SS-TOTENKOPF-WACHSTURBANNE

The decree of the 28th February 1933 for the protection of people and state (Verordnung des Reichspräsidenten zum Schutze von Volk und Staat, vom 28.2.1933, RgB1.15.83), which followed the Reichstag fire, gave the police the right to place potential enemies of the state (who had been legally sentenced to prison by a court of law, or who having served a legal sentence were ordered to be further detained by the SD or Gestapo) in protective custody (Schutzhaft) for up to three months.<sup>1</sup> As a direct result of this decree so many so-called opponents of the regime were arrested that conventional prison accommodation was not available, and make-shift detention centres had to be set up. In April 1935 it was estimated that 25,000 people were being held in protective custody in Prussia alone.<sup>2</sup>

Heinrich Himmler, as acting Police President of Munich, set up in March 1923 the first independent SS-run concentration camp, on the site of a former gunpowder factory on the outskirts of Munich at Dachau.<sup>3</sup> In the summer of 1934 most of the unofficial camps were closed, and as a direct result of the Roehm-Putsch the remaining SA camps were removed from the jurisdiction of the civil authorities, and taken over by the SS.

The first full-time SS concentration camp unit was recruited from members of the General SS, to guard the new camp at Dachau. At first this unit was under the overall command of SS District South, who made it a depository for its unwanted personnel.<sup>4</sup> In June 1935, SS-Oberführer Theodor Eicke was made commander of Dachau.<sup>5</sup> In a letter which he wrote to Himmler on the 10th August 1936, he described the conditions that prevailed at Dachau on his arrival.<sup>6</sup>

"There were times when no tunics, shoes or even socks were available. The men carried on their duties wearing their own things without complaining. We were generally regarded as a necessary evil which merely cost money ; insignificant guards behind barbed wire. At times

SS-Brigadeführer Theodor Eicke, commander and inspector of SS Death's Head Units and Concentration Camps, 15th September 1936. (Bozich Collection.)

I was forced literally to beg the treasuries for the meagre wages of my officers and men. As an Oberführer in Dachau I myself received a monthly salary of RM. 230 . . . At the beginning there were no cartridges or rifles, let alone machine guns. Of the entire staff only three men could handle a machine gun. My men were billeted in draughty factories. Everywhere there was poverty and misery. At that time these guards were under the command of the SS District South which left the worries and anxieties to me but, unasked, sent me people of whom for some reason or other it wanted to be rid in Munich; in consequence they contaminated my men and their spirit. I encountered disloyalty, graft and corruption. For these reasons I was forced to dismiss about sixty men in four weeks. No progress could be made because the unit was under the command and influence of the District South and was used as a depository for so-called Versorgungsanwärter (ex-soldiers entitled to ex-servicemen's welfare benefits). When I found it impossible to continue like this the Reichsführer-SS granted my request and placed the small guard unit under my exclusive command. From then on there was uninterrupted progress. I went to work alert and happy, training men to become N.C.O's and, N.C.O's to become officers. Mutual self-sacrifice, deprivations and hearty comradeship created in a few weeks an example of manhood which in turn exhibited an excellent "esprit de corps". We did not become paranoid, because we all had nothing. Behind the barbed-wire we quietly did our duty and eliminated without concern anybody in our ranks who showed the smallest sign of disloyalty. So we formed and trained the guard unit in the quietness of the concentration camp. Their ideals were loyalty bravery and obedience."

Having improved the morale and discipline of his men, Eicke formulated service regulations for both guards and inmates, which remained virtually unchanged until the end of the war. In 1934 Eicke was made Inspector of Concentration Camps and SS Guard Units (Inspekteur der Konzentrationslager und SS-Wachverbände)*, with the rank of SS-Gruppenführer.<sup>7</sup>

* By 1938/9 his official title had become " Führer der SS-TV u. KL."

PREFACE

The Death's Head Formations (SS-Totenkopfverbände, or SS-TV) were responsible from 1933 until 1939 with the guarding of concentration camps. The original regiments became highly disciplined, and in addition to guard duties undertook serious military training. They were consequently able to participate in the annexation of Austria and the Sudetenland and the invasion of Czechoslovakia alongside the SS-Verfügungstruppe (the subject of Volume 3 in the present series). It was normal practice in all matters concerning dress and equipment to refer to the SS-VT and the SS-TV, as apart from insignia the uniform and equipment were identical; and, to all intents and purposes, from 1937 the SS-TV was considered to be part of the armed SS establishment.

In 1939 the original regiments formed the nucleus of the SS Death's Head Division (SS-Totenkopf-Division), and had nothing more to do with the guarding of concentration camps, evolving instead into one of the premier armoured formations of the Waffen-SS. Their former task was undertaken by specially formed SS Guard Battalions (SS-Totenkopf-Wachsturmbanne) under the jurisdiction of the concentration camp commandant.

Research into the concentration camps and the Security Police is not only morally more exacting for any thoughtful student, but practically more difficult than parallel research into the other armed branches. Whereas former members of the Waffen-SS are willing to come forward with memoirs and personal photographs, surviving members of the Death's Head and Security Police branches, still risking possible prosecution and imprisonment, lay very low.

I would like to thank Hugh Page Taylor, Philip Buss BA(Hons.), F. Ollenschläger, Col. C. M. Dodkins CBE, DSO(Retd.), Stanley Bozich, David Lee Delich, Jost W. Schneider, and the staff of the Wiener Library, London, for their invaluable assistance.

Note on sources

Frequent references are made in this work to documents which were collected and used as evidence in the Nuremberg trials and other postwar judicial proceedings. Those used in this work bear the prefix NO for Nazi Organisation, NOKW for Nazi Oberkommando der Wehrmacht, and USSR for a document submitted by the Soviet authorities. Each prefix is followed by the document's number. The Records of the Reichsführer-SS and Chief of the German Police are available from the National Archives in Washington, DC, and are referred to by the series prefix RFSS/T-175 followed by the roll and frame number. Unless otherwise stated all photographs and actual items used to illustrate this publication are from the author's collection.

Author's note to second edition

There has been surprisingly little published research into the SS-Totenkopfverbände since this volume first appeared in 1971. There have been a number of histories of the SS-Totenkopf-Division published in Germany, which commence with the formation of the division and carefully avoid any mention of its nursery years in the 'quietness of the concentration camp'. As it happens, the transition from concentration camp guards to élite fighting men of the Waffen-SS is of sufficient interest to warrant a detailed study of its own.

I was unaware of the part played by the police in the setting up of the concentration camps—particularly that of the Bavarian Political Police in Dachau. The executive power of the police was later represented by the physical presence in the concentration camp of an official of the Reichssicherheitshauptamt, known as the Vernehmungsführer.

In the plates of insignia (Nos. 5–8) none of the cyphers worn at one time or another by all four Totenkopf regiments were illustrated. The regiments 'Oberbayern', 'Brandenburg', and 'Thüringen' wore the Gothic letters 'O', 'B' and 'T' respectively on their shoulder straps. With the formation of 'Ostmark' a new emblem was created for 'Oberbayern' while 'Ostmark' inherited the 'O', but in a smaller version (see p. 39). Further points of detail on various insignia are discussed in the Errata and Addenda (see p. 52).

In March 1935 there were the following guard units (Wachverbände) in existence:

Unit:	Camp:
SS-Wachtruppe Oberbayern	Dachau
SS-Wachtruppe Ostfriesland	Esterwegen
SS-Wachtruppe Elbe	Lichtenburg
SS-Wachtruppe Sachsen	Sachsenburg
SS-Wachtruppe Brandenburg	Oranienburg und Columbia-Haus
SS-Wachtruppe Hansa	Hamburg-Fuhlsbüttel

On the 1st April 1936 the scattered company-sized guard units were removed from the control of the General SS, and re-organised into five battalions each of which was assigned to a particular camp:<sup>8</sup>

SS-Wachsturmbann V Brandenburg	Oranienburg u. Columbia-Haus

On the 29th March 1936 the above units with a total strength of 3,500 men were collectively renamed the SS-Totenkopfverbände.<sup>9</sup> In April 1936 both the SS-Verfügungstruppe and SS-Totenkopfverbände were classified as "organisations in the service of the state", and placed on the police budget of the Ministry of the Interior.<sup>10</sup>

Service in the SS-TV did not count as fulfilment of the military service obligations until the Spring of 1939, and boys with the age of sixteen and above were accepted as volunteers for 4 or 12, and officers 25 years. During their service in the SS-TV volunteers had to complete their military service in either the armed forces or SS-VT. Eicke preferred his men to do their service in the army, navy or air force, as he was afraid that if they were to serve in the SS-VT, they might not want to return to the onerous task of guarding concentration camps.<sup>11</sup> On completion of their service in the armed forces TV personnel were reminded by Eicke that "we belong neither to the army nor the police nor the SS-Verfügungstruppe; our cohesion is based upon comradeship inherent in our National Socialist ideology."<sup>12</sup>

From the 1st July 1937 the five battalions were re-organised into three regiments (Standarten), with a total strength of 4,449 persons.<sup>13</sup>

On the 1st April 1938 the SS-Totenkopfverbände were organised as follows:<sup>16</sup> each regiment was to have in addition:

1 Kraftfahrstaffel	1 Motor Transport Echelon
1 Nachrichtenzug	1 Signals platoon
2 Ergänzungseinheiten	2 Supplementary units

On the 17th August, Hitler ordered that in the event of war the four regiments should be used to strengthen the police within the framework of the armed forces, and that the task of guarding camps should be taken over by older members of the General SS, aged 45 and over, who were to be called up in the Autumn for military training with the SS-TV. At the same time 10,000 younger officers and men of the General SS were to be called up as police reinforcements (Polizeiverstärkung) for the death's head regiments themselves.<sup>17</sup>

From October 1939 to February 1940 Dachau was cleared of inmates and used by Eicke for the formation of the SS Death's Head Division (SS-Totenkopf-Division), from the first four regiments and some of the police reinforcements. From the 1st November 1939, Eicke ceased to be

** These supplementary units were established both in the army and SS when Germany reintroduced conscription, for the short-term training of those who had missed full-time national service, and were known as the "White year groups" (Weisse Jahrgänge). Most regular units had sub-units for this purpose, which disappeared on mobilisation, as both the cadres and those they had been training were swallowed up in the new wave of divisions.

Inspector of Concentration Camps, and on the 14th was appointed commander of the Death's Head Division, and as such had nothing more to do with the guarding of concentration camps. On the 16th February 1943, he was killed in Russia.

From October 1939 the death's head establishment was divided into two distinct groups. The first consisting of the four original regiments were to have nothing more (as units) to do with guarding of concentration camps. They and the police reinforcements were formed into the Death's Head Division, and 13 other Death's Head Infantry and 2 cavalry units which were used at the beginning of the war as police troops. The second group consisting of the middle-aged General SS reservists took over the duties of the concentration camp guards, and were formed into SS Death's Head Guard Battalions (SS-Totenkopf-Wachsturmbanne). These guards lived in barracks outside the main camp compound, and the camp commandant conveyed his requirements for guards to man the watchtowers and outside working parties, via his adjutant, to the duty officer of the guard battalion (Führer von Dienst, whose office was outside the camp in the barracks). The duty officer and the guard battalion were not considered as part of the camp staff until 1939, when the newly formed guard battalions became part of the camp establishment under the jurisdiction of the camp commandant. Not all SS personnel were allowed inside the camp perimeter. At Mauthausen, for example, the size of the guard varied from month to month, but of the average strength of 1,200 SS and Home Guard (Volkssturm) guards, only 50 SS men were allowed inside the camp itself.<sup>18</sup>

On the 22nd April 1941 an Operational Main Office (SS-Führungshauptamt) directive listed the units and offices which were to be considered part of the Waffen-SS. This list included the Inspectorate of Concentration camps and the death's head guard formations, whose personnel were now members of the Waffen-SS, with the same uniforms, and the same pay-books (Soldbücher).<sup>19</sup> The significance of this directive was missed at the time, and the Waffen-SS was always to regret that it had not resisted the lumping together of its fighting formations with the concentration camp guards.

In the Summer of 1941 the concentration camp guard establishment was as follows;<sup>20</sup>

KL mit SS-Totenkopfsturmabteilung	7 Kp.* Sachsenhausen
"	4 Kp. Dachau
"	3 Kp. Buchenwald/Weimar
"	3 Kp. Mauthausen
"	4 Kp. Gusen
"	3 Kp. Flossenbürg/Bayr, Ost.
"	Neuengamme
Frauen-Kl.	Ravensbrück

Up to the outbreak of the war the primary purpose of the concentration camp had been to isolate the 'enemies of the state' from the German people, but with the outbreak of war exploitation of camp labour became of paramount importance. The growth of the camp population was relatively slow until 1941/2, when the camps were filled to bursting point with vast numbers of prisoners collected in the newly occupied eastern territories. This expansion, and the ever increasing demand for labour was too much for the Operational Main Office, under which the camps had been subordinated since August 1940, and in March 1942, the Inspectorate of Concentration Camps (The inspectorate of Guard units had been disbanded in August 1940) was transferred to the SS Economic and Administrative Main Office (SS-Wirtschafts-Verwaltungshauptamt—WVHA) under SS-Obergruppenführer Oswald Pohl as Group (Amtsgruppe) D, under SS-Brigadeführer Richard Glücks.<sup>21</sup>

A Death's Head battalion, 1935 (?). (Heinrich Hoffmann.)

The wartime guard units were organised in battalions and companies which bore the name of the camp, e.g. 6./SS-Sturmabteilung KL. Auschwitz, was in fact the 6th company of the SS Battalion Concentration camp Auschwitz. The number of the guards depended on the size of the camp, and number of inmates, but was often remarkably small, although many of the larger camps were situated alongside SS camps or barracks, and in the case of a serious insurrection the camp commandant could call on military units in the vicinity for assistance.

In 1943/4 the SS-Totenkopfsturmbann Hamburg-Neuengamme consisted of four companies of 60 men armed with 98 K carbines. Of the 240 men, 70 were German nationals (Reichsdeutsche), 74 Rumanians, many of whom had been wounded at Stalingrad, 25 Slovaks, most of German origin, and 60 Russians, none of whom, with the exception of their N.C.O.s, could speak German.<sup>23</sup> At the same camp air force personnel had been taken into the SS in the summer of 1944, issued with SS uniforms and pay-books, and used to reinforce the existing guards.<sup>24</sup> In Sachsenhausen in April 1945 there were approximately 3,000 SS personnel, all of whom wore SS uniform.<sup>25</sup> Ravensbrück had 90 men on the camp staff and 250 guards in November 1942, and by April 1945 the number of guards had risen to 550 men.<sup>26</sup> When Rudolf Hoess assumed command of Auschwitz in May 1940, he had a staff of 15, and a guard platoon of 50 SS men, which rose to 3,500 men by the time he relinquished his command in December 1943.<sup>22</sup>

The original wartime guards were continuously changed, as the younger age groups were posted to field units, and replaced by even older soldiers, sailors, airmen, and especially racial Germans who were either unfit or unreliable for frontline service. These decrepit and incompetent guards were reinforced, from time to time, by members of the SA, Prison Service, and even 1st World War veterans from the Kyffhäuserbund.<sup>28</sup>

On the 5th April 1944 the WVHA listed 20 official concentration camps and an additional 165 subsidiary labour camps,<sup>29</sup> and in August 1944 reported that these camps held 524,286 inmates.<sup>30</sup>

* On the 28th May 1941 Himmler authorised IdS & BdS to form Arbeitserziehungslager at the expense of the Reich. These detention camps were to be staffed by Gestapo officials and employees and guarded by hired personnel, often by auxiliaries such as Estonian, and Lithuanian police.

** This camp was previously known as Ettersberg.

*** This camp also included Auschwitz II (Birkenau), and Auschwitz III (Monowitz).

SS-Obergruppenführer Oswald Pohl, chief of the WVHA, September 1942. He wears a "Litewka", a style of tunic which became popular with senior functionaries. (Dodkins Collection.)

In May 1944 Himmler ordered the transfer of 10,000 reservists over the age of forty from the replacement army to the Waffen-SS as camp guards. The same order suggested that these reservists, and all concentration camp guards who did not meet SS membership requirements might wear a machine embroidered W on the right collar patch. It is not known if this order was in fact implemented.<sup>32</sup>

As the Allied armies overran German occupied Europe, and then Germany herself, camp after camp was liberated. In some the SS guards stayed to surrender, while in others they fled. In all the camps the most appalling conditions were found, due, in the great part, to the complete breakdown of the system, which resulted in Germany's collapse.

SS-AUFSEHERINNEN SS Women Supervisors

The first women's concentration camp was set up at Lichtenburg in August 1937, and it is thought that the recruitment and training of selected women as supervisors began at the same time.

In order to attract recruits during the war, women were offered the best accommodation and higher salaries than they could earn elsewhere. Once they had joined, new recruits were clothed and trained at Ravensbrück, where they remained, or were posted to other women's camps such as Auschwitz-Birkenau. According to the commandant of Ravensbrück, Fritz Sühren, 150 women were employed in the camp itself, while approximately 300 guarded outside working parties (Aussenkommandos). Sühren estimated that during his term of service from November 1942 to May 1945, 3,500 women had served at one time or another in Ravensbrück or its outside working parties.<sup>1</sup>

Potential supervisors were recruited by various National Socialist women's organisations, but few women were prepared to volunteer for the concentration camp service, so compulsion had to be used to obtain the ever increasing numbers that were required. Each armaments firm to which female prisoners had been allotted for work, had in exchange, to surrender a certain percentage of their other female employees to act as supervisors. These supervisors were then given a few weeks' 'training' in Ravensbrück and then let loose on the prisoners.<sup>2</sup>

As a general rule women recruited during the war came under the category of War Auxiliaries (SS-Kriegshelferinnen), and were not incorporated into the Corps of SS Helpers (SS-Helferinnenkorps), members of which had to fulfill all SS recruiting standards.<sup>3</sup>

Women were also employed as supervisors in the Police Prison Supervisory Service (Polizeigefängnisaufsichtsdienst), and as governesses in camps for juvenile offenders (Jugendschutzlager), which came under the jurisdiction of the Chief of the Security Police and SD.<sup>4</sup>

SS-BAUBRIGADEN UND SS-EISENBAHNBAUBRIGADEN

SS Construction and Railway Construction Brigades

From 1942 onwards the principal concentration camps organised mobile brigades of inmates, whose principal tasks until the end of the war, were the clearing of bomb debris, bomb disposal, and the repairing of railway lines.

The overall commander of these units, which were numbered consecutively, was the Leader of SS Construction Brigades (Führer der Baubrigaden) in office group C (Amtsgruppe C, Bauwesen) of the WVHA. The actual work was supervised by a works manager (Bauleiter), and the guards were provided by the concentration camp responsible for the brigade.

The 1st SS Construction Brigade (for abroad) (I. SS-Baubrigade für das Ausland) was formed in September/October 1942 as an outside working party from inmates of Sachsenhausen Concentration Camp. From October 1942 to March 1943, the brigade was employed in and around Düsseldorf and Duisburg, and on the 22nd December 1943 was transferred to Alderney in the Channel Islands under the command of Neuengamme Concentration Camp, where it constructed gun emplacements and strong points. In July 1944 it was sent back to the Continent where it was employed in Tours, Kortemark, Sollstedt and Hohlstedt.

The brigade had a strength of some 1,000 inmates consisting of the following:

- 500 Russian prisoners-of-war and partisans.
- 180 German work-dodgers, habitual criminals, political prisoners, especially ex-members of the International Brigades in Spain.
- 130 Polish political prisoners.
- 60 Dutchmen.
- 25 Czechs, political prisoners and those caught attempting to join the allies.
- 20 Frenchmen and other nationalities.

The following brigades are known to have existed:<sup>1</sup>

UNIFORM

Members of SS Construction and Railway Construction Brigades wore concentration camp, or old surplus German military clothing, with their nationality or offence badge and their number. Members of the detachments assigned by the camp to guard the prisoners wore their normal uniform, with no distinctive insignia.

On July 4th 1934 SS-Oberführer Theodor Eicke was appointed Inspector of Concentration Camps and Guard Formations, and in 1935 an inspectorate was established with its headquarters at Block F., Friedrichstrasse 129, Berlin NW 7.

On the 2nd August 1936 the inspectorate was moved to Oranienburg, on the outskirts of Berlin, near the new concentration camp of Sachsenhausen, where it remained until the end of the war.

In August 1937 the staff of the inspectorate consisted of 43 persons.

In 1939 the Inspectorate of Death's Head Units and Concentration camps, was reorganised as the General Inspectorate of Reinforced Death's Head Regiments.

In November 1939 Eicke left the inspectorate to take command of the Death's Head Division.

Until SS-Brigadeführer Richard Glücks took over as Inspector Concentration Camps (Reichsführer-SS-Inspekteur der Konzentrationslager), Hauptamtschef August Heissmeyer was in temporary charge. From August 1940 until March 1942 the Inspectorate came under the SS-Führungshauptamt under SS-Obergruppenführer Jüttner.

On the 16th March 1942 the concentration camps were subordinated to SS Economic and Administrative Main Office (SS-Wirtschaftsverwaltungshauptamt-WVHA) as Office Group D (Amtsgruppe D). This office had taken increasing interest in concentration camps as a source of labour for its numerous economic enterprises. The chief of the WVHA until the end was SS-Obergruppenführer Oswald Pohl.

In June 1935, SS-Oberführer Theodor Eicke took over command of Dachau concentration camp, and with it a thoroughly corrupt and demoralised guard detachment of barely 120 men. Eicke immediately dismissed 60 men and set about improving the discipline and morale of the remainder, at the same time recruiting carefully-chosen personnel. In 1934/5 this unit was enlarged and renamed SS-Wachsturmbann I "Oberbayern".

In 1937 it was again enlarged*, and renamed SS-Totenkopfstandarte 1 "Oberbayern", and organised as follows:

Stab	H.Q.
I Stuba. ( 1.— 4. Hdschft.)	1st Bn. (1st-4th Coys.)
II Stuba. ( 5.— 8. Hdschft.)	2nd Bn. (5th-8th Coys.)

In September 1938 the 1st and 2nd battalions took part in the Sudeten operation at Asch.

In November 1939 the unit was renamed the SS Death's Head Recruiting Regiment, and in the winter of 1940/1 was disbanded.

Commanders: SS-Oberf. Theodor Eicke., SS-Staf. Otto Augustini.,
 SS-Ostufaf. Max Simon.

SS-WACHSTURMBANN V "BRANDENBURG"

SS-TOTENKOPFSTANDARTE 2 "BRANDENBURG"

On the 28th April 1935 SS-Wachtruppe "Brandenburg" was formed as a guard unit for Sachsenhausen Concentration Camp,<sup>1</sup> and was organised as follows:

- |                  |                     |
|------------------|---------------------|
| 1. Hundertschaft | Oranienburg-Schloss |
| 2. Hundertschaft | Oranienburg-Schloss |
| 3. Hundertschaft | Columbia-Haus       |

In 1935 the unit was re-organised and renamed SS-Totenkopfsturmbann V "Brandenburg".

On the 1st July 1937 it was enlarged and formed into a regiment: SS-Totenkopfstandarte 2 "Brandenburg". By December 1937 the regiment had six battalions,<sup>2</sup> but by the spring of 1939 it was again down to four.<sup>3</sup>

In the spring of 1933, SS District Centre formed a special commando from General SS volunteers in Dresden. On the 1st May 1934 a second company was formed, and in the autumn a third was formed from cadres drawn from the first two companies. In the summer of 1935 Political Readiness Squads (Politische Bereitschaften) were disbanded, and most of the personnel provided the nucleus of the SS-Verfügungstruppe. The 1st and 3rd companies of Special Commando 3 went to form Wachtruppe "Sachsen", and the 2nd and 4th, Wachtruppe "Elbe". Wachtruppe "Sachsen" was brought to Chemnitz and then transferred to Weimar-Buchenwald. "Elbe" was transferred from Bad Sulza to Weimar-Buchenwald, where both came together to form a cadre for the 3rd SS Death's Head Regiment "Thüringen", which by December 1937 had grown to seven battalions.<sup>3</sup>

In September 1938 the 1st and 2nd battalions took part in the Sudeten operation at Radebeul and Kötzschenbroda.

In November 1939, just prior to the formation of the SS Death's Head Division the regiment was organised as follows:

Stab	H.Q.
I Stuba. ( 1.— 4. Hdschft.)	1st Bn. (1st-4th Coys.)

In October 1938 a third battalion was formed in Berlin-Adlershof. At first it was known as SS Death's Head Battalion Götze, after its commander SS-Ostufaf. Götze. In July 1939 it was renamed the SS Danzig Home Defence (SS-Heimwehr Danzig).

As the original third battalion had become an independent unit, a new third battalion staff was formed in the summer of 1940. In May 1940 the reinforced 4th SS Death's Head Regiment was stationed in Prague, and in 1941 became part of the 2nd SS Infantry Brigade.

SS-STURMBANN GÖTZE SS-HEIMWEHR DANZIG

Beginning in October 1938, the third battalion of the 4th SS Death's Head Regiment was formed in Berlin-Adlershof under SS-Ostufaf. Götze. In the summer of 1939 the Danzig Senate had decided to form a Home Defence, and the responsibility for this was taken over by the Reichsführer-SS.

In June 1939 the battalion was transported to Danzig where it was joined by the Anti Tank Demonstration Company of the Death's Head Regiments (Panzerabwehr-Lehrsturm der SS-Totenkopfstandarten), which as part of the Home Defence, became known as Leiner Company (Companie "Leiner"). In July 1939 the formation of the unit was completed and its full complement consisted of 42 officers and approximately 1,500 men, two-thirds of whom were German nationals while the rest came from Danzig.

The unit was organised as follows:<sup>1</sup>

Stab	H.Q.
1. Schützen-Sturm	1st Rifle coy.
2. Schützen-Sturm	2nd Rifle coy.
3. Schützen-Sturm	3rd Rifle coy.
4. Schützen-Sturm	4th Rifle coy.

1. Panzerabwehr-Sturm	1st Anti-tank coy.
2. Panzerabwehr-Sturm	2nd Anti-tank coy.
Nachrichten-Zug	Signals platoon
Pionier-Zug	Engineer platoon

Throughout November 1939 the unit saw action in and around Danzig, Gdingen and Westerplatte. Shortly after the unit was disbanded and its personnel distributed as cadres for the new Death's Head units.<sup>2</sup>

SS-WACHSTURMBANN EIMANN

This unit was formed on the 3rd July 1939, following the closure of the Danzig Senate, as a Police Reinforcement Battalion (Polizeiverstärkungsturmbann) on the orders of SS-Brigaf. Schäfer and with the assistance of SS District North East.

The battalion consisted of 4 companies (Hundertschaften) and a motor transport Echelon (Krafftfahrstaffel).

From July until September 1939 the battalion saw action in and around Danzig. During Hitler's visit the battalion carried out security duties in Oliva and Danzig, while two companies guarded Hitler's H.Q. in Zoppot.

Following the fighting in Danzig large numbers of civilians were taken prisoner and put in camps at Neufahrwasser, Stutthof and Grenzdorf, where two companies of the battalion acted as guards.

At the beginning of 1940 Himmler ordered the battalion to be disbanded, and its personnel were transferred to Death's Head units.<sup>1</sup>

UNIFORM

Members of the battalion wore either black SS, or grey-green Danzig police uniforms, although during his post-war interrogation Eimann could not remember if the battalion had in fact been issued with police uniforms.<sup>2</sup>

SS-TOTENKOPFSTANDARTE 5 "DIETRICH ECKHARDT"

The last peacetime Death's Head Regiment, was formed in the spring of 1939, and was organised as follows:

Stab	H.Q.
I Stuba. (1.— 4. Schützen-Sturm)	1st Bn. (1st-4th Rifle coys.)
II Stuba. (5.— 8. Schützen-Sturm)	2nd Bn. (5th-8th Rifle coys.)
III Stuba. (9.—12. Schützen-Sturm)	3rd Bn. (9th-12th Rifle coys.)

Shortly after the formation of the Death's Head Division the regiment was renumbered the 13th.

WILDDIEB-KOMMANDO ORANIENBURG SS-SONDERKOMMANDO DIRLEWANGER

Formed on the 15th June 1940, on SS-Ogruf. Gottlob Berger's suggestion, from convicted poachers serving in concentration camps, and known as Poacher Commando Oranienburg. Its commander, Oskar Dirlewanger, was a recently released concentration camp inmate, newly commissioned in the SS with the rank of SS-Ostuf. Training was carried out by the 5th SS Death's Head Regiment, and in September 1940 three hundred men were transported to the General Government, where they were employed both fighting partisans and guarding labourers.

On the 29th January 1942 Himmler issued a directive which established the status of the SS Special Commando Dirlewanger, as that of a volunteer formation of the Waffen-SS.

Commander: SS-Ostuf. (later SS-Oberf.) Oskar Dirlewanger

SS-TOTENKOPF-ERGÄNZUNGS-STURMBANN III* SS-PIONIEREIHEIT z.b.V. (t-mot.)

Thought to have been formed in Breslau in 1938, and disbanded after service in the Polish campaign, as a semi-motorised engineer unit under army command. Its personnel were distributed to the Waffen-SS or Death's Head Guard Formations.<sup>1</sup>

UNTERFÜHRERSCHULE

With the re-organisation in April 1936 of the SS Death's Head units, an N.C.O.'s school was formed. Its permanent staff in May 1937 was 79 persons.<sup>2</sup> It is thought that the school was disbanded in July 1937.

SS-AUSBILDUNGLAGER TRAWNIKI

In 1943 SSPF Lublin SS-Gruf. Odilo Globocnik obtained Himmler's consent to form a Russian* concentration camp guard unit, and established a training camp which was attached to the Forced Labour Camp at Trawniki** near Lublin in the General Government.

Hoess in his memoirs recalls that "As might have been expected, these guards, who were called police were unreliable. A company of them was given to me to Auschwitz. After a short time 15 fled, taking with them all the weapons and ammunition they could lay their hands on, and during the chase that followed they engaged their pursuers with fire, which resulted in the deaths of three junior officers. All of them were recaptured, except three who managed to make their escape. The company was immediately disbanded and distributed among all the concentration camps."<sup>3</sup>

During the destruction of the Warsaw Ghetto between April and May 1943 a battalion of "Trawniki Männer" consisting of 2 officers and 335 men provided a cordon around part of the Ghetto.<sup>4</sup>

With effect from the 13th August 1943 the training camp and the Forced Labour Camp were taken over by the WVHA, while the training camp came under the official supervision of the commander of Lublin Concentration Camp.<sup>5</sup>

* It appears that most of the personnel were Ukrainian.

** This came under the category of a Forced Labour Camp (Zwangarbeitslager—ZAL), and was known as SS-Arbeitslager Trawniki. Its main industry was the preparation of furs for SS winter clothing.

SERVICE DRESS 1933-1940

Members of the SS-Totenkopfverbände wore the same black service uniform as both the Allgemeine-SS and SS-Verfügungstruppe (see Volume 1, pages 8-16, and Volume 3, pages 28-32). As in the SS-VT, drill uniforms were used extensively to protect the black service uniform. In March 1936, it was ordered that an earth-brown (erdbraun) duty uniform should be worn inside the concentration camp. It was not to be worn by sentries at the main gate, who were on view to the public, or as a walking-out dress. The earth-brown uniform consisted of field cap, tunic and breeches, which were identical in cut to their black counterparts. The tunic was worn with collar patches shoulder cords and the NSDAP brassard, which could be removed in the field. The national emblem, and armband were not to be worn on the brown tunic.<sup>1</sup> This uniform was still being worn at the beginning of the war.

In 1937 the SS-TV began to be issued with the field-grey field service uniform, which was already in use in the SS-VT (see Volume 3 page 35).

SERVICE DRESS 1940-1945

By 1940 all concentration camp guards had been equipped with at least one field-grey uniform, which was identical in all respects to that of the Waffen-SS (which will be described in Volume 6). Staff or guard personnel being transferred either to or from Waffen-SS replacement units, were to be equipped with the following basic items of clothing suitable for field-service use:<sup>2</sup>

- 1 Cloth blouse, field-grey with insignia.
- 1 Cloth trousers, long, field-grey.
- 1 Cloth greatcoat, field-grey.
- 1 Field cap, field-grey.
- 1 Pr. lace-up ankle boots.
- 1 Brown shirt or undervest, white.
- 1 Pr. underpants.
- 1 Pr. socks.

- 1 Collar liner (Kragenbinde).
- 1 Undervest.
- 1 Balaclava helmet (Kopfschützer).
- 1 Pr. gloves, wool.
- 1 Pr. braces.
- 3 Handkerchiefs.
- 1 Waist belt.
- 1 Belt buckle.
- 1 Bayonet frog.

This was in fact the basic clothing issued to concentration camp personnel until the end of the war.

STAHLHELME

Steel helmets

The following information complements the section on steel helmets in Vol. 3, pages 39-41, and is also applicable to the SS-TV.

In August 1935 the RFSS ordered that all members of the SS-VT., TV., and officers' schools must have the new pattern escutcheon on their steel helmets. The escutcheons were to be painted in oil paint, so that all units taking part in the Nuremberg Rally will have the new pattern escutcheons on their helmets.<sup>1</sup>

The Chief of the SS Main Office amended the above order on the 14th August, as the new pattern escutcheons, in the form of transfers, had been ordered from the firm of C. A. Pocher G.m.b.H. Nürnberg-A., at the cost of Rm 25.—per 1,000 pairs.<sup>2</sup>

On the 1st November 1935, the Chief of the SS Main Office made it known that since the Ministry of War (Reichskriegsministerium) was due to deliver the new M.35 steel helmet for field service at the end of the year, the proposed grey-green cover for the black steel helmet will not be introduced.

KRAGENSPIEGEL

Collar patches

In the Allgemeine-SS and the Politische Bereitschaften the battalion was identified by the colour of the stripes, and the company by the arabic numerals on the armband. (See Volume 1, page 34.).

In the SS-TV, officers wore the battalion number in Roman numerals (I-V), while other ranks wore the company (Hundertschaft) number in arabic numerals on the right collar patch underneath the death's head. The first pattern death's head which is thought to have been introduced in 1935, and from which the unit derived its name, was rather crudely embroidered in aluminium wire. The death's head continued to be embroidered in aluminium wire until April 1936 when Himmler ordered that in future aluminium embroidered insignia will not be worn on the field-grey uniform because it reflected too much light.<sup>1</sup>

On the 1st July 1937 the five battalions were re-organised into three (later five) regiments, and the practice of wearing the battalion number on the right collar patch by officers was discontinued.

In 1938 a fourth regiment was formed in Austria, and it is thought that by this time the company number had been changed to the regimental number.<sup>2</sup>

In May 1940 it was ordered that in future collar patches bearing the death's head and numerals and letters would no longer be worn. The position and design of the death's head was also changed from the horizontal to the vertical position, so that the death's head faced to the left (see Plate 11, fig. 1.). At the same time the wearing of the death's head on both collar patches was forbidden.<sup>3</sup>

SCHULTERSTÜCKE/SCHULTERKLAPPEN

Shoulder straps

The same shoulder cords were worn by members of the SS-TV. on the black service uniform, as by members of the Allgemeine-SS and SS-TV. (see Volume 1, pp. 21.36).

The first army pattern shoulder straps (Schulterklappen) were made of earth-brown cloth for wear with the brown service uniform, but in April 1936 Eicke ordered that members of the SS-TV. were to have the same shoulder straps as the SS-VT.<sup>1</sup> At first these shoulder straps were made of black cloth with rounded ends and black and aluminium piping, and from July 1937 bore the regimental number in grey silk chain stitch. Gradually these shoulder straps were replaced by the plain pattern with pointed ends.

In March 1936, officers were ordered to wear the same shoulder straps as their counterparts in the SS-VT., but without badges (Namenzug).<sup>2</sup> In December 1940 SS-TV. officers were reminded that by the 31st December they must equip themselves with shoulder straps with black underlay, and light brown piping and bronzed metal stars.<sup>3</sup>

SS-DIENSTGRADE/SS-DIENSTSTELLUNGEN

SS Ranks and appointments

The SS-TV. continued to use the General SS rank titles, and unlike the SS-VT. did not use the prefix 'Staffel' to the ranks SS-Bewerber, SS-Anwärter and SS-Mann. Because of their specialised duties, a number of special titles were used in the running of concentration camps, which should not be mistaken for SS ranks. The most commonly used titles were as follows :

Kommandant	Camp commandant who usually held rank of SS-Stubaf. up to and including SS-Staf.
Schutzhaftlagerführer	Officer in charge of the protective custody camp itself. Usually held rank of SS-Ustuf. up to and including SS-Hstuf. The larger camps had two such officers who were on duty alternately for 24 hours.
Rapportführer	N.C.O. usually with the rank of SS-Hscha. was responsible for the roll calls which were held as many as three times a day. He reported to the Schutzhaftlagerführer the total of effectives after each roll call.
Kompanie-bzw. Blockführer	N.C.O. usually with rank of SS-Scha. was responsible for discipline, cleanliness and order in the blocks under his authority. He relied for the execution of his orders on the senior block inmate, and senior barrack inmate, both of whom enjoyed special privileges.
Arbeitsdienstführer	Labour service leader held N.C.O. rank and was responsible for the allocation and selection of work parties.
Kommando-Führer	N.C.O. in charge of outside work party.

Female overseers had special rank titles which are believed to have been the same as those prescribed for female helpers. See Vol. 5, p. 40.

4. In September 1938 this pattern was replaced by a pattern with the death's head on it, but since there were 3,000 of the old pattern still in stock, it was decided that the old should be worn on field-grey while stocks last, and that the new pattern should be worn on the black uniform. ## SCHÜTZENABZEICHEN

Marksmanship badges

The information on this page is primarily a supplement to Volume 3, but is also applicable to the SS-TV.

On the 13th October 1936 the Staff Leader (Stabsführer) of SS District Elbe, wrote to the Chief of the SS Main Office asking if SS members returning from service in the armed forces were allowed to wear their marksman's lanyard (Schützenschnur) on SS uniform.<sup>1</sup> In reply the SS Main Office wrote that the wearing of the lanyard was not allowed, but that the shooting badges of the Reichswehr (a series of aluminium braid stripes and chevrons) awarded to members of the SS before the 1st June 1935, may be worn on the left cuff of the SS service dress tunic.<sup>2</sup>

A draft institution order dated November 1937, laid down the rules for the award of an SS Shooting Badge (SS-Schiessabzeichen), which had been approved by the Führer on the 24th February 1937. It was to be awarded in four classes and worn on the lower right sleeve. Members of the SS-VT, were eligible, and the standards for each award corresponded to army regulations (H-Dv. 240).<sup>3</sup> It appears that this badge was never awarded to members of the SS, and in January 1938 it was decided to award the badge to members of the German Reichs Veterans League (Deutscher Reichskriegerbund), as the SS Shooting Badge.<sup>4</sup>

A draft institution order of the Reichsführer-SS dated November 1937 described an SS-VT, Shooting Badge (Schützenabzeichen der SS-V.T.). It was to be awarded to other ranks for proficiency with rifle, heavy and light machine-guns. The oval silver pin-on badge, for wear on the right breast pocket, was to be awarded in three classes:

II Shooting Class	Without lower oakleaf
I Shooting Class	With two lower oakleaves
Sharpshooting Class	With three lower oakleaves

The class of the sharpshooting badge (1-10) was to be engraved on the top of the oakleaf wreath. A battalion could order badges from the workshop of Gahr in Munich, Marieannenstrasse 3, for the inclusive cost per 1000, of 0.74 Rm.<sup>5</sup> It appears that the badge was never in fact introduced.

SS-ÄRMELABZEICHEN

Armbadges

In addition to those illustrated in Volume 3, pp. 67-8, an Armourer Candidate (SS-Waffenwärter) on completion of his course at the Army Armourers School (Heereswaffenmeisterschule) Berlin-Lichtenburg, was entitled to wear the army armourer sergeant's armband on the lower right sleeve.<sup>6</sup>

For motorised units of the SS-VT, special badges of rank were introduced for wear on overalls and greatcoats on the 25th April 1936.<sup>7</sup> The badges consisted of a system of stripes which were worn on the upper right arm, 15 cms below the shoulder. The stripes were made of aluminium braid for driving overalls, and white rubber for the rubberised greatcoat, and were 8 cms long by 1 cm wide. The distance between each stripe was 0.3 cm. In September 1937 the order was amended, so that the stripes went right round the arm.<sup>8</sup>

TRODELN

Bayonet knots

Although bayonet knots were issued, they did not at first identify the company or battalion of the wearer, but were of a standard pattern (Einheitstroddel). When the various battalions were re-organised into regiments the system of colours to denote the company and battalion was introduced.

1. Junior non-commissioned officers' (Unterführer ohne Portepee) bayonet knot (troddel).
2. Other ranks' bayonet knot.

SS-AUSRÜSTUNG

SS Equipment

The same equipment was issued to both the SS-VT. and SS-TV. (see Volume 3, pages 76-81).

During the war concentration camp guards were issued with the following basic items of equipment:<sup>1</sup>

- 1 Waist belt
- 1 Belt buckle
- 1 Bayonet frog

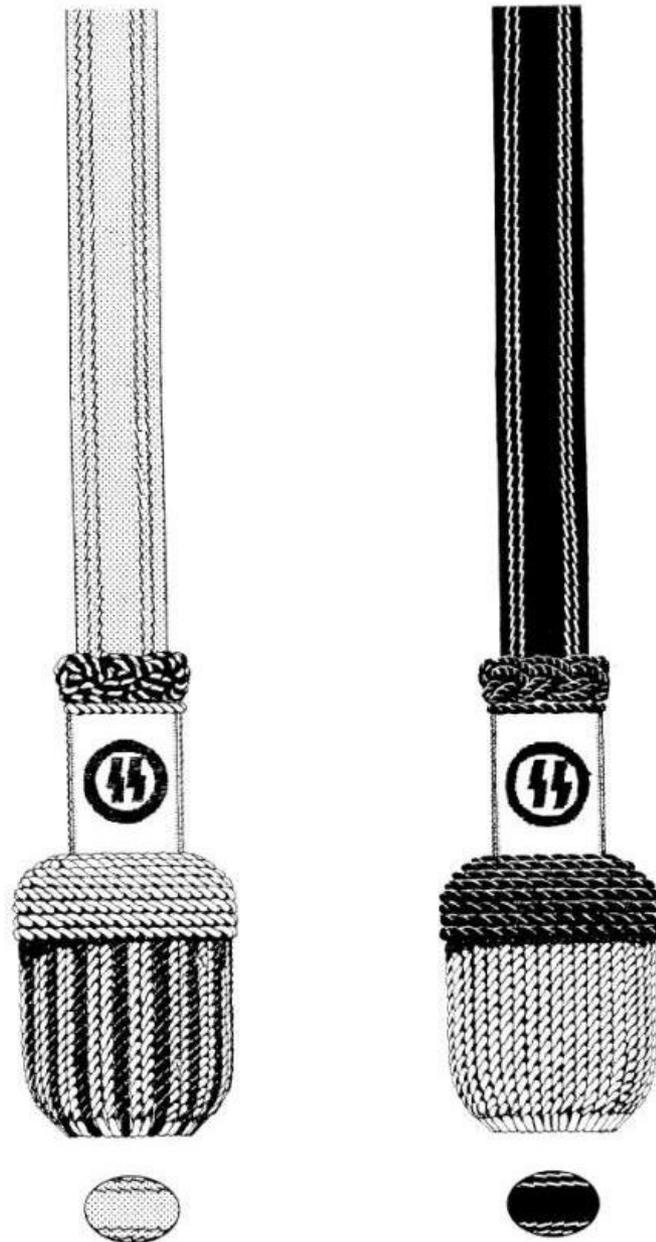

To this was added:

- 1 Bread bag
- 1 Pair ammunition pouches
- 1 Pistol holster

Sword knot for SS-Mann up to SS-Rottenführer (SS-Mannschaften).

SS-SPIELMANNSZÜGE UND SS-MUSIKZÜGE

SS Corps of drums and bands

Prior to the reorganisation of the five battalions into three regiments which took place in July 1937, each Death's Head battalion, with possible exception of the IV, had a battalion strength band (SS-Musikzug SS-Sturmbann), and a corps of drums.

After the re-organisation regiments "Oberbayern", and "Brandenburg" are known to have had bands, and the existence of a trumpet banner of the 4th regiment "Ostmark", suggests that it too had a band.

SS GROSSE TROMMEL (PAUKE)

SS Bass drum

A letter from the Reichsführer-SS to the chief of the SS Main Office, dated 31st June 1936 described how the bass drums should be painted in time for the 1936 Party Day Rally.

The drums of the Death's Head Battalions were to be painted as follows:
"SS (Kleiner Totenkopf) Sturmbann "Oberbayern" usw." <sup>1</sup>

"Jingling Johnnie" of the 2nd SS Death's Head Regiment "Brandenburg".

SS-FAHNEN UND SS-STANDARTEN

SS-flags and standards

In September 1936 the five Death's Head Battalions were presented with battalion flags at Nuremberg.<sup>1</sup>

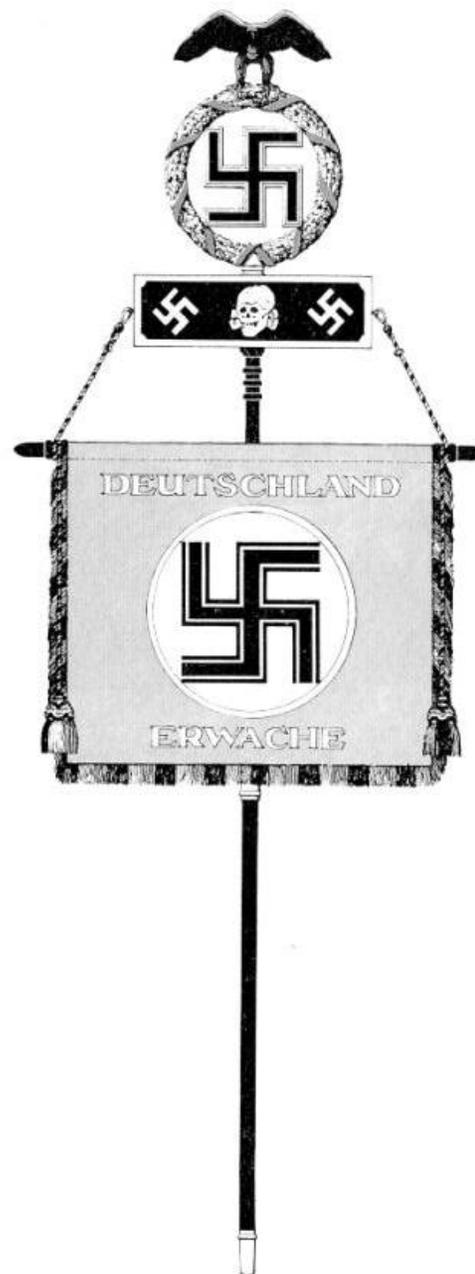

In September 1937, following the re-organisation of the five battalions into 4 regiments, it is thought that each regiment was presented with a regimental standard and three battalion flags. Although the 4th regiment had only two battalions, the march plan for the 1938 Party Day Rally shows three.<sup>2</sup>

It was usual Germany army practise to use arabic numerals for regimental, and roman numerals for battalion numbers, e.g. I/4.SS-TV-Standarte "Ostmark" or 1st Bn. 4th SS Death's Head Regiment "Ostmark". It appears however that in the case of Death's Head regimental standards, this rule was not observed, as can be seen from the photograph reproduced opposite, which is thought to show the standard of the 2nd SS Death's Head Regiment "Brandenburg".

If roman numerals were used to designate the regiment on the standard, it seems logical that the same system would have been used on the battalion flag, but a photograph has come to light which shows that on the battalion flag the battalion was identified by Roman, and the regiment by Arabic numerals as illustrated on page 48.

A) Collar patches: Worn on the right collar patch by:

- 1) Members of the SS Death's Head companies (Hundertschaften), an aluminium embroidered death's head with underneath the number of the company (arabic numerals 1 to 25).
- 2) Members of the battalion staff, an aluminium death's head with underneath the number of the battalion (roman numerals I-V).
- 3) SS leaders up to and incl. the rank of SS-Ostufaf. on the staff of a camp commandant, an aluminium embroidered death's head with underneath the letter K.
- 4) Non-commissioned ranks on the staff of a camp commandant, an aluminium embroidered K, and on the lower right sleeve a four-sided badge (Raute) with an aluminium embroidered death's head. The badge is edged in aluminium-black twisted cord.
- 5) Members of the medical battalion, an aluminium embroidered death's head with underneath the letter S.
SS leaders who are qualified doctors also wear on the lower left sleeve the existing four-sided badge (Raute) with an aluminium embroidered Aesculapius rod.
N.C.O.'s and men of the Medical Battalion qualified as orderlies wear on the lower left sleeve the existing four-sided badge (Raute) with a black silk embroidered Aesculapius rod.
- 6) Members of the staff of the Leaders of SS Guard Formations, an aluminium embroidered death's head.
Leaders with the rank of SS-Staf. and above on the staff of a camp commandant or serving with the battalions wear on the lower left sleeve a four-sided badge (Raute) with an aluminium embroidered death's head. The badge is not edged.

B) Armbands: worn with aluminium stripes:

- 1) Members of the camp commandant's staff and the SS Guard Formations wear armbands with the following inscriptions:

Camp	Armband
Dachau	Oberbayern
Esterwegen	Ostfriesland
Lichtenburg	Elbe
Sachsenburg	Sachsen
Columbia-Oranienburg	Brandenburg

- 2) Members of the Medical Battalion wear an armband with the inscription "Sanitätsabteilung".
- 3) N.C.O.'s and men on the staff of the Leader of the SS Guard Formations wear an armband with the inscription "SS-Hauptamt".

C) Drill and guard dress:

- 1) Members of the SS Guard Formations wear the earth-brown uniform with brassard and collar patches when drilling and on guard duty. In the field the brassard may be removed. Personnel on the camp commandant's staff may wear the earth-brown uniform on duty. Sentries on public streets or squares will continue to wear the black service uniform. The wearing of the earth-brown uniform as a walking-out dress is forbidden.
- 2) SS leaders wear the same shoulder straps as the SS-Verfügungstruppe on the earth-brown uniform, but without badges. N.C.O.'s and men wear plain earth-brown shoulder straps.
- 3) SS leaders, SS-Hauptschar, and SS-Oberscharführer wear the regulation knot (Portepee) on their side-arm. Other N.C.O.'s wear the black and white interwoven sword knot (Säbeltroddel), on white fabric strap with black stripes. SS men up to the rank of SS-Rottenführer wear a black and white interwoven sword knot (Säbeltroddel) on black fabric strap with white stripes.

D) General:

- 1) Death's head collar patches may be obtained only from the Leader of the SS Guard Formations. The announcements in the "Mitteilungsblatt der RZM" are to be discontinued.

- 2) The Leader of the SS Guard Formations obtains the collar patches directly from the SS Administrative Office against payment.
- 3) All private manufacture of death's head collar patches and the wearing of the same will be punished by SS law.
- 4) The Requisition order of the Chief of the SS Main Office IA/10 Nr. 01294 of the 18.3.35, ceases, with the publication of this order, to be valid.

ERRATA & ADDENDA (Second Edition)

- Page 1 Second para, line 2: the first SS-run concentration camp was established in March 1933.
Third para, line 4: Theodor Eicke became commandant of Dachau concentration camp in June 1933, not 1935 as stated; and Oberführer is misspelt.
The photograph shows Eicke as an SS-Gruppenführer, the rank to which he was promoted on 11 July 1934 and held until he became commander of the SS-Totenkopf-Division with the rank of SS-Obergruppenführer in October 1939.
- Page 2 Right column, line 8: the building which housed a holding and interrogation centre had been the German office of the American film company Columbia Pictures, but the building itself was called Columbus Haus. It was guarded by the Prussian Poice.
- Page 4 Right column, line 17: should read 'Führer vom Dienst'.
- Page 5 Line 7: should read 'KL mit SS-Totenkopfsturmbann mit...'
Line 12: should read '3 Kp Flossenburg/Bayr. Ostmark'.
The photograph of Karl Otto Koch was taken some time after his promotion to SS-Obersturmbannführer on 9 November 1936.
- Page 6 Line 8: should read 'Gerät'.
- Page 9 Left column, line 6: It now appears that the 'W' collar patch was never issued, and instead one with a double-armed swastika motif was authorised by Himmler in August 1944. (SS-WVHA, Amtsgruppenchef D, A V/4 Az.: Tgb. Nr. 759/44 Geh., Uniformenspiegel). At least one aged SS guard taken prisoner by the British at Bergen-Belsen was wearing this collar patch in April 1945, as confirmed by an Imperial War Museum photograph. See Roger James Bender & Hugh Page Taylor, Uniforms, Organisation and History of the Waffen-SS Vol. 5, pp. 38–39 & 110–112 for wear of this patch by at least one Latvian.
Right column, footnote 9: Statistisches Jahrbuch der SS der NSDAP, 1937, p. 51.
Footnote 32: See also A V/4 Az.: 23bl2Ma/F. Tgb. Nr. 539/44 Geh.
- Page 12 Line 5: should read 'Verstärkten'.
- Page 13 The photograph dates from prior to Eicke's promotion to SS-Gruppenführer in July 1934.
Line 1: Eicke took over command of Dachau in June 1933 and remained commandant until he became Inspector of Concentration Camps in July 1934.
- Page 16 The SS-Obersturmbannführer in this photograph is Ritter von Hengst; see Volume 3, p. 11 for portrait.
- Page 18 Line 12: should read: 'Kompanie Leiner'.
- Page 20 Left column, third para: heading should read: 'SS-Pioniereinheit z.b.V. (t-mot.)'.
In the caption the correct spelling is 'SS-Brigadeführer Schäfer'.
- Page 21 'Trawnikimänner' wore a variety of uniforms at different times, the most common of which was the field-grey of the Sipo and SD (see Volume 5, pp. 27–32). Since the officers were German they wore SS badges of rank, while non-commissioned officers wore black cloth shoulder straps with one, two or three transverse aluminium lace bars according to rank in the Russian manner.
- Page 26 Line 10: the first death's head collar patch was introduced on 31 March 1936. See National Archives microfilm series T-175, roll 155, frame 5047.
- Page 27 Left column, line 2: should read: 'Allgemeine-SS and SS-TV (Verfügungstruppe)'.
- Page 28 Footnote should read: National Archives microfilm series T-175, roll 155, frame nos. 268484–97. The document in question is dated 14 June 1937.
In the note marked by an asterisk the plural of 'Sturm' should be 'Stürme'; and Totenkopfsturmbanne is misspelt.
- Page 30 Right column, line 26: 'Württembergischen' is misspelt.
- Page 34 Left column, footnote 3. The correct sequence of emblems worn on the shoulder straps was not known when the first edition of this book went to press. At first there was no emblem; then, from July 1937, Arabic numerals, until the introduction of Gothic letters in 'old-silver' (bronze) for officers, white metal for N.C.O.s, and silver-grey machine embroidery for other ranks. With the formation of the 4th SS-Totenkopf-Standarte 'Ostmark' in April 1938 it was decided to give the Gothic 'O' to 'Ostmark' and a metal death's head to 'Oberbayern'. By the outbreak of war regimental numbers in Arabic numerals were once again being worn on shoulder straps. This chronology applies to the other two regiments, except that they each retained their original 'B' and 'T' regimental cyphers.
- Page 39 Plate 9, fig 4: this armband was worn by both the SS-Verfügungstruppe and the SS-Totenkopfverbände. The difference lay in the SS-VT version being one word, while that for the SS-TV was hyphenated.
- Page 42 Marksmanship badges: two examples of these badges exist in private collections; both are in hallmarked silver, bearing on the reverse the name of the Munich jeweller and silversmith Otto Gahr. To muddy the waters even further, the author has in his collection a blank citation for the 'SS-Schützenschnur' (lanyard) designed by P. Casberg. No other evidence has come to light to confirm the existence of this type of award.
Right column, line 6: should read 'SS-Waffenwart'.
Line 7: should read 'Berlin-Lichtenberg'.
Lines 18–21: should be replaced by following:
Field officers (SS-Stubał. & above) 3 stripes
Company officers (SS-Ustuf.-SS-Hstuf.) 2 stripes
N.C.O.s (Unterführer) 1 stripe'.
- Page 43 The two knots illustrated are in fact bayonet knots although they are described as 'Sabeltroddel' in Appendix 3, p. 49. In passing I should mention that extremely good copies of SS sword and bayonet knots appeared on the market in 1990.

Page 46 On page 94 of Volume 3 of this series there is a photograph of a Standard-bearer's bandolier used by the SS-Verfügungstruppe and later Waffen-SS. It is known that the SS-TV used the Allgemeine-SS pattern, introduced in 1937. Recently a number of Allgemeine-SS bandoliers were discovered in a Czech film studio, and it is now possible to give the following description. Whereas the SS-VT pattern was identical to that of the German Army, the Allgemeine-SS version had two rows of 1 cm-wide lace of special pattern, with a 1 cm space between them, which left a 0.5 cm space between the two double rows of lace. There are no other differences.

Page 48 Right column, line 10: collar patches bearing the death's head and Arabic numerals '27' do exist in private collections.
