In This Issue: Bozomania II. By Tim Redmond.

Bozomania II

I'M TEMPTED to say that this is the most depressing election I've ever seen but then, I said that last year. And I think I said it the year before. A few more years of repeating myself and I might even start to get bored.

The voters of California seem to be way ahead of me. By all accounts, the June 5th primary will be marked by the same sort of low turnout that has plagued California politics for years. Look at the choices at the top of the Democratic Party ballot — you want Dianne Feinstein or John Van de Kamp? Arlo Smith or Ira Reiner? It brings back memories of my favorite election headline of all time, the one that ran on the front page of the Village Voice the week before the November 1980 presidential election:

"Bonzomania! Millions disappointed as fools vie for high office." James Thurber used to tell a great fable about two monkeys who went to live as humans for a spell and returned to the jungle with a scheme to avoid having to hunt for food again. They talked a lion and a tiger into staging a prize fight, and sent the two beasts out to hype the event by telling all the other animals what an incompetent, useless, ugly palooka their opponent was and how he couldn't possibly win. The monkeys figured the nuts and raisins they'd collect as admission would keep them fat and happy for years.

But somehow, the dumb beasts of the forest didn't go for it. If both fighters are ugly and useless, they told each other, and neither can possibly win, then it obviously won't be much of a fight. And what's the point in giving away good raisins and nuts just to watch two palookas lose? When the monkeys couldn't come up with the prize, the lion and tiger threatened to eat them.

The monkeys obviously missed their calling. They should have stayed in human civilization and become campaign consultants. That way, the fighters would pay for the right to call each other ugly palookas in public and if the audience was so disgusted by it all that nobody showed up for the Main Event, it would all be the contestants' fault. And who'd ever want to eat a campaign consultant?

Of course, the problem with all of this is that the outcome of the June 5th Main Event, like most elections, will have important impacts on the lives of the people who are so sick of negative, insubstantial campaigns that they don't bother to vote. Feinstein and Van de Kamp may seem like losers who have little to say except how awful the other one is, but one of them will be the Democratic nominee, and possibly the next governor of California. And beyond the high-profile, high-sleaze campaigns, the June 5th ballot contains all sorts of important state and local contests.

Don't let the pros con you: There are plenty of reasons to get out and vote. If nothing else inspires you, just imagine Wendy Nelder as San Francisco assessor, in charge of 120 employees and half a billion dollars a year in revenue. That's an awful lot of nuts and raisins. — Tim Redmond

Hongisto for assessor

FOR SAN FRANCISCANS, the assessor's race may well be the most important contest on the June ballot.

The Assessor's Office has never been a high-profile post. It's never been part of a major progressive campaign. But the person who holds that office has immense power. It's no coincidence that Jesse Jackson has spent considerable effort in the past few years electing progressive county assessors in the Deep South: Jackson understands the relationship between money and political power.

The daily news media have largely ignored the assessor's race, and when they have paid attention, they've treated it almost as a joke. That's not funny, it's sick: The Assessor's Office controls almost half a billion a year in city revenue. It's a major city department, with about 120 employees. And if the person who occupies it is incompetent, uninterested or corrupt, the city will lose vast amounts of money. In fact, our research has shown that the failures of the Assessor's Office over the past decade have been a major factor in creating San Francisco's structural budget problems.

Dick Hongisto is an ideal candidate to start cleaning up the mess and turning things around.

In California, cities rely on property taxes for a large percentage of their budgets. Those taxes are based on the value of the property and it's up to the assessor to determine that value.

When Proposition 13 passed in 1978, local governments lost much of their control over property tax rates, and thus much of their power to raise revenue. The emotional support for Prop. 13 was understandable for much of the 1970s, as the population of the state exploded, real estate values had been soaring. Assessors had been rapidly raising the appraised values, and thus the taxes, of hundreds of thousands of properties, many of them single-family houses. Suddenly, middle-class people who had owned modest homes for many years were facing tax bills far beyond their ability to pay.

There was, and is, an answer to that problem. It starts with property-tax classification, or "split-roll" taxing. The idea is to tax residential property at one rate, under one set of rules, and commercial property at another. But big businesses have always opposed split-roll schemes, and with their help, Prop. 13, a sweeping lid on tax reassessments, passed overwhelmingly.

The impact has been terribly regressive. The burden of supporting municipal government has shifted dramatically, away from businesses and the commercial sector and onto the backs of homeowners and renters. Prop. 13 allows property to be re-assessed only when it changes hands; since residential property normally turns over much faster than commercial property, residential assessments have risen with the market, and commercial assessments have lagged far behind.

THE ULTIMATE impact has been reduced local budgets — less money for cops, for firefighters, for public health, for welfare programs, for the homeless, for parks, for libraries, for affordable housing, for day care and for all the other things cities have been forced to do in the Reagan-Bush years, as federal support collapsed.

Although Prop. 13 limited the assessor's powers, the importance of the office in the post-Prop. 13 era has increased. These days, an assessor often gets only one shot at establishing the taxable value of a piece of commercial property, and the assessment he or she sets will be the basis of that property owner's tax payments for many years. A bungled assessment isn't just a minor mistake that can be corrected next time around; it's a serious disaster that could wind up hurting the city long into the future.

And there's no question that the San Francisco Assessor's Office has been bungling its work. As we reported May 11, 1988, numerous major commercial office buildings in the city are assessed at rates far below their obvious market value. Dozens of major developers and real estate speculators have challenged even modest assessments, and the office of Assessor Sam Duca has allowed those challenges to succeed without even a token fight.

Some of the assessments are almost laughable. Walter Shorenstein, for example, paid $650 million in 1986 for the 1.2-million-square-foot Bank of America building, and the building assessment reflects that purchase price. But two years earlier, Duca's office decided that the 1.3-million-square-foot 101 California building a bigger, newer property on an equal or better location — was worth only $223 million.

Between 1982 and 1987, real estate investors routinely paid between $250 and $500 a square foot for first-class office buildings in downtown San Francisco and Duca routinely assessed those properties for a fraction of that price.

Under Duca, as under his predecessors, the big downtown businesses and developers have paid less and less of their share of the city's tax burden, and the residents and neighborhoods have paid more and more. The loss to the city treasury from the underassessment of 101 California alone amounts to some $4 million a year. The total annual tab from Duca's pro-downtown assessments is probably well beyond $50 million.

AN ACTIVIST assessor could bring a tremendous amount of new revenue ($50 million a year is a modest estimate) into the city's treasury, just by aggressively enforcing fair assessments on commercial property. A competent administrator could do wonders for the revenue base just by dragging the office out of the Charles Dickens era and into the modern computer age. A crusading San Francisco assessor could lead the fight for amendments to Prop. 13 and the imposition of a split-roll system at the state level.

Hongisto has the ability and motivation to do all that, and more. As San Francisco Sheriff and director of the New York State correctional system, he demonstrated the ability to oversee a major public agency, and to promote creative, progressive policies in territory normally staked out by the right. Sheriff Hongisto modernized the county jails, pioneered work-furlough and other alternative sentencing programs, brought women, ethnic minorities and gay and lesbian people into an office long dominated by conservative white men and started programs to help people who were evicted, instead of just throwing them into the street. He even did a stint in his own jail when he refused to evict the tenants of the International Hotel.

As supervisor, Hongisto has consistently backed progressive causes, and has often been a lone voice for positions that are unpopular or go against the powers that be, from supporting Proposition M, the highrise-limiting initiative, to opposing the sellout PG&E contracts. As a landlord and small-business owner, Hongisto is well versed in the art of evaluating property value. In the past two years, he's been taking classes in real estate appraisal, and has become familiar with the science as well.

Hongisto's main opponent, Supervisor Wendy Nelder, has absolutely no qualification whatsoever for the job. She might even be worse than Sam Duca, if such a thing were possible. Nelder has taken pro-downtown stands on almost every major issue to come before her in a decade on the board. She has built a reputation as a terrible administrator, someone who can't even run her own office, which consists of two staff aides.

In 1971, Hongisto decided to run for the office of sheriff, on a progressive platform that included support for San Francisco's first-ever highrise-limitation initiative. Almost 20 years later, he's running for assessor on a platform based on the same philosophy: Downtown ought to pay its fair share of city taxes. Hongisto established a tradition of progressive sheriffs in San Francisco. His efforts to do the same for the Assessor's Office deserve strong support.

Open space — not condos

It's not easy to respond to your May 9th editorial, "City ecology needs artists' niche," because it is so one-sided. There is no indication that your investigative journalism code was working when you wrote this editorial. From my survey, none of you talked to any of the nine people on the Potrero Commons Steering Council, (that about equals the Art Deco group of six to eight) or surveyed the 900 signatories to a petition that reads: "We, the undersigned want to maintain open space in the existing land mass bounded by 19th St., Arkansas, 18th St. and Potrero Middle School (Lot 4034/1). This open space area is now empty of buildings yet inhabited by trees, small animals, various bugs, chattering birds and endangered species of one kind or another. It is used as a walking path, a dog run, daffodil placement and breathing space for visitors and neighbors. We will help maintain/develop it for open space."

Another approach to your editorial might be to point out that you join with former president of Art Deco, (overpaid) Brad Paul, now deputy mayor; former board member of Art Deco, Margie O'Driscoll, now spokesperson for the mayor on art issues; Tom Jones, of the mayor's housing office, who works very, very closely with the developer of the "60 condos"; Rick Holliday and Mayor Art Agnos, who also likes the smokescreen of live/work space for artists to distract from the 60 condos. Agnos will do for the neighborhoods what Alioto did for downtown — build, build, build.

De-funked

Anne Hurley mentions me as a funk artist example in her review of the Pro Arts exhibition (see Bay Guardian, 4/18/90). This term has been ossified in art critics' minds for years and I do not agree that I am a prime instigator of funk as an art world F-word. I have never called my artwork funk.

Peter Selz, the first director of the UC Art Museum, came from the Museum of Modern Art where it was common to invent art movements with catchy names. Critics, galleries and curators competed to produce a new phrase for every art show. His exhibit of funk art was a public relations success that the artists could not alter. Several of us objected in the only forum available to us, in a panel discussion at the university, and turned a publicized funk film discussion into a shambles. Tom Albright and others picked up the phrase in all its nebulosity.

For a short period of time there were a group of artists including myself who called our work "funky." But none of this artwork was represented in the funk art show except for sculptures by Joan Brown and myself. The funk art term was invented years after I stopped making the work that is commonly identified with it in the minds of critics and graduate students. This is the first time since 1967 that anyone has called my films funk.

Legal lane-share

As both a longtime Bay Guardian reader and motorcyclist, I was excited to see on the cover of your April 18th issue the headline for a story about the venerable Dudley Perkins & Co. Motorcyclists need all the positive press we can get. I have one minor complaint, though. Ms. Koenigsdorf, in her list of reasons to own a motorcycle, writes "During rush-hour traffic on the Bay Bridge, one can illegally weave between sedentary autos," (my italics). I must take exception to this statement. In California it is not illegal to share lanes when the conditions are safe, like when autos are sedentary. This is currently a very controversial issue, with two bills in the assembly attempting to outlaw lane sharing (AB 2560 and AB 3007).

As we are all aware, traffic is considered the number-one problem in the Bay Area. Motorcycles are one of the most positive ways we can reduce the traffic crisis, yet they are constantly discouraged. Motorcycles pay the same bridge tolls as cars (they should be free) and we can't use the car-pool lanes, yet we take up one-tenth the space of a car. The use of motorcycles should be encouraged, not discouraged. We're the solution, not the problem.

I encourage motorcyclists and non-motorcyclists to write your assembly person and request that they vote against Assemblywoman Moore's AB 2560. The bill is still in committee and is presently inactive for lack of support. Let's get it off the table entirely.

Health care for all?: The Right to Health Care Act (SB2868) introduced by State Senator Nick Petris (D-Oak.) has made it out of the Health and Human Services Committee. With a $3.6 billion state budget deficit looming over the upcoming fiscal year, noises are already being made about how we can't possibly afford health coverage for all Californians. This bill, however, proposes to pool money already being spent on health coverage — about $70 billion — and to implement cost control of hospital and doctors' fees. The burden of additional financing is spread through a government-employer-employee-taxpayer partnership.

According to the bill, the state would provide health insurance for all citizens, eliminating the need for employers to provide coverage through a multitude of insurers. Individuals could choose their own doctors or participate in HMO-type plans. Benefits would be comprehensive and include long-term care. A newly appointed Health Commissioner would set health-care rates, and the centralized system would cut down on administrative costs. The bill now goes to the Rules and Revenue and Taxation committees. To get involved, call the Health Access Foundation, a coalition of advocates for affordable health care, at 431-7430.

STUDY TALLIES ECONOMIC AND ENVIRONMENTAL COSTS OF SPRAWL

URBAN LIVING, in addition to its cultural benefits, can save residents thousands of dollars a year — and help save the earth's atmosphere from toxic pollution and global warming, according to a study released May 1st by the Natural Resources Defense Council in San Francisco.

Examining housing patterns and driving mileage in five Bay Area communities, researchers found that in communities with more households per acre, people drive less — a lot less: Just doubling residential density leads to a 30 percent cut in car use.

"Cutting driving," the report's author, John Holtzclaw, pointed out, "will make a big difference in the quality of air we breath. Sixty-eight percent of the carbon monoxide and about 60 percent of the ozone that poisons our air are produced by motor vehicle emissions."

The study focused on five areas, representing a range from urban density to suburban sprawl: northeast San Francisco (Nob Hill to Fisherman's Wharf), all of San Francisco, the Rockridge area of north Oakland and south Berkeley, Walnut Creek and Danville-San Ramon.

Community density, public transportation and the availability of neighborhood businesses, for shopping and jobs, are the important factors in reducing car use, the study found.

Reducing automobile use not only cuts down on pollution, but saves people thousands of dollars in auto-ownership costs: The study estimates that the average San Francisco household saves $11,000 a year by driving less than the average household in Danville-San Ramon (for northeast San Francisco by itself, $14,000).

With the Bay Area population growing rapidly, housing, business and commercial development will continue to reshape the region. For the last 40 years, development has mostly created more suburban sprawl, requiring heavy car use and eliminating open space. The NRDC study adds another voice to the growing movement to concentrate development in urban areas, with neighborhoods dense enough to be served conveniently by public transportation — and building the transit systems to serve them.

The Greenbelt Alliance, another local environmental group, has also been promoting that development strategy. Mark Evanoff, the group's field coordinator, told the Bay Guardian that in several Bay Area counties, proponents of the urban density/public transit strategy have already been fighting it out with suburban-sprawl development projects.

Almost all the current open space in San Mateo County, Evanoff said, is protected from development by a successful voter initiative. A group gathering signatures for a similar initiative in Contra Costa County has recently been threatened with a lawsuit by the Building Industries Association, but will continue its campaign, Evanoff said.

Building compact communities with public transportation is not only cost-effective, he added, "it's healthier. People aren't getting in their cars to go to the store, to the movies, to school. They get out and walk, get more involved with their communities, interact with their neighbors. It's just better not to spend four hours a day in your vehicle and then come home and pop a beer."

For a copy of the NRDC study, send $7 to National Resources Defense Council, 90 New Montgomery, SF 94105.

The Sierra Club has also issued a recent position paper with a similar analysis and recommendations on transportation, which it calls "the environmental issue of the '90s for California." ARMY DISCOVERS PRESIDIO IS RIDDLED WITH TOXIC SITES

THE TOXIC waste problem at San Francisco's Presidio Army base is far worse than military officials had predicted, a recent Defense Department report shows.

According to the February 1990 Defense Environmental Restoration Program Annual Report to Congress, officials have identified 66 toxic hot spots on the base, containing substances including cancer-causing solvents like benzene, contaminated oil in underground storage tanks, asbestos and more. As recently as last year, the Army was saying it knew of only two contaminated sites.

The evidence of more extensive contamination is certain to drive the cost of cleaning up the site far beyond the relatively paltry $2 million that the Commission on Base Realignment and Closures initially estimated. It will also mean a longer wait before the base can be converted to civilian use.

The commission's first report on Presidio toxics was based on a 1983 assessment of contamination. But after Congress voted to close the base, investigators took a closer look and came up with a far more extensive list of contaminated areas. Based on the costs for cleanup at other Bay Area installations, cleaning up the Presidio could well cost more than the $80 million projected by U.S. Representative Barbara Boxer.

"What this information shows is that the Army doesn't have the faintest idea of how to respond to its environmental problems," said Saul Bloom, director of the Arms Control Research Center. "If it weren't for the base closure vote, this information might not have come out for many more years."

SUPREME COURT DECISION LIMITS FREEDOM OF RELIGION

IN A RECENT decision, the increasingly conservative U.S. Supreme Court has drastically limited the right to freedom of religion, according to a coalition of religious and civil-liberties groups. The court's ruling has "effectively drained the First Amendment right to freely exercise one's religion of all content, and makes freedom of religion the constitutional equivalent of the appendix," said Mark Stern of the American Jewish Congress, one of the authors of a petition to the Supreme Court to reconsider the decision.

The case in question, Employment Division, Department of Human Resources of Oregon vs. Smith, involved two Native Americans who were fired from their jobs and subsequently denied unemployment benefits because they had participated in a Native American Church religious ceremony that included the use of peyote — a crime under Oregon law, but long central to the practice of some Native American religions. The decision is of particular significance, not because of the specific ruling, but because of the court's reasoning.

The decision effectively overturns decades of Supreme Court precedent, which had said it was unconstitutional for state or local governments to pass or enforce laws restricting religious practices unless they could prove society had a "compelling interest" in doing so and the law was written in a manner "least restrictive" to a group's religious practices, according to Steven Shapiro of the American Civil Liberties Union national office.

Interests the courts found "compelling" enough to permit restrictions on religious practices were: protecting children from excessive religious-oriented work and forcing parents (Jehovah's Witnesses) to accept medical treatment for their ailing children.

The court's new standard, authored by Justice Antonin Scalia, allows governmental restrictions on religious conduct in a wide variety of situations, as long as the law is applicable to all citizens and doesn't specifically target religious conduct or a particular religious group. Thus, according to Shapiro, a Catholic priest offering communion could be found to have violated laws against serving alcohol to minors. Or Amish parents might be required to have their children attend school against their religious beliefs. Or a student who missed school while observing a religious holiday could be penalized for the absence.

The court argued that state legislatures are free to provide exemptions from laws that infringe on religious practices, but that "we cannot afford the luxury" of requiring exemptions for particular religious groups from laws generally applicable to all members of society.

But, according to Stern, this position is "an abdication of the court's traditional role of protecting unpopular minorities from the will of a sometimes hostile or insensitive majority. Limiting the government's ability to restrict religious practices was precisely the purpose of the religion clauses of the First Amendment." While legislatures probably would not pass laws infringing on the practices of the the Catholic Church, smaller minority religions, like the Native American Church, might not be able to rely on legislatures for such protection.

An alliance of groups across the religious and political spectrum, including the Presbyterian Church, USA, the Lutheran Church, the American Jewish Congress, the National Association of Evangelical Churches and the American Civil Liberties Union have joined in formally petitioning the Court to reconsider the Smith decision. However, it has been 33 years since the Supreme Court has accepted a case for rehearing and then reversed its earlier decision.

FORMER ISRAELI SOLDIER TURNED REFUSENIK TO TALK IN S.F.

"I was not an activist before," said Chanoch Livneh, a former sergeant in the Israeli armored corps who went to prison in 1988 for refusing his mandatory army assignment to the West Bank. The month-long prison term convinced the veteran of two wars to join YESH GVUL, a movement of Israeli soldiers formed during the Lebanon invasion of 1982, who selectively refuse to obey "illegal or immoral orders," he told the Bay Guardian.

The Best Booking I Ever Made...

Was Tesla. I wanted to book a top heavy-metal band into the club, and have them play acoustically. I wrote to Tesla's agent, who was both thorough and tough. The band was not on tour, so our booking would be a single appearance. Since the group has the ability to sell out the Cow Palace, I had no idea how good my chances would be. But I mapped out my strategy, made the offer, crossed my fingers and waited. The answer was "yes". It all goes to show that a good creative idea that reaches farther than you've ever reached and stretches your imagination to the limit is well worth the effort... especially if it works!

America, Livneh will speak in the Bay Area about the growing conscientious-objector movement within the Israel Defense Forces.

Before his refusal to serve in the West Bank, Livneh said he was "what you can call the usual Israeli silent majority, just shooting and crying. I took part in the wars and then went to the big peace demonstrations, only the big ones, shouting a little bit at the government and then going home.

But when the order to go to the West Bank finally arrived, Livneh said he spent sleepless nights flashing back to his 1970 night patrol in a small Gaza Strip town. Then 18 years old, Livneh said Israeli soldiers would enter Palestinian homes and traumatize families simply to get out of the cold rain.

"We saw this time after time in 1970, which was not intifada [uprising] yet," he said. "The army makes a search for a terrorist, humiliating his father, humiliating his grandmother and mother, beating them and beating him. I was sure I am not going to do it anymore."

So Livneh took a jail term rather than return, and in jail learned more about YESH GVUL, which in English means, "there is a limit."

"It's the only peace group in Israel that supports the refuseniks. [We] support also the families because they are the ones mainly under pressure. We meet with youth movements, kibbutzim, reservists and so on. We are talking to them about the limits of obedience and disobedience. That everyone must have their own moral limits."

Livneh said Tel Aviv University studies show that YESH GVUL is gaining popularity among Israeli youth, from 17 percent in 1985 to 53 percent 1989. "It doesn't say they themselves are going to refuse tomorrow," he added. "But in Israel which is in a way a military society, the fact that people are becoming aware of their duty, their right and duty to disobey an illegal order, to refuse an immoral order, this is something like a miracle."

Since the beginning of the intifada, 108 reservists and young soldiers have been jailed, he said. "But this is only the tip," he added. "Because for each one of them there are 10 others who declared they are refusing but the authorities preferred to re-assign them rather than have so much attention such as protests and demonstrations and so on when they are sent to military prison. And for each one of them you have another 10 that preferred not to come to confrontation with the authorities, but suddenly when they got a call from the army, well they have enormous problems in work, in family life, some strange mysterious illness, for some reason they cannot serve.

Reports about the group's activities are banned from the state-run Israel Broadcast Authority. On his U.S. speaking tour, sponsored by the Berkeley-based Friends of Yesh Gvul, Livneh will appear at the Trinity United Methodist Church, 2362 Bancroft Way, Berkeley on May 29th, and at the American Friends Service Committee, 2160 Lake, SF on the 30th.

Livneh, a father of two daughters, now lives in Cholon, Israel and works in a bank.

THE ACCUSED POINTS A FINGER OF BLAME AT REGULATORS, SUCH AS: WILLIAM SEIDMAN*, WHO, THOUGH UNLOVED BY THE BUSH Administration, IS ADMIRABLE BY MANY OTHERS FOR TELLING THE TRUTH ABOUT THE ENORMITY OF THE SCANDAL.

BUT TELLING THE TRUTH can BE DANGEROUS, AS SOME CONGRESSIONAL Incumbents KNOW.

THE TRUTH, the AWFUL TRUTH is... IF the PRESIDENT REVERSES HIS "NO NEW TAXES" PLEDGE, THERE won't BE ANY SLOGANIZABLE DRAMATIC difference between me AND my OPPONENT!!

BUT MAYBE IT'S NECESSARY FOR THE LONG-TERM GOOD OF THE... POLICIES THAT SERVE THE LONG-TERM GOOD OF THE NATION ARE IRRESPONSIBLE IF THEY CAN'T BE REDUCED to a CATCHY, DRAMATIC SLOGAN!!

THAT'S WHY THE S&L CRISIS HASN'T HAPPENED YET.

IF NO ONE THINKS UP A SLOGAN FOR IT, MAYBE IT WILL GO AWAY.

GOOD IDEA!

AT CITY HALL

BY JIM BALDERSTON

DISASTER OF THE WEEK

The first round in state Senator Quentin Kopp's effort to roll back garbage rates is over. The winner is Norcal Solid Waste Systems, parent to Golden Gate Disposal and Sunset Scavenger. The losers are the city's residential ratepayers.

Kopp's argument to the Department of Public Works was multifaceted. He called for a $34 million consumer rebate, but was quickly overruled by the city attorney on the grounds that retroactive rate-setting was illegal. He also pointed out that the two Norcal subsidiaries are rapidly integrating various functions, and called for the two to be treated as one company for ratemaking purposes. That suggestion was rejected.

The clearest example that the Department of Public Works sold out the ratepayers, however, is the way the city decided to handle the costs of Norcal's employee stock ownership plan. There were many possible ways to handle these costs, and the positions of Norcal and Kopp were diametrically opposed.

In testimony this year, Norcal argued it had made savings as a result of the ESOP and should be able to keep those savings to pay for the ESOP. Kopp, on the other hand, said charging the ratepayers for the ESOP costs was a case of the ratepayers buying the company and then giving it to the workers. He said all ESOP costs should be disallowed.

But the city wasn't forced to adopt either position, and there was another recommendation on the table. A 1989 report by Touche Ross said the ESOP costs should be disallowed. But it also noted there would be savings from the ESOP, and proposed a second study to develop a gain-sharing formula to split the savings between the company and the ratepayers.

That seemed fair and equitable. For years, the company had been operating inefficiently, because its profits were proportional to its expenses. The more it spent, the more profit it made. When the workers objected to smaller crews, for example, the company had no incentive to push the issue.

If the city were to establish a gain-sharing formula, the workers would have an incentive to keep costs down to pay off the ESOP, but the ratepayers would reap some benefit from the new, more efficient systems. It's an increasingly popular technique among regulators, and was used by the California Public Utilities Commission recently to set rates for Pacific Bell.

There was a follow-up report done, but it didn't go to Touche Ross. Instead it went to Hilton, Farnkopf and Hobson, which recommended the companies keep all of the savings. The report is a disaster, but DPW's decision to adopt its recommendations is a scandal.

With friends like these . . .

POOR ARLO Smith. The SF DA who wants to be state Attorney General has been dogged wherever he goes about his politically motivated prosecution of the "Ballpark Five." Now his own campaign manager, Marc Dann, let a rather telling comment slip to investigators from the DA's office, which appeared in Herb Caen's column last Wednesday. Dann, who was interviewed in the DA's probe of last November's anti-ballpark flier, described Smith as "a bald, inarticulate DA from San Francisco."

The transcript from which that item was taken contains some other juicy tidbits that didn't make Herb Caen — for example, Dann saying the ballpark investigation was a "politically sensitive piece of work" and that "we hoped that they came to a conclusion quickly," out of "our concern for Arlo's political career." This is amid claims from the Smith camp that the ballpark probe was not politically motivated.

Dann also helped the DA's office with the investigation. For starters, after Dann spoke with Schlackman's attorney, William E. Boyd, Dann immediately reported to the DA's office about the conversation. Dann also advised the investigators about where to find evidence. ("The vendors [printing houses] are the wrong way to go.") Concerning his chief aide, Dennis Collins, Dann told investigators, "From what Dennis reports from his discussions with Bob [Deputy DA Robert Podesta] about the case, they are not focusing on what — where the likely infractions are."

Last week, after Smith and his opponent, Los Angeles DA Ira Reiner, finished taping a debate for KRON-TV, reporters hounded Smith with ballpark questions. That spells trouble for Smith. As one political observer said, "You have to have your hometown locked up a year before the election so you can get out statewide."

More property-sales tax?

AN ORDINANCE slowly making its way through the Board of Supervisors committee system would more than double the real property transfer tax, to $11 from $5 for each $1,000 worth of property value. The tax is paid by the buyer when the property changes hands.

Under the present system, the buyer of a $300,000 house would pay $1,500 in taxes. Under the new system, the buyer would pay $3,300.

The real estate interests, who see the tax as an impediment to selling property in a hyper-inflated market, will surely oppose the ordinance. So will the business community, if for no more reason than it contains the words "tax" and "increase."

But the legislation, sponsored by Supervisors Nancy Walker and Jim Gonzalez, would generate approximately $25 million a year, according to Walker. That money would go into the city's General Fund and would be tentatively earmarked for more affordable housing.

"The idea has been around for a number of years, and has come out of the Affordable Housing Action Plan," Walker said.

But there is no guarantee the money will be spent on affordable housing, since the expenditure of General Fund monies is discretionary.

Another problem is the tax's flat rate. Homeowners get hit for the same percentage as large downtown developers, whose buildings use more city services per square foot than smaller, less dense apartment buildings or single-family homes.

Walker said a sliding-scale increase had been considered some "ten or 12 years ago," but did not come up this time around.

Walker expects the board and Mayor Art Agnos to support the plan. We'll keep you posted.

Correction

A COUPLE of weeks ago I reported that Kevin Shelley, candidate for supervisor, could expect widespread support, including endorsements from both the mayor and State Senator Quentin Kopp.

In fact, Kopp has not endorsed Shelley. The senator made that point in a series of phone calls, letters and face-to-face comments.

Shelley does, however, seem to have a wide base of support, and some people are projecting that he will have the money, looks and name recognition — his father was Mayor Jack Shelley — not only to win a seat, but perhaps even to finish in the first spot, thereby making him president of the board. He received a nice round of applause at the recent San Francisco Tomorrow dinner when he was introduced to the crowd.

Vandy ducks?

THE FEATURED speaker at that dinner was Attorney General and governor-wannabe John Van de Kamp. In his speech, he repeatedly ribbed Dianne Feinstein for her environmental record and joked about the irony that PG&E now calls itself an environmental organization.

But afterward, when a Bay Guardian editor approached Van de Kamp and asked him to come by our office for an endorsement interview, the attorney general refused, citing past Bay Guardian stories about his involvement in the Diablo Canyon Nuclear Power Plant rate case.

"I read those stories about me and PG&E," he said. "You guys just believe everything [Board of Equalization member and Diablo foe] Bill Bennett tells you."

Sure, we criticized Van de Kamp's support of the Public Utilities Commission's decision allowing PG&E to pass along a $3.4 billion bill for its construction mistakes to consumers. And sure, we respect Bill Bennett, one of the few public officials in the state of California who is ever willing to take on PG&E.

But we have to wonder about Van de Kamp's political sense. Compared to the way we've criticized Feinstein, he's gotten the kid-gloves treatment. Besides, the only other candidates who refused our invite this year were Assemblyman Elihu Harris, Supervisor Wendy Nelder and an ex-mayor named Feinstein.

Not the best of company, John.

Usual suspects sully MacNeil-Lehrer

By Larry Bensky

THE NOW forlorn hope that so-called "public" television's news and current affairs broadcasting would prove a distinguished alternative to the commercial variety was first stated in the Carnegie Commission Report 23 years ago. That report led to the establishment of the Public Broadcasting Service, a filter through which money, and much light, was supposed to pass, unsullied by the hucksterism, superficiality and obeisance to official views which, then as now, pervaded commercial channels.

Public television "should be a forum for debate and controversy," wrote the Carnegie commissioners. It should "provide a voice for groups in the community that would otherwise be unheard... to help us see America whole, in all its diversity."

It hasn't quite turned out that way. Even in cities with more active, less reactionary programming policies than our own sublimely irresponsible KQED, public television can be accurately referred to as "the animal channel" or "coffee table TV." Something to leaf through when your mind needs filling with harmless plots, or images.

As for public television's scant programming on current affairs, it most often conforms to critic Barbara Ehrenrich's "first law of capitalist censorship: you can write about any social problem... as long as it is a problem experienced primarily by the rich." (A recent local example was KQED's documentary on the October earthquake's aftermath in Santa Cruz. The program managed to avoid discomforting viewers with any mention of the Santa Cruz area's homeless people and Latinos, whose already marginal situation was made even more intolerable by the quake. Rather, we were subjected to the genteel agonies of a clothing manufacturer seeking to recapitalize his business, and several middle-class white families trying to salvage their megabucks dream houses.)

There was a glimmer of hope, in the early 1980s, that public TV's current affairs doldrums might be stirred by a fresh breeze. A huge amount of money (by public broadcasting standards) was granted to a struggling nationwide half-hour daily news program, in order to increase its length to an hour, and, theoretically, greatly expand its potential as an alternative information source.

Today we know that program as The MacNeil-Lehrer Report. And it's as pompous, ponderous and soporific a contribution to conventional discourse as can be imagined. Why it turned out this way, only the eventual defectors from its wastefully large staff can possibly tell us when, inevitably, they join the string of disgruntled commercial television insiders who write books about their disillusionment.

For now, there is fresh, hard evidence about how MacNeil-Lehrer has betrayed its mission. It comes in a new report, "All the Usual Suspects," issued this week by the New York media analysis organization, Fairness and Accuracy in Reporting. FAIR hired two Boston College sociologists to do content analysis of six months of MacNeil-Lehrer, similar to an earlier study the group had commissioned on ABC's Nightline. The results include...

- Two conservative Washington "think tanks" dominate the MacNeil-Lehrer guest list: The American Enterprise Institute provides the experts for domestic affairs, while the Center for Strategic and International Studies is tapped for analysis of international matters. Analysts from liberal and progressive organizations like Institute for Policy Studies did not appear once on the air during the six-month study.
- Ninety percent of MacNeil-Lehrer guests were white and eighty-seven percent were male.
- Eighty-nine percent of those appearing were current or former government officials, professionals and corporate representatives; only six percent represented public interest, labor or racial/ethnic organizations.
- Of the 17 guests who talked about the environment

(all white males), only one was an environmentalist; the rest represented government and corporate interests.

■ In only one story about people and their jobs did a labor representative appear (the Eastern airlines strike). Otherwise, no labor or consumer rights spokesperson were allowed to talk about economics — and the leading labor issue of the period, the Pittston coal miners strike, was never presented to viewers at all.

■ On a critical foreign policy issue — Central America — FAIR's report states: "MacNeil-Lehrer's coverage presented essentially one side of this multifaceted issue, without even an attempt at pluralism." One hundred percent of those interviewed about this issue were current or former government officials; all expressed opinions friendly to the official U.S. position.

"When it comes to the inner workings of Washington," FAIR concludes, "MacNeil-Lehrer serves as a veritable press agency for the views of U.S. officialdom — one that excludes the views of critics."

MacNeil-Lehrer's eponymous anchors' sanctimonious air of sincerity won't quite seem the same after FAIR's report. But how much good will FAIR's carefully documented research do?

Preliminary indications are less than encouraging. A FAIR study last year of Ted Koppel's nightly pontifications turned up results similar to those about MacNeil-Lehrer. Since then there has been marginal improvement: The percentage of women as guests on Nightline has increased from 11 to 26 percent. And public interest representatives now appear ten percent of the time, versus six percent a year earlier. But, in FAIR's words, "Nightline continues to exhibit the same kind of people, night after night: 'white men from powerful institutions.'" The result? "Foreign policy debates still lack a critical edge, and the inclusion of dissenting voices continues to be the exception."

BURYING THE TRUTH: One of journalism's more invidious traditions is the obituary. "Say nothing ill of the dead" has been used as a pretext for saying less than the truth about them, even when the truth would be extremely useful to those of us still alive. It was therefore a welcome departure from tradition to read the Oakland Tribune's Pete Aleshire's Saturday column, "Sammy Davis Jr.'s Early Exit." Aleshire, who often shows a deft ability to intermix a personal touch with his medical and science subject matter, made the point that "All the news reports say it was throat cancer... that's not quite true. Sammy Davis died of a drug overdose, an overdose of nicotine." Someone should jam drug fuhrer William Bennett's FAX machine with Aleshire's column's nexus: "All the illegal drugs combined kill an estimated 7,000 Americans per year... alcohol kills an estimated 125,000... cigarettes up to 300,000 each year."

(Contrast Aleshire's critical insight with the San Francisco Examiner's Christopher Matthews' Sunday silliness, in which he sought to eulogize Davis's congenital sycophancy, while ignoring the man's self-destructive behavior.)

NAMING NAMES: Only one media outlet — the San Francisco Weekly — chose to echo the recent Sentinel's sensationalist "outing" of a San Francisco public official, by publishing the name. Why public officials' private lives are anyone's business but their own remains hard to understand; why those sympathetic to gay peoples' oppression would increase that oppression on someone whose life might easily be made impossible by the act is even more incomprehensible. Is there no other way to influence public discourse?

"All the Usual Suspects: MacNeil-Lehrer and Nightline" is available for $7 from Fairness and Accuracy in Reporting, 130 West 25th Street, New York, NY 10001.

ENDORSEMENTS

Zelman for insurance commissioner. No on 115. Yes on 108, no on 111. Hongisto for assessor. Riles for mayor of Oakland. Yes on Alameda County Measure A. . . complete endorsements for the June 5th election.

For California voters, the June 5th election is at least as important as the one that will take place in November. An unusually high number of critical races and ballot measures are on the ballot, both locally and statewide. San Francisco voters will decide several contested judicial races, will choose an assessor and will approve or reject a two-term limit for supervisors, among other things. Oakland voters will vote for mayoral, Assembly and School Board candidates. Statewide races include primaries for governor, attorney general and insurance commissioner. Voter turnout in June is often light, but this one is too important to pass up. Vote early; vote often — just be sure to vote. Our recommendations follow.

Governor, Democratic primary JOHN VAN DE KAMP

With the possible exception of the state attorney general's race, it's hard to imagine two less appealing candidates vying for the right to represent the Democratic Party in a race for high political office. The campaigns of Dianne Feinstein and John Van de Kamp demonstrate the complete degeneration of California politics. Long on rhetoric, short on substance and totally lacking in honesty, Feinstein and Van de Kamp have presented Democratic voters with the ultimate lesser-of-two-evils contest. Given the limited alternatives, we prefer Van de Kamp.

After eight years of George Deukmejian, California is badly in need of change. The Republican governor has done his best to bring the Reagan-Bush agenda to the nation's most populous state: He's slashed social spending, cut taxes for the wealthy, destroyed one of the best, most progressive supreme courts in the United States, done his best to destroy the Coastal Commission and the Occupational Safety and Health Administration. . . the list is endless.

For Democrats, 1990 is a crucial election year. The next governor will have the power to approve or reject the Legislature's plan for reapportionment — the drawing of new congressional and legislative district lines that must follow every national census. A Republican governor would push for districts that undercut the power of black, Hispanic and Asian voters, minimize the clout of low-income people and generally favor conservative Republicans. The balance of political power in the state for the next decade is at stake.

In 1990, the Democratic Party ought to be offering a real alternative in California. Instead, the two Democratic candidates for governor are doing what Democrats seem to do so well: Spending huge sums of money bashing each other with half-truths and distortions, and ignoring the real issues facing the state. Feinstein and Van de Kamp are acting like Michael Dukakis, running in fear from the "L" word and trying to outdo each other in sounding more Republican than the Republicans.

At this point, it's almost impossible to take anything either of the candidates says very seriously: Their "debates" have been a series of pre-rehearsed sound bites, their position papers carefully crafted to appeal to a certain constituency defined as important by a campaign consultant. But Feinstein and Van de Kamp both have long records in government. It's possible to predict what they would do by what we know they have done.

Based on the way she ran San Francisco, Dianne Feinstein should never be allowed to run California. In nine years as mayor, Feinstein came as close as anyone has ever come to wrecking one of the world's great cities. She effectively turned city planning policy over to the developers and speculators, allowing the construction of some 29 million square feet of highrise office space. She cut secret deals that virtually gave PG&E and Santa Fe Pacific Realty blank checks drawn on the city treasury. Meanwhile, she let community health clinics, neighborhood libraries, public safety, affordable housing and welfare programs crumble. She left the city bankrupt.

Van de Kamp is no angel, either. As attorney general, he has defended the state Department of Forestry against lawsuits by environmentalists opposed to clear-cut logging. He is still defending state health officials in a lawsuit over parental-consent requirements for minors seeking abortions. He has vigorously promoted death penalty cases. Those weren't cases he had to take; he could have refused to put the resources of his office into causes he ostensibly opposed, and forced the state agencies involved to seek outside counsel.

He also could have joined with consumers and fought against the Diablo Canyon rate settlement, which will force PG&E's customers to pay for $3.4 billion worth of the company's mistakes. Instead, he cut a private deal with PG&E and Public Utilities Commission lawyers and stuck his constituents with the tab.

But Van de Kamp has taken a few good stands on public-records and open government issues, and has backed some progressive environmental causes (he helped write "Big Green," the comprehensive environmental initiative headed for the November ballot). He has vowed that no peripheral canal will be built under his administration, and recently came up with a few reasonable proposals — such as raising the tax rate for people earning more than $100,000 a year and reducing the business entertainment tax deduction — to fund education and social programs.

California deserves better, but the stakes are too high to sit this one out. Hold your nose, pray for mercy and vote for John Van de Kamp — he's not much, but he's not Dianne Feinstein.

Lieutenant Governor,
LEO MCCARTHY

Leo McCarthy, who lost badly to Pete Wilson in the 1988 Senate race, is seeking re-election to one of the lowest-profile (and some would say, least important) offices in the state. If, as many predict, Wilson emerges in November as California's next governor, McCarthy would be doomed to another four years as the less-than-loyal, less-than-trusted liberal Democratic lieutenant to a conservative Republican governor. We're not sure why McCarthy wants to keep the job, since he hasn't used it to take a leadership role in the party or to promote a progressive policy agenda. But he's running unopposed in the primary, and we see no reason not to endorse him.

Secretary of State,
MARCH FONG EU

Once again, we're stuck endorsing Eu over a little-known opponent who hasn't run any sort of credible campaign. That's too bad: The Secretary of State's Office could be an important force for ballot access, public information and voter registration efforts, but Eu has done little in those areas. We're still waiting for a good liberal Democrat to take her on in a campaign that calls for same-day voter registration, eased restrictions for new parties to get on the ballot, extended vote-by-mail programs and other creative approaches to increasing the state's dismal voter turnout.

Controller,
GRAY DAVIS

Gray Davis is running unopposed in the Democratic primary. He's been a tolerable, if less than inspiring controller, and we suspect he's just biding his time until the next major statewide office opens up.

Treasurer,
KATHLEEN BROWN

Following in her brother Jerry's footsteps, Kathleen Brown is seeking to use her family name (she's the daughter of Governor Pat Brown) to win election to a low-profile statewide office, no doubt as a way to establish a political base for a run at a bigger job. Jerry turned a political backwater into a stepping stone to the Governor's Office when he became one of the first and only activist secretaries of state in recent history. (At one point, he even thrust himself into the Watergate scandal by threatening to revoke the notary public license of Richard Nixon's Southern California accountant.)

Perhaps Kathleen Brown will do the same. Her connections to PG&E make us nervous — her brother-in-law, Joe Kelly, is the utility's general counsel, a fact that has left the entire family with a special-interest taint. But we'll endorse her for treasurer.

Attorney General,
NO ENDORSEMENT

The race for attorney general was perhaps best described by one of the two candidate's campaign staffers, who called it "Robocop versus Mr. Potato Head." An even less charitable (but no less insightful) observer says the campaign pits "an incompetent hack against a very dangerous man."

However you describe it, the choice between Arlo Smith and Ira Reiner is no choice at all. We can't endorse either of them.

Reiner, the district attorney of Los Angeles County, is polished, telegenic and slick. He's a master at evading tough questions and he loves to make headlines. His supporters claim the McMartin case, the high-profile child-abuse prosecution that Reiner's office bungled, was blown far out of proportion. If it weren't for the media, they say, the whole affair would have been nothing more than a routine case, and when the prosecution lost, nobody would have made much of a fuss.

But we suspect it was Reiner who blew the case out of proportion, in the interest of attracting media attention. Had he won, it would have been a great campaign tool; since he lost, he wants to dismiss it. It doesn't speak well for his judgment.

Reiner is also a full-fledged law-and-order type. His primary solution to crime is to build more prisons and lock up more convicts. He told us he believes most violent criminals can't be rehabilitated, and should simply be "warehoused" away from the rest of society. He strongly supports Prop. 115, the civil liberties nightmare masquerading as a "victims' rights" measure on the June ballot. To his credit, he's moved to prosecute business engaged in environmental destruction and consumer fraud, but his reactionary approach to criminal justice makes him unfit to be attorney general.

Smith, the San Francisco DA, is a whole lot milder — in his manner and his politics. In fact, he's been so mild-mannered that he's been an almost useless prosecutor. He won't go after major political corruption cases. He won't speak out about sleaze if it involves anyone who can fight back. His consumer fraud unit has been virtually invisible. He lets the police get away with consistently overcharging suspects, overcrowding the jails and forcing him to dismiss or reduce more than 70 percent of the felony cases he gets.

What Smith does is take on the easy ones, the cases that have strong political backing and media support — cases like the ballpark investigation, which should have been dropped long ago. Smith lets mayors and congress-people push him around.

There's a positive side to Smith, too. He's sincerely interested in finding alternatives to prison terms and helping steer kids out of the criminal-justice system and into social programs. He claims to support the death penalty, but he's somewhat half-hearted about it; when he was a deputy attorney general, he never went out of his way to send anyone to the gas chamber. He's friendly and even likable. But if he has so little courage that he can't stand up to Art Agnos and Nancy Pelosi, we fear he'd get knocked around like a ping-pong ball in the rough-and-tumble world of the state Capitol.

This one's a toss-up. Vote your conscience.

Insurance Commissioner,
WALTER ZELMAN

Until last year, most Californians didn't even know they had an insurance commissioner. The office, appointed by the governor, has been a lackadaisical, ineffective oversight agency for one of the most profitable and powerful industries in the state. Incumbent commissioner Roxani Gillespie has never prosecuted a single consumer complaint against an insurance company, although her office receives more than 50,000 such complaints a year.

Proposition 103, the insurance-reform measure on last November's ballot, changed all that. Among other things, the measure turned insurance commissioner into an elected job, setting off a full-scale political war among competing consumer advocates, politicians and business groups that saw the office as a locus of tremendous power.

Unfortunately, the result has been a splintered consumer movement. Three candidates are competing for the consumer vote: Conway Collis, a Board of Equalization member who has the backing of Prop. 103's author, Harvey Rosenfeld; Ray Bourhis, a consumer-advocate lawyer, and Walter Zelman, the former director of California Common Cause.

Collis has no right to claim the consumer-advocate title that Rosenfeld has bestowed on him. He's been fined by the Fair Political Practices Commission and investigated by the FBI for campaign-finance violations and has established a clear record as a special-interest politician. Collis would be a terrible insurance commissioner, no significant improvement over Gillespie. Unfortunately, he has name recognition, lots of money and (gasp) Rosenfeld's credibility. So the main goal of this race has to be stopping him from winning.

Our first choice for the office is Ray Bourhis. Bourhis has spent much of his adult life fighting in the legal trenches against the insurance industry, and often, he's won. He knows insurance law inside and out, and his commitment to dismantling the corporate trusts, protecting consumers' rights and lowering rates is unquestionable.

What really makes Bourhis appealing is his passion. He's not just angry about insurance fraud; he's obsessed. And he's not a politician.

But the characteristics that would make him such a great insurance commissioner don't make him a great candidate. He hasn't raised much money. He hasn't put together a serious campaign. He hasn't collected endorsements and forged alliances. He doesn't like to compromise. That means he doesn't have much chance of winning.

We'd love to see Bourhis get the job. But we'd also be very satisfied with Walter Zelman. And Zelman has a real chance at beating Collis and the other disastrous candidates.

Zelman isn't an expert in insurance regulation. He is, however, an expert in consumer advocacy, and he has the experience and political savvy to run a major statewide office and to deal with the intense political pressure that will descend on the first elected commissioner. On the issues, he and Bourhis take similar stands; if he hires the right people (a Ray Bourhis type, for example), he could be a tremendous force for insurance-consumers' rights.

Zelman has the name recognition, the endorsements (every major consumer advocate and group in the state except Rosenfeld, as well as the Sacramento Bee and the Merury News, as of press time) and almost enough money ($160,000) to finish first.

Bourhis and Zelman would both be fine insurance commissioners. Zelman would be more predictable, Bourhis far more exciting. But it would be a tragedy if neither one made it to the November election.

This race is too important for consumers' rights to go down in flames. Vote for Zelman, for all the good, practical, hard-headed reasons. And shed a tear for California, where all too often the very best candidate just can't win.

Board of Equalization,
1st District
WILLIAM BENNETT

Bill Bennett is the conscience of the Board of Equalization. His efforts to prevent big utilities from avoiding their fair tax burden have made him a critical member of the agency, and his crusades on behalf of consumers, ratepayers and the public interest have made him one of the best elected officials in California. We're happy to endorse him.

Member, state Board of Equalization, 2nd District
BRAD SHERMAN

The Second District of the Board of Equalization, which sets tax assessments for utilities and oversees local assessors, is huge: It runs all the way from San Francisco to Los Angeles, and takes in parts of the Central Valley. When incumbent Conway Collis gave up his seat to run for insurance commissioner, half a dozen candidates jumped into the race to replace him. The most prominent are Brad Sherman, an L.A. tax lawyer and CPA, and Lou Papan, former Assembly member from Daly City. Sherman, who has a long record of public-interest work, is the clear choice.

Brad Sherman is an unlikely crusader for political reform. This is his first campaign, and he's clearly uncomfortable with the cocktail-party hand-shaking-and-fund-raising circuit. He admits he's something of a nerd.

But he's a nerd with a cause, and he has a remarkable track record as a lawyer and tax lobbyist for some of the state's most important progressive organizations. He's fascinated with the arcane details of tax regulations, but he understands the bottom line: "Tax law," he told us, "is class warfare with footnotes."

Sherman has a base of support in groups like Common Cause and Voter Revolt, and he's become a respected figure in the narrow circle of Sacramento tax lobbyists. Unlike most of those lobbyists, he tends to testify on behalf of public interest groups — and he has been quite successful. In 1985, after Congress changed the tax laws and the state had to do the same, Sherman teamed up with former Tom Bates aide Lenny Goldberg to form the California Tax Reform Association, and the two had a significant impact on the shape of the state tax codes.

Papan has a long history of political sleaze. As chairman of the Assembly Rules Committee, he was known as "The Enforcer," Speaker Willie Brown's hatchet man. When he lost a brutal race for state Senate to Quentin Kopp in 1986, he disappeared from elected office, and we can see no possible reason to let him come back. Vote for Brad Sherman.

5th Congressional District
NANCY PELOSI

Nancy Pelosi has been on the right side of all but a few key votes. Unfortunately, she is sometimes too quick to sign on to liberal compromise agreements — votes on Contra aid and flag burning come to mind. Instead of someone so eager to win short-term gains by playing consensus politics, San Francisco deserves to be represented in Congress by someone who, like Ron Dellums, is willing to fight the long, hard battle for serious progressive change. We endorse Pelosi, but if she runs for re-election again, we hope she faces a strong progressive challenger.

BARBARA BOXER

Barbara Boxer has been a strong liberal voice on the House Armed Services Committee — although she is absolutely wrong in her fight, along with Pelosi, to save the Presidio. Converting local bases should be a long-term economic boon to the Bay Area economy. And like Pelosi, she is overeager to cut deals. Boxer may not run for this seat again — there is talk of a 1992 Senate bid — but if she does, she should not be able to run unopposed. Meanwhile, however, we endorse her for another term.

State Senator, 8th District,
JIM WACHOB

We don't envy the person who wins the distinction of taking on independent Senator Quentin Kopp in November. Kopp is a proven vote-getter and ferocious campaigner, and has worked hard over the past four years to build a constituent base. In fact, it's a sign of his popularity and political power that Mayor Agnos, a bitter Kopp foe, was unable to convince any prominent local officials (like Assemblywoman Jackie Speier) to challenge Kopp under the Democratic banner.

But Kopp, like almost all incumbents, needs a regular challenge, and we wish Wachob well of it. The District 8 Democratic Club activist has a long record of community activism. He's not part of the Agnos/Willie Brown/Nancy Pelosi cabal, and we expect he'll run a decent (and almost certainly hopeless) race against Kopp in November.

16th Assembly District
NO ENDORSEMENT

Incumbent John Burton is running unopposed in the Democratic primary for the 16th District. We like some of the things he's been doing in the Assembly, bottling up dangerous bills as chair of the Public Safety Committee, for example. But Burton was elected as a Willie Brown lieutenant — his comeback campaign was funded in large part by the speaker — and he is following in his patron's footsteps. Burton works as a lawyer/lobbyist, with a client list in recent years that closely parallels Brown's — Pacific Gas & Electric, Underwater World at Pier 39 and Santa Fe/Southern Pacific are some examples. Burton has refused to disclose his clients, what he earns from them or what he does for them, and he consciously obscured his ties to

NO ENDORSEMENT

Assembly Speaker Willie Brown, who is running unopposed in the primary, has become a millionaire representing the major developers that operate in San Francisco — Olympia and York, Santa Fe-Southern Pacific, Pier 39, Gerald Hines, etc. We don't believe powerful statewide politicians should be using their influence as lobbyists on local issues. And numerous reports in the Bay Guardian suggest that the speaker may use his position to influence bills before the Legislature that would impact his private law clients. Brown assures his public he sleeps well at night, knowing he puts the needs of his constituents before the needs of his clients. But sound public policy requires public oversight, not blind faith. Until the speaker agrees to release a list of his law clients, how much they pay him and what types of work he performs for them, he should not hold public office.

We wish this was a difficult decision to reach, that Brown was such an aggressive champion of the progressive agenda that, his law practice aside, he was sorely needed in Sacramento. But it isn't and he isn't. Under Brown's leadership, the Legislature has grown increasingly ineffective, paralyzed by legislative gridlock and prostituted to special interests. It has failed to deal with the crises of the day, such as education and transportation. Its recent efforts at ethics reform is a case of too little, too late, and the Legislature would never have tackled the problem if it wasn't forced to by a massive public outcry. Brown bears much personal responsibility for this sorry state of affairs.

JACKIE SPEIER

As always, we hate to see anyone run unopposed. Politicians grow lazy and arrogant unless challenged. We have no trouble, however, endorsing incumbent Jackie Speier for another term. Although we would hope for a more aggressive, creative and visionary leader, Speier has done good work on many issues, like health care and the environment. She deserves another term.

STATE PROPOSITIONS

YES

Housing and homeless bond act of 1990

Prop. 107 would allow the state to sell $150 million in bonds for new housing construction, home purchase assistance, residential hotel rehabilitation and emergency shelter construction. Most of the money, $100 million, would go for the construction of new, low-income rental housing, and $25 million money would go toward low-interest second mortgages for low-income individuals and families. The second mortgages would help lower the cost of first mortgages, thereby making home ownership more accessible.

Low-income residential hotels would also benefit from the passage of Proposition 107: $15 million would go into rehabilitating these buildings, which provide housing for many people who would otherwise be forced to live on the streets. The remaining $10 million would go in the form of grants to local non-profits for the purchase and rehabilitation of homeless shelters.

Proposition 107 is a step in the right direction, but only a small step. Much, much more has to be done statewide to address the chronic problems of housing shortages. It's also a backward way to address the problem. New, progressive taxes would cost less in the long run than bonds and impact less on those least able to pay. But given the affordable housing crisis, we have to back Prop. 107.

YES

Transit bonds

Proposition 108 calls for a $1 billion state bond issue to raise revenue for building new intercity, commuter and urban rail transit lines. It outlines specific projects: Intercity rail would link the Bay Area to L.A., Fresno, Sacramento, Auburn and Eureka. The measure would support San Francisco-San Jose commuter rail, and add extensions to Bart, Caltrans and SF Muni.

The proposal deserves our strong support. The catch is, the measure is written so it can't take effect unless Proposition 111 is also passed. However, a "yes" vote on Prop. 108, regardless of the fate of Prop. 111, would give the state a mandate for rail transit. Vote yes on 108.

NO

Governor's review of legislation, legislative deadlines

Prop. 109 would allow the governor an extra 29 days to consider legislation before deciding to sign or veto it. Currently, when the Legislature sends the governor a bill, he or she must act on it within 12 days. A longer period would only serve to promote more private meetings, more back-room lobbying and more delay on legislation. Vote no.

YES

Property tax exemption for severely disabled persons

Prop. 110 is the latest in a series of exemptions to Prop. 13 designed to aid specific groups of homeowners. Senior citizens already have the right to move from one house to another within the same county without paying higher property taxes. This would extend the exemption to the severely disabled, and would allow disabled people to improve their houses to increase accessibility without paying taxes on those improvements.

What California really needs is an overhaul of Prop. 13. But for now, vote yes on 110.

Proposition 111

NO

Traffic congestion relief

Proposition 111 is a strange and difficult proposal, because it's about two completely separate issues, both of crucial significance: It's about whether Californians are willing to pay more taxes for important government services. It's also about whether the state should spend billions on expanding the highway system.

On the tax side, the measure would loosen the "Gann limit" on state and local spending, allowing it to rise with the growth of the California economy. This long overdue reform would allow desperately needed increases in public spending for schools, health care, other social services and infrastructure.

In addition, Prop. 111 would increase the gasoline tax (by 9 cents a gallon in 1995) and truck weight fees, to generate $18.3 billion for transportation.

These revenue proposals are sound and necessary. The problem with Prop. 111 is in the way it would spend the transportation funds.

Prop. 111 is essentially a highway bill. Five-sixths of every dollar would wind up paying for new concrete and other highway-related projects; only one-sixth would go for mass transit. More highways won't solve traffic problems; highways, like jails, fill up as fast as you can build them.

Proposition 111 defines the transportation problem as "traffic congestion." Its supporters estimate that the number of cars on California's roads will increase from 23 million to 32 million by 2010. The measure is designed to keep these cars moving, by building more highways and by devising ways to run ever more cars on the roads (from ramp lights to staggered work shifts).

But we don't have to let cars multiply like rabbits and overrun our lives. Expanding the highway system just means ever-larger traffic jams — and more poison in our air, more global warming, and more resources drained from our public and personal funds (see story, p. 8).

Highway construction, besides adding to car use, contributes to the suburban-sprawl pattern of community development that is devouring California's open space and, in turn, making more highway construction and car use necessary.

We need to make a sharp turn away from these patterns, with combined transportation and land-use policies that direct growth to existing urban areas, build communities compact enough to make public transit, bicycling and walking practical transportation choices — and develop a comprehensive public transportation system that provides people with truly efficient, convenient and environmentally sound alternatives to automobile use.

Prop. 111's revenue proposals loosening the Gann limit and raising highway-use taxes — are necessary and important. In fact, they're so important we're convinced that they will have to be done. If Prop. 111 is defeated, a new proposal to do them will be on the ballot soon.

But Prop. 111 also mandates the state to continue recklessly driving transportation policy in the wrong direction, devoting most of its resources to the growing car-and-highway monster that is devouring California. It's time to just say "Stop."

Vote no.

YES

State officials, ethics, salaries. Open meetings.

We welcome any move that would limit the effect of campaign contributions or financial interests on members of the state Legislature. Prop. 112 isn't perfect, but it's a step in the right direction.

As it is now, legislators can accept campaign contributions and "honorariums" from special interests that have business before the Legislature. In many cases, those hefty fees go directly to legislators who do as little as stand up and wave to a banquet crowd. Prop. 112 would outlaw honoraria and speaking fees.

Prop. 112 would also prohibit legislators from accepting unlimited gifts from special interests, and would bar former legislators and other former state officials from lobbying the state government for a one year after leaving office. And it would prohibit state officials from taking action on any matter in which they have a financial interest, a prohibition that is sorely lacking in present laws. And it would extend many of the provisions of the Ralph M. Brown Open Meetings Law to the state Legislature.

Finally, Proposition 112 would establish a citizen's commission to determine the annual salaries of elected state officials. All of those provisions are worthwhile, and would go a long way toward cleaning up the ocean of sleaze that is choking California government.

But Prop. 112 doesn't address one of the most serious problems in state government: The so-called "Willie Brown loophole" that allows state legislators to represent private clients without fully disclosing their client lists, fees and the nature of the work they perform. That loophole lets Brown, as the Speaker of the Assembly, take huge legal fees from big businesses like PG&E and Santa Fe Pacific Realty that have interests in the Legislature. When Brown introduces a bill, it's impossible to know whether he is working for his constituents or for his private clients.

Real political reform would severely restrict a legislator's outside income and require full disclosure of private business clients. But Prop. 112 is a start. Vote yes.

YES

Chiropractic practice

Proposition 113 would require chiropractors to re-register annually on their birthdates. As it is now, the registration time is January 1st of each year. The proposed change makes a great deal of sense for both the individuals and the Board of Chiropractors Examiners.

Proposition 113 would also raise fines and penalties for non-compliance with the Chiropractic Act. Vote yes.

NO

Murder of a peace officer

Proposition 114 is an innocuous-sounding measure that would have the effect of increasing the number of death penalty cases in California. The Briggs Act, Prop. 7, approved in 1978 and amended in 1979, mandates that anyone who knowingly kills a peace officer face life imprisonment or the death penalty. Prop. 114, backed by conservative Southern California legislators, would expand the categories of "peace officers" to include a wider range of state and local investigators and officers — like dental examiners, Horse Racing Board members, Division of Labor Standards inspectors and numerous others. Killing anybody — a homeless alcoholic, a cop or a dental inspector — is a serious crime, and state law already provides for serious punishment. The last thing we need is more death penalty cases. Vote no.

Proposition 115

NO NO NO

Criminal law

Proposition 115 bills itself as an anti-crime measure. That's a cheap, misleading way to convince the voters to approve yet another set of repressive measures that would further erode civil liberties in California. Prop. 115 won't stop crime. It won't unclog the courts. It won't provide speedy trials and swift justice. It will just put more people behind bars, at more cost to the state.

Prop. 115 is based on the false assumption that taking away rights from people accused of crimes will make us safer. The measure eliminates all the rights the California Constitution gives defendants in criminal cases if they are broader than rights guaranteed by the federal government, specifically mentioning the rights of privacy, due process and equal protection under the law, among others.

Most public debate about Prop. 115 has focused on its elimination of state protection for the right of privacy, which has been used by courts to defend women's right to abortion. Prop. 115 supporters say the measure would not affect abortion rights, but many legal experts have said that if the U.S. Supreme Court overturns Roe vs. Wade, an increasingly likely possibility, this provision of Prop. 115 could well lead to criminal prosecution for abortion.

If there is even a possibility that courts would interpret the measure in this way, that is reason enough to defeat Prop. 115. But the measure also threatens a broad range of other rights, from the confidentiality of medical records to the right to pass out leaflets at shopping centers, to privacy in sexual practices. The measure specifically mentions equal protection under the law as an area of rights to be restricted, thus weakening the ability of minorities to defend themselves from discriminatory prosecution. It also adds to the crimes punishable by the death penalty or life without parole, and for the first time allows a sentence of life without parole for crimes committed by minors (age 16 and 17).

Prop. 115 supporters say the measure would streamline criminal court cases by eliminating pretrial hearings in cases where a grand jury has indicted the defendant, and limiting pretrial hearings when they occur, by, among other things, allowing hearsay evidence by police, limiting the information given to defense attorneys before the trial and eliminating witnesses from pretrial hearings.

But opponents point out that now about 95 percent of criminal cases are resolved in the pretrial hearing and never get to trial. Skipping pretrial hearings or eliminating witnesses and evidence would mean that more cases would go to trial, requiring more judges, juries, lawyers and time.

Prop. 115 supporters appeal to the public's fear of crime: Their argument in the voters' handbook uses melodramatic, all-capitalized slogans and invokes the names of famous criminals and liberal ex-state Supreme Court Justice Rose Bird. But their proposals restricting rights and expanding the death penalty have been shown to be ineffective in reducing crime. These false solutions threaten the civil liberties of millions of Californians, and do nothing to address the social causes of crime or the need for rehabilitation of criminals. Vote no on Prop. 115.

YES

Rail bonds

Proposition 116 calls for a $1.99 billion state bond issue to raise revenue for building new intercity, commuter and urban rail transit lines. It identifies the specific projects to be funded, including extension of Caltrain on the Peninsula, intercity rail links from the Bay Area to L.A. and Fresno, extension of BART, additions to Muni and other improvements in the Bay Area and elsewhere. In addition, it provides for ferry, bicycle and other non-highway commuting facilities.

We're not terribly happy with the process behind this measure: Proponents clearly lined up supporters — elected officials, business groups and public-interest organizations — in certain parts of the state by promising to include transportation projects in their regions. But that's not enough reason to oppose what is essentially a worthwhile measure.

Prop. 116 would help move our transportation system in an environmentally and economically positive direction, with the expansion of rail and other non-automobile transportation. Unlike the similar measure, Proposition 108, it can go into effect regardless of the vote on Prop. 111. Vote yes.

YES

Wildlife protection

Proposition 117 would create a $30 million annual fund, for 30 years, to be used to protect a number of endangered species in the state and to increase protections for their habitats. Specifically targeted are mountain lions, deer and waterfowl.

The fund would also be used to improve, buy and maintain wetlands and other animal habitats. The measure would ensure that the money be split equally between the northern and southern halves of the state. The fund itself would come from the tobacco tax and other state sources.

This measure makes a great deal of sense. As the state's population continues to expand, wildlife and their habitats are threatened, if not destroyed outright. Proposition 117 would slow that destruction.

Proposition 118

NO

Reapportionment and legislative ethics

At the beginning of each decade, after the national census is completed, the state Legislature redraws the boundaries of Assembly, state Senate, Board of Equalization and congressional districts.

The process has never been squeaky clean and impartial. In 1980, Congressman Phil Burton was able to orchestrate a redrawing of lines that created a number of new Democratic strongholds, including a safe seat for his brother, and that undermined Republican legislators. It was a blatant example of "gerrymandering" — and it has gone on in American politics for 200 years.

When Democrats are in power, they gerrymander districts for Democrats. When Republicans are in power, they do the same. The process, at its core is, and always has been, political, and there is no easy way to remove politics from reapportionment.

Proposition 118 would require that any reapportionment plan be approved by a two-thirds vote in both state houses, as opposed to the simple majority needed now. It would also require that the plan be approved by the voters.

None of these changes would have any real effect on reapportionment, the process would still remain wildly partisan, as it is today.

The sponsors of Proposition 118, including conservative L.A. commentator Bruce Herschensohn, have attempted to attract support for this measure by tossing in a few weak and meaningless "ethics" reforms. Voters should not be fooled; the law would allow elected officials to police themselves, a process that has never worked and never will. Common Cause opposes this measure; so do we. Vote no.

NO

Reapportionment commission

Proposition 119 is yet another attempt to change the reapportionment process in a way that it cannot be altered. Proposition 119 would create a 12-member commission that would draw the boundaries for Assembly, state Senate, Board of Equalization and congressional districts.

The commission would be chosen by a three-member panel of retired Appeals Court justices. Five members of the commission would be Republicans, and five would be Democrats. Two would be without major party affiliation. If this commission were unable in two attempts to come up with a redistricting plan, then the task would be taken up by the California Supreme Court.

As opponents, including Dan Lowenstein, one of the authors of the Political Reform Act, point out, the commission wouldn't be any less political than the Legislature, and would be less accountable. Vote no.

NO

Prison construction bonds

Proposition 120 would allow the state to float a $450 million bond issue for the construction of new prisons. In 1988, a similar measure for $817 million was passed by the voters. California seems obsessed with building prisons. If a small fraction of this money were put into education and social programs, the prisons wouldn't be needed.

At this time, the state of California has approximately $6 billion in bond debt accumulated from past bond measures. $1.4 billion goes into prisons. $1.6 billion worth of that bond debt relates to schools.

Vote no on 120.

YES

Higher education facilities bonds

Proposition 121 would create a $450 million bond issue for the construction and rehabilitation of facilities in the state's public universities, community colleges and other higher education facilities. The system serves approximately 2 million students and has 138 campuses.

Prop. 121 money would be used to upgrade and construct new buildings. Rehabilitation would include asbestos removal, earthquake upgrades, upgrades of classrooms and libraries and other health and safety improvements. Better schools than jails; vote yes.

YES

Earthquake safety bonds

Proposition 122 would allow the state to sell $300 million in bonds for state and local public facility upgrades. Such upgrades are long overdue in many cases and could save thousands of lives in the near and long-term future. Vote yes.

Proposition 123

YES

School facilities bonds

Proposition 123 would allow the state to sell $800 million in bonds to rehabilitate and construct elementary and secondary school facilities. $500 million would go toward the construction of new public schools. As much as $260 million would be used for the upgrade of public school buildings throughout the state. This bond issue will start to help the state upgrade its woefully under-funded public school system. Vote yes.

SF CANDIDATES

Judges, as a general rule, don't like to run for office. In most cases, sitting judges retire before their terms are up, allowing the governor to appoint replacements. And when an incumbent is challenged, the remaining judges line up behind him or her and help defeat the challenger.

This year is different. San Francisco voters will decide five contested judicial elections June 5th. Two seats are open, and three incumbent judges are being challenged; chances are at least one of them will lose his seat.

All five races are important. In San Francisco, one of the most liberal, Democratic cities in the nation, the courts are becoming increasingly conservative. Eleven of the 28 Superior Court judges are Deukmejian appointees, and all but two of them are former prosecutors. Only five of the 28 are women.

The courts remain largely mysterious, closed societies. Few judges ever get out into the community (except when they're forced to run for reelection). Court administration is conducted behind closed doors, and few incumbent judges have any real understanding of public-access issues.

With all the judicial candidates, we discussed several issues: opening up the monthly judges meetings on court administration, leading the fight for weekend bail-hearing shifts (to help jail overcrowding) and enforcing the Brown Act and Public Records Act. Most of the judges were ill-informed and largely uninterested in those concerns.

San Francisco voters have a chance to begin changing the situation June 5th. Several strong, progressive candidates are running serious campaigns for judicial seats, and their election would bring the courts a step closer to addressing the concerns of the community.

Superior Court Judge, Office 3

ALEX SALDAMANDO

This race is highly unusual, pitting two sitting Municipal Court judges against each other for a promotion to the Superior Court seat that opened up when Judge Mortin R. Colvin announced in February that he would not seek another term. Alex Saldamando and J. Dominique Olcomendy have served for more than a decade on the Muni Court, and both have apparently decided that they aren't likely to get appointed to a higher position under a Republican administration. Both are credible, qualified candidates. Although neither strikes us as a dynamic force for reforming the criminal justice system, we're happy to endorse Saldamando.

Judge Saldamando has a record of public-interest advocacy. He served with California Rural Legal Assistance before Governor Jerry Brown appointed him to the bench in 1974. He complains that the courts "are not in the 20th century," and as Law and Motion judge in Muni Court, he set up a conference-call system for lawyers to alleviate court overcrowding. He seems sincere in his support for creative sentencing alternatives and is at least moderately familiar with public-access law. He said he would have no problem with the press and public attending judges meetings.

Judge Olcomendy, who refers to himself as "the only Democrat and the only Basque" Deukmejian ever appointed to the courts, is also qualified for the seat. But he lacks Saldamando's public-interest record and clear interest in open access to the courts. Vote for Saldamando.

Kay Tsenin

KAY TSENIN

Kay Tsenin is doing something most judges hate to see: She's challenging an incumbent judge who was recently appointed by Deukmejian to fill a vacant seat (and, presumably, to avoid an open-seat election in liberal San Francisco). Judge Carlos Bea, who took office Feb. 20th, is a pleasant enough person, and is reasonably well qualified to serve on the bench, but local public-interest and defense lawyers describe his politics as "reactionary," and in his conversation with us, he showed little interest in progressive court reforms. He makes much of the fact that he was one of the first Hispanics to graduate from Stanford Law School, but as a member of the Latino Democratic Club pointed out during the club's endorsement meeting, he hasn't done a whole lot for the Latino community since (the club, significantly, didn't endorse him).

Tsenin, on the other hand, has a long record of public-interest service and, after 16 years in private practice and a stint as a pro-tem judge, is well qualified for the bench. She told us she sees the courts as an extension of public service (a statement that's a breath of fresh air). Unlike most judges, she said she would like to be assigned to Juvenile Court, because she wants to work with children and families. Tsenin has worked with the National Organization for Women in freedom-of-information cases, so she is familiar with public-access law. She helped draft rape and hate-crimes legislation, some of which has been adopted by the California Legislature.

Tsenin is not only the better candidate, she would be a much-needed progressive, feminist presence on the Superior Court.

Superior Court Judge, Office 15

DONNA HITCHENS

It's hard to imagine a better, more qualified candidate for Superior Court than Donna Hitchens — and it's hard to imagine someone more in need of a challenge than the incumbent, Jerome Benson. We enthusiastically support Hitchens for this seat.

The progressive community is strongly, consistently backing Hitchens, who has a long record of working on legal and other community issues. She is bright, energetic and full of ideas about how to make the courts work better for the people. She's worked for many years in alternative dispute resolution and would like to bring some of that experience to the Superior Court, to get cases out of the courtroom (and keep legal costs down). She wants to explore ways of avoiding the terrible logjam that occurs every Monday morning when dozens of lawyers are all scheduled for preliminary hearings at 9 am (and many have to wait several hours, billing their clients for the time). One of her suggestions: Follow the lead of Los Angeles and have lawyers use telephone pagers so they can go back to their offices while awaiting their turn at a pre-trial conference.

Hitchens was a staff attorney at Equal Rights Advocates for six years, staff counsel for the American Civil Liberties Union for two years and since 1985 has been in private practice, mostly representing small businesses, nonprofits and individuals. She is a co-founder of Bay Area Lawyers for Individual Freedom and a former chair of the Commission on the Status of Women.

Judge Benson, like so many Deukmejian appointees, is a former prosecutor, who served for 17 years in the San Francisco DA's Office. Benson told us he considers most of what judges do to be private business, and he said he would have a hard time considering allowing a reporter to cover the judges meetings. To his credit, he's very familiar with access issues like open courtrooms and the Public Records Act — but he's exactly the sort of law-and-order, lock-'em-up-and-throw-away-the-key type who doesn't belong on the San Francisco bench.

Vote for Donna Hitchens.

Ellen Chaitin

Municipal Court Judge, Office 1

ELLEN CHAITIN

This is one of the toughest decisions we faced for the June 5th election. An opening on the Muni Court has attracted four serious candidates, three of whom are well qualified for the job. We like William O'Connor and James Harrigan, but on balance, we favor Ellen Chaitin.

Chaitin has been a lawyer for 18 years, with most of her work in criminal defense. That alone is a plus, for a court system stacked with former prosecutors. She has worked with the Bar Association of San Francisco, helped found the Women in Prison Legal Education Project and served on the Delinquency Prevention Commission. Chaitin's main handicap is the fact that she has the appearance of being Mayor Art Agnos's hand-picked candidate. That's hurt her in several endorsements (a fact that suggests the mayor is increasingly becoming a negative, not a positive, factor in community opinion). But it's not an entirely fair characterization — Chaitin is, indeed, endorsed by Agnos, but we believe her when she says she decided to run at the urging of others in the public-interest law community.

O'Connor has extensive experience as a private lawyer, with 15 years of criminal and civil work, as well as five years of occasional work as a pro tem Muni Court judge. He strikes us as a conscientious, reasonable man who would be a fair judge. He argues for an increase in the number of pro tem judges to handle some of the pre-trial work and settlement conferences that now clog the Muni Courts. He told us he believes the public should be allowed to attend judges meetings, and although he said he is personally opposed to abortion, he also opposes any change in Roe vs. Wade. But he said he would "probably" vote for Proposition 115, suggesting a lack of overriding concern with the rights of criminal defendants and a more conservative judicial philosophy than we would like.

Harrigan, a lawyer for the San Francisco Sheriff's Office, was rated "exceptionally well qualified" by the San Francisco Bar Association (although by most accounts, the rating process was so badly politicized that we have a hard time taking it seriously). Harrigan has worked as a public defender in Oakland, a private lawyer handling civil cases and a representative of the Sheriff's Department, giving him some of the broadest experience of any of the four candidates.

Julie Tang, the fourth candidate, is a lawyer with the District Attorney's Office, but has handled almost no trial work. More disturbingly, as a member of the Community College Board for many years, she has been among the most committed promoters of government secrecy and one of the worst foes of public access of any elected official in the Bay Area. Based on that record alone, we can't possibly back her for judge.

Harrigan and O'Connor are both decent candidates, but on the basis of her public-interest background (and the need for more women on the Municipal Court), we'll endorse Chaitin.

Municipal Court, Office 3
LILLIAN K. SING

Lillian Sing is an exception to the rule: an incumbent judge who deserves strong support for re-election.

Sing is the sort of judge San Francisco needs — an experienced, competent jurist, an Asian woman who has not forgotten her community and a leader in the effort to make the courts more accessible and open to the public. Sing helped lead the "Access to Justice" forum, is active in the California Judges Association and helped promote the media law hotline run by Judge Rod Duncan of Oakland. As Presiding Judge, she started the pro tem judges program, helping clear up some of the court backlog.

Sing's challenger, Jerome DeFillipo, is a former San Francisco Police Department lawyer whose main program seems to be imposing the maximum sentence on all drug offenders. That's not only an inappropriate thing for a judicial candidate to say in public (judges are supposed to consider the facts, case by case, before imposing sentences), it's foolish and insensitive.

By all means, vote to retain Judge Sing.

Public Defender
JEFF BROWN

Unopposed incumbents normally make us nervous, but in this case, we're pleased to see that Jeff Brown is running without challenge. Brown has a job that isn't always popular, and he's performed it with distinction. In the face of budget cutbacks, declining public support for the rights of defendants and a rightward swing in the courts, Brown has struggled to ensure that nobody goes to court on criminal charges in San Francisco without competent legal defense.

Brown has also been a crusader for civil liberties, an outspoken critic of abusive police practices and a champion of the values that don't get voiced by many elected officials anywhere these days. Jeff Brown is one of our favorite local politicians. He deserves a strong vote of confidence for another four-year term.

SF PROPOSITIONS

Proposition A
YES
Public safety improvement bonds

Proposition A would allow the city to sell some $332 million worth of bonds for the acquisition, construction and reconstruction of public buildings.

The money would go primarily for repairs to city buildings damaged in the Oct. 17th earthquake and for earthquake upgrades of existing structures. Some repairs will necessitate asbestos removal. Projects would also include handicapped access improvements.

It's the largest single bond issue in the city's history. However, under Prop. A, the city could sell only $65 million in bonds in any single year, and the allocation would be reduced if the city receives any state or federal funds for earthquake repairs and modifications.

One quick walk through City Hall should give even the most casual observer some indication of the condition of city buildings and the need for, in some cases, some very fundamental earthquake retrofitting and seismic upgrading. City Hall is filled with scaffolds, braces, retaining walls and the like, to ensure that loosened pieces of stone don't come tumbling down.

We are willing to support Prop. A. But we hope it reminds local officials of the importance of keeping up the city's infrastructure and not waiting for disasters or emergencies to strike before making improvements and repairs. Bond issues are debt, and paying for public works projects this way can be expensive: The $332 million in funds would cost the city $576 million to pay back.

Proposition B
YES
School facilities safety special tax

The sudden destruction on Oct. 17th added $42 million of needed repairs to the slow destruction that had been eating away at San Francisco's public schools for years. Deferred maintenance and neglect had run up a $400 million repair bill, according to Superintendent Ramon Cortines, by the time he arrived in 1986.

Proposition B would raise the money for both kinds of repairs by creating a special tax, under the terms of the state "Mello-Roos" law — a parcel tax of $46 on businesses and single-family homes and $23 for each unit in other residences. After six years, when the earthquake repairs are finished, the tax would decrease by about a third. Money would thus come to the district, not in a lump sum, but in an "income stream" of not more than $12 million a year, slowly enough so it could be spent carefully. If the school district were being run in the same fashion it had been run through the 1970s and early 1980s, we would be tempted to oppose this tax. But since 1986, Superintendent of Schools Ramon Cortines has fought to improve the district's fiscal management and facilities maintenance. We think he is making a real difference in the quality of the schools, and the district's management.

A parcel tax is regressive — in taking the same amount from everyone, it takes a higher percentage from lower-income people. Despite this serious objection, Proposition B deserves a yes vote, for several reasons.

Raising funds with a direct tax instead of yet another bond issue means that every dollar we pay goes to repair school buildings. Bond issues, on the other hand, siphon off a large chunk of taxpayers' money to investors.

The tax, although regressive, is not high. According to calculations made by school board President Fred Rodriguez, lower-income taxpayers would have to contribute almost the same amount to repayment of a bond issue — and less of the money would get to the schools.

Most important, repairing the school buildings is necessary both financially (it would certainly be more costly in the long run to let them fall down around our ears) and educationally. Many buildings are in such serious disrepair, with leaky roofs, inadequate heat, broken windows and other problems, that they disrupt learning. Dilapidated buildings also communicate to students and teachers a message that the community doesn't care enough about them to provide a decent environment.

Proposition C
YES
Equipment lease financing

Proposition C would allow the city more flexibility in its ability to lease equipment, like computers and phone systems. As it stands now, under the City Charter, any long-term lease for financing must be approved by a vote of the people or by annual review of the agreement by the Board of Supervisors. Under Proposition C, the city would set up a nonprofit corporation from which it would lease its equipment. That corporation would be funded by tax-exempt bonds, to the tune of $20 million the first year. All leases and purchases made through the corporation would be certified by the controller to be the least expensive way to provide the equipment.

We're nervous about any plan that would let the city set up special nonprofit corporations that might make decisions about public money without proper oversight and public scrutiny. But Prop. C would probably save the city a significant amount of money, so we're willing to endorse it.

Proposition D
Neighborhood
beautification fund

Almost every election, there's at least one local ballot measure that sounds great — until you stop to think about it. Proposition D is this year's prime clinker.

Prop. D would allow businesses to earmark as much as 1 percent of their annual city tax payments for a "Neighborhood Beautification and Graffiti Clean-up Fund." The fund would be managed by the chief administrative officer, just like the Hotel Tax Fund. There are two problems with that plan. First, the money would come from existing tax revenues; in other words, neighborhood "beautification" would, by law, cut into other city programs, like affordable housing, AIDS education and the like.

Second, we question the real need for this special fund. If the city wants to clean up graffiti, it should do so as a regular part of maintenance, not from a special fund. If businesses want the city to take a larger role in cleaning up, they should be willing to pay for that service. Vote no.

Proposition F
NO
Minimum firefighter staffing

Anybody who lived through the Oct. 17th earthquake has to love the San Francisco firefighters. With the city's emergency-preparedness planning and infrastructure in a state of disaster, and staffing levels (as we pointed out at the time) totally inadequate, the men and women of the Fire Department did a remarkable job of saving large parts of the city from ruin.

It's annoying that Mayor Agnos has decided to follow in his predecessor's footsteps and cut Fire Department staffing to help balance the city's budget (especially since he has, according to the Board of Supervisors' budget analyst, hiked the cost of his own office significantly).

But we can't support Prop. F. Staffing for city departments — even crucial city departments, like police and fire — has to be set by the mayor and the supervisors, on a year-to-year basis. It shouldn't be in the City Charter. Vote no on F.

Proposition G
YES
Former supervisor health benefits

Proposition G would allow members of the Board of Supervisors to remain on the city's Health Service System insurance plan after they leave office, if they pay the full cost of that insurance. The program would cost the city nothing. Most supervisors aren't paupers, and many have other health insurance programs. But some (Harry Britt, for example) work at the job full time, for a remarkably meager salary. Letting them keep their health insurance after they leave office is entirely reasonable.

Proposition H
YES
Fire inspectors and engineer retirement benefits

The fire inspectors and engineers are the latest in a long line of city employees who want to switch from the city's retirement plan to the state's plan, which is more lucrative. By law, the state plan is available only to city employees who work in the area of "public safety." That already includes probation officers, coroner's investigators, district attorney and public defender's investigators, juvenile court counselors and others. The fire inspectors and engineers might as well join the crowd, since it can be done at no cost to the city.

It seems somewhat silly to keep voting every year on adding a new category; perhaps the Board of Supervisors ought to decide, once and for all, just who is a "public safety" officer, and eligible for these benefits, and who isn't. In the meantime, there's no reason not to vote yes on Prop. H.

Proposition I
YES
Retired teachers consulting contracts

This is another Charter amendment designed to clear up a confusing glitch in the city's retirement system. Right now, some teachers in the San Francisco public schools are members of the state's retirement plan; some are in the city's plan. By law, retired teachers in the city plan can't work for the school district or the community college district without losing their benefits; teachers in the state plan are under no such restrictions.

Prop. I would allow all retired San Francisco teachers to work for the school district or community college district without losing their retirement benefits. That makes perfect sense. What makes no sense at all is the continued mess that is the city's public employee retirement system, and the seemingly endless series of ballot measures to fix little bits of it.

Proposition J
YES
Human rights commission

Proposition J would make the Human Rights Commission permanent, included in the City Charter. It's currently an ad hoc body, created by ordinance and subject to abolition at the whim of the mayor and the supervisors. The proposition would also reduce the commission from 15 to 11 members.

The HRC has done outstanding work in advising the city how to deal

Thanks to You, We're on the Move.

After the Most Successful Year in Bay Guardian History, We've Moved to a New Address.

THE SUCCESSES of the past few years, especially of 1989, have brought about the need for some important changes at the San Francisco Bay Guardian. Thanks to a year of unprecedented growth, and thanks to you, we've managed to out-grow our space at the Guardian Building at 19th and York. So, as of May 21, we've moved into a new space more than double the size of our old offices, just a few blocks away.

There are a lot of good reasons why the new Bay Guardian has grown and maintained its leadership as Northern California's largest, most successful newsweekly, and one of the most influential in the country. Reasons like our commitment to excellence in journalism and responsive local news. And providing the kind of comprehensive arts and entertainment coverage you won't find anywhere else.

Thanks to the overwhelming support of our readers and advertisers, we have already made some phenomenal moves. Our circulation has jumped from 65,000 to 80,000 copies a week — a 23% increase. In the six months prior to April 1989, our average weekly page count was 64. This year, that average has increased by 30% to a healthy 84 pages... and still growing.

EDITORIALLY, we've introduced at least ten new regular columns, features and special supplements, hiring four additional editorial staff members in the process... and using the services of a half dozen new freelance writers on a regular basis. We saw a need for greater recognition of local talent in the Bay Area arts scene and created the GOLDies (Guardian Outstanding Local Discovery Awards) to honor new and original achievement. And, we've made a few hearts beat a little faster, with our popular and wildly successful Relationships Classified section growing 70%.

Overall, we have seen a growth in staffing of 20% in both full and part-time employees (from 65 to 78). We've also grown in recognition, winning more journalism awards than ever. And, in keeping with our award-winning redesign, we've received honors from the Society of Newspaper Design for the design of our new Fashion Supplement.

It's been an outstanding and rewarding time for all of us. But we couldn't have done it without you. Thank you for reading and supporting the Bay Guardian. Now we're on the move to serve you even better. Come follow us to our new home, and follow our moves into the new decade.

Still the Bay Area's Best... Every Week.

with a wide variety of problems, including hate crimes, racial discrimination and police brutality. The commission deserves full Charter status. Prop. J would cost the city a mere $4,200. Vote yes.

Proposition K
YES

Seven member commissions

The City Charter is almost as confused when it comes to commissions as it is in the area of retirement plans. Some commissions have five members; some have seven. Some commissioners serve at the pleasure of the mayor; some are appointed for fixed terms. Some commissioners (planning, for example) put huge amounts of time into their jobs, and are barely compensated at all. Some commissions (again, planning comes to mind) have "ex officio" members who are accountable to no one and who, in some cases, don't even live in the city.

Prop. K would increase nine commissions — fire, police, social services, port, permit appeals, civil service, airports and parking and traffic — from five members to seven. More commissioners means more patronage appointments by the mayor. It also means, perhaps, more representation for the community. That's certainly worth the $18,000 annual cost.

Proposition L
YES

Commissioner residency requirement

Prop. L would require the members of almost all boards and commissions to be residents of San Francisco. This seems reasonable enough. The best way for commissioners to know how their policies affect city residents is to live in the city where their decisions are implemented. Vote yes.

Proposition M
YES

Commission gender composition

Prop. M would require that all city commissions move toward gender parity by having neither sex represented by more than a majority of one on each commission. For example, the five person Fire Commission would have to have at least two women, and could have no more than three. Currently, only one woman serves on the Fire Commission. Vote yes.

Proposition N
NO

Two-term limit for supervisors

The two-term limit idea has been around for a while now, and it looks more tempting each time it comes up. Under at-large elections, San Francisco supervisors are accountable only to wealthy special interests.

But a two-term limit is not the answer.

If supervisors can serve only two terms, but are still elected at-large, the board will become even less responsive to community concerns and more beholden to special interests.

There is a solution. District elections would limit the influence of campaign money, force the supervisors to pay attention to neighborhood concerns and allow serious challengers to make a run at incumbents without big downtown bankrolls. But the two-term limit plan would almost certainly undercut future district-elections efforts, thereby preventing true, effective reform. Vote no.

Proposition O
NO
Hypodermic syringes

Proposition O is an advisory measure that would create a city policy supporting the distribution of clean needles in San Francisco as a means of preventing the spread of AIDS. The proposition was placed on the ballot by the Libertarian Party, which did not see fit to consult with AIDS activists or the people involved in the needle exchange.

If it passes, Proposition O will do nothing. Many AIDS activists oppose the measure. So do we. Vote no.

EAST BAY CANDIDATES

THIS COULD BE the year to "throw out the bums" in Oakland. There's a good chance that for the first time in 12 years Oakland could have a new mayor. There are a couple of promising newcomers running for City Council. And since no incumbents are running for School Board, the Board will have three new members.

Even the supervisor seat for Alameda County's 5th District, which includes Berkeley as well as parts of north and east Oakland, and the 13th Assembly District seat could end up with new occupants. Although not all the positions have candidates worth getting excited about, those we are endorsing represent a positive alternative to the present officials and a chance for some real and significant change that Oakland so sorely needs.

8th Congressional District,
RON DELLUMS

Ron Dellums has represented the Berkeley/Oakland area in Congress for 20 years. He has consistently taken progressive stands all issues, pushing for bold cuts in the military budget and supporting social programs. His senior status in the House has given his progressive proposals legitimacy and a bully pulpit. We're pleased to endorse him.

12th Assembly District,
TOM BATES

Tom Bates is one of the leading progressives in the California Legislature. For 14 years, he has fought to protect the Bay from corporate polluters and Berkeley's rent control from statewide real estate interests. He has taken a leading role in developing policies to support children and families, in his role as co-chair of the Joint Select Task Force on the Changing Family. Recently we've been a little concerned that he's backpeddling on First Amendment rights — he provided the key vote on legislation that would restrict the sale of adult publications at unsupervised newsstands. But all in all, he does a fine job of representing his district.

13th Assembly District,
Democratic primary
BARBARA LEE

This race is for the Oakland

Assembly seat being vacated by Elihu Harris, who is running for Mayor of Oakland. The strong Democratic character of the district means the winner of this primary is all but assured of victory in November. As might be expected, the race is between a representative of the local progressive/Rainbow Coalition Democrats and the moderate Democrats. The progressive, Barbara Lee, is a social worker and former aide to Congressman Ron Dellums in Washington. The moderate, Aleta Cannon, is an Oakland City Council member and aide to Harris.

Both are disappointingly timid. Neither would tell us how she was different from the other or why she was the better candidate. Neither would say whom she was supporting for governor or mayor of Oakland. (Curiously, Harris is not endorsing his own aide to succeed him and she is not supporting him for mayor.) Both say they support regional transportation planning and increased mass transit, although both have endorsed Prop 111, the gas tax that will go mainly toward building freeways.

With her years of experience in Sacramento and on the Oakland City Council, Cannon is more conversant with the issues than Lee, but that doesn't necessarily translate into better positions — on the contrary. In her interview with us she often had the facts wrong, especially when they were in conflict with her position. Cannon supported the original Raiders deal that included the city guaranteeing ticket sales, still thinks it was a good deal and insisted, contrary to all the facts, that it put the city at absolutely no financial risk. Lee was against the deal.

While tenant lawyers and activists are reporting that renters are being evicted in large numbers just so landlords can raise rents, Cannon claims to have heard no complaints about Oakland's weak rent control. Cannon was against the Oakland Nuclear Free Zone, wouldn't say if she would vote to appeal the federal judge's ruling against it and took no position on the Alameda County Nuclear Free Zone initiative on the June ballot.

On the issue of political ethics, both supported full disclosure of legislators' finances, but Cannon balked at legislators being required to reveal client lists and how much they were paid for what outside work, as well as at limiting legislators' outside income.

Lee was wishy-washy on rent control, but said she opposed state legislation restricting local ordinances. She supports the Oakland and Alameda County NFZs and the idea of limiting legislators' outside income.

All in all, we felt more comfortable with Lee. She emphasized health care and employment programs and suggested taking the funds for them from the prison-building budget. ("Prisons are the military budget of the state," she said.) Already she's playing too much the politician, trying too hard not to offend and to be all things to all people. Still, given the choice, vote for Barbara Lee.

5th District supervisor
KEITH CARSON

When John George died unexpectedly in December 1988, the other four supervisors were left with the task of appointing someone to finish the remaining two years of his term. Handed this opportunity to replace the progressive George with someone more amenable to their development schemes, the two South County supervisors, Ed Campbell and Charles Santana, snubbed the local progressives' choice, Keith Carson, and selected former Berkeley Mayor Warren Widener.

Widener had distinguished himself in Berkeley by running as a progressive and, once elected, going on to stymie the progressive agenda on every issue from rent control to South African divestment.

But once installed in office as county supervisor, Widener knew he faced an election in 16 months, with an organized challenge by Carson on his left. He began to vote like a Berkeley radical, against the proposed Buckhorn Dam for the anti-sprawl, open space county plan, even against Santana's beloved anti-flag-burning advisory measure. Still, it was surprising when Campbell and Santana called a press conference to announce their support for Carson in the election.

While acknowledging that they don't expect Carson to vote any differently from Widener, Campbell and Santana said they felt a responsibility to tell the voters of the 5th District that they had made a mistake appointing Widener. Not only had he misrepresented himself in their selection interview, saying he would quit his job and work full time as a supervisor, the two said, he wasn't carrying his share of the board's workload and was impossible to work with.

Widener, of course, is saying the endorsement is revenge for his anti-developer votes and is accusing Carson of selling out to South County interests. Carson says he has made no deals — indeed, he insists, he told Campbell and Santana he supports the open-space plan. The difference, he says, is that he is able to talk to all the supervisors and cooperate in the board's administrative work.

We agree that it would be political suicide for Carson to make deals with the South County developer interests. And Widener's lack of charisma is not news in Berkeley. But even if it wasn't time to send Widener back to private life, there would be reasons to vote for Carson.

Like John George, Carson stresses health-care issues. He says he sees the county as the safety net of government, providing emergency health care and food stamps. He says the closing of at least some of the military bases in the county is inevitable, so the county should plan for conversion and retraining. He complains that the board hasn't looked at such ideas, that it just reacts rather than plans ahead. And he plans to work full time as a supervisor. Carson may not be John George, but he's District 5's best chance for returning progressive representation to the board.

Oakland mayor
WILSON RILES JR.

When you talk to politicians campaigning for major city offices these days, you tend to hear a lot of rhetoric. The candidates speak in vague, general terms, with heroic, high-sounding phrases. The room buzzes with words like consensus-building, interagency coordination and management efficiency.

Wilson Riles Jr., an 11-year City Council member and Oakland's leading progressive, is different. He speaks plainly to the issues, evidently guided by principles rather than expediency. Recently, for example, he opposed the Raiders deal, before opposing it was fashionable, for the same reason he opposed spending $30 million of city funds to buy the Raiders back in 1986 — the city has too many other pressing needs. Riles was the only council member to support the Oakland Nuclear Free Zone initiative before it was passed decisively by the voters. And he adamantly fought building the INS detention center in Oakland on human and civil-rights grounds, even though it would have brought more jobs to the area.

But Riles is not just a principled voice of opposition. His years of experience on the council have provided him with practical knowledge of how to use city government to achieve his goals. His proposals include using $1.5 million of city redevelopment money for high school magnet programs. He also proposes using city money to fund school security and after-school recreational programs, freeing up the school budget to focus on classroom needs.

Riles says he believes too much emphasis has been put on downtown development at the expense of the small neighborhood businesses that provide more jobs. He wants to promote industries that provide jobs and also benefit the community, like health-care facilities. And to make sure the new jobs go to Oakland residents, he wants developers to sign on to a hire-Oakland-first program.

Long an advocate of tenant rights, Riles wants to strengthen the Rent Arbitration Board, eliminate vacancy decontrol and establish eviction for just cause for Oakland tenants, who presently can be evicted on a whim.

Riles supports the Alameda County Nuclear Free Zone initiative and plans to vote to appeal the federal judge's decision against the Oakland NFZ, even though it will cost the city money. If the City Council can decide on its own to spend millions on the Raiders eminent-domain lawsuit, he argues, surely it can do it for the NFZ, voted on by the public.

Riles' opponents are a generally unappealing lot. Lionel Wilson has been mayor of Oakland for 12 years, and many progressives would say that was 11 years too long. The first black mayor of Oakland, Wilson was elected as an alternative to the white establishment, but soon came to represent the major downtown interests.

His autocratic style has been much criticized and his priorities are at best questionable. His emphasis on downtown development has come at the expense of the neighborhoods. He spent much time, energy and political capital on the ill-conceived and ill-fated Raiders deal, while his anti-crack program took years to formulate.

Elihu Harris has been the Assembly representative from Oakland's 13th District for 12 years, but began this race as a relative unknown because of his undistinguished career in Sacramento: He almost never carried a bill that would help his district until he decided to run for mayor. He quickly made a name for himself by pushing through the state Legislature a bill to place Oakland's scandal-ridden and financially troubled school district under a state trusteeship, simultaneously boosting his name recognition and incurring the wrath of local-control advocates.

A moderate Democrat and a lawyer, Harris was perceived to be Mayor Wilson's protege and heir apparent until Wilson decided to run again. Harris has the support of many of Wilson's former backers and is considered a frontrunner who will split much of the moderate vote with Wilson.

But Harris is a weathervane politician. He took no position on the Raiders deal until the day of the City Council vote, after 31,000 signatures against it had been collected in only 20 days. When the Oakland Nuclear Free Zone initiative qualified, Harris signed the ballot argument for it. But he later, unsuccessfully, tried to have his name removed from the statement and refused to speak to the Bay Guardian before or after the election to clarify his position on the matter.

The bombastic Leo Bazile, a second-term councilmember and lawyer, is a sharp and articulate man who wears his Stanford and Boalt Hall degrees like a crown. But he is also a bundle of contradictions.

While denouncing Mayor Lionel Wilson's autocratic style, he proposes a change in the City Charter so that he, as mayor, could appoint school board members. He says the employment problem in Oakland is not due to a lack of jobs, but rather because Oakland residents do not have proper education for existing jobs. But he has no program to improve the schools. He proposes a Reaganesque hands-off management style of appointing "educator experts" to the board and then holding them accountable for results.

While claiming to be a "free-market person" — his excuse for opposing rent control and the government building of low-income housing — he proposes incentives to get "people with disposable income" to move into Oakland. While complaining that Oakland is "the dumping ground for the Bay Area's poor," he said he has no concern about such a housing policy displacing Oakland's poor population.

Yet another mayoral candidate, Dezi Woods-Jones, is an assistant dean of students at the College of Alameda, president of Black Women Organized for Political Action and a longtime community activist. She is a strong, articulate woman who is running her campaign on progressive issues. She has specific ideas for providing community health care and for encouraging neighborhood small businesses, including a revolving loan fund. She wants to rehab the boarded-up houses in Oakland and build affordable housing downtown. But the main effect of her campaign is to siphon off votes and activists from Riles.

If Riles is elected, together with enough City Council members to form a majority sympathetic to his programs, politics in Oakland could change dramatically. Wilson Riles for mayor is the most important vote you can cast in Oakland this June.

Oakland City Council
District 2
JOHN RUSSO

The District 2 race pits 12-year incumbent Mary Moore against two newcomers, attorney John Russo and Iyy Cohen, the executive director of the anti-drug Just Say No International. Moore, a good liberal on most issues, has represented her district well over the years. She opposed the Raiders deal and has voted for environmental measures like regulating pesticide use preserving Lake Merritt and Oakland's creeks.

But in a tenant district, she has been weak on rent control. And in a district that went overwhelmingly for the Oakland Nuclear Free Zone, she opposed the measure, questions the wisdom of appealing the federal ruling against it and opposes the Alameda County NFZ.

Moore touts her experience and ability to get things done for her constituency (although labeling herself "the insider who is an outsider" is a bit of corny double talk) and chides her opponents for having lived in Oakland only a few years and for not knowing the issues and the ropes.

This criticism rings true for Cohen, who has little more to say than "No," and is not a serious contender. But in his few years in town, Russo, a transplanted New Yorker, has learned his stuff. We were very impressed with this bright and energetic young man. He is an unequivocal supporter of both the Oakland and Alameda County NFZs, arguing that these are more than symbolic measures — they are local environmental and public-health issues, since radioactive waste is shipped through the area. He also points out that the Alameda County NFZ is endorsed by every Democratic club in the county except the Montclair/Greater Oakland one that endorsed Moore and whose president, Rena Rickles, is married to Star Wars physicist Glen Dahlbacka, treasurer for the campaign against the Oakland NFZ and plaintiff in the lawsuit against it by the reactionary Pacific Legal Foundation.

Russo is strong on environmental issues, proposing weekly curbside recycling and a ban on styrofoam in Oakland. He also has specific ideas to raise revenue for the city and the schools. For example, he proposes a 25-cent tax on tickets to sporting events to support local athletic and recreational programs.

He was straight with us and acknowledged that even as a tenant in a tenant district he disliked rent control, but conceded that eviction for just cause and vacancy control were needed as part of a larger housing policy that included building homeless shelters and affordable housing. He showed us a letter from a landlord organization to its membership denouncing him and his Rainbow Coalition endorsement.

Without hesitation, Russo agreed to supply us with a list of his law clients, to dispel any appearance of conflict of interest. He has a sense of humor and strong beliefs — and when leaving the Big Apple, he specifically chose Oakland as his new home.

City Council District 6
NATE MILEY

Incumbent Carter Gilmore has been on the City Council since before district elections and has won re-election from District 6 the last two times unopposed. He has always been a part of Mayor Wilson's majority and is Wilson's rubber stamp. The latest illustration of this was his position on the Raiders deal. While acknowledging that all the calls his office received from his district were against the deal, he still joined Wilson in voting for it.

Now Gilmore is facing a number of challengers. Of the batch, we think Nate Miley is the best choice. He's a bit wimpy for our idea of a progressive, but his sympathies are good.

A graduate of the University of Maryland Law School, Miley worked for the Fruitvale Law Collective for several years and now makes his living as a financial planner. He has worked with the United Seniors of Oakland, helping to develop a comprehensive program for seniors and to get redevelopment money to rehab the only senior center in Oakland. He's now working to get three more senior centers.

Miley called the Raiders deal a "slap in the face of the citizens of Oakland and Gilmore's constituents" and was flabbergasted that Gilmore voted for it. He wants curbside recycling established in Oakland and says he thinks city workers should have child care provided, as an example to other employers in the city.

Miley is a little weak on Nuclear Free Zones and rent control. He took no position on whether to appeal the judgment against the Oakland NFZ, but supports the Alameda County NFZ. While saying rent control is not the way to go about dealing with tenant problems in Oakland, because there are so many small landlords in the city, he supports a stronger Arbitration Board, vacancy control and eviction for just cause because "tenants are still getting screwed for the most part, and we need to balance the equation out."

All in all, Nate Miley would be the best councilmember for District 6 and the city.

Oakland School Board
District 2
WILMA CHAN

One of the problems with the Oakland School Board elections is that everyone sounds the same. They're for everything good and against everything bad. Everyone wants more parental involvement, stronger core curricula, financial accountability, multicultural education and, of course, they only have the children in mind. Sometimes it seems the differences are more style than substance. But sometimes you get a better picture of the candidates' real politics and how they may actually implement those noble goals by looking at who their backers are.

This is the case in District 2, where Wilma Chan, a parent and five-year school activist, is running against Pat Kernighan, a parent, lawyer and relative newcomer. While Chan touts her experience and certainly knows the issues and the school maze better, their backers are perhaps a better indication of what they will do.

Chan is endorsed by the teachers and workers unions and the progressive Democratic clubs. Much of Kernighan's money was contributed by Oakland business groups, and she has the endorsement of incumbent Kathleen Crawford, who isn't running for re-election because of implications she was involved in the corruption scandal.

Chan is also a bright, competent woman and would represent Oakland's growing Asian population on the board.

Oakland School Board
District 4
DAVID SIEGEL

District 4 can't lose. Two strong progressive parent activists, David Siegel and Jean Quan, are running for the seat being vacated by incumbent Pat Monson.

David Siegel is a physician who works at the University of California at San Francisco and San Francisco General Hospital. He has served on the District Budget Committee for the past three years, the last two as chair, and he got $250,000 funding for an AIDS education and prevention program for the schools. He was co-founder of Save Our Schools, served on an advisory committee for progressive School Board member Sheila Jordan and worked in parents groups and on school issues for more than five years.

Jean Quan, a former labor organizer, is co-chair of Save Our Schools, also served on Sheila Jordan's advisory committee and worked on the Commission for Positive Change in the Oakland Public Schools.

On the issues the two are so similar its hard to tell them apart. Both have a history of real commitment to parental involvement. Both stress the need for multicultural education and for putting resources into the schools. They are the two best candidates running for School Board, and it's a shame they are pitted against each other. Here, the choice does become one more of style than substance. We felt Siegel ran his campaign with more straightforward honesty and will be able to work with his colleagues better. All the districts should have as tough a decision.

Oakland School Board
District 6
TONI COOK

For a district with the largest field of candidates, District 6 has the saddest batch. At a recent candidates forum (none showed up for our endorsement interview) one voice, fortunately, rose slightly above the drone of mediocrity — that of Toni Cook. While the others repeated vague platitudes about needing parental involvement and strengthening core curricula, Cook spoke of specific ways to get parents involved and to get money to school libraries and athletic programs.

Cook has taught in the Department of Planning at the University of California at Berkeley and served as associate dean and assistant professor at the School of Architecture and Planning at Howard University in Washington, D.C. More recently, she has been working as a field representative for Alameda Supervisor Mary King. She has the endorsement of all the unions of teachers and workers in the Oakland schools, as well as most of the local Democratic clubs. Considering the competition, she's the only choice.

EAST BAY PROPOSITIONS

ALAMEDA CO.
PROPOSITIONS

Measure A

Nuclear Free Zone

Once again, a Nuclear Free Zone measure is one of the most contentious issues in the East Bay election.

Measure A is not just a symbolic gesture, although the symbolism of local communities coming out against national nuclear policies and the nuclear poisoning of the world and their own communities should not be downplayed.

Measure A also has immediate, practical goals. It seeks to rid the county of businesses involved in the nuclear industry, to restrict and control the transportation of radioactive wastes through the community and to put the county's fiscal practices in line with an anti-nuclear philosophy.

Not surprisingly, the big guns, the big money and the big lies have been trotted out once more against it. It's too costly, it's too cumbersome, it interferes in national policy, whine Supervisor King, Westinghouse and the Oakland Tribune.

But there are always costs associated with pioneering social policies. And while there may be costs in implementing and defending the ordinance, the environmental and economic costs of continuing the nation's nuclear policies are incalculably higher. The purchasing restrictions may end up costing the county more, but so did Oakland's and Berkeley's South Africa divestment policies, and no one is suggesting rescinding those.

ALBANY PROPOSITIONS

Measure B

Measure C
YES

Measure D
NO

Shoreline development

All three of these Albany measures would affect how development decisions on Albany's East Bay shore will be made. After a couple of years of trying to get the City Council to give the citizens the final say on development plans for the valuable east-shore property, local activists got an initiative, Measure C, qualified to go on the ballot, to ensure voter approval of the final plan. In response, the council put on the ballot two measures, B and D, designed to thwart the citizens' actions.

Measure D allows the council to make material changes in the development plan after voter approval and Measure B amends either C or D, whichever passes, to effectively kill either, under just those conditions when development would most likely occur. Vote to keep the final decision-making power in the hands of the voters.

OAKLAND PROPOSITIONS

Measure E

School Board jurisdiction

Measure E would amend the Oakland City Charter to prohibit School Board members from interfering with duties designated by law to be those of the superintendent, and provides for a removal process for offending board members. The measure is consistent with existing regulations and clarifies the situation following allegations some board members have engaged in the type of behavior the measure would restrict.

Measure F
Redistricting

Measure F would amend the Oakland City Charter to provide for the redrawing of City Council districts every ten years beginning in 1993, instead of every six years beginning in 1990. It will allow the redistricting to be done in a non-election year and to be based on the most up-to-date census information.

Announcing The San Francisco Bay Guardian's First Annual

Showcasing the best in new Bay Area playwriting

Co-Sponsored by the Eureka Theater Co.

RULES:

- The contest is divided into three categories:
 - plays with a Bay Area focus
 - one-act plays
 - plays with two or more acts
- Plays can only be entered in one category.
- The contest is open to California residents only.
- Entries must be completed plays for theater productions.
- Each entry must be accompanied by a treatment/synopsis that is no longer than three (3) pages. Plays submitted without a treatment/synopsis will not be accepted.
- All plays must be unproduced, not accepted for production and the original work of the contestant or contestants (writers may collaborate). Plays accepted for production during the contest will be disqualified (the contestant bears the responsibility for notifying the Bay Guardian).
- Plays must be in English, typed (computer printout acceptable) on one side of 8 1/2" x 11" sheets, bound and in standard play form. Entries must not exceed 130 pages.
- Each entry must include the following:
 - a completed entry form with signed release.
 - a $25 reading fee. Please send check or money order only.
 - a self-addressed, stamped postcard for acknowledgement that the entry has been received. Plays sent without all of the above will not be accepted.
- Entries must be in the Bay Guardian office by 5 pm Wed. May 30.
- Bay Guardian employees and freelance writers who have been published in the Bay Guardian since November 1, 1989, are not eligible.
- The Bay Guardian recommends that plays be copyrighted. For further information, call (202) 479-0700. Winners will be required to copyright winning entries pursuant to Title 17 of the United States Code.
- A screening committee will select the finalists, from which the judges will choose the prize-winning plays. The judges will be under no obligation to personally consider the winning plays for production.
- Although copyright will remain with the author, the Bay Guardian reserves the right to publish excerpts from the winning plays or the treatments/synopses.
- Plays will not be returned.
- Winners will be notified in September 1990.
- Deadline is May 30, 1990.

One in a series of annual Bay Guardian contests honoring the best in local poetry, playwriting, fiction, scriptwriting, photography and cartooning.

SEMPER FIDEL

Can Cuba survive in a world where all of its allies are crumbling?

Fidel Castro: "Is there really anybody in this country, anyone with honor, with dignity, who is willing to surrender if we have to stand alone?"

By Marc Cooper

HAVANA

SITTING ON the meeting-room floor of the Fifth Congress of the Cuban Women's Federation were thousands of overdressed, mostly plump, mostly middle-aged, matronly delegates and bureaucrats who — after three long days of approving preordained, undebated, verbose resolutions by unanimous vote and having suffered through scores of sisterly speeches from invited party hacks world round — were now, frankly, beginning to wilt, if not just plain cave in.

That is, until the main attraction got underway — that is, the main event of every significant meeting in Cuba. The one rock-solid, you-can-count-on-it-invariable in a society where hard facts tend to be scarce. The Comandante-en-Jefe would, of course, personally wrap up the congress.

At 7 p.m. on that last night of the women's meeting, Fidel mounted the podium. And the near-narcoleptic crowd was suddenly electrified, clapping and shouting on its feet. Fidel hitched his military belt over his thickening middle, stroked his longish, now all-gray beard, and futzed with the bank of microphones — giving Rebel Television enough time to adjust their nationwide feet. It was a speech that was vintage Fidel, a two-and-a-half-hour pleading, punching, soothing, seductive, threatening, altogether awesome exhibition of world-class oratory.

And though the topics Fidel touched on ranged, superficially, from women's rights to watermelons to washing machine production, the speech was really about that one Big Question that is today on every Cuban's mind: what in the hell is the future of Cuba in a world where its allies have crumbled like stale bread?

In case you didn't want to sit through the whole speech to get Fidel's answer, it was spelled out on the 30-foot-long red-and-white banner over his head: "Socialism, No Matter What!" But if you did bob and weave through the entire speech, as I did, you could see that Fidel, after 31 years in power, was still lightning-quick on his intellectual feet, dangerously unpredictable in his political moves, and that his full answer to the Big Question is much more nuanced than any American newspaper characterization (or, better, caricature-ization) of him as the "Last Stalinist."

FIDEL USED as his foil an incident 24 hours earlier in Geneva, where Poland, Hungary, Bulgaria, and Czechoslovakia voted for the first time with the United States to open a UN investigation of human rights in Cuba.

"Things are taking place that a few years ago would have been difficult to imagine. Indeed, the socialist camp has collapsed," Fidel told his audience, his palms up and his eyes wide. And then, switching to a mocking tone, he continued: "Thank you, leaders of Poland, Czechoslovakia. Thank you Hungary and Bulgaria! Thanks for the lesson you have taught us! For your contribution to our revolutionary consciousness, for making us feel ever more proud and dignified, for making us feel, as if it were possible, even more revolutionary! More socialist! . . . Thank you for deepening our convictions! For making us harder, for making us firmer!"

After detailing the aid that will now not be forthcoming from Eastern Europe, Fidel poured on the sarcasm — sarcasm that tickled his audience and that would probably delight Lee Iacocca.

"Let's speak clearly once and for all. . . . We Cubans don't export garbage. But often what we get back in trade (from the East) is junk!"

"No one else in the world buys Bulgarian forklifts. They are such garbage, only we bought them! How many hundreds, thousands of them stand idle today in our warehouses? The Hungarian buses we have get four miles to the gallon! They pollute the city with fumes and poison everyone around.

Who knows how many people have died from the fumes of those buses just because they put in a defective fuel pump! On top of it all, those buses have a two-speed Czech transmission that alone wastes 30 per cent of the fuel! Oh, how happy I am to speak with such openness! It's been difficult to talk about these things in the past, but thanks to these new circumstances, we have been relieved of our previous compromises!"

After the laughs came the really bad news. The Soviet Union was still, more or less, standing by its $5 billion-a-year commitment (including supply of 100 per cent of all petroleum), but no one could guarantee for how much longer. Cuba was being squeezed, Fidel said. And now, he warned, if the Soviets should cut Cuba off, the island should be prepared for an economic Gottterdammerung, something Fidel called a Special Period.

"In this Special Period. . . that could last one, two, three, maybe five years. . . we would have to totally halt development of all social programs, schools, day-care centers, clinics." Electrical consumption would be cut in half and strictly rationed, thousands would be laid off their jobs (but not off the state payroll), and Cubans would have to learn to wear the same clothes for months at a time.

But would this mean an end to Cuban Socialism? "We don't care who or what falls from power elsewhere, but here nothing is going to fall!" Fidel vowed, rabbit-punching the air. "The Yankees can dream on, but we tell them straight out, just forget about it! Is there really anybody in this country, anyone with honor, with dignity, who is willing to surrender if we have to stand alone? And when we stand alone how can we really be alone when we defend the most beautiful ideals in the world!"

The women roar to their feet and shout in unison: "Socialism! Forward to Socialism! He who doesn't like it can take a laxative!"

Fidel wasn't quite finished. "There used to be those who berated us because they said we were a Soviet satellite. And now they insult us because we don't follow the Soviets. When are they going to just let us do what we want to do? When will they allow us to declare our own independence? What country can be more independent than ours, a country willing to confront an empire on its own doorstep, and the rest of the world if necessary!"

TO WATCH Fidel deliver that speech to that convention was to look at the best and the worst of Cuba all in one room. The dreary, party-orchestrated Women's Congress smelled of brain death, of the mind-numbing ossification that drove Romanians to revel in the Christmastime execution of the Causescus.

But to reduce Fidel Castro to a tropical version of the Romanian dictator is to not understand either the Cuban leader himself, or his revolution. Partially, because Fidel is the Cuban revolution. And to the degree that he is, he is both its saving grace and its potential ruination. Castro is the maverick who made his revolution in spite of the pro-Moscow Cuban Communists' opposition. He is the man who later absorbed the Communists into his own party.

And while Castro molded the party in the image of its Soviet counterpart, he guaranteed that it would, in reality, respond only to his personal political agenda. Hence, the anomaly of an apparently orthodox Cuban Communist Party spending most of the 1960's shitting all over the hemisphere's other Communist parties for too closely mirroring Moscow's revolutionary timidity. When Fidel muted his criticism of Moscow in the 1970's, it was on the heels of domestic economic failure and subsequent further dependence on the Soviets.

Now Fidel has recovered some of that distance he put between himself and Moscow 25 years ago. Those who would have expected Castro to do otherwise are either ignorant of Cuban history or downright disingenuous. Cuba's de facto break with a disappeared "socialist camp" allows it the possibility of recouping its own independent course. . . . albeit at enormous, potentially fatal, economic cost. The Cuban leadership is rejecting the sort of transformations taking place in the East, transformations they see as "surrender."

But at the same time, even party bureaucrats now openly criticize, by name, the "Stalinism" they correctly blame for the East's downfall.

Some Cubans, probably many, are dissatisfied enough with their lives to want to chuck the whole revolution. But it's doubtful they are a majority. When the Poles or Czechs looked West they saw the glitter of Germany. To their East they saw the disaster that is the Soviet Union. But what do Cubans see? Either the impossible dream that is Miami, or more likely the desolation that is Haiti, or the food riots in more developed Venezuela and Argentina. They see the Mexican tourists who travelled on my plane and were reminded by the tour guides that here, in Havana, they could drink the water and walk the streets freely at night without fear of assault.

THINKING ABOUT Cuba's future puts to the test not only the Cubans' capacity for self-examination and criticism, but also raises the question of what choices we, as Americans, are willing to permit the Third World. If we automatically discount the possibility of a revolution reforming itself and surviving, then the only alternatives we offer an underdeveloped nation like Cuba are to be an Albania or a Panama, if not an El Salvador.

I have come here to see how real Cuba's three-year-old program of "rectification" — the rather cumbersome name for Castro's half-a-glasnost — is, and if it can improve the revolution without reforming it out of existence.

I spent most of my time with journalists and writers based on a simple formula: if there is to be any sort of reform in Cuba, it must be preceded or at least accompanied by some public debate. What solutions can there be unless there is a recognition of the problem. I had been in Cuba several times since 1980, but not at all in the last five years. Yet this is the first time ever I did not get blank looks when the subject was broached. Nowadays, this is all that any and everybody wants to talk about.

"Really for the last two years there has been a much more open climate. People speak up with no fear. Often absolutely nothing gets accomplished, but at least there is an environment for criticism," says Miguel Angel, the fiftyish veteran journalist and party member, a friend of mine, who has volunteered a week of his time to help me negotiate the bureaucracy. He spoke to me while we drove, in my Havana-Auto Rent-a-Car, on our way to my first appointment. And this was to be only the first of many similar frank dialogues I would have with him during that week, almost always in the rented Jetta as we noodled among the Soviet-built Fiats and cannibalized '54 Fords.

"The informational ice was broken in '87 when a magazine published an article entitled Sandra's Case that for the first time dealt honestly with prostitution in Havana. Criticism has broadened since then," Miguel Angel continues. "But it's still centered on specifics, not the system. Especially since the collapse of Eastern Europe, there is a fear of opening up cracks; cracks that could be pried wide open."

"The official line here is that in Eastern Europe there were abuses, mistakes, errors. Errors? Balls! Those weren't errors. Those were horrors! That wasn't a socialist camp; it was a socialist clique! But what else can our party say other than that it was errors? To say anything else would be to admit they lied to the people, and to themselves, for 30 years about Eastern Europe."

We pulled to the curb. "Here you can get a good reading on official thinking," he said. Because "here"—the site of one of my first meetings—was the headquarters of Moncada magazine, the official organ of the militarized Ministry of the Interior, home not only to the Fire Department, but also to the National Revolutionary Police and the secret State Security. If there is a hard line in Cuba, this is its bastion.

Up the elevator to the fourth floor, through double oak doors and into an air-conditioned conference room that materialized as the worst sort of nightmare; at least to reporters like me who spend most of their time in Latin America.

Seated around the table were 18 people in military uniform.

This, at least in a place like Chile or El Salvador, is usually your last earthly vision. But, hey, these guys (and women), uniformed military journalists really, could actually talk. And listen. And even debate. And they didn't have to shave their hands every morning. Chalk up one point for the Cuban Revolution.

Though I must admit I got very little chance to probe their official thoughts. They had decided to interview me, instead of vice versa. So excited were they to have a real American journalist in front of them (even if he was from the Village Voice) that our two hours were spent answering their questions about Hunter Thompson, Norman Mailer, Joan Didion, Frances Fitzgerald, the rise and fall of American New Journalism, and the social significance, if any, of Bonfire of the Vanities. Then a volley of questions about what reporting techniques I use. And then some jokes about how the silly "Russian advisers who used to work here in the ministry tried to convince people that we shouldn't put out a magazine."

MY NEXT two afternoons are filled with similar meetings at the Cuban Journalists Union (UPEC), where in two separate, three-hour sessions, attended by some 40 reporters and writers, I'm invited to freely trash the Cuban press—which I do with some abandon—and then am roundly congratulated for giving the best talk in recent times. Well, really the second-best talk, because everyone is still buzzing about the 10-day marathon staged by Mexican anarchist novelist and journalist Páco Ignacio Taibo II, who kicked off his UPEC conferences with the now-immortalized one-liner about the Cuban Communist Party daily: "Brothers and sisters: Granma is the worst god-damned newspaper in the entire hemisphere!"

Many of the reporters I met credit UPEC's new president, Julio Garcia—a Fidel confidant—with helping infuse Cuban journalism with a dose of critical oxygen just when it was on the verge of asphyxiating itself. Garcia was among the most cautious officials I spoke with, and in that sense, his openness was even more striking. "Cuban journalism has nothing to learn from the Stalinist model. I would travel to Eastern Europe and after one week I felt like a Martian, totally deprived of all information about the world," Garcia told me. "We are unquestionably at a historic turning point. The worst aspect of all this copying of East Europe that went on here was the loss of our national culture, which by nature is very open. Cuba has suffered great isolation and backwardness. We need a renewal in every aspect of our society."

That sentiment was echoed in conversations with the editors of Juventud Rebelde, Cuba's national afternoon daily. Thirty-year-old foreign editor Ignacio Hernandez—formerly a top official of the Communist Youth—agrees. "The world is changing. Things can no longer be looked at in terms of right and wrong. Now people must be given a chance to make up their own minds. Much of what we have here is a copy of the socialist countries, including our political structures. And everything we have copied has turned out like shit! What we do on our own is always better. So it is time to make changes, but in a Cuban way."

What changes if any, then, are evident in journalism and literature? Castro recently signed an agreement with Ted Turner, and every Friday night Cuban TV carries a soon-to-be-expanded half-hour package of CNN. National radio's nightly two-hour news magazine, El Exclusivo, has been so aggressive in exposing high-level corruption and inefficiency (not shying away from ambushing cabinet members with the most embarrassing of allegations) that it is affectionately referred to by people in the street as 'Los Terroristas'. Coverage of Eastern European events in the daily press has been expanded and frequently relies on Western sources such as AP, UPI, and ANSA. The dailies are also beginning to carry reports of economic mismanagement, equivalent to the first tentative probes of the Soviet press in the earliest phase of glasnost. Cuban reporters are given a daily 40-page roundup of the world press, including the most critical articles on Cuba.

Walking through central, colonial Havana, the distortions in the economy came out and grabbed me. Cubans were nowhere near hungry. But their economy is so obviously fragile that it is easy to imagine it crumbling overnight under the stress of total Soviet cut-off.

People were undeniably healthy, well-groomed and well-dressed by Latin American standards. But the shops, stores and services melded into a surreal tableau. In Cuba, everything is state-owned. So the streets are lined with hundreds of seemingly individual and distinct shops, but nearly each is selling only a few items, sometimes a single product, like plastic hair barrettes. And almost always, only items from the East are available.

Miguel Angel and another journalist and friend, Teresita, gave me the walking tour of Havana's "shopping district." The economic crisis in Cuba has been a permanent fact of life for 30 years but with the aid cut off from the East "we are really feeling it now," said Miguel Angel. We stood in line in front of the Pizzeria Napoles, a counter that opened on the sidewalk, with no signs, no seats, and which, for a peso, served up a single gob of cheese pizza delivered on newsprint.

"In the provinces the bread ration has been cut from four ounces to three. There are no eggs this week in all of Havana, by the summer they'll be back on the ration card," Miguel Angel added. "Since the beginning of this year the Russians are making us pay for goods in hard currency and we are buying a lot less. I don't think it will be long now before almost everything is rationed, and in smaller amounts."

After our pizza, we stopped on a corner where a snow-cone vendor had set up a colorful wooden cart. From a block of ice he scraped chips into a wax-paper cone and then poured sweet cherry syrup over it.

"This is a Kafkaesque, absurd system," said Tersita, a longtime Communist militant. "Even this snow-cone operation is owned by the state. Imagine the bureaucracy involved. This vendor has to buy his ice from a central warehouse. That warehouse has its own administrators. He has an administrator and so on."

A department store we entered looked like the dregs of a California yard sale. The chintziest plastic barrette costs three pesos. One Russian-made aluminum watchband, occupying an otherwise deserted display case, costs 15 pesos—half a week's salary. A pair of Chinese-made polyester pants, 65 pesos. Chinese blue jeans, 100 pesos. Not only are these goods scarce and of poor quality, they are also prohibitively expensive.

"Essential items on the ration card are dirt cheap," Miguel Angel explained. "Items off the card are enormously expensive. As a journalist I have a good salary—300 pesos a month. In my house there are four adults. Three of us work. But with only 30 pesos we can buy everything that the card allows us. We get five pounds of rice per person per month at six cents a pound. It's really free. Same for oil, sugar, salt, beans, and three-quarters of a pound of meat per person. What you get on the card is just enough to get by on. Anything else you have to buy in the open market and there you can pay three pesos for the same pound of rice that costs six cents on the card. So every Cuban has got a lot of money, and very little to buy, except some extra food, and of course books—which are very, very cheap."

In fact, we ran into a knot of excited people on the street scooping up the newest shipment of books. Heller's Trampa 22, Vidal's Burr, and Graves's Hercules y Yo, all at the ridiculously low price of one peso.

Sebastian, a middle-aged novelist, a self-described "unconditional devotee" of the revolution, had concluded there was no way out. During a long afternoon of conversation and coffee he argued that the future of Cuba depended exclusively on the person of Fidel Castro—and that Castro showed no sign of changing.

"Fidel Castro is an Absolute Christian, a Total Idealist, a man without a reverse gear. He is absolutely pure, absolutely committed to socialism as he understands it, though he has never really understood Marxism at all. He is a man given over 100 per cent to his nation. But he has administered this nation like it was his father's farm. If he likes you, you're in, and if he doesn't, you are out. He has built a hand-picked pyramid structure with Fidel Castro at the top and with revolution tucked away inside Fidel Castro's pocket. Fidel, with the best of motivation, has stuck his fingers into everything. And if you look around you, you will see that everything he has touched has turned to shit. Is he a military genius? Yes. Is he a diplomatic and foreign-affairs genius? Yes. But does he know how to run an entire country? Look around you."

THIS WAS a painful talk for Sebastian, who said he had never spoken like this before to a foreign reporter. "The day my balls filled to overflowing was a couple of years ago when Fidel came on TV to explain—to fully explain—how one of his favored appointees, Luis Orlando Domínguez, had been caught building a private mansion, how he had been caught with cars, hundreds of thousands of dollars, mistresses, the whole sordid scenario."

He pauses and rubs his hand over his face. "I really expected Fidel to finally make the self-criticism he owed to the country. I mean Domínguez was a creature of Fidel's inner group, a favorite of Fidel. If Fidel likes you, you feel you have a blaring green light. Answer me, how is it possible that Domínguez could rob, traffic, speculate without State Security finding out? I can only conclude that he was a figure made un-touchable by his relationship to Fidel and no one dared speak out. Fidel got on the air and denounced Domínguez as a traitor. OK. But why didn't Fidel admit that it was he who gave this man such free reign?"

"Fidel is still the revolution. He holds all the strings. No one can think about organizing against him. A military movement? A mass movement against Fidel? You've got to be joking! Anyway, the Cubans love him. They really do. They love him. Fidel is like that crazy grandfather we all have. The old guy who never stops telling stories, the old man who steals your wallet, the guy that embarrasses you in front of friends, the guy who is a giant pain in the nuts, but whom you love dearly. That's Fidel. And all this talk about rectification? It's just chatter, that's all."

After a week among journalists and writers, almost uniformly optimistic about the possibility of some sort of significant opening, Sebastian's dark vision, honestly, left me worried and confused.

"I was born here and live here and I am totally confused," admitted Enrique, a writer and translator whom my friends had described as the "most critical" voice among them. His parents were members of the pre-Castro Communists. Enrique has never joined Fidel's party.

"If you think you see forward movement and backward movement, then you are seeing our reality. Inside the highest levels of the government there are those who want to democratize, who want to decentralize power. And there are also those who are no less ferocious dogmatists who feel there is no need to debate anything. But I want to debate a lot of things. Like why in Cuba there continue to exist two certain social groups: a privileged bureaucracy on the one hand, and criminals and traffickers on the other. And you know both groups have much in common. It wouldn't be so easy to sell stolen goods here if it were not so easy to steal them from state warehouses."

"Socialism is morally much simpler than capitalism. That's why the sinful apple is so much more deadly when plucked from a socialist tree."

Is the confusion, I asked, over whether or not to just scrap socialism as the Eastern Europeans have?

"No," Enrique answered. "Unlike Eastern Europe we are not debating a return to capitalism. I can't think of any way of living other than in socialism. But I can think of a hundred ways of dying every day that aren't. One thing is clear to most all Cubans: socialism and national independence in Cuba are inseparable. The confusion is over how to make socialism work. Some think you do so by opening up and giving more power to the people. Others think you do that by yelling slogans at the people. But this much is for sure: When the Yankees machine-gun a Cuban boat, or when Bush puts a balloon in the sky to impose TV Marti on us, I, for one don't feel the need any longer to debate with the dogmatists. My conflict with them evaporates. What I want to do, instead, is go out and grab some fucking U.S. marine by the balls! In this sense, the greatest support for our dogmatists comes from the United States."

Carlos Fuentes recently wrote that for Cubans the Cold War is not over. When I was last here five years ago, I spent my final night in Havana listening to Ronald Reagan make a menacing special transmission to Cuba over the Voice of America.

Over the VOA's preposterously named Radio Marti, a Cuban on the gringo payroll excitedly announces that in just a few more days experimental transmissions of TV Marti will begin. With an initial outlay of $40 million, the Bush Administration has permanently anchored a weather balloon 10,000 feet above the Florida coastline and will soon start bombarding Cuban homes with images of Kate & Allie and, presumably, Elliot & Ollie.

THE OLD black fisherman leaning over the seawall next to me is facing due north, separated from Florida, tonight, by only 90 miles of dark ocean. But his mind is on his drop line. Around his palm and index finger he has wrapped a swath of electrical tape to keep from being cut by the nylon line that is being violently tugged by the current. His pants are stained and threadbare. The flannel shirt over his T-shirt is tattered and buttonless. He is, he tells me, a retired janitor. His pension is only 100 pesos a month.

"Is that enough to live on?" I ask.

"Barely, not really. But my children help me. One's a doctor. My girl is an engineer."

"Have you ever thought about going over there?" I say, pointing toward Florida.

"No. I'm a revolutionary."

"What has this revolution given you?"

"It's not a question of the revolution giving me anything. That's not the point." He takes his drop line and wedges it between two rocks so he can devote his attention to me. "The problem is people. Humans. Humans are capable of acts of great barbarity. Of becoming Hitler, of killing millions of people. But we humans are also capable of very beautiful things. Of helping someone injured in the street. Or of taking one loaf of bread and cutting up it so all can eat, even if it's very little."

"In every country in the world there are bad people, little Hitlers, you know. And there are good people. The only difference is that some societies teach you and reward you for being one way. And other places, teach you to be the other. How you turn out is up to you." ■

COMMENTARY

NO STRANGER TO DEATH

By E.Z. Williams

AS CALIFORNIA'S first execution since the '60s loomed near, I was moved to think about the murders that occur too often around me.

Bobby Harris was the center of an enormous, emotional controversy, the numerous deaths and murders of other inmates inside the prison system have gone by unnoticed. Although no one has been executed for years, the California justice system is no stranger to death; it advocates it in the courtroom and does not deter it in the cell block. I am white, male, thirtysomething, from middle class roots. My residence is Folsom State Prison. Twelve years ago, following a dispute over money, I killed a man.

When the newly-revised death penalty law was first being legislated, I was a proponent. But suddenly — still a kid, really — I was its target. I spent the next 15 months fighting for my life from the underside of a justice system I was overwhelmingly naive about. As I made my courtroom appearances, I sat at a table and watched strangers playing an odd sort of chess with my life as the stakes. I saw how stacked the deck was, how the other side had all the best players and how clever they were at cheating and covering their tracks. It began to dawn on me that this system would go to whatever lengths necessary in order to kill me.

I realized then that capital punishment was wrong.

In the end — of course, it was just the beginning — the "special circumstances" were dropped and I received a life sentence. I breathed a huge sigh of relief. I had known for a while that I could never outlive the weight of my crime; still, I felt reborn and lucky to be alive. I felt that the people of this state had found me worthy of a second chance. But I didn't feel that I had gotten away with anything. I was sent to San Quentin.

During these 12 years, I have done time at Quentin, Soledad, Vacaville and now Folsom. At each of these prisons I have seen men killed, mostly at the hands of other prisoners, but also by quick-trigger guards and, indirectly, by whimsical prison policies.

Here at Folsom recently, a man was shot to death in his cell during a fistfight with his cellie. At Quentin I saw a man who had completed 12 years of his sentence killed in a racially motivated attack — an attack before which guards were specifically alerted, but did not prevent. His head was crushed by a 25-pound dumbbell as he did bench-presses in the gym. The attack was random retribution for a previous racial fight in which he played no part.

While working at the infirmary at Vacaville, I saw a suspected "snitch" after he had been hog-tied, his tongue partially cut out and his throat slit; later it was revealed that he wasn't the snitch, that his assailants had rushed the wrong cell. And I have seen known enemies, lethal enemies, including rival gang members, housed by prison officials in cells next to each other, the bloody consequences known full well before the next unlock.

This is what life is like inside the California Department of Corrections — a misnomer, since the CDC is responsible for a 90 percent recidivism rate. Often the California prison system is an unmerciful environment; on its best days it is inhuman. I estimate that during the '80s the prison system has averaged in excess of 30 killings and 500 stabbings per year. Even the lamest prisoners walk out of here more violently deranged than is conceivable to normal society.

The killing of one more convict will not change this system or the fashionable mindset that has put it in place. Yet the execution of Bobby Harris, or whoever is next, will reflect that system's inhumanity with a new and profound clarity.

Once Californians catch a glimpse of themselves in that reflection, I hope this state will begin to step away from the trail blazed by those models of civil equity — Texas, Louisiana, Florida and South Carolina — and start overhauling the judicial process from the bottom up.

Then the deaths of prisoners will have stood for something more than people's emotional angst in dealing with crime; perhaps they will stand for something productive, such as a people's more mature and premeditated value of all human life.

Most of the prison killings as well as my commitment offense are no different from executions, in that they are all done out of anger and the impulse to retaliate. Our government and our society should aspire to a more sensible reaction.

Killing out of anger isn't right. I had 12 years to think about it, specifically, and I just can't justify it.

You? ■

Adam Seller selects some edible delights for his dinner.

Thar's Food in Them Thar Hills

THERE'S MORE to it than acorn mash, insists Adam Seller, wild food activist, forager and professional herbalist. The transformation from plant to plate can be as simple as steeping blackberry leaves in the sun to make a refreshing tea, or tossing a handful of wild mustard greens into a salad to add a tangy bite and aid in digestion.

Seller makes his living taking people on walks through San Francisco and Berkeley, pointing out the edible and medicinal plants that surround us. "This area provides a year-round harvest," he says. "The native people supported themselves here for a long time."

Growing up near a state park, Seller began his career as an herbalist at an early age. "I'd run around the woods looking at plants, squeezing things into bottles. Just like what I'm doing now."

Though he does delve into what he calls "botanical pharmacology," Seller considers himself more of an ecologist than a medic. He advocates a holistic approach to health, noting that wild food and medicine are often indistinguishable.

He practices simpling, an old European technique that incorporates the salubrious qualities of wild food and medicine into the individual's diet, and is especially enthusiastic about the culinary aspect of his work. Wild food, he maintains, should create pleasure — should taste good.

"You want to know if someone is a good herbalist?" says Seller. "Find out if they're a good cook."

A meal of wild food served for friends at Seller's west Berkeley home testifies to the bounty wild food can provide. He enjoys watching people's reactions to the food; it tastes like nothing you've ever eaten, yet there's something familiar about it all.

The dinner begins with a sauteed mushroom, a shaggy parasol found in the Berkeley hills, which is good enough to get me to sign up for a summer-school class in mycology. Next is the salad, a bouquet of edible flowers, including forget-me-nots, borage, calendula and pansies, on a bed of wild greens — miner's lettuce, lemon balm and chickweed. It's the kind of thing you want to eat with your hands, walking yourself through each component individually.

The main course consists of nettle soup, hearty and flavorful, and whole elderflowers dipped in a rice-flour batter and fried, served with blueberry preserves. For dessert, we are privy to Seller's first batch of elderflower ice cream, an entirely refreshing experience with a delicate flavor only slightly reminiscent of the fritters. We drink tea, an infusion of douglas fir.

Seller views wild food as a vehicle for bringing people who have moved to the cities back in touch with the earth. "It's a personal way back to the environment that isn't just aesthetic," he says.

On his walks, Seller emphasizes the intuitive side of plants. "Look at the relationship of the leaves to the stem," he says. "The community it's in, the elements of wind and sun."

He encourages the use of the senses, especially taste and smell, to identify the plant with an emotion. In this way, you can often deduce what medicinal qualities the plant harbors. Lemon balm, fresh, light and slightly citric, is used as a tonic for melancholy. The bay leaf, spicy and warming, is an external muscle relaxant, a digestive stimulant and a carminative. Dried or fresh, ingested or steeped into tinctures and liniments, plants provide a variety of healing and nutritive properties.

Uses range from the strictly survivalist — the unexciting but edible meat of the thistle — to the lofty. The elderflower, for instance, is believed to excite imagination, stimulating the sight of fairy people, while mugwort hung by the bed encourages vivid dreams.

Wild food may be coming back into vogue. Seller meets others on his hikes who are gathering greens and mushrooms for their evening meal. And food gathering isn't limited to the hills; there are people in Richmond foraging vacant lots for edible greens.

Seller is careful about his gathering; he practices a form of harvesting called wildcrafting. "We forage wild plants under the assumption that they're out there having fun, enjoying the day. We don't want to hurt the ecosystem." Gathering what the system can handle ranges from a single bulb to an armful of nettles. "You have to understand the reproductive patterns," he says, "the life of the plant."

In his practice as a clinical herbalist, Seller uses only wildcrafted or organic herbs. "In poorer and socialized countries, herbal medicine is valued, so you'll find an abundance of high-quality herbs. The standard commercial quality of herbs in the United States is amongst the world's lowest, but there is a move toward better quality."

Choosing an herb, he says, is like choosing produce; look at color, shape, scent. It should resemble the original plant as much as possible.

Seller offers the following recipe for nettle soup. The nettle leaves can be harvested from late winter to early spring, and are best before they flower. Fresh nettles are 5.5 percent protein by weight, and are rich in calcium, iron, vitamin C, thiamin, riboflavin and a host of minerals.

With leather gloves to prevent stinging, pick about three-quar-

How to Brew Coffee

Water. Water should be fresh and chemical-free. Water temperature should be between 195° and 205°. Boiling water burns the coffee and damages flavor. If you don't like what your electric coffeemaker makes, check its temperature - it may not be hot enough.

Grind. Coffee should brew in about four minutes. A Melitta type brewer requires a fine grind to slow the water. "Mr. Coffee" type brewers require a coarse grind to speed up the flow of water. Coffee ground too fine or coarse produces a thin or bitter brew.

Quantity. Measure carefully, every time:

1. Fine grind methods (Melitta, Krups, Braun): 1 tbs. of coffee per 5 oz. cup
2. Coarse grind methods (Chemex, Mr. Coffee, percolators): 2 tbs. per 5 oz. cup
3. "Melior" types infusion method: 2 tbs. coffee per 4 oz. cup
4. Espresso: Fill the basket; too little coffee makes bitter espresso. If necessary, use less water for each pot.

ters of a pound of fresh nettle leaves. Puree in a blender with seven cups of water. Set in a large pot to simmer. Cream three-quarters of a cup of raw cashews with some of the puree and return to pot. Chop one medium onion, and saute in light oil until golden brown. Add to soup, along with one teaspoon butter, a pinch of freshly ground nutmeg, a squirt of lemon juice and two tablespoons of beer (dry beer is better). Salt and pepper to taste. Serve hot. and is published quarterly. It's a four-page glossy publication with a slick MacIntoshed appearance, though the copy remains blissfully folksy, with peppy headlines like "Garlic Bulbs Light Up My Life," "Heads Up!" and "The Secret to Success is Garlic."

Just what is the purpose of the Fresh Garlic Association? Does it canvas neighborhoods to get signatures on petitions to save the garlic forests? Actually, the group's purpose is pretty straightforward: As Caryl Saunders says, it "promotes the use of fresh garlic all across the nation." The FGA was started 11 years ago, and now claims a membership of 1,500 subscribers and consumer affiliates.

I asked Anita Keller, staff member at Caryl Saunders Associates, some questions about garlic in the workplace, like: Does the office ever smell like garlic? "Oh no, I wish it did, we love it!" Do you eat garlic a lot? "You bet, surrounded by wonderful recipes as we are, it would be hard not to." At lunch? "Not really very often. There are ways to minimize the effect it has on your breath, though." The top two garlic-breath alleviators endorsed by the Fresh Garlic Association are nibbling on fresh parsley or a coffee bean.

The newsletter offers plenty of fun and useful household hints involving garlic, like: "Fresh garlic is delicious, but you probably don't want the aroma lingering on your hands. Immediately after chopping raw garlic, rub your fingers thoroughly with the bowl of a stainless steel spoon under running water, then wash your hands with soap. The metal neutralizes the garlic in the most magical way."

People do write into Garlic News for news and information on garlic, some to request low-fat recipes in which to use this less-than-delicate lily, some just to share advice, like this tip from Roland Kamoda, FGA member from Monongahela, Pennsylvania: "The best way to eat garlic is to get the other fellow to eat it too."

The newsletter is full of recipes for things like 40-clove chicken Filice (Val Filice is head chef of "Gourmet Alley," a featured part of the annual Gilroy Garlic Festival), garlicky naked salad (hmmm, the cook, the garlic or the salad?) and Elsie's Eggplant Supreme. The Bay Guardian favorite, however, is something called Vegetarian Chili with 100 Cloves of Garlic. Here's the recipe. Open the windows for this one.

Vegetarian Chili with 100 Cloves of Garlic

- 6 tbsp. olive oil
- 4 large yellow onions, sliced
- 8 cloves fresh garlic, chopped
- 4 jalapeno peppers, partially seeded and chopped
- 2 red and 2 green bell peppers, thinly sliced
- 5 Japanese eggplant, sliced 1 inch thick
- 100 cloves fresh garlic (about 6 heads), peeled
- 1 1/2 lbs. tomatoes, peeled, seeded and quartered
- 6-oz. can tomato paste
- 3 1/2 cups water
- 3 cups white wine
- 3 tbsp. Texas-style chili powder
- 1 tsp. cumin
- 1 tsp. oregano
- 1 tsp. thyme
- 1 tsp. salt, or to taste
- 1 lb. button mushrooms, quartered
- 3 cups fresh corn kernels
- 2 cups cooked or canned garbanzo beans, strained
- 10-oz. package frozen baby lima beans
- 24 fresh green beans, steamed for 8 minutes and cut in 1-inch pieces
- 1/2 cup finely chopped cilantro

Chop the garlic, reserving 20-25 whole cloves. In a stockpot, heat oil, add onions and saute for ten minutes. Add chopped garlic and jalapeno pepper and saute for ten minutes. Add bell peppers, eggplant and whole garlic cloves. Cook for five minutes more. Stir in tomatoes, tomato paste, water, wine, chili powder and salt. Bring to a boil, stir in mushrooms, corn, garbanzos, lima beans, green beans and a quarter-cup cilantro. Simmer, partially covered, for one hour. Just before serving, add remaining cilantro. Makes 20 servings.

Fortunately, Garlic News has a sense of humor about itself — the subscription pitch begins "if you would like to become a full-fledged, card-carrying affiliate of the Fresh Garlic Association..." Garlic News is published on a quarterly basis. Subscriptions are $5 annually. Contact Caryl Saunders Associates, PO Box 2410, Sausalito, CA 94966-2410, (415) 383-5057.

A Port in Any Storm

Elegant and luscious, port isn't just for dessert anymore. By Janet Hazen

MY MILD-MANNERED piano teacher sipped two proper glasses of ruby-colored liquid during each of my weekly piano lessons — and I'm sure he wanted more. The aroma itself was almost intoxicating, even to a studious, ivory-tapping child. My teacher's magical potion was port, and it was definitely special, only poured on important occasions at my parent's house.

As an adult, I've come to respect this beautiful, rich beverage. It's too often ignored, misunderstood or taken for granted in this country. What a pity, too, for a good port is one of the ultimate pleasures in the world of food and wine, and shouldn't be reserved for special occasions, desserts or piano teachers.

The birth of port can be partially credited to the unremitting political conflict between France and England during the 17th and 18th centuries. This period of mutual antagonism culminated in the reign of England's Charles II, who married Catherine of Braganca, a Portuguese princess. In reaction to the trade policies of Louis IV of France, Charles II prohibited the importation of French wines into England. The Portuguese took this opportunity to import their own product, called Red Portugal, to England. The trading policy was further enhanced by the Methven Treaty of 1703, which made wines imported from Portugal subject to a third less duty than those previously imported from France.

The chemical birth of port, if you will, was inspired by pure necessity. The light red wines from the northerly Minho region did not travel well in the ships bound for England, so grape brandy was added as fortification to help them withstand their long journey across the seas. The brandy is added during the fermentation process, and about a fifth of each bottle of port is brandy. The addition of brandy obviously raises the alcohol level of port, bringing it to 19 to 20 percent, as opposed to the 12 or 13 percent found in wine.

True port comes only from northern Portugal, specifically the officially demarcated region of the Douro river valley. There are some port-style wines produced in other countries, including the United States, but these are considered inferior to Portuguese ports.

The port-making process is similar to wine-making in that the grapes are harvested in the fall, crushed, and the stalks partially removed. The grapes ferment for 36 to 48 hours, at which point the pure grape brandy is added. This stops fermentation and helps the wine retain some of the natural sweetness. The wine is then aged in barrels anywhere from three to 50 years before bottling, then sold or left to mature a bit longer in the bottle.

TO CLASSIFY port, one needs to know about the different styles of this fortified wine. The same type of grape is always used in making port, but generally speaking, the style is determined by the length of time the liquid is aged in the cask or bottle, if it is blended with other wines and what vintage — if any — the port carries.

Vintage port is made from grapes harvested in a single year. It is aged for only two years in the barrel, the least amount of barrel-aging among ports. This traps the intense fruit and allows the wine to age slowly in the bottle. Usually only three years in ten will provide the vineyard with grapes suitable for vintage port. Vintage-character port is bottled when it is six years old, and is a blend of fine ports from several different years. The resulting blend is rich, full of character and very smooth.

Late-bottled vintage port comes from the same vineyard that, when a vintage is declared, produces vintage port. It is usually bottled between the fourth and sixth year after the harvest, and therefore matures more quickly, as it has had time to soften in the barrel. Late-bottled vintage ports are ready to drink earlier, and are very smooth and velvety.

The traditional way to make late-bottled vintage port produces a sediment or crust, and the resulting wines must be decanted before drinking. With this method, the wines are aged only 3 1/2 to four years in the cask, and are allowed to mature for four or more years in the bottle. Both methods make very fine, distinguished ports.

Tawny port is bottled at the age of three, is generally made from lesser-quality grapes and sells for less than $10 a bottle. Mature tawny port is aged anywhere from ten to 20, 30 or 40 years in the barrel. It loses the deep red color and takes on a beautiful amber shade, which gives it its name. Mature tawnys are very nutty in flavor, with a hint of vanilla, but are not fruity as are the other, younger ports. A flavor reminiscent of cognac makes them an ideal substitute for their more alcoholic counterpart.

White port, made from white grapes, is aged three years in the barrel and is usually served slightly chilled. The flavor is decidedly clean; crisp and refreshing, and it makes an excellent aperitif.

Inexpensive ruby port is made from deeply colored grapes grown in poorer districts. The grapes have little capacity for aging, and therefore produce an inferior wine not recommended for drinking.

Why drink port? Aside from the fact that a fine port is one of the best treats your mouth could have, it's a new and different taste. Port makes an elegant finish to any dinner, which is the time it is drunk in most English-speaking countries. A wedge of chocolate and a robust glass of port make a dynamic duo. But dessert isn't the only time to serve it; the French drink 34 percent of all port produced in the world, and usually enjoy a glass or two before dinner.

BARTHOLOMEW BROADBENT, president of Premium Ports and Madeiras, graciously led me through a tasting of some of the different ports his company imports from Portugal. With good humor, wit and charm, he generously shared his knowledge of port, and I left feeling a bit smarter, a little dizzy and certainly a lot happier. The eight samples he chose for my tasting represent a good cross-section of style, flavor and price, and I would honestly have to say that they were all exceptionally delicious and distinctive.

Smith Woodhouse makes a crisp-tasting white port for only $8.25 a bottle. It is best served chilled or on the rocks before dinner or with lunch. It is almost viscous at this temperature, and makes a unique and unexpected cocktail in warm weather.

More traditional and familiar are the fine ruby and fine tawny ports produced by Graham's Porto. The ruby is smooth, velvety and dense, and tastes just like the first sip I had as a child. This would be a perfect all-around dessert wine, and sells for about $10 a bottle. Graham's tawny tastes thinner, is not as sweet and feels as if the alcohol shoots straight to the nose upon first tasting. Fine tawny would go well with English cheddars, double creme cheeses and a few blue cheeses, as it is flavorful, not too sweet and assertive enough to be paired with other strong flavors. It also sells for around $10 a bottle.

Dow's 1984 late-vintage port turned out to be one of my favorites, and is an excellent value at $14.25 a bottle. It is round, luscious, creamy and tastes of grapes. I can see sipping this in a fine, delicate glass, with no accompaniments needed.

Also exquisite is Graham's Porto Six Grapes Vintage Character. This wine is very balanced, complex and explodes with flavor in your mouth. It sells for around $17 a bottle and would be excellent with cheese and Bath Oliver Crackers, or just alone.

The Smith Woodhouse 1979 Late Bottle Vintage Port is a true vintage wine, and definitely feels more alcoholic. The taste is more concentrated, not as sweet and very intense. I liked this one quite a bit, and think it would make a fine before-dinner drink or mid-afternoon cocktail, served with water biscuits or anise toasts.

A 1986 Quinta dos Malvedos, produced by Graham's Porto, is the quintessential mate for chocolate. This very young and very sweet port feels short in the mouth and lacks the finish some older wines have, but it certainly has its place for $30 a bottle. Ruby red and slightly dry, this liquid dessert would be fine alone, but pairing it with chocolate could only enhance its qualities.

The 1978 Quinta dos Malvedos, on the other hand, is complex, round and rich. Its slight honey flavor is sublime, but this particular port would be sensational served in a small quantity with lamb or venison. It sells for $32 a bottle and is a sure bet if you're in the market for good ports or unusual wines to pour with food.

Last, and most mature, is a 20-year-old tawny port, also produced by Graham's. This $38 bottle of gold is a perfect example of a rich, smooth, mature tawny. Its amber color and nutty, honey-like flavor makes it a superior wine to drink alone, but it can also go well with a nut torte, custard, fruit tarts or cheese and water crackers.

You can purchase these delectable bottles of port in San Francisco at Draper and Esquin, The Jug Shop, Mr. Liquor and Coit Liquors; most of them can be found in the East Bay at the North Berkeley Wine Company, Premier Cru and Vino.

The best vintages are 1985 and 1977, but these will cost you a pretty penny. Generally speaking, a decent bottle of port can be had for about $15. There are a few good ones for $10, but for high quality you can expect to plunk down $38 to $43 for a bottle. Tawny port can cost anywhere from $21 for a ten-year-old wine to $38 for a 20-year-old bottle.

Store port the same way you store wine. Bottles should lay flat, in a cool, dry and stable area. Movement or excessive shaking will disturb port.

Port prices are very reasonable when compared to wine, if you consider that it's consumed much more slowly. The quality and intensity of a good port is a real treat, particularly for those who haven't sampled it before. Next time you see port on the dessert menu, order one or two glasses to share with your dinner companions; it's a good way to introduce yourself to the different styles. Then go out and buy your own bottles and try serving them with different foods or by themselves. ○

All Popped Out

Our tasting team evaluates ten microwave and bagged popcorns

THERE'S NOTHING more satisfying, snack-wise, than a big tub of white, fluffy popcorn, and it's high in fiber, too. The Bay Guardian's editorial staff should know—we've really been scarfing it up lately. It started when East Coasties, overly excited at the arrival of Smartfood in the Bay Area, began bringing in bag after snazzy-looking black bag of the stuff. Then, realizing that the office 'wave could nuke up a batch of hot, delicious microwave popcorn, the fluffy white kernels became a daily treat. Upon surveying the multitude of new popcorn options, we decided a tasting was in order.

Once relegated to movies and late-night TV treats, the advent of microwave and bagged corns has brought popcorn into a whole new realm of consumption. Gone are the obsolete, plug-in, yellow-plastic-topped poppers that never really lost the residue of corn oil, no matter how many times one washed them. On the way out are the hot-air poppers, which render that aromatic treat into something heart-healthy, but ultimately inedibly bland.

Popcorn couldn't be easier to make or consume these days. Bags of already-popped corn, some covered with a shelf-stable cheese flavoring, vie for space in the potato chip aisle of grocery and convenience stores. Or, if you prefer it hot and freshly made, five minutes in the microwave in its own bag and voila—a quick, satisfying snack.

But, according to a January 1990 article in the health newsletter Nutrition Action, the time we're saving with the convenience of microwave popping corn may be counterbalanced by the health risks. Microwave popcorn pops because of a thin strip of metallized plastic implanted into the side of the popping bag, which absorbs microwave energy and becomes very hot in a short period of time, acting like a "little frying pan." But the FDA says that in temperatures in excess of 300 degrees F., chemicals can "migrate" out of the susceptors—and into your popcorn (or pizza or waffles).

Currently there is no concrete data as to what those chemicals are, but when we popped several brands of corn for the tasting, the heat susceptors turned a daunting brown color, and some of the susceptors were blackened and had burnt kernels adhering to them.

THE BAY Guardian's blind tasting pitted six microwave brands of "natural" (meaning unbuttered for the most part, although Newman's Own was "all-natural butter flavor") against each other. Four brands of bagged white cheddar popcorn were tested as well. Eleven tasters were polled for their comments and, although there were definite winners and losers, evaluations of certain brands varied wildly. Tasters evaluated the popcorns on the basis of appearance, texture, added flavoring, aroma, freshness and overall taste. The scores were tallied via a numerical system, with 36 points being the highest a corn could receive.

Numbers for the bagged products came up much lower than the microwave popcorns. The cheese flavorings on all the bagged brands seemed disturbing to the panel. All left sticky cheese coating on hands, which one panelist likened to "an artificial pillow broken open, covering your hands in Vaseline."

The bagged brand that rated the highest was Smartfood, with a total of 17.6 points. Tasters found that freshness was not a consideration with this popcorn, and perceived it as being "loaded with preservatives," despite Smartfood's assertion that it has no preservatives. Smartfood claims the cheese on its popcorn is white cheddar, but our tasters had a hard time identifying the flavor.

Guesses ranged from "five-week old bleu" to "a strange cheese flavor, as if from Saturn—not recognizable as a milk product." And even though Smartfood had high scores on taste, the aroma was universally panned. Frighteningly enough, two tasters reported a bizarre phenomenon—at first they were put off by the flavor, but later experienced a change of heart: "I find it too strong in general, but I notice that I keep reaching for it..."

Just slightly behind, with 17 points, was Cape Cod Popcorn. The albino whiteness of Cape Cod put some people off, but the corn scored high marks for its less aggressive aroma: "Pleasant—not that sweaty funk of previous bags," was one comment. Texture was a problem for Cape Cod, with most testers describing it as soggy. Flavor-wise, they found the popcorn rather bland, with one taster explaining that it had a "Kraft macaroni and cheese flavor, like artificial cheddar." All in all, the product was perceived as having an OK, and even "highly edible," taste.

Trailing badly was Laura Scudder's Popcorn, with 10.2 points. The flavor was described variously as "Horrible—old bread soaked in douche" and "Generally weak and synthetic. Unhappy popcorn." This popcorn also provoked much abuse for its odor: "Stinks like a big dog," "Foul. Horse droppings. Old sneakers. Hangover."

But the worst popcorn of the entire batch was Keebler Pop Deluxe. This product earned only 6.3 points; two panelists awarded it zero points overall. Everything about Pop Deluxe turned the tasters off—from its "urinal-colored" appearance to its too-large size, described by one participant as "Mutant ninja kernels." The cheese flavoring fared no better: "Unbelievable amount of residue—like fur." One panelist summed up the feelings of the group when he wrote "This is deliberately offensive."

GENERALLY, THE microwave popcorns did much better on the point scale, with the Safeway house brand Townhouse coming up on top, earning 24.5 points. Tasters liked the clean texture, describing it as "Crispy with a K!" and found the taste pleasing as well: "An excellent popcorn. Good, deep flavor, good salting. Good for dinner."

Coming in second was Betty Crocker's Pop Secret with 20.8 points. Despite its annoying California-Raisin-like advertising and a high ratio of unpopped kernels, tasters rated this light and "corny"-tasting brand high on taste, and voted it closest to "real" popped corn.

Peanut king Planters earned 19.4 points, bringing it in third. But the tasters were very divided on this brand, and scores were wildly inconsistent. Some called it "Real, real good, nearly a perfect popcorn," and "the micro king," while others awarded it zero points, noting stale kernels, really horrible aftertaste and a "dry but clammy" texture.

The grand old man of popcorn himself was fourth in the running: Orville Redenbacher's garnered 18.8 points. Many of the tasters mentioned a preponderance of husks in the batch. Freshness was also a problem for Orville Redenbacher, and most tasters reported that the flavor and aroma were bland and somewhat fake. However, true to the claims on the box, this brand does indeed pop a higher volume of corn and, if the nutrition information is correct, has far fewer calories as well.

Jolly Time box copy makes much of the fact that theirs is white popcorn, "the favorite of popcorn connoisseurs." But the snow-white, bleached-bright color of the popcorn put off many of the tasters, with some describing it as "scary," which may account for the corn's low score of 17.5.

In the popcorn basement was Newman's Own, with only 16.7 points. This was the only butter-flavored brand tried, and the "All Natural Butter Flavor" was overwhelmingly perceived as being fake. Newman also earned low marks for its stale flavor and aroma.

While all the microwaves were acceptable and two of the bagged corns earned high marks, the tasters concurred that the quick methods just made them crave "real" popcorn: "None of these compare to the drama and excitement of the Jiffy Pop of my youth. How can you top that aluminum foil growing to epic proportions and the steam escaping when you cut open the top?"

"None of these compare to the drama and excitement of the Jiffy Pop of my youth."

Dinner and a Movie

Our update on the quintessential date maps out the perfect restaurants to match your moviegoing mood. By Heather Mackey

ALTHOUGH PLANNING a date can be right up there with other white-knuckle activities like cliff-diving for sheer anxiety generated, there's a time-honored way to make it all look smooth. There's no way to conduct yourself more graciously when you're tongue-tied before your inamorata, than to say six simple words: "How about dinner and a movie?"

To this end, we've simplified it all for you by giving you a selective guide to the best movie theaters around — and their counterparts — the best places to go nearby for a fine meal and a good discussion of the state of the cinema.

If you had to be stranded on a desert island with only one movie theater to choose from, the hands-down winner would have to be the Castro — but only if it also came with Bob Vaughn on the Mighty Wurlitzer; the rowdy and sentimental crowds that cheer during The Ten Commandments and pack the theater to weep with Barbara Stanwyck in Stella; and the programmers, who book everything from reissues of silent classics like Intolerance to first-run premieres like The Cook, The Thief, His Wife and Her Lover to the annual Lesbian and Gay Film Festival.

Part neighborhood theater, part Bay Area treasure, the Castro is one of those rare places where no matter what movie you see, the place itself generates its own fun.

Spicy, weighty movies call for spicy, substantial food, and the new Mexican restaurant, Pozole, just around the corner from the Castro on Market, fills the bill. With an upbeat, colorful interior that stimulates the eyes and food that stimulates the palate, Po-zole is a great place to talk about the movie afterwards. You just might have to talk a little bit louder to be heard over the continual salsa music blaring from the speaker. Specialties like the pink bean soup and homemade chips and salsa make Pozole an exciting variation on the usual Mexican fare. And if conversation needs further stimulation, there's always the sangria to fall back on.

The Kabuki theater is another place where you simply cannot go wrong. With eight theaters, the place shows everything from major releases like Born on the Fourth of July to less well-known entries in the San Francisco International Film Festival. Like the Castro, the Kabuki is a bit of a kick just because of the little things, like the fact that there's a glass elevator, a snack bar on every level and validated parking. More than most theaters, the Kabuki is a stage for spectacle. More than most theaters, it has an interior that seems to welcome grand gestures, like a "Will You Marry Me" banner unfurled from the railing of one of the theater's many snack bars.

Deciding on a movie and a place to eat dinner around the Kabuki involves running a gauntlet of choices. To appear especially decisive, suggest noodles or sushi, and shepherd your sweetheart into the Japantown mall. Then just plunge into whatever looks appealing (they're all good). Of course, this writer's favorite hangout in Japantown is totally inappropriate for dating: Sapporo Ramen serves enormous bowls of delicious, slurpy, messy-as-hell ramen, so impossible to eat gracefully that the old adage about never eating salad on a first date seems like a quaint holdover from a more decorous era. Take a cue from a scene in Tampopo, where a bevy of young Japanese charm-school students slurp their noodles after receiving a lecture on the correct way to eat like an American. Besides allowing you to make a scene with your soup, Sapporo Ramen has the added advantage of being flush against the theater (just enter the mall and head upstairs) so that eating before the film lets you stretch dinner until the very last minute and eating afterwards means you can get to the food immediately.

At the Kabuki, you can still run out for a drink at Jack's Bar (the prototype for all divey, bluesy bars) before, after or during the show; but continue up Fillmore and the bars turn into those of the espresso variety. Yes, into the nice section of Fillmore, where there's no lack of fine restaurants in which to discuss the latest continental feature at the Clay (Fillmore between Clay and Sacramento). Making recent history with the incredibly long run that it gave the clunker Camille Claudel, the Clay is a comfortable, midsized movie house whose shabby/genteel atmosphere should give most people flashbacks of their first time at a foreign film.

Nice little restaurants rival swank boutiques for the dominant presence on this stretch of Fillmore, so it's not as if you'll go hungry if you forget to make reservations at La Mediterranee. But since La Med is the kind of small, intimate (and fairly cheap) restaurant that every romantic date deserves, it's strike one if you don't at least call ahead, as this place does tend to fill up easily.

Couples are at a distinct advantage here.

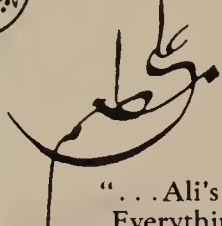

The night we were there, our party of three had to wait at the bar for 20 to 30 minutes before a space cleared — not that hanging out at the bar (where some people were eating their levant sandwiches) was so disagreeable. The food is a delicious blend of Middle Eastern dishes with several vegetarian alternatives and the appetizer sampler (tabouleh, baba ganoush and hummous) is definitely recommended.

The theater at Opera Plaza shows a combination of international movies and more mature domestic releases — no Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles here. With its tasteful Civic Center location, Opera Plaza would be just another place to see something like Murmur of the Heart or The Fabulous Baker Boys, except for the fact that it also uses its theaters for great experimental programs by New American Makers, which in the past has shown everything from videos on women who strip at the Lusty Lady to student films from the San Francisco Art Institute.

Perfect for an upscale date for two working professionals, Opera Plaza is fairly loaded with tony places to chow down. Two new restaurants, Enoteca Lanzone and Monsoon, flank the theater on either side, but for old habits that die hard, there's always Stars (or McDonald's) across the street.

We went to Monsoon one night, lured in by a mention of it in the New York Times magazine that glowed over the discovery of a new kind of California cuisine that actually allowed you to eat a hearty meal. Well, hard to find fault with that idea, we thought, but the

Deli Delights

More and more, supermarkets are becoming self-contained worlds — now they're even branching out into hot foods and salad bars. The Bay Guardian dispatched a reporter to evaluate the grocery grub, and here's the story she filed from the land of check-out stands and cool fluorescents. By Jean Field

SUPERMARKETS USED to be where Mom went, once a week, to buy carts of prepackaged basic necessities of life. She planned ahead, scanning the paper and the store shelves for sales, and bought the basic, low-tech ingredients to make the family's meals.

Even if that wasn't how all families functioned (many moms, in fact, raced around the supermarket, cart wheels screeching, grabbing Hamburger Helper and Spaghetti-O's from the overstocked shelves), that was how supermarkets envisioned their customers. If you wanted something to eat, you had to possess some basic skills and equipment: a can opener, a stove, a fork. The closest things to ready-to-eat foods were Hungry Man dinners and cottage cheese with the fruit cocktail already mixed in.

Nowadays, though, supermarkets are battling it out with restaurants and specialty food stores to win back the yuppie shopper's money — and they're having quite a bit of success. As more and more people get sick of eating out, are too tired to cook and find that the cute Continental notion of wandering through little specialty shops with their ecologically correct string shopping bags is more time-consuming than chic, they return to the supermarket.

And there, usually heralded in glowing, faux art-deco neon letters, awaits the supermarket deli. Not only do these corners of cuisine have the usual cheeses, high-priced foreign baloneys and baguettes, they now have salad bars, cooked chickens, lasagna, quiche, pre-sauced raviolis and chow mein.

"Homemakers are now thinking of supermarkets in terms of their fast-food needs," says Ruth Webber, editor of Northern California Deli, a quarterly magazine that serves the deli trade. According to Webber, it's a bona fide trend that has picked up speed in the last five years, with a movement toward hot food. In the coming years, Webber predicts, there'll be even more prepared entrees, like Italian, Chinese and Mexican dishes.

Most larger supermarkets in the area will make you a sandwich from any of the deli meats, sell half-pints of quite tasty potato, pasta and vegetable salads, and even cater events.

Some of the offerings at local super/delis taste pretty good, especially after you've been out drinking and all the restaurants are closed, and you'd normally be having a microwaved burrito that you'd regret the next morning. The prepared ravioli and quiche at the Market Street Safeway deli, for example, are perfectly fine, and the salad bar, if you stay away from the dressings and the mysterious white Kool Whip substance, is cheaper and easier than putting together your own ingredients. (But for salad bar lovers, Counter Culture is just across the street, and its salad bar, open until 9 pm, has got to be the best in the world. Along with gourmet mixed greens, it offers lightly steamed fresh vegetables, spicy croutons, a selection of exotic pasta salads and marinated vegetables like eggplant and string beans. If you're quick, you won't even have to move the car.)

The Safeway on Ocean Beach features an even bigger salad bar than the one on Market, complete with soup bar, Mexican bar and big pieces of fried chicken, as well as China Express, which offers a wide variety of steam-table cuisine at its finest. The Emperor's Special, consisting of a choice of chow mein, fried rice, stir-fried entree and an egg roll, is a good deal for $3.99. And although it won't keep any local restaurateurs awake nights worrying, the food tastes just fine.

PLAZA FOODS, on the corner of Masonic and Fulton, has become a veritable deli mall, with Falletti's Fine Foods, which features everything from Huggies to Acme Bread and organic greens, as the supermarket component.

Under the same roof, there's a butcher shop staffed by cheeky, cheery young men who flirt and joke while they wrap up large hunks of meat; a similarly staffed fish and poultry shop; a wine vendor; Just Desserts; and Auntie Pasta, which offers breads, cooked lasagna, dozens of precooked pasta sauces and freshly cut pasta. Maison Gourmet is the real deli section, and carries everything you could ever need for a Yuppie cheez-whiz party, including those olives that look like little prunes. It also does brisk business in barbecue ribs and roasted chicken.

Of course Andronico's, being in Berkeley, goes one step further. The chrome-and-garlic-braid emporium has added outlandishly expensive hot entrees like cooked ribs to its usual supply of tricolor pate wrapped in something like suet. It's so gross it must be gourmet. All the Andronico's outlets feature basically the same fare.

Even Rainbow Grocery in San Francisco's Mission District, the palace of bin foods and overly zealous nutrition labeling, has caught deli fever. Amidst the tubs of ten varieties of butter (almond, sesame, peanut, cashew, date, etc.) and bossy signs informing you of the seem-

Shop Till They Drop

Bay Area grocery delivery services are bringing the broccoli right to your door. But are they really as convenient as they boast? By Nell Bernstein

MY ROOMMATE Michelle likes to lie around the house and have people bring her Hostess Snowballs. Generally she's able to con her friends into providing this service. Sometimes, though, times get tough. It's times like these that a professional comes in handy.

Michael Goldstein, founder of the grocery delivery service Out Shopping, is just such a professional. "People are starting to pay more for services," says Goldstein. "The whole population is getting older. There's a growing realization that the Supermom ideal is not workable. People are realizing that their personal time is important to them."

I, for instance, woke up on a recent Sunday morning to the realization that I had invited people over for brunch, and the cupboard was bare. Not only that, but I happened to know the corner store was out of pink snowballs, and I figured Michelle would be getting restive later in the day. I decided Goldstein was right: the Superme idea was not proving workable. The time had come to pay more for services.

Unfortunately, it wasn't that easy. I discovered that grocery delivery, like so many services, is not actually designed for those who need it most — the truly disorganized. It turns out you can't get groceries delivered in San Francisco on a Sunday morning without a lot of advance planning. You have to have an account already, or a catalog, or have placed your order several hours in advance. And anyone who is that organized would have forgotten to shop in the first place.

I combed the Yellow Pages, looking for someone, anyone, who would bring me bagels, and fast. The guy at Marina Super said I lived too far away. I asked him if he knew of any stores in my neighborhood that delivered. "No, no," he snickered, "not in the Mission." "Not on Sunday," said the man at Valley Pride Market. The man at Valley Supermarket first said I was too far out of his neighborhood, but then said he'd come if the order was big enough to make it worth his while. I made a couple of bids, but they weren't accepted. Out Shopping doesn't deliver on weekends. And Grocery Express said it was too late for the morning delivery, and anyway, it would take two weeks to process my credit application. By the time I gave up and got off the phone, the guests were at the door. I sent them out to buy some bagels.

I had learned my lesson. The desire to pay more for services was not enough. The switch to a life of leisure was going to take some work. But in order to make the transition to full participation in the new service economy easier for the rest of you, I've compiled some information on the grocery delivery services available in San Francisco.

The most complete delivery service is offered by Grocery Express (641-5400), an "all-delivery market" that operates out of a warehouse on Evans Street. Grocery Express does business exclusively through phone, fax and computer orders. You order out of an elaborate catalog, which includes regular groceries, a full delicatessen, a bakery, a butcher shop and a drugstore. You can also order wine and beer, Grocery Express T-shirts, gift baskets and flowers. Grocery Express delivers between 8 am and 10 pm seven days a week and charges $4 for delivery, with free delivery on orders over $100. You must place your order at least three hours in advance of the two-hour time period in which you want your groceries delivered. In cases of genuine entertaining emergencies, an extra $20 will buy you their 60 Minute Express Service, which guarantees your groceries at your door within an hour of your phone call.

The folks at Grocery Express see their selling point as convenience: With the time you save on grocery shopping, promises the pineapple-shaped flyer delivered without charge to new customers, you'll be free to "relax and enjoy life to its fullest." I found this claim somewhat inflated. In any case, my own experience with Grocery Express had less to do with convenience than with adventure.

I had Grocery Express send me its catalog, and I dutifully jotted down the code numbers of everything I had ever desired. I then called up and read this list of numbers to a "service representative," who promised me that the corresponding items would arrive at my door that evening. The catalog basically lists by number the entire inventory of an average supermarket, with a few more specialty items. But somehow, seeing the items all there in writing, sometimes preceded by tantalizing adjectives ("spicy," "crunchy," "gourmet," "perfect"), made everything look more appealing. Maybe that's how we ended up with a family-sized box of Lucky Charms, an entire mocha almond cheesecake and a 16 ounce jar of sweet banana wax pepper pickles.

On the night appointed for the grocery delivery, I invited the disappointed brunch guests back for another try, and promised them dinner at home. When I had placed my order that afternoon, the service representative informed me that they were out of the trout curry, so I settled for four orders of chicken cordon blue (sic), at $6.50 each.

At 7 pm that night, the adventure began. The doorbell rang, right in the middle of the 6-8 pm time period I had requested, and a man actually brought several bags of groceries into my kitchen and set them down on the counter. I couldn't believe this was really happening to me. I pinched myself, and started to unload the groceries.

It took only moments to realize that although there were four side salads, only one of the chicken cordon "blues" had been delivered. The wine was missing too, although the new corkscrew I had ordered was there. I pursued the delivery person and informed him of this error, while the twice-disappointed guests began muttering about sending out for pizza. He did not act in the least bit surprised. He said there was nothing he could do, and suggested I call the dispatcher.

I did, and the wine and three more chicken cordon blues arrived within 15 minutes, along with three more side salads. By this time, we had noticed a couple of things we hadn't ordered mixed in with our groceries: a bottle of Freixenet champagne and a copy of Frisko magazine. We graciously accepted these gifts as Grocery Express's way of apologizing for the anxiety we had suffered while awaiting our chicken cordon blues.

A couple of hours later, as we were just finishing off the mocha almond cheesecake, the phone rang. It was Grocery Express, informing me that their courier thought he had left some things meant for another order at our house. I had to confess that we had already drunk the champagne and read the magazine. The service representative accepted this news graciously, and declined my sheepish offer to pay for the champagne.

The moral of the Grocery Express story for me was that with a service like this, you're paying not for actual convenience, but for a luxurious sense of convenience. By the time you've gone through the catalog and written down all the code numbers, spent ten minutes on the phone giving your order, waited around for up to two hours, paid and tipped the courier, and — in my case — waited for mistakes to be rectified, you haven't saved a lot of time. But you have gained the sense that you are a true child of the '90s, too busy to deal with the mundane details of domestic life, pulling out of the fast lane only long enough to wolf down a couple of chicken cordon "blues," willing and able to pay for more services.

My next attempt to have groceries delivered involved Out Shopping (391-2222), an organization that will take your order over the telephone, fill it at a retail grocery store and deliver it to your door for $10 plus 20 percent of the grocery total. There is an extra $5 charge for each additional store visited. Out Shopping has no minimum charge, so they are the ones to call if you want a gallon of milk delivered (at a cost of approximately $12). It asks customers to order between 9 am and noon, and will deliver between 3 pm and 6 pm.

According to founder Michael Goldstein, Out Shopping maintains files of product information to share with customers, and its telephone operators are knowledgeable about nutrition and consumer issues. It's a new business, and hours and services may change over the next few months.

Out Shopping currently advertises its hours as 9 am to 9 pm, Tuesday through Friday. I called at 7 pm on a Friday night, hoping to order the ingredients for a fruit salad I had promised to bring to a friend's on Saturday and, because of my fast-paced lifestyle, neglected to shop for. Again, I learned the hard way that services are not actually designed for the disorganized. Out Shopping didn't answer the phone, and the message machine said they "may have stepped out," and would call back if I left a number. I did, and they didn't, until the following Tuesday, so I can't vouch for how quick and efficient their service would have been had anyone been around to take my order.

My brief foray into the service economy left me with one question: Why would someone bother having their groceries delivered? I understand that services like the ones I tested were useful to housebound, elderly or disabled people, but it's clear that this group accounts for only a portion of the grocery delivery market. I asked John Jefferys, a former grocery delivery person, who his customers had been. Many, he said, were housebound, and for them he felt he was filling a genuine need. But with others, he said the desire for grocery delivery remained a mystery. "Some of them looked like perfectly normal people," Jefferys mused. "They didn't look that busy. I don't know why they couldn't do their shopping."

I posed the motive question to Michael Ninos, vice president of sales and marketing at Grocery Express. Why, I asked him, are people willing to pay so much more for something they could easily do themselves? "Everyone is very busy," he explained. "People have less and less time to devote to life in general." ○

A Cook's Atlas of Germany

THE CUISINES OF GERMANY.
BY HORST SCHARFENBERG.
POSEIDON PRESS, 511
PAGES, $24.95.

By Bob Patterson

AT FIRST glance there appears to be a misprint on the cover. Shouldn't it be The Cuisine (singular) of Germany? Isn't all German food the same — heavy, meat-centered, potato-laden dishes and overly sweet desserts? If you ask author Horst Scharfenberg, you'll undoubtedly get a resounding "Absolutely not!" In fact, his Cuisines of Germany is not only a cookbook, it's an essay on the variety of German regions and the food they produce.

My own first interests in cooking came from learning about the people of different parts of the world through the food they eat. The Cuisines of Germany is precisely the kind of book that turned me on to cooking. To begin, you should scan the map of the culinary regions of Germany, including a part of what is now regarded as Poland. Immediately, one sees that political boundaries are sheer folly — culinary preferences define the real borders throughout this region of Europe.

The first portion of the book is a culinary atlas of Germany's historic regions. Sixteen mini-chapters discuss various areas in terms of the history, culture and cooking that unifies the region. Even if you abhor cooking, you'll find these chapters intriguing.

The recipes that constitute the lion's share of the book are arranged not by region, but by course, although each is identified by the region from which it hails. Chapters are included on soups, salads and appetizers, fish, poultry, meat, sauces, vegetables and desserts. In addition to these conventional subjects, there is also a chapter on cheese, eggs and breakfast cakes, one on game, another on dumplings and spatzle and one on pickles, relishes and preserves. There's a separate chapter on German pastries and baked goods (not to be confused with the aforementioned breakfast cakes and desserts), and also a final chapter on German drinks.

The recipes themselves are inspiring in their diversity and tastiness. Take, for example, the soup offerings. In addition to expected dishes like potato soup and pea soup, you'll find recipes for lemon soup, snail soup, pancake soup, cotton soup, plum soup, brown beer soup and my favorite, Hamburger eel soup (from Hamburg, made with eel). This gives you an idea of the immense diversity to be found in German cooking and in this book.

All the standard German dishes are represented here, including Konigsberger klopse, hasenpfeffer, sauerbraten and rouladen. Of course, there are plenty of recipes for various kinds of wursts. In addition, however, every chapter provides new (at least for me) and interesting ways to prepare ingredients that most of us probably fix in only a few ways. Sauerkraut tossed in white wine sauce (weincrawes) from the Mosel Valley involves onions, smoked ham, potatoes and juniper berries. An elaborate herring salad includes pickled beets, cooked lean beef, knockwurst, apples, capers and potatoes, as well as herring filets.

The specialty chapters provide directions on how to prepare eingelegte grüne nusse (pickled walnuts) and suss-saure kurbis (sweet and sour pumpkin relish). For the more adventuresome, there are recipes for such items as saure kutteln (tripe cooked in vinegar) and ochenmaulsalat (beef muzzel salad).

The dessert and bakery chapters add yet another dimension to the book. How'd you like some omas schlosserbuben (grandma's little locksmith apprentices) for a sweet? Or bienenstichkuchen (bee-sting cake)? Quaint and curious names for dishes abound for German desserts, but you'll have to read the book to find out their derivation.

The recipes in the book also have a sense of history. Scharfenberg's rendition of the Westphalian vegetable stew called blindhuhn gives due credit to the "grande dame of German cookbook writers," Henriette Davidis-Holle, by citing her recipe rather than using one of his own. If you're a poet-cook, also read the recipe in verse for frankfurter brenten (almond pralines) by the poet-clergyman Eduard Morike.

From a publication viewpoint, this is a good-looking book. Text and recipes are clearly written and easy to understand. Ink illustrations of German scenes and cooking motifs are present throughout the text. A lesson I learned from this book is that tropical countries with uncommon ingredients are not the only places to find exotic cuisine. There is ample exotic cooking to be tasted in Germany — or in your own home with the help of this book. ○ best thing, really, about Monsoon is the decor — the lamps, specifically, that snake down from the ceiling like exotic orchids. The place was just a little too open for an intimate dinner, although a seat in one of the booths that look like they're built into the walls might possibly correct the impression that this place is too business-like for real romance.

Although the Civic Center restaurants do pack a lot of dating cachet, my dream date happens further up on Van Ness. We pull up in front of the Regency in a long white limo, we beckon the Regency's liveried doorman, "Two tickets for Indiana Jones and the Last Crusade," we say, thrusting hundreds of dollars at him. Then my date leans over and whispers suggestively, "Can I buy you dinner at the Hard Rock Cafe?"

Seriously, is it just a coincidence that the Regency, the Galaxy and the Hard Rock are all right there? Or is some higher power trying to make a statement about these temples to the mass consumption of food and film?

Mission District theaters like the Roxie, the York and Artists Television Access are great for dates when you want to throw around some good stuff like "Well, Lacan said..." or "Compared to Maya Deren's earlier films..." but, hey, everyone expects that. The way to keep a date really on his or her toes is to surprise the hell out of them by not suggesting a burrito for dinner. It takes a little ingenuity, but it's certainly possible.

Only about a block away from the Roxie, Bangkok 16 serves delicious Thai food in a restaurant with tablecloths and candlelight. Cafe Picaro, across the street from the Roxie, serves dinner until fairly late. The crowds of people studying, writing poetry and talking make this a perfect place to eat after the Roxie, which programs an incredible selection of films each year — everything from festivals of animation to Hotel Terminus.

The York Theater (at 24th St. and York) has the same sort of funky, repertory-house feeling as the Roxie. The York schedules everything from old Rock Hudson movies to the new documentary Through the Wire, ingly endless rules (No Eating In Deli, Please Conserve Water, This Bin is Only for Folded, Unwrinkled Bags, etc.), the Rainbow Deli offers a good selection of soups, salads and other vegetarian fare. The soups — typically chilis, stews and bean-based stocks — are nearly always excellent, and the noodle, rice and lentil salads, sold by the pint and half-pint, are good, if sometimes a bit heavy on the sea salt.

Other supermarket deli selections, however, are not so delightful. Some are downright skanky, even when wearing beer goggles. At some stores, I've seen lasagnas that look like mold experiments, and tasted ravioli that must have come from a dented can. Common sense should be the governing factor — if it looks good, chances are it will at least be adequate. If it looks bad, it definitely is. ○ about political prisoners in the United States. Sister-theater to the Red Vic, the York is a worker-owned and -operated collective, and serves up the same home-made brownies and yeast-topped popcorn that has been this writer's dinner many a night.

Good eats of the Mexican variety can be found near the York all up and down 24th street. Roosevelt's Tamale Parlor is practically right next door and serves up tamales for a good change of pace from you-know-what. Frutilandia, a black beans-and-rice Cuban restaurant, is a bit of a walk, but worth it. The main objective, however, when eating in this area, is to finish up before nine o'clock, in order to have candy or ice cream in the pink, '50s-style booths at the St. Francis ice cream parlor, where all the sweets are made on the premises.

The hippest date of all is one of A.T.A.'s "Other Cinema" shows on Saturday night. Nothing beats margaritas and a combination plate at La Rondalla (where it always looks like it's Christmas inside) after a good night of "trance dance" films or a Mishima short of fetishized hara kiri. We Be Sushi is another good dinner option here. A can of beer in a paper bag from the market across the street at 21st and Valencia is another.

One of the places that makes the Bay Area a world-class center for film is the Pacific Film Archive in Berkeley, where you're guaranteed to find rare, interesting and old-favorite films every night of the week. As an added convenience, the PFA has the Swallow Cafe attached to it (so you can buy your tickets first before the film sells out). Although well-lit (romantics take note) and with a hint of the cafeteria to it (there are trays involved), you can get an extremely decent meal here and probably even spot some arugula in your salad.

Of course, in Berkeley there's no lack of cafes to discuss the film in afterwards — and even some where it wouldn't look too bad to be hanging out alone — reading Les Cahiers du Cinema, of course. ○

THE VIEW FROM 7TH & MARKET

By Mark Forrester

EDITOR'S NOTE: For four years, we've been receiving monthly installments of a wonderful newsletter called The Forrester Papers. It's a real-life chronicle of the world of welfare recipients, the homeless and the underclass of San Francisco. Two years ago, we named The Forrester Papers the "Best News from the Streets" in our annual Best of the Bay Area issue.

The author, Mark Forrester, once directed the city's Senior Escort Service. Since 1985, he's been on General Assistance, sweeping the streets and performing other such thankless tasks in exchange for an all-too-meager monthly check. He's also been writing The Forrester Papers, telling the stories nobody else will tell, directly from a world most journalists will never see.

We've decided that Forrester needs a wider audience. This week, we're publishing an excerpt from his latest edition. It's in the form of an open letter to Deputy Mayor Claude Everhart. Look for more installments in the future.

(If you don't want to miss a single issue, Thelma Kavanaugh, who used to work with Forrester at Senior Escort and who types up the Papers, will put you on the mailing list. It's a labor of love, a very nonprofit operation — as a GA recipient, Forrester can't even receive outside income and Kavanaugh puts up the postage out of her own pocket. So if you want the subscription, have the decency to contribute some money for mailing costs. Thelma Kavanaugh, 350 Ellis #7C, SF CA 94102.)

TO: CLAUDE EVERHART, City Hall, San Francisco.

CLAUDE, I was sitting with my coffee in Jack in the Box, alternately watching the sidewalk traffic near Seventh and Market and reading Fields for President. Yes, W.C. Fields once proposed his candidacy, protesting the evils of his age. As I sat, I kept imagining my own list of peeves.

How extraordinary. We can build more office buildings, yet we can't educate our children; we can promote Mission Bay and something called a Pacific Trade Center, but we can't get our health-care system operating properly; we can get about running everyone else's business as if by divine right, but, really, we can't run our own. That happens when things get too big.

The Forrester Roundtable

WELL, MR. Everhart, I wasn't sitting alone for long. First Tumacity Jones arrived, then Loonie Mae, then the wiggly Hot Hips and, finally, Dianne Featherwister. In truth, Featherwister's overwhelming im-perfectum, to promulgate data and dicta, ended up most welcome this day. Her pomposities and jejeune regalities nicely balanced the great cackle I tried to moderate. Throwing W.C. Fields on the table, I began: "Let our topic be the significance of the following facts."

Then I handed out my ten points:

1. Each year our Congress passes some 250 new laws.
2. Each year federal agencies add 8,000 new regulations having the force of administrative law.
3. Each year various jurisdictions add 1,900 new and separate bureaucratic entities.
4. Each year these jurisdictions add 7 percent more in new staff positions.
5. Each year filling out various federal forms eats up about $90 billion.
6. Each year $8 out of $10 federal dollars go to the administration of its bureaucracies. (In San Francisco, it is $7 out of $10.)
7. Each day, legislative bodies across this land pass some 700 new laws.
8. In one person's lifetime, 11 million laws will be passed in his name and presumably for his benefit.
9. Yet nobody knows what's happening.
10. And nothing turns out the way it's supposed to.

"WHAT THIS means," observed Tumacity, "is that we're expiring beneath a pile of legislative garbage."

"Not at all!" was Featherwister's tart reply, and then, as usual, by an adroit manipulation of royal pretensions, fanciful prerogatives and fabulous assumptions, she dominated the proceedings. Seizing command, then speaking as long as she thought short, she remained both laboriously assured and regal. "America is greater than ever," she observed. "We have prevailed worldwide. What problems we have are easily disposed of by better command posts, perfected command structures and strong law and order."

"What a fabulous perception," sighed Hot Hips.

"Say," interrupted Loonie Mae, "did you know most politicians are very human, if nothing else?"

"Aw, shut up," Tumacity snarled. "Can't you see we's into something important here?"

"Indeed we are," said Featherwister, pleased with herself — again. Then she proceeded to hand out her position paper which I here reproduce:

Featherwister's Position Paper

"WE ARE a country surging toward inequality. In 1985, the share of total income that went to the top 20 percent of all families was 43.5 percent. Today the top 2 percent of the population receives 14 percent of total income and has 28 percent of total net worth.

"In contrast, the bottom 50 percent of the population has 4.5 percent of total net worth. Here's an added danger: In a period when total male employment was growing by 7.4 million jobs, 400,000 middle-income jobs held by males were disappearing. Yes, to be frank about it, new jobs have not prevented worsening income distribution and poor growth in productivity.

"In fact, since 1981, we have created 28.4 million jobs, a far better performance than our competitors show. However, I'll admit, many of these jobs do not directly improve productivity. Many are for lawyers, politicians and other ne'er-do-wells, and others are merely new middle management and office personnel positions, a featherbedding the '90s decade will have to clean out if we are to remain competitive with Japan, which uses computers to do these jobs.

"And I'll have to agree that the creation of these new jobs hasn't led to much in wage gains. In fact, many new jobs are inferior in wage rates to jobs created before 1970. This increase in service and clerical jobs has actually increased our surge toward inequality. And frankly, recent tax changes favor consumption and consumer credit over savings and investment.

"Even worse, the increasingly regressive nature of the sales, property and other local and state revenue-generators canceled out the progressive nature of federal taxes. I can explain it this way: A family of four with two wage-earners may have an income of $45,000, but it pays out 28.8 percent in total taxes, a rate which is much higher than someone earning $100,000 or more.

"Let me conclude by saying that I think problems in economic balance between income groups will get worse. The factors that make it so are: 1) intensification of foreign competition, 2) continuation of 5 percent rates of unemployment, 3) rising proportions of female workers, who earn less than their male counterparts, 4) creation of new jobs in low-paying service industries, 5) decline in the skill level and quality of the American work force, resulting from our inferior educational system, 6) decline in federal contributions to research and development and 7) persistence of a business and political leadership dedicated to short-range profit instead of long-range planning.

"Our surge toward greater economic inequality will create hosts of further problems.

"People will press for services they don't want to pay taxes for, they will demand credit to maintain a status quo against erosion in standards of living and, as they strive to maintain their own good fortune, they will turn their backs on those less fortunate."

THERE WASN'T a burp to be heard. Since Featherwister was addressing a group everyone had already turned their backs on, we had but one thought: "Featherwister's deserted her class, not ours!"

"Any questions?" she asked.

"It all sounds accurate to me. Just let me add this," I told her, wishing to show her that I, too, could roll out the facts. "In 1979 there were 4.1 million poor families with children; in 1990, 6.7 million and by 2000 the projection is for 9.4 million." There was now a palpable, dark-grained gloom gliding about our table, so I shut up.

Just then Thelma the K stopped by our table. "I've just got a second. Please, tell me what happens to the 37 million Americans without health insurance?" Featherwister said nothing. Tumacity Jones looked dyspeptic. Loonie Mae kept chewing her coffee cup and Hot Hips — well. So I answered.

"A task force will be set up, hearings will be held and another law will be passed."

"Another law!"

"Yes, and after that there will be more folks like me and Desolate John who still won't have insurance or money, who will get no care or, at best, second-rate care, all at minimal cost with maximum indifference."

"That's what happens when you leave everything to politicians and nothing to good sense," mused Hot Hips.

"Baby, you got a noose around your noggin," snapped Tumacity. Well, it didn't matter if she did. Thelma the K skipped out, followed by Featherwister and a few Feather wrinkles, leaving me with my three originals. Loonie Mae broke wind first. ■

3 Mustaphas 3: Sincere musicians or giant world beat joke?

FEZ THE MUSIC

World beat zanies 3 Mustaphas 3 bring their musical melting pot to San Francisco

By Derk Richardson

AT TWO in the morning I finally nod off in a swirling haze of Bulgarian and Grecian melodies, merengue, zouk and soca rhythms and lilting lyrics sung in KiSwahili, Hindi, French, Greek and Macedonian. The latest CD by 3 Mustaphas 3, Heart of Uncle, a phantasmagoria of transcontinental, poly-cultural sounds, is spinning into the night. I dream of Nigerian taxi drivers wearing fezzes, strumming ukuleles and telling knock-knock jokes in Yiddish.

At eight in the morning, the telephone rings: "Hello-oh? Can you hear me?"

"Just fine," I reply.

"Just fine, thank you, and you? Fine. Yes, we are mobile." It is Hijaz Mustapha, calling from a cellular phone in the van that is carrying the band across the country in the first 3 Mustaphas 3 coast-to-coast U.S. tour. As he speaks, the other Mustaphas are studying their language exercise books in Bulgarian, Serbo-Croatian, Russian and Albanian. "We are on the high road between New Jersey and America, somewhere," he explains, "watching the big Mack trucks go by. There goes one called Federal Express. Very, very good. It's white and has lots of wheels."

Hijaz Mustapha is one member of the large, mysterious Mustapha clan, which allegedly migrated to London in 1981 from the mythical town of Szegeyely, nestled between the Balkans and Caucasus. On the new album — the band's third — he plays bouzouk, banjo, Hawaiian guitar, tambura, hardingfele, fiddle and electric guitar, in an instrumental mix that includes flute, accordion, drums, kaval, organ, dumbek, clarinet, melodeon, tabla, talking drum and "expensive trombone," among other exotic instruments.

Some have said he bears a strong physical resemblance to Ben Mandelson of GlobeStyle Records, the leading world beat label that originally issued the first two 3 Mustaphas 3 albums, Mustaphas Play Stereo and Shopping (released here by Shanachie). It might be the connection, but over the phone, his accent drifts somewhere between England, Turkey, Egypt and Pakistan.

For its trip around the United States, the band is six people ("three on one end and three on the other end") and 20-something instruments strong. Back in Szegeyely, music was a family affair. "Without it, you are eating dry biscuit," Hijaz says. But now the band is traveling without its celebrated female vocalist, Lavra, who stayed home to care for a new baby.

The Mustaphas are known for playing a melting pot, a gumbo, a goulash of so-called world beat styles (and for recording their first album in a swimming pool), and Hijaz explains that musical borders must continue to crumble. "We have to continue developing," he says. "We can't just play our greatest hits, we have to generate new greatest hits. We're carrying on with some Middle European music and some more different kinds of African music — many, many things."

The Mustaphas have a deep affection for American musical heroes and folklore. They are longtime fans of country-music great Hank Williams. "He has that lonesome, whining sound that makes you want to go and howl at the moon," Hijaz explains. "We want to live the American popular song legend, of 'The Lost Highway' and Route 66, we want to ride the wild surf, we want to wait till daddy takes the T-Bird away, we love it."

But Hijaz is also quick to chide Americans for their cultural ethnocentricity. "All kind of music is international," he argues, "and in America, especially, you tend to believe that your music is the most important and that your music is the only popular music in the world. But actually, there are many, many kinds of popular music that happen at the same time that are just as important."

Just as Hijaz is getting into the lecture, the cellular phone begins to cut out. As he is saying something about "they are beginning to eat their own children," the line goes dead. When we regain our connection he asks, "You went out for a pizza?"

"No, I dozed off," I reply.

"I'm sorry, I'm not that soporific, I didn't mean to put you to sleep. I just want to say you need to put some additives into the diet, when it gets a little bit boring you need to add some special things, you see. Such it is with popular music. We are the vitamins."

"In the United States," he continues, "if you are careful, you can find a lot of very interesting music and musicians, and it's very sad that a lot of American people who have been living here for one or two generations are missing all those different cultures. They have to follow the fashion to look abroad, to say 'Oh, world music, world beat,' when, in fact, if they want, they can look around in every large city and every large town in America and there are special communities of the different people playing things that would add some special richness to the local culture.... We are modern people, and to me it's all urban modern folk music."

Heart of Uncle was recorded for Rykodisc, the independent company that has made a reputation with high-quality digital recordings of old and new music in every style. "They said they have signed artists like David Bowie and Frank Zappa," Hijaz explains, "and I said, 'I know they are not going to make any money for you but if you sign Mustaphas, it will help those two artists.' Those artists, Bowie and Zappa, are quite good folksingers and play the same kind of music we do, which is local folk music, so obviously this is the correct record label, and we said we will lend our support for those people because it is not easy for them."

The Mustaphas might be taken as an obvious hoax and giant world beat joke. But Hijaz professes a sincere commitment to doing the music right. "We have to do the best we can," he says, "and we hope that when we play it, we do play it our way. We have to play it with the Mustapha cachet. We like to introduce people to music, so we have a very wide job, and it is quite difficult. We cannot be expected to make everything old-fashioned and perfect. We are pluralistic Mustaphas."

As the cellular phone is cutting out again, about to put an end to our conversation, Hijaz Mustapha is extolling the virtues of the New Jersey countryside. "New Jersey is most beautiful state in America," he says, "because you have a whole collection of urban things to look at. They're using metal in a very new way in New Jersey, tubes and tubs just lying around and you don't know what they are but they're obviously there for a reason. It's like art. I read today that a man spent $82.5 million on a Van Gogh painting, but for $82.5 million you could buy New Jersey, and you'd have much better art." ■

BOOKS

REAGAN'S BRAIN

Speechwriter Peggy Noonan perpetuates the Reagan myth in her memoirs. Plus a review of "The Writer's Chapbook"

WHAT I SAW AT THE REVOLUTION: A POLITICAL LIFE IN THE REAGAN ERA. By Peggy Noonan. Random House, 346 pages, $19.95.

By Mia Certic

POLITICAL SPEECH-writers need to be partisan and passionate, and in this Peggy Noonan does not flinch. It was Noonan who gave us "a thousand points of light" and "a kinder, gentler nation" all in the same speech. She wrote Ronald Reagan's farewell address and George Bush's inaugural. Her vocation is evocation.

But anyone who turns to her memoirs, What I Saw at the Revolution, hoping to find that reason and understanding engendered her passion will be disappointed indeed.

That Noonan genuinely adored Reagan can hardly be questioned. Her desire to become his speechwriter was actually sensual ("I yearned to help the president...I ached to write his words"), as was her first glimpse of him, when all she saw was his foot through a door ("It was a beautiful foot, sleek. Such casual elegance and clean lines. But not a big foot, not formidable, maybe even a little...frail. I imagined cradling it in my arms, protecting it from unsmooth roads"). And though she was frequently disappointed and frustrated by him ("There were times when...I would think to myself...that the battle for the mind of Ronald Reagan was like the trench warfare of World War I: Never have so many fought so hard for such barren terrain"), her love never wavered. For she embraced Reagan the way she embraced god, and even when he sometimes mystified her, she didn't allow herself to question the embrace itself. Faith supplanted reason, symbols overwhelmed substance.

"Reagan, my Reagan," she called him, and she devoted two chapters to a sort of apologia pro vita sua in which doubts about his competence are washed away by floods of irrelevant but evocative descriptions of his boyhood: "Imagine the sound of a river, the burly Mississippi, snaking its way through soft defeated acres; it fights for every inch it gets, pushes and claims, pushes and claims. Its tributaries, sluggish and slow, push through Illinois, past Dixon, past Tampico, where, in the year 1911, he is born... It is all so long ago... Listen: a fly buzzing against an old screen door looking for a way out... and upstairs, the second floor, the boy on the bed reads a book about plumed knights. The kids call him 'Specs'; his face is earnest, too boyish to be pretty."

This pattern is the most striking aspect of the book, in part because of what it implies. Noonan has shown herself to be savvy, with-it, informed. It's not that she doesn't notice Reagan's boredom, his lack of engagement, his torpor; it's that she forgives him them. She loves him anyway. Shouldn't we all? She leaves reason behind and entreats us to do the same: Feel, don't think; feel good about America; ignore injustice; trust, don't verify. The book, like the era, is a celebration of mediocrity, uninformed patriotism and intolerance for the faithless. It recalls George Bush's campaign for president, with its flag-factory photo-ops and menacing images of Willie Horton.

What I Saw at the Revolution is interesting for other reasons, too. It is frequently amusing, usually entertaining, always readable. Noonan is, after all, an effective writer. There are passages that do not make one's toes curl (though for the most part one wishes that her editor had shown a bit less respect). There are excerpts from truly moving speeches, particularly one about John Kennedy that Reagan gave at a fundraiser for the JFK Library, and Noonan is generous in sharing the speechwriting process and the sources of her inspiration.

Finally, it is interesting in what it reveals about its author, who, in such a significant way, gave voice to the era. She is, if one were for a moment to indulge in the kind of labeling she favors, a curiously conservative mixture of emotionalism and pragmatism, of compassion and derision, of sensitivity and self-righteousness. Noonan says early on that "at the heart of our modern political disputes [is] a disagreement over where the mainstream is and what 'normal' is, politically and culturally." Outside her bounds of "normal" live the homeless, the intellectuals, those born rich, liberals, Ivy Leaguers, atheists — in short, anyone she would have been unlikely to bump into in her Massapequa neighborhood in 1958. She is contemptuous of Donald Regan for forgetting his humble beginnings, but she errs in the opposite direction by refusing to go beyond the backyard of her childhood. There her vision was formed and her horizons were defined, and she is dangerously unaware of any limitations.

Thus, too, in her frequent flights of fantasy and symbol, she emerges just for a moment to snipe at the enemy: "I'll tell you something surprising: This sunny man [Reagan] touched so many Americans in part because they perceived his pain. They saw beyond the

THE WRITER'S CHAPBOOK.

Edited by George Plimpton. Viking, 381 pages, $19.95.

By Lisa Cutler

FOR THE past 37 years, George Plimpton has been publishing The Paris Review, a quarterly collection of new fiction and poetry interspersed with interviews of big-name writers. These interviews, many of which have been collected in the series Writers At Work, often offer enlightenment in regards to what makes a particular author write, how he or she works, etc.

In the latest configuration on The Paris Review interview theme, Plimpton takes a broader view. As he says in the introduction, "The focus is on subject matter rather than author." So what is presented in this "compendium of fact, opinion, wit and advice from the 20th century's preeminent writers" (quite a lofty subtitle and not altogether accurate, but more on that later) are bits and pieces of interviews that have appeared in The Paris Review gathered under general headings. The idea was to find associated quotes on various topics in order to give a sense of what "a writer" thinks about said topic.

For example, in the first section, "On Reading," John Barth, Truman Capote, Bernard Malamud, Katherine Anne Porter and others discourse on their reading habits. As with most of the subject headings, this one is a pretty loose fit. Most of the people talk about which writers influenced them; others speak of other types of reading — Erskine Caldwell, for instance, used to read the Sears catalog until he decided to become a writer rather than a reader.

Others talk about how reading affects them. John Cheever says, "The books you really love give the sense, when you first open them, of having been there," while Henry Green claims to forget everything he reads at once, including his own stuff.

As would be expected, there is no predetermined "writer's mindset;" if this book accomplishes anything, it proves that there isn't a certain way that all writers think or operate. As a result, you get James Baldwin approaching a project thinking, "Do this book, or die," while Edmund White considers it nonsense when writers say, "I write because I must." ... I think many writers would be perfectly happy to lay down their pens and never write again if they could maintain their prestige, professorship and PEN membership."

On the subject of the most desirable view from one's writing room, Norman Mailer prefers "looking at the sea, or ships, or anything which has a vista." On the other hand, William Maxwell prefers "small messy rooms that don't look out on anything interesting," and once wrote "beside a window looking out on a tin roof. It was perfect."

Due to the brevity of the quotes — some are only a line or two — the personality of any one author comes through only infrequently. Occasionally it does, however; Capote is alternately catty and haughty, Hemingway sounds surly, Kerouac sounds as if he is quite possibly stoned, Doctorow is understatedly witty (I personally could have used more Doctorow) and, of course, Dorothy Parker gets all the best lines.

Parker claims to have been kicked out of convent school for insisting the immaculate conception was spontaneous combustion, and when asked about work habits, says, "I tried to keep one [a notebook] but I never could remember where I put the damn thing."

There are a few concrete glimpses of some lives: T.S. Eliot turned to writing because he was too slow to box, Frank O'Connor became a writer because pen and paper were cheaper than paints, John Dos Passos worked on The Great Novel with a friend in a cement foxhole.

The most intriguing and satisfying section is "On Work Habits," which shows writers to be a pretty weird lot, taking part in strange rituals and drinking a lot. The most promising — and disappointing — section is "On Peers: Portraits," which has James Dickey offering his impressions of Robert Frost, Lillian Hellman on Gertrude Stein, Aldous Huxley on D.H. Lawrence and so on. There is little in the way of insight or interest — or even amusement — offered here. The major thing you learn is that Rebecca West didn't seem to like a whole lot of people.

The book's other major fault is the subtitle. As is usually the case with such immodest claims, the content hardly encompasses all the subtitle implies; this is hardly a complete representation of all the preeminent writers of the 20th century.

First of all, The Paris Review has only been around since 1953, so only writers who were available and of interest during the latter half of the century could appear here. Thus, even though he is referred to multitudinously, James Joyce isn't quoted; neither is George Orwell. By Plimpton's own admission, some writers don't grant interviews, so Salinger and Pynchon aren't heard from.

With a few notable exceptions, there is a specific contingent that is heard from (you can probably see this coming a mile away): Most of the interviewees are white American males. If this is a compendium of preeminent writers, and you're going to include Irwin Shaw, where is Toni Morrison? Manuel Puig? Bobbie Ann Mason? Alice Walker? Aren't there any Asian or African or Hispanic writers who qualify for preeminence?

Maybe Plimpton didn't have interviews with any of them to choose from (but why not?). Or if he did, maybe they didn't say anything pithy and relevant to the topics (which seems unlikely). Whatever the reason, he should have chosen a less annoying and overzealous subtitle.

The point here isn't to denigrate the validity of what the writers who are included have to say, or to assume that someone of a different gender or ethnicity would say something more profound — although their viewpoints could widen the book's perspective some. But above all, it's a bit condescending (not to mention archaic) to call this a collection of the century's most important authors and then include mostly white men, with a smattering of Joan Didion and Richard Wright thrown in.

As for the first half of the subtitle: The book does, technically, offer "fact, opinion, wit and advice," the accent on wit and opinion, with advice being the indirect byproduct.

The Writer's Chapbook would likely prove encouraging to any writer, fledgling or otherwise. No matter what his or her work habits, views on critics, preferences regarding artificial stimulants or sources of inspiration, somewhere in this book there will be an established, successful writer who agrees. ■

ASK ISADORA

DOING HER WOMANLY DUTY

By Isadora Alman

Q: As a widow of several years who is still young enough to enjoy and want sex, I have a problem. As my husband was quite a few years my senior, my sex life toward the end of his life was not what you would call perfect. When he had trouble with an erection I felt it my duty to help him orally, even though I personally do not enjoy this act. Still, he was my husband and his troubles were my troubles. I purchased a vibrator and learned to bring

Eventually I met a man I thought could be a friend and sex partner to me — a widower. With the present threat of AIDS I was careful in my choice; however, this friend is going through the same condition my husband did. I decided not to enter into any relationship in which I would receive incomplete satisfaction unless I indulged in practices I disliked, so I have gone back to masturbation, using the vibrator and porn films on late-night TV. I do this occasionally and only when I feel the need. My question is: Is it terribly unnatural? Am I hurting my character? Am I the only one in such a situation?

A: Let me assure you that you and only you can be the judge of what is appropriate sexual behavior for you. Providing yourself with orgasms is very natural, seems only sensible and hurts no one except you, and then only if you feel bad about it. Please re-examine your beliefs about self-satisfaction. I urge you also to look at other methods of assisting a partner with erectile difficulties, should you encounter another. Not all men expect, require or even want oral sex. It seems a shame to forgo the many other benefits of an intimate relationship under the mistaken belief that performing oral sex would be a requirement.

Q: Now that I have begun using rubbers again, the dread occurrence of the '50s is happening again — rubbing through and shredding reservoir-end latex rubbers. I believe the problem comes from trying to ram a dick head into that useless tip hundreds of useless times. As a reservoir, it's a joke. Come on, a good load in that tiny tip? It has become part of the look of a rubber, that's all. I've never had this problem with equipment without reservoir ends. What do you think? What do you know? What is it with the rubber makers?

A: I sympathize with your frustration, but smooth-end condoms are still being manufactured. Buy those and forget about the ones that cause you such grief. They do work for some men, or there wouldn't be so many of them on the market. I don't think "style" is sufficient explanation.

Q: I have recently encountered a small problem that probably isn't that uncommon, given men's general lack of knowledge of female sexual anatomy. I don't really feel anything when my partner is wagging his tongue around deep inside my vagina. I don't mind him doing this, of course, but it's not arousing — except maybe to him — since he's not doing anything to my clit besides squashing it. I'm afraid that discussing this would make him feel self-conscious and inept anytime he puts his tongue on or in me. Is there any tactful way I can say, "If you're doing that to help me come, don't bother"? Please remind your male readers that if the goal is an orgasm, the object of their attention and stimulation should ultimately be the clitoris.

A: Let's personalize this very personal matter — your boyfriend's tongue, your clit, rather than men's general ignorance about women's needs. "Tell me what it's like for you when you go down on me," or "Let me tell you what I feel when you do that" are openers to a discussion in which you can impart your preferences and discover his. "I'm afraid there are certain things you do only to please me and I want to check them out" is another, more direct way. Stressing what you like rather than what you don't is, in general, a more palatable way of telling a personal truth.

Q: Every man I've ever been seriously involved with has gotten married to his next girlfriend. This has happened five times now! The latest was a man who always said he was incapable of having a relationship. Two boyfriends I left, two left me, one was fairly mutual. None of my girlfriends have experienced this. Is this a common phenomenon? I'm starting to feel paranoid about having another relationship.

A: For every non-virgin man who gets married, someone had to be his previous girlfriend, right? Therefore, what's been happening to you has happened at least once to many, many women. How come you've gotten such a disproportionate share? Bad luck, bad karma, bad choice, bad timing, maybe some of each. It might help to try some fact-finding by talking to those men who might still be in your life, and asking for input from your girlfriends about your choices and your behavior. If you can't find any explanations that satisfy you, perhaps you could comfort yourself with the possibility of all those men thinking, "I guess I've had the best there is, so I'd better settle down and quit searching for anything better." ■

NEO NORTH BEACH

Calzone's is stuffed full of style, upscale pizzas and light Italian fare

By Janet Hazen

AT FIRST glance, Calzone's almost looks like a tourist trap. The busy, colorful decor, slick black tile work and photo-covered walls are obviously inviting to tourists, but locals should (and do) check it out, too. It's really the food that shines at this popular spot: The portions are large, and the ingredients are wholesome, flavorful and plentiful.

The first half of one dinner was almost marred by the chilly and casual air of our server, but the food made a remarkable impression on us, and we decided to forget about his bad attitude. Fresh bread scented lightly with rosemary is served with butter, but the bottled hot chili olive oil on each table is too good to resist, and is wonderful not only with the bread, but drizzled on some of the pasta dishes as well. The food at Calzone's certainly doesn't need any doctoring at the table, but a dash of hot pepper is sometimes welcome if you like spicy food.

The wine list offers a few reasonably priced Italian reds for less than $20. We enjoyed a 1983 Chianti Riserva for $16, but it was listed as a 1985, which is actually a better year; diners should be told about changes in vintages. 1988 Fresco Baldi Chianti ($14.75) is also a good deal and is light and lean enough to go with most anything on the menu.

The large salads are indeed very large, balanced and filling. Spinach salad ($9.25), made with chicken, kalamata olives, thinly sliced red onions, pancetta and gorgonzola cheese and tossed with a terrific mustard vinaigrette, was perfectly dressed and very generous. The Caesar salad ($7.50), made with chopped romaine leaves and crunchy croutons, was a bit wet, but still good.

Pizzas and calzones here are made with a thin, almost crispy dough, and pizza pie.

The porcini mushroom ravioli ($10.95) was flawless and very reasonably priced. These house-made, delicate but intensely flavored pasta packets were sauced with sage butter and dusted with parmesan cheese. Sausage with linguine ($10.50) combines cannellini beans, broccoli rabe, swiss chard and lots of herbs tossed with olive oil.

If you like to indulge in cream sauces once in a while, try prosciutto and fettuccine ($10.50). Pancetta, artichoke hearts and what looked and felt like corned beef but was actually prosciutto were tossed in an excellent cream sauce made with basil, parsley and parmesan cheese.

Roasted rosemary chicken ($12.95), half a chicken scented with rosemary and garlic, was very tender, moist and juicy. Bright green broccoli spears and terrific golden-brown, crispy-fried potatoes accompanied the chicken. I can't imagine anyone passing up one of the pasta dishes, pizzas or calzones, but I would order this generous plate again.

Calzone's is a lively, bright place to eat lunch or dinner. The service may be lacking from time to time, but large portions, spirited ingredients and a creative menu set this North Beach restaurant apart from many of the other Italian places in the neighborhood. If you want to lunch in style, take the free limo that leaves every 15 minutes Monday through Friday from Drumm and California near the cable car turnaround — it's only a five-minute ride. If this doesn't lure you to North Beach, even in rush-hour traffic, nothing will.

one sounds better than the next. Sun-dried tomato pizza ($10.25), chock-full of sultry, flavor-packed tomatoes, was made with roasted garlic, sweet onion and plenty of good-quality mozzarella cheese. It was a wonderful pizza, and because the crust is so light, you don't feel too full after sharing it with one person.

Southwestern and American ingredients show up in quite a few dishes at Calzone's, and the barbecue chicken calzone ($9.75) is a good example of mixing cuisines. The tender chicken with barbecue sauce was matched with roasted garlic, mozzarella cheese and cilantro and wrapped up in the thin, light dough to make an outstanding

Superlist No. 489: Spanish restaurants in San Francisco

If you've ever been to Spain, then you know how diverse and delicious the food is. From the hearty barbecues and stews of the Basque country, to the mariscos (seafood) of the south, Spanish cuisine is highly regional but consistently rewarding, especially for those who favor garlic and are unfettered by high cholesterol levels.

In addition to the well-known paella, Spain boasts many other delicious national dishes that have simply crossed the Atlantic more discreetly. This may be due to the richness inherent in most Spanish food (which is going out of style in health-conscious America), or perhaps because your average American is wary of unusual creatures or body parts disguised as meals — two typical Spanish favorites being pulpo en su tinta (octopus served in its ink) and morcilla (dried cow's blood wrapped in intestine).

There are only a handful of Spanish restaurants in San Francisco, and most of these are part-Spanish, part-something else (Mexican, Peruvian, Italian). Scattered across the city, they vary from a simple bodega (cellar) near Chinatown to an elaborate affair in Richmond complete with pre-Colombian art, alternating dining room motifs and banquet reservations. Most offer live entertainment, from the traditional flamenco music of Spain to the more contemporary Latin rhythms of salsa, samba and merengue.

Menus range from perfunctory — with only paella and one or two other Spanish staples, like pollo al ajillo (chicken with garlic) and al jerez (with sherry) — to exhaustive; one spot has items you might have trouble finding in Spain. Almost all offer tapas, the fashionable appetizers that traditionally come free with drinks in Spain but can cost as much as $9 here.

Prices for entrees are generally in the $8 to $20 range. Most of the restaurants also have Spanish wine, and a few carry Chilean wines that are worth trying. One or two succeed in capturing the Spanish feel — tiles, dark wood, hanging meat, waiters in black pants, bow tie and vest — while others don't even try. If you're interested in Spanish dining, it's likely that one of them will suit your taste.

(A footnote: Is it indicative of the relative obscurity of Spanish cuisine in the city that its best proponent — according to a knowledgeable competitor — is Julian Serrano, who runs the French kitchen at Masa's?)

Alejandro's Run by chef Alejandro Espinoza, this is one of the oldest (11 years) and most established restaurants serving Spanish food in the city. The menu includes Spanish, Mexican and Peruvian items, with favorites like paella marinera (saffron rice with seafood, shellfish and vegetables, $15.35), conejo en salsa de mani (rabbit cooked in peanut sauce, $13.95) and parrillada de mariscos y pescados (grilled fish and shellfish served on bed of saffron rice, $14.60). The hanging meat and glass seafood display case give the place a genuine Spanish feel, while Peruvian mirrors, South American art and one or two Mexican sombreros round out a truly eclectic decor. A full list of hot and cold tapas ($3-$7), as well as Spanish staples like gazpacho

($3.60) and ensalada espanola ($3.25), are also available. Reservations advised on weekends. Mon.-Thurs., 5-11 pm; Fri. and Sat., 5 pm-midnight; Sun., 4-11 pm. 1840 Clement, 668 1184.

La Bodega Located just on the edge of Chinatown, this is a small, narrow cafe that serves only paella ($14 includes everything from bread to coffee) and Italian focaccia. The special draw here is the Acoustic Cafe on Wed. nights (Latin, jazz, folk) and live flamenco music performed by owners Bernardo and Carla Kriel Thurs.-Sun. nights. The atmosphere is intimate and casual, and it evokes an authentic bodega (cellar) feel, with impressionist artwork by Carla and flamenco posters decorating the walls. A variety of wines, ports and sherries are also available. Performances begin at 8 pm. Reservations accepted. Restaurant hours are Wed.-Sun., 6 pm-midnight. 1337 Grant, 433-0439.

Mangia Bene (formerly El Meson) With its tile, dark wood and bar inlaid with different crests from Spain, this is as close as you can get to a meson (the Spanish equivalent of an English pub) in San Francisco. The restaurant combines a dining area upstairs with a bar and stage downstairs, and new owner Luisa Hanson has added Italian dishes to the traditional Spanish fare. Tapas run $4-$7 and the paella marinera is $28 for two, while typical Spanish meat dishes — lomo de cerdo, ternera a la parrilla and cordero a la manchega (grilled pork loin, grilled veal and grilled lamb, respectively) — are $13 or $14. Prices include soup or salad, bread, rice and vegetables. Typical Spanish desserts like flan and arroz con leche are also available for $2.75. Live flamenco music Fri.-Sat. nights. Tues.-Thurs., 4:30-11 pm; Fri.-Sat. 4:30 pm-midnight; Sun., 4:30-10:30 pm. 1333 Columbus, 673-3273.

El Oso High ceilings, moose heads, gun collections, palm trees, an immense bar and Tiffany glasswork from Henry Africa's make for an eclectic feel at this popular Mission spot, which also boasts the most extensive menu of traditional Spanish fare anywhere in the city. Tapas and bocadillos (typical sandwiches) range from $5 to $10, entrees from $10 to $15; the specialties here are the paella, as well as the carnes al carbon (barbecued meats) and bacalao a la vizcaina (salted codfish in spicy tomato sauce) typical of owner Ataulfo Perez Briz's native Santander, in the north of Spain. There's live entertainment every night, including a Latin house band and flamenco dancing on Sundays. Reservations accepted. Daily, 11 am-3 pm and 6-10 pm. 1153 Valencia, 550-0601.

El Patio Espanol Renowned Spanish chef Jose Perez Garcia (who came from El Meson), the "patio" feel (complete with wrought iron, tile and fountain) and its location in the Union Espanola de California social club building make this restaurant a favorite among Spaniards. Popular items include the paella ($15 per person, minimum two people) and pollo al jerez ($12), as well as the tapas ($3-$6.75) and sangria ($8.50 per pitcher). The restaurant is also notable for its Sunday brunch. Reservations accepted. Lunch: Mon. and Wed.-Fri., 11:30 am-2:30 pm. Dinner: Mon., Wed. and Thurs., 5:30-9:30 pm; Fri.-Sat., 5:30-10 pm; Sun., 5:30-9:30 pm. Brunch: Sun., noon-3 pm. 2850 Alemany, 587-5117.

La Roca Run by Salvadoran chef Concepcion Vega, this Noe Valley spot offers a mixture of Spanish and Mexican dishes, specializing in seafood. Among the house specialties are the paella ($14.95), the mariscada ($14.95) and the siete mares (Seven Seas soup, $14.50). The decor includes South American art, and the extensive wine list (California, Chile, Spain) adds cachet. Reservations accepted. Tues.-Sun., 5-10 pm; Fri.-Sat. 5-11 pm. 4288 24th St., 282-7780. Chattahoochee

Hero status and peace are too onerous for shy, religious Korean War veteran Emmett Foley to bear. Consequently, he starts randomly shooting up his 1955 Florida neighborhood, hoping to be killed by police, and, when that doesn't happen, tries suicide, with similar results. He's confined to Chattahoochee's state mental hospital (which makes The Snake Pit look like a Disney production), where nightmarish patients, the untrained, sadistic attendants and Foley's shallow wife Frances McDormand don't exactly help. Patients disappear or come back to the wards brutally beaten, and when Foley writes to a victim's wife telling her the truth, he takes the first step in a several-year, true-life reform saga, aided by his sister Pamela Reed, for which he'll pay cruelly before vindication. Gary Oldman plays Foley to perfection, and can you believe Dennis Hopper comes off as one of the film's sanest people in Mick Jackson's far from pretty but entirely believable picture? (Kabuki, SF)

Last Exit to Brooklyn

To call this decaying, Germanic-looking 1952 working-class Brooklyn waterfront neighborhood a hellhole is to euphemize. A Korea-bound GI's beaten almost to death by teenage prostitute Jennifer Jason Leigh's pimp Peter Dobson and his goons. Defeated strikers picket a deserted factory. Strike secretary Stephen Lang, attracted to effeminate homosexual Alexis Arquette, goes home to sexually brutalize his wife. Striking factory worker Burt Young finds out his daughter's not merely fat, she's pregnant, and explodes. The male-to-female attitude is "Who the f--- do you think you are?" and Leigh loses out when she lures drunken GI's to vacant lots so that Dobson and company can mug them. When Lang's late arriving at a raging factory riot because of new male lover Zette, union leader Jerry Orbach destroys him, and the fates of Lang, Arquette and Leigh are appalling in director Uli Edel's Teutonic-toned nightmare version of the American Dream from which everything but degradation has exited. THE SECOND annual GOLDie (Guardian Outstanding Local Discovery) Awards were presented to a capacity crowd on Monday, May 14th, at Fort Mason's Cowell Theatre. The Bay Guardian established the GOLDies last year to honor local artists and organizations who have not received the acclaim they deserve for their achievements in the performing and visual arts. Nearly 500 people from diverse arts communities around the Bay Area attended the reception and awards ceremony.

The winners of the 1990 GOLDie Awards: Lifetime Achievement winner Anna Halprin, for her life-long commitment to dance and healing; dancer/performance artist Tracy Rhoades; filmmaker Konrad Steiner; musician Barbara Manning; robot builder/performance artist Chico MacMurtrie; jazz drummer Eddie Marshall; photographer Gerda Mathan; playwright/actor David Barth; storyteller Brenda Wong Aoki; the musical group Altazor; and Concepts Cultural Gallery. SAMPLINGS

Documentary festival turns 20

People in the Bay Area must watch more documentaries per capita than anywhere else in the country. Films that other regions see only on television, if at all, have healthy theatrical runs here, and KOED-TV scores high ratings with such documentary series as PBS's P.O.V. and the local Viewpoint.

This may also explain why only eight of the nearly 70 titles in this year's National Educational Film and Video Festival are Bay Area premieres. The second-largest festival of non-theatrical films in the United States, it's celebrating its 20th anniversary this year, with screenings this weekend and next at the Oakland Museum and San Francisco's Exploratorium.

Although some shows are curated, the bulk of the festival is competitive. Top prizewinners include Richard Kilberg's Adam Clayton Powell and Robert Epstein's and Jeffrey Friedman's Oscar-winning Common Threads: Stories from the Quilt. Other highly praised titles include Berkeley in the Sixties, J'ai Ete au Bal: The Cajun and Zydeco Music of Louisiana, Tongues Untied, Teatro!, Days of Waiting, Samsara: Death and Rebirth in Cambodia, Yosemite, James Baldwin: The Price of the Ticket, Popul Vuh and Stephen Rice's 1983 Music in Monk Time, which offers a different view of the musician than last year's Thelonious Monk: Straight No Chaser.

Seven Academy Award nominees show in four consecutive programs (Sun/27 in Oakland, Sat/2 in San Francisco). One is Bill Jersey's and Susan Leonard's Super Chief: The Life and Legacy of Earl Warren, a balanced but sympathetic portrait of the former Republican governor of California and vice-presidential candidate who presided over the Supreme Court for 16 of its most progressive years.

Special festival programs include a day of films and discussion about Jack London (Sat/2 in Oakland), and a day of films by and about three generations of the Eames family (Mon/28 in San Francisco). The 20th-anniversary celebration (Thurs/24 at the Oakland Museum) includes dinner, a reception, a graphic presentation by Art Twain and humor by Bob Sarlatte. There are also four seminars (May 24th and 25th) in the Oakland Convention Center, and a symposium (May 26th) at the Oakland Museum.

Oakland Museum screenings are $5 per day (free to seniors and students under 18); Exploratorium screenings are free with regular admission ($5 for adults, good for six months). An unlimited screening pass is $25, and a screening and seminar pass is $100. For complete program and ticket information, call 465-6885.

There's more to Brazil than the lambada

Now that the reign of the deadly lambada seems to be finally nearing its end, it's a good time to go out and experience things truly Brazilian. As summer approaches, the samba, the scanty Carnival costumes and the general bonhomie of San Francisco's Brazilians are pretty hard to resist. If you know where to find it all. With the recent opening of Studio Brasil, a pocket of South American culture near San Francisco's Civic Center, finding it has gotten a little easier.

Situated at 50 Brady Street, Studio Brasil offers a smoke- and alcohol-free alternative to the more bar-ish atmosphere of its Brazilian neighbor, Bahia Tropical. The Studio produces a variety of Latin dance and musical events on weekends — frequently but irregularly, they say — as well as authentic Brazilian food and drinks all week long.

The owners, musicians Chalo Eduardo and Claudio Amaral, often perform at the Studio with their own groups. Chalo Eduardo and the Brazilian Beat, regular favorites at El Rio and other Bay Area clubs, features flashy tambourine pyrotechnics by percussionist Eduardo; Amaral's Viva Brasil appears at the Studio more frequently, filling the 15-by-30-foot dance hall with driving samba rhythms.

Just inside the Studio's doors, Kitutz Korner, run by in-house Brazilian gourmet Claudio Bebianno, serves Brazilian specialties, including spicy Brazilian beef croquettes called kibes, light turnovers known as pasteisinhos and exotic specialty juices with names like Leblom Sunset and Batucada Nectar. Kitutz Korner is open Monday-Friday, 11 am-9 pm; Saturdays, 11 am-4 pm; and for all evening activities.

Of course, no place that has "Brasil" in its title would be at all official without featuring samba dancing. The Escola Nova De Samba, Studio Brasil's resident dance company, not only performs regular floor shows, but also offers classes in the high-energy style several times a week. (And yes, they'll even teach you the lambada.) Classes are $8 each on a drop-in basis, and $6 with Escola membership (other discounts are also available). The Escola can be reached at 863-8291.

The hours and events at Studio Brasil are flexible and, since corporate and nonprofit organizations often rent the space for private parties, it's best to call ahead to make sure it's open. Studio events are listed in local newspapers, or you can call 863-0321 for the latest schedule and to get on the mailing list.

A fitting introduction to Studio Brasil might be the pre-Carnaval parade party, happening Sat/26 at 7:30 pm. In the spirit of Rio's Carnival celebration, it includes costumes, dancing to Viva Brasil and a full Brazilian buffet prepared by Bebianno. The $8 door charge includes all entertainment and food.

Is it black or white?

Johnny Clegg makes his living playing a blend of Zulu jive, South African folk music and international pop with his interracial band Savuka (Zulu for "We Have Arisen"). While interracial bands are rare even in America, in South Africa, Clegg's love of black music is almost against the law.

"Even radio is segregated here," Clegg asserted in a phone interview from his home in Johannesburg. "Today Radio Metro plays all kinds of music, but that's partially to blunt the cultural struggle. The SABC (South African Broadcasting Company) still controls everything. They keep transmitters in the homelands so small that they won't be heard outside of a short radius — a conscious plan to keep ethnic groups separate."

Clegg's music has helped to weaken these barriers. His first band, Juluka (Zulu for "sweat"), recorded the first South African disc to feature blacks and whites playing together. "The record company asked us, 'Is this music black or white?'" Clegg chuckled. "They decided that since the backing was African, black stations should play it."

Clegg learned Zulu music "in the black community, in places that weren't accessible to whites. For example, the rooftops of the apartment blocks in urban areas have houses where servants and flat cleaners live. I'd sneak up there to play." Clegg met his future partner, guitarist Siphon Mchunu, at a rooftop party. "We started playing in black areas, where whites didn't see us, but as we got more popular, we'd have police walk on stage and say 'You've got five minutes to empty the hall.'"

Juluka branched out into South African folk, rock, funk and Zulu street guitar. By 1979, the band had six members (three white and three black) and a platinum album. "We were on the edge of international fame when Siphon decided he had to help his family take care of their farm. A Zulu man finds family more important than pop music."

Clegg continued alone. He cut a pop album, Third World Child, and as the political situation heated up, he returned to performing. "I'm not a political activist as far as being a socialist or a capitalist," Clegg explained, "but people have fundamental rights that must be stood up for. Music can't change the political situation, but it can make people aware, and in that sense, maybe we can make a difference."

"It's hard to explain the contradictions [to someone who doesn't live here], or even tell you why I feel hopeful, but there's a resilience to the people that you can feel in the streets and in the workplace or in church — I suppose it's the true nature of the human spirit.

"Since [Paul Simon's] Graceland, audiences are more willing to listen to things that may have been a bit foreign when Jhikika came to the States," Clegg said. "I've had to work hard to sell this music to people, but it represents the future — white and black South Africans working together."

Johnny Clegg and Savuka perform at the Greek Theater on the UC-Berkeley campus Sun/27 at 7 pm, opening for Tracy Chapman. Call 642-9988 or 762-BASS for tickets.

MUSIC

Mahlathini and the Mahotella Queens: Bringing South African Mbaqanga music to the U.S.

SOWETO STEW

Mahlathini and the Mahotella Queens blend American rhythms and instrumentation with traditional South African melodies

By Jeff Kaliss

THEY SAVED the best for last at the world's largest Earth Day celebration, a million people massed under a still-smiling early evening sun on Central Park's Great Lawn in New York City.

Mahlathini and the Mahotella Queens, musical emissaries from Soweto in South Africa, couldn't make the whole world clean, but they were helping to shrink it. Garbed in white boots, a lion skin and assorted furs and feathers, Mahlathini stalked and jumped around the huge stage, stopping to deliver his chants in a dark growl. The three Queens, wearing fantastic stranded skirts and beads and oversized Buster Brown hats, seemed to tease Mahlathini while supplying him with the strongest, most gorgeous vocal triads that any man could wish for.

The New Yorkers swayed and smiled en masse, slowly becoming aware that producer West Nkosi, who also led the backup Makgona Tsohle Band (Zulu for "Jacks of All Trades"), had brought them the Soweto equivalent of Motown. It was fresh, happy and eminently danceable.

"There is no color to our music," declared Nkosi in an interview at the Penta Hotel the day before. "You could take us to Brazil, give us a tune, and we would play and sing it."

But when Nkosi formed his band in the early '60s, it wasn't so easy to leap racial and geographic boundaries. He had been absorbing jazz, rock and R&B sounds whenever he could find records and a machine on which to play them. Emulating the Americans who influenced him, he learned to play saxophone, and gathered electric bass and lead and rhythm guitars around him to form Makgona Tsohle.

The Johannesburg-based Nkosi mixed American rhythms and instrumentation with traditional South African melodies, some of which dated back to wedding ceremonies from the 16th century. The result was dubbed Mbaqanga (with a click on the "qa"), which means "stew." Several of the band's albums became million-sellers.

Makgona Tsohle brought in dancers to liven up their stage show. They based their footwork on the felicitous Mgqashiyu style of the townships, involving a lot of shimmy and long arm movements. The troupe included Mahlathini, whose name is pronounced "Mash-la-teeny" and means "forest," and the three women who would become the Queens.

By the '70s, Nkosi had become South Africa's most successful black producer of shows and albums. He decided to record the dancers as singers, deriving the name "Mahotella" from the many motels dotting the well-traveled road between Johannesburg and Pietersburg to the north. Like other Nkosi projects, the new group became immensely popular and toured nationwide. Nkosi scored another local success with Ladysmith Black Mambazo, an all-male a capella group from Natal Province.

But it was as difficult to make a dent on the white market as it was not to be overcome by imported culture. "The whites have discriminated against themselves," says Nkosi. "We never stopped them from attending our shows. Some of them [including a young Johnny Clegg] would sneak in, but the police would ask them, 'What do you want here?'"

By the close of the '70s, blacks were turning in greater numbers to American and British rock and disco. "I don't blame the people," reflects Nkosi, "because when television was introduced into our country, there was no [native] material ready to play for the audience. People automatically left their own music and went to sing like Michael Jackson." And the Queens left the stage to raise families, with little thought of reviving their musical careers.

In 1986, world attention followed Paul Simon's interest in Mbaqanga, which he brought to his award-winning Graceland album, along with performances by Ladysmith and the assistance of Nkosi. The rising international star of white South African Johnny Clegg also illuminated his black countrymen.

The appetite for South African sounds was particularly keen among the worldly French, who found Nkosi through a Los Angeles connection. "That's how I got the call in 1987," he recalls. "I spoke with these French people by phone, but it was difficult to understand each other because the English was very bad."

In a few weeks, Mahlathini and Makgona Tsohle were on their way to a festival in France. "The French people, they are more creative," claims Nkosi. "They go out and do their research and get the bands to perform live for them. And they get money from their government."

Mahlathini was thrilled with the breakthrough. "I feel so proud, because I was already forgetting about music and they were already forgetting about me," he intones in his characteristic breathy basso.

Nkosi next sought out the Queens. "When he broke the news to me, it was like madness of true excitement," remembers Queen Hilda Tloubatla. "I had to go to their homes and speak to their husbands," adds Nkosi. "And the husbands were very thrilled about my offer, because nobody thought that this group could go back on stage." Success in Europe and England was echoed in the group's first American tour last year, which included a stop here at Slim's. "That guy never thought he could have that size crowd in that club," boasts Nkosi. "He could not sell his booze because the waitresses could not move, so we had to stop twice to give him a chance."

As with Ladysmith, foreign success has made Mahlathini and the Queens a bigger draw at home. "We are the heroes of that country," says Nkosi. "At every festival when we are not there, people don't feel happy." The group now gets extensive airplay on white radio stations and plenty of white fans at its concerts. "It's like they're saying, 'Why didn't we attend their shows before?'" laughs Tloubatla.

The current tour is helping to promote sales of Paris-Soweto, recorded on the Celluloid label in 1987 and just released in the United States by Polydor. The album certifies the group's place in the world music scene with an even more eclectic musical stew. Traditional prayers and celebratory songs like "Safa Indlada" and "Kazet" are placed alongside a reggae-ish disco number called "Yebo!" that was produced by Britain's Art of Noise. "Melodi Ya Lla" hints of the influence of Caribbean soca.

In evidence throughout are the heady, high-pitched gurglings of the guitar and the humming of the bass, which signal Mbaqanga and support the call-and-response exchange between the gravelly Mahlathini and the celestial Queens. "They are the lioness, and I am the lion," is how Mahlathini describes it.

Mahlathini and Mahotella Queens perform June 1st at the Warfield, SF.

Ordered to party: Cully Fredricksen and Madeleine Gavin in Nebraska.

MISSILES ON THEIR MINDS

"Nebraska" looks at the tensions of ordinary men with their fingers on the nuclear button

NEBRASKA. By Keith Reddin, directed by Kenn Watt. At the Magic Theatre, SF. Plays through June 24th.

By Misha Berson

EVER WORRY about the men who have their fingers on America's nuclear trigger? If you do (and shouldn't we all?), Nebraska won't ease your mind much.

In the Magic Theatre version of Keith Reddin's 1989 drama, Peter James Myers plays Swift, an Air Force lieutenant posted at a missile silo hundreds of feet beneath the Nebraska cornfields. With his garrulous partner Fielding (Cully Fredricksen), Swift takes 24-hour shifts at the console of a doomsday computer. If commanded, the two men will launch. If one balks at the task, the other has strict orders to shoot his partner.

Nebraska portrays the insanity of our nuclear "deterrent" system by zeroing in on the way it screws up the heads of the soldiers who enforce it. The script slips at times into soap opera clichés about bored wives and adultery. But director Kenn Watt's on-target production, and author Reddin's knack for showing the lethal absurdities of military life, compensate. The pay-off is an often-intriguing — and discomfiting — evening.

Scenic designer Andy Stacklin compresses the claustrophobic on-base world in a subdivided set: There's Swift's home (couch, TV, bits of white picket fence), the base commander's office, the lounge where the "peacekeepers" go to unwind and an eerily lit command station down in the silo. The action passes fluidly from locale to locale, aided by Dirk Epperson's

Longtime Companion

A longtime companion is what too many characters in Norman René's telling movie are destined never to be. Via Craig Lucas's lucid script and optimum acting by the eight actors involved, the film focuses on the N.Y. Times' 1981 article on the outbreak of a "rare cancer" in the gay community, and proceeds to follow the never-to-be-the-same-again lives — and deaths — of a group of ordinary friends and acquaintances over the next nine years. Campbell Scott and Dermot Mulroney discuss the article with Firé Island friends Bruce Davison (a standout) and Mark Lamos, as do N.Y. actor Patrick Cassidy and John Dossett with next-door-neighbor Mary Louise Parker, who's Stephen Caffrey's best friend. As AIDS takes its toll, emotional and informational material is woven expertly together, the film's only flaw being in introducing too many actors too soon, which makes later identification confusing. That aside, it's an all-encompassing learning experience for everyone. (Cinema 21, SF; Fine Arts, Berk.)

Strapless

If there were an Oscar for Most Utterly Irresistible Look, Bruno Ganz would win walking away. Even emotionally guarded, 40-year-old horse-loving American doctor Blair Brown isn't Ganz-proof when she briefly meets him in Europe en route to her London hospital. But she can't say neigh to the horse he subsequently leaves tethered outside her house, and is soon in love with this mysterious, wealthy lover who comes and goes, showering her with gifts. So when two men appear to tell her a $5,000 Ganz check has bounced — again — Brown makes it good and marries him, to the astonishment of her utterly irresponsible, aspiring designer younger sister Bridget Fonda. But when Blair blissfully tells Ganz of the normal married life she now anticipates, a baffling reaction and some eye-opening discoveries ensue, after which writer/director David Hare's curious film goes downhill, and if you can figure out Strapless's ending or the title, you win the Grand Bustier Award. (Kabuki, SF) ■ lighting scheme.

At the start, Swift has just transferred to Nebraska after a stint at a West German base. He's a gung-ho young lifer on his way up in the Strategic Air Command, adept at charming his insecure commanding officer, Jack (David Booth). He's also good at tossing back brews with coworkers like the rowdy Fielding and a wide-eyed young recruit, Barnes (Eric Cazenave).

If Swift and his colleagues are freaked out by having the fate of the human race in their hands, they won't admit it to each other. Instead they joke boastfully about bomb-release procedures and rationalize what they do as "not a job, but a duty." Their macho brio isn't just male. In a jarring exchange, female officer Kim (Madeleine Gavin) enthuses about the "hypnotic" thrill of scanning her radar screen for missiles.

So where does the stress go? The two married characters, Swift and his superior, Jack, funnel it into bad marriages. Swift's spouse Julie (Betsy Burke) is a volatile child-woman who hates following her husband from base to base. (She also knows he's not the straight arrow he seems.) Jack's wife Carol (Christianne Hauber) drowns her chronic discontent in vodka and extramarital flings. A quickie affair between Swift and Carol proves to be the worm in these already half-rotten apples. It destroys Swift's career and Jack's tenuous self-esteem.

Nebraska gets soggy when it mashes up in domestic woes. It conjures, too, a stereotypical extreme of bored, frustrated Air Force wives: Why do these women have no work, no children to raise, no hobbies but junior college courses? Things get very interesting, though, whenever Reddin lets loose his loopy wit (as in Swift's boozy rap comparing Roy Orbison to a fireplug), gives us offbeat details about his characters or shows us the military mindset. The silo interactions between Fielding and Swift are particularly effective, chilling glimpses of how camaraderie can become paranoia down in the nuclear trenches. And a god-awful party thrown by Jack for his subordinates is a zippy comic extension of the military. The mismatched guests do what they're commanded to, but some carry out the order to have fun a lot more convincingly than others.

Kenn Watt, an increasingly assured young director, sets a crackling pace, and the acting is convincing. Especially fine are David Booth's Wagner-loving Jack, Betsy Burke's spacy Julie and Cully Fredricksen as the Darwin-spouting gonzo, Fielding. As Swift, Peter James Myers could use beefing up. He needs to show us more of Swift's opportunism, and his unraveling.

For Nebraska, Reddin drew on conversations with missile silo employees in Robert Del Tredici's book, At Work in the Fields of the Bomb. But his point is not just that the doomsday apparatus chews up and spits out individuals like Swift and their wives; he also reminds us that, even if the Cold War is thawing, we're all still just a human fingertip from destruction. ■

Toad The Wet Sprocket.

By Gina Arnold

Toad The Wet Sprocket, Pale (Columbia)

Anyone who's ever picked up a guitar knows how easy it is to charm yourself to distraction simply by strumming open, minor chords over and over again slowly. It doesn't take long to learn, however, that charm is a transient property. Unless there's something else there, either words or sentiment or energy, those chords are merely naked tools, uninteresting and unadorned to all but their handler.

This is a lesson that Toad the Wet Sprocket, Columbia's big hype from Santa Barbara, has never learned. Imagine R.E.M. without either the tunes or the language, and you have Pale, their second album. It's not really the band's fault — they may actually be talented. But they've been seduced by the sounds of chords without wondering if they also had anything else they wanted to say. On the song "I Think About," for instance, singer and guitarist Glen Phillips claims he's scared that when he dies, so will "a thousand things he thinks about." But he leaves it to our imagination what those things are — and why he thinks they should survive. On "Corporal Brown" he watches a domestic quarrel and concludes, "I was amazed what am I gonna do?" On the political number, "Chile," he says, "And it's hard to tell the right from the wrong, when the right is protecting the wrong." No it's not, dude; it's easy. What it is, is hard to write a song about.

The main problem here, besides the fact that the music is undistinguished, is that none of Toad's sentiments are really worth preserving. Pale was clearly released well before the band had developed much of its own voice, and so it's full of whooshy, atmospheric emptiness of sound. There are parts of it — for instance, the quick parts on "Come Back Down," the denouement of "I Think About," the chorus of "Jam" — that are almost all there. It's not original or deep, but it rocks a little bit: It speaks, inarticulately perhaps, but it still somehow speaks.

Unfortunately, the band's always pulling back from these flashes of emotion, wallowing instead in sentiment and repetitive minor chord washes, fading out on quiet acoustic strums, fading in the same key, trying to pass studio tricks and vague lyrics off as depth of emotion. It's sort of a cheat, but it's also sort of a pity, because whatever potential is here is wasted. The result is an album that might make good aural wallpaper, but will never change anybody's life. Next time out, someone should tell Toad The Wet Sprocket to think a little harder.

The Chills, Submarine Bells (Slash/Warner)

Kaleidoscope World (Homestead Records)

Submarine Bells is The Chills first widely available release in America, and it has the freshness and verve of a brand-new band's debut release. It opens with a tinkling, chiming, church-y single, "Heavenly Pop Hit," a title that may sound arrogant, but is in fact a purely descriptive name, and continues with a number of minor-key pop songs that take as their subject matter the fragility and wonder of the earth itself. Like many of us, The Chills are extremely concerned with the environment (both CD and record contain lengthy diatribes against high seas drift nets, nuclear testing in Polynesia and the U.S. Defense Department's "neither confirm nor deny policy" regarding deployment of nukes), but it barely impinges on their music (except that at times The Chills' songs are so lovely they seem like part of the atmosphere, part of nature itself).

Instead, their music is still imbued with the innocence and the rage of youth, struggling, questioning, rhapsodizing. What else is one to make of lines like "Is sustaining past illusion just insanity?" from "Oncoming Day," and "I have to talk to someone — describe it all to someone" from "I Soar"? This is youth at its most explosively creative, at its most fervent and questioning. It is a record completely untainted by the cynicism of age.

For those already familiar with The Chills' music, however, the youthful enthusiasm of Bells may strike a peculiar chord. For although lead singer and songwriter Martin Phillipps is only 26, The Chills have been a band, albeit one with an ever-changing lineup, for well over a decade — and a great one at that. But for reasons too laborious to detail here, Submarine Bells is only their second real album. The first, Brave Words, was released in America on Homestead records in 1988; prior to that, their work was available on Kaleidoscope World, a collection of the band's early '80s singles, released first on Flying Nun in their home country of New Zealand, then as an import on the Creation label in Britain in 1985. It's now available for the first time domestically on Homestead, and few records are more worth buying. All eight songs on it are, quite literally, perfect.

You think I'm exaggerating? You're wrong. "Pink Frost" is a song the then-16-year-old Phillipps wrote about the death of a friend from leukemia, and the calming, bell-like melody, the sad choral vocals, turn resignation into a joyful acceptance that's well beyond his years, not to mention the teachings of any religion. "Dole drums" (about being on the dole) and "Kaleidoscope World" are cheerful and dingy, but equally irresistible, and "Rolling Moon" and "Satin Doll" have a joyousness that can't be found on any other rock record, in any other music.

But if The Chills are so great, I hear you cry, why has it taken them this long to release an album in America? Well, for one thing, they didn't want to: I recall seeing them at their first gig in New York City in 1987, a show so palpably great it left every A&R person in America waving dollar bills at the stage at the end of it — a piece of melodrama that clearly disgusted Phillipps. Listen, when you're this good, you don't have to do anything you damn well don't want to, and Phillipps, along with many other New Zealanders, doesn't trust America's idea of a deal. Why should he? The music he plays is steeped in the dark blues and pale greens of New Zealand; it is truly self-sufficient. One can't help but worry that his fragile, deeply felt emotions could easily be destroyed by mere contact with the life of any other locale. No wonder he's wary. The Chills need to learn to trust us; on the other hand, we need to prove we're worthy of hearing them.

CARTOON BY R. CRUMB

Of cars and cartoons: Rene Yanez's "Unusual Talk Show" features Underground cartoonist Robert Crumb and the duded-up automobile, Ramona Moon. See Fri/25.

'PROJECT X' Highly talented "fringe" artists aren't usually the stuff of "Oprah" and "Geraldo," but Rene Yanez has intentionally brought these unconventional creators together for what he calls "The Unusual Talk Show." He interviews these underground artists and they demonstrate their work. Weirdo and Zap cartoonist Robert Crumb sketches a small comic masterpiece during the talk; Owena Fogarty presents slides of her oft-censored photographs; Eric Hayashi and Lane Nishikawa (from the recent play I'm on a Mission From Buddha) give a quick demonstration of their acting-directing process. And the decorated car, "Ramona Moon," makes a cameo appearance outside the theater. Tonight and Sat/26 at 8:30 pm, Asian Art Museum, Golden Gate Park, SF. $10. 668-6404.

CARNIVAL SF You can expect skin, hopefully some sun and a street full of salsa and world beat music Saturday in this year's Carnival street fair. Tonight's pre-

Carnival salsa ball kicks off the weekend with Yomo Toro and Montuno Street, and the festivities begin at noon on Saturday with four stages filling the air with South-of-the-border sounds, plus comedy, rap, ethnic dances and, of course, fried foods for sale. And if you make it up for Sunday's parade at 11 am, you'll see floats and half-costumed dancers moving along 24th, Mission and 17th streets in San Francisco. Salsa ball at 8 pm, Bimbo's 365 Club, 1025 Columbus, SF. $18. 762-BASS. Street fair beginning at noon, Harrison (between 16th and 21st St.), SF. Free. Grand parade at 11 am, beginning at Bryant and 24th St., SF. 826-1401.

NATIONAL TAP DANCE DAY Believe it or not, today actually is an official nationwide holiday (made that way from Joint House Resolution 131 and 53). Granted, nobody's getting off work to see Fred Astaire and Gregory Hines tapping away on film, but the dance form's getting some big attention in a tap improv celebration happening at Justin Herman Plaza at noon. Closet tappers can take heart, because everybody's doing it, including the Hotel Utah, where you can check out Rosie and the Radiators, Jack Williams, Joel Blum, Bea's Knees and the SF Radical Tap Team in two performances on Sun/27 at 6 and 8 pm, Hotel Utah, 500 Fourth St. (at Bryant), SF. Reservations required: $8. 621-TAPS. Today's noontime celebration takes place at Justin Herman Plaza, foot of Market, SF.

KATE MILLETT Twenty years after Sexual Politics helped launch a revolution, this woman's back on the road with her new autobiographical work about "madness" and mental health institutions, The Looney Bin Trip. Tonight, she speaks as a guest of the Berkeley Drop-In Center, a center for mentally disabled homeless people. 6 pm, Frances M. Albrier Community Center, 2800 Park, Berk. $20 (includes dinner), 486-1612. (Also Sat/16, the Radical Therapy Collective hosts her talk at 7:30 pm, Bernal Heights Community Center, 515 Cortland, SF. $5. 558-8426.)

FILLMORE POSTER ART It's pop culture nostalgia gone wild in this black-light exhibit of poster art from Bill Graham Presents, with more than 150 posters from 1964-1990 on display. They're encouraging the beads and bell-bottoms psychedelic look for viewing. Tues.-Sun., noon-5 pm, Gallery Concord, 1850 Gateway, suite 100, Concord. Free. 671-3081.

'FREE THE AIR' Pirate radio demons Black Rose and Mr. Ebony make an appearance at tonight's anti-censorship shindig with Jorge Herrera of KPOO, David Henderson of KPFA, Kim Addonizio, the wise-cracking Dirk Dirksen, Margaret Crane, Jack Foley of KPFA and others. It's a Coalition of Writers' Organizations-sponsored event. 8 pm, Artists Television Access, 992 Valencia, SF. $3 donation. 824-3890.

'SONGS AGAINST THE GO ROAD' The "Go Road" refers to the U.S. Supreme Court decision of April, 1988 that took away Native Americans' rights to worship on land they hold sacred. So, a road's being built over these lands, and members of the Yurok, Ohlone, Wintu and Hoopa tribes gather to sing, dance and discuss the "Go Road" situation. It's part of Life on the Water's new series highlighting environmental issues. Tonight and Sat/26 at 8 pm, Life on the Water, Building B, Fort Mason Center, Buchanan at Marina, SF. $8-$12. 776-8999.

PAMELA Z With digital delay units, voice and percussion, this woman runs the gamut of pitches and rhythmic patterns. Tonight, her performance accompanies the jazz and improvisational clarinets, saxophones and vocals of Olyuemi Thomas and his ensemble, Positive Knowledge. 8 pm, New Langton Arts, 1246 Folsom, SF. $6-$4. 626-5416.

ZACCHO DANCE THEATRE The Inverted Year is a dance-sculpture-wind-and-percussion piece exploring memory, recollection, change and entropy in the context of the four seasons. Bruce Tomb and John Randolph of the "Interim Office of Architecture" created the environment, a space sectioned into seasonal subdivisions. Tonight and Sat/26 at 8 pm, (just before sundown), Zaccho Dance Theatre, 1777 Yosemite, third floor, #4D, SF. Donations accepted. 822-6744.

ROOTS CELLAR Greening the Lower Haight? KPOO radio's Ismael brings reggae sounds to tonight's "garden party" at the Folcrom, with the three-dollar donation going toward buying more supplies for the ever-expanding backyard garden. 9 pm, The Folcrom, 475 Haight, SF. $3 donation. 621-4810.

DOC WATSON This folksinger's making his rounds in SF again, with tonight's two shows featuring Mitch and Mayne. 8 and 10:30 pm, Freight & Salvage, 1111 Addison, Berk. Call for price. 548-1761.

brothers. 8 pm, Eye Gallery, 1151 Mission (between Seventh and Eighth St.), SF. $5 general; $3 discount. 558-8129.

HAIRFORMANCE Disco is definitely better the second-time around — or so Do Not Sit (on the furniture) hopes. They're taking advantage of this with their floating retro '70s party, a dance and "hairformance" in the old disco "Dreamland" space at 715 Harrison. Architects and Heroes create the "Memor-a-Ball" hairdos; Enrique swings in for a performance; Doc Martin pumps out the dance tunes and 24 Peace brings the fashion. 10 pm-3:30 am, 715 Harrison, SF. $12. Tickets at the door.

NATIONAL EDUCATIONAL FILM FESTIVAL It may not be the sexiest of film styles, but educational films are what made elementary school survivable; and they're not just for children anymore. This weekend of films gives school teachers and other members of the educating public a chance to check out art and science films they would like to use themselves. Call 561-0315 for today's program features. The festival continues Sun/27 and Mon/28, with Monday's program a celebration of Charles Eames. Call for times, McBean Theater, Exploratorium, 3601 Lyon (at Bay), SF. Free with admission ($5 for a six-month pass). Also at the Oakland Museum, 1000 Oak St., Oakl.

'PICKLES AND PALS' SF's Vaudevillian entertainment troupe brings their juggling, trapeze, rap and comedy acts to Glen Park. Today's performance of "Pickles and Pals" features Pulp Playhouse director Brian Lohmann, National Theatre of the Deranged's Jim Cranna, Sara Felder and Queenie Moon. Noon and 3:30 pm, Glen Park, (at Eik, Cheney and Bosworth), SF. $9-$6. 681-7659 or 647-7408. (Also Sun/27 and Mon/28.)

'GAYS OF OUR LIVES' The Outcast Players of the Fringe Theater Collective perform this late night comedy of the staff and clientele of a gay/lesbian center. It's a four-part Saturday series beginning tonight. Plays Sat. at 11 pm, Theatre Rhinoceros, 2926 16th St., SF. $8. 861-5079.

'OAKLAND OUT LOUD' Oakland's cultures haven't exactly melted — they've held their own over the years, and this literary reading and discussion about Oakland writers looks at how the different cultures of Oakland have produced a multi-ethnic literature. Ishmael Reed, among others (including Floyd Salas, Lee Mun Wah and Lucha Corp), read their own and other Oaklanders' works, from Jack London and Ina Coolbrith to the present. 7 pm, Concepts Cultural Gallery, 480 Third St., Oakl. Free. 763-0682.

'RED FISH IN AMERICA' Just when we're seeing the first signs of information of any kind seeping out of the Soviet Union to the popular palate, Cinematheque presents films from "other voices" outside the mainstream film-producing culture with issues not made for mass-media consumption. The program of independent filmmakers' works includes Boris Yukhananov's Game of Ho on Jewish emigration, and the Aleinikov brothers' Tractors, using Communist symbols and language with an ironic twist. The screening features guest appearances by the Aleinikov

AMERICA MAY not be cool in all its ways, but there are a lot of American types of music worth the listen, and Jerry Shelfer is one of them. If his rockabilly/blues/country style's your thing, then check out the American Music Jamboree that he's put together, which includes Steve Yerkey, Three Balls of Fire, the Diablos, Billie Burnor, Tobias & Big Time, A.P. Alexakis, Peter Lamson, Michelle Abby Bregar and lots of others. It happens Sun/27 at Bouncer's Bar, from 4 pm to midnight, with great food cooked by the Bouncer's folks: barbecued chicken and ribs, and red beans and rice. The music's being recorded for a compilation tape — not some major release, just a locally made deal that'll be for sale sometime soon after. Shelfer's got a somewhat different lineup happening the next day (Memorial Day) at New George's in San Rafael, so take your pick.

One of the fave new records these days among critics and indie music fans is the new, self-titled release from The Silos. The group's core revolves around songwriters Bob Rupe and Walter Salas-Humara, joined on this record by drummer Brian Doherty, bassist J.D. Foster, keyboardist Kenny Margolis and a host of other guests. A cool collection of heartland-ish (but not Melencamp-y) r'n'r songs that speak to the ramblin', roaming, longing-for-life-and-love souls in each of us, the music's full of roots rock, folk, blues, ballads and straight-ahead shakers. Lots of great songs, but one that's been running through my mind is "(We'll Go) Out of Town," probably one of the greatest road songs ever made. You're in love but it's on the way out, trying to convince yourself that you understand, but you're not quite over it yet, not quite ready to actually say anything — but first, impulse says to head out to the highway, and you're driving on a two-lane highway "with the radio blasting and the windows down." Let go and let ride. The Silos hit San Francisco Tues/29 at the Paradise Lounge, and the latest info says Floridians the Vulgar Boatmen are opening.

On a different level of existence, there's Genesis P-Orridge. A Brit "musician," Genesis pre-dated punk and industrial music with his late-'70s band Throbbing Gristle (also the starting point for Chris and Cosy, now techno dancebeat hit-makers). In '81, Genesis changed gears and formed Psychic TV with Alex Fergusson, producing a couple of records and singles, including the 1984 Dreams Less Sweet, which today still stands as a masterpiece of sound recording (try it with headphones, and the snarling dogs come all too alive between your ears). PTV wrote a few beautiful pop songs, too: apparently innocent, but ultimately frightening as hell. I once caught a friend unconsciously humming a PTV melody — "I don't know where I heard it," he said, fear in his eyes at the question, "but I can't get it out of my head!"

PTV's been through lots of changes since, putting out great psychedelic numbers like "Godstar," inventing "early" Acid House hits (check out the comp LP Jack the Tab) and incorporating (perhaps too many?) films, videos and pre-recorded sounds into their live shows. I saw them two years back and there were three times as many TVs as band members; a May 1990 press release from Wax Trax, though, says this time PTV "will be expressing their own unique fusion of house music colliding with Jimi Hendrix through a wash of punk funk," and that the current lineup includes five whole, real people. PTV hits the I Beam Fri/25, and the Cotati Cabaret Sat/26: only God, Genesis and Brian Jones know for sure what to expect.

The battle over NEA funding continues ever onwards, and I'm sure that all government officials, elected or not, are dying to hear what your opinions are. Give 'em a call or a letter. So far, the right-wing Jerry Falwellites have us sensible, open-minded folk outnumbered in that department. Drop Cranston or Wilson a line c/o the U.S. Senate, Washington, D.C. 20515; or Nancy Pelosi, Barbara Boxer and Ron Dellums c/o the U.S. House of Representatives. The Senate phone number is (202) 224-3121; the House is (202) 225-3121. And any letters you send, copy and send them to anyone else you can think of (other representatives, local newspapers, government and private arts organizations). The more the merrier.

Goldie winner Barbara Manning and her summertime band The Tablespoons play the Kennel Club Tues/29, opening for ex-Burma/Birdsongs leader Roger Miller. At the Folcrom on Fri/25, check out the reggae garden party, happening in the gallery's backyard with KPOO DJ Ishmael running the sounds. Live music is back again at the Blue Lamp starting in June. And for those who haven't discovered it yet, the Bay Guardian offices have moved a few blocks over, to 520 Hampshire. The new phone is 255-3100. Happy trailside chew.

misty hills of Point Reyes. Maria von Bolschwing looks at the art of western Mexican Huichol Indians staying in the Huichol Art Center (the organization getting proceeds from the sale of the art) with a slide lecture, "Unravelling the Mystery of Shamanic Art." Those who venture out to Point Reyes to see the show can enjoy the free Mexican meal. Exhibit through Mon/28, 11 am-6 pm, lecture at 7:30 pm, Dance Palece, 503 B St. off Hwy. One, Point Reyes Station. Free. 663-1075.

M.K. BROWN It's another good chance to see a cartoon creator in action as this National Lampoon artist and creator of "Western Romance," "Aunt Mery's Kitchen" and "Funny Pages" demonstrates her scribbles today, alongside the Cartoon Art Museum's "Sunday Funnies: All In Color" exhibit. Demonstration, 1-4 pm, museum hours, Wed.-Fri., 11 am-5 pm, Cartoon Art Museum, 665 Third St. at Townsend, SF. $2.50 adult admission. 546-3922.

OTHER CINEMA The season's closing screening, "Avant to Live," features works by Ted White, Mark Street, Lidia Szajko and Robert Anbian. 8:30 pm, Artists Television Access, 992 Valencia, SF. $5. 824-3890.

AMERICAN MUSIC JAMBOREE Barbecued ribs, red beans and rice, guitars and some "American tunes" make today's "jamboree" not quite as American as McDonald's, but much, much better. The performers are Jerry Sheffer, Two Hoots and a Holler, Three Balls of Fire, Steven Yerkey, Billie Burnor, The Diablos, A.P. Alexakis, Tobias & Big Time, Peter Lamson and Michelle Abby Breger — not so different from any night at Bouncer's except that it stretches for the entire afternoon. 4 pm-midnight, Bouncer's Bar, 64 Townsend, SF. $5. 397-2480. (Another "American Jamboree" gig happens Mon/28 at 4 pm, New George's, 842 Fourth St., San Rafael. $5. 457-1515.)

ANDREA MARCOVICCI The Burn This torch singer takes a night off from the play to perform a "Girl's Night Out" for the Women's Cancer Resource Center. 8 pm, Great American Music Hall, 859 O'Farrell, SF. $15 and $25. 885-0750.

NEW YORK GAY/LESBIAN EXPERIMENTAL FILM FESTIVAL These highlights from the N.Y. lesbian and gay film festival run the gamut of gay issues and perspectives: Robert Hillferty's DHPG mon Amour presents the happy but harsh realities of the alternative drug treatment for AIDS complications; Jerry Tartaglia gives a pro-sex argument in Ecce Homo and Jennifer Montgomery retraces the horror and disillusionment she felt for her hometown and family after her rape in Home Avenue. The Jerry Tartaglia-curated program's a good warm-up for some of the more avant-garde pieces of June's SF Lesbian and Gay Film Festival. 8 pm, SF Art Institute, 800 Chestnut, SF. $5 general; $3 discount. 558-8129. (You can also catch the second screening of Abigail Child's Is This What You Were Born For? at 5 pm today for free at SFIA.)

ROLLER SKATING CHAMPIONSHIPS Today's skaters in Golden Gate park aren't your casual rent-skates-for-a-day variety — they're skaters from all over the nation converging on the park for Outdoor Roller Skating Association of America's championship, beginning today with 100, 500 and 4.4-meter races around the Conservatory, plus high jump, long jump, slalom and dancing competitions. The competition continues Memorial Day with men's and women's couples skate-dancing competitions near Eighth and Tenth avenues in the park. Today, 8 am-3 pm, Conservatory and rounds; Mon/28, 1-4 pm, near Eighth and Tenth avenues, Golden Gate Park.

NATIONAL TAP DANCE DAY See Fri/25.

'THE RESISTIBLE RISE OF ARTURO UI' With a John Baldessari set design, you might expect an irreverent "How to Act" presentation before the show — who knows. The David Bransten-produced Bertolt Brecht "gangster play" opens tonight. Continues Tues.-Sat. at 8 pm, Zephyr Theater complex, 25 Van Ness near Market, SF. $20-$22. 861-6895.

PHOTOGRAPHY AUCTION Even if you're not a collector, this second annual exhibition and benefit auction gives you a chance to check out an interesting Eye Gallery show. (And if you are, it's a great chance to buy.) Preview exhibition, today and Thurs/31, noon-5 pm; Wed/30, noon-9 pm; auction, Thurs/31 at 7:30 pm, Eye Gallery, 1151 Mission (between Seventh and Eighth St.), SF. Free. 431-6911.

ROGER MILLER This songwriter for Mission of Burma and Birdsongs of the Mesozoic is on his "No Man Tour" and plays with the newly assembled Barbara Manning band, The Tablespoons. 10 pm, Kennel Club, 628 Divisadero, SF. $6. 931-1914.

'SPIRALHEART' This is no joke — a mixture of shamanism, Nepalese-Flamenco-Middle Eastern-Capoeira dance, live jazz and improvisation (with a backdrop of "Amphibian Medicine Paintings") makes up this multimedia mask dance. It's called "Spiralheart: Love and Amphibians," and although they promise there will be no loose reptiles, it should provide a new perspective on these cold-blooded creatures. Through June 2nd at 7:30 pm, New Performance Gallery, 3153 17th St., SF. $10. 863-9834.

Andrea Marcovicci "torches" the Great American stage in a benefit for the Women's Cancer Resource Center Sun/27.

Muralism Today

"Muralism Today — New Expressions of Mexican and Chicano Art in Aztlan" is a showcase of "portable" murals by 15 Chicano artists done at the "Art of the Americas Mural Workshop Studio." The occasion also marks the first — and possibly the last — anniversary of the workshop, created by muralist Jose Meza Velasquez about a year ago while he was an artist-in-residence in Oakland. Although this is the only mural workshop in the world, this unique arts program is financially strapped and about to bite the dust unless it comes up with some badly needed funds in a hurry. In addition to previously exhibited murals from the Art of the Americas collection, the exhibit also unveils two new colorful pieces — Jorge Partida Brizo's War Games and Bruce Finson's Tatewari Tepari.

The Bay Area's Best Relationship Ads Are Now Even Better

Introducing

The Bay Guardian Relationship Reply Line

person to personals

Placing a Relationships

Ad in Bay Guardian Classified has always been a great way to find the kinds of people you most want to meet.

Since 1966, we've helped thousands of people make new beginnings... and thousands of couples find happy endings. And now the Bay Area's best, most trusted personal ads are even better.

Starting now, your Bay Guardian Relationships Box

Number will double as your personal, private telephone message extension with Person-to-Personals, our all new relationship reply line. It's the state of the art in personal messaging systems... and it's FREE to Guardian Relationships Advertisers (the respondent pays for the call). Of course, you can still get responses by mail. But it costs you nothing extra to use Person-to-Personals. There's no charge to call for your responses from any touch-tone phone, or to record your outgoing message. To get the most responses, place your voice mail message right away!

Person-to-Personals is a great way to say a little more about yourself than in your printed ad, and it's easier for readers to respond. You can evaluate those responses from the privacy of your own phone. You can hear their voices, and make better choices. Your voice will be clearly recorded with the highest technical standards available. You can hear your own message played back before you save it. Or change it... and try again. Your message will go on line within 24 hours, so people can hear it on the "browse" function and reply — even before your ad appears in print!

If you think of yourself as an analog individual in a digital world, relax. While Person-to-Personals is a sophisticated high-tech system, it's designed to be as user-friendly as possible. It takes you closer to your heart's desire step by step, providing clear, simple instructions each time you call. To find out more about Person-to-Personals, call 824-2506 today*. And get ready for an exciting tomorrow.

THE SAN FRANCISCO BAY
GUARDIAN

*All outgoing Person-to-Personals telephone messages will be screened by the Bay Guardian, using the same standards as for printed ads. Messages may be charged at no charge, but you must allow 24 hours to be back on line. Advertisers must be 18 years of age or older.

CRITIC'S CHOICE/Dance

Deborah Hay

In the Sixties, Deborah Hay was one of the early participants in the Judson Church group, a collection of radical dancers that totally changed the way we think of time and emotion in dance. She has since persisted in going her own way, evolving a means of performing that is at the same time deeply meditative and witty. After teaching a three-day workshop for multidisciplinary artists (May 21st-23rd at Footwork), she rounds off her Bay Area visit with two performances of the recently completed trilogy, The Man Who Grew Common in Wisdom.

of the story. (Steve Warren) San Francisco: Lumiere (1572 California at Polk. 885-3200); call for times. East Bay: Northside (1828 Euclid, Berk. 841-6000); daily at 7 and 9:30 with matinees Sat.-Sun. at 2 and 4:30.

■ The Big Picture Spot-on spoof of Hollywood's attitude toward top-award-winning film school student Kevin Bacon, in which Martin Short's marvelous as a riotously effete agent, cameos and fantasies abound and Kevin really brings home the bacon. San Francisco: Opera Plaza (Van Ness and Golden Gate. 771-0102); call for times.

■ Bird on a Wire If you can believe the mountains of British Columbia are on the coast of New Jersey, you might buy the rest of this fatally-flawed star package that has Mel Gibson and Goldie Hawn running for their lives after meeting accidentally for the first time in 15 years. (Steve Warren) San Francisco: Northpoint (Powell at Bay. 989-6060); daily at 4:45, 7:15 and 9:45 with matinees Sat.-Sun. at noon and 2:20. Kabuki 8 (Post at Fillmore. 931-9800); call for times. East Bay: Century (8201 Oakport, Oakl. 562-9990); daily at 12:20, 1:25, 2:40, 3:50, 4:55, 6:15, 7:15, 8:40 and 9:35. Emery Bay (6330 Christie, Emeryville. 420-0107); call for times. UA (2274 Shattuck, Berk. 843-1487); call for times.

■ Cadillac Man Robin Williams was born to play a car dealer. Here he's also a philanderer and the chief hostage in Tim Robbins' replay of Dog Day Afternoon, and the laughs come thick and fast. It's a sold gold Cadillac, man. (Steve Warren) San Francisco: Stonestown (19th Ave. and Winston. 221-8182); daily at 1:40, 3:40, 5:40, 7:40 and 9:40. Metro (Union and Webster. 931-1685); daily at 1, 3:15, 5:30, 7:45 and 10. East Bay: South Shore Cinemas (2245 Shoreline, Alameda. 521-4200); daily at 5, 7 and 9 with matinees Sat.-Mon. at 1 and 3. Piedmont (4186 Piedmont at 41st St., Oakl. 654-2727); call for times.

■ Chattahoochee Gary Oldman's excellent as a Korea War hero who can't cope with peace, goes berserk and ends up in a mental institution where he institutes extraordinary reforms, and can you believe that Dennis Hopper's the sanest person around? East Bay: UA (2274 Shattuck, Berk. 843-1487); call for times.

■ Cinema Paradiso Loving, set-in-a-Sicilian-village look at people who love movies, specifically impish little Salvatore Cascio, who learns to differentiate between reel and real life from compassionate projectionist Philippe Noiret in a movie that will long linger in your mind. San Francisco: Bridge (3010 Geary at Blake. 751-3212); call for times. East Bay: Emery Bay (6330 Christie, Emeryville. 420-0107); call for times. UA (2274 Shattuck, Berk. 843-1487); call for times.

■ Class of 1999 Take heart in 1999 schools will be in areas where gangs roam, torch and fight unhindered by non-existent police, so evil school official Stacy Keach hires three android teachers programmed to kill and they do in this very violent movie. San Francisco: Alexandria (5400 Geary at 18th Ave. 752-5100); call for times. East Bay: Century (8201 Oakport, Oakl. 562-9990); daily at 1:35, 3:40, 5:45, 7:45 and 9:50.

■ The Cook, The Thief, His Wife and Her Lover Unrated Grand Guignol of a movie in which we're spared no side of Thief Michael Gambon's ghoulish nature as he avenges himself on Wife Helen Mirren for her infidelity with bookish diner Alan Howard that's food for thought, but the kind that'll make you throw up. San Francisco: Lumiere (1572 California at Polk. 885-3200); call for times. East Bay: ACT (2128 Center at Shattuck, Berk. 548-7200); daily at 7 and 9:25 with matinees Sat.-Mon. at 1:45 and 4:15.

■ Driving Miss Daisy Superbly scripted and acted 25-year-spanning movie in which acerbic, wealthy, 72-year-old southern Jewish Jessica Tandy learns to like and love perennially polite, black, 60-ish chauffeur Morgan Freeman, and makes this mostly a pure joyride. San Francisco: Stonestown (19th Ave. and Winston. 221-8182); call for times. Balboa (38th Ave. and Balboa. 221-8184); call for times. Galaxy (1285 Sutter at Van Ness. 474-8700); call for times. East Bay: Rockridge Showcase West (293 Whitmore, near 45th St. and Broadway, Oakl. 658-2285); daily at 7 and 9:05 with matinees Sat.-Mon. at 12:45, 2:50 and 4:55. Emery Bay (6330 Christie, Emeryville. 420-0107); call for times.

■ Firebirds San Francisco: Alhambra (Polk and Green. 775-2137); daily at 2, 4, 6, 8 and 10. Empire (85 West Portal at Vicente. 661-2539); daily at 1, 3, 5, 7 and 9:05. East Bay: Orinda (4 Orinda Theater Square, Orinda. 254-9060); daily at 7 and 9 with matinees Sat.-Mon. at 1, 3 and 5. Grand Lake (3200 Grand, Oakl. 452-3556); daily at 2, 4, 6, 8 and 10. Berkeley (2425 Shattuck at Haste, Berk. 848-4300); daily at 7:30 and 9:30 with matinees Sat.-Mon. at 1:30, 3:30 and 5:30.

■ Guests of Hotel Astoria This story of Iranian refugees arriving at Istanbul's tiny Hotel Astoria and what they must endure in their search for further freedom is undermined by the poorly motivated actions of the central figures, so that one feels impatient rather than sympathetic. San Francisco: Opera Plaza (Van Ness and Golden Gate. 771-0102); daily at 6, 8:15 and 10:30 with matinees Sat.-Sun. at 1:30 and 3:45.

■ House Party Rappers Kid 'n Play are the respective guest and host of the title solree, confronting school bullies (Full Force), racist cops, an angry father and romantic problems in Reginald Hudlin's partially successful attempt to make a black "John Hughes movie." (Steve Warren) San Francisco: Alexandria (5400 Geary at 18th Ave. 752-5100); call for times. Stonestown (19th Ave. end Winston. 221-8182); daily at 1:30, 3:30, 5:30, 7:30 and 9:30. East Bay: Century (8201 Oakport, Oaki. 562-9990); daily at 1, 5:30 and 9:45. UA (2274 Shattuck, Berk. 843-1487); call for times. Emery Bay (6330 Christie, Emeryville. 420-0107); call for times.

■ Hunt for Red October The impressive-looking movie's first half's got more confusing ingredients than a double submarine sandwich, but once the Lithuanian-submarine-uptain-Sean-Connelly-headed-for-the-U.S.-to-defect-or-destroy? plot's established, the second half's action's sensational and would even quellify as white-knuckling. San Francisco: Regency II (1268 Sutter at Van Ness. 776-8054); daily at 1:30, 4:30, 7:40 and 10:30. East Bay: Piedmont (4186 Piedmont at 41st St., Oaki. 654-2727); daily at 7 and 9:45 with matinees Sat.-Mon. at 1:30 and 4:15. South Shore Cinemas (2245 Shoreline, Alameda. 521-4200); daily at 6 and 8:30 with matinees Sat.-Mon. at 1 and 3:30. Oaks (1875 Solano, Berk. 526-1836); daily at 7 and 9:30 with matinees Sat.-Mon. at 2 and 4:30.

■ I Love You To Death The performances by Kevin Kline as a married-but-playing-around pizzamaker, wife Tracey Ullman as a perfect paragon of understanding and Joan Plowright as a lethally inclined mother-in-law are marvelous, the problem being that they never seem connected to each other. San Francisco: Galaxy (1285 Sutter at Van Ness. 474-8700); call for times. East Bay: Lake Merritt Theater (1834 Park at E. 18th Ave., Oaki. 835-3535); daily at 7:45 with matinees Sat.-Sun. at 3:55.

■ Internal Affairs San Francisco: Balboa (38th Ave. and Balboa. 221-8184); daily at 2:45, 6:40 and 10:30.

■ Labyrinth of Passion Pedro Almodovar was still on the verge of revealing his talent when he made this outrageous comedy in 1982. It's ragged but amusing and should offend Almodovar's fellow gays, impotent heterosexuals, Islamic terrorists, nymphomaniacs and sexually abused daughters, to name a few. (Steve Warren) San Francisco: Castro Theatre (Market and Castro. 621-6120); daily at 1, 3:05, 5:10, 7:20 and 9:30.

■ Last Exit to Brooklyn Very Teutonic-flavored view of a 1952 working-class Brooklyn waterfront neighborhood in which prostitute Jennifer Jason Leigh and sexually unsure Stephen Lang suffer appalling fates in the nightmarish version of the American Dream. San Francisco: Gateway (Jackson at Battery. 421-3353); daily at noon, 2:20, 4:40, 7 and 9:25. East Bay: Piedmont (4186 Piedmont at 41st St., Oaki. 654-2727); daily at 7 and 9:10 with matinees Sat.-Mon. at 12:15, 2:35 and 4:45. ACT (2128 Center at Shattuck, Berk. 548-7200); daily at 7:15 and 9:35 with matinees Sat.-Mon. at 12:30, 2:45 and 5.

■ Longtime Companion Very well scripted and acted story of the affect of AIDS on a small group of friends and acquaintances from its announcement in a 1981 N.Y. Times article to the present day that expertly weaves together emotion and information in an all-encompassing, moving, learning ex-

CRITIC'S CHOICE Performance

Spiralheart
Leapin' Lizards! It's Spiralheart: Love and Amphibians, slinking its way into the New Performance Gallery. The brainchild of choreographer and "concept shamanic artist" Corrine Louise Greenberg, Spiralheart's a ritualistic-sounding multimedia mask, dance and jazz performance that examines two endangered species of the Future Shock '90s — love and amphibians. A synthesis of flamenco, Nepalese, Middle Eastern and capoeira dance forms, Greenberg is accompanied by saxophonist Glen Spearmann, percussionist Bob B. Hobbs, media magician/photographer John Pearson and a trio of dancers: David Russell, Shantee Baker and Berverly Frederick. Audience participation is encouraged (what this entails is anybody's guess), but the press release promises (admonishes?) that "there will be no loose reptiles." Sounds like the makings for a memorable evening.

perience. San Francisco: Cinema 21 (2141 Chestnut at Steiner. 921-6720); daily at 12:45, 3, 5:15, 7:30 and 9:45. East Bay: Fine Arts (Shattuck at Haste, Berk. 848-2038); daily at 7:30 and 9:40 with matinees Sat.-Mon. at 1, 3:10 and 5:20.

■ Mama, There's a Man in Your Bed Immensely likable black chawloman Firmine Richard knows much more about her wealthy, self-absorbed boss Daniel Auteuil's business than he does, so when she seves him from ruin and he marries her, he definitely gets the best of the deal in this entertainingly offbeat movie. San Francisco: Vogue (Sacramento and Presidio. 221-8183); daily at 1:15, 3:30, 5:45, 8 and 10:15. East Bay: Shattuck Cinemas (2230 Shattuck, Berk. 644-3370); call for times.

■ Miami Blues Alec Baldwin's fresh out of jail, Jennifer Jason Leigh's soft-hearted hooker, but both seek respectability in this fast-moving, very-well-acted-and-written movie that will keep you guessing almost all the time. San Francisco: Coronet (3575 Geary at Arguello. 752-4400); daily at 1:30, 3:30, 5:30, 7:30 and 9:30. Stonestown (19th Ave. and Winston. 221-8182); call for times. East Bay: Shattuck Cinemas (2230 Shattuck, Berk. 644-3370); call for times.

■ Mountains of the Moon Sometimes the savage natives, animals and impressive scenery are more interesting than the characters given the actors, as explorer Patrick Bergin and Iain Glen search for the source of the Nile in 1854 East Africa in a film that sets up fascinating scenes but never quite follows through with them. San Francisco: Opera Plaza (Van Ness and Golden Gate. 771-0102); daily at 7 and 9:20 with matinees Sat.-Sun. at 2 and 4:30. East Bay: Oaks (1875 Solano, Berk. 526-1836); daily at 7:45 with matinees Sat.-Mon. at 3:20.

■ My Left Foot Extraordinary in every way, this is the true life story of Irish Catholic Christy Brown, born with cerebral palsy that gave him control only over his left foot, who rose above it to become famous as an artist end memoirist, made even more memorable by Daniel Day-Lewis's virtuoso performance. San Francisco: Kabuki 8 (Post at Fillmore. 931-9800); call for times. East Bay: Emery Bay (6330 Christie, Emeryville. 420-0107); call for times.

■ Pretty Woman Corporate mogul Richard Gere wants the services of $100-an-hour hooker Julia Roberts for one week, end how it all works out makes for a highly entertaining come-uppance of look-downers on among other little gems in which Gere's very good and Roberts e dramatic delight. San Francisco: Regency I (1320 Van Ness at Sutter. 885-6773); daily at 12:30, 3, 5:25, 8 and 10:30. East Bay: Grand Lake (3200 Grand, Oaki. 452-3556); daily at 1, 3:30, 6, 8:20 and 10:35. Shattuck Cinemas (2230 Shattuck, Berk. 644-3370); call for times.

■ Q & A Sidney Lumet raises a lot of questions about racism but gives all too few answers as bigoted N.Y. police lieutenant Nick Nolte shoots a Hispanic hood in cold blood, and earnest young D.A. Timothy Hutton must come up with the Q & A (the official record) of the case, but it's all too cliched to be convincing. San Francisco: Galaxy (1285 Sutter at Van Ness. 474-8700); call for times. East Bay: Century (8201 Oakport, Oaki. 562-9990); daily at 3 and 7:30.

■ Short Time Eight days before he's due for retirement, cautious career cop Dabney Coleman's told he has two weeks to live, which turns him into daredevil super-cop in a movie that'll keep you feeling good for more than a short time. San Francisco: Stonestown (19th Ave. and Winston. 221-8182); call for times.

■ Spaced Invaders East Bay: Rockridge Showcase West (293 Whitmore, near 45th St. and Broadway, Oaki. 658-2285); daily at 7 and 9 with matinees Sat.-Mon. at 1, 3 and 5. Century (8201 Oakport, Oaki. 562-9990); call for times.

■ Steel Magnolias East Bay: Albany (1115 Soleno, Albany. 524-5656); call for times.

■ Strapless The movie holds up pretty well for the first two thirds as emotionally guarded, 40-year-old doctor Blair Brown's swept away by mysterious, utterly irresistible Bruno Ganz, but she wants a normal life, whereupon everything falls apart, and if you can figure out the ending or the title, you deserve the Grand Bustler Award. San Francisco: Kabuki 8 (Post at Fillmore. 931-9800); call for times. East Bay: Emery Bay (6330 Christie, Emeryville. 420-0107); call for times.

■ Tales From the Darkside When young Matthew Lawrence finds out that he's Deborah Harry's dinner party entree, he tells her three stories to distract her, which makes for suitable horrific distraction until Harry finally really gets cooking. San Francisco: Royal (1529 Polk at California. 474-0353); daily at 2, 4, 8, 8 and 10. East Bay: Century (8201 Oakport, Oaki. 562-9990); daily at 1:25, 3:30, 5:40, 7:50 and 10:05.

There's a lot of violence as the good-guy Ninja turtles try to make turtle soup out of a gang of teenage boys terrorizing New York, and it looks as if the movie's success will depend on how well it fares against its comic book and cartoon competition. San Francisco: Empire (85 West Portal at Vicente, 661-2539): daily at 1:20, 3:15, 5:10, 7:05 and 9. East Bay: Emery Bay (8330 Christie, Emeryville, 420-0107): daily at 12:30, 2:45, 5:15 and 9:30. UA (2274 Shattuck, Berk. 843-1487): call for

■ Tie Me Up, Tie Me Down San Francisco: Kabuki 8 (Post at Fillmore, 931-9800): call for times. East Bay: UA (2274 Shattuck, Berk. 843-1487): call for times. Emery Bay (6330 Christie, Emeryville, 420-0107): call for times.

■ Time of the Gypsies A Gypsy teenager is torn between honesty and financial reward in Emir Kusturica's epic, passionate and often wildly funny portrait of a matriarchal Gypsy family in Yugoslavia. Clever spins keep potential melodrama from materializing. (Steve Warren) East Bay: Northside (1828 Euclid, Berk. 841-6000): daily at 6:30 and 9:30 with matinees Sat.-Sun. at 1 and 3:45.

■ Too Beautiful for You A switcheroo twist to the theory that wealthy men have plain and dumpty wives and beautiful mistresses that's an enchanting blend of fact and fantasy, and very well-acted by Josiane Balasko, Carole Bouquet and Gerard Depardieu. San Francisco: Clay (2261 Fillmore at Clay, 346-1123): daily at 2, 4, 8, 8 and 10. Albany (1115 Solano, Albany, 524-5656): call for times.

■ Wild Orchid The Rock Hudson-Doris Day plot about a virgin (Carre Otis) hot for a man (Mickey Rourke) she thinks is impotent is revived in Zalman King's absurd Brazilian fantasy that's not bad to look at and listen to, only to think about. (If Otis is a lawyer, Roseanne's a brain surgeon.) (Steve Warren) San Francisco: Presidio (Chestnut near Scott, 922-1318): daily at 5:10, 7:40 and 10 with matinees Sat.-Sun. at 12:30 and 2:45. East Bay: Shattuck Chemas (2230 Shattuck, Berk. 644-3370): call for times. Lake Merritt Theater (1834 Park at E. 18th Ave., Oakl. 835-3535): daily at 5:45 and 9:35 with matinees Sat.-Sun. at 1:55.

CRITIC'S CHOICE/Movies

John Huston: The Man, The Movies, The Maverick

From The Maltese Falcon to The Dead, John Huston's films were so varied that some of them would be among your favorites, whatever your taste. His life was equally varied, Joni Levin's documentary shows us, as he went from teenage boxing champ to art student to rider in the Mexican cavalry to New York journalist to Hollywood screenwriter and finally to director — and on the side an actor, painter, hunter, horseman and Irish country squire. Through filmed interviews and readings from his autobiography, the late Huston shares narrating chores with Robert Mitchum. Additional comments come from talking crowned heads of Hollywood: among them a charismatic Lauren Bacall, Anjelica and Danny Huston, Paul Newman, Arthur Miller, Michael Caine and Evelyn Keyes. Home movies and clips from Huston's films provide most of the visuals and the memories. Huston himself provided the magic.

CRITIC'S CHOICE/Music

Christopher Hollyday

He recorded his first album when he was 15. At age 18 he led a recording session with three jazz giants as his rhythm section: pianist Cedar Walton, bassist Ron Carter and drummer Billy Higgins. Now 20, alto saxophonist Christopher Hollyday is playing, composing and handling himself like a seasoned pro. His second major label album (and fifth overall), On Course (Novus/RCA), has just been released, and Hollyday is making his West Coast debut with his New York-based acoustic quartet. Even given the hype that the industry heaps on youthful phenoms — at the expense of deserving veterans — this prodigious, bebop-rooted jazzman is clearly worth checking out.

— Derk Richardson

■ Christopher Hollyday, Wed/30-Thurs/31 at 8 pm, Yoshi's NiteSpot, 6030 Claremont, Oakl. $10. 652-9200.

freedom, and the female mother-wife whose mission is to trap him in domesticity. Irene Lewis's crisp direction points up the holes in Shaw's elegant, double-sided argument, and the performances of a sparkling cast make four hours of romantic comedy and philosophical debate (including the rarely performed "Don Juan in Hell" sequence) go down very smoothly. (Misha Berson) Plays Tues.-Fri. at 8 pm and Sun. at 2 and 7 pm, with additional selected matinees. Through June 2. Berkeley Repertory Theatre, 2025 Addison, Berk. $18-$24. 845-4700.

■ Prisoners of the Harem Werner F. Schmidt's new romantic comedy. Plays Fri.-Sat. at 8:30 pm. Through June 2. Onstage Theater (in the school house), 2050 Oak Park, Pleasant Hill. $7-$5. 944-9006.

■ Peter Pan It's not a great musical, but this is a solid production, and the first one you can take your kids to when they're old enough to sit still and shut up for more than 2½ hours (including two intermissions.) Cathy Rigby is a pleasant surprise (after the Nureyev debacle) as an actor/singer. Stephen Hanan's Captain Hook is hard to understand, but visually he's easy to love to hate. (Steve Warren) Plays Wed.-Thurs. at 7:30 pm, with additional shows Sun. at 1 and 5 pm, and Wed. and Sat. at 2:30 pm. Through June 3. Golden Gate Theatre, Golden Gate and Market, SF. $18-$33. 474-3800.

■ Summit Conference Robert David MacDonald's play looks at power and its victims with the mistresses of Hitler and Mussolini having tea while their lovers "carve up the continent." Plays Thurs.-Sat. at 8 pm. Through June 9. EXI Theatre, 366 Eddy, SF. $8. 931-1094.

■ House of Yes Wendy MacLeod's very dark send-up of American violence and decadence combines elements of Genet fables, Jacobean comedies and Andy Warhol films. It focuses on the upper class members of a (literally) incestuous McLean, Virginia clan. Mom is a glamorous ahead; her three grown kids are so spoiled and narcissistic they can barely function. (The looniest is convinced she's Jackie Onassis and her brother is JFK.) When a "normal" stranger enters this den of weirdness, all psycho-sexual hell breaks loose. This show is a surprise hit for the Magic, and it's clear why: There's a wicked kinkiness at work here, some deliciously arch repartee and a few real dramatic shocks. But the comic tone wobbles periodically, and in the end you may wonder just how deep MacLeod's satire penetrates. Directed by Andrew Doe. (Misha Berson) Plays Wed.-Sat. at 8:30 pm. Extended through June 10. Magic Theatre, Fort Mason Center, Building D, Marina and Buchanan, SF. $11-$19. 441-8001 or 441-8822.

■ Hamlet II Open Wing Theatre Company presents Sam Brobrick's comedic version of the Shakespearean drama. Plays Fri.-Sat. at 8 pm. Through June 23. The Next Stage, 1668 Bush at Gough, SF. $9-$7. 861-5261.

■ Dirty Dreams of a Clean-Cut Kid A musical celebration of gay men's sexuality. Plays Wed.-Sun. at 8 pm, with Sun. matinees June 10, 17 and 24 at 3 pm. Through June 24. Theatre Rhinoceros, 2926 16th St., SF. $8-$15. 861-5079.

■ Nebraska Keith Reddin's story of the "cold war" in his military career and marriage in Omaha, Nebraska. Plays Wed.-Sat. at 8:30 pm, Sun. at 2 and 7:30 pm. Through June 24. Magic Theatre, Fort Mason Center, Building D, Marina and Buchanan, SF. $15-$19. 441-8001 or 441-8822.

■ Burn This The romance between Anna (Andrea Marcovicci), a sophisticated Manhattan dancer, and Pale (Daniel Reichert), a sewer-mouthed New Jersey primitive, may seem unlikely at first, but Lanford Wilson's impassioned script and ACT's heat-seeking missile of a production make this a scorcher of a show. Intimations of sex, love, death, art and friendship can be found in Wilson's unusually visceral love story, which examines unfulfilled yearnings of many kinds. Beautifully-acted and highly recommended — If you can score a ticket. (Misha Berson) Plays Mon.-Sat. at 8 pm with matinees Sat. and Wed. at 2 pm. Through June 26. Stage Door Theatre, 420 Mason, SF. $10-$32. 749-2228.

Closing

■ I'm Not Rappaport TheatreWorks presents Herb Gardner's comedy of an "odd couple" in an urban jungle. Plays Tues.-Sat. at 8 pm, with selected matinees and early shows on Sun. Through May 26. Burgess Theatre, 601 Laurel, Menlo Park. $14-$18. 329-2623.

■ The Orphan King/Warsaw Is Mine Once upon a time in Warsaw there lived a kindly Jewish doctor who ran orphanages, authored children's books, told stories over the radio — and, in 1942, led 200 youngsters to the Nazi trains that would take them all to their deaths at Treblinka. From Janusz Korcak's tragic real-life story, his writings for children and other sources, playwright-actor Gary Aylesworth and A Traveling Jewish Theatre director Naomi Newman have fashioned a curious, densely woven dramatic fable that is part biography, part homage and part meditation on the brutalization of innocents. Aylesworth's quirky dialogue and wide-eyed acting style can get cloying at times, and it's not always clear what he's driving at. But the piece contains some vivid and disturbing images that really stay with you. Harriet Schiffer and Sharon Omi complete the cast; the clever musical enhancements are by Peter Newton. (Misha Berson) Plays Thurs.-Sat. at 8:30 pm. Through May 26. New Performance Gallery, 3153 17th St., SF. $8-$15. 863-9834.

■ Roots in Water Richard Nelson's play chronicles the maturing of a generation through the lives of 29 characters. Plays Wed.-Sat. at 8 pm, Sun. at 7:30 pm. Through May 27. Eureka Theatre, 2730 16th St., SF. $13-$17. 558-9898.

■ ...to get to the other side Fratelli Bologna's comedy about feuding brothers, death, the afterlife and aliens. Opens Fri/11. Plays Wed.-Sun. at 8 pm. Through May 27. Climate Theatre, 252 Ninth St., SF. $13-$10. 626-9196.

■ Les Miserables More of a phenomenon than a show, but better than Cats if Broadway blockbusters are your thing. Just beware when you fork over your $50 for an orchestra seat that the songs are in the strained-vocal-chord pop school of Whitney Houston, the history and politics of revolutionary France are sketchy, and the tear-jerking is shameless and utterly synthetic. What works magnificently are the show's visual aspects, most obviously David Hersey's lighting and John Napier's production design. (Misha Berson) Plays Tues.-Sat. at 8 pm, with matinees Wed. and Sat. at 2 pm and Sun. at 3 pm. Extended through July 8. Curran Theatre, 445 Geary, SF. $16-$55. 243-9001 or 474-3800.

■ Bar None A comedy-mystery that starts off like the senior play at Harvey Milk High School turns into a laugh riot when the audience gets into the investigation in the second act. It ain't Art, despite some artful performances, but the long-running hit's a crowd-pleaser. (Steve Warren) Plays Wed.-Fri. at 8 pm, Sat. at 7 and 9:30 pm and Sun. at 2 pm. Open-ended. Mason Street Theatre, 340 Mason, SF. $18-$20. 861-6895.

■ Even the Score Uncle Tad Baker's Loon Show presents this performance about audience retaliation and obnoxious performances. Plays Fri. at 9:31 pm. Open-ended. Upstairs at the Rose and Thistle, 1624 California, SF. Call for price. 334-4933.

■ Greater Tuna This compassionate satire of small-town Texas life barbecues bigots without robbing them of their humanity. Plays Mon.-Fri. at 8 pm and Sat. at 6 and 9 pm. Open-ended. Cable Car Theatre, 430 Mason, SF. $15-$19. 771-6900.

The Resistible Rise of Arturo Ui

One of Bertolt Brecht's most theatrically dynamic attacks on fascism meets one of California's hottest multimedia artists, John Baldessari, in a new version of Arturo Ui, opening at the Zephyr Theatre this week. Penned by Brecht in 1941, but not performed until 1958, the play casts the rise of a Mussolini-like figure as a gangland drama. Baldessari, a photographer/video artist known for his montage commentaries on popular culture, created the sets for this visually oriented production, and the direction is by experimental filmmaker Geoff Luck. (The run dovetails with a full-scale retrospective of Baldessari's work currently at the Los Angeles Museum of Contemporary Art, which is due in San Francisco in July.)

— Misha Berson

■ The Resistible Rise of Arturo Ui. Previews Fri/25-Sat/26, opens Tues/29 and plays Tues.-Sat. at 8 pm. Zephyr Theatre, 25 Van Ness, SF. $20. 861-6895.

■ Murder Mystery Weekend This audience participation "Whodunit" by Keith O'Leary and Margo Morrison puts the audience at odds with incognito actors in solving a murder mystery during dinner. Plays Sat. at 7 pm. Open-ended. Charley's Cafe, Fisherman's Wharf, Beach and Jones, SF. $65. (800) 327-3862.

Short Runs

■ Back to Broadway Sandi Weldon directs this revue of great Broadway numbers. Plays Fri/25 at 8 pm. Marin Community Playhouse, 27 Kensington, San Anselmo. Call for price. 456-8555.

■ Camelot Marin Opera performs this Lerner and Loewe musical of King Arthur's kingdom. Plays Sat/26 and Fri/1-Sat/2 at 8 pm, and Sun/27 at 2:30 pm. Rohnert Park Performing Arts Center, Rohnert Park. Call for price. (707) 584-1700.

■ Charlie and the Chocolate Factory Children perform Richard R. George's adaptation of the classic fantasy. Plays Sat. at 7:30 pm and Sun. at 1 and 3 pm. Through June 10. Alameda Children's Musical Theatre, 900 Santa Clara, Alameda. $7-$4. 521-6965.

■ Circus Vargas The world's largest traveling big top circus brings their show with trapeze, animal and other circus acts to many locations around the Bay Area. Fri/25 performance is a benefit for SHANTI project. Plays Thurs/24 at 4:30 and 7:30 pm, Marin Center, North San Pedro and Hwy. 101, San Rafael. $4-$18.50. 472-3500. Also Fri/25-Sat/31 at 4:30 and 7:30 pm, with additional shows Sat.-Mon. at 1 pm, adjacent to Cal Trans, Fourth St. and Townsend, SF. Call for price. 762-BASS.

■ Cowboy Mouth Sam Shepard's and Patti Smith's play about a young woman's kidnapping of her ideal rock savior. Plays Thurs/31-Sat/2 and Thurs/7-Sat/9 at 8 pm. Studio Four, 2702 18th St. at York, SF. $3. 863-0582.

■ Cymbeline Andra Weddington's edited version of this Shakespearean fantasy play. Plays Wed/23-Sat/27 at 8 pm, with a matinee Sun/27 at 3 pm. Zephyr Theatre complex, 25 Van Ness near Market, SF. $10-$12. 237-6107.

■ Division Street Steven Tesich's farce of a '60s radical settling in Chicago as an underwriter. Plays Fri/25-Sat/26 at 8 pm. Potrero Hill Neighborhood House, 953 DeHaro, SF. $7. 826-8080.

■ Earth Drama Plays Life on the Water kicks off this new segment of their programming: theater with environmental themes. On Fri/25-Sat/26, Songs Against the Go Road is performed by Native Americans. On Sun/27, Michael Tolan performs Promises to Keep. Plays at 8 pm. Life on the Water, Building B, Fort Mason Center, Buchanan at Marina, SF. $12. 776-6999.

■ East Playwright Steven Berkoff blends Shakespearean-style verse and rough Cockney slang to voice the rage of young and old East Londoners in Thatcher's England. The fine young actors in this low-budget production deliver Berkoff's jumble of slum poetry with great panache, and their juicy physical moves bring it all back home. A violent, profane piece of work, but for the right reasons. (Misha Berson) Plays Thurs/24-Sat/26 at 8 pm. Capp Street Center, 362 Capp, SF. Call for price. 526-8622.

■ 'Earth's Alive' Performances A weekly showcase for performance artists in conjunction with the California Institute of Integral Studies' "Earth's Alive" Festival. This week's performer is Shelly Cook. Plays Fri/25-Sat/26 at 8 pm. Fobbo Gallery, 3747 23rd St., SF. $7. 695-0640.

Volunteer Service Finds Caring People Through Bay Guardian Classified

"I prefer using Guardian Classifieds to the daily papers because I don't want to be bothered with those looking for just any job. I do need people with special qualities who are looking for a job they will grow in — and who can relate well to others. I have always had excellent results when I advertise in the Bay Guardian."
— Steven Cohn,
Volunteers in Parole

Guardian Classified Works for the Gestalt Institute

"It definitely pays to advertise in the Bay Guardian. We consistently run a highly visible message that brings in more calls than any of our other advertising. Many responses come from people who say they've been looking at our ad for weeks before they finally decided to telephone. Our Guardian advertising has more than paid for itself over the years. The staff is superb — and always on top of everything."

— Carol Wolfson, Administrator,

SUMMONS
CASE NO. 219542

SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA IN AND FOR THE COUNTY OF SAN JOAQUIN. In re the matter of STEVEN YAM, MAN THANG YAM, ANNE CHAU and SUSAN YAM, Plaintiffs, vs. DUONG RICHARD SOK, ORN SOK and DOES 1 to 10, Inclusive, Defendants. NOTICE! You have been sued. The court may decide against you without your being heard unless you respond within 30 days. Read the information below: You have 30 CALENDAR DAYS after this summons is served on you to file a typewritten response to this court. A letter or phone call will not protect you; your typewritten response must be in proper legal form if you went the court to hear your case. If you do not file your response on time, you may lose the case, and your wages, money and property may be taken without further warning from the court. There are other legal requirements. You may want to call an attorney right away. If you do not know an attorney, you may call an attorney referral service or a legal aid office (listed in the phone book).

Después de que le entreguen este citación judicial usted tiene un plazo de 30 DIAS CALENDARIOS para presentar una respuesta escrita a máquina en esta corte. Una carta o una llamada telefónica no le ofrecere protección; su respuesta escrita a máquina tiene que cumplir con las formalidades legales apropiadas si usted quiere que la corte escuche su caso. Si usted no presenta su respuesta a tiempo, puede perder el caso, y le pueden quitar su salario, su dinero y otras cosas de su propiedad sin aviso adicional por parte de la corte. Existen otros requisitos legales. Puede que usted quiere llamar a un abogado inmediatamente. Si no conoce a un abogado, puede llamar a un servicio de referencia de abogados o a una oficina de ayuda legal (vea el directorio telefónico). Dated: Sept. 28, 1990, Reiph W. Epperson, Clerk, by Rose-Merle Rosas, Deputy.

INFORMATION PUBLICATION POLICIES:

The BAY GUARDIAN has the legal right to reject advertising for any reason whatsoever. However, we will not edit the content of your ad without your knowledge. If it is unacceptable we will notify you and give you the opportunity to rewrite it to our satisfaction. Classification of all ads is entirely at our discretion and may be changed without notice. Placement of ads within each classification is random and cannot be prearranged.

ERRORS:

We do not furnish proofs before publication, nor do we supply tear sheets after. All claims for errors in advertisements must be made within five days of publication and any claims for errors will be considered only for the first insertion of the advertisement containing the error. Rate adjustment, if granted, will only be for the portion of the advertisement that was in error. An error which does not materially affect the value or content of the ad is not subject to error allowance.

RELATIONSHIP ADVERTISERS/READERS

TO PLACE YOUR RELATIONSHIP AD:
Call Bay Guardian Classified at 255-7600 and charge it to any major credit card, or mail in your ad and payment with the Classified Coupon. To maximize the number of responses to your ad you will want to take advantage of PERSON-TO-PERSONALS, The Guardian's new Relationship Reply Line. It's the state-of-the-art in personal messaging systems... and it's FREE to Guardian Relationship Advertisers. PERSON-TO-PERSONALS give you the opportunity to say a little more about yourself than in your printed ad, and it makes it easier for readers to respond.
HOW IT WORKS:
In addition to your ad in the paper, you will automatically be assigned a voicemail box number, with which you can record a 60-second outgoing message at no extra charge. Just call 291-8705 from a touch-tone phone, listen to the clear, step-by-step instructions, and record your greeting. You can hear your message played back before you save it, or you can change it and try again. Your message will go on-line within 24 hours (after it has been approved). It's the best to record your message as soon as possible since we start receiving replies on our "brows" option even before your ad appears in print!

TO HEAR REPLIES TO YOUR AD AND VOICEMAIL MESSAGE:
Call 291-8705 at no charge. Follow the instructions and listen to your replies as many times as you wish. When you hang up, your replies will be erased. If you decide to change your greeting, you'll have to wait another 24 hours before the new message appears on the system (but while you're waiting you will still be able to receive replies with the system message, which gives out only your box number).

What is Browse?

Advertisers: When you record your outgoing message on Person-To-Personals it will go into our browse feature. When a respondent calls the Person-To-Personals 900 line, they can preview (listen to) the category of their choice. Your outgoing message can start to generate replies days before your ad appears in print.

Respondents: There is more than one way to find that special someone through the Bay Guardian personal ads. Maybe you need to "browse" to find the right person. Call 1-900-844-5555, choose your category, and listen to some of the fun, interesting people who are looking for their new relationship. You don't need a copy of the Bay Guardian to respond, in fact some of the messages you hear may be previews of ads that aren't even in the Guardian yet!

WHACK-A-MOLE

BY ROBIN STEELE

THIS WEEK AT SIX AND ELEVEN—TUNE IN

LET'S GO RIGHT TO THE SATELLITE MAP—I SAID GET OVER HERE—RIGHT NOW—MAY I REMIND YOU THAT YOUR FATHER WORKED NIGHTS FOR THREE YEARS JUST TO PAY FOR THIS SATELLITE MAP?

A STATIONARY HIGH-PRESSURE CENTER OVER THE DESERT STATES MEANS IT'LL BE SUNNY & HOT IN THE SOUTHWEST THIS WEEKEND...

... AND YOU'RE NOT GOING ANYWHERE WITHOUT A LONG-SLEEVED SHIRT AND A NUMBER 83 SUNBLOCK—DO YOU HEAR ME?

I DON'T CARE IF THE OTHER KIDS ARE WEARING A PIECE OF STRING AND TWO BAND-AIDS—THERE'S A HOLE IN THE OZONE, YOU KNOW!

ONE MORE WORD OUT OF YOU, AND YOU'LL JUST STAY IN YOUR ROOM TILL THIS ARCTIC FRONT MOVES IN ACROSS THE ROCKIES ON THE LEADING EDGE OF THE JET STREAM... AND LOOK AT ME WHEN I'M TALKING TO YOU.

Impressive Numbers

"Bay Guardian For Sale Ads are very effective - and certainly worthwhile because of the number of responses. My roommate was starting to get annoyed because none of our calls were for her! 9 people called - and the odd only one on week."

Bay Area Better!

"When the responses from my Guardian Relationship ad began coming in, I was receiving so many calls from outside of San Francisco (East Bay, Marin, the Peninsula) that I decided there wasn't a need to advertise in any additional Bay Area publications. So I cancelled my other advertising. Why pay double when you're reaching the same audience?"
