concentrated talk of one sentence is often of greatest value. Ideas must be brought forth quickly. Often it is the quickest thinker in a shoe shop that can sell the most shoes—not the best informed, or most experienced in shoe fitting.

There are also the customer's moods and characteristics to be considered. If a man shows impatience with the talk of the shoe salesman, he should not talk much. If, on the other hand, the customer is talkative, the salesman may usually go as far as he wishes.

A writer on salesmanship names the following twenty weapons of attack:

Knowledge, interest, inducing forgetfulness, suggestion, enthusiasm, wonder, desire, voice, manner, sympathy, surprise, expression, self-attention, imitation, gestures, persuasion, fear, persistence, excitement and propitiation. Consideration of these will be taken up in a later issue.

KEEP IN CLOSE TOUCH WITH YOUR STOCK

Do not Allow Yourself to Overbuy More Goods than You Should—Buyers Should Use Purchasing Capital on a Percentage Scale so Stocks Will be Balanced at all Times—Have Your Stock Departmentized

By E. W. HERTZLER, Burlington, Iowa

I HAVE tried to hold my stock to a two-and-one-half-time turn over for several years, but I did not succeed in doing it this year. The fellow who did it is a regular merchant, or else he lacked nerve or capital.

The first step, in my opinion, to hold your stock down to the "Minimum" is to departmentize it. For instance, keep a separate record of your inventory purchase and sales of your different lines.

In my stock I divided it into six different departments.

Department 1, Ladies'; Department 2, Men's Department 3, Boys', Youths' and Little Gents'; Department 4, Misses', Children and Infants'; Department 5, Rubber Goods, Tennis, etc.; Department 6, Findings.

In this way you can see your purchases and sales in these different departments or lines from day to day or month to month and see if your stock is too heavy for the volume of sale in same.

If it is, cut it down by not buying, or buying only where your stock is weak. The first principle in holding your stock down is "Keep in touch with it."

Then you must buy only 50 to 60 per cent. of your season's purchases in advance and this must be bought from reliable firms upon whom you can depend on deliveries when specified.

This, you will say, in the past year has been impossible to do as almost all firms failed to deliver on time and I will agree they have, but this was an exceptional year of poor deliveries.

Agreeable to Factories

Make yourself agreeable to your factories, their salesmen and offices, pay your bills promptly, discount them and you can demand and will find favors shown you in the way of deliveries.

One thing is certain. You must have the goods when you need them to get sales but, on the other hand, we often

FLEXIBLE-MONEY

Always keep some of your capital in the shape of flexible-money so that when the season opens and occasion comes use it on some good style, or for re-sizing on a good number, or for some discount emergency. Consider it a safety-valve warning you when regular stock creeps up to high point—but don't go over the limit.

Your purchase capital should be departmentized—so much for ladies' shoes, so much for men's, etc.—allow a certain sum for each and safeguard your business against overbuying in one department and underbuying in another.

profit and you turn to your partner or you think to yourself—where is that profit I made and discover in place of in dollars and cents—it's in shoes—an overstock of shoes that depreciate in value in place of drawing interest.

Then too, you must have a way of getting rid of your

DEPARTMENTIZED STOCK

Have your stock departmentized so you can tell how much you have invested in your different lines or departments, and can tell from your invoice plus purchases whether you are carrying too much stock in your different departments for the sales in them.

Buy from reliable known firms, discount your bills, so you can demand and expect favors in the way of deliveries. Have a way of getting rid of your odds and ends and "slow sellers" and "poor buys." Keep in touch with your stock always, so you know where your slow sellers and odd sizes are. Do not overbuy.

poor styles and end sizes when you do accumulate them and we all do. This is possible in several different ways.

A reduction in price in a general way—fit them into a lower grade of prices—mix them with a cheaper grade of style similar to them—run them in with a style you are short in—sell them as a cheaper shoe.

You will find people buy them for whom the former price was too expensive and to whom your salesmen would not show them because they felt they were out of their means.

You can do this any time during your regular selling season.

Then again you can put on a clearance sale, but my experience has been, that when you do this you must put on merchandise you can fit every one to, who is drawn to your store by your advertisement of a sale—or your advertisement of a sale in the future will have but little effect, as people will say "Oh, I cannot get anything there, they never have my size on sale."

Here I also want to say when you advertise a thing be sure it is as you advertise it—by this I mean—you must use the purchaser's eye—see it as he sees it. Do not misrepresent and I believe it poor policy to make an article look like a bigger value than it is,—better undervalue than overvalue in your advertisements.

Then you can have a special bargain place where you always have slow sellers and off styles at a reduced price. A basement department is preferable or a place back in the rear of your store, but, when you start a bargain place make it permanent so people who are looking for this kind of merchandise, and there are still a great many of this kind of people, get in the habit of coming there to look for that out of style or small size pair of shoes at a reduced price.

Another point to bear in mind is—do not wait too long to put a style down in price or on your bargain bin when you find it is moving too slow. Here is where you must know think we need more goods than we do to get business, and that is another reason we carry larger stocks than our business permits.

Have you ever had the experience after an inventory that when you look at the profit and loss sheet you show a how your shoes are moving and the one way to know this is—through a system that keeps you in touch with your stock.

You cannot hold your stock down to a minimum if you do not sell the stock on hand at a certain ratio of speed as proportions the amount of goods you get in. This means—do not allow yourself to overbuy or be persuaded to buy more goods than you should. Stay within the 50 to 60 per cent. limit on futures. Do not allow yourself to buy your entire allotment of goods in advance, always leave that 40 per cent. to 50 per cent. of your purchase capital unused so when the season opens up and occasion comes to use it on some good styles that are newer than when you placed your future orders six months ago, or you need more sizes on a good style you picked, or some buy comes up, you do not load your stock to buy it.

A Scale of Percentage

I believe that more shoes would be sold at a profit if buyers would use their purchasing capital on a scale of percentage so their stocks would be balanced at all times.

I want to show you here a way I think is the one to use to get to your purchase capital from your sales and inventory and if you would follow this way, eventually, you would have your stock balanced and would get a good big turnover out of it.

Your stock at present may not be balanced and on this account you might have to alter this rule a little to fit your stock.

A Case Illustrated

We will take for example and figures a business of $50,000 net sales. The stock at the close of the period invoiced say $20,000. We find we made a gross profit of 33 1-3 per cent. in the business. Thirty-three and one-third per cent. is, of course, figured on the selling price and is 50 per cent. on the cost price.

Now, since that is the case and we invoice $20,000 at cost price, then this $20,000 represents at sale, or retail price $30,000 worth of business, with a mark up on it of 50 per cent.

Now, since we did a $50,000 business and expect to do that much again and have enough merchandise on hand to do $30,000 worth of it, then we must do the difference between $50,000 and $30,000 or $20,000 to finish the year.

Now, we must find out what this difference, $20,000, represents at cost price since we make a 33 1-3 per cent. profit on it, so we can buy this much more merchandise to finish the year and we find that it is $13,333.34. This is the amount of stock we must buy to finish the year on and not have any left.

Now, then at the beginning of the period we found we had a $20,000 stock on hand and did a $50,000 business.

This from a good merchandising point is too much to invoice and do a $50,000 business, so we will invoice less this year, say $15,000.

Then our purchasing capital for that year will be $13,333.34 amount needed to finish the season, plus $15,000, amount we aim to invoice or $28,333.34.

This is all the merchandise we can buy if we are going to invoice $15,000 and make a gross profit of 33 1-3 per cent. on the sales.

Now then, divide this amount into your six different departments according to the sales in them, and you have the purchasing capital for each department for the year and, if you do not spend too much of this amount at one time for future deliveries you will find you can do $50,000 worth of business and not be overstocked at any one time during the year.

Of course, this is just an example. But the principle is there and the sooner you get down to such a principle the sooner you will get the wanted turn over out of your stock.

A MAN OF LEATHER

(See Front Cover)

Robson in Canada is synonymous with leather, and for over fifty years it has stood for staunchness and reliability in that particular field.

The face of the president of the concern, Mr. Charles Robson, is as well and favorably known as the product for which his name stands.

The fact that he is "Charlie" Robson with the trade firm "Dan to Beersheba," speaks of his great personal popularity. His big, wholesome presence radiates geniality and good will toward men wherever he goes, which no doubt has had much to do with making Robson leathers a household word with those who make shoes in this country and elsewhere.

He knows the leather game from hide cellar to finishing room, having spent a long apprenticeship assimilating the thorough-going ideals and methods of his father, the late James Robson, the founder of the business.

Added to a complete knowledge of the tanning, Mr. Robson has combined with a thorough business training the happy faculty of making friends for his concern wherever he goes. His customers say there is no one whose face they would sooner see than Charlie Robson's. His hobby is his business, but he finds time in season for motoring, fishing and other outdoor sports, and, although he is not now built for "sprinting" he can hold his own in any event with those of his class in the leather trade.

Oshawa is his home, but the world in general, and Canada in particular, is his parish.

CONSOLIDATED FELT HAD GOOD YEAR

The annual meeting of the Canadian Consolidated Felt Co., Limited, was held in Montreal recently. The annual report showed that the company during the year 1916, had wiped out its deficit of 1915 amounting to $48,965, and showed on the 31st of December, 1916, a balance to the credit of profit and loss account of $4,150.

The management in submitting the annual statement expressed satisfaction at the progress made during the year, in spite of the adverse conditions affecting the company's business in some respects, and expressed the opinion that the company's position at the end of 1917 would be much stronger than it was at the end of 1916, due to the fact that large quantities of raw material were on hand which had been purchased at a low price.

The profit and loss compares as follows:

	1916	1915
Net sales.....	$577,766	$503,659
Gross increase.....	51,613	19,011
Charges.....	47,463	67,977
Net gain.....	4,150	x48,965

Sinking Fund Profit.....	1,200	150
Total surplus.....	136,894	131,544

xDeficit.

Fixed assets are shown at $640,915 in the balance sheet, and movable assets $2,550,630, a total of $3,191,546. Current liabilities are $314,406 with a reserve of $80,032 for bad debts, and surplus of constituent companies amounting to $234,212, which with its own surplus makes a total of $371,107.

On the occasion of giving up his position as office manager of the Maritime Division at St. John, N.B., to become chief clerk to director in charge of sales at the head office of the Canadian Consolidated Rubber Co., in Montreal, H. R. Nixon was presented with a beautiful gold watch and chain by his fellow-workers of the Maritime Division, as a mark of their esteem.

T. H. RIEDER, THE NEW PRESIDENT

NOW HEAD OF LARGEST INDUS- TRY OF ITS KIND

The new President of Canadian Consolidated Rubber Co. is T. H. Rieder—His Advancement from clerical position to Chief Executive has been rapid and well merited—Still on the sunny side of forty he occupies one of the most responsible positions in Canadian Industrial Life and got there by sheer force of ability and not pull.

W. H. ROBINSON, THE RETIRING PRESIDENT

TH. RIEDER, is the newly elected president of the Canadian Consolidated Rubber Co., being elevated to that honorable and responsible position at the annual meeting of the company which was held in Montreal on April 3rd. He succeeds W. H. Robinson, who retires. Victor E. Mitchell, K.C., has been elected vice-president in succession to Mr. Rieder, who, in addition to the office of president, will continue to discharge the duties of general manager. A. D. Thornton has been made a member of the Board of Directors.

A summary of the financial statement showing an increase in sales of more than 50 per cent. was published in the last issue of the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL. In presenting his annual report W. H. Robinson, president, attributed the great increase in the company's volume of sales partly to the higher prices prevailing in the rubber business during the year, and partly to an increase in demand for automobile tires and war equipment. He also stated that the company had during the year managed to build up a very substantial export business. The balance sheet for 1916, when compared with the balance sheet for 1915, showed an increase of almost two million dollars in the amount carried under the head of "Inventories." Mr. Robinson explained this by pointing out the necessity the management had been under to protect the companies as much as possible against future shortage of raw material, increasing prices and future freight embargoes. The maintenance of large stocks of material was imperative if stability in production was to be maintained. The financial results of this policy were also indicated in the company's report, by the large increases in the bills and accounts payable.

Speaking of the accession of Mr. Rieder to the presidency, the "Financial Times," of Montreal, which is one of the most widely known journals of its class in America, pays him the following well deserved tribute: "T. H. Rieder, the new president of the Canadian Consolidated Rubber Co., is one of the standard Canadian examples of 'the young man in business.' He is less than forty years of age, but he has grown up with the rubber industry of Canada, and before reaching his present post had worked up steadily from minor positions in both the selling and manufacturing departments of the company. He has been in virtual charge of the business for several years past as vice-president and general manager. It may be added that rubber is both a young business and a young man's business."

"To become president of one of the six largest industries in Canada and the largest of its kind in the British Empire is no mean honor, but to attain that distinction through sheer merit, while still on the sunny side of forty, is an achievement that few, if any, in the industrial life of Canada have equalled," says "The Dominion."

"Mr. T. H. Rieder's election as president of the Canadian Consolidated Rubber Co., Limited, did not surprise those who have been associated with him in the Dominion Rubber System nor those who have watched his successful career. His rapid advancement in a brief span of years from a minor office position in a small rubber company to active head of this big industry is a fitting tribute to his indomitable energy, his executive ability and his untiring zeal and honesty of purpose in everything he undertakes. Those who know him best realize fully that not only will the position do honor to the man, but that the man will also do honor to the position.

"Canada's pages of history record not a few brilliant successes of men who started on the lowest rung of life's ladder and by their own effort and ability reached the highest positions of trust and influence in commercial, industrial, financial or professional circles. Thos. A. Edison, the railway news agent, gained world-wide fame as an electrical genius; J. J. Hill, the Ontario farm boy, was the pioneer and great railway builder of the Western States; George A. Cox, the telegraph-operator, wielded a powerful influence in Canadian banking and insurance circles; William Osler, the student, became one of the world's leading authorities in medical science; Timothy Eaton, the dry goods lad, became the Merchant Prince of Canada; Donald Smith, the Hudson Bay Co. clerk on the bleak shores of Labrador, rounded out a useful life as Canada's High Commissioner in London, Eng., and as Lord Strathcona, took his seat in the House of Lords.

"The achievements of these eminent men,—leaders in their respective spheres and prominent in the arena of national affairs,—are splendid object-lessons for the young manhood of our fair Dominion. None the less inspiring, to the youth of Canada, is the career of the man who gained his first business experience as an office boy and within a period of twenty years, advanced step by step from one responsible position to another, until to-day he is the head of the largest rubber manufacturing organization in the British Empire.

"Notwithstanding the many exacting duties of his high position, Mr. Rieder takes a warm, personal interest in the little army of workers throughout our organization. His consideration for the welfare of his business associates is unflinching. It is no exaggeration to say that every man and woman, boy and girl, in the organization, feels a sense of personal pride and gratification in having Mr. Rieder as the executive head of the Dominion Rubber System. No better tribute could be paid to anyone."

OPENS NEW SHOE STORE FOR LADIES

J. L. Jefferson, of Annapolis, N.S., has opened a handsome and attractive new shoe store for ladies. With some six hundred square feet of floor space, it is lighted by two single sheet plate glass windows, each 6 by 8½ feet, besides the window-door, and is also fitted with electric light, and all comfortable equipments. This store is in sole charge of two careful and competent sales ladies, while a new stock, in all latest styles of footwear, adorns the shelves. The older store next door will now be confined to men's and boys' footwear. In the rear are the surplus stock, an office and repair department, Mr. Jefferson has a most complete establishment, a fine development of the shoe business which he founded twenty-two years ago, opening the first exclusive shoe shop in Annapolis in 1895.

TRIED SMART DODGE TO CHEAT SHOEMAN

"I had an unusual experience the other night," remarked a Hamilton, Ont., shoe dealer. "It was rather late when a lady and a well dressed, middle aged gentleman entered—man and wife apparently. She tried on several shoes and finally selected a pair of all cinnamon buck 4½, B width, which I sell for twelve dollars. They fitted her admirably, and as it was too late for delivery, and as the couple did not care to take the goods along, the husband told me to send them up to such and such an address the next morning. He gave me his name and they departed. My boy delivered the footwear the next day and the woman tendered a check in payment for the amount. The lad telephoned me asking if it would be all right to leave the shoes as the party had not enough cash in the house, and bring back the check. I said 'yes,' and that afternoon deposited the check with my receipts for the day in my bank. Well, that evening the man called down with the shoes stating that his wife did not desire to keep them on the plea that on closer inspection she did not like the color. He asked for the return of the purchase price, twelve dollars. Now that check had gone into the bank for collection, and I did not know whether it would be honored or not. What was I going to do?"

"The fellow was a perfect stranger to me, had never been in the store before to my knowledge, and here he was requesting the return of the sum represented by the check. When I told him that I did not know him, and that I could not hand the cash over until I saw if the check was good, he got in a high dudgeon, wanted to know if I thought he was trying to 'do' me for the price of a pair of shoes, and all that sort of talk. He grew so abusive that I threatened to put him out. I told him that he could keep the shoes until I saw whether the check was valid but no, he wanted the money or the check right then and there. Of course, it was impossible to give him the latter, which was in the hands of the bank, and as for letting twelve good dollars go before I knew whether there were sufficient funds to meet the paper he had given me,—well I am not quite so easy as all that. He finally went away leaving the shoes and threatening suit for recovery of the money.

"Two days later the check came back marked 'No account at Bank of —'. By being firm I had saved twelve dollars for the fellow had deliberately attempted to work a big bluff act and get cash for a worthless check. It was a pretty smooth, slick game, but it did not operate on me. The shoe dealer has to be awake at all times. I have had people try to victimize me in divers manners before, but never in quite so vigorous and bold a style as this chap, who has probably got away with the escapade in other cities—giving a check, returning later and delivering the goods on some plea that they are not exactly what is required, asking that his money be refunded him, and getting cold cash for what turns out to be a worthless scrap. He talks in such an independent style about his responsibility and honesty that he would almost convince one, even though he is a stranger, that it is a down right shame to impute motives of dishonesty and deception to this prosperous appearing, business-like caller, by even hesitating to rebate the money—especially if you are to retain his patronage."

NEWSY BRIEFS FROM QUEBEC

The death took place recently, at his residence, St. Valier street, Quebec, of Denis Davis, at the age of fifty-eight years. The late Mr. Davis was born in this city and spent his lifetime here. For the past twenty-five years he had been connected with the W. A. Marsh Co., Limited, where his valuable services will be greatly missed. The deceased is survived by his widow, five daughters, and two sons, Robert and James, the latter of whom is foreman of the fitting room of the John Ritchie Co., Limited. He is also survived by a brother, William Davis, of this city. The late Mr. Davis was possessed of many estimable qualities, and his death is deeply regretted among a large circle of friends.

Among the visitors to the Ancient Capital recently were Geo. B. Benton, representing the Progressive Shoe Machinery Co., Minneapolis; J. R. Roche, of Parker-Irwin Limited, Montreal; and A. Alpress, of Wm. H. Horn & Bros., Inc., Philadelphia.

A. E. Marois, of Tourigny & Marois, and M. Russell, of the finishing room department, were in Boston for a few days recently, on a business trip.

David Marsh, B. W. S. Martin, and E. Tremblay, were in Montreal, St. John and Three Rivers, on business, recently.

Alf. Garant, of Dupere & Garant, made a successful business trip to St. Hyacinthe. During his visit he booked some good orders, and also made a sale of two Progressive Outfit Repairing Machines.

In spite of two days of snow and cold weather, which prevented the usual influx of country people into town, thus probably cutting out a large amount of business, shoe retailers report that the Easter sales were very satisfactory.

D. Paefuet, salesman of Dupere & Garant, has returned to Quebec, after a two-months' trip throughout the Gaspé coast, and reports business as excellent.

Elie Jobin, Limited, have recently been taking stock. They have large orders ahead for felt shoes for next season, and are about to start work on them almost immediately. Jos. Metivier, superintendent of this concern, has returned to the city, after spending his Easter holidays at his summer cottage at Cacouna.

J. E. Samson, Reg., are at present very busy, completing the orders they have on hand.

BIG MONTREAL FACTORY MOVING

Ames-Holden-McCready, Limited, have started to move from Inspector street, and not later than the 1st of May, they will have their head office and executive departments at their factory on Mount Royal avenue east. They also have opened what will be known as the Montreal Warehouse Branch, which is situated at 122 St. Antoine street, which will serve Quebec and Eastern Ontario customers. This new building on St. Antoine street is a very large and commodious structure, and is being remodelled to suit their requirements.

Your Customers May Not Always Be As Prosperous As They Now Are

Sooner or later there will be a recoil. Will it be good or bad? Will your customers feel that they have had their money's worth or will they condemn you for sacrificing service for style?

LADY LUXURY SHOES can make your "good will" more valuable by rendering service, consistent with their cost, to your customers. They are produced in a factory equipped, with men and material, to turn out only good shoes.

LADY LUXURY SHOES are welts—every pair—made with such good material and so carefully as to be durable, and therefore economical, but modeled so daintily that they are bound to satisfy the most discriminating taste.

Widths A to E—lasts, staple and novelty—patterns of many kinds—are features which make LADY LUXURY SHOES adaptable to large city or small town.

LADY LUXURY SHOES ARE MADE "TO ORDER" ONLY, BUT DURING THE NEXT THREE MONTHS OUR SPECIAL "RUSH SERVICE" WILL ENSURE PROMPT DELIVERIES.

FORMING IN LINE OF THE BOSTON SHOE AND LEATHER TRADES IN THE PATRIOTIC MARCH

BOSTON SHOE AND LEATHER TRADES PARADE

Shoe and Leather Men of the Hub Manifest Their Enthusiastic Support of President Wilson

ON April 2nd, at the moment arranged for the opening of the War Congress, the shoe and leather and allied trades in the Boston district mobilized in the city's shoe trade centre to join the hundred thousand on the historic Boston Common in a demonstration of support of the National Government. Marshalled by Charles T. Cahill, of the United Shoe Machinery Co., and Major in the Massachusetts' Volunteer Militia, assisted by Thos. F. Anderson, of the New England Shoe and Leather Association, might be seen many leading figures in the Boston trade, including Frank W. Whitcher, president of the Massachusetts Board of Trade; F. M. Haynes, treasurer of the Boston Boot and Shoe Club; Charles W. Morrill, treasurer and Robert Mills, secretary of the Boston Shoe Associates; Elisha W. Cobb, president of the Boston Leather Trade Benevolent Society; Col. F. G. King and Geo. H. Vose, of the United Shoe Machinery Co.; Sig. Rothchild, president of the Boston Leather Associates; Wm. H. Odell, of Besse Osborne & Odell; Lincoln Richter, of the Linen Thread Co.; Wm. Noll and Harry Ripley, of the Boston Shoe Travelers' Association, representatives of the shoe and leather trade press, and others, and supported by the Military Band from the U. S. M. C. Beverly plant, a parade estimated at one thousand men, all bearing the national colors marched through the shoe and leather section and thence to the Mayor's big demonstration on the Common. Amongst the larger units in the parade were delegations from the Regal Shoe Co., Bristol Patent Leather Co., Plymouth Rubber Co., the United States Leather Co. and the United Shoe Machinery Co.

Prior to the start of the parade the band, headed by a big shoe and leather trade banner, played through the shoe district, and stopped for several minutes at the Albany Building to serenade President S. W. Winslow and other officers of the United Shoe Machinery Co.

Shortly before the start of the parade a preliminary meeting to start the movement for the organization of the Boston Shoe and Leather Trade Unit of the Home Guard was held at the rooms of the New England Shoe and Leather Association.

Secretary Thomas F. Anderson, presided, and the objects of the Home Guard were explained by Major Charles T. Cahill, Adjutant of the Second Brigade, M. N. G. A number of those present enrolled for the unit and the work of organization will be completed under the direction of a special committee representing the allied shoe and leather trades.

The unofficial mobilization for war, in which the industry has taken a leading part in New England, is designed to place the facilities of business at the government's ready disposal, and in the shoe and leather trade the Home Guard movement is being furthered by a special committee selected from the general committee consisting of the Presidents and Secretaries of all the trade organizations.

The parade was the largest unit at the demonstration on the Common and is thought to be the most successful and spontaneous ever witnessed in the industry.

ADJUST YOUR INSURANCE AS STOCK INCREASES

Shoe Retailers Should Take No Chances of Fire on Stocks that Have Largely Increased in Value—As Market Prices of Stock Advances See that Yours Receives Protection

THE question of insurance is a matter of great importance to every shoe merchant, but unfortunately it does not receive the thought and attention that is due it. It is an unfortunate condition, yet only too true, that not a few shoe merchants if burned out to-day would find themselves in bankruptcy, while others again would experience a setback that would take them years to recover from. Those dealers who are in this position are neither fair to themselves, their families nor their creditors. Now, not after the fire, is the time to give consideration to this important question.

Shoe stocks to-day are worth very much more than they were some months ago and as long as market prices continue to advance stocks will become more and more valuable. The shoe merchant must know the amount of his stock if he is to be certain that he is fully insured. We take it for granted that the retailer is conducting his business in a business way, and that he is taking stock regularly. In these times, when a month or two will bring about a tremendous increase in the value of shoe stock, the need of regular stock taking is apparent. The stock sheets are at hand to prove loss at once in the case of fire, and this rapidity of settlement reduces loss of profit from business being demoralized. When claims are settled up at once, the merchant can get business under way without delay. Stock sheets should be filed away in the safe after each stock taking.

When the stock is increased, as it is constantly now, the amount of insurance should be increased also. Dealers who enlarge their stock at certain periods of the year can get short term policies. The rate of these is higher than ordinarily, but the dealer needs the protection. Some fire insurance companies allow a percentage off the premium when 80 per cent. of the stock is kept insured during the entire year. Insurance up to 80 per cent. of stock is considered fairly good protection, although a dealer can ask for insurance up to 100 per cent.

The dealer should not only be fully but well insured—his insurance should really insure and protect. A reliable company should be chosen. The dealer should assure himself on this point.

Next, he should make certain that his policy reads so that in case of fire he will really receive the amount he expects. Look over your policies carefully and make sure that they read concurrently, that the description of your stock and premises is worded in the same way in each policy, if insured in more than one company, and that each has notice of the insurance carried by the others. This latter is an important point, because in the past it has been an argument for non-payment by some companies.

Frequently the excuse given by a dealer for carrying insufficient insurance is that the premium is high or prohibitory. This is not by any means a sound reason because where the rate is above the average the fire risk must be great, and there is all the more reason why the dealer should be well insured.

Mr. Shoe Merchant, do not neglect this very important matter for a moment. It is due yourself and business, your family and those who are granting you credit.

THE LEATHER INDUSTRY IN CANADA

THE leather industry of Canada, including the boot and shoe and saddlery industries, has been one of the most important industries of the Dominion. This is an industry which is not confined alone to manufacturing, but has added greatly to the imports and exports of Canada. Taking 1910 as an average year, the figures show that the total value of leather and its finished products produced in Canada for one year was $62,850,412.

The whole leather industry of Canada for that year was capitalized at $48,788,803, and had a pay roll of $9,644,403, which was divided among 22,742 employes. The number of establishments was 399 and the cost of materials $34,390,189.

The boot and shoe industry was an important one, making up about fifty per cent. of the total leather business for Canada. The boot and shoe industry in the year under review showed a total capital invested of $23,630,649, with 16,150 employes on wages and a pay roll of $6,542,347. The value of the products was $33,987,248 and the cost of materials used in the industry $18,507,535.

The shoe industry of Canada has had an interesting progress and has been divided among the provinces of the east and west. The earlier history of the industry was confined chiefly to the provinces of Ontario, Quebec and Nova Scotia, but recent years have witnessed the establishment of plants in the other provinces, including Manitoba and British Columbia. While most of the largest boot and shoe industries have been in the bigger cities, chiefly Montreal and Quebec, there have been a number of such industries in the small centres. Yarmouth and Truro, Nova Scotia, were at one time busy boot and shoe centres, but recently Amherst has held the bulk of this kind of Nova Scotia manufacturing. The making of boots and shoes on a small scale is carried on in numerous towns throughout Canada.

The leather business of Canada adds materially to the trade returns of Canada. Canadian leather is in demand from the boot and shoe factories of the United States. The total leather exports in 1914 totalled a value of $1,268,683 as compared with $67,577 in 1910. Of this big total, leather was valued at $266,211, boots and shoes at $60,378, and harness and saddlery at $16,936.

The total leather imports in the year under review were valued at $8,454,176, which was just double the imports of 1910. Of this total, the boot and shoe imports were valued at $4,229,564, which was nearly a hundred per cent. increase over the figures for 1912. The total imports and exports in leather products for Canada in one year exceeds a value of $9,000,000, and the increase in live stock ranching in the prairie provinces is likely to further increase the exports of hides and leather.

The Canadian tanneries have become important branches of the manufacturing industries of the Dominion. In the year under review the capital invested in tanneries was $17,068,768, the employes number 3,530 and the wages paid totalled $1,732,887. The value of the products was $19,972,178. The cost of materials was $10,575,655, of which a large proportion went to the live stock ranchers for hides and skins.

The products which come under the heading of leather and its finished products include boots and shoes, boot and shoe supplies, harness and saddlery, leather, tanned, curried and finished, whips, etc. The saddlery department has received an impetus since the war and there has been a keen demand for leather because of the increased orders for leather products. The leather industry of Canada is one which benefits the agricultural and industrial development of the provinces and forms an important part of the profit which comes from live stock ranching. The live stock industry of Canada has increased at a rapid rate during the past fifteen years, especially in the prairie provinces, and a large amount of hides now used for Canadian leather manufacturers or for export comes from the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. The older centres, including the Maritime Provinces, Quebec and Ontario, have always filled a generous share of the leather demands for home consumption.

LEATHER MANUFACTURERS' SAFETY ASSOCIATION

At a recent meeting of the members of the Leather Manufacturers' Safety Association, which was held in Toronto, the following officers were elected for the coming year:

President—A. Brandon, Brandon Shoe Co., Brantford.
Vice-president—A. E. King, Dunlop Tire & Rubber Co., Toronto.

Secretary-Treasurer—F. W. Wegenast, Toronto.

Committee—F. L. Langmuir, 800 King street west, Toronto; J. I. F. Anthes, Canadian Consolidated Rubber Co., Kitchener; J. H. Winnett, 350 Sorauren avenue; R. G. Long, 727 King street west, and W. A. Beal, 52 Wellington street east, Toronto.

The inspector of the Leather Manufacturers' Safety Association is D. J. Hay, whose office is in the Traders' Bank Building, Toronto.

JUST SPRING

There is somethin' sort o' soothin'
When the South win's 'gin to blow,
And the grass peeps through the winter blackened sod,
And the birds begin to twitter,
As they're flittin' to and fro,
And the snow drops waken from their long cold nod.
And the trees are kind o' puttin' on
Their Summer coat of green,
And the honkin' wild goose noses North to nest,
And the meltin' snow has swelled the cricks
To twicst their reg'lar size,
And the chirpin' robin proudly swells his breast.
And you get a kind o' feelin'
That you ain't just half as old
As the years and months declare you ought to be;
You forget about the roomatis
That winter made you have,
And the coughs and colds that now begin to flee.
You see all nature fussin' up,
Which makes you mighty glad.
And the singin' wild birds make the old woods ring,
Then you know that winter's ended,
With its ice and cold and snow,
And everything's rejoicin' 'cause its SPRING.

WAR TIME POST FOR FOR MR. CHISHOLM

Alex. Chisholm who was for sixteen years in the retail shoe business in West Toronto, and retired a few weeks ago, with the intention of spending considerable time in travel, is foregoing that pleasure until after the war. He believes that it is the duty of every man to do what he can at present in furthering the cause of Canada and the allies. Mr. Chisholm is now purchasing secretary for all the Y.M.C.A. Military Camps in Ontario and Quebec, and has his headquarters at 15 Toronto street, Toronto. He will no doubt bring to bear upon his new duties the same energy, ability and good judgment which characterized his career in the shoe trade.

TWO INVITING WINDOWS THAT SOLD SHOES

Handsome Easter footwear windows were installed by Fred. W. Love, shoe retailer, of Aylmer, Ont. The lattice work at the back was gold with white background. The fixtures were gold covered, with metallic flitters giving a sparkling effect. Easter lilies and ferns were used in the effective trim, and on each setting were five electric lights, with frosted globes. The background was in pure white, and in each of the shoes shown were hand painted butterflies in natural colors. From each of the front corners of the windows was a fancy lattice work adorned with lilies.

anniversary. He has been a live, aggressive resident of the "Classic City" since 1888, and in looking after the material needs of men from head to foot, has won their confidence and esteem, so that each year's results show a gratifying gain. Mr. Badour has built up his splendid connection and expanding trade on the policy of buying often, turning over the goods frequently and taking advantage of all discounts. He is an ardent apostle of keeping both himself and his stock moving. His premises are well laid out, cheerful and attractive, and the proprietor has a genial word and kindly greeting, not only for every patron, but for every

IMPOSING AND EFFECTIVE EASTER WINDOW DISPLAY OF FOOTWEAR MADE BY F. W. LOVE, AYLMER, ONT.

The large parrots which are seen in full relief, were twenty-four inches high and resplendent in natural colors, green, gold, red, etc. The bottom and top of the windows were white and the raised glass shelves trimmed with green plush. The roping seen in the windows and also in the interior of the store, was green and white. A row of frosted incandescent lights was lined up above. When the display was lighted at night the effect was brilliant, and the spectacle attracted a great deal of admiration. Mr. Love reports that the result was a very gratifying Easter holiday trade.

WILL WOMEN COMBINE AGAINST SHOES

At an executive meeting of the Associated Consumers, held recently in Calgary, the president, Mrs. E. P. Newhall, reported that she had addressed several societies in response to requests, and explained the object of the organization. Mrs. Newhall reported that at one of these societies it was suggested that the women should organize to boycott the present high price of shoes. It was pointed out, however, that this would be rather unfair to the merchants who have already put in their summer stock, but if the women would bind themselves together and say they must have sensible shoes at fair prices for the autumn, then the merchants would know where they stood. At the present time a pair of woman's shoes costs one-half her husband's weekly salary while a man's shoes cost about $8.50. The latter contain solid leather, while the women's have very little solid leather, but a great deal of ornamentation. There were no shoes for sensible women to buy these days.

CELEBRATES ANOTHER BUSINESS BIRTHDAY

Twenty-nine years at it and going stronger than ever constitutes the record of J. B. Badour, the enterprising merchant, of Stratford, an illustration of whose premises appears on page 23. He has just observed another business traveler, with whom he makes warm friends. In addition to representative and reliable lines of footwear, Mr. Badour handles traveling goods, men's furnishings, gloves, mitts, etc. He was born in Drysdale, Ont., and learned the trade of shoemaking, which he followed for a number of years. He was a successful and energetic shoemaker when working for others, and he is now imparting to every branch of his own business the same desirable characteristics.

SHOE DEALER SUFFERS DOUBLE BEREAVEMENT

T. A. Wilson, shoe retailer, 579 Bloor st. w, Toronto, received the sad announcement a few days ago, of the deaths of his son, Private Roy R. Wilson, and of his son-in-law, Dr. W. J. McLean, at the front. Both made the supreme sacrifice for their King and Country. Roy Wilson was twenty-eight years of age, and lived with his father in Perth, Ont., for about twenty years, previous to removing to Toronto. He had been associated with him in the shoe business for a number of years, and for some time had been in partnership with him. He was a member of the Mississauga Horse while in Toronto, and enlisted with the 130th Battalion, of Lanark County, going to England in September last. There the unit was broken up and Private Wilson, on crossing to France, was drafted with the 75th. He had been in the trenches since last October, and was a young man highly esteemed. He has one brother, Dr. A. A. Wilson, who is engaged in medical service at the front in France. A brother-in-law, Dr. W. J. McKay, formerly a practising dentist in West Toronto, also enlisted at the same time as Private Roy Wilson, with the 130th Regiment. Private McLean was killed in the recent fighting at Vimy Ridge, where the Canadians won such honor and glory. The many friends of T. A. Wilson will sympathize with him in the loss of his son and son-in-law.

ORGANIZES NEW SHOE COMPANY

J. B. Hurteau, long associated with the Star Shoe Co., Montreal, has organized the Globe Shoe Co., Limited, who are erecting a building in Terrebonne, Que. Mr. Hurteau will have with him as superintendent, A. Z. Poitras, who was also connected with the Star Shoe Co. The Globe Shoe Co. expect to have their factory completed and the machinery installed by the 1st of July next. The building will be a three-storey solid brick one, 45 by 100 feet, equipped with the latest lighting, ventilating and power facilities for the manufacture of white goods and cushion welts, in which the firm will specialize in, as well as babies', infants', misses' and growing girls' boots and shoes. Mr. Hurteau is an able shoeman and began his career in Sorel, working for three years for the Sorel Shoe Co. After this he came to Montreal, where he entered the employ of Geo. T. Slater & Sons. He spent some years with them and then went to St. Hyacinthe, where he was with J. A. & M. Cote for a considerable period, leaving there to go with the late Louis Cote, the inventor of the Cote pattern, grading and other machines. Mr. Hurteau spent some years in Canada and the United States, teaching pattern work, as well as selling the Cote machine. Later he was manager of the Du Plessisville Shoe Machinery Co., his offices being in St. Hyacinthe.

HOW COMPANY GUARDS WORKERS' HEALTH

A most instructive address was given by Dr. Emmet J. Mullally, plant physician of the Canadian Consolidated Rubber Co., Montreal, before the Montreal Weekly Electrical Luncheon at Freeman's Hotel at noon recently. The subject was "The Place of the Physician in Modern Industry."

"Every person who applies for a position in the Canadian Consolidated Rubber Co.," said Dr. Mullally, "has to undergo a physical examination. This is done so as not to employ any person contaminated with tuberculous, thus preventing this contagious disease from spreading. This examination means that when we employ a person for laborious work, that person must be capable of doing the work, or being placed at some work less laborious, which the person can perform without injury to health.

"We have an up-to-date hospital at our plant, with a nurse in charge all day, who looks after and attends the minor injuries of the employees. Every employee is notified on entering the company's service to report all injuries received at work, even the slightest scratches, for these scratches often lead to blood-poisoning. This work is being done in connection with the 'Safety First' movement, which was inaugurated about two years ago. Besides this being a sound business proposition, it also makes the employee more interested in the company's welfare.

"Sanitation of plant," he added, "is very common abroad, for the larger corporations and plants are thoroughly inspected by physicians. Our company furnishes all medical expenses free of charge to employees, and also allows them to consult me during working hours. Half wages are paid while the employee is sick, and he also receives free medical attendance."

OPENING BRANCH IN REGINA

The Miner Rubber Co. of Quebec has, it is stated by the Board of Trade, secured warehouse site in Regina for a central distributing centre for the West, says a recent despatch from Regina, Sask. The property secured is a warehouse and 150 feet frontage that was formerly occupied by the Stamco Co. It is two weeks or so since the company opened up negotiations for this property, after deciding that Regina was the best suited of Western cities for their special purpose.

The company is one of the largest rubber concerns doing business in Canada and expects within two weeks to have a complete line of goods in stock at Regina, from which it will distribute all through the West. The company proposes to increase its capacity either by adding to the present building or by building a new warehouse

A SOLID PROGRESSIVE FIRM

Shapland's is a widely known, progressive shoe house in Burlington, Ont., the members of the firm being J. and J. E. Shapland. They have carried on business for many years in the lakeside town, which has a population of 2,600, and is located on the shore of Lake Ontario, nine miles from Hamilton, and thirty-two from Toronto. It is a bright, smart centre, and has business houses equal to those possessed by many places much larger. Messrs. Shapland carry a large and representative stock, and a number of the most widely known brands of shoes for men and women. The store is of ample proportions, is well-arranged, and the proprietors enjoying the confidence of the public, have found their volume of business increasing from year to year, by reason of good service, dependable values, courteous treatment and square dealing.

ARE YOU GETTING MARKET VALUE FOR SHOES?

With Prices of Footwear Advancing Steadily Retailer Must Safeguard His Business by Adjusting His Selling Prices Accordingly—This Margin of Profit Will be Needed Should Prices Recede—Protect Your Business by Selling at Present Market Costs

THERE is some reason for anxiety throughout the shoe trade due to the fact that so small a percentage of shoe retailers are selling at a price that is in keeping with present market prices. Considering that prices of footwear continue to advance rapidly, with new price lists issued frequently, it is difficult to understand why so many shoe retailers are not taking advantage of the opportunity of protecting themselves against the inevitable lowering of prices—come when they may.

The dealer who bases his selling prices on the cost of footwear purchased some time ago, when market values were considerably below those of the present, is missing an opportunity of securing a necessary protection for the tires to come. He is making a mistake selling on the basis that present prices will continue indefinitely. Just how long present prices are likely to advance or remain where they are is problematic, but it is a safe prediction that sooner or later shoe prices will recede.

Those dealers who neglect to base their selling price on market values, or who refuse to adjust their prices from time to time in proportion to the advances, being content to sell on margin of profit based on the original purchase price, can afford to overlook. This will be playing the game safe, and considering the increased values of stocks, due to market advances, no retailer can afford to take any chances.

Your customers are not likely to criticize you for asking the additional money for footwear when you can show them that your margin of profit is no larger now, if as large, as it was when prices were normal. You may depend that your customers will be slow to show their appreciation of money which you save for them by incurring risks on your own business. They will be less likely to question your business methods if you increase your selling prices when market prices advance than if you keep them stationary. They are likely to argue in the later case that your margin of profit must previously have been exceedingly large to enable you to continue to sell at the same prices in face of big market advances.

There is another side to the subject that comes up in this connection. The question has been raised by manufacturers as to whether there is not considerable danger involved in selling to those retailers who are not protecting themselves in this way. These manufacturers are looking well ahead and predict that the pinch is most likely to come when prices begin to recede. They are anxious that retailers prepare for this very period, right now, by keeping exceedingly close tab on market prices. Manufacturers and jobbers are becoming more and more alive to the necessity of having this question brought prominently before the retail trade, both as a safeguard to themselves and protection to the retailer.

are likely to see their mistake when a "Right about face" condition is in evidence. There is no one that doubts for a minute that a drop in prices is ahead, but as to when it will materialize, few will hazard a guess.

Shoe retailers should most certainly adjust their prices as market prices advance. This may mean considerable additional work; it will take valuable time and careful watching of the market and business conditions will be necessary, but it will mean a measure of protection which no retailer

"REGAL" IN NAME AND CHARACTER

The new samples of the Regal Shoe Co., Toronto, are the most imposing and dignified ever turned out by them. The offerings in tony red, walnut, African brown, royal purple, kangaroo, Smooth King and other leathers, in both bals and bluchers are exceptionally strong. A number are leather lined and have "Hylox" slip soles, while others are equipped with Neolin soles and rubber heels. Wing tips are exceptionally strong. Two new lasts have been put in—the Fulton, which is a medium recede, and the Pen, which has a round, rather full toe. Several offerings have smoke suede and tan suede tops. One particularly striking shoe is an African brown kid with ivory kid top and vest buttons. Another is an all-black with tony red top and perforated, and pinked wing tip. A number of the shoes have natural grain leather bottom finish, showing exactly the high-class sole stock employed. Some samples of prospectors' boots are noticed in tan grain, one having an 8½ inch top with bellows tongue and full double sole, while another has a cuff and two buckles, with bellows tongue, ball strap and viscolized bottom. An officer's army shoe is seen with half bellows tongue, full Neolin sole and "Hylox" slip sole, with plain toe. A number of waterproof shoes are shown, some having the "Stroebeck" wet-proof insole. Others are leather lined and have full double and viscolized soles. Another shoe is noticed in Spartan Russia calf, with foxing, and back stay forming one piece and carrying a 14-gauge single sole. In lasts every variety is represented, from the long recede forepart to the more conservative type with full round toes. The Regal Shoe Co. are also carrying In-Stock some twelve popular sellers. This new department is receiving a great deal of favorable attention.

The Shoe Repair Man

WHAT CONSTITUTES COST OF DOING BUSINESS

ARE you in business for your health? If not, what for? If for a profit, then you will agree with us that you must know every principle about profit and how to figure it before you can expect to have it. Too many repairers seem to have the idea that they are in business simply to eke out a living, and the living which they would eke out is not a very desirable one at that. Such men should not be in business, they should be working for a business man. We have said before in these columns that the repairer who limits his business is that of a cobbler, and is barely earning wages, or who is so incapacitated to manage his business that he cannot under normal conditions show something more than a bare living as a return for his year's work, would be better off if he would haul down his sign and go to work for some one that is in business and conducting it successfully. It would be really charitable to starve out this very class.

Now, let's avoid getting excited about this statement for, of course, we do not want anyone to starve to death, and we know they will not starve to death; we know that there are thousands of occupations that they could follow and do better. The railroads of this country are crying for section men to work on their road, and hundreds of the type of repairers we have referred to would better their condition if they were working as section hands. And it is equally true that their families would be better off, and would have greater opportunities. The chances are that when their boys grow up, they would, because of improved opportunities, be successful business men, even if they should in turn choose to enter the shoe repair business says "Shoe Repair Shop."

Should Awaken to Real Ability

Too many of these repairers are failures in business, however, not because of an actual lack of ability, but because they do not awaken to their real ability, and this question of profit is the chief one that they do not awaken to. Their minds have been fixed in reasoning in old fashioned grooves, and are therefore not receptive to changing conditions. Their grandfathers were successful repairers because they were good mechanics, and if they accumulated any money it was not because they made most of their opportunities, but because they economized and denied their families, and sacrificed themselves. That sort of method belongs to ancient history. We are now living in the twentieth century and must adjust ourselves to present conditions. It is essential to have a sufficient mechanical knowledge but this knowledge has not the sufficient earning power to meet more than the needs.

Many shoe repairers would make first-class employes, that are not qualified to make a success of their own business. To do this, they must understand how to figure profit, and must have the needed ability for profitable buying and selling. They must know how to detect the faults in their business methods and to correct them.

This question of studying the cost of doing business is practiced in all lines of trade. We want every repairer that reads our publication to heed this department carefully, for the simple reason that we want you to be a member of the successful class. We want every one of you to not only form good business habits, but to get your whole business system working right. We want you to prosper, and we want you to set a good example to other repairers to show them that if properly conducted, shoe repairing is a business of just as high a standard as any other business in the community in which you live. To accomplish this means the business must earn more than simply what your hands will earn as a mechanic or a laborer. It must be accomplished mentally.

Some Things You Should Know

Do you know to the exact cent the amount of business that you did last year? Do you know to the exact cent the amount of your expenditures, and what you expended it for? If you know the cost of your expenditures, divide the amount by the amount of your receipts, and you will have the per cent. of those receipts that went to pay expenses. If you subtract the amount of your expenses from the total of your receipts, you will know the bulk profit. If you divide the amount of your expenditures for material by the total amount of your business you will have the per cent. of cost of material; and the big thing to keep constantly in sight of is what is called overhead expense. Having separated all these items of overhead expense and found the total amount, if you will divide it by the total receipts you will have the percentage of cost to do business.

These deductions you should have fixed in your mind so that they are always ready for use. If you do this, you will always have a basis or standard to figure on whenever a customer comes into your shop.

It is not a great hardship for you to keep in mind from day to day the cost of your chief item of expense, which is leather. Therefore, when a customer brings you a pair of shoes on which he wants a half sole, it should be no great trouble for you to have in mind what the leather for that job is going to cost you. Likewise, you should know from experience about the length of time it will take, and how much you ought figure for labor for that length of time. Then add a reasonable amount for thread, cement, and all such raw material as the job requires. Having figured these items of expense and knowing their total amount, the next item of importance is overhead expense. You cannot commence a mental competition of all these different expense items, but knowing what your overhead expense amounts to from month to month, and year to year, you can always have the percentage in mind, and you must add an amount equal to that percentage. In doing so always remember that the cost of doing that job includes the item of overhead expense just as much as it does the item of leather or other material.

What is Overhead Expense?

Overhead expense is practically all such miscellaneous items of expense which are necessary to the business, and which are burdens which every job should share its part of. If your first customer of the day brings you a pair of men's shoes to half sole, and the second customer brings you a pair of ladies' shoes to be patched, both jobs should help pay the rent, insurance, fuel, light, water, taxes, advertising, telephone service, office supplies, postage, freight and drayage, delivery service, loss of bad accounts, depreciation of machinery and stock, subscriptions and donations, and interest not alone on the money borrowed from time to time, but also on your total investment. These are all items of expense which every job that comes to your shop should pay its pro rata of, and therefore we call it overhead expense.

Taking Percentage on Selling Price

If, after having kept careful track of all expenses, and determining the total amount it proves to be, say one-fourth of the amount of your total receipts, then your overhead expense has been 25 per cent., and consequently having these figures in mind, you, in estimating the cost of repairing the customer's shoes, must remember that of the amount which you charge him, 25 per cent. of it goes towards paying these overhead expenses, and therefore is to be taken into consideration.

Sometimes business men figure that they should add this 25 per cent. to the other expenses, but that would be a mistake. Suppose the leather, material, and labor on a job cost you 60c., and you were to add 25 per cent., or 15c., to the 60c., which would make your job cost you 75c.; and if you get $1.00 for it, you would have 25c. net profit. But, if you figure right, you must remember that this overhead per cent. is the percentage of the selling price, and therefore if you got $1.00 for the job and your overhead expense was 25 per cent., you should have added 25c. to your 60c. making a total of 85c., or only 15c. profit.

WHAT IS THE BEST WAY TO CLEAN UP STOCKS ?

“Personally I am of the Opinion that Special Sales, if Honestly, and not too Frequently Conducted and if Nothing but the Truth is Told, Constitute a Favorable Factor in Lubricating the Machinery of Business and in Keeping Things in Motion ”

A PROBLEM that every shoe retailer has to meet is how to avoid loss through the accumulation of stock, how to get rid of odds and ends, and clear out slow selling lines. It is my opinion, after a boot has been in the store two years, at the very outside, it has begun to “eat its head off,” so to speak, and is not worth its keep. What is the best method to steer clear of drawbacks through bad stock? Does the special sale pay, and if not, what effective means can be adopted to have only “live” goods on your shelf?

These are questions on which many opinions will be found. Each shoeman may have to solve the problem personally as befits his location, the class of people that he caters to, his method of doing business, the size of his stock, and the number of times that he turns it over. Some of the practices employed are perennial bargain tables, special Friday or Thursday sales, commission or P.M. plan among salespeople, and the premium campaign. The semi-annual reduction sales (usually conducted in the quiet months of January or February, and in July or August), and the disposal of all unsaleables in a lot to some dabbler in jobs or a bankrupt stock promoter, thus getting “rid of all junk at one fell sweep,” are other ways.

Frequent Shouts Never Convince

All these plans have merit, and what may prove successful and satisfactory with one man may not do so with another, and therefore it is difficult to lay down any hard and fast regulation. The incessant cry of “sale,” “sacrifice,” “stock reduction,” “going out of business,” “fire,” “forced payment” and other expedients that have run the gauntlet in days gone by have lost their charm and potency to-day. The yell has been heard so often, and the dodge worked to the limit that other means must be followed. It can be safely assumed that frequent special sales are injurious, and the public have little faith in the broad arguments and sweeping statements presented. The hip, hip hurrah order, the big rallying get-together chorus, the flaring announcement in press and poster, preposterous and extravagant pretensions often fail to score.

Now it may be safely assumed that below cost sales are very rare, and if too many bargains are offered at periodical times people naturally wait until then to purchase their footwear. If they are regular customers they are soon converted and educated into bargain chasers. Once people get the opinion that you are always holding out something marvelous you will not get the patronage of that great and growing class who desire stylish shoes of fit, appearance and durability, and are willing to pay a good figure for a reliable and worthy article in the line of foot covering. The customer who is willing to concede that a shoe retailer has a right to make a fair profit on his goods, who is willing to live himself and let others live, and knows that in this world “something for nothing” is not a paying game, is the best friend of the merchant. The results of such transactions keep the commercial machinery of the present day in motion.

There Is Always Tail to the Kite

The shoeman’s business differs from the majority of other merchants in that there is always a dribble, a fag end, a few pairs that stick and hang, odd sizes and widths, that accumulate in spite of all that can be said and done. A line can rarely be sold out to the last one at regular prices owing to changing styles and season, new lasts and patterns, varied tastes and freakish demands. If I buy a dozen shovels, a score of hammers, a gross of hinges, a barrel of sugar or a hundred pounds of rice, all these commodities may be sold to the last pound, or pair, as the case may be, but with shoes it is a different story, except in a very few staple lines. These things must be taken into consideration in the control, oversight, management and turnover of a stock.

I believe, after an experience of nearly a quarter of a century, that it is absolutely necessary for every shoe dealer, no matter how good a buyer he is, or how clever a student of what will sell, to clean up his stock at certain odd periods. A reputable retailer, however, could have so many sales, on various pretexts that his better class of customers would become offended or place no reliance in his methods.

Just how to clean up stocks is, however, a policy for each retailer to figure out for himself. Personally, I am of the opinion that special sales, if honestly and not too frequently conducted, if the truth, and nothing but the truth, is told, constitute a favorable factor in lubricating the machinery of business and keeping things in motion.

Men are different from women—remember this. They are not so much given to bargains and bargain hunting. Keep this fact in mind, and do not cheapen your business through holding too many sensational cut-rate campaigns, no matter what your competitors do. Any chump can sell footwear below cost or at reduced prices, but it requires business ability, salesmanship, aggressiveness and confidence in yourself and your goods to command what they are worth, retain the esteem of your clients and make a fair return upon your investment.

Men Are Different to Women

There are many men calling themselves “shoe merchants” to-day who are not worthy of the title. You can find them in nearly every city and town in Canada. They are of the “has-been” or “never was” type. Legitimate sales are good, but they are spoiled by this class of dealers who persist in hurrahing too freely about reduced prices. When a shoeman says he is selling goods below cost, below manufacturers’ prices, etc., there appears to be something wrong. The best way is to reduce slow lines during the selling season. It is possible for some stores to offer inducements that some others could not. I do not believe in placarding a store after the fire sale idea. A feature of too many special sales which I detest is that some stores use them to bamboozle the public to an almost unlimited extent. Take, for instance, a store I know about which held a fire sale. They were not content with selling shoes that were in the store at the time of the fire, but went out to wholesalers and bought job lines, which were added to the stock. This type of sale is very injudicious, not only to that particular store, but to others. Personally, I would like it if no stores advertised special sales. They are all right for large department stores, as they bring people to the establishment, but for a shoeman to be continually harping on the special sale idea must bring injury. If they are indulged in too freely, all faith that the public has in special sales will be lost.

The public are skeptical about something for nothing. You have heard of the man who sat at one end of London bridge and offered gold sovereigns for one penny. He sold two in one day. This illustrates how suspicious some people are of the word “bargain.” On the other hand, there exists a class of people who are never satisfied with goods at regular prices. They want reductions, and are caught by special sales. These people would rather buy a $3.50 shoe for $5 if the salesman told them it was worth the latter figure, and was just giving it to them for $5, than to purchase it at regular price.

Be Honest, Frank and Fair

When prices of goods are to be reduced some definite, legitimate reason must be advanced for the reduction. Be honest about it. Most shoeists are afraid that if they are honest in pointing out the faults of shoes, or why they do not sell, it would make them unsaleable, whereas if a man or woman is told what is wrong in a frank manner he or she will think a great deal more of your store.

I do not believe in the "Hurrah" business. Many stores are killing the quality of their business by such methods, and are also injuring merchants who desire to use legitimate means. The store that only quotes one price, will sell three times as much as the store which quotes its selling price and what an article was previously worth. Mark all your goods in plain figures, have but one selling price to all, be patient, but firm, on this point, and you will win in the end.

WHAT SERVICE REALLY MEANS IN SHOE STORE

Many Small Courtesies Which May Seem Trivial on the Surface Contribute to Rendering Satisfaction to the Customer—Prompt Rectification of Errors, the Keeping of Promises, Punctual Deliveries, Correct Fitting and Efficient Salesmanship

SERVICE means the rendering of a duty to another; obligation conferred; duty done or required; benefit or good performed, done or caused. Success in any line and service are inseparable. No concern, large or small, nor individual either, can even hope to attain lasting success unless they are willing to extend SERVICE to their patrons.

Service is in the air, it is the sign of the times—the paramount issue. The demand for it is relentless. The rendering of service never fails to reap an adequate reward. It pays big dividends regularly.

SERVICE in a shoe store should begin when the customer enters. When correctly applied it means the elimination of disappointments, and in their stead substituting pleasant surprises which the customer had not even anticipated. This treatment of the customer should continue as long as he remains in the store. To merely give a customer value received and nothing more, is not the kind of service now demanded and appreciated.

The wide-a-woke shoeman constantly investigates the requirements of his customers, with the idea of making his store-service more attractive and satisfying to them. At every opportunity he listens to the remarks made by customers while being waited on in order that their viewpoint might better be conformed to in rendering them future service.

Keeping Promises is Important

The aggressive merchant realizes that keeping promises is a very important part of his service. If a customer is promised that her shoes will be delivered at a certain time the promise is kept.

KEEPS HIM KEYED UP

Enclose please find $1.00 subscription for 1917, "Shoe and Leather Journal," also accept my appreciation of your efforts to make and keep this Journal what it is. I find it a great help in posting me on trade matters and shoe business in general.

Yours truly,

Edmonton, Alta.

COLIN CASE,
c/o Sample Shoe Store.

If a customer explains the details of an unsatisfactory purchase over the telephone no time is lost in sending for the shoes because the longer they remain in the customer's sight the more magnified becomes the grievance.

Many little incidents which might appear of no consequence to some merchants loom up large to the customer. Many small courtesies, which may seem trivial on the surface, when combined, go to make satisfying service to the customer.

It is a rule in aggressive stores to always place the change in the customer's hand, particularly so if the customer is wearing gloves. When a woman customer attempts to open her pocket book she is courteously relieved of any packages she may be carrying. Afterwards the packages are politely returned to her.

When an error is discovered in the delivery of footwear it is at once corrected—not deferred until late in the afternoon, or the following day, but instantly. The customer is concerned wholly in the safe delivery of the package and not at all interested in the merchant's troubles.

There are many degrees of service—it has many angles, but ask any man or woman what is the best service a shoe store can render, and they will answer, "To be waited on by clerks who know their business." This means, in reality, the full service which embraces courtesy, knowledge of the shoe styles offered, and a careful consideration of the customer's requirements and desires particularly in the matter of fitting.

Becomes Fixed, Pleasant Habit

Progressive shoemen lead their clerks into rendering service. They strive to set them good examples of how service can best be extended to each customer who enters the store. They direct their attention to articles on "Better store-service," advise and counsel with them patiently in the effort to assist them to be capable of rendering efficient service.

It is not a difficult task, after all, to render service. It can be so cultivated that the rendering of it becomes a fixed, pleasant, and profitable habit. The aggressive and prosperous shoemen of to-day are those who are willing to render real service in their respective lines. Look about you and see if this is not true.

Politeness and consideration are vital integral parts of modern service. Both are inexpensive and pay tremendous dividends on the investment. Cultivate SERVICE—learn its every angle, get the habit, and reap its certain reward.

inviting. It will be some weeks before the work will be finished.

R. M. Smith, Western Canada representative of the Regal Shoe Co., Toronto, who covers the larger centres, and W. R. Billings, who looks after the smaller towns for the company, left for the Prairie Provinces this week with a fine range of new samples.

J. D. Hawthorne, of D. D. Hawthorne & Co., wholesale shoes, Toronto, spent a few days last week in Montreal and Quebec on business.

R. L. Savage, Ontario and Quebec representative of Clark Bros., Limited, St. Stephen, N.B., who maintains permanent sample rooms in Toronto, has removed from No. 2 Trinity Square to Room 709, Lumsden Building, corner of Yonge and Adelaide streets, Toronto.

A. R. Trudeau, representing Corbeil's, Limited, Montreal, spent a few days in Toronto last week on business.

The Royal Shoe Store, of Saskatoon, Sask., has offered a pair of ladies' shoes, valued at ten dollars, to the management of the Saskatoon Fair as a prize open to the women residents of that city and to be awarded to the one making the largest number of entries in the fancy work department.

A charter has been granted the St. Henry Shoe Co., Limited, Montreal, with a capital stock of $99,000. The incorporators are Jos. Lacasse, T. Daignault, C. W. Michaud and others. The company is empowered to manufacture, buy and deal in all kinds of boots and shoes, etc.

Plans have been made and tenders invited for building a girls' home for Maple Leaf rubber factory employees at Port Dalhousie, Ont. The building will be modern and fireproof, and when completed the home will be conducted along lines similar to Y.W.C.A.'s in the larger centres.

A deputation representing the tanners' section of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association of Toronto, waited upon Sir George Foster last week, urging that representations be made to the British Boards of Trade for a modification of the British import restrictions of boots and shoes and leather which were recently put in force by Mr. Lloyd George's ministry. The deputation was headed by Mr. J. K. L. Bristol and only remained in session a short time. It is possible that their wishes will be communicated to the British authorities.

Among the shoemen who were in Ottawa last week, displaying new Fall samples were: D. R. Hawley, representing Getty & Scott, Limited, Galt, Ont.; E. E. McIntyre, Brandon Shoe Co., Brantford, Ont.; H. B. McGee, Minister-Myles Shoes Co., Toronto; J. P. Buchanan, Smardon Shoe Co., Montreal; J. Heffering, Tetrault Shoe Manufacturing Co., Montreal; Frank Power, Macfarlane Shoe Co., Montreal; J. Dunbar, Scott-Chamberlain Ltd., London, Ont.; Alf. Winn, E. T. Wright & Co., St. Thomas, Ont.; G. H. Murdoff, Thos. G. Plant Co., Boston, and others.

It has been rumored for some time that the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., Toronto, who have factories in Bowmanville and New Toronto, and manufacture, in addition to tires, hose and belting, Neolin soles and Wing Foot rubber heels, intended going into the production of rubber and tennis footwear on a large scale. "There is no truth in the report," declared a leading official of the company, this week. "We are not extending our lines at present, and have all the business we can attend to without going into the making of rubber and sporting shoes."

F. T. Fuller & Co., 36 South street, Boston, Mass., are advertising that they have found a use for grain buffings, or in other words the very thin hand shavings or buffings taken from army shoe leather and which prevents this type of leather from cracking. They also consume large quantities of tannery trimmings, belt knife skivings, etc. They will be very pleased to hear from any concern having material of this sort, particularly the grain buffings.

Work is progressing rapidly on the new building of Duclos & Payan, St. Hyacinthe, Que. The structure will be 44 x 150 feet, two storeys high, and will be devoted exclusively to the manufacture of fibre, leather and union counters. The capacity will be from 75,000 to 100,000 pairs daily in their new shop.

Walter Burnill, of the Burnill Shoe Store and Repair Works, 75 Queen east, who has been spending the past three months at Palm Beach, Florida, has returned to Toronto, much improved in health. His many friends are pleased to see him looking so well.

CAUSE AND CURE OF FOOT TROUBLES

The subject of the health and hygiene of the foot and its relation to the shoe shifts itself down to a matter of service, which I believe in the shoe business is a most important factor. The anatomy of the foot should be considered at all times in fitting shoes, for a distorted foot cannot be fitted into a perfectly lasted shoe.

Let me ask, how many can state the cause of a corn, or of a callous, a bunion, or any other cause of foot complaint? How many can explain to a customer the actual correction and relief of all foot ailments? Would it not be a good idea to give a little study to this matter, so that we might intelligently recommend such relief or correction?

We have often removed a shoe from the foot, the odor from which has been so bad that we gave the shoe over to the customer to put on. Have you ever stopped to consider with what thanks a suggestion for remedying the trouble would be welcomed? All this, and in fact, all foot troubles can be relieved to a great extent if not actually corrected.

The matter of shoe fitting to-day has become a subject of study along anatomical lines. We all say fit long and narrow, but how long and how narrow shall we fit. It depends altogether on the longitudinal arch. Study how much expansion there is in the foot, examine the foot carefully on the fitting stool and unless it is an absolute flat foot, you will find more or less of arch there.

Now, have the customer stand up and throw the whole weight of the body on one foot and again examine the arch. In a majority of cases you will find an abnormal depression there. This depression, settling down on the shank of the shoe, very often is the cause of the shoe bulging on the side, a fact which is very perceptible in low shoes, and especially pumps.

If you are a bit skeptical about this matter, try it out on a few of your good customers and prove it for yourself.

In adjusting arch supports or appliances for the correction of foot troubles thorough study of orthopedics is necessary, but bear in mind that no appliance is fitted correctly until the shoe is fitted in length and width.

Learn this business, gentlemen, and learn it thoroughly, for it means shoe store service, and that service means comfort, and ease, and that, in turn, means getting shoes sold right, which leads to the ever absorbing subject, "More business." It also means the creating of more confidence, which is the fundamental foundation of merchandising goods to-day, and the inauguration in your store of a foot specialty department means that the salesman who takes up this study becomes more efficient.

BROCADE AS SUBSTITUTE FOR LEATHER

The newest thing in fashionable footwear in New York is shoes of gold brocaded cloth.

Dame Fashion does not limit her genius to creating only gowns, pretty frocks, and charming bonnets. Shoes hold her attention at this moment, and here is the most bewitching that ever left her shop. The advancing price of leather has something to do with this innovation. The makers of footwear decided that something must be done and so tried cloth and brocades as substitutes. The new style is original, charming, and has quite taken Miladi's fancy. One need not necessarily wear shoes of the same cut and design as one's neighbor and the style appears as though it had come to stay.

What are you going to order for Fall?

¶ We have spent much time and money studying the situation, and fashionable shoes at reasonable prices seem to be the problem.

¶ Everything entering into the makeup of a shoe is high. In order to keep the price of our shoes down we must double our output, and to do this we have decided to add to our regular line about thirty SPECIALS at popular prices. These will include Novelties and Staples.

¶ We will show you the most complete line of Ladies' Fashionable McKay Footwear ever seen in Canada. Made in widths AA to E.

Tetraault Shoes Always Ahead

When Tetraault Shoes reached their immense sale of over TWO MILLION DOLLARS last year—a sale that was unprecedented in the shoe history of Canada—it meant a very great deal. Has it occurred to you that it meant the Canadian Shoe Retailers sold those shoes? Well they did.

? Question ?

Why did they sell them? Could they have sold them had the VALUE—represented by QUALITY, STYLE and PRICE—not been there? Never! And so that TWO MILLION DOLLARS' worth of shoes means that

Tetraault Goodyear Welts

CUROPAD

For the relief of hard and soft Corns, Bunions and Callosities on the human foot.

Some years ago an American Orthopedist suggested the more extended use of the rubber compress for the cure of corns, bunions, callouses, etc. His idea was that a close fitting and impervious rubber device properly made and so applied to the calloused part as to exclude the air, retain the moisture of the skin and prevent undue pressure, would not only allay the pain but must finally effect a cure through the process of dessication rather than by absorption. In this way the hard and false cuticle is gradually removed until the natural skin only remains.

The CUROPAD is an up-to-date article, orthopedically constructed of the best para rubber. In order that it may better retain its position on the affected part, there are grooves in the rubber at its thickest section, so that the threads of the stocking may insert themselves into said grooves and thus hold the Curopad in position. Adhesive strips and very thin rubber bands are supplied which may be used to assist in holding the Curopad in position.

THE SOUND AND SANE POLICY

Keep Up Your Stock—Buy As You Sell—Let To-morrow Take Care of Itself—Sufficient Unto the Day is the Risk Thereof

NO matter what may be their advice to others, sane business men are following the cautious policy of buying from hand to mouth. Tanners may talk about hides going up and what leather may be six months hence, but you will notice that they are not loading up with hides. Wise heads are keeping close to the demand in their production, and are not speculating as to conditions even in the near future.

Shoe manufacturers may be covered to the extent of the prices they are quoting to-day, and may be perfectly sincere in their predictions that shoes will go up steadily in price, but they are buying only as far ahead as will meet the carefully estimated requirements of their trade, or at least protect them in regard to its needs for a few months ahead. They have no doubt as to still higher prices of leather, their uncertainty is as to the retailer, and what may occur should the buying public be suddenly seized with a spirit of caution.

The spring season has been, as the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL predicted from the beginning, a most successful and prosperous one for shoe dealers. With the warm weather, there opened up such a demand for footwear that the pressure upon retail stocks was sufficient to clean up certain lines rather thoroughly. But this demand was very largely in women's novelties, although there was a satisfactory movement of regular lines, particularly in men's goods. There has just been enough interest and enthusiasm in the latter to show that people still have a fairly long purse, and carry the strings loose. Undoubtedly the furore amongst women for attractive footwear is far from abating, and those who have large stocks of fancy lines will be able to record unusual sales and profits. But there is just the slightest indication that the public is "fed up" on high priced shoes, and are beginning to question somewhat the wisdom of handing out just what is asked, even for standard lines. There is also developing the feeling that there will have to be economy if we are to get through the war with credit and success. The pronounced advance in prices of foods and other necessities is bound to have an effect upon sales of goods like shoes. Already some lines of regular requirements, that are not regarded as amongst household essentials, are beginning to feel the effects of timidity and caution that are undoubtedly abroad, and are thought to be extending.

One of the largest, and most progressive, as well as aggressive, leather men in the country said the other day, "It is time to go slow. There is bound to be a halt in this development of high prices. I believe, it is in the interest of the leather and shoe trades that business should be done on as normal a footing as possible. People have reached the peak of buying enthusiasm and unless business steadies down a little, serious conditions may follow."

It is surely a time when the semaphore "proceed with caution" should be raised. The man who follows the market and keeps a wise control of his stock will be safest in the end.

Has Novelty Footwear Come to Stay?

How the Retail Shoe Business has Expanded and Profits Increased by Pretty and Attractive Creations—The Part that Dignified and Distinctive Models Play in Milady's Apparel and in Placing Merchandizing on a Higher Level

By G. W. BROCK

"PRETTY shoes are essential to stylish appearance. No other part of woman's dress is more conspicuous than her shoes. Her footwear, therefore, plays a very important part of the style expression of her costume. They make or mar the entire effect. Our spring showings are the newest designs from the style centres. See our display." So runs a seasonable and sensible advertisement of a leading Ontario retailer.

A Western Canada shoe merchant remarks in his spring announcement: "It has been said, and truly, that the success of one's costume depends not so much on the gown as on the hat and footwear worn with it. There were rumors that skirts would grow longer for spring; but longer does not necessarily imply that skirts would be really long. It is safe to say that the average skirt will be a good eight inches from the ground, and that means careful attention to one's shodding, you know."

The Zenith of Shoemaking Art

Novelty footwear has, in the opinion of leading prescient retailers, come to stay. By this is not meant freakish or eccentric shoes, but pretty and artistic creations. Dainty, neat and attractive offerings in pedal toggery are what give life and vim to the shoe business to-day in spite of the high prices and the complaints now and then heard against the changes in leathers, colors, patterns, lasts and heels. There is no getting away from novelties. In the multiplicity of materials and hues, it is sheer folly to attempt to carry everything—just as insane a policy as it is to be over conservative and stock exclusively solid blacks and staple lasts.

Shoemaking has never attained the expression, perfection, smartness, artistry and fine symmetrical lines in Canada that it has to-day, and shoes are now as important and distinctive a part of a ladies' apparel as her suit, hat or coat. No wonder the women like to purchase a new pair, even if they have to pay from $10 up. The high cuts are dignified, imposing and striking, the colors and combinations are simply irresistible and the appeal made to the eye with a love for beauty and display is strong and convincing.

The Creation of Wider Demand

The average merchant is not afraid of novelties to-day. He knows that business booms because of their creation, originality and presentation and, by reason of the changes, my lady is buying more shoes now than at any time in the history of the world. Style is the chief factor in the sale of women's footwear at the present juncture. Shoes that are trim and neat, classy and dressy sell themselves. For many years the milliner and modiste have been getting the long end of a woman's spending money but now the shoe merchant, who is enterprising and alert, is coming to his own. Novelties—not freaks—have made the turnover of the wide-awake shoe retailer larger than at any other period. The world moves on and the old order of things will never be reverted to. While prices may not remain as high as they are, still in the opinion of discerning ones, shoes will never be sold at as low a figure as they were two years ago. There will be no recession to former levels, and the sooner that the average shoeman realizes this, the more reconciled he will become to present conditions, and shape his course and buying policy accordingly.

Discussing the style features of footwear for women, a leading member of the trade recently remarked, "The question with milady to-day is not so much how does my hat look as how do my shoes look? Novelties have not only raised the price of footwear to a more equitable basis, but the margin of profit has been increased accordingly. Colored novelty shoes are seldom worn out or resoled but are soon discarded. This means the sale of another pair by the merchant, which is not the case with blacks and tans which do service for some women for a year or more. The sooner all shoemen accommodate themselves to existing altered conditions the better.

Tonic to the Shoe Business

"Profits have been increased and shoes retailing at double the figure to-day to what they did a couple of years ago are disposed of as easily and more frequently. Novelties should carry a profit from 50 to 100 per cent. in view of the extra risk assumed, and the fleeting, fashionable character of shades and materials. Let me tell you that novelty shoes have proved a tonic to the shoe business and why should not the shoe dealer have a larger profit than in the past, when many thought that 25 per cent. was all that could legitimately be added to cost. Extra capital is required to get into the game, larger stocks have to be carried, more careful watching of the lines exercised and more discriminating and intelligent buying. Novelty shoes have been a great factor in keeping the trade in the prosperous condition that it is. They have focused the eyes of the public on shoes as never before, and have assisted every live dealer in getting and sustaining better prices. The shoe merchant is entitled to a good profit for style and originality and has brought good merchandising to the front."

Service is the Solid Foundation

Back of the seasonable, well selected stock there must be service. The nicest and niftiest footgear in the world will not bring the retailer permanent and paying business unless he deals fairly and justly with his patrons and sedulously eschews deception and misrepresentation. Much is heard about service, but this word is grossly abused and misinterpreted. What is meant by service, what does it imply, what fosters and develops it, and how do you know when you are rendering it? Summed up service is something like the good-will of a business and the reputation of a merchant. You can put your hand on anything exactly tangible in your advertising matter and then forget it. The first definition of service is to put your customer's interest ahead of your own. Forget your interest entirely. Let your whole energy be: to see that your customers are satisfied.

"If you satisfy your customers, you have mastered the one word 'Service,' and conquered the greatest problem in trade to-day, 'How to sell.' Your success is assured; nothing can stop your progress and you can march to the front ranks in or specific. It is like the oxygen in the air, the breeze from the sea, the fragrance of the flower, the magnetism of personality, or the charm of character. Here are the views of one who has given some study to the subject, and possesses a lucid grasp of the subject.

"First of all, and above all, I think it's the greatest mistake in business to think only of what we're going to get out of it, and how much money we are going to make. Of course, we want to make money. Everybody does. But you'll get a whole lot farther if you put your mind and all your push and energy back of the effort to run a good store along the right lines—trying to be useful to your customers. You'll find that the profit will come along all right.

"We're all human; I know that, and we can't be in business for our health. But I want to tell you that the Golden Rule is a good, hard, modern rule for business, and works out all right all along the line. You may get left some times but not very often. It comes right down to this, the greatest developer of business is 'service.'

"It's the one biggest word in trade, but it means what it says. You've got to talk service, and act service. You can't use it for a 'catch' line trade. Never forget that one of the greatest assets that you have in business is your customers.

"The fact of the matter is, your customers are your greatest investments, and your greatest assets. Never lose sight of the point that they must make as much profit out of every trade with you, as you make yourself. Naturally, I can't tell other people how to sell, shoes or anything else, but as far as my own experience goes, I believe that it pays to be honest in business.

"But you've got to be honest all of the time in order to get credit with your trade. You can't say, 'I'll be honest Monday, Wednesday and Friday,' and use a sandbag Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays. But, joking aside, these are my ideas of how to sell shoes. Buy the right goods, let quality and value be your standard, then start in to treat every buyer as you'd want to be treated yourself. Sincere service will do this. Sincere service will make friends and more friends and still more friends. This is what keeps on selling shoes. This large and growing host of satisfied customers never stops growing. They'll push you to the leadership in spite of all competition. To twist an old saying; take good care of your customers' interests and your profit will take care of itself."

Stray Shots From Solomon

The World hates a grouser. If you haven't a cheerful word to say keep your mouth shut.

CHEER UP There are some men like gas shells, they blight everything within a hundred feet of where they strike. "A merry heart doeth good like medicine." Like mercy, "it is twice blessed, it blesses him that gives, and him that takes." The fellow with a glad hand and a cheery countenance never needs calomel. He cheats the chemist everywhere he goes. What you need, friend, more than medicine is a good laugh. Instead of going to a doctor for pills go some place where you can get all the corners taken out of your mouth and the kinks out of your brow. You have made a failure out of life because you have not learned to laugh. People avoid you like a pest house because you make everything and everybody bilious when you come. Learn to laugh and you will make money as well as friends.

* * * * *

SHAKE HANDS There are some who use their hands as a perpetual motion pumphandle. Their flipper is always flopping. But these are nothing to the fellow who dodges everybody he meets and never goes amongst his neighbors. This is the man who grabs his hat and makes a bee line for the door when the last words of the benediction are being pronounced. He walks along the street counting the squares in the sidewalk and considers lodges, political meetings and patriotic gatherings a bore. "He that hath friends must show himself friendly." The poor fish who pokes along alone in this world misses a good deal of heaven. The "shake hands" fad is not half as bad as the "shake-the-head" habit into which many people fall. Cultivate the warm hand grip. People in this world are like a good mirror they give back what they get. If there were more hand shaking, there would be less tongue wagging.

* * * * *

CUT IT OUT It will pay you in dollars and cents to speak well of your neighbor and especially of your competitor. Of all the nauseating and uncomfortable things in life to hear a man belly-aching about his competitors is about the worst. There are some men who do not seem to realize that others are not interested in their petty feuds and jealousies. Let your neighbor alone, and not only he but others will learn to respect and admire you. "The north wind driveth away rain so doth an angry countenance and a backbiting tongue." Many a man has driven from his store and home those who would have been a help and profit to him, by a tongue that is either sharper than a two-edged sword or deadly as a south sea islander's club. Leave your competitor alone, except for anything good you may say of him, and others as well as he will rise up and call you blessed.

Men have made fortunes by minding their own business.

* * * * *

DON'T WORRY When you see others get on by crooked methods "fret not." Keep on hoeing your row. There are plenty of better things in life than money or success, so-called. Many a mean skunk floats down town in a limousine while honest men foot it. "Envy thou not the oppressor and choose none of his ways." There are men in your line who have built up a business that makes you look like a peanut stand, but while their sales have grown their hearts and minds have shrivelled until if you put ten of them inside a peanut it would still rattle. To be able to look the Almighty in the face, and go to bed feeling that you have played the man, is better than a big business and money to spend on winter vacations. Don't worry about a small business as much as a shrivelling heart.

* * * * *

DIG IN You may not be able to count your bank balance in more than three figures, but if you have a reputation for honesty and real business courage you will get there. "The conies are a feeble folk, yet they make their houses in the rocks." This war has shown what a small armed force, properly entrenched, can do against overwhelming numbers. The man who digs himself in behind good business methods, everlasting industry and unswerving fidelity to principle will outlast most of the big guns of modern business warfare. There are a lot of people who start in business with the rush and noise of a "Jack Johnston," but end in a thud and flare of mud. There is nothing to beat trench warfare in business, although an occasional rush may add territory and prestige.

* * * * *

DROP HIM Give a crooked man a wide berth. The man who does business with a shyster invites trouble.

You may make a little money out of him, but in the end he will either do you or smirch you. The man with a "wicked partner" may find him useful if money making is the only object, but sooner or later the old history of "Snap" and "Tray" will repeat itself. "Whoso is partner with a thief hateth his own soul." You can't profit by evil and get away with a clean soul. The man who pockets the proceeds of villainy, no matter who is its author, is a hypocrite as well as a thief. If you are tied up with a crooked man cut the knot. It is better to live on bread with clean hands, than eat fricassed chicken with well dressed thugs.

THE BUSINESS MAN AND HIS BANKER

The Capital of a Merchant is the Sum of his Net Available Resources, Plus his Credit—Give the Banker Frequent Insight into Your Business by Discussing Your Affairs with Him—Confidence in one Another Must Exist to be Successful

DO not attempt to get ahead of your banker in the matter of alleged clever financing, or imagine that you can conduct a monetary institution better than you can a shoe business. Better be on terms of friendship, frankness and confidence with the local manager rather than an open foe or secret enemy. The banker,—like the traveler—is in a position to extend many personal favors, and give you sound, timely advice. His counsel, accommodation and endorsement at the right moment or just when most needed may prove of inestimable value and benefit to you. Play the game with him fairly and squarely.

“The Relations of a Merchant with his Bank,” was the subject of an interesting address recently delivered by H. W. Parker, President of the Bankers’ Trust and Savings Bank, of Minneapolis, Minn., in which he pointed out that credit was the life blood of trade and emphasized the necessity of absolute frankness and confidence. There is many a merchant in difficulties to-day or on the anxious seat because he has attempted to “put one over” on his banker, to use a colloquial expression. Possibly a shrewd and astute business man may succeed in fooling his banker part of the time, but he cannot do it very long, and when the expose comes, there is a day of reckoning, which has resulted in a merchant going to the wall and, that too, at a period when a little accommodation would have enabled him to weather the storm successfully.

Here are some forceful observations which the enterprising and progressive retailer, whether in the shoe trade or in any other line, would do well to read with care and ponder over.

Banker’s Power and Responsibility

The control over this constant flow of money brings to the banker great power and great responsibility. He is thereby enabled to place the combined wealth of the community at the disposal of legitimate business. The responsibility involved in carrying out this trust—for it is in fact an obligation of that character—is necessarily a heavy one. Every time the banker exercises his discretion in approving a loan to a merchant, he is using money of one class of persons who have trusted him to back the business enterprises of another person in whom he in turn has confidence. Just as our depositors must have implicit confidence in us, so we must in turn trust to the honesty and integrity of those who come to us for financial assistance in developing and carrying on their business enterprises. The average merchant is very likely to sustain, at different times in his business career, both relations to his banker. He is necessarily a depositor, and if his business grows as it should, he may be frequently a borrower. This makes the obligation between merchant and banker reciprocal. In fact, modern business is so many-sided and the lines cross each other at so many points, that we are all of us placed in a position where we must inevitably have confidence in one another, in order to carry on business at all. It cannot be gainsaid that the most valuable collateral that you have to deposit with your banker, as security for any loan which you may wish to make, is your reputation for honesty and integrity among your fellowmen.

Frankness and Confidence Necessary

The relation that should exist between the merchant and the banker is one of absolute frankness and confidence. Give him frequent insights into your business by discussing your business affairs with him. Do not be offended when your banker asks you for a statement of your affairs. Whether you are seeking credit or not, a statement of your condition is a most excellent thing to have in your banker’s hands, and should be sent voluntarily. A banker sometimes declines to make a loan because he is not fully advised as to the affairs of the one seeking it. A statement setting forth one’s financial condition should be clear, concise, explicit and absolutely correct. You do not know when the day will come when you will find it necessary to seek accommodations and, if the banker has been kept advised of your affairs, you can receive immediate consideration of your request. This applies to the clerks and other employees among you, as well as to the merchants themselves, for there is not a progressive banker anywhere to-day but who wants to believe that the clerks of to-day are the merchants of to-morrow. The road to such ambitious ends is strewn with many adversities, but the employee who has his employer’s business at heart, who is loyal, efficient and will co-operate, has made the right beginning.

Credit Must Be Proportionate

“Good credit in the markets of the world enables the merchant to add to his ability to do business. It gives him the use of enlarged capital, thus enabling him to carry a more complete stock, increase his sales and magnify his profits. Large assets are not always necessary to the creation of credit. What is most desirable is, that credit be in relative proportion to the actual assets, and in harmony with conditions which create and maintain it. A merchant’s capital is the sum of his net available resources plus his credit. The giver of credit is a contributor of capital, and becomes, in a certain sense, a partner of the debtor, and, as such, has a perfect right to complete information of the debtor's condition at all times.

"Credit is given a merchant because of the confidence reposed in him. Requesting a statement when credit is asked is not a reflection on one's character, honesty, or business ability, but is done to secure information to enable business to be conducted intelligently."

Borrowers sometimes assume an attitude of resentment towards a banker's requirements regarding a loan. I do not think I am going too far, when I say, that a banker by virtue of his extended experience is better able often times to judge whether a man should become obligated for a loan or not.

Banker is Financial Physician

A banker is in a sense your financial physician, and he feels—particularly since if he loans you he becomes a partner temporarily in your business—he has a right to give advice, and I think it well to heed it. Sometimes borrowers become offended when they are asked to either pay or reduce their obligations. Always bear in mind that when a financial institution makes a loan it becomes in a sense a partner in that firm or individual's business or transaction but it is a partnership for a specified time, namely,—the time for which the note reads, and not for an indefinite period. When a bank asks for payment or reduction it is then that the borrower should show his disposition and his ability to pay all or part, and so keep his credit in his bank unshaken.

It has been facetiously remarked that banks want you to pay, but if they find you can, they do not want you to. Promptness as to the maturity of your obligations and engagements is something that should be religiously observed and practised. Never issue a check against your bank account unless there are funds on deposit to meet it. Indeed, every depositor in bank should keep a balance adequate to meet his needs and sufficient to make it worth while for a bank to carry the account. The size of a bank account is an important factor in the extension of credit. Do not use your bank simply as a bookkeeper and a clearing house for your checks, but keep with it a sufficient balance such as will remunerate them for the facilities they have provided for you.

Operations Dependent Upon Credit

The extent to which the world's business activities are dependent upon this mutual trust and confidence of which I speak, can hardly be overestimated. Upon the foundations of actual tangible wealth, we have erected a vast superstructure, made up of operations dependent upon credit. It is no exaggeration to state that probably 90 per cent. of the business of a country like ours is transacted on this credit basis. In other words, if that mutual trust and confidence upon which credit operations depend, should fail us, the superstructure falls like a house of cards, and the volume of business comes back to an actual cash basis and shrinks to less than one-tenth of its former volume. That is exactly what takes place, to a more or less complete degree, when we have what is known as a financial panic. A panic is merely the result of a wave of distrust which sweeps across the country, destroying credit and leaving business just where it was in the Middle Ages—to be transacted either on a barter, and exchange or a cash basis.

Criticism Should Be Encouraged

The key to the whole situation is of course, the psychological element of mutual confidence, and here lies the great peril which we face continually. Now, you and I have nothing whatever to fear from just and reasonable criticism. If our methods will not stand most rigid examination, they ought to be shown up and we should suffer the consequences. Sane and reasonable criticism of business by intelligent critics, who have taken the trouble to inform themselves accurately of the conditions with which they deal, should by all means be encouraged. That sort of thing will help every honest banker and every honest business man, as well as the community generally. On the other hand, I believe we all have a distinct grievance against the latter day muckraker, who, assuming all knowledge and experience as his province, proceeds, after a careless and cursory examination of some complicated and technical situation, to launch a reckless and unqualified condemnation in the public prints against some one or more branches of business activity. I am not speaking of a particular incident in this line. Instances will occur to the minds of all of you.

Why the Muckraker is Menace

Now, the special reason why the reckless muckraker is a menace to modern business is that he is playing with fire. The reputation of a business man is a good deal like that of a woman, as unfounded slander, although completely refuted, leaves its mark. That is why the recovery from a financial panic is slow. That is why no man should proceed otherwise than with the utmost caution in doing anything, by act or deed, which may affect the institutions of public and private credit. It is exceedingly easy to destroy credit; it is exceedingly difficult to repair the damage.

Sir Walter Scott has said: "Credit is like a looking glass, which, when once sullied by a breath, may be wiped clear; but if once cracked can never be repaired."

The single concrete idea which I should like to enforce and leave with you is this: That the intangible element of credit is the all important feature of modern business; that it rests entirely upon mutual confidence, is sensitive in the highest degree and therefore easily undermined and destroyed. The maintenance of credit in the higher and general sense in which the term is used is something which we must always have before us.

Leather Trade Jottings

What is Seen and Heard Amongst the Trade—Views and News of the Leather Trade at Home and Abroad

THERE is a great diversity of opinion amongst leather men with regard to leather conditions. Some claim that prices are on the mend and seem to be holding back, while others are willing to make concessions, believing that the peak has practically been reached in the matter of prices. Some are expecting another boom as soon as the production of army footwear gets fully under way in the United States, while others point to the fact that so far as our friends across the line have got into the scrimmage, it has had no appreciable effect. It is also urged that not only have American tanners, and shoe manufacturers, offered their services to the government in the turning out of economical footwear, but the war authorities talk of adopting measures to keep down profiteering in the production of munitions and army requisites.

An Undisputed Fact.—The fact remains, however, that there must be a heavy drain upon the leather resources of that country, which will undoubtedly mean that Canada will be called upon to take part in providing sufficient material. In addition to war supplies, there will be the continuance of the general demand for footwear on even an accelerated basis, owing to the increased industrial activity that will prevail from the nature of the financial relations established between the United States and the Allies, as well as from the general speeding up of those industries that will be called upon to provide the sinews of war. The falling away of export trade will be a mere flea bite compared with the largely increased demand at home for shoes and leather equipment of all kinds, so that those who expect any easing of the leather situation are doomed to disappointment. The only thing that may cause any material change in the situation will be the prospect of an early settlement of the conflict. And then the hesitation will only be temporary, as there are really no grounds for expecting cheap hides for a long time to come.

Should Go Slow.—The tanner has no need for boosting prices, and is following an unwise policy in doing so. It is in the interest of all concerned that business should be conducted upon a careful and prudent basis at present. There has been a little easing of the hide market owing to the waiting policy of tanners in the past few months, but this bids fair to be lost through the hysterical conditions that have been promoted lately by the entering into the arena of the American Republic. Advantage has been taken by hide holders to inflate prices with the result that green hides have evidenced considerable strengthening in the past two or three weeks. The nearer business can be kept to normal the better for all branches of the trade. Prior to the beginning of the year it looked as though we were heading for a panic, but by careful handling of the situation a serious break was avoided, and now that common sense has prevailed through a most trying period it would be a pity if there should be anything like a stampede.

Foolish Statements.—Not only the trade, but the public, was set agog a month ago by statements published in the daily press of the United States over the signature of Thos. G. Plant, a former shoe manufacturer, who declared that there were plenty of hides available, and that leather manufacturers had conspired with other sections of the shoe trade to exploit the public with high priced footwear upon which all were reaping extravagant profits. His claims were fully answered by those in a position to speak, who pointed out the fact that it was impossible to procure adequate supplies of either hides or skins, and especially the latter, outside this continent. Notwithstanding this the agitation has been kept up by some of the metropolitan dailies, whose wild statements have found an echo in an article referred to elsewhere, published in the Toronto "Globe." Why reckless statements of this kind are published without consultation with those interested and best in a position to know their worth is difficult to conceive. An interview with any of our leather producers or hide men would have satisfied any intelligent person that there was not a scintilla of truth in the statements made.

What They Think.—Here are some views of Eastern leather men given our representative:

The predominating argument just now seems to be the trouble in Brazil, and general change of conditions there, resulting from the action taken by the other countries of South America. The feeling seems to be that this is to a certain extent going to once more cut off a portion of the available hides. Then again there have been orders placed in the United States already by their government of between two and three million pairs of army boots. This will certainly put a dint in the supply of hides and leather. While you might say that this will only make a difference in sole leather, calfskins, kips, nevertheless it is going to force the manufacturer more or less into the use of other leathers, such as side and kid, etc., for civilian use. On the part of the tanner there seems to be a feeling that prices have reached very nearly the top; while there might be a slight increase nothing compared with last year's ascending market. There was also considerable buying the past week or ten days in the States being done by England. It might be in view of the United States commandeering the interned ships that the embargo at present in existence might be lifted temporarily. Even a month's lifting of this embargo would make a big difference in prices.

KITCHENER MANUFACTURERS' BANQUET

Large and Representative Gathering to Celebrate the Establishment of the Live Business Organization—A Tribute to one of its Most Progressive Citizens—Mr. T. H. Rieder Presented with "Key of Hearts" by Fellow Citizens and Well-Wishers

ON the evening of April 28th, at the Masonic Hall, Kitchener, Ont., there assembled over two hundred enthusiastic business men, partly to celebrate the organization of the aggressive business men's association known as the Kitchener Manufacturers' Association, and to offer at the same time a word of congratulation and farewell to Mr. T. H. Rieder who has recently been elected to the presidency of the Canadian Consolidated Rubber Co., Limited, and is about to take up his permanent residence in Montreal.

The gathering was large and one of the most representative ever held in the City of Kitchener, embracing all the various industries and commercial enterprises of that busy place, and from start to finish went with that eclat for which Kitchener has always been noted. The chairman and toast-master for the evening was S. J. Williams, of Williams, Greene & Rome, who presided in a tactful and masterful way, maintaining the interest and enthusiasm with timely and cogent remarks from time to time. The chief guest was T. H. Rieder, and amongst others present in addition to the business men of Kitchener were: Rev. C. A. Sykes, Kitchener; R. W. Ashcroft, New York; J. M. S. Carroll, A. Dwyer, Montreal; and W. J. Connor, Toronto.

K.M.A., the trademark of the Association, was pre-dominant in the banquet hall. It graced the walls, the tables, the menu cards, the coat lapels of the guests. It was in the chicken broth a la K.M.A., it decorated the Vimy Ridge chicken. It was in the Bull Dog salad, the British Navy rolls, the Wilson mints, the American crackers, the St. Julien ice cream, the cakes a la Stars and Stripes, and on the K.M.A. cigars. It started out from every conceivable place to impress on the minds of the members and the guests that it stood for a thoroughly British and loyal Kitchener, as well as for a more prosperous, more industrious and better governed Kitchener. And it will carry that message everywhere on all goods manufactured by members of the Association.

T. H. RIEDER
President of the Canadian Consolidated Rubber Co., Limited

After a most sumptuous repast the gathering was called to order by Chairman Williams who expressed his pleasure at seeing before him so large and thoroughly representative a gathering. He spoke of the wonderful enthusiasm and perseverance of the business people of Kitchener, and the remarkable progress the city had made in population, as well as industrial activity. He touched upon some of the pressing civic and commercial questions and called upon those present to do their utmost to further in every way the interests of the city and of the country generally.

He proposed the toast of "The King" in a few fitting sentences, in which he referred to the love and esteem in which the head of the British Empire was held all over his vast Dominions. He was the head of the greatest democracy of the world. After the National Anthem was sung, with great heartiness, the toast was responded to by Rev. C. A. Sykes, in a very eloquent and forceful address, in which he called attention to the difference in ideals of "Kaiserism" and those the Allied nations were fighting for. He dwelt upon the justice of their cause, and its certainty of final triumph, concluding with a thrilling peroration that won the speaker an ovation.

Mr. Sykes expressed the city's pride in its sons of German extraction, who have recognized, as has Mr. Wilson, this great truth, and who have been willing to take up arms with us in the cause of their own fatherland. The men and women of Germany, he said, will have an opportunity to vindicate their country and to overthrow absolutism that bases itself on the long worn-out idea of autocracy. The Germans cannot stem the tide that is now setting in against them. We have the upper hand in more ways than one. The Prussian army is the last expression in the world of a purely military organization.

A fearful price is being paid in the cause of freedom and a fearful price remains to be paid, Mr. Sykes said. His references to the entry of the United States into the war were received with applause and he welcomed the new ally to the great fraternity fighting for liberty and right.

Chairman Williams then paid a warm and expressive tribute to the guest of the evening, Mr. T. H. Rieder, who was described as Kitchener's favored son. To become president of one of the six largest industries in the country and the largest of its kind in the British Empire, when one is well on the sunny side of forty, is no mean honor, he said. He pointed out that Mr. Rieder, had risen to his present rank, one of the highest that any business man of Canada may hope to win, from the humble position of office boy with the old Daisy Rubber Co. He rehearsed the guest's activities on behalf of the welfare of the city, especially in connection with taxation reform, educational progressiveness, and the advocate of playgrounds and proper recreations for the youth. He referred to the fact that Mr. Rieder had already set an example in providing swimming pools for boys and girls, and hoped his example would be followed by other men of means in the community. He said the City of Kitchener would miss Mr. Rieder's personality, although he hoped he would continue his interest and good offices in connection with the city that had been this home for many years, and that had witnessed his success. He presented Mr. Rieder on behalf of the citizens with the golden key, not of the city merely, but the hearts of the humblest, as well as the greatest of its citizens. He asked the audience to join in singing number four on the programme, entitled "T. H. Rieder is our Man"—which was done with great gusto to the tune of "Tipperary."

Mr. Rieder on rising received an ovation, lasting some minutes, on the conclusion of which he expressed his surprise at the honor done him by the Association. His interest in his native city had been both natural and genuine. He had had the ambition to see Kitchener the Akron of Canada—the largest rubber centre in the country and that ambition had been quite fully attained already, although a beginning had but been made. He hoped to see Kitchener not only the largest rubber centre in Canada, but the largest and most aggressive manufacturing centre in the country.

He would like to give the "K.M.A." and the City of Kitchener a motto for the future. This is an age when service counts more than ever. The large organization of which he was the head had established this as its dominating principle "service." "He profits most who serves best," is a safe axiom to-day for business both small and large.

He would also caution his fellow manufacturers to sit down and consider what were the possibilities after the war. Undoubtedly industrial competition would be very great, and upon their workmen as well as equipment and business methods would depend the maintenance of the success they had won.

They should see to it that the educational facilities of Kitchener were not neglected. It was upon the boys and girls of the present they must depend for the operatives and business management of the future. They should provide the very best in public school, collegiate and technical training if their successors were to be properly furnished "to every good work." The educated, mentally active mechanic, was the one of the future. They should make a heavy investment as a city along this line.

They should make Kitchener attractive to the mechanic classes by keeping down taxation. It was a city of homes and it should be a city of financial ease as well as comfort to the workmen. They should have municipal regulations that place the burden where it belongs. The poor must not be taxed at the expense of the rich. He hoped to see in the near future from four to six thousand additional people employed in the various industries and this would be possible as they made living conditions easy.

He thanked the K.M.A. for its kindness and assured the members of his continued interest in all that pertains to its present and future interests.

President E. C. Kabel, of the K.M.A. was then introduced, who in a jovial five minute speech told what the Association proposed to do, and expressed its determination to put Kitchener on the map in large letters.

Mr. James Acton, of the Acton Publishing Co., of Toronto expressed his pleasure and appreciation at being asked to be present at the inaugural banquet of the K.M.A., and more especially as he had taken an interest not only in the city for some thirty years, but had watched the rise and progress of the guest of honor, one of its foremost citizens. He referred to the fact that nearly a dozen years ago a prominent member of the rubber trade had pointed out Mr. Rieder as a coming man in that industry. His success had been attained by sheer merit and application.

Mr. Acton congratulated the chairman and the president of the organization on the splendid and representative gathering he saw before him, and hoped that the Association would soon include in its numbers every manufacturer and business man in the city. It was a time to "get together," and forget any differences that might have existed, and he recalled a humorous incident to illustrate how a quarrel may be ended when the parties to it make up their minds there is nothing to be gained by antagonism.

He referred to the agricultural situation and said there would undoubtedly be necessity this year, and next, to provide the farmers with adequate help, if actual privation were to be avoided.

Mr. R. W. Ashcroft, of the U. S. Rubber Co., New York, followed with an address on advertising and trade marks that evidenced great thought.

The musical programme was made up almost exclusively of specially-written chorus songs, and was under the direction of Mr. Nyberg, of the Canadian Regal Motors.

WHY MUST ALL PAY THE SAME?

"I wish I could devise some means whereby in the management of my shoe store, without any evident discrimination or partiality, the customer who pays cash and takes home his or her parcel, would receive some direct financial benefit or rebate from such an act," declared an eastern city footwear merchant the other day. "I know it is a system of business whereby the person who gets shoes on credit, obtains the same consideration as the one who pays cash and the party who takes the parcel home under his or her arm receives no more thanks, or even appreciation, than the individual who orders the goods sent a distance anywhere from two to four miles. It costs the shoeman from five to twenty-five cents to have packages delivered according to distance, time of day, facilities, etc., and yet, one who carries home footwear is not given the benefit of this reduction. It is the same in the matter of paying cash. The one who hands over the where-with-all, then and there, is possibly paying for loss sustained by the dealer in his extension of the credit system, for no one can sell merchandise on time without being a loser to a certain extent. When the retailer has ready money in his possession—made possible only by the person who pays as he goes, it enables him to take advantage of all cash discount. The business man who does not avail himself of such concessions, during these times of increasing prices, augmented cost of doing business, expensive living, etc., is running behind in the financial race, or simply marking time. The successful shoe dealer today, has to take advantage of every favorable breeze in the way of good buying, clever merchandising, quick selling and ample profits. He has to be watching his stock himself and his system all the time, if he wants to forge ahead in the game."

STOCK RECORD CARD FOR EACH STOCK NUMBER

Comprehensive System Outlined Whereby Letters are Used for Classifying Leathers and Numbers for each Line—How to Enter up the Goods When Ordered, When Received, Sold or Returned—Striking a Balance of Sizes on Hand Every Week

THERE are two reasons why many shoe dealers in Canada are not making money in the business game to-day. One of them is that they are not getting replacement value on their shoes, and the other is they do not know where they are at in the matter of stock.

On lines bought six or eight months ago, they have not taken into account recent increases in cost and are basing profits on the old schedule. This is an error and mistake in judgment from every standpoint. These shoes are worth what they will bring to-day on the present purchase figure, no matter on what terms they were secured some months ago. The result of not getting what he should for his goods is that a merchant when he re-enters the market and has to pay the added cost has consumed all the profit made on the old line in re-stocking his shelves. It is a short sighted policy to be handing out shoes on such a flimsy foundation.

If you have bought them for four dollars and are selling them for six, you are making a profit of 30 per cent. on the selling price, in times of stable, unchanging values, but if it costs you five dollars to replace the same pair the profit is really cut down to 16 per cent. on the selling. No shoe business in Canada to-day is operated at as low a basis as 16 per cent. The overhead and other fixed charges generally run from 18 to 25 per cent., and even more on the volume done. Besides this there should be a profit of at least 10 per cent. above the cost of doing business.

Heavy and Badly Assorted Stocks

Another contributing cause to lack of profits is too heavy stock. Shoe dealers do not know where they stand in a merchandise sense—goods keep accumulating in this line and that line until some morning the so-called business man wakens up to find that he is top heavy with leather assets, a large proportion of which is possibly unsaleable. He is not keeping track of his stock in a proper manner. George A. Slater, Limited, Montreal, manufacturers of the "Invictus" shoes, have in connection with their branch stores and numerous agencies, a splendid system of stock keeping which the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL takes much pleasure in reproducing.

A "record card" is shown on this page used in connection with the system installed in the "Invictus" shops, which will enable any merchant to possess definite knowledge regarding his stock and the saleability, turn over, etc., of his various lines. In connection with the operation of the system the following pointers are given, which will be read with interest. For men's lines, numbers are used—1 to 49, if bals—50 to 99, if bluchers, 100 to 149, button, etc., and in making up the stock numbers letters are used for classification—A being for black calf shoes; D for black kid; P for patent; R for colored and W for sundry shoes, such as special window shoes, etc.

Here are the instructions.

Store Stock System

1. Give stock number to every line.
2. Mark stock number clearly on label of each carton, just above factory lot number.
3. Make stock record card for each stock number and for each width of that stock number.
4. Make entries daily on stock record cards of sizes sold,

STOCK RECORD.														STOCK No. _____
LATEST BALANCE ON THIS CARD MUST BE CHECKED WITH STOCK EVERY MONTH RECORD DAILY, SIZES SOLD. STRIKE BALANCE EVERY MONDAY														COST PRICE _____
LEATHER: LAST: PAT: STYLE: TIP: SOLE: WIDTH: SELLING PRICE _____														ON ORDER

at same time entries of mate numbers are made, from empty cartons, on Daily Sales Sheets.

5. When goods are ordered, make entry of date and sizes in "On order" column of stock record card.

6. When goods are received, make entry in red ink in first * blank line on stock record card, recording each size received, the date received, and the total number of pairs. Put red line through sizes in "On order" column.

7. On Monday following receipt of goods, fill in (with pencil) first vacant "On Hand" line with balance on hand (exclusive of sizes received) then add balance to sizes received and fill in totals (with black ink) on next vacant "On Hand" line.

8. Strike balance of sizes on hand every Monday morning.

9. When goods are returned, enter as goods put into stock, but mark "Returned" on the same line entry is made.

10. Use this symbol to show that five pairs have been sold.

To Make Stock Numbers

Upper leather is represented by letters.

Slip sole is represented by X.

Full double sole is represented by XX.

Last is represented by manufacturer's Last No.

Upper pattern is represented by your own sample No.

Example: Gun. Met. Calf, Sgle. Sole Bal. Last 58.

Stock Number A 20/58.

With slip sole the number would be AX 20/58.

With double sole, the number would be AXX 20/58.

Note: In making up your stock numbers use the following key: (For classifying leathers)

A. For black calf shoes.

B. For kid shoes (black).

P. For patent shoes.

R. For colored shoes.

W. For sundry shoes (special window shoes and such).

For classifying your styles use the following key:

1 to 49 Bals.

50 to 99 Blucher laced.

100 to 149 Button.

150 to 199 Oxford and Pumps.

200 up Sundry.

Note: Use black ink for balances and for sizes ordered.

Use black pencil for marking sizes sold.

Use red ink for sizes added.

* Blank line refers to line other than "On Hand" line.

DOES NOT WANT "LOOKING AROUND" CUSTOMERS

All Shoe Stores have Plenty of the "Sorry to Trouble You," but "Don't Buy" Class—
Retailers Asserts that he is in Business to Sell Goods and not to Fritter Away Time

"NO, I do not want people coming into my store and looking around pricing footwear of all kinds; trying on different styles of shoes and going out without buying, after remarking upon the reasonableness of my prices, the attractiveness of my premises and the beauty of my window displays, and the 'I will be in again manner.' I know several stores have many callers of that kind, who, after taking up the time of a proprietor or a salesman for half an hour or more, will throw him some dainty, sweet morsel about his service, stock, styles, and say: 'Oh, I am not buying to-day—I was just looking around,' or, 'I will be in next week,' or 'Thank you for your trouble,' a friend was inquiring and I wanted to oblige her,' etc. Customers of this ilk are no good to me or to anyone else. Every establishment can get plenty of these patrons," declared a Montreal retailer the other day.

"I do not say to them—'Oh, that is all right,' or 'Don't mention it, please,' or 'Glad to see you again,' or 'No trouble at all to show goods, even if you do not buy,' because I will not play the part of a hypocrite. I generally say nothing, but my serious cast of countenance is sufficiently indicative of my feelings within, namely, that I am not any too jubilant to have been put to all this annoyance and get a 'Thank you' for what I have done in the way of information, display, pulling down cartons, trying on shoes, etc. I notice the next time that they enter they do some buying.

"Of course, if I cannot fit a woman or a man, that is all right—my stock is then at fault, but if I have the right type of shoe, the right size and the right width, and the party does not buy, I am no going to play the part of a hypocrite and let on that I am tickled to death to have them come in and give me only conventional excuses, instead of dollar bills. I am in business to make money and I do not care if people who go out without buying know that I am annoyed when they do so. I guarantee that the person who comes in here once and departs without making a purchase, will realize from my attitude and general demeanor, that it would be rather unpleasant to undertake the same experience again. I always endeavor to tell the truth, and will not trim my sails to meet the passing whims of customers, or their preconceived ideas of what is best for them, if those ideas do not coincide with mine.

"A woman came in the other day, to buy an infant's shoe. She wanted a certain size and I told her it was too short. She said it was not, and I informed her that I had many years of experience and knew what I was talking about in the matter of fitting. She persisted in inquiring if I had not such and such a kind of shoe in such and such a size, I told her yes, but that I did not deem it worth while showing it to her, on account of the fact that she would only be crippling the child's toes and squeezing its feet.

"She remarked: 'This is a funny store.'

"I said: 'Madam, it is not funny at all—it is the customers who are funny.'

"'What do you mean?' she inquired.

"'I mean like this. You ask me for a certain size shoe for that child's feet, I tell you that such a boot will give the little one pain and distress. You intimate that I do not know my business, and I want to inform you candidly that I do, I will not falsify or misrepresent matters in any way for any one.'

"She started for the door, saying that she would never trade with me again. I promptly replied: 'I am very thankful for that, for I can get along without your business.'

"I know I might have been a hypocrite and a sycophant I might have put a two-fold construction on my words, or have sold the woman something which she thought she wanted, but which was not the proper thing at all. That child would have suffered and in the end, the mother would only have blamed me for my carelessness and heartlessness. No, I spoke out at the time frankly and fearlessly and because I did so, I lost her custom. If one cannot be honest, open and straightforward in business, and render service according to his best judgment, experience and ideas, well then, I will turn the key in the shop to-morrow and get out to work on the farm. Let me add, that, while I am no dreamer, parasite or trimmer, I am doing a larger business than ever to-day, although some call me blunt, tactless, brusque and cranky. Sometimes these qualities are required in these days of deception, duplicity, weakness and selfishness."

RETURNED SHOE EVIL IS GREAT ANNOYANCE

Women are Chief Offenders and Impose Upon the Service and Large-heartedness of Shoe Houses—Goods Once Purchased should not be Accepted for Credit or Exchange Unless Demand for Return is Reasonable—A Long Standing Trouble

“THE returned goods evil is getting more troublesome every day,” remarked a leading Toronto shoe dealer this week, and “one wonders who is responsible for the growth of it. The higher the price of shoes goes the more picky some people become, especially women, and they will return footwear on the flimsiest pretext. They do not seem to think that it puts the merchant to any inconvenience or annoyance, that perhaps half an hour or more has been spent in fitting and apparently satisfying them, that they strain and stretch the service idea almost to the breaking point. On top of all this we are often coolly requested to return the money.

“There appear to be two many people at the present time who do not know their own mind. They imagine they can impose forever on the service, good nature, or credulity of the house. They buy from impulse, a desire for display, a passing sensation or just for an experiment or experience. They want to feel, handle and ask all sorts of questions about new things. Then without reason or just cause they change their minds, or the goods, and the retailer has to put up with these shortcomings of human nature. We seldom give the purchase money back now as I find that the privilege, once extended by us, was grossly abused. We were subject to all sorts of impositions and deception. Many persons seem to think that it is an interesting personal incident to buy something and then undo what they have done.

How Service is Abused

“We will go to any length—reasonable length—to oblige a customer, but will not hand the money back unless we have not the shoe in stock to fit the customer. Many of the goods are soiled. Persons will put up all sorts of specious argument that they have not worn the shoes or ill-treated them in any way, even when there is ample visible evidence before our eyes. One cannot call a customer a fabricator, but that is what many of them are. Our loss in making exchanges is many hundreds of dollars during the year and we seek, in every way, to minimize the evil by insisting upon correct fitting and satisfaction before a party leaves the store.

“It is the women who cause this thorn in the flesh. They purchase a pair of a certain color kid boots, and when they get them home imagine they would like another style or shade. Back they come, or more generally they will telephone for us to call for the shoes and send up the money. Now we do not do this—I mean send up the money, but will make the exchange, although we are getting thoroughly tired of disposing of a pair two or three times to certain members of the fair sex, who think that a dealer or a salesman has any amount of time to devote to their whims and that deliveries, repeat fitting, exchanges, etc., do not involve any trouble or expense.”

Vexatious Question for Decades

Returned goods have been a vexatious problem in the trade for many years. It is claimed that the abuse on the part of the public is greater on shoes than on any other article of merchandise. Unwarranted returns impose a burden that has materially added to the cost of doing business.

On the general subject of returned goods, the New York Tribune recently pointed out the following plain facts about the return of goods once bought. It says: “Probably $5,000,000 is wasted yearly in New York City through unwarranted return of purchased goods. Twenty per cent. of all goods sold are returned, and not once in a hundred times is there any sound reason for returning. Thirty per cent. of all charge goods are returned. It is the charge account which forms the habit. These percentages are increasing yearly. It takes 150 per cent. of delivery to sell 100 per cent. of merchandise. The extra 50 per cent. goes into re-selling returned goods. Each article purchased and returned goes through nineteen hands in the process. One store spends $10,000 yearly in cleaning returned goods. Another wastes more money in the expense of handling re-unfair and expensive.

“You, as a retail merchant might well impress the above points upon your customers and show them that return of goods is one of the reasons for the high cost of living.”

Want Good Ones for Burned Ones

Now the Western Shoe Wholesalers' Association have gone on record on burned shoes. Their platform is as follows: Over half of the claims that come back to the dealer are shoes that have been exposed to heat. This destroys the

Yours sincerely,
Bowmanville, Ont. FRED. R. FOLEY.

fibre in the leather causing it to flake up and to seem in that particular case to be “just rotten.” All leather is tanned in liquor, so, if damaged in one spot it could not be sound in the rest of the shoe. Few people realize just when a shoe is burned, and most of them are perfectly sincere in declaring it couldn't have happened. Before giving credit on a shoe that has these symptoms, have a committee of your local shoemen pass judgment on whether credit should be given or not.

Points About Burned Footwear

The Massachusetts Retail Shoe Merchants' Association go on record in a circular of which more than a million copies have been distributed to the public as follows: “Burnt leather or soles. When damp or wet all leather burns from contact with the slightest heat. Do not expect your dealer to re-sole burned shoes without charge. When shoes are wet put them on shoe trees to dry and thus preserve their shape.”

Another good point in the line of merchandise is to make a fixed rule somewhat as follows:

Goods once purchased are not to be accepted for credit or exchange unless the demand for return is a reasonable one. In such cases the request to take back shoes must be made within one week from date of purchase. This constant abuse of the custom of returning goods may prove a serious burden on future profits. The continued tax on sales needs decided action on the part of all shoe merchants.

FROZE NERVE OF BOTH HIS EYES

Flight Commander Curtis Watson, who is a son of Robt. Watson, shoe retailer, 635 Yates street, Victoria, B.C., and left there at the end of June, 1915, to enter the school of aviation, Toronto, has had a rather exciting career. While flying in his machine at a high altitude over the North Sea, Flight Lieut. Watson suffered a painful injury in having the nerve of both eyes frozen. This caused temporary loss of sight, but the young aviator is now recovering rapidly. After consulting a specialist in London, he has been assured that he will be entirely well in the course of a few days, and that he will not even have to use glasses. It appears he was piloting his aeroplane high in the air, and the wind was cold and penetrating. In ascending he neglected to fix his goggles, with the result that his eyes were afforded no protection. The nerve was frozen and after the first examination was made it was thought that it might mean the loss of one eye, with the sight of the other considerably impaired. This however, will not be the case, which is very gratifying. A fine record has been made by this young aerial officer, and last fall, he interrupted a zeppelin in the North Sea and after a single handed fight, was forced to give up on account of engine trouble. Some time later, he made a raid with others on one of the enemy's aeroplanes in Belgium, which resulted in the destruction of a great deal of property, including an airship.

WHEN A WOMAN WILLS SHE WILL

"I want a new pair of shoes," declared a lady in a very unreasonable tone of voice, as she marched into the women's department of a large Montreal footwear establishment the other day.

"You see, these are ripped," she exclaimed, holding up a pair of turned boots, from which some stitches had been severed.

"Oh, we can easily fix that, and they will look all right," replied the salesman, cheerfully.

"That will not answer," she retorted with some vehemence. "I want a new pair. My husband told me that I would not get any satisfaction in my demands here, but it makes no difference what he says. It is what I say that goes," and thus she rattled along. She had paid $9.00 for the footwear and it had given her about two months' service, and because the sole had ripped, she was most insistent that no repairs would make good the defect.

"These shoes should not rip," she went on, with considerable animation, "when a lady pays $9.00 for a pair they should be perfect in every respect."

"Well you know, any shoe is liable to go like that," declared the affable attendant, "we have them selling at $12.00 and $14.00, yet they rip just the same as those at half the figure. Do you know how this turned shoe is made? It is made inside out," continued the salesman, anxious to be explicit, and using terms which she could not understand.

He went on to explain in the turned shoe the upper was stitched directly to the sole, wrong side out, and that the shoe was then turned right side out, the process giving it the name "turned." He also pointed out that this method was used for making nice, light, dainty shoes, and that the sole stock must necessarily be of good quality. "In the making the sole is fastened to the last and the upper lasted over it wrong side out, and stitched through, the thread catching in the channel or shoulder cut on the edge of the sole," he continued. "The seam does not come through to the inner side of the shoe. Let me tell you that turned shoes, as a rule, give splendid satisfaction, but that the threads fastening the upper to the sole, are liable to break at any time, although it does not frequently happen, so, mad'am, I think you are most unjust in your demand.

"I do not care whether it is made inside out or outside in," was the fiery rejoinder, "a new pair of shoes I am going to have before I go out of this place."

The clerk went to consult the manager, and came back quickly, determined not to yield one inch in the verbal battle. Thus the contending forces stood face to face—the one insisting that she be given a new pair of shoes, and the other stating positively and plainly that the shoes had given excellent wear for the past two months—that the rip was only a temporary affair, and could easily be repaired, without any sacrifice of the appearance, loss of wear, or minimizing of the comfort. For fifteen minutes neither gave in, and then the clerk politely told her that she could either leave the shoes and have the soles sewed, or whatever she pleased.

Finally she went out in a towering fit of rage, asking that the matter be allowed to stand over a day or two, until she had seen her husband and engaged him as an auxiliary or ally, to help her master this alleged injustice. However, back she came a few days later, as meek and docile as a spring lamb, explaining that perhaps she had been a little hasty in her judgment, and imperious in her demands, and that if it really would not show, she would be quite content if they would stitch the rip.

AN ENTHUSIAST WHO IS "MAKING GOOD"

(See Front Cover)

A quarter of a century in the shoe game and still preserving his genial nature and buoyant enthusiasm, sums up the career of G. H. Ansley, vice-president and general manager of the Perth Shoe Co., Limited, Perth, Ont. He is one of the younger shoeman who is making a name for himself, his factory and its products.

Mr. Ansley, who has been at the helm in the Perth Shoe Co. for the last three years, has a natural genius for the footwear life. He has always been a close student of styles and possesses originality and initiative, which enable him to "sense" the favor with which certain lines will meet. The result is that the output of the industry has more than trebled and the style, snap and dignity which characterize the range, place Perth shoe styles in the forefront rank of women's novelty footwear.

The factory organization and system has also been completely changed under Mr. Ansley's direction, and the plant is now the largest in the Dominion turning out women's Goodyear welts exclusively. Although there were many who shook their heads forebodingly when he went to Perth, the subject of this reference is very much on the job and the "stone town" has been put on the shoemaking map by his progressive management. Mr. Ansley was born in Chicago and has had a rather interesting career in the shoe arena. He has resided in Canada for thirty years, and was with Geo. A. Slater Limited, Montreal, and later the J. D. King Co., Toronto, as special salesman of the Nursery shoe, made by them (which line he originated). Then came a connection of seven years with the Slater Shoe Co., covering the Maritime Provinces and Ontario.

Next he was associated with the Nursery Shoe Co., St. Thomas, as salesmanager, and previous to entering upon his present responsible post, was a highly successful road representative of the Kaufman Rubber Co., and the W. E. Woelfle Shoe Co., of Kitchener, Ont. He knows the selling game from end to end and has also mastered manufacturing details. The Perth Shoe Co. is thus moving on to greater achievements, and in the near future a large addition will be erected to the establishment, in order to take care of the steadily increasing volume of business and more particularly the new "in-stock" department.

FALSE AND UNJUST REPORT ON HIDE SITUATION

What Supplies Exist are not Available, Owing to Shortage of Bottoms—Misleading and Inconclusive Statement by United States Commercial Agent—Publication of His Reckless Observations Serves to Create Discontent in the Mind of People

HIDES are plentiful, but not obtainable, is the rather startling and misleading report of E. L. Reilly agent in charge of the New York Office of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce. He further intimates that this continent need have no difficulty in getting hides, and that there is no extensive shortage of leather for the consumer. He would make it appear that the world's supply of hides and skins is increasing. The "no-lack-of-hides" article has been published in many quarters conveying erroneous impressions.

Leather men throughout all of the United States have protested strongly to Secretary W. C. Redfield who recently sent out a letter in reference to the no-lack-of-hides article. He says in part: "I beg to advise that I have considered carefully your statements in connection with this announcement and regret very much that the Acting Commercial Agent in charge of the district office of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, in New York, gave out the statement. I think in justice, however, I should say that this official was only temporarily in charge of our office and consequently is not thoroughly familiar with the usual procedure in matters of this kind.

Untimely and Ill Advised

"This article is very untimely and as pointed out in your communication does not deal thoroughly with the situation. At the time this statement was given out the Commercial Agent in charge of the New York Office of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce was engaged on special work in Washington, but left on Sunday evening to take charge of the New York office. I shall take steps to see that no further announcements of this kind will be made in the future."

Does any serious minded man presume to think for one moment, that if hides are plentiful and sources of supply easy of access, that the representatives of various live stock associations and other important bodies would be waiting upon the Federal, Alberta and Ontario Governments asking for their co-operation in the matter of cattle raising. The British Cattle Supply Co. have made application to the Ontario authorities for an area of 25,000 acres at least, and the government has practically agreed to lease them this land for fifteen years at a nominal fee of five cents an acre. At the present time the company have 1,500 cattle on grass in Alberta. If hides are so abundant, and their future so uncertain, why is this organization seeking so strenuously to engage in large undertakings in the cattle raising line, and already enter a glutted and overstocked line of business?

Poisoning Mind of Public

A leading sole leather representative remarked: "What is the use of talking about large quantities of hides, thousands of miles from here, when we cannot get ships to bring them to us. The idea is ridiculous. One might just as well speak of lots of available labor for the farms to-day by stating that six hundred men are in the penitentiary. True they are there, but like the hides are not available. They are being held up by stone walls and bars, while hides are being held up by scarcity of ships and the submarine campaign, of the wide spread effect of which no reliable reports have been published. The publication of such articles does the trade any amount of harm."

"Yes," declared another leather manufacturer. "I think it is ill advised for the general press to publish such articles as this one, for the reason that the public mind is poisoned. They imagine they are being held up by the shoe and leather manufacturers. If there were hides and skins here in the quantity suggested, we would do anything on earth to get hold of them. I never read a more inaccurate and ill-founded report. I am in the market and keep closely in touch with conditions all over the world, and want to tell you that the scarcity of hides was never more acute than at the present time, and I know what I am talking about."

World Shortage of Ships

Here is what one dealer said: "We purchased a consignment of hides overseas in December, for delivery in March, and that contract could only be lived up to on the very last day of the contract period. The hides were shipped, but the vessel has been listed as missing; where it went or what happened to it nobody knows. Our one consignment of 14,000 hides is missing, goodness knows what the full amount of that cargo was worth. The point I wish to make is this: there is a world shortage of ships for all purposes of trade and commerce, and quite a number of the few we can charter are lost."

"Regarding the Consular report from Buenos Aires to the effect that increasing supplies of raw hides are in sight," declared another Toronto dealer, "we know nothing of it. We are very large buyers of hides in South America, and our information is totally different from that. We know nothing of any alleged accumulation, and we buy continually. On the other hand, we know that three or four months ago the French Government bought up large quantities of hides for military purposes."

Some of the surplus in other sections of the world's hide-producing countries is undoubtedly due to the falling off of German purchases, and these, unfortunately, are located in inaccessible quarters of the globe. It was stated that, so far as the British Empire is concerned, the British Government would undoubtedly lift the embargo if there was a glut of hides on the accessible markets. It is practically impossible for the Canadian buyers to get hides from Australia, the Cape and New Zealand, unless for military contracts, which, coupled with the shortage of shipping, makes it increasingly harder to get hides for domestic consumption. Even when an order is placed with a British firm in India, where hides are not necessarily embargoed, it is hard to do business. A Toronto firm placed an order with an Indian hide concern for a shipment to be delivered immediately, but that Indian firm wanted to hold shipment until next December. As the market is not in a condition to permit of buying for future deliveries, the order was naturally cancelled.

The domestic market is declared to be very high, as the packers are sold out right up to date.

The Fabrication in Part

The statement credited to Mr. Reilly is in part as follows: The bureau officials believe American trade factors are not taking anything like full advantage of the opportunities existing at this time to get hides from easily available sources. According to some of the Consuls, an actual glut of hides exists, while a number of foreign factors have written the bureau stating that they have goods to sell, together with price lists, terms of payment, and other details. Some of the prices quoted appear reasonable when compared with rates being asked for hides in other quarters.

The American Consul at Mombasa, British East Africa, for instance, reported that the subjugation of the nearby Province by the British troops, and the consequent opening up of trade, had brought in large consignments of hides. Also that such supplies as were held back by the use of the railway lines for troop movements and munitions were now moving. The American Commercial Attache at Peking reported that the hide market in China, which previously had been brisk, was now much depressed.

Further testimony regarding the availability of supplies was testified to by the Consul at Aden. He stated that a large supply of goat and sheep skins was ready for immediate shipment in his district. This was due to the fact that the news of shortage and high prices in the United States and elsewhere went out through Arabia in 1916, with the result that dealers accumulated large stocks, which taken in connection with the easing up of the demand, threw a lot of skins on the market at reasonable prices. A Consular report from Buenos Aires was to the effect that an increasing supply of raw material was in sight in that locality. This was due to stimulated breeding and the accession of new stock from remote sections.

In addition to the above testimony are communications received by the bureau from foreign factors direct. A merchant in Madagascar, for example, wrote at length to the government agency offering to ship trial orders of hides to American dealers, and pledged large shipments in case the importers were satisfied with the merchandise. A firm in Cairo forwarded a request that it be placed in contact with American importers of hides, the letter stating that the firm was well known in the London market, and was desirous of forming connections in the United States.

Several Consuls in various districts in South Africa reported that dealers in hides in their territory were anxious to get into touch with American firms. It was also shown that a supply of hides was available in New Zealand, despite the fact that the British Government requisitioned all hides. Some of these at least, can be shipped out on permits issued by the Ministry of Customs.

RUBBER FOOTWEAR TAKES ANOTHER JUMP

A new price list has gone into effect on rubber footwear which shows an average increase from 4 to 5 per cent. over the one which was put into effect on March 5th, when the placing season started. The business booked during the past two months has exceeded all records and all rubber manufacturers will have to work to their fullest increased capacity to get out the goods. The reasons given for the latest raise are the constantly advancing costs of cotton and fabrics of all kinds, and more particularly the increase in wages paid to all employes owing to the high cost of living. The wage bill is mounting up steadily and is, of course, the biggest factor in getting out the goods. The country is being scoured for labor of all kinds and more particularly girls.

Some of the new and old prices on leading lines are:

TRADE IS GOOD IN THE WEST

A leading Ontario shoe traveler, who has recently returned from the West, says trade on the coast has been very good and salesmen have been receiving some very nice orders. Those representing ladies' and children's lines are meeting with much better success than representatives of men's footwear. So many males have left the country business in foot toggery for the lords of creation has not been quite as brisk as it was some time ago. However, on the whole, trade has been very satisfactory.

He enlisted for overseas service in February, 1916, spending several months at Camp Borden and at the Exhibition Grounds, Toronto.

GIVE THIS MAN THE GOLD MEDAL

Let folks step on your feet hereafter; wear shoes a size smaller if you like, for corns will never again send electric sparks of pain through you, according to this Cincinnati authority. He says that a few drops of a drug called freezone, applied directly upon a tender, aching corn, instantly relieves soreness and soon entire corn, root and all, lifts right out. This drug is a sticky ether compound, but dries at once and simply shrivels up the corn without inflaming or even irritating the surrounding tissue. It is claimed that a quarter of an ounce of freezone obtained at any drug store will cost very little but is sufficient to remove every hard or soft corn or callous from one's feet. Cut this out, especially if you are a women reader who wears high heels.

HAS JOINED MARRIED MEN'S RANKS

Allan Locké, sales manager of the Slater Shoe Co., has joined the ranks of the benedicts, being married on April 12th in the 23rd Street Presbyterian Church, New York City, to Miss M. V. Ohlsen, of New York. Mr. Locke and bride spent some time visiting points of interest, and have now taken up residence in Montreal. Mr. Locke is well liked, having been identified with the shoe game for 20 years. He first started with James Linton & Co., spending seven years with them and afterwards went with Clark Hutchinson, New York City. Returning to Canada he took a position with the Ames, Holden Co., and later joined the Slater Shoe Co., as sales manager. He is one of the best-known footwear representatives, and by his courtesy and geniality, has made a wide circle of friends in the trade, who will wish him and his bride every success and prosperity.

DISPOSING OF THEIR BRANCH STORES

The Carey Shoe Co., 142 King street east, Toronto, who have branches in Barrie and Chatham, Ont., are disposing of their stock in both places. The store in Barrie is being taken over by new interests and Frank H. Hurlburt will continue as manager, while William Lawson will be manager for the new interests in Chatham. The reason the company are disposing of their outside branches is that the health of A. C. Carey has not been good for some time and he intends taking an extended trip through the West. The business in Toronto will be under the direction of his father, Johnston Carey, during his absence.

DEATH OF MR. PETER GAUTHIER

Peter Gauthier, manager of the Ottawa branch of the Miner Rubber Co., passed away recently at his home in the Capital City. He had been actively identified with the trade for over forty years, being born in Montreal and educated in that city. Mr. Gauthier represented Z. Lapierre for fourteen years; James Robinson for nine years; the Thompson Shoe Co. for a couple of years, and had been connected with Messrs. Jackson & Savage and the Miner Rubber Co ever since these firms started business. There was no man more widely known or better liked through the Ottawa Valley and Eastern Ontario than Mr. Gauthier, who for the last sixteen years has been stationed in Ottawa. He could count his friends by the score and the news of his death will be received with sincere regret. His son, G. Gauthier was associated with him in the Miner Rubber Co.'s warehouse, Ottawa. S. Sherman is looking after the management of affairs since Mr. Gauthier's demise, which took place on April 19th.

THE LATE PETER GAUTHIER, OTTAWA

Rubber Footwear Notes

The Rubber Season Great Surprise—Orders Ahead of Last Year
—The Outlook for All Kinds of Rubber Shoes is Promising

THE placing season for rubber boots and shoes is about over and manufacturers are practically a unit in saying that so far the season has been the most satisfactory, so far as volume is concerned, of any they have experienced. Some claim that the placing orders are fully 50 per cent. ahead of those of last year. There also seems to have been much less trouble in regard to prices than usual. Evidently the shoe trade consider that rubber footwear at the present figures is a good buy from a manufacturer's standpoint. No doubt the concentration of lines, as well as the many improvements in the goods themselves account for the promptness with which the retail trade have given their orders this season. Undoubtedly whatever may be the result to manufacturers, the dealer has done wisely in ordering well up in his requirements for the coming fall and winter season. There can hardly be the slightest doubt that the cost of raw material will go up somewhat. In fact, many of the manufacturers are now debating whether they have been wise in accepting orders that so largely anticipate their requirements.

Sporting Goods Conditions—Last season was a record breaker in regard to sporting shoes, but this year promises to exceed all the anticipations of rubber shoe men in this line. Orders were in fairly early and manufacturers have been able to get ahead well with their production. Nevertheless they are confident that as soon as the outing season begins, there will be such demands upon their capacity that many of the trade will be disappointed as last year. Since giving orders a number of the retail trade have supplemented their previous requirements and it looks as though it would take well into the summer season to complete the business. Doubtless the expensiveness of ordinary footwear has had considerable to do with the increased production in this class of rubber shoes, but the attractiveness of design and perfection of manufacture have no doubt borne a large part in making popular this end of the rubber footwear business.

The American Trade—Rubber footwear manufacturers on the other side of the line are feeling uneasy in regard to the prospects of filling their orders at the prices that they have sold for 1917 and 1918. The fact that the United States has gone into the war will no doubt have a great influence in creating industrial conditions that will be trying to all lines of manufacture. Large orders have been taken and unless the signs fail, there will be a scarcity of leather there similar to the experiences that we have passed through in this country. The demand for munitions and other war materials will no doubt decimate the factories even if the demand for men for military purposes will not be largely felt. At the same time, there is no doubt that manufacturers are unnecessarily worried. They have already passed through a time of great stringency in regard to leather supply, which can hardly prove less trying than any that they may be called upon to pass through in the immediate future. The calling out of a million men in the United States will hardly have a noticeable effect in that country of one hundred million. The demand upon Canada's resources in this respect has been much more trying, and cannot possibly occur across the line unless they multiply very largely the number at present called for.

Rubber Soles and Heels—This line of business is already proving an industrial factor in the trade on the other side of the line, as well as in Canada. With the high price of sole leather, a great impetus has been given to this class of goods. According to the rubber companies, business is steadily on the increase, and a large number of shoe manufacturers are now sending out lines with these bottoms or heels. The rubber advertising done during recent months had also an effect of creating an impression, that this class of goods cheapens the product. Experience thus far, however, goes to show, that there has been no startling tendencies along this line, and with the extra attention, etc., shoe manufacturers claim that they are able to hold their own in leather goods. However, the public just now is inclined to favor anything in the way of novelty that comes out, and it looks as though a large run will be made on this class of goods.

Crude Rubber Market—In spite of the great activity in rubber production, there does not seem to be any noticeable change in conditions in the raw rubber market. Spot prices in market are even lower than they were a month ago, and advices from England show a decline in cost of plantation varieties. Para remains steady at 76½ cents for upriver fine. First latex pale crepe is quoted at 80½ cents. Manufacturers are offering to buy at concessions, but holders seem to be of the opinion that prices will strengthen very shortly. Should the carrying trade suffer to any considerable extent buyers of raw rubber fear that supplies will fall off considerably beyond that already experienced. In the meantime, there seems to be enough rubber about for all purposes.

RINEX SOLES

When you show Rinex-soled shoes to a customer you can say:

RINEX is a composition—mostly vegetable fibre.

RINEX contains just enough rubber to make it waterproof.

RINEX Soles are wholly different from either rubber or leather soles.

RINEX is flexible as rubber but will not draw the feet, or slip on wet pavements.

RINEX wears better than leather and is waterproof.

RINEX never squeaks.

Any shoe repair shop can re-sole (or half-sole) shoes with RINEX.

RINEX requires no breaking in. It is flexible from the start.

If you are a shoe manufacturer and have not tried RINEX Soles, write at once for full information. If you are a shoe dealer, send for a sample and see for yourself what the sole means to your trade.

The Shoe Repair Man

HE ATTACHES SOLES WITHOUT STITCHES OR NAILS

New Process Outlined by Medicine Hat Shoeman who Maintains that his Method is Superior to Anything yet Discovered—Early Closing Petitions to be Circulated by Toronto Association—Piece Work Schedule Drawn up as Criterion for Wages Paid

ATTACHING soles to shoes by the welding process and using no nails or stitches, is the latest method in the shoe repair trade.

This interesting announcement was made public at the last regular meeting of the Toronto Shoe Repairers' Association, when a letter from Geo. Edwards, of the New Way Shoe Store, Medicine Hat, Alta., was read by Secretary A Butterworth. It had been received by the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL, but as the communication contained a proposition of much interest to the shoe repair trade, and the Toronto organization was referred to, it was passed on to that body. Mr. Edwards claims by his new method of attaching soles, that welts can be preserved, stitchers dispensed with, royalties no longer paid, and that the soles will not rip or come loose in any way. He maintains that his process of welding is superior to anything that has been placed on the market. He has such faith in his invention that he offered to fasten soles, either leather or composition, to any pairs of shoes that the Toronto shoe repair men, as individuals or an Association might send.

Action was taken on the communication, which aroused considerable discussion, and it was decided that two pairs of shoes should be forwarded to Mr. Edwards, to have soles put on by him. The boots will be returned to the Association, and it is hoped that, by the next meeting, the new process of welding soles will be on view. Mr. Edwards was warmly thanked for his offer. His letter is as follows: and explains matters very fully. A reprint of his announcement in the Medicine Hat papers is also given on this page.

THE NEW PROCESS GIVES SATISFACTION

Medicine Hat, Alta.,

April 21st, 1917.

SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL,
Toronto.

Dear Sirs:—

I have been in the shoe repair business in Canada for twenty-six years, and during that time, I have discovered a process of welding soles on any make of boot or shoe, whether the soles are leather, fibre, or composition, or any other material, that has been put on the market for bottom stock up to the present time.

I might say that the shoe repair man, has the broadest experience of any one in the trade, because he gets all kinds of boots to repair—boots that come from every corner of the globe. This is the reason why we get more knowledge of the real idea, the construction and build of footwear, and the foot generally than the best shoe manufacturer, providing we are thoroughly interested in our business. I have all the best machinery, finishers, skiver and everything else, including a button machine.

I have always been very much interested in the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL, and I usually read what is going on in the trade. I notice that you have a live bunch of shoe repair men in the City of Toronto, and if the Association would like to take up this matter of welding soles with me, I will be only too pleased to answer any reasonable question on the subject. If the Association or any member of it will send me a Goodyear welted shoe, with either single or double sole, I will weld on a new sole and return it to the owner if he will pay the express charges. I would suggest that a good way for a repair man to get a pair of shoes to fit himself is that he sew on a sole, with either leather or any of the various substitutes used, and send the other boot to me, with the sole of the same material. I will weld the latter on the other shoe, and return the boot. The repair man can wear the pair himself and show them to others, and in this way, get an idea which is the better job—the sewed sole or the one welded on by me.

I have a pair of welt shoes, and on December 1 10th last, I put on a pair of Neolin soles, one of them being welded, and the other sewn—a double

THE NEW WELDING PROCESS

Nails hurt and destroy the feet as well as wear out the hosiery. Don't have a sole sewed on because as everyone knows, they rip off before they are half worn out. Our welded soles can't rip as there is nothing to rip, and they will stay on till the boot is completely worn out. When a hole is worn in the sole, slivers and dirt can't get under the sole.

The boot that goes to the garbage can is the one to be repaired to save money to buy bread.

A Boon to Medicine Hat!

No other man in Canada is doing this work. There are over 100 pairs now being worn in the city and all are satisfactory. It is undoubtedly the most wonderful method of repairing boots now being used. Medicine Hat is the first city in Canada to get this wonderful process and that is used here by only one man.

If a new pair of shoes cost you $4.00 and you can get your old ones made as good as the new ones for $1.50, which can easily be done by this process, you save $2.50, which will buy bread for a large family for a week.

soled welt on the welded shoe. I cut a hole in the ball of the Neolin sole, bevel shape, so it would not pick up slivers or anything that could possibly get under to tear it off. I have worn this shoe every day since and the sole is on yet. Now, its mate at this time has had the third sole of the same material, without cutting a hole in the ball. The reason is that it will not stand the stitching. It rips off at the toe, and dirt gets in under and off comes the sole. By my process it cannot rip for there is nothing to rip. I am sending you a copy of my ad. which appeared in the papers here on April 20th. This is the first time I have ever advertised my new welding process, by which I can weld a pair of soles on any shoe, whether of leather, Neolin, Tenax or rubber, with no nails and no sewing.

By this process I do away with the Goodyear welt stitches, yet we can have the welt, and the sole will be welded to it, not sewn. Then sewn, the sole rips too easily, but by my new process, it cannot rip.

I would like to hear from some shoe manufacturer on this process. He can throw away his Goodyear stitchee at once and he will not have to pay a royalty any longer. I would not use the Goodyear stitchee in my repair shop to-day if you would make me a present of one. They destroy 95 per cent. of the welts on old shoes, but by my method the welt is not marred or injured in any way. Every shoe repair man knows to-day that sewing new soles on worn shoes; when the welt has to be punctured with awl and needle is not a success. He may do a fair job on a few pairs in every hundred. The stock is not there to work on, and in a great many cases, I have found in new shoes, spots broken with the stitches, and these were doped up to hide the poor work of the stitchee.

I am a British subject and was born in Prescott, Ont., fifty-eight years ago. My forefathers came from London, England. My school education extended only six months in a country school—the remainder I picked up myself. I believe that I have to-day, the most up-to-date method of shoe repairing known, and as I said before, this is the first time I have ever advertised my business in the newspaper, as my work itself has always brought me more jobs than I could handle.

Yours truly,

Will Try for 8 O'clock Closing

In the absence of the president, Chas. F. Robertson, H. K. Hayward, vice-president presided. The proceedings, as usual, were lively, and there was not a dull moment. Several new members joined, and were warmly welcomed.

One of the topics discussed was early closing, and it was announced that on May 1st, several in the Association would close their shops from May until September every Wednesday afternoon, in order to enjoy a weekly half holiday. Quite a few of the members, now close their shops on week days at 8 o'clock, in spite of the fact that certain other repairers, who are no as yet identified with the organization, persist in keeping open until 10 and even 11 o'clock. Those, however, who adopt early closing find that they do just as much business as before, and have more leisure. One member stated that if twelve hours work would not make him a living, he would get into some other trade, while another son of St. Crispin added since he started early closing, he found business has greatly improved. He is well pleased with the results.

It was decided that a petition be prepared, and circulated among all the repair men of Toronto. Each member of the Association will take it around in his district and seek to obtain signatures from repairers. The object is to have all shoe mending establishments close at 8 o'clock, the year around and to make Wednesday a half holiday during June, July and August. It is felt that if systematic work is undertaken, the project will go through, and the required number of signatures be obtained.

It was reported that since the Association had adopted the stand that no member should do stitching for shoe repairers who did not belong to the Association, several had joined and everything was looking bright and prosperous for the summer's work.

The Figure for Piece Work

Some time ago, it was decided that a schedule of prices be drawn up for piece work and presented to the members. While only one or two repair shops in Toronto pay their men on piece work basis, others would like to know what such work is worth, in order to gauge the wages of their helpers.

Here is the basis for preparing or "stocking" the work, that was agreed upon as being a fair figure.

Stocking men's soles, only.....	15½c
Stocking full soles, men's or women's.....	45c

THE PRICES FOR COMPOSITION SOLES

A Winnipeg shoe repair man writes the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL wanting to know what the price of No. 1 hemlock and oak leather is in Toronto at the present time. It may be stated that the repair trade now pay 87 cents for No. 1 hemlock backs; 97 cents for hemlock bends. For No. 1 oak backs the figure is 92 cents, and for oak bends, $1.00 a pound. For putting on Neolin, Tenax, Duflex, or any other composition soles, and leather or rubber heels, Toronto shoe repair men get $2.50. Without heels, the rate is $2.25 for men's, and $2.00 for women's. The figure that prevails in Winnipeg is $2.50 for composition soles and 50 cents extra for rubber heels.

EIGHT MONTHS OF SEVERE SERVICE

There is on exhibition in the window of William Stewart, of the Reliable Shoe Repair Works, 1134 Queen street west, Toronto, a pair of trench boots which saw eight months' strenuous service at the front in France and are still in fair condition, showing that they will withstand all kinds of strain and hard usage. They were made by Beal Bros., 52 Wellington street east, Toronto, and were the property of Capt. A. C. Trousdale, of the 102nd Battalion (Canadian) being bought in April, 1916. Capt. Trousdale was wounded at the battle of the Somme in the Regina trench raid in November last year. He had worn the boots from the day of purchase in April, and in a letter to the makers said, "Send me another pair. I prefer them to anything I saw in France as they are waterproof." The trench boots are well littered with the thick mud of the Somme and show several shrapnel holes.

BIG DRIVE TO PUT "FRITZ" OUT OF FRANCE

Former Toronto Shoe Representative Writes Interesting Letter on Offensive Operations at the Front—To Finish the Job is the Thing with the Men, and the War is Secondary—Seven of Platoon in Working Party Killed by Shell—Remains Scattered

S. C. CRONK, wholesale shoes, 60 Front street west, Toronto, has two sons at the front, both of whom before enlistment were associated with him in the shoe business. Lieut. Frank S. Cronk, the older lad, joined the 169th Battalion and left Toronto in September, 1916, for overseas. Shortly after he was sent from England to France, being attached to the 20th Battalion, Canadian Infantry.

Gunner S. C. Cronk, Jr., identified himself with the 67th Battery, Canadian Field Artillery, and went over with a draft in October last. He is now with the 14th in France.

In a recent letter to his father, Lieut. Frank S. Cronk gives a vivid picture of the horrors of war, and the hair breadth escapes that he has had. He is confident that the

for the advance and every one gets up steam and works like the deuce. Suddenly there is a faint whistle in the air, which gradually rises to a shriek and you instinctively know that instead of going a couple of hundred yards away from you, as others have been doing all day, this one is for you. Everyone takes a head-long dive for cover and you always get there a second before there is a whiz-bang, and the shell bursts and scatters mud and earth all over you. The men swear like the dickens, not on account of the danger, but because the work has been interrupted. The job is the thing over here, and the war is a secondary thing.

Witnessed Awful Spectacle

We were in the front line last week, and only had two casualties but the other day, when Wallace, the Major and I, were making a friendly call on the engineers, a white-faced man rushed in and told us that seven of my platoon had been killed by a shell, while in the working party. The Major and I rushed over to see what was doing. The seven boys were literally blown to pieces, arms, legs and heads scattered around. I felt awfully sick going over but when I got there I did not seem to mind very much. I had a good shot of "Scotch" before I had their things gathered up, preparatory to sending them back home. They never knew what struck them; when the soul has departed what is the body anyway?

No doubt I— would remember Gregory Nelson, who used to go to Winchester School. He was blown to pieces by Germans will soon be driven out of France by the present offensive, and that the Allies are in efficient fighting trim. The letter is as follows:

FRANCE, March 11th, 1917.

Dear Father,—

I am quite well and never felt better in my life; already for the Big Drive, that is going to push Fritz out of France.

I have sent my trunk and club bag containing my spare clothes to Thos. Cook & Son, Langley St., Longacre, London, E.C., England. In case I do not come back you can write them.

To-day is bright and clear and the planes have had a great day, three have been brought down. It is just a game of tag these fellows play, but a very dangerous game, as when they are "it," it usually means a machine gun bullet, or an anti-air craft shell.

I have been in the front line for a couple of weeks and am now attached to the Canadian Engineers in charge of a company of infantry, that has been loaned to them by the battalion. We are very busy preparing for the drive, building numerous things. It is funny the way we look at the war here. We start to build a light railroad at night over land a shell about an hour after I was talking to him. I have his cap badge, which I am sending to his father.

I— can tell her American acquaintance, who boasts of his sharp shooting abilities, that rifles are very seldom used this war, except to jab someone with the bayonet. It is all artillery, bombs, machine guns and bayonets, also that he need not worry, as the United States are not going to fight just yet, excepting amongst themselves, as to who can spend the most war money.

Poor Fritz is certainly getting his iron rations now. When our guns start to talk it is just one long roar. I pity the Huns sometimes, but when we hear of our friends going under our pity turns to hate. We have our big observation balloons up every day over here. I was looking at one to-day, and the observer wanted to come down, so he just walked off in a parachute.

Worthy of Best Treatment

I have been reading about the way they treat the returned men in Toronto. Believe me there is nothing too good for those fellows. If the people got down and cleaned the mud off their shoes they would not be doing too much. I mean the infantry men, not the officers. They are treating all the boys right in England. My chum, Eddie Burns, who came over with me, was wounded an hour ago, and is now on his way to Blighty—lucky dog. He is the first officer of the battalion to be hit.

Will have to close on account of numerous things. A whiz-bang, 18-pounder F. A. Battery, that are about 200 yards from here, have been straffing Heine at half minute intervals all day. You could not see them ten yards away, so cleverly are they concealed, but their continual banging has set my head aching, also one of the lieutenants has managed to steal an old violin from somewhere and is trying to play some old Scotch Airs. Old Scotch Airs are bad enough by an expert, but by a subalteran, who knows as much about playing a violin, as I do about flying a Zeppelin, they are hard on the nerves. Then the light is bad and my eyes are tired, and I also have some operation orders to get out.

I had the biggest treat of my life last night. I was able to undress and put on pyjamas and get into my sleeping bag. It was a month all, but a few days since I have had my clothes off, and a week since I had my boots, so I certainly appreciated it. There is only one thing I want and that is a bath, and by the way things look now it is going to be another month. When this little show starts here it is going to have the Somme badly off the map, but my usual good luck will get me through. For instance, last night, when I had to go up to a certain place, it was pitch dark and foggy, I made a mistake in my direction, and walked off the path and lit on my head at the bottom of a seven-foot trench. It did not even jar me. When the men see a man being carried away on a stretcher they look at him and say "lucky devil, three months in Blighty and possibly home after that, wish it was me." Slept in a barn with open sides for three nights with only a blanket, but now I have my Wolseley kit I am in clover.

Must close now, love to all and do not worry as I am all right.

FRANK.

SOME STRIKING FALL MODELS

J. P. Buchanan, representing the Smardon Shoe Co., Montreal, spent a few days in Toronto recently, showing a magnificent range of summer and fall samples in various colors, the newest shades being mulberry, orchid and Persian tan. Suedes are particularly well represented, while a few cloth tops are exhibited. A very striking shoe is a mulberry bal, with Louis heel. A black and white, with white kid vamp, white kid covered wood heel, white kid eyelet facings and collar, and black kid quarters, is certainly unique, and another boot, with black kid vamp, eyelet facing, collar, and covered heel, with white kid quarters is catchy. Effective combinations in mustard and black kid characterize the line, as well as some new models in walking shoes of the finest calf leathers procurable.

BRANCHING OUT IN SHOE GAME

J. H. McLelland, shoe retailer, 297 Danforth avenue, Toronto, has opened a branch store at 788 Gerrard street, near Logan avenue. Mr. McLelland is a progressive and alert shoeman, who has been in business for himself four years, and is making a success of the footwear game. Recently he was elected a member of the Executive of Toronto Shoe Retailers' Association, of which body he has always been an enthusiastic member. Born at Wiarton, Ont., he has been in the men's furnishing and shoe line for nineteen years. He served four years' apprenticeship in W. Symon & Sons, general merchants, Wiarton, and coming to Toronto, was engaged with the T. Eaton Co. for several years, after which he was with J. F. Brown & Co. for eight years, holding a responsible position. He then launched out in his own behalf, and is meeting with every encouragement.

WILL HAVE MILITARY BOOTS REPAIRED

Boots have been condemned by Boards of Officers, that are still capable of repair, and for this reason the Department of Militia has been put to the loss of large sums of money. Ottawa announces that the Headquarters Boot Expert has visited ordnance depots at various points, and has reported that 50 per cent. of the boots condemned would have given double the wear if they had been properly cared for, and repaired at the proper time. Hence, very strict orders have been issued to Commanding Officers that a regular inspection of men's boots must be made, so that the repairs can be effected at the proper time, and the length of the wear of the boot substantially increased. No boots must be condemned that are capable of being repaired.

GAUDY BOOTS AND SAVING ON FOOD

"A Mother," writing to the Woman's Page, in a Toronto paper, takes issue with the resolution passed at the last meeting of the War-time Thrift Committee, asking women to abstain from the use of veal and spring lamb.

"Better pass a resolution," she says, "to abstain from wearing the extravagant and senseless footgear now fashionable. All one needs is to walk up Yonge street and glance from the price marks on the boots in the shop windows to the feet of women (many of them attracting attention a block away), to see how many pounds of veal and lamb have gone into boots fit only for velvet carpets instead of the nourishment of the body."

The Boot vs. Veal and Spring Lamb question seems one of those to which a text of Scripture might fittingly be applied: "These ought ye too have done and not to leave the other undone." The times demand both the saving of calves and lambs for full maturity, and the saying of money by buying only boots that are of reasonable height and that can be renovated by the application of the blacking brush.

WOMEN SMUGGLERS HAD TO PAY

Mrs. White, customs official, paid another visit to Niagara Falls, Ont., on a recent Saturday afternoon, and a large number of women were compelled to pay duty on smuggled goods. Mrs. White even exacted eight cents duty on a pair of twenty-five cent stockings. Male officials stood at the end of the bridge, herding all women into the office while men were allowed to go. Every woman had to either declare goods or else satisfy Mrs. White she had nothing dutiable on her. Many new shoes, hats and even suits were brought to light.

MR. POITRAS GOES TO TERREBONNE

A. Z. Poitras, who will be associated with J. B. Hurteau as superintendent in the Globe Shoe Co., Limited, which organization is erecting a new factory at Terrebonne, Que., for the making of white goods, cushion welts and infants', misses' and growing girls', has been thirty years in the shoe business and is an expert as a shoe machinist. He was born in L'Epiphanie, Que., in 1873, so he is now forty-four years of age. He went to St. Hyacinthe when fourteen and took employment with Messrs. Seguin & Laline, where he spent four years in the bottoming department. Then he was with Messrs. J. A. & M. Cote, in the same city, eight years in the making department. Mr. Poitras next accepted a position as operator for the Duplessis Shoe Machinery Co., with whom he spent seven years. Eleven years ago, in partnership with J. B. Hurteau, he started the Star Shoe Co., in which he has since been interested.

A. Z. POITRAS, MONTREAL

CLOTH TOPS BOUND TO "ARRIVE"

"I tell you what it is," remarked a leading shoe manufacturer the other day, "that while the retailers may be taking hold of cloth tops rather gingerly at the present time, they will not do so very long. Now here is an all-white cloth shoe, made of first-class fabric with covered wood heel, which we can sell at $6.35. It is just as stylish as, this one, with the white washable kid top, collar and leather covered wood heel which brings $8.55."

Another shoe manufacturer showed the writer an all-cloth grey shoe and an all-silver grey kid leather shoe, in which the difference was $3.50 in favor of the cloth creation. On the whole, cloth shoes or those with cloth tops can be bought from two to four dollars less than a high cut kid leather shoe. "The trouble is that people have too much money at the present time to think of expense," he declared. "But prices will eventually go so high that women will welcome cloth tops, is the opinion of those who have closely followed the situation."

A number of manufacturers have sufficient stock of leather of various kinds to make up a large proportion of their line of shoes for early summer and fall, and based prices accordingly. When manufacturers again have to enter the market and the prices of shoes take another substantial jump, then retailers and consumers will realize that the one refuge or alternative is the shoe with the cloth top, which is just as handsome, artistic and stylish.

LOSES TWO SONS IN THE WAR

Two sons of J. A. McLaren, of the wholesale shoe firm, of McLaren & Dallas, Toronto, have made the supreme sacrifice. The oldest boy, Major Wm. H. McLaren, who resided in Hamilton, at the time of his enlistment, with the 19th Battalion C.E.F., fell at Courcellette in September last. His promotion to the rank of Major was not gazetted until after his death. He was married in April, 1916, to Miss Beatrice Brown, of Hamilton.

Now comes the sad intelligence of the passing of a second son of Mr. McLaren in the person of Lieut. John F. McLaren, who gave up his life in the recent offensive in which the Canadians won undying renown for their courage and gallantry. Previous to going overseas, with the 58th Battalion C.E.F., Lieut. McLaren was a member of the Queen's Own Rifles, and was employed in the warehouse of his father.

After being some months in France, the young officer was taken ill with hernia and had to return to England where he entered a hospital in London, for an operation. While convalescing he was married a few weeks ago to Miss Rita Harvey, daughter of Mrs. W. E. J. Dickson, Toronto, and shortly after returned to the firing line. The deceased, who was born in Toronto twenty-four years ago was educated at the Harbord Collegiate Institute and Toronto University. Both boys were nephews of Lieut. John I. McLaren, of Hamilton, who is overseas, and were enthusiastic military men. Lieut. McLaren died in a hospital as a result of wounds on April 22nd.

The many friends, in the trade, of J. A. McLaren will extend to him and Mrs. McLaren their deepest sympathy in the double bereavement, which they have suffered. The McLarens came of fighting stock. They knew no cowardice, and shirked no duty, and like thousands of the best and bravest of the young manhood of Canada, they have yielded their all in the great struggle for liberty, justice and democracy. They have paid, with the last drop of blood, their debt to Sovereign and Empire in the cause which they so nobly and unselfishly upheld. Mr. McLaren's family now consists of only one son, Wallace, aged fifteen, and three daughters.

OPEN NEW WAREHOUSE IN MONTREAL

The Breithaupt Leather Co., Kitchener, have secured a large three-storey warehouse, corner of St. Helen and Lemoine streets, Montreal, where a large stock of their well-known brands of sole leather will be carried for jobbers and manufacturers. The location is both central and commodious. John McEntyre, Limited, and Robt. Fraser, who have represented the Breithaupt Leather Co., in Montreal in the past, will continue to do so, and will be in a better position than ever to look after the wants of the many customers of the firm, owing to the splendid warehouse facilities, service and representative stock.

PATENT LEATHERS COMING IN AGAIN

In the samples which are now being shown for late fall it is noticeable that there is an increasing number of models with patent leather vamps. Patent leather, in combination with suede tops of various colors, and with the high-class fabrics which are being presented makes shoes of beauty, art and attractiveness. It is being recognized more and more that patent leather is coming strongly to the front, and for purposes of alliance with other leathers, there is none so pleasing in contrast, so striking in combination and so drossy and effective in appearance.

Another reason why patent leather is being used so largely is that it comes more reasonable than either calf or kid leathers, which have increased enormously in price, while the advance in patent has been very moderate when all things are taken into consideration. One thing that will possibly check the exalted selling figure of shoes is the employment of shiny leathers in combination with fabrics, for, with ivory, beige, smoke grey, castor, Imperial, cocoanut brown, plum brown, etc., there is no better material to use. Patent has always been the dressiest of all leathers and the most conservative in character and sale. Its return to favor is being hailed with a large measure of appreciation and anyone who follows the trend of styles and the growing tendencies in materials must notice that patent is once more holding its own.

BREEZY BRIEFS FROM ST. JOHN

Private Walter F. McCann, who was formerly employed in the Shoe Hospital Co., Sydney street, St. John, was admitted to No. 10 Stationary Hospital on April 10th, suffering from a gunshot wound in the left leg according to a telegram received by his father, Michael McCann, of 1 White street.

Private Percy G. Howard, who prior to donning khaki was employed with Waterbury & Rising, Limited, was admitted to No. 8 Stationary Hospital in Wimeraux on April 10th suffering from a gunshot wound in the right arm.

Another well-known young man of the boot and shoe district in St. John has been wounded on the battle field and is now in No. 32 Stationary Hospital in Wimeraux. Mr. and Mrs. Dennis Callahan received a telegram a few days ago informing them that their son, Private Leslie D., had been admitted to the said hospital suffering from a gunshot wound in the hip. He had been in the trenches since December 1st, and prior to enlisting was employed in Humphrey's Shoe Factory.

Lieut. Daryl G. Peters, son of F. Peters, of Peters' Tannery, who is attached to the 236th N. B. Kilty Battalion, has reported for duty after a long illness. He is stationed in Fredericton.

E. L. Rising, of the firm of Waterbury & Rising, Limited, wholesale and retail shoe dealers, has been elected a member of the council of the Board of Trade.

Many friends of Richard J. Walsh, manager of Waterbury & Rising's retail store in King street, will be pleased to learn that he is able to be about for a short while during the day. He is slowly recovering from a serious operation.

Kelly, "the price wrecker" of boots and shoes, is again in the city conducting a sale. He has opened a store in Charlotte street, and has had some patronage. His sale, however, did not attract as many people as on his former visit, due to the fire sale of boots and shoes being conducted by the McRobbie Shoe Co.

As navigation on the St. John River is open, local merchants expect to sell a large quantity of goods to the residents and country stores. Travellers have gone forth and will in all probability place their fall orders.

HOUSES WHICH ARE NOT FAIR TO THE TRADE

"There are some retailers who do not know how to receive travellers, and travellers who do not know how to extend consideration to retailers. I know a man," remarked an old-time footwear merchant the other day," who sold for a certain house, which did business in an eastern metropolis. His territory lay outside the city where he resided and conducted a successful shoe store. He bought goods from the firm with which he himself was associated, but would not permit it to give its city representative any commission on that business. The house stood for this sort of thing. This fellow, who was both shoe retailer and traveller, secured the usual discount given to the trade and also the local salesman's commission, saying he was not going to have another representative from the same company take his order when he could well attend to it himself.

"He thus obtained material advantage over other competitors in the same city and yet the house allowed him to get away with it. Our friend also was in the habit of buying shoes from outside concerns, and would have travellers call upon him, show their lines, get their prices and promise consideration or an order later. Then he would board a train and go to the town, where the plant was making known the fact that he was both a traveller and a retailer. He would tell the head of factory that he wanted to buy some shoes, that he never placed an order with a travelling salesman, but bought direct, and therefore expected consideration.

"Well, this was granted in many cases, several firms falling for this very specious introduction. One day, however, this retailer-drummer went to another factory stating that he did not buy from any road men. He asked for a special discount. The manager, said: "You make your living, Mr. A—, by selling goods?"

"Oh, yes," came the response.

"Well, why on earth don't you allow somebody else to earn a living too? Other people have to exist and if every man like you, bought goods direct, was so thoroughly selfish and tried to get ahead of the traveller by eliminating his commission, there would be many an excellent salesman out of a job. How would you like this treatment accorded you by chaps to whom you sell goods? You would complain lustily. Now, be fair to your fellow men, and let them make a little money. Frankly speaking, if any manufacturers have sold you goods at a special discount, on the plea that you have put forward, I do not think much of the firms."

SON OF OTTAWA SHOEMAN KILLED

Flight Lieut. Donald Masson, son of Robt. Masson, the well known Sparks street shoe merchant, Ottawa, was killed recently in France. It is supposed that he met death in one of the many recent aerial duels on the western front. Lieut. Masson was prominent for the past six or seven years in sports and athletics. He graduated from the Ottawa Collegiate Institute, where he played both football and hockey. He then entered McGill University, Montreal, and became known as one of the stars of that institution on the gridiron and the ice. He was captain of McGill hockey team for one season, when they made a great showing in the inter-collegiate race, and he was also a brilliant half back. His brother, W. G. Masson, is also at the front. The late Lieut. Masson won many honors in championships, regattas and swimming contests in the Capital city, and was a fine, well-developed young man, who had nerve and daring, resource and courage.

STAR SHOE CO. FURTHER EXTENDING

The Star Shoe Co., Limited, Montreal, are now going exclusively to the wholesale trade, and have recently acquired additional quarters in order to keep pace with their business, which has increased enormously during the past year.

E. H. Lanthier is the president and general manager of the company, and Peter A. Doig, general sales manager, has been made assistant general manager. Closer attention than ever will be given to the quality of the lines manufactured and to the service of the company, which has been in existence twelve years. The plant turns out infants', children's, misses' and growing girls', youths' and little gents' McKays, turns and cushion welts—and the new line of samples is the neatest and most attractive yet shown to the trade.

PETER A. DOIG, MONTREAL

Mr. Lanthier, president of the company, has been in the shoe game over fifty years, and has many jokes with those who do not know him intimately by asking them to guess his age. The estimates are invariably wild as most callers place the number of years on his head as less than he has been in the shoe business. Around fifty is the general verdict, whereas, as a matter of fact, Mr. Lanthier is sixty-six, and as alert and active as many men of forty. He first started learning the trade with the old Montreal firm of George T. Slater & Sons, where he occupied many positions for fifteen years, among them that of foreman. He was then with Z. Lapierre & Son, Montreal, for fifteen years, and on their going into liquidation he purchased the machinery of the company and launched the Kingsbury Footwear Co., which is to-day one of the largest shoe concerns in Canada. Mr. Lanthier, retired from this organization a couple of years ago to assume his present position. He is one of the most progressive and widely known shoe manufacturers in the Dominion.

Mr. Doig, assistant general manager and sales manager of the company, has been identified with the shoe and leather trades for over a score of years, and has a wide circle of friends. He began his career with G. S. Hubbell, Montreal, for whom he worked several years and later was with A. R. Clarke & Co., Toronto, as salesman covering Canada, Australia and New Zealand, which countries he visited frequently. He was also sales manager for Fisk, Limited, Montreal, which position he resigned in 1915 to join the Star Shoe Co. He is now receiving congratulations on his recent promotion to the post of assistant general manager, which he is in every way well qualified to fill.

CURIOUS SHIPPING METHODS

A very interesting little story is told of shipments of kid skins being made to Russia by parcel post. They are, of course, in this way limited per parcel to a certain weight. It was very interesting to see them adjust these parcels by changing a skin here and there in order to get the exact weight. When the skins were weighed out they were sewed up in a package in burlap or some material similar to that ready for posting. The parcels are then done up in large cases and shipped in the usual way by freight, going to the Pacific coast by rail thence to Japan and through Japan to Vladavostock. The individual parcels are then taken out of the cases and sent to their destination, Petrograd or elsewhere in Russia. This seems to be a very odd way of shipping this stuff, although they claim it is considerably faster than any other method at the present time. Even at that it would be six months before the skins arrived at their destination.

RETIRES AFTER LONG SERVICE

Miss E. L. Grobe, who was forelady of the fitting department of Getty & Scott, Limited, Galt, Ont., for many years, which position she filled with the utmost satisfaction, has resigned and will take a well earned rest. On the occasion of her departure she was presented by the girls of No. 1 and No. 2 Fitting Rooms with an appreciative address, accompanied by a handsome necklace. Miss Grobe said that she would long remember her pleasant associations with them. At the time she joined the firm they were making only two hundred pairs of children's shoes a day, and she had watched the expansion of the "Classic" shoe factory until its output now numbers over two thousand pairs a day in women's, misses' and children's lines, and is among the largest plants on the continent.

G. L. Hodgson, of Mount Dennis, Ont., who was for many years in business, in Walkerton, Ont., is an enterprising and original shoeman. He has a small printing press at the back of his store and sets up his own advertisements, some of which have a decidedly catchy turn. He recently distributed small hand bills, in which he offered a pair of running shoes to the boy or girl, under fifteen years, finding the greatest number of errors in the advertisement in language, punctuation or arrangement. Needless to say there were scores of entries and the children seemed to vie with one another in finding out just how many mistakes there were in this rather unique announcement, which might well be called a "comedy of errors." The proprietor even went so far as to mis-spell his own name in his desire to arouse interest. He is well pleased with the result of this educational publicity and certainly awakened the young people. This stirred up a lot of trade for the store, particularly in summer footwear.

A PLEA FOR ARTIFICIAL LEATHER

"What are we going to do about the leather situation? Are we going to keep on demanding genuine leather until prices are up to the point when all but the rich must go bare-foot? For a generation leather has been growing scarce. But the idea of using anything called an imitation or substitute hurt our pride and in some cases warped our judgment," says an exchange.

Artificial leather is a fabric treated and coated in the course of manufacture so that it looks like leather, feels like leather and, besides, is washable, waterproof and uniform in thickness. It is made to resemble Spanish leather, pebbled grain leather, and many other finishes.

Millions of yards of it are annually used for upholstering the seats of railroad cars, carriages, automobiles, couches and chairs. It is excellent for bookbinding because it stretches uniformly and takes ink well. The service and good appearance of the best grades of artificial leather are unquestioned.

FABRICS OFFER THE ONLY SOLUTION

A few years ago shoe manufacturers vied with one another in advertising "all leather" and "solid leather" shoes. Today an advertisement of this kind is rare, and the "leatherless" shoe has made its appearance, says E. O'Connor in the "Shoe Retailer."

It was not a question of the wearing qualities of the all-leather shoe, but from an economic standpoint, it represented a waste of leather. There are parts of almost every kind of shoe which can be made of other materials, at less cost, without impairing the service in any way. When leather was comparatively low cost, it could be used with a free hand, and there was little advantage in experimenting with other materials. But with leather at a premium the inevitable has come. Experimenting with lower cost materials has been stimulated, and wherever possible they are being used.

Leather linings are rapidly disappearing. A heavy cotton lining is more hygienic, and in most cases will wear fully as long. Artificial leather and various other kinds of fabric top facings are being used. This is a part of the shoe, the function of which is purely ornamental, and as the appearance of these materials is fully as good as that of leather, there seems to be little reason for continuing the use of the high cost article.

The leather inside backstay or heel stay is giving way to the fabric stay. Strangely enough, it has been found that a stay of this kind is stronger, and is so durable that it is seldom worn out when the shoe is discarded.

For tops and for the entire uppers a wider range of fabrics is being used than ever before, but the strange feature of the rapidly increasing demand for fabric tops is the comparatively moderate use of corkscrews, among the most durable, the most stylish and best adapted of all cloths for shoe tops. This is undoubtedly because this kind of cloth appears to best advantage, in black, while the demand for colors, such as grays, browns, fawns, chamois, castor, etc., has been persistent. Although these colors or some of them will doubtless continue in demand during the fall and winter, there are many indications that black corkscrew tops will soon come into their own again.

Artificial leathers for vamps or tops are still in the experimental stage, and as yet no satisfactory material for the purpose has been evolved. Fabrics, therefore, offer the only solution of the high cost shoe problem, and, indeed, for many purposes they would seem to be fully as well adapted as leather itself. Shoes for summer wear, with the whole upper made of a good serviceable fabric, are light, cool and durable, and stylish in appearance.

The great opportunity to conserve the leather supply, however, lies in the combination of leather and fabrics. There are few shoes except those for hard winter wear which cannot be made with leather vamps and fabric tops.

Retailers' associations in all parts of the country have been practically a unit in recommending the increased use of fabrics, and it is quite evident that this is the only way in which the price of shoes can be prevented from going entirely out of bounds.

EARLY CLOSING FOR TORONTO SHOEMEN

Early closing in a modified form will be gone on with by the Toronto Shoe Retailers' Association. At the last meeting held on April 26th, a report was presented from the committee that the city council could not legally pass a by-law that shoe stores close at six o'clock on Wednesday night, as stipulated in the original resolution. It was pointed out by the solicitor of the Association, that seven o'clock was the earliest hour which could be included in the movement.

Accordingly, after much discussion, it was decided that the members should go ahead with the canvass for signatures and present the petition when sufficiently signed, to the city council. As outlined, the proposition is to close at 9 o'clock on Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday nights of each week, 7 o'clock on Wednesday nights and 11 o'clock on Saturday nights, or nights before a holiday. While various amendments were moved, on the whole, it was felt that, although the step in the direction of early closing is not a very advanced one, it was a beginning, and every shoeman in Toronto would gladly accede to the new regulations. As it is now, a number of retailers in the suburbs are keeping open till 10 and 11 o'clock every night of the week, and if they close at 9 o'clock, it will be somewhat of a move forward. Most of the Yonge street stores close at six o'clock.

It was declared that the Wednesday half holiday movement is making progress, and that all shoe dealers east of the Don are now turning the keys in their doors at 12 o'clock every Wednesday at noon and enjoying a weekly respite from duty for a few hours.

Not a great deal of other business was taken up beyond the discussion on early closing. It was decided to send a resolution of sympathy to T. A. Wilson, shoe dealer, 579 Bloor west, who lost both his son and son-in-law at the front recently.

A complaint was made that several abattoirs, and other large concerns using rubber boots, were being sold direct by the manufacturers of rubber footwear, whereas, it was pointed out that these firms should buy through the retail trade, the legitimate channel of distribution. The executive will look into this matter and report at an early date, and also into the complaint that more persons than ever are now going to wholesale shoe establishments and trying to obtain their footwear at jobbers' figures. This, it is alleged has been caused by the fact that footgear has gone up so high in price, that many realize a much bigger saving can now be effected than formerly, when shoes sold around the popular retail price of $5.00. The Association will endeavor to check the practice of any jobbers selling to private parties.

IT IS PAIRS SOLD THAT COUNT

An old customer had been on the books of a shoe store for several years ceased to buy from the house. A letter was written in which the company explained that no goods had been sold for some time, asked the reason why, and offered to do its best to make anything right. Soon afterwards a reply was received in which the customer stated that a good friend, who had been connected with a men's store, had become a salesman for a large shoe house handling a full line of men's, women's, and children's footwear, and that the account was to favor the salesman. Later the salesman became manager of an exclusive men's store. When this occurred the company in question wrote to the old customer. Attention was called to the fact that the salesman was now with a specialty store and that he was no longer in a position to fill the wants of the family, and asked that the company be favored with a portion of the "family" shoe business at least.

This manner of securing business is perfectly fair competition. It is constructive work that every retail store should do to increase its sales. More and more retailers are realizing the great value of their mailing list, and of the necessity of keeping a record of every transaction as a means of holding their trade and increasing the number of sales as well as patrons.

High prices have caused some people to hold off buying new shoes. They have had their old shoes repaired at least once, and perhaps twice. Reference to a record at this time, on the eve of the opening of a new season that will show the kind and price of the shoes and the time of the last purchase by a customer, will suggest the desirability of a dealer sending to customers who have not purchased new shoes for some months, a personal letter acquainting them with the styles and price of shoes which have been stocked for their benefit.

Every effort should be made by dealers to keep up their ratio of sales in comparison with the records made in past seasons. To be gratified with a substantial increase in income resulting from sales is not enough. The increase in receipts will be found to come from the higher prices which have been paid for shoes, and not from an increase in the sales of pairs of shoes. It is the latter that every dealer should strive for. The sales of pairs of shoes must be kept up, or a business will go behind. Constant use of the mailing list and frequent letters to customers who have not continued their regular practice of buying at known periods of the year, will help to maintain the usual standard of sales.

JOY IS A BUSINESS ASSET

There is a Chinese proverb which should be memorized and taken to heart by every young man starting on a business career.

It is short and easily remembered. Here it is:—

A man without a smiling face must not open a shop.

Applied specifically to the business of shop-keeping, this little proverb may be applied with equal force to almost every vocation in which a man can engage.

The only vocation which at the moment occurs to me as furnishing an exception is the undertaking business.

And even an undertaker should not forever keep sunshine out of his face and heart, if he would maintain a high standard of efficiency.

For gloom, like all other depressing mental states, is a physical as well as a mental depressant.

It lowers the vitality, slows the circulation of the blood, weakens the digestive power, and consequently helps to unfit a man for the long hours of work essential to success in any calling.

On the other hand, the joy which is manifested by a smiling countenance, is a physical tonic of high order. This has been scientifically demonstrated again and again by various ingenious experiments.

In one particularly interesting set of experiments, a man was required to press a spring until fatigue paralyzed his finger. This was repeated at intervals in order to determine definitely the average number of pressures he could make at a single sitting.

Then he was required to press the spring while thinking of something extremely sad. At once his average pressure-power was noticeably lowered.

Whereas, when he allowed his mind to dwell on exceptionally pleasing thoughts, he was able to press the spring far oftener than when his mind was occupied with nothing in particular.

Other experiments have proved that joy stimulates all the bodily functions and stimulates especially the circulation of blood in the brain, with resultant improvement in the ability to think rapidly and clearly.

Accordingly joy must be regarded as a body builder and mind developer of the first order. If only for this reason the man about to engage in business should cultivate the habit of happiness.

THE BEST METHOD TO RETAIN YOUR SALESMEN

Let Each Employe have Regular Drawing Account, Based on Existing Conditions and Individual Ability—To This Add Regular Percentage on Total Sales, Payable Quarterly—The Commission Salesman is More Alert for he Shares in the Results

WHAT is the best method to retain the service of a good, efficient salesman, what will tend to satisfy him most—seductive promises of partnership, a regular increase in salary, a commission basis or a bonus at the end of the year?

This question has been discussed again and again by shoemen and the ordinary store help is as restless and uncertain as ever. Salesmen and salesladies flit from one town to another and from one establishment to another down the street.

The Simple Commission Plan

The house that permanently retains the members of its staff is the one which makes the most progress and the most money for the reason that the employees get to know the customers intimately, the policy of the store and the facilities of the stock. It seems to be the universal opinion of the most liberal-minded shoe merchants that a straight, hard and fast salary proposition is not the best means to induce a continuity of service but that a drawing account and commission on sales is the fairest and most reasonable basis. On this working arrangement the more goods that a clerk sells the more he makes for himself and the firm as well. Their welfare and prosperity is mutual. He has some incentive to enthusiasm and activity. Here are the views of a leading city retailer, as given in the "Boot and Shoe Recorder." His remarks and observations will no doubt be read with interest and appreciation as they hit the nail on the head.

The manner of compensation for employees has received considerable attention in recent years and will be given more thought as time goes along.

The amount of earnings that a shoe salesman receives should come to him in such a way that it will produce the maximum of satisfaction and contentment with the greatest producing results for the store that employs him.

The straight salary, so much per week, will put many men in the rut and the only thing that will get them out of it in many cases is a more scientific manner of compensation.

The salesmen should receive a drawing account each week or month, the amount should be governed by existing conditions and the ability of the employee.

A record of each salesman's sales and salaries paid will soon tell you what your selling force is costing you. If the percentage is too high, it must be reduced by increasing the sales per man. You may have too many in your sales department for the volume of trade that you have. This means you should reduce your selling force to the proper number and to further adjust the percentage that your salesmen are costing you.

Give them a certain percentage to work on, with the understanding that they will receive the difference at the end of each three months, between their drawing account and what the percentage shows they have earned for the period. For example, if you are paying a salesman a drawing account of $18.00 per week and during three months or twelve weeks he has drawn $216, his sales are, say $5,000 (on a commission basis) he has earned $300.

You owe him the difference, or $84.00. He has made $25 per week on the commission plan. This man knows and feels a deep interest in things, for the more he sells the more he makes. He is interested in his own pocketbook the same as you are, and why shouldn't he profit as he serves? He will under the commission plan. Why should he profit better than he serves, as he may under the straight salary plan, or on the other hand, he may not profit as well as he serves if he is a live wire.

The commission salesman is more interested in everything about the store for he shares in the results of the store. He will serve customers more satisfactorily for he is interested in selling them the best goods and have them come back to him the next time. He will invite his friends to come and buy his shoes—he will make new acquaintances. He will use his business cards to better advantage. He will serve more customers in a given time in a satisfactory manner than under the old straight salary plan.

If the salesman is at all interested in his own self he is going to develop a new interest in things that will increase sales, hold the trade, get new trade and give better satisfaction to the customers and prove a business building asset to the store.

Do not think that you can start this commission part in your store (as good as it is when worked right) and let it run itself and get the best results. You must have it fully and clearly understood by your men—show them where they can make more money for themselves—tell them how to increase their sales—get them enthused over the proposition—get their hearty co-operation.

Needs Thorough Explanation

You will not get your best results the first three months, but after some of the salesmen have started to draw some of the commission, they will all be hungry for more, and they will work for it. The second three months will increase and the third will be even better, for the men will quickly get out of the old rut.

After the commission plan is put into operation, post a bulletin each day or week and show how much each man has sold and their relative standing. This will produce good-natured rivalry to lead and keep up their interest. With this information they can figure how much they are making each day.

A recent despatch from Lynn, Mass., says: The Lynn Shoe Manufacturers' Association, whose members control thirty-five plants, announced that it had ceased to manufacture shoes because of present labor conditions. Between 11,000 and 14,000 employees are affected. A statement issued by the Association declared that the "manufacturers had found it impossible to accept contracts with a feeling of surety that the unions, under threats of strike, would not demand an increase in wages and other conditions detrimental to the trade."

A federal charter has been granted the Globe Shoe Co. with headquarters in Terrebonne, P.Q. The incorporators are J. B. Hurteau and A. Z. Poitras, late of the Star Shoe Co., Montreal. The capital stock is $100,000, and the firm are empowered to manufacture boots and shoes of every description. They will erect a new factory in Terrebonne, and expect to start operations in July, as announced in the last edition of the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL.

F. A. Theriault, shoe dealer, Montreal, has sold out to E. Sansregret.

W. A. Lane, leather merchant, of Montreal, spent a few days in Quebec last week, calling upon the trade.

E. L. Rising, of the firm of Waterbury & Rising, Limited, wholesale shoes, St. John, N.B., spent a few days in Montreal and Toronto, last week, calling upon a number of friends in the trade.

F. T. Fuller & Co., 36 South street, Boston, Mass., are advertising that they have found a use for grain buffings, or in other words the very thin hand shavings or buffings taken from army shoe leather which prevents this type of leather from cracking. They also consume large quantities of tannery trimmings, belt knife skivings, etc. They will be very pleased to hear from any concern having material of this sort, particularly the grain buffings.

The Thompson Shoe Co., of Montreal, are sending to their many customers an attractive folder illustrating their rubber soled, white poplin footwear for men and women. This line is called the "Leisure Line", and in addition to being an ideal sport shoe can be worn equally as well for regular street use. The models are very inviting and every detail of wear and tear has been carefully considered in the that when a woman who is particular in her shoe buying gets a pair of U. & D. Shoes she generally thereafter prefers that brand.

The craftsmen who make these shoes have constantly before them a fixed high standard of quality which they know must be maintained. Nothing short of this standard ever reaches our customers. You will like their uniform quality.

The reason why your customers will take unqualified satisfaction in U. & D. Shoes is the very reason you should at least try them.

Galt Shoe Manufacturing Company, Limited
Galt, Ontario

Gordon E. Wright, late of the Quebec Division, has been appointed manager of the Fort William, Ont., branch of the Canadian Consolidated Rubber Co., and has entered upon his new duties.

Nap. Tetrault, of the Tetrault Shoe Manufacturing Co., Montreal, is spending a couple of weeks at Atlantic City.

Canary kid is a popular leather being made up in a number of factories. It is placed on shoes retailing from $12 to $18 a pair but does not promise to be much of a seller except in high grade stores. Many of the new kid leathers are extremely elaborate in colors. Unusual shades are also being introduced in the cloth top boot.

Thomas Clerke, a former resident of St. John, N.B., died, recently, from pneumonia, in Lynn, Mass., where he had resided for some thirty years. In young manhood he was with David H. Hall, shoe manufacturer, and later was foreman with the Sussex Boot & Shoe Co., Sussex, N.B. He is survived by his wife, two children and three grandchildren.

E. E. Donovan, of E. T. Wright & Co., St. Thomas, Ont., was calling upon the trade in Toronto last week.

Pte. J. P. Mitcheson, 271 Wellesley avenue, Toronto, who has been in France, since December last, is reported both wounded and missing. He is twenty-four years of age, and prior to enlistment was engaged with the United Shoe Machinery Co., Toronto.

W. L. Francis, sales manager for Gale Bros., Limited, Quebec, spent a few days in Toronto, London and Hamilton recently with a fine range of samples.

Fortier & Co., shoe dealers, of Montreal, are retiring from business and will sell their entire stock.

The London Shoe Repair Co., of Toronto, Ont., have recently registered.

Richard Young Co., one of the oldest leather firms of New York City, writing the SHOE AND LEATHER JOURNAL, say: "We consider your Special Style Number a very creditable production; in fact, we are surprised that you are able to issue such a high-grade publication under existing circumstances. We wish you continued success."

J. M. S. Carroll, salesmanager, Canadian Consolidated Rubber Co., Limited, Montreal, spent a few days recently in Toronto and Kitchener.

W. Pollock, son of the secretary-treasurer of the Yale Shoe Store, Limited, Winnipeg, was killed in action on April 17th, in France.

Murray Smith, twirler for the Transconas, the 1916 baseball champion, has taken a position as assistant accountant with the Kilgour-Rimer Co., Winnipeg.

Thomas Kelly, who has for some years been associated with Walter Powell, shoe retailer, has been appointed manager, and has supervision of both the Powell store in West Toronto and the Yonge street establishment at the corner of Shuter street.

E. E. Code, manager of the Ottawa branch of the Kaufman Rubber Co., spent a few days in Kitchener last week on business.

P. Pocock, of London, who is a bright young man, has gone to Winnipeg, where he has taken a position with the Winnipeg Shoe Co., in which he has charge of misses' and children's department.

A cream suede bal, with grey inset eyelet stays and collar, and covered Louis heel, is being shown in some of the Winnipeg stores, and retails at $18.00 a pair.

Extensive improvements are being made to the department store of J. F. Cairns, Limited, Saskatoon. The shoe department, which is on the main floor, has been largely extended and now occupies practically the whole space formerly taken up by the grocery branch, which has been moved to the basement. This will give the footwear section much needed accommodation. Several important changes have been made to the staff. W. F. Moser has been made superintendent or service manager and W. Purvis has been promoted to the position of merchandising manager. Both these gentlemen have been with the Cairns establishment for several years and have been successful heads of their departments.

M. J. Sheehy, who for the past three years has been superintendent of the Perth Shoe Company, Perth, Ont., has been appointed superintendent of the John Ritchie Co.'s factory, Quebec, and will enter upon his new duties in the near future. Mr. Sheehy is one of the most expert, conscientious and faithful shoemakers to be found anywhere, and, previous to going to Perth, had an extended and successful experience in various factories in the United States. The Perth Shoe Co., while regretting the loss of his services, wish him every prosperity and increasing usefulness in his larger sphere of operation in Quebec.

The Brands That Make Quick Sales and Good Profits

The HEALTH FEATURES alone of the DOCTORS AND PROFESSORS BRAND of shoes make them [decidedly easy sellers, and when the prevailing styles are incorporated with these features the selling possibilities are still further increased.

In addition to this, for years these shoes have proven their wearing-worth by giving unbounded satisfaction to those who have bought them, and these are some of the reasons for their great popularity.

Ask your jobber for them, specifying the names.
