WEST AUSTRALIAN INFANTRY

es of West Australia consist of artillery and infantry, all volunteers under the Volunteer Regulations Act of 1883 infantry wear the Imperial uniform, and are admirable representatives of the youngest of the Australian Colonies

SOUTH AUSTRALIAN LANCERS

SOUTH AUSTRALIAN MOUNTED RIFLES

The South Australian Cavalry in the pageant do not wear the characteristic colonial slouch hat. Their headgear is a brown spiked helmet, with a red puggaree surmounted by the Star and Crown. Their uniform is brown, with bandoliers and boots of brown leather—serviceable, smart, and a good fighting colour

THE VICTORIA MOUNTED RIFLES

From the colony of Victoria come three officers and forty-eight non-commissioned officers and men of the Victoria Mounted Rifles. They wear a khaki-coloured uniform with maroon facings and slouch hats with a twisted puggaree

THE NEW SOUTH WALES LANCERS

No Colonial corps is better known in England than the New South Wales Regiment of Lancer Volunteers. A detachment of the regiment was in England in 1893 for the opening of the Imperial Institute. Their accoutrements are the same as those of the Lancer regiments of the British Army, but the broad-brimmed hat turned up at the side takes the place of the characteristic Lancer headdress. They wear khaki-coloured tunics and Bedford cord breeches. Four officers and twenty non-commissioned officers and men have come to England for the Commemoration. They are under the command of Captain Vernon

NEW SOUTH WALES MOUNTED RIFLES

ter commands the detachment of the New South Wales Mounted Rifles, represented by six other n-commissioned officers and men. They wear the slouch hat with feathers and the bandolier

QUEENSLAND MOUNTED RIFLES

These troops form part of the Queensland Mounted Infantry. They wear buff-coloured tunics with scarlet facings, Bedford cor breeches, brown leather boots, bandoliers and belts, and a slouch hat with turned-up brim
