LETTERS TO THE EDITORS

ROBERT CAPA

Sirs:
We of the First Division were deeply grieved to learn of Bob Capa's death last month ("A Great War Reporter and His Last Battle," LIFE, June 7). Bob spent many weeks with the 16th Infantry Regiment of this division during World War II. His bravery and unselfishness endeared him to all of us. . . . We regret the loss of a fine man and a fellow soldier.

LT. LECT. HOWARD H. OSSEMAN

Headquarters, First Infantry Division

Sirs:

You have done a beautiful thing in paying tribute to Bob Capa. LIFE and Hemingway have made him very much alive.

BOB GOWEL

New York, N.Y.

Sirs:

. . . I first met Capa in World War II when he spent much time telling our paratroopers, "Caps is scared, you jumpers are crazy," after which he would take more chances than the brave men whose exploits he photographed.

Also fearless at cards, he was probably the world's worst and most ardent poker player. He always said, "Caps is democratic, he will lose to anybody."

BUCK DAWSON

Washington, D.C.

THE ARCTIC BARRENS

Sirs:
"The Arctic Barrens" (LIFE, June 7) is a fit counterpart to previous numbers of "The World We Live In" and will be particularly interesting to the public because this region is so little known.

CARL O. DUNBAR

Peabody Museum, Yale University
New Haven, Conn.

Sirs:

You say musk oxen stand shoulder to shoulder in a straight line to defend themselves. I thought that when attacked by wolves they stood in a circle.

JOSEPH W. WALSH

Los Angeles, Calif.

MUSK OXEN IN A LINE (TOP) AND IN A CIRCLE

• Musk oxen defend themselves in both ways. If possible they face attackers in a straight line, but when surrounded they form a circle.—ED.

As an old caribou hunter, I admire your cover as a superb job of animal portraiture. The beautiful paintings and descriptions of the loneliness of the tundra made me homesick for the lands of the caribou.

LESSONS OF THE HEARINGS

Sirs:

Are there two TV series on the Army-McCarthy hearings ("Lessons of the Hearings," LIFE, June 7)? There must be, for I'm certainly not getting the same reactions you are in your editorial—either intellectually or emotionally. . . .

KAY FRANCIS

Rochester, N.Y.

Sirs:

. . . The Roosevelt administration hindered the Dies investigations and now Stevens and even Eisenhower are not cooperating with McCarthy in his campaign to clean up the government. Without this patriotic man . . . where would this country be?

S. G. THIFEN

Piscataway, Miss.

Sirs:

In my 12 months' combat duty in Korea I only wish I had been able to accomplish a tenth as much as Joe has done here at home in our battle with Communism.

RATMONO COLTON

Woodssocket, R.I.

Sirs:

Your blast at McCarthy is little short of treason. . . .

FRANK HARRIS

Boaz, Wis.

Sirs:

The Kefauver hearings lent dignity to the lawmakers. These McCarthy-Army hearings have left people contemptuous of the Senate. . . .

SALLY O'NEAL

Covington, Ky.

Sirs:

Thanks for your fine editorial on McCarthy. You said what most of us have long felt but did not dare to say.

M. WINNER

New York, N.Y.

BULLETPROOF 'LIFESAVER'

Sirs:
You show the M-59 "Lifesaver" climbing what you call a 60° slope ("A Bulletproof 'Lifesaver' for the Infantry," LIFE, June 7). Didn't you mean a 60% slope?

J. FETTER

Medway, Ohio

• LIFE meant 60% slope. A 60° slope is an incline 60° from horizontal—a rise of 173 feet over a horizontal distance of 100 feet. A 60% slope rises 60 feet over a horizontal distance of 100 feet.—ED.

VOICE FROM KOREA

Sirs:

I have just returned from Korea, and Dr. Rusk's article ("Voice from Korea: 'Was't You Help Us Off Our Knees?'" LIFE, June 7) brought back sad memories. . . . You are right when you say one never leaves Korea. I hope Americans will again open up their hearts to these people—so little can do so much over there.

HEGGS H. JONES JR.

Pittsburgh, Pa.

BLAST ON 'BIG BEN'

Sirs:

Please accept my sincere thanks for the splendid account ("The Big Blast on 'Big Ben,'" LIFE, June 7) of the actions of the Bennington's gallant crew.

W. F. RABSON

U.S.S. Bennington

Sirs:

In your article about the disaster aboard the U.S.S. Bennington you referred to her as the "Big Ben." To me and many other World War II sailors there is only one "Big Ben" and that is the U.S.S. Franklin.

CHARLES A. CALLEN

Detroit, Mich.

• Two aircraft carriers, the Bennington (34,000 tons) and the Franklin (27,000 tons), are nicknamed "Big Ben" and both have suffered disaster. Over 700 lives were lost aboard the Franklin (below) from fires and explosions after a Japanese dive-bomber attack during the Battle of Okinawa.—ED.

ANOTHER "BIG BEN" IN TROUBLE

STAUNTON MILITARY SCHOOL

Sirs:

Congratulations to LIFE for the splendid article on Staunton Military Academy ("The Military School," LIFE, June 7). Congratulations to those gentlemen-soldiers.

MAYOR D. E. SKELLES

Barnesville, Ga.

Sirs:

. . . You show a frightened boy being "braced" by a man twice his years over the issue of a link flitter. What's a flitter for?

JOHN B. ROCKWELL

Daly City, Calif.

Sirs:

. . . At least when I was at Staunton we gave the boys a choice of a "stick" or a "swat" when they were caught doing something wrong. I suppose the alternative has been abandoned by the school as old-fashioned but it saved a lot of walking and only hurt for a few seconds!

JACK B. LEHMANN

New Rochelle, N. Y.

• Substituting a "swat" with a broom for "sticks" (hours of walking with a gun) was emmon at Staunton 15 years ago. Now swatting is strictly forbidden.—ED.

SPEAKING OF PICTURES

CinemaScope lens gives a double squeezed look

The dreamlike scenes on these pages are the product of some trickery with Hollywood's favorite new gadget: the anamorphic lens, used to make CinemaScope movies. By this method a lens on the camera squeezes a wide image so that it will fit in the 35 mm film frames, then a compensating lens on the projector unsqueezes the image and throws it on the wide screen. Photographer Richard Meek, experimenting with the camera lens, used it on his still camera and then, striving for an extreme effect, used the lens again on his dark-room enlarger, thus compressing an already compressed image. After this double squeeze a Ferris wheel becomes egg-shaped and a dachshund even more elongated (above) while the stately Queen Mary turns into an ungainly tub (left). Squeezed vertically, the Empire State Building (opposite page) becomes an ordinary edifice, but squeezed horizontally it is a whopping wonder, seemingly 400 stories high.

Money-saving hints on car care

Service station owner Jack Pitts—Pitts' Service Station and Car Rental Agency, Route 1, Delray Beach, Fla., says: "Change your oil filter before it gets clogged like this. Pays to get the best, too. I mean a Purolator Refill, of course."

"Look, the book that came with your car" says— Change your Oil Filter every 5,000 miles"

"17 out of 18 leading car makers recommend oil filter changes at least every 5,000 miles, on the average, depending on driving conditions."

Road dust, hard carbon and sludge in the oil stream are mortal enemies of your engine. A regularly changed Purolator Oil Filter traps those dangerous contaminants before they can wreck costly engine parts.

The Purolator Micronic has up to 10 times more capacity than ordinary filters . . . stops dirt you can't even see. More car makers specify Purolator than any other make of filter.

Warning! If you've driven 5,000 miles since changing your oil filter, chances are it's clogged. Better install a Purolator Refill Cartridge right away. Takes just a few minutes. Costs as little as $1.60.

Purolator

World's finest OIL FILTER

"There's a Purolator engineered for every make of car," says Mr. Pitts. "We make it a point to put Purolator Refills in all the cars we rent and service."

MONEY-SAVING RULE: Check your Oil Filter every time you change your oil

He was our Yankee Doodle Boy...

THERE's a birth certificate in Providence that says George M. Cohan was born a few hours before midnight on the 3rd of July. But every American knows better. George M. Cohan couldn't have been born on any other date but the 4th of July. For he was our Yankee Doodle Boy, a real live nephew of his Uncle Sam's... and the brashiest, busiest, most lovable guy who ever hit Broadway. He was a one-man show and a one-country man... and they never made another one like him.

He wrote at least 40 plays and musicals... and played the lead in most of them. He composed 500 songs. For years he was the dynamo of the theater... writing, acting, composing, staging, producing. But never too busy on Broadway to go back "on the road" and tour the towns of the land he loved.

He knew Americans. The secret of his success was us. He knew where our hearts were... knew what made us laugh... knew what put that tingle up our spines. The critics said he waved the flag. But we thought it was "a grand old flag" too, and we lined up at the box office by the millions to tell him so.

He was credited with remaking the American theater. He won a Congressional Medal for writing "Over There." He earned a lot of money and fame. But his biggest thrill was always a packed house in Vicksburg or Hazleton, with the laughs coming loud and fast, and every toe tapping out the beat of a new Cohan tune.

"Little Johnny Jones," "Forty-five Minutes from Broadway," "You're a Grand Old Flag," "So Long Mary," "Seven Keys to Baldpate," "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford"... how the memories come back! The straw hat over one eye, the flashing cane, and that funny little way he cocked his head and winked across the footlights right at you. His unforgettable role as the father in "Ah Wilderness." The ovations in city after city as he made his last tour as F.D.R. in "I'd Rather Be Right." The red, white and blue bunting, the shouts of the crowd, and the tightening in your throat as the band played "Over There" and the doughboys went marching by.

No sir... we'll never forget a song and dance man named George M. Cohan. For half a century he reflected the sentimental, cocksure, we-can-do-anything spirit of an America on the move. He was our Yankee Doodle Boy—and we loved him!

IN A WICKED WORLD, A WAY TO SHED TROUBLES

IN PJAMAS ROY ARNOLD SITS AMONG HIS CIRCUS MINIATURES

Though this issue reflects the past and present wickedness of the world—with fighting in Guatemala, the theft of Haydn's skull and the machinations of Chou En-lai—it is pleasant to consider those fortunate people who can become absorbed in collecting something or other (honestly that is). In the past Life has let itself become fascinated vicariously with such collections as Miss Delphine Binger's 50,000 wishbones, the Collyer brothers' houseful of junk, coins and matchbook covers, Farouk's pin-ups, the world's most famous stamps and best-known art collections.

This week our collection of collectors introduces Roy Arnold of West Springfield, Mass., whose love of wondrous things past is centered in the oldtime circus parade, now all but gone from the American scene. The gaily gilded hand-wagons, tableaux, animal cages, groomed horses, lumbering elephants, clowns and the wheezing calliope have been lovingly preserved in miniature by Mr. Arnold over the last 28 years and are shown in color on pages 75 through 78. Often at night, after putting on his pajamas, Mr. Arnold, who is a development director for a paper company, visits the collection for a while. "Then the day's troubles vanish," as his mind's eye revives the sights and sounds and smells that filled the air in his boyhood, when the circus came to town.

Besides Roy Arnold, this issue shows other collectors collecting—the West Coasters out gathering geoducks, the Little Leaguers stepping up to the plate and collecting their first base hits. And there are the American primitive paintings on pages 95 and 96 which art lovers have collected. But the collector we are personally happiest about this week is one of our own: Photographer Mike Rougier (pp. 87-90), who this year has acquired three top photographic awards—and a bride.

SIGN PROTESTS A CONSTITUTIONAL VIOLATION

ON A USUALLY BUSY GUATEMALA CITY STREET MEN STAND IN A LONELY LITTLE GROUP DISCUSSING THE

A GUATEMALAN REVOLUTION THAT EVERYBODY EXPECTED

Almost everyone in the sunny, sullen country of Guatemala last week knew there was trouble in the wind. Although business went on much as usual, signs of turmoil showed unmistakably. Armed policemen paced the streets (below, opposite). Inflammatory symbols (above, left) protesting the government's failure to enforce the Constitution's 32nd article prohibiting any party from having foreign affiliations—as the

RUMORS THAT FILLED THE CITY ABOUT THE LIKELIHOOD OF IMMINENT INSURRECTION AND INVASION

Communists have—were scrawled on walls. An alarming number of anti-Communists were suddenly reported missing, then found shot or tortured to death. About 1,000 were jailed; others, fearing violence, fled to neighboring countries, and LIFE's Leonard McCombe, photographing the country on the brink of civil war, caught their tearful farewells (pp. 14, 15). Behind the universal feeling of fear was Guatemala's present government, which is notoriously pro-Communist (LIFE, Oct. 12). For months President Jacobo Arbenz Guzman had expected an uprising led from Honduras by an exiled Guatemalan army officer, Colonel Carlos Castillo Armas (LIFE, June 14). A few weeks ago Arbenz' regime was strengthened by a huge shipment of arms from behind the Iron Curtain. Meanwhile Castillo, his recruiting unimpeded by Honduras, was gathering a well-equipped band of fellow exiles, other Central American soldiers and foreign mercenaries.

At the end of the week the fat was in the fire. Castillo struck and the war had begun. From the first conflicting reports it was hard to say whether Guatemala had an invasion, a civil war or simply a minor revolt. But at last the revolution that everyone expected was under way.

of political refugees and also to prevent arms smuggling. Other light planes have been used by rebel forces to bring insurgent troops close to border areas.

RIFLE-TOTING POLICEMEN patrol streets. Others toured city in trucks, and at National Palace, seat of government, guards paced with bayonets fixed.

THIS IS WHAT CHARLES TOOK

But he stayed erect and made Champion Marciano settle for a decision

By the time the bell sounded for round one of the heavyweight championship bout, most of the 48,000 fans in Yankee Stadium had the fight all figured out. If Boxer Ezzard Charles could manage to keep away from Rocky Marciano's punches, he might stay up and win. But if Champion Marciano could land a few of his heavy blows, it would be all over for Charles. Backing up this sensible conclusion was Marciano's record: 40 knockouts in 45 fights.

From the start, though Charles, a former champion, boxed well, Marciano managed to land repeatedly—rights in the first, lefts in the third and fifth. In the big sixth round he got in right uppercuts, some fierce left hooks. Charles was shaken but stayed up on his feet. It went that way through the 15 rounds, Marciano hammering away as shown in the pictures. He connected solidly a total of some 60 times. Charles never went down.

In the end Marciano, although badly cut about the face, was winner and still champion, but it was by a decision. The most painful blow Marciano landed, said Charles afterward, was a punch in the Adam's apple in the ninth round (above). Marciano himself shared a general feeling. "I nailed him real good several times," he said. "I was surprised when he stayed up."

A DEATH DIVULGES A LIFE OF DECEPTION

AS HIS DAUGHTER ADA WATCHES, TRUCKERS LOAD HAROLD HOFFMAN'S STATE OFFICE CONTENTS, INCLUDING HIS PORTRAIT AND HERS, FOR REMOVAL TO HOME

Harold Hoffman's posthumous confession of long-hidden crime brings a gaudy career to shocking end

Last week in Trenton a sad and shaken daughter (above) dismantled the office of her father, Harold Giles Hoffman, the late director of employment security for New Jersey. As she did, events were quickly dismantling what remained of the reputation of a colorful and controversial character whose notable political career faded as abruptly as it had bloomed and ended in a sordid revelation of crime and deception. Big, jovial Harold Hoffman was an Army captain at 21, a state assemblyman at 26, congressman at 30 and in 1935, at 38, became the youngest governor in New Jersey's history. By 1936 he was receiving at least momentary consideration as a Republican "native son" candidate for President.

Hoffman's speeches, someone once said, were seven parts jokes, two parts sentiment and one part generalities; and at that they were a reflection of his joke-loving, warmhearted personality. He made friends by the thousands, but enemies too, and he was forever in one ruckus or another. Charges of irregularities in his campaign spending marred his inauguration as governor. His intervention in the Lindbergh case (opposite page) proved political suicide. Once he slugged a Hearst reporter in a New York nightclub and later flattened an ex-prizefighter on the street in Trenton. More seriously, it appeared in 1949 that a brokerage firm said to have been recommended by Hoffman had profited unduly from the sale of bonds to the state. In 1951 Hoffman told Senator Kefauver that he had sought the support of racketeer Longie Zwillman in the 1946 primaries. Later a crime commission produced monitored phone calls to show that Hoffman had offered to smuggle a message to hoodlum Joe Adonis in Trenton State Prison.

From these disturbances Hoffman kept emerging undaunted, unscathed and ready to preside genially over the Circus Saints and Sinners luncheons. But last March, Democratic Governor Robert Meyner abruptly suspended Hoffman from his state job, which had been given him originally by commissioners Hoffman had appointed himself, pending a check of "irregularities." Then in early June, Hoffman died of a heart attack and a letter revealed that beneath the flamboyant story of his life he had kept concealed a more sinister and sordid story of crime and blackmail. That second story may never be fully known, but details are coming out.

HOFFMAN'S HOME was this unpretentious frame structure in South Amboy. His wife was born in wing at right. After marriage they bought the corner house and connected the two. The family rents out two apartments in corner wing.

Hoffman's friend, Ellis Parker, was convicted of conspiring to get a false kidnaping confession. He died in prison and Hoffman attended funeral (right).

CHARACTER WITNESS Hoffman failed Atlantic City Boss "Nucky" Johnson. "Nucky" got 10 years.

CONVENTION DELEGATE Hoffman in 1936, decorated by a lady delegate, proved fading political star.

RETIRING GOVERNOR, unable to succeed himself, Hoffman poses with successor A. H. Moore in 1938.

REVOLVER TOTER Hoffman cavorted with Society for Detection of Horse Thieves at its meeting in 1940.

ROMPING IN RICHMOND, Hoffman (seating) masquerades as mustachioed Union soldier during annual meeting of Girens Saints and Sinners in 1941.

NEARING THE END, suspended from his job the day before, Hoffman still displayed his old form at a luncheon last March honoring Jackie Gleason.

HONORING THE DEAD, the State House flag flies at half-mast in Trenton mourning Hoffman's death. Eulogies for him were read in the legislature.

ACCUSER, present Governor Meyner, was at first blamed for causing Hoffman's death by suspending him.

PROSECUTOR who will try any cases investigations produce, Grover Richman demanded Hoffman letter.

OLD ENEMY Norman Schwarzkopf now heads the thorough investigation into the ex-governor's dealings.

OLD FRIEND George Kress, the treasurer of Hoffman's bank, says he did not know about Hoffman's thefts.

HOFFMAN'S DAUGHTER Ada confers with her lawyer, Harry Green, who persuaded her to make public her father's posthumous letter of confession.

'A SAD HERITAGE I LEAVE ...'

Harold Hoffman set down his own story of the seamy underside of his life but it nearly died with him. On May 1 he gave his daughter Ada a sealed letter to be read after his death. Ada read it, then burned it in dismay, but not until she had shown it to two lifelong friends of her father. One, Lawyer Harry Green, advised her to reconstruct the letter and make it public. Ada bravely did so.

As a successful candidate for Congress in 1926, Hoffman had written, he went into debt when a running mate reneged on a promise to pay his $17,000 in campaign expenses. Capital life and "the expensive naiveté of a newcomer congressman" quickly multiplied his debts. To pay them he began to draw on inactive accounts at the bank of which he was president. By 1938, when he left the governor's chair, his borrowings had reached the staggering total of $300,000. Then, to avoid disclosure, he had had to pay another $150,000 in blackmail to a still-unnamed state official, now dead. Except for the blackmail, Hoffman had written, "I really think that by this time I could have repaid my obligation. . . . It is a sad heritage I leave to Mother, to Hope, and to you. . . . but I pray it may somewhat be softened by the knowledge that I do love you all so much."

Democratic Governor Robert Meyner, who released Ada's version of her father's letter, had already started a full study of the tangled web of Hoffman's affairs. Then he listed 16 charges against Hoffman's performance as director of employment security. Four former aides were suspended; a fifth resigned. Everything the genial ex-governor had ever touched, even the Saints and Sinners Club finances, was being investigated. Already the disclosures appeared likely to cost the Republicans a New Jersey Senate seat they had counted as almost certain. No one yet knew what the final measure of Harold Hoffman's sad heritage would be.

HOFFMAN'S WIDOW, Lillie, sits in quiet dignity before some mementos of her husband's flamboyant life: his famed collection of lucky elephants which friends gave him by the hundreds over the years. Mrs. Hoffman and her children now hope to make good the ex-governor's self-admitted thefts. Daughter Ada will solicit money from still-living friends. Many have already pledged their help and Lillie Hoffman says gratefully, "We are in kind hands here in South Amboy."

SILHOUETTED AGAINST GLASS DOORS IN GENEVA'S OLD LEAGUE OF NATIONS BUILDING, MOLOTOV AND

EISENHOWER AND CHURCHILL TURN FROM A MODERN AN AGENDA FOR THE ALLIANCE

In Washington and in Windsor Castle last week the heads of the two anchor states of the free world took part in characteristically contrasting official ceremonies. President Eisenhower led the U.S. in an air-raïd drill and Sir Winston Churchill donned the robes of knighthood (right). But each act was played against a backdrop of near tragedy spanning the world.

At Geneva the implacable Communist enemy glided (above) across the diplomatic stage seeking, with some success, to split the free world. As a result of pre-Geneva misgivings and honest disagreement, the Anglo-U.S. alliance was having its troubles (left, May 31). Two weeks ago Sir Winston was torn between pressures to retire and a desire to patch up, personally, relations with the U.S. Suddenly he decided to come to the U.S., for the fifth time since the war, to see Eisenhower.

The White House announcement gave the proposed meeting a tone of affable informality; the President and prime minister would simply talk about what moved them. Yet there was an agenda, including the items below, and anybody with a map could figure it out. The U.S. thought the British slow in settling their Suez squabble with the Egyptians. Trieste, on which hush-hush talks have been taking place in London for weeks, was ripe for settlement. There was still another new government in France, and nobody quite knew what to make of Prime Minister Mendès-France (pp. 24, 25).

GLOBAL TOPICS due for discussion by President and prime minister include Trieste, Suez and

But the principal order of business was to tighten the bolts of the great alliance (see Editorial). At Geneva the U.S. has been skeptical of Communist sincerity from the start. It was unmoved when China's Chou En-lai (see pp. 116-125) offered some phony-looking "concessions" last week on Indochina, even though the British professed to see a silver lining. So far Britain has shied from Secretary Dulles' proposal for "united action" in Southeast Asia. But Sir Winston's trip to the U.S. at least indicated a willingness to discuss it.

FRANCE PINS ITS HOPE ON A NEW PREMIER

Desperate for peace in Indochina, divided by pressure to ratify EDC and snubbed by the White House invitation to Churchill, France last week vented its frustration in the only way it knew how. For the 18th time since the war it threw out its government. Premier Joseph Laniel (right) set the stage for his own defeat by asking the Assembly to "note," not vote, how his government had handled the Indochina war. The deputies showed their dissatisfaction and Laniel asked for a vote of confidence, which he lost. President Coty then asked Pierre Mendès-France, 47, brilliant maverick of the Radical-Socialist party (actually conservative), to form a new government.

Given only a slender chance, he rose before the Assembly, promised to get a truce in Indochina by July 20 or quit, and to modify the EDC plan for German rearmament. By an extraordinary vote of 419 to 47, including 95 Communist votes which he rejected, Mendès-France won. He named himself foreign minister to replace Georges Bidault (opposite) and set out to implement his ambitious program.

DEJECTED PREMIER Laniel leaves Elysée Palace after handing his resignation to President Coty.

EAGER CANDIDATE Pierre Mendès-France fidgets with his briefcase on a bench in the Assembly while awaiting his cue to speak up for the premiership.

NERVOUS WIFE of Mendès-France (third from right) watches from Assembly gallery. She stayed there for 10 hours waiting for final vote to be announced.

CONFIDENT CANDIDATE Mendès-France gives the deputies his program, claims if his majority results from Communist votes he will reject premiership.

ELATED WIFE and the new premier, Mendès-France, leave after a 3 a.m. call on President Coty for the first consultation about his cabinet appointments.

FUTILITY OF IT ALL is registered by Foreign Minister Georges Bidault at airport in Geneva, where he had been trying to negotiate Indo-China truce. When Mendès-France took over, he ended the eight-year continuity in which Bidault and his M.R.P. colleague, Robert Schuman, shaped France's pro-West policy.

CHURCHILL AND 'THE SUMMIT'

A NEW DULLES LINE?

In his speech called "The Pacific Ocean," Secretary Dulles outlined U.S. security interests in East Asia along the lines shown above. The Pacific, he said, is today "a friendly ocean only because the West Pacific islands and two peninsular positions are in friendly hands . . . Okinawa, Guam and other islands . . . the Philippines, Australia, New Zealand, Korea, Formosa and Japan. We are giving supplies to the French Union forces in Indochina. But close behind this island and peninsular screen lies a mainland with many hundreds of millions of people under a despotic rule that is fanatically hostile to us and demonstrably aggressive and treacherous."

The Chinese Communist regime is not yet guilty of what Dulles called "open military aggression" in Indochina (i.e., it works through Ho Chi Minh). But if this "overt aggression" should occur, "in Indochina or elsewhere," Dulles added, it "would threaten island and peninsular positions which secure the United States and its Allies," and that would be "a deliberate threat to the United States itself. The United States would of course invoke the processes of the United Nations and consult with its Allies. But we could not escape ultimate responsibility for decisions closely touching our own security and self-defense."

The most distinguished living statesman of democracy is making his eighth visit to the U.S. as Prime Minister of Great Britain. It may well be his last. It may be as crucial a visit as any in his glorious career.

The Anglo-American connection has been a cornerstone of Sir Winston Churchill's life and policy. This connection, and with it the cause of world freedom, has been taking a resounding defeat on the Geneva-Paris-Indochina front. There the Communists have exposed and exploited a double weakness of the democratic alliance: 1) its tangle-footed involvement with an obsolete colonialism, and 2) the separate indecisions of its members about where and when to fight. When they learned that the U.S. and Britain could not agree to fight for Indochina, Molotov and Co. proceeded to stiffen their terms at Geneva and hastened the fall of another French government, while Ho Chi Minh stepped up his military conquest of Vietnam.

This glaring double weakness of the Western alliance must rank high on the agenda of the Eisenhower-Churchill conversations. Already some ground for its correction has been laid. Secretary Dulles in a speech in Los Angeles two weeks ago defined anew (see map) the geography of U.S. interests in East Asia. The Dulles line is too well hedged to be described as an ultimatum, particularly in respect to Indochina, which is left a sort of no man's land. But since it includes parts of the British Commonwealth, it certainly warrants the hope of an agreement with Britain on where and when "united action" against further aggression will mean the use of force.

Anglo-American relations are sometimes likened to male-and-female relations: it is said that neither side understands the other as well as they claim to, but that this matters less than they suppose. Anthony Eden has been saying that despite our recent differences, it would be "unthinkable" for Britain not to side with the U.S. in a world war. But this fact, for the very reason it is a fact, is wholly inadequate for 1954. If foul-weather friends are in a position to prevent the catastrophe that will unite them, their failure to do so makes them practically responsible for it when it comes. These White House talks will not be a success if they yield only another cousinly "agreement to disagree." It is high time the U.S. and Britain started a little joint preventive work. Before then lies a long list of very practical problems (pp. 22-25). But first they must answer a prior question: is this alliance willing to acknowledge and employ its own strength?

For over a year Sir Winston has repeatedly expressed his hope for "a general settlement" via a parley "at the summit," presumably as the crowning achievement of his career. To sustain this noble if pageantlike conception of history he has had to nourish certain illusions that also grip large numbers of his countrymen, and a number of our own. One is the illusion that the new tenants of the Kremlin may have a more "reasonable" foreign policy than the old. The Berlin and Geneva conferences were both held in the hope of proving or disproving that theory. Both have disproved it; more, they have added to the evidence that Communist foreign policy has no connection with reason and that the only "general settlement" Communists will settle for is the mind and body of the whole world.

A second illusion is that 50 years of Europe are still, as in Tennyson's time, more important than a cycle of Cathay. A view of Asia based on old P&O sailing times from London, or seen through a glass held by Nehru, cannot take the measure of the 20th Century Asian revolution, its promise and its peril for the West.

But finally, is there not a Churchillian illusion about where the "summit" is? Fading photographs of Yalta and Tehran, where a powerful trio met to dispose of great armies and the future of nations, throw no light on our problem or our capabilities today. Today's first problem is to bring order and coherence to that part of the world that is still free, so that it will be better able to withstand Communism and survive it.

For that purpose no better instrument could be desired than Anglo-American unity. Its pageantry, rightly seen, must far surpass that of Sir Winston's other visions. The true "summit" is wherever he and Eisenhower meet. Let not the pile of paper work on it obscure its majestic height.

The British Commonwealth, which includes one quarter of humanity, is comparable in area and population with the Communists' world; its industrial strength exceeds theirs. As though on magnesium wires, the Commonwealth is strewn around the globe in a way that makes it almost invisible when weak, all but ubiquitous when strong; it has an unparalleled adaptability for survival. To this extraordinary complex now add the U.S., which represents only 7% of the world's people but about half of its industrial output. As far as sheer power goes, the combination is capable of any achievement consistent with the basic political premise that the U.S. and the Commonwealth hold in common: the premise that the only lasting achievements are based on the assent of free men.

On this premise, and under this leadership, can be built a lasting system of order among nations. If Anglo-American unity is possible, anything is possible. Why look elsewhere for a "summit"? This is the summit of freedom's most reasonable hopes.

Joe's troubles grow, Communist convert dies in China and Senator Hunt commits suicide

In the last hour of the Army-McCarthy hearings florid statements were being made. ("The members," said Committee Counsel Ray Jenkins, "are seven rocks of granite.") Listening, Senator Charles Potter decided not to read a statement he had prepared ("I didn't know," he explained later, "that we were going to have hearts and flowers"). When he released it, the statement proved a surprise. A Republican, who had voted with McCarthy consistently throughout the hearings, Potter had switched. The testimony, he said, "was saturated with statements which were not truthful." Both sides had exhibited improper conduct and there should be firings.

Up to that moment McCarthy was confident that his staff would be vindicated by the subcommittee's Republican majority. When he read Potter's statement, he seemed stunned. It looked as if his committee counsel, Roy Cohn, and perhaps his staff chief, Francis Carr, would be fired. The Army's counsel, John Adams, might also have to go.

In a Washington federal court a jury convicted Mrs. Lolita Lebrón, tense, dark-eyed Puerto Rican nationalist, and three men companions of assault in firing into the House of Representatives, wounding five congressmen (LIFE, March 15). Then the jury acquitted Mrs. Lebrón of any intent to kill the representatives. She testified that she fired into the ceiling. However, the assault convictions make her and her male companions liable to prison terms.

A death far away

Last January 21 U.S. soldiers, prisoners of the Communists in Korea, refused repatriation and decided to stay with the Reds; now there are 20. A telegram from the Chinese Red Cross announced that Sgt. Rufus E. Douglas, 27, had died in a Chinese hospital of "a rheumatic heart disorder with complications." In Texon, Texas, Mrs. R. C. Howard, the aunt who brought young Rufus up, said, "I think the 'complications' were caused by them—the Reds. If he ever had heart trouble, we never heard of it." Meanwhile five U.S. airmen, the first to fall missing in Indochina, were apparently in Communist hands. They had left their French base at Touraine for an afternoon of swimming at an off-limits beach, failed to return. Witnesses reported seeing them firing their guns seaward from the beach.

In Seattle hearings the House Un-American Activities Committee called to the stand Eugene V. Bennett, a steelworker who had been identified by other witnesses as a former Communist expelled from the party for "Trotskyism." As he took refuge in the Fifth Amendment, Bennett whipped out a pair of needles and began to knit, refusing to answer questions. The knitting, he explained, calmed his nerves. But Bennett, encouraged by the mild manners of the committeemen, returned to the stand four days later and began to spill the works, detailing his 16 years of Communist party activity.

Tragedy in the Senate

Deeply worried over his health, U.S. Senator Lester C. Hunt (D.-Wyo.) announced two weeks ago that he would not seek re-election. Last week, at his desk in the Senate Office Building, he shot and killed himself. Starting life as a dentist, Hunt, a popular vote getter, was Wyoming governor from 1942 to 1948 and U.S. senator since. Because the acting governor of Wyoming is a Republican, he will probably be replaced by a Republican appointee, thus giving the party a Senate majority for the first time since the death of Senator Robert A. Taft.

Ramazan Ali Hamadani, who is 94 years old, 24 inches high and very wizened, was granted a 1,500-riyal-a-month ($18,800) pension in Tehran as a retired crown official. Seventy-five years ago Ramazan was one of three favorite dwarfs at the court of Shah Nasr-ed-Din and proud husband of a 9-year-old bride. When those days of glory ended he supported his family, including four dwarf sons and two dwarf daughters, by running a tea shop. But finally, as his age grew greater, he had to ask the government for his pension.

Bobo decides to accept

Mrs. Winthrop Rockefeller disclosed that she had at last decided to accept her husband's $6 million offer for a divorce made last August. She thereupon set out for Reno to establish residence for the divorce. "Bobo", it was reported, will receive a $1 million trust fund, plus $2 million in cash, plus either an additional $500,000 or $70,000 in income, whichever she prefers. Her son will receive a $1.5 million trust fund in addition to the $1 million fund already existing. Her hesitations and delay in accepting this offer, her friends explained, were the results of the "typical attitude of a woman not accustomed to signing legal papers."

NEW RUSSIAN FOUR-JET BOMBER RIDES THE SKIES OVER MOSCOW

Red reach grows

The Soviet military seldom parades the prototype of a new weapon before foreign eyes but often stages a show after the weapon is in production. Recently the T-37, a new four-jet bomber which has certain similarities to both the British Comet and the U.S. B-52, has been appearing over Moscow. It is a sobering lot of airplane: best estimates are that its giant jets have a force of 15,000 pounds thrust; its wing span is 170 feet in a 40° sweepback; its fuselage is 155 feet and its bomb bay 17 feet long by six feet wide, large enough to carry a 10,000-pound all-purpose bomb or a conventional atomic bomb.

TRIUMPH OVER A HANDICAP

Despite short left arm, Ed Furgol beats nation's best golfers in the Open

Ed Furgol, 37, is a silent, aloof golf player with a strange style and a withered left arm. Because this arm, broken in a playground fall when he was 11 years old, will not bend, Furgol gets his power from his right arm and by rotating his upper torso. He chops at the ball, has a constricted follow-through (above). In fact he does everything that, as the professional at the Westwood Country Club in Clayton, a St. Louis suburb, he tells his students not to do.

But this year, his ninth as a pro, Furgol won the Phoenix Open tournament and then came on to America's most important tournament, the Open, scheduled for Baltusrol Golf Club in Springfield, N.J.

As the play proceeded he walked the fairways almost alone while the Hogans, Sneads and Billy Joe Patton drew the crowds. But hole after hole he played top golf while the famous contestants fell behind. He came to the 72nd and final hole of the competition needing only a par to maintain his lead. He did it in as wild a finish as the Open has seen, approaching the final green so obliquely that he actually played one lie from a different golf course. But with the series of shots shown on the next page, unknown Ed Furgol jumped right into golf immortality.

Pepsi-Cola refreshes without filling

LIGHT are the burdens that countless grooms will carry over thresholds this June. Lighter and lovelier, slenderer and more shapely than ever before.

For the modern girl knows how to care for her figure. She knows, too, how much of her future health and happiness both depend on keeping that youthful waistline.

Her sensible modern taste has therefore turned increasingly to lighter and less filling foods and drink. And that is the taste with which Pepsi-Cola has steadily kept pace.

Today's Pepsi is light, dry (not too sweet), reduced in calories. It is the modern, the light refreshment. It refreshes without filling.

And note for brides and grooms: You can buy Pepsi in the familiar economy bottle that serves two people. It also comes in the smaller, single-drink size, just right for one.

Refresh without filling. Have a Pepsi.

IRON MAN OF MALAYA LEAVES HIS POST

Templer found way to beat Reds and win friends

MacGILLIVRAY

Native clubwomen (opposite page) and soldiers alike turned out in Malaya recently to thank a general for doing a job that is rarely appreciated by a colonial people. He is Sir Gerald Templer, high commissioner for the past 28 months, and a man whose gentle appearance (above) seems to contradict his nickname, the "Iron Man of Malaya." In 1952 when he arrived, Communist terrorists were running wild. They had just assassinated his predecessor, were ambushing cars in broad daylight, shooting up whole villages at night and threatening an even bloodier rebellion on the order of Indochina. Templer's tactics were drastic. He developed cunning ambushes of his own, mobilized informers in every native settlement and on occasion burned down entire villages which continued to supply the Reds with food. His military moves were matched by equally drastic social reforms. He made the British admit Malaysians into their most exclusive white man's club and taxed shopkeepers to finance new schools. When Sir Donald MacGillivray (inset) finally replaced him, Sir Gerald had not only restored a measure of stability in Malaya unknown since the Japanese attack in 1941, but had also gone a long way to restoring Britain's wilted prestige in that part of the world.

HOLDING HAYDN'S SKULL ALOFT, SCULPTOR GUSTAVO AMBROSI SHOWS IT TO THE CROWD, BEFORE PLACING IT IN THE COFFIN WITH THE OTHER REMAINS

Haydn's Skull Is Returned

AFTER THEFT 145 YEARS AGO, BODY IS COMPLETE

Joseph Haydn died full of honors and all of a piece on May 31, 1809, after 77 fruitful years spent writing operas, Masses, sonatas, symphonies, quartets, overtures, oratorios, concertos, divertimentos, and the tune that became Deutschland über Alles. Eight days after his funeral a few of his admirers sneaked into the cemetery, cut off his head and carried it away to measure it. Eleven years later, the loss was discovered.

Since then efforts to get Haydn's skull back have been complicated. The thieves were promptly unmasked, but they confused everything by producing fake skulls. One thief, repentant, tried to will the true skull to the Friends of Music Society—but another thief, unrepentant, presented it to his doctor. The doctor's sons finally gave it to the society which put it in a glass case on a piano. From there, recently, as a climax to Vienna's annual music festival the skull was taken to Haydn's grave in Eisenstadt and reunited with the remains.

HAYDN IN DEATH was displayed by the music society which received skull as a bequest from descendants of the doctor of the original ghoul.

HAYDN'S HEAD was painted in middle age. He was court musician to the princes of Esterhazy, a family famous for its warriors and diplomats.

FIRST STEP on skull's journey to Haydn's grave came when it was blessed in Vienna by Theodor Cardinal Innitzer, assisted by several of his priests.

IN LEATHER GASKET the skull is carried from the Vienna Friends of Music Society building and placed in a hearse on a bed of ferns and flowers.

AT HAYDN'S BIRTHPLACE in the village of Rohrau, east of Vienna, the cortege paused while musicians played variations from his Emperor Quartet.

Sure-fire starting for the Firebird

An AC Igniter Plug sparks the fabulous gas turbine of General Motors' XP-21 — an exciting symbol of jet-fighter styling on wheels. Pecking 370 horsepower, the car is 222.7 inches long, 80 inches of extreme width, and only 41 inches high at the plastic dome of the cockpit.

A new set of ACs brings easier starting and smoother firing to any car's engine

Your car should start quickly, idle quietly, accelerate smoothly. If it isn't behaving like that, take a few minutes to have your spark plugs checked. If they're badly worn you'll find that a new set of AC Spark Plugs will go a long way toward restoring new-car performance — may give you up to 10% more power and a fuel economy of as much as one gallon in ten.

You see — AC Spark Plugs have many patented features that insure power-boosting, gas-saving, top-flight performance! And note: there's an AC Spark Plug engineered to General Motors standards specifically for the car you drive.

AC's longer, thinner insulator tip stays cleaner, boosts power, saves gas

AC's long, thin, recessed insulator tips heat up more rapidly to burn away deposits which would otherwise form at the tips to cause pre-ignition or misfiring. This is an exclusive AC feature.

MORE POWER FOR AMERICA

American industry shows world how

OVERSEAS VISITORS see one of the latest examples of American inventive genius in this section of an automatic production line in an automobile factory. Known as an automatic transfer machine, this unit and two others together operate 321 tools to transform rough metal castings into finished automobile engine blocks. Precisely controlled power is supplied by General Electric motors.

GENERAL  ELECTRIC

to produce more with electricity —today's greatest bargain

General Electric motors and controls, operating modern production tools, help to give us the world's highest standard of living

The foreign visitors pictured on the opposite page are seeing at first hand why Americans earn more money, own more goods and have more leisure time than any other people on earth. The answer is the productivity of the American workman, made possible by complex machines such as the amazing automobile engine production line you see here.

Key to efficient mass-production techniques is our abundant use of electric power. Electric motors now provide 85 percent of all the power used in American factories. By multiplying our productive capacity, electric power enables America, with only 7 percent of the world's people, to produce over 40 percent of all the world's goods.

Today's greatest bargain is electricity, whether it's used in the home or in the factory. Not only is its cost low, but it is also capable of doing thousands of jobs more efficiently and more economically than they can be done by any other means.

America's electric utilities are doing a tremendous job in keeping the supply of electric power always ahead of our growing needs. Every year, electric utilities spend billions of dollars for new power stations and more efficient turbine-generators, transformers, switchgear, and other electric equipment.

General Electric, manufacturer of all kinds of electric apparatus, supplies a large part of the equipment that makes possible this expanding production of low cost electricity. In addition, General Electric is an important supplier of the motors and controls that keep America's factories continually turning out more goods for more people and so contributing to our rising standard of living. General Electric Co., Schenectady 5, N. Y.

AMERICAN WORKERS produce more every day and earn the world's highest wages, largely because machinery driven by electric motors multiplies their muscle power. Scientists calculate the electric power used in industry gives every American worker the equivalent of 236 strong men to help him on his job. That's more than double the help given to European workers.

Engineering enterprise and financial daring make America strong

BOLD INVESTMENT of 20 billion dollars in new facilities, like this modern electric power station equipped with water-driven General Electric generators, has enabled far-sighted electric utilities to double our supply of electricity since 1945.

POWERFUL GENERAL ELECTRIC MOTORS supply over 21,000 horsepower to drive a new, modern steel mill. The mill rolls two tons of cold reduced steel strip every minute to help meet industry's ever-growing demands for this basic material.

ELECTRICITY HELPS Americans produce and earn more in shorter hours than people of any other nation. American workmen earn more than a bare living—they have money for luxuries and pleasures and leisure to enjoy them.

Kim Kids Questionnaire

STARLET ILLUSTRATES ANSWERS TO STUDIO QUERIES ABOUT HERSELF

When a young actress first jumps into the Hollywood hopper, she is asked by her studio to fill out a questionnaire about her personal life. The answers, which deal with such crucial matters as favorite foods, sports, clothes, boy-friends and so on, are regarded as valuable grist to the publicity department's mills.

A few months ago the questionnaire treatment was given to Kim Novak, 21, of Chicago, who had come west to be a model, was signed up by Columbia Pictures and will soon be co-starred with Fred MacMurray in a film called Passover. She answered her quiz soberly, but afterward thought it would be fun, abetted by a LIFE cameraman, to pose for scenes kidding her own answers. She re-enacted the fateful moment when Actors' Agent Louis Shurr, who has a legendary gift for spotting new talent, first saw her (above), then threw herself so zealously into her work she fell off a horse (p. 63). Herewith is Kim's illustrated questionnaire with answers in Kim's own handwriting.

Imagine Motor Oil that IN EFFECT ADDS OCTANES TO GASOLINE. Boosts Gas Mileage Up to 23%*

The Best Lubricant for Any Car,
New or Old—
in Extreme Heat or Sub-Zero Cold—Adds Years to Engine Life!

NO LONGER can motor oil for your car be judged solely on the basis of engine protection.

Today, there is documented proof that New Mobiloil Special actually boosts engine power—equivalent to raising gasoline performance up to 5 octane numbers.

By raising efficiency and cutting waste, New Mobiloil Special also increases gas mileage up to 23% and adds years to the life of any engine!

After just 2 crankcase changes, this amazing new kind of motor oil has given engines—which “knocked” badly before—new-car pep and knock-free power.

In hundreds of cars, New Mobiloil Special reduced the octane requirement of every type of engine tested—which, in effect, is the same as adding octanes to the gasoline used.

Never before has a motor oil demonstrated such a complete range of protective properties.

• New Mobiloil Special cleaned up engines of all ages and kept them clean as no other oil ever has before.

• It corrected or relieved spark plug mis-firing and pre-ignition “ping” (most common in late model cars).

• It reduced rate of corrosive and mechanical wear to practically zero.

• It provided instant starts in sub-zero cold and complete protection at abnormally high temperatures.

This single oil is recommended for use in any climate, any season, in place of SAE 5W-10W-20W or 30 motor oil.

While New Mobiloil Special is priced higher than regular-quality motor oils, car owners will find that the extra power, extra performance and extra economy they get will more than pay back the small extra cost. Change to New Mobiloil Special . . . it's like adding octanes to your gasoline!

*In identical road tests, using fleets of vehicles—New Mobiloil Special reduced gasoline consumption—increased miles per gallon up to 23%—over results obtained with conventional high quality SAE 20 motor oil.

EYE THAT SEES THROUGH FOG

New infrared device for trucks reveals dangers hidden by thick weather

To a truck driver blindly trying to get through impenetrable fog shrouding a highway, an eerie white shape similar to the one shown below, glowing from a round screen on his dashboard, may soon be the means of preventing a fatal accident. The ghostly form is a view of what would otherwise be an invisible figure. The device that makes it materialize is an electronic tube housed in a square metal box (right) which will shortly be on the market for use in trucks and which may later be adapted for airplanes.

The most practical peacetime device developed commercially in the U.S. for revealing the complete form of an object through dense fog, the tube is called a Fog-o-Scope. It works somewhat like the sniperscopes used during the war to detect hidden enemies in the dark. Sensitive to invisible infrared rays which emanate from warm objects, the Fog-o-Scope detects radiation from a man or an engine up to half a mile away and translates it into a shimmering picture on a screen even though the pedestrian or car ahead is not illuminated. It is also able to "see" cold objects such as road signs, stalled cars or fallen trees by catching the infrared rays reflected from these objects when the traveling truck's headlights dimly hit them.

A DARK ROOM, into which Fog-o-Scope was pointed, was used for test.

DOESN'T THIS MAKE GOOD SENSE?

When one summer drink,
fresh lemonade—

- ... is a pure, natural fruit drink (no artificial flavorings or preservatives, no carbonation)
- ... is rich in vitamin C (the vitamin your family needs every day, especially in hot weather)
- ... cools and refreshes more deeply than any other
- ... is wonderfully delicious (children love it)

—doesn't it make good sense that fresh lemonade should be your family's summer drink? Medical authorities think so. How about you?

Tip to busy mothers. Your family needs fresh lemonade all summer. Make a big pitcherful every morning. Keep it handy in the refrigerator. Serve it for lunch, in lunch boxes, at parties and teas, with bedtime snacks, and every time the children ask for something cold to drink.

America prefers the lemon flavor for tea. Iced tea calls for fresh lemons to enhance its flavor, make it more cooling. Serve generous, squeezable wedges of Sunkist Lemons—finest and juiciest from California-Arizona. Don't forget Sunkist Lemons the next time you shop.

Only lemonade made from fresh lemons gives all the flavor and aroma that nature gave the fruit itself.

HOLD YOUR HORSES!

HERE IT COMES!

An all but forgotten circus spectacle is recalled in gaudy miniature models

Gone forever is the glittering spectacle of the seemingly endless circus parade rolling down the Main Streets of America, heralded by the outsider's warning cry to the buggy-borne spectators: "Hold your horses! Here it comes!" But the tradition lives on with circus fans who construct miniature models of everything from the wild animals to the elaborate gilded calliopes of the oldtime parades which had their heyday from 1880 to 1920. The parade shown on these pages comes from the world's finest collection, the proud possession of a West Springfield, Mass. businessman named Roy Arnold. Done in one-inch-to-one-foot scale, Arnold's wood-carved parade is a gaudy reminder of what the circus once loved to call "a winding, dazzling river of silver and gold."

FORTY-HORSE MITCH pulls 10-inch-high replicas of a $40,000 chariot known as "The Two Hemispheres Band Wagon." First used in parades by Barnum and Bailey in 1903, it is considered the most ornate band wagon ever built.

New Suits Both Cover Up and Show Off

THEY BRING A SWEATER GIRL LOOK TO BEACH

The newest bathing suits put out by East Coast designers cover a lot of skin which for years has gone bare at the beach. But they still manage to show off a lot of shape, and seen on a good figure have the same trim-girl-inside look that a well-fitting sweater gives. Although most are made without linings, boned bustlines or other artificial shaping, the sweater girl effect is obtained by using tight-fitting jersey or elasticized wool knit like the suit on the cover (Greta Platry, $23). Their high necklines and very long sleeves will present a tanning problem out of the water, but their simple cut and elasticity make them comfortable for swimming.

ROUGIER IN KOREA

DAZED PW, slowly comprehending he is free at last, was photographed at Panmunjom by Rougier during the first week of prisoner exchange in Korean war (LIFE, May 4, 1953).

PHOTOGRAPHER'S BIG SWEEP

LIFE's Rougier wins three top picture awards—and a pretty bride

Michael Rougier got his first job as a writer. But he wanted to be outdoors more and so became a photographer instead. In 1947 he joined the staff of LIFE and four years later began covering the Korean war. It was, he felt, a war of emotion for most men rather than a war of action, and he tried to capture in his pictures "the stresses and strains of a soldier's mind as well as his physical prowess."

Last March, honoring his Korean coverage, the Overseas Press Club cited Rougier for "the best photographic reporting from abroad in 1953." In May the University of Missouri School of Journalism gave him its magazine portfolio award. Now this month the National Press Photographers Association and the Encyclopaedia Britannica have named him "Magazine Photographer of the Year," thus giving Rougier at 29 a clean sweep of the year's three most important magazine photographic awards. Photographer Rougier capped this series of triumphs last week by taking a pretty bride (right).

Dandruff on shoulders is excessive dandruff... a sign your scalp needs care.

DANDRUFF

Why it may be
"the beginning of baldness"...

We don't claim miracles. We can't prevent baldness. Nor do we believe anyone can. But you should know the following facts about dandruff.

Dermatologists, while differing in their views as to causes of baldness, say that the condition symptomized by excessive dandruff does frequently lead to baldness.

1st STAGE:
Spores of Malassez

Seborrhea

Dandruff commonly arises from a disease of the scalp called seborrhea. Many leading dermatologists say that a causative agent of seborrheic dandruff is a tiny parasite called the Spore of Malassez—also known as Pityrosporum Ovale. In most men who have it, seborrhea progresses through three stages:

1. Dry white scales flake off your scalp, drop to your shoulders.
2. Moist, sticky scales appear on scalp. In many cases, hairs begin to die.
3. "Choking" of hair roots with fatty substance from glands, dead cells and dirt may occur. Result is increasingly "thin" hair, often baldness.

A scalp hygiene program: the Kreml Method

Watch your general health; if you're "run down," see your doctor. Apart from that—give your hair and scalp the right kind of care. Here is an easy-to-follow home program—the Kreml Method—used professionally by leading barbers and hairdressers:

2nd STAGE:
Bacilli shown
may be present.

Tonight, shake Kreml Hair Tonic gently on to your head. Massage your scalp vigorously. Next, apply your favorite shampoo. Work up a thick lather—without putting any water on your head. The lather comes easily if you have used enough Kreml Hair Tonic.

Now, rinse with water. Lather again. Rinse. Dry your hair thoroughly. Shake on Kreml Hair Tonic—massage it in—comb hair in place.

Tomorrow morning—and every morning: Shake on Kreml Hair Tonic—rub it in—comb hair in place.

Stubborn cases

At first, more dandruff flakes than usual may appear. This simply means dandruff is being "chased out" from scalp.

3rd STAGE: Bacilli shown may be present.
Hair growth may be affected.

In stubborn cases, repeat Kreml-and-shampoo treatment.

Inhibits growth of bacilli

There is no known permanent "cure" for seborrheic dandruff. But certain ingredients of Kreml Hair Tonic DO inhibit the growth of bacilli and of the Spores of Malassez. The Kreml Method is not offered as a substitute for the services of a dermatologist—but it has helped thousands of men. Letters tell us so!

Money-back offer. Try the Kreml Method faithfully, and, if you are not entirely satisfied, write the J. B. Williams Company, Glastonbury, Conn. Enclose Kreml label—tell us what you paid—and we will gladly refund your money.

Get Kreml Hair Tonic today. And if you need shampoo, ask for our Kreml Shampoo. See how quickly the Kreml Method makes your head feel better! The J. B. Williams Company.

FINAL DEATHWATCH during the closing hours of Korean war (Lrx, Aug. 10, 1953) was recorded by Rougier in a front line Marine hospital where medical corporan prayerfully watched the last of their patients die. Judges said pictures like these revealed Rougier's "acute sensitiveness," and others went on to say they were "the best to come out of the Korean conflict."

MIGHTY MUSHROOMS

Crossing a neighbor's asphalt carpark one recent Monday morning, Keith Vining, a Daytona Beach, Fla. hobby writer, noticed a small but curious bulge in its thick surface (top). Expecting a root or a mole to emerge, he set up a camera nearby and kept a daily vigil beside the swelling blister. On Wednesday the bulge burst (second from top), and by Saturday two white objects had pushed upward. Two more days revealed the mighty miners were a pair of flabby field mushrooms (bottom), whose spores had been buried when the carpark was laid in 1952. Germinating this spring, the growing mushrooms had absorbed moisture from the earth, filled their cells with water which produced enough hydraulic pressure to shatter the 1½-inch thick asphalt above them.

HERE IS THE "MIRACLE" YOU'VE BEEN HEARING ABOUT. At last, America's make-up authority, Max Factor, has released the secret substance he created to hide imperfections, lines, shadows and blemishes from the merciless scrutiny of motion picture and television cameras. Of all the many exclusive creations for which the "glamour industries" are indebted to Max Factor, this product is probably the one its beauties rely on most, day by day, to stay lovely.

And now this very product, ERACE, is available to you in a new form as simple to use as a lipstick.

SWIFTLY, INSTANTLY, every trace of "problem-points" which mar your beauty can disappear from sight. You're only seconds away from a flawless complexion with ERACE. In no way does ERACE alter the methods of beautification or make-up which you have found to be best for you. For ERACE is not a cosmetic. . . you use ERACE only where it is needed, before applying make-up or without any make-up.

AND HERE'S ANOTHER important fact we can't evade. From time to time every woman is subject to one of the "problems" ERACE was specifically created to overcome. Teenagers seem to "blossom forth" with blemishes just before that all-important "date". The passing years, loss of sleep or temporary physical indisposition will put ugly circles under the loveliest eyes . . . harsh lines in the smoothest complexion. For these problems and dozens more . . . ERACE is the answer.

PRIM PORTRAITS OF A PAST

National Gallery's new collection of primitives gives vivid image of early Americans

PLUMED HAT and stuffed animals brought a restrained smile to face of Miss Dennison, a fashionable young lady who had portrait done about 1773.

Some 30 years ago a handful of U.S. art collectors and dealers began an earnest hunt. Ransacking attics, haunting auctions and country sales, they brought to light a curious and quaint assortment of paintings, all the handiwork of little-known or anonymous artists who plied their trade in America more than 100 years ago. Foremost collectors of this earliest flowering of American art are Colonel and Mrs. Edgar W. Garbisch, who have amassed 1,500 paintings. Recently they gave 500 of them to the National Gallery, the first of a promised series of donations from their collection.

This month in the gallery some of the paintings, including those reproduced here, are on view. Surrounded by the elegant and polished works of European masters, the American primitives present a stern, somber and somewhat awkward appearance. But through the rigid poses, the staring eyes, the unembellished settings comes a vivid portrait of the self-respecting citizens of the past who laid a solid groundwork for the America of today.

RUFFLED BONNET, curly hairdo and a new ear trumpet were the special pride of Mrs. J. B. Sheldon of Ohio, who sat for an itinerant painter in 1825.

A tired nurse takes a "Coffee-break"

A surgeon's eyes, signalling. A nurse's hand, responding. Soon, the anxious hour passes, and somebody says: "Wouldn't you like a cup of coffee?" The tired nurse smiles. Coffee! A cup so cheerful, a lift so welcome, a taste so good that nothing takes its place. Hearty, friendly, bracing any hour of the day. During your day, too, "wouldn't you like a cup of coffee?" So much pleasure—for only pennies a cup. Enjoy coffee often—and make coffee right. Use 2 level tablespoons (or 1 Standard Coffee Measure) for every cup. Give yourself a "Coffee-break"! Think better, work better and feel better. PAN-AMERICAN COFFEE BUREAU, 120 Wall Street, New York 5, New York

GRAVE HUSBAND, his hand resting on a prayer book, was married to lady whose portrait is at bottom of page. This was painted around 1840.

DUTCH DAUGHTER, Catelyn Post, was painted in New York about 1730. Artist solved problem of painting her feet by doing them in profile.

STAID WIFE posed for companion piece to her husband's portrait. The painter warmed up to his job by adding a landscape to background.

THESE FRISKY LITTLE FELLOWS in the bowl don't talk very plain -- they're not even coherent. They don't say very much -- just three little words, "Snap! Crackle! Pop!" And they all chatter at once when you pour on milk or cream. You have to eat up before they shut up. But then you discover how good Kellogg's Rice Krispies are, and you forgive their chatter. No wonder Kellogg's Rice Krispies are the world's only talking cereal -- they've got crispness worth talking about.

ON BOMBAY SIDEWALK PROFESSIONAL MEDICINE MAN DISPLAYS RESERPINE ROOT IN PORTABLE PHARMACY (JAR LOWER RIGHT), TAKES PATIENT'S PULSE

GOOD MEDICINE FROM MEDICINE MAN

New way to calm violent mental patients is found in an Indian root and a French synthetic chemical

The serpentine roots of a wild plant which medicine men in India use as a cure-all are being shown to U.S. doctors this week at the A.M.A. convention in San Francisco as the source of a new drug that may revolutionize the care of the violently insane. This plant-produced drug, called reserpine, along with a different, synthetic drug from France called chlorpromazine, is giving experimental promise of being the best means for quieting extremely anxious, often wildly dangerous psychotics. They are the ones whose untiring gyrations and irrational yells make the acute wards of mental hospitals sound like hellam. But after being given either drug, the patients are so calm they no longer need to be tied down, so cooperative they no longer have to be force fed, so indifferent to anxieties which before were to them unbearable that they occasionally begin to gain an insight into some of the causes of these frustrations. Their condition seems to improve both as a result of the drugs' physiological action and of the patients' ability, while under the influence of the chemicals, to talk fairly sensibly to psychiatrists.

The way these two drugs may act is shown in these drawings. Reserpine (drawing, left) acts directly on the brain alone. It can calm without causing drowsiness by dulling areas that govern anxiety (1) while stimulating the sleep center so that the patient is aroused, not lulled (2). In addition to its psychiatric use, it lowers blood pressure (3), relaxes spasms in the walls of small blood vessels (4), and affects muscle tone in the intestines (5).

Chlorpromazine (drawing, right) acts directly on both the brain (1) and the two nerve systems (2,3) in the rest of the body. It retards impulses in zones that control anxiety, emotions, wakefulness and muscle activity. It also can help in surgery by lowering body temperature (1), can increase blood flow in limbs (5), help prevent nausea by soothing the brain's vomiting center (6), help stop hiccups by checking spasms of the diaphragm (7), and counteract blood-pressure-raising adrenaline (8). Chlorpromazine is more versatile and faster-acting than reserpine. Reserpine is milder, does not cause the dizziness or jaundice occasionally associated with chlorpromazine.

LIFE

AS an Independence Day special next week, LIFE's editors will bring you a 12-page portfolio of British Cartoonist Rowland Emmett's impressions of the U.S. entitled "An Answer to Yorktown." But before you lose yourself in Mr. Emmett's work, we thought you might like to meet the man.

Here is Rowland Emmett, a youngish chap who is considered by most readers of Punch to be the funniest person in the world. His reputation springs largely from his drawings of 1) railroads, 2) his own marvelous inventions and 3) ordinary situations which most mortals are too busy or too witless to find funny.

Shown with Mr. Emmett is one of his newer inventions: a Walking Stick for a Transcontinental Journey. This gadget was inspired by the recent 8,000-mile, five-month junket Mr. Emmett made around the United States to see for himself the sights he was commissioned to paint for LIFE's readers. It is also a clue as to how Mr. Emmett sees things and a hint of the good-humored surprises in store for you next week.

The sketch pad, paint brush and pencil directly under the parasol are obviously an artist's basic requisites for such a trip. The toothbrush is a good piece of equipment to have along on any junket, anywhere. But we are somewhat surprised that this visitor considered a crystal radio set and ticker-tape machine essential to the U.S. standard of living, and we are delighted that he so quickly adopted those two old American habits: chewing gum and ice water. Probably the most touching tools are the arrow for defense (which he didn't have to use on his U.S. trip) and the beads for establishing relations with friendly Indians (which he did successfully).

Engaging as his invention is, it cannot rival the detailed and discerningly humorous paintings and drawings in which Emmett expresses next week his interpretation of the American scene, from New York's Third Avenue to Hollywood, from Niagara Falls to the Texas oil lands. Accompanying the illustrations will be Emmett's own captions. We hope both his words and pictures will add to your leisurely enjoyment of the Fourth of July weekend.

ANXIOUS RAT IS SOOTHED BY CHLORPROMAZINE

Medical patients often get violent when they falsely associate a person or sound with pain or danger. At Smith, Kline & French Laboratories a rat was conditioned to associate the sound of a bell with painful electric shock to see if chlorpromazine would block the strange association. Every time the bell in the cage rang, an electric shock was sent through grating underfoot and the rat leaped. Soon the rat jumped only when bell rang, without shock (top picture). When drug was given, conditioned reflex was blocked and rat ignored bell (middle) when it was rung without shock. But when shocked (bottom), rat still leaped, showing drug had not caused it to lose physical faculties.

IN KINDERGARTEN CLASSROOM PLAYERS TRY ON NEW UNIFORMS AS DICK WILLIAMS (CENTER) AND OTHERS ANXIOUSLY AWAIT MISSING PARTS OF OUTFITS

SUPERVISED YOUNGSTERS FIND HAPPY COMPETITION IN BASEBALL

PHOTOGRAPHED FOR LIFE BY YALE JOEL

The Lilliputian world of baseball, where little players play on little fields in Little League games, has become one of the biggest things in the sport. This summer a half million determined kids will play in 3,500 leagues in 47 states (South Dakota is Little Leagueless) and in Alaska, Hawaii, the Philippines, Cuba, Canada, Panama, Puerto Rico and even South Korea. By the time the Little Leaguers wind up their 1954 world series in Williamsport, Pa. in August, more spectators will have attended their games than will see the major league teams all season.

In Manchester, N.H., where the pictures on these pages were taken, youngsters getting into the Little League run head on into the world of competition. Each step—matching skills with other kids to make a squad, vying to make the starting lineup, playing against other teams—brought aches to the losers and joys to the winners. Little League critics have charged that the small-fry athletes are not mature enough emotionally to stand the excitement of these tense situations. But in Manchester the program has shown that intelligent adult supervision of all phases of the competition eliminates the problem. The coaches and parents alike avoid overemphasis. As a result, despite all the tension and the disappointments, the youngsters showed no tendency to crack under any strain. Instead they seemed to thrive on competition, growing more poised, more relaxed and more confident as they went along.

AWAITING THEIR FATE, six boys who survived preliminary tryouts keep vigil outside meeting room in YMCA while league coaches inside bid for them.

PICKING THE PLAYERS after auction, coaches draw numbers for turns to select boys left in players pool. In all about 30 of 50 names on list are picked.

Players' Auction, Then the Crew Cuts

Choosing players for Little League teams is a process proscribed in detail by Little League rules which try to give every boy a chance to make a team and each coach a fair crack at the available talent. As soon after April 15 as weather permits, tryouts are held. Coaches of all four teams in the league watch every move made by every player, jot down the names of preferred prospects. Then the names of all of these prospects are put on a list and a players' auction takes place. Each coach is allotted 10,000 points which he uses to bid for players. Bidding is spirited, and this spring one coach bid 4,350 points for a slug-ging outfielder. Once points are used up, coaches take turns selecting remaining players from the prospect list. Coaches, who eventually have to get their squads down to 15 players, are restricted by age rules since each team can have no more than five 12-year-olds and must have at least five players 10 or under. One rule most stringently enforced is that players are never to learn whether they were bought at auction for a king's ransom in points or just picked up from among the leftover names in the players' pool.

DELIGHTED CHOICE, Eddie Thompson gets the word from Coach Crowley he made team as his father looks on.

← DEPRESSED CHOICE, Lionel Dearborn tells coach he cannot play, must help mother (apoints) care for sisters.

FIRST STEP in coach's program to develop team spirit is to have all players on Boys' Club team get a brush cut.

TRYING OUT. Art Doukas showed he had pretty good stuff as a pitcher, but because he is a reliable hitter he was put in right field. All players are tested at all positions before the beginning of the season.

BIG STRETCH doesn't get hustling Ed Thompson high enough for the ball, does bare his middle.

From Raw Start

Although other Little League teams in Manchester practiced only twice a week, Boys' Club coach Bob Crowley, the club's program director, ordered daily drills, rain or shine, put his squad through calisthenics, had them run a quarter mile, taught such big league techniques as the fadeaway slide and hitting to the opposite field. An enlightened taskmaster, he seasoned tough drills with warm encouragement.

As basic rules, he gave out the following orders and advice: 1) Fishing is not an excuse for missing practice. 2) There must be plenty of hustle at all times. 3) Be the umpire's best friend and his decisions will rarely be bad. 4) Don't ride kids who make errors, encourage them. 5) Don't alibi for errors. 6) Don't fraternize with opponents; it encourages them. 7) Don't get rabbit ears and take advice from spectators, uncles or fathers. 8) Eat well. 9) Be in bed by 8:30 each night—no late television. 10) Uniforms can be worn only on game days. For boys who were so proud of their uniforms that they wanted to wear them all day every day, the hardest of all rules to obey was No. 10.

WARNING UP, Johnny Peacock, regular catcher who also pitches, loosens arm before game. Team needs five pitchers as Little Leaguers cannot hurl on two straight days or more than six innings a week.

BOYS' CLUB'S SPARKY KENYON GETS TO SECOND IN GAME WHICH GIVES HIM CHANCE TO SHOW SKILLS LEARNED IN PRACTICE AND ALSO TO WEAR HIS UNIFORM

CALLED ON to pinch hit with score tied, bases loaded, Eddie Thompson is ordered, "Get a walk."

CALLED OUT after taking a third strike, Eddie looks back in disbelief as the umpire makes his sign.

GOING BACK, Eddie trudges dejectedly toward dugout where teammates consoled, "Nice try, Ed."

BEFORE GAME the players and coaches stand at attention and face flag during national anthem. Little League field is patterned after major league stadium but in almost every detail is one third smaller.

All in a Game: Setback and Success

First opponent of the year for the Boys' Club was a team sponsored by Manchester banks and called the Banks. The opening game produced enough excitement for a full season. In the brief span of six innings the lead changed four times. Up for their last turn at bat the Boys' Club was behind 8-6. They tied the score and, with bases loaded, the coach called as pinch hitter his tiniest player and hence the hardest to pitch to. When Eddie Thompson failed to get his walk (left), he learned something about competition: how to stand up to failure. Moments later, when Steve Paup's single won the game, Steve and teammates faced a happier but harder situation that comes with competition: how to cope with success.

HOISTED, Steve ("Twinkletoes") Paup enjoys a hero's ride after driving in the game-winning run.

HUGGED by proud mother, John Peaceck glows in triumph moments after scoring the winning run. →

Police records revealed here for first time label Communist China's premier a fugitive from murder charge as he was rising in ranks of Communist party

GRIM CHOU appears in photograph the Shanghai police used in 1931 in their "wanted" notices for him. He was then an officer in Chinese Communist party.

EVIDENCE OF HIS CRIME included police picture of Shanghai houses where seven bodies were found. Confessed accomplice said boss of assassins was Chou.

THE Geneva conference brought Chou En-lai, Red China's premier and foreign minister, into full view of the Western world as a master politician and a suave negotiator with a keen instinct for exploiting potential cleavages among the anti-Communist nations (opposite page). At about the same time some aging documents made available to LIFE revealed him as a political thug and professional assassin.

Chou En-lai's urbane facade has been fooling people for some 20 years. In the middle '30s journalists who sought him hidden out in the caves of Yenan, the Communist headquarters, were impressed by a bearded man, with an $80,000 price on his head, who spoke excellent English and French and who seemed a "reasonable" Communist. In the days following World War II, when the tragedy of China was sealed in Yenan and Chungking, Chou's charm beguiled many Americans who had conditioned themselves to believe the Chinese Reds were harmless agrarian reformers. Even General Marshall, anything but a Communist sympathizer, thought Chou a man of his word. There were rumors that Chou had killed men with his own hands but, says a U.S. newsmen who knew him then in Chungking, "One could only suspect by the chilling glint in his eye that they were true."

The rumors were true. The evidence, in the form of Shanghai police records nearly 23 years old, has never before been published. Vouched for by sources LIFE considers absolutely trustworthy, the documents name Chou as the man responsible for a spectacularly gruesome mass murder which in 1931 wiped out the entire family of a political enemy.

The political enemy was a man named Koo Cheng Chang. A member of the central committee of the Chinese Communist party and head of the Chinese G.P.U., Koo went over to the Nationalist government in April 1931. He talked, and as a result, the Nationalists arrested a number of important Communists, including the party's secretary-general who was executed on June 23, 1931. Shortly thereafter Koo's wife, eight relatives, and the family cook disappeared.

On Sept. 26, 1931 a man named Wong Lau Deu Ts was arrested by Shanghai police of the International Settlement and turned over to the Nationalists. Wong revealed that he was one of a party of Communist assassins who had murdered Koo's relatives by strangulation. The executions, said Wong, were ordered by the party's new secretary-general, who was also in charge of the assassination gang. French police records of Shanghai's International Settlement spell the boss assassin's name Chou Heng Lai; British records call him Tseu Ong Lai and Chou Ong Lai. The date, the circumstances and a photograph (above, left) attached to the British police dossier leave no doubt that this is the man Western diplomats now know as Chou En-lai.

Wong kept talking. The final report of the Shanghai municipal police (British), dated Jan. 22, 1932, reviews the case and says: "Wong Lau Deu Ts further stated that the bodies of the Koo family were buried at Nos. 33 and 37 Rue Prosper Paris, No. 6 Wuting Road, whilst other traitors to the C.P. cause were murdered and buried at No. 91A Sinza Road.

"Between November 21st and 28th 1931 seven bodies were exhumed at Rue Prosper Paris, four at Wuting Road and five at Sinza Road making a total of sixteen. Full particulars in connection with all the murders will be found in attached statements.

The five Sinza Road murders had taken place earlier, sometime in 1930, and Chou En-lai may or may not have been involved. But the 11 murders to which he was definitely linked were horrible enough. A British police report describes a visit, following Wong's direction, to No. 6 Wuting Road, a property rented by Wong at the time of the murders. The report says:

"Immediately after arrival work was started on digging up the garden which is situated to the south of the house. . . . At about 11 a.m. a slab of cement about 6 feet in length, 2 feet 6 inches in width and 1½ inches thick was unearthed under about 8 inches of soil near the south wall of the garden, running lengthwise. This slab of cement

OF CHOU EN-LAI

As the Chinese boss in Geneva he luxuriates in heady air of power politics and hothouse flowers while leading the unwary up diplomacy's garden path

by GODFREY BLUNDEN

TO Le Breuil, the famous horticultural house on the shores of Lac Lemman, came two Chinese gentlemen dressed in black. On their small, delicate feet they trod among the exotic hothouse flowers for which Geneva is celebrated, pausing to examine a shell pink azalea, a miniature rhododendron, a cyclamen, sky-blue hydrangeas, an orchid. Conferring gravely together, they indicated their purchases. There was just one point they wanted to be sure about. Before delivery the plants must be examined by another Chinese gentleman. But naturally, messieurs, answered the nurseryman.

A few hours later the astonished nurseryman saw plants neatly lifted out of their earthenware pots and small Oriental flingers probe root and stem. Did the Chinese gentleman doubt the quality of the plants? Not at all. It was not bugs but bombs they were looking for. The flowers were for the private conservatory of M. Chou En-lai, premier and foreign minister of the Chinese People's Republic who was due in Geneva to play his first public role on the stage of world diplomacy at the conference on Korea and Indochina.

Though the advent of Chou at Geneva had a delicate hothouse flavor, Western representatives soon discovered that he was as brutal a negotiator as his Russian mentors. In forcing a breakdown of negotiations on Korean peace terms, he was second in importance only to the Soviet Union's Molotov. In the exasperating discussions for an armistice in Indochina he has been the No. 1 man on the Communist team. When the Indochinese talks appeared headed for deadlock last week, it was Chou who revived them with a proposal that the West felt obliged to study and therefore prolong the conference.

The preparations for housing Chou at Geneva presaged the importance of the role in which he had cast himself. And it showed how far he had come since he was the boss of a Communist assassination gang in Shanghai in 1931 (opposite page). This April, from the Red Chinese legation in Berne—Switzerland is one of seven Western European countries that recognize the Mao regime—four Chinese traveled to Geneva to look for a house. They made the circuit of the summer rentals until they came to Le Grand Montfleuri, a dignified 18th Century mansion owned by Jacques Salzmanowitz, head of a big international grain business. Grand Montfleuri is on the bank of Lac Lemman, less than 10 miles from the Palais des Nations, onetime headquarters of the defunct League of Nations, which had been selected for the meeting place of the conferences on Korea and Indochina. The Chinese liked the look of Montfleuri. It has 21 rooms, five bathrooms, a conservatory, terraces, and it stands in a 27-acre park with a small wood, a hayfield, vegetable gardens, a greenhouse and lodges at its gates. Multimillionaire Salzmanowitz was reluctant to let his house to Communists, but the Swiss foreign office pressured him. The rental price for six months: 20,000 Swiss francs ($4,600).

The first thing the Chinese did was to go over the district in which Montfleuri stands. One by one they checked off their neighbors with the Swiss police, noting their names and inquiring about their social status. In a corner of the Montfleuri estate they found the humble cottage of Gardener Jules Marandaz. Stubborn Jules, maintaining that he was part of the deal, refused to move out. The Chinese argued. Finally they bought Jules's pigs and chickens and vegetables, agreed to pay his salary for the entire period of occupancy and decorated an apartment for him at Versoix, just outside Geneva.

A onetime residence of famed French statesman Chateaubriand, Grand Montfleuri had stood empty for several years. Wallpaper was stripped off and walls were replastered. An extra bathroom was put in and the house was repainted. Cost: 200,000 Swiss francs ($46,000). Then a Chinese spotted a couple of flies on the ceiling and quickly called up the Geneva Hygiene Service. The whole house was fumigated.

Curious about what was going on in his house, owner Salzmanowitz paid a visit to Montfleuri. He was ordered off the grounds. To repulse other intruders barbed wire was flung around the estate, though that was later removed. A 20-man Swiss army guard, spaced at intervals of was broken and removed and only soil was found. Digging again commenced and a further 18 inches down traces of two bodies were found lying side by side parallel to the south wall facing north. Almost simultaneously traces of two other bodies were found on the north side of the garden. . . .

"At 3:30 p.m. Procurator Kuh Wei and Dr. Dang Ching . . . arrived and viewed the bodies.

"Dr. Wong the Municipal Police doctor then had the bodies removed from the soil . . . and the following was ascertained:

"(1) Body lying parallel south wall under 8 inches of soil, a cement slab, and a further 18 inches of soil, that of a young woman, naked, and bound with rope at the ankles, wrists and around the neck, believed to be body of Chang An Hwo, wife of Koo.

"(2) Body lying parallel to No. 1 . . . that of an elderly woman, clothed, and also bound with rope round the ankles, waist, and neck. Believed to be the body of Chang Loh Se, mother-in-law of Koo.

"(3) Body in sitting position under two feet of soil on north side of garden. Legs were doubled back to neck and were tied together with hands with rope round neck . . . facing north wall. Believed to be body of Sih Lee, the brother of General Sih [commander of the 2nd Division of the 26th army].

"(4) Body in sack in north-west corner of garden under two feet of soil. Found to be body of a female about 16 years of age. Trussed up in same manner as No. 3. Clothed, and with cord round neck. Believed to be body of Yih Siau Mei [cousin of Koo]."

Seven more bodies were found at Nos. 33 and 37 Ai Dang Li, Rue Prosper Paris; Koo's brother and two sisters-in-law, Koo's father-in-law, the brother of a sister-in-law, his wife and the cook, one Ma Bee. The only victim not a member of Koo's family was Sih Lee, who was unlikely to be around at the wrong time. According to the North-China Herald of Dec. 1, 1931, Koo himself ran newspaper advertisements, offering a $3,000 reward for the murderers and putting the finger on Chou En-lai as the man responsible.

From Wong Lau Deu Ts the Shanghai police got the names of nine assassination agents under Chou En-lai. But they were most anxious to find Chou and a man named Hong Tsung Poo whose job, according to the British police summary, "was to secure isolated houses suitable for murders." Shanghai police wrote Hong Kong as follows:

"December 11, 1931

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the following described persons:

(1) Tseu Ong Lai, native of Hupeh, age about 40, strong build, medium height, fresh complexion, speaks French and Japanese. . . .

(2) Hong Tsung Poo, alias Hong Yang Sung, native of Yue Yue, Dzaushing . . . are wanted by the Shanghai Municipal Police and Chinese Military Authorities on charges of murder. . . .

Eleven days later Hong Kong police answered as follows:

"Of the two Chinese names . . . the first one Tseu Ong Lai is well known to this Department as a leading Communist whose arrest we have endeavoured to secure for many months. . . .

"The other Chinese named Hong Tsung Po is not known. . . ."

It may be that this was made it too hot for Chou in places like Shanghai and Hong Kong, for he next turned up as a leader of the Communist army's famous 6,000-mile Long March to Shensi in 1934. Henceforth he was one of the top Communist hierarchy, apparently a nice, plausible fellow. And in Shanghai he does not have to worry now about the law; he is the law. THE END

200 yards, surrounded the estate. The Swiss police kept a permanent five-man detail at the main entrance gate. The Chinese put their own guards inside the grounds and built a small guardhouse at the gate. Here one day appeared a certain Wang, a Chinese porter who had learned his French (he said) at Peking University.

Furniture purchased in Geneva (an estimated 50,000 Swiss francs' worth) began arriving. Wang ordered the delivery wagons to be unloaded at the gate. Refrigerators, washing machines, radios, chairs and tables were moved up the driveway by a staff automobile. Wang permitted no one who was not Chinese to take a step inside the gate. Chinese guards behind him glowered at curious sightseers.

For their convenience the Russians had organized a daily aircraft shuttle service between Moscow, East Berlin and Geneva. Russian transport planes now began flying in with crates of dragon-decorated Chinese furniture, tapestries, lamps, trays, small tables, cabinets. From East Geneva a big armored Zis with double bulletproof windows and two Buick-type Zims rolled in with Chinese drivers and more guards. But three cars hardly met the needs of the delegation. Two Chinese gentlemen in black went into Geneva, bought five British Humbers, a Mercedes Benz, a Chrysler, hired five French Citroens (at 100 Swiss francs a day) and a couple of Simcas (at 80 francs a day). Now everything appeared to be ready.

On April 24, two days before the conference opened, Chou En-lai arrived by Russian plane from Moscow. At the airport Swiss officials greeted him while newsmen were held back by barricades. A brief, trifling incident marred Swiss composure. A Swiss watch firm had put up an advertising sign at the airport on which the flags of the 19 conferring nations were displayed. By a singular misfortune they had mistaken the flag of Nationalist China for that of Red China. Immediately a member of Chou's entourage spotted it. The offending flag was promptly changed.

In the armored Zis, with three carloads of guards following, Chou drove straight to Montfleury. Was he pleased? Not more than a few hours later two Chinese gentlemen in black were observed speeding into Geneva. At Fleurier's, the city's biggest florist shop, they leaped out, bought another carload of plants. After screening by Chinese secret servicemen, the additional plants went into Chou's conservatory. There were now some 200 people in the Red Chinese delegation. Chou had brought his own doctor and medical staff, his own cook and cook's assistants, a personal housekeeper (one of 10 women in the delegation). There were nine or 10 news cameramen, a host of interpreters, propagandists, clerks, mechanics, drivers—and, of course, a secret service staff, headed by Li Ko-nung, boss of China's equivalent of the MVD. Some 50 Chinese were quartered on the Montfleury estate but the rest had to be scattered through Geneva hotels and in a private apartment.

In the hotels the Chinese refused to yield up their room keys, and they protested the habit of Swiss bellhops and maids of entering rooms with master keys. Just to confuse the Swiss further the Chinese began switching rooms. Swiss officials began to realize that they had no sure means of determining the number of Chinese Communists entering or leaving the country. Meanwhile the Chinese signed their meal checks in Chinese characters and refused to give tips. It was not long before the staff of one hotel began to talk of a protest strike. For a while it was possible to tell the relative position of any Chinese delegate in the Communist hierarchy by his clothes. The top-level boys wore a kind of uniform obviously modeled on the buttoned-up jacket and high collar worn by Mao Tse-tung, just as Stalin's boys used to imitate the dictator's high-necked tunic. From this austere getup the tailoring ran down through seedy Western-style clothes to a kind of floppy zoot suit with bell bottoms. But soon all this changed. The Chinese comrades descended on Geneva's flossy department stores and were soon strolling about in new Western clothes. They also bought nylon stockings, ballpoint pens and American cigars. At one shoestore two Chinese bought five pairs of shoes each. When presented with the bill one of the Chinese produced 15,000 francs from his pocket and asked the sales clerk to take the required amount, about 800 francs.

At Montfleuri, Chou and his staff have dined on food flown in from China and Russia. The Chinese at the hotels have eaten Western food. At the swank Hotel Beau-Rivage last week one Chinese finally lost patience, called for a plate of noodles, doused it with Worcestershire sauce and ate with a relaxed smile. They have visited Swiss cafes in small groups, seldom alone, and have not been observed to drink anything stronger than light beer. None has been seen in either of Geneva's two Chinese restaurants.

A limited amount of fraternization with the Russians and the Vietminh has apparently been permitted, but none with the Swiss and none with Geneva's several thousand Communists who have gazed wonderingly at the international, but frigid, brothers. By 11:00 every night, as by a curfew signal, the Red Chinese have disappeared from the streets. Not for them the fleshpots of Geneva, but the deep, deep boredom of the cell meeting and the nightly orientation talk. It was a life which had Porter Wang wondering.

"In Geneva," he asked a Swiss guard, "are there many poises?" (Literally, "chicken"—the variety that wears nylons.)

"Well," said the Swiss, "it's as you would find it in any French-speaking city."

"Ah," sighed Wang.

"How is it in China?" asked the Swiss.

"In new China," said Wang, "they are all in factories."

It would be an error to imagine that barbarians make up the delegation. The majority are graduates of China's universities and a few are U.S. college graduates. Many speak fluent English. Westerners formerly stationed in Chungking have recognized a number of former acquaintances, but efforts to renew old ties have had little success. Such has been the case with Madame Kung Peng.

Former Chungking correspondents remember her as a vivacious Chinese woman, Chou's press officer in 1943, a Communist liaison officer with the Marshall mission in 1946. Reminded by a correspondent of a dinner she had been given at the British embassy in Chungking, Mme. Peng was covered with confusion. At the first Chinese press briefing she made an appearance at the official table and objected when newsreel photographers tried to take her picture as she lit a cigaret. She has made no public appearance since then, remaining in seclusion at the Hotel Beau-Rivage, a brooding, grave-faced woman in a filmy blue dress.

No day has passed without tourists peeping through the gates of

LIFE MAKES EXPLORERS

Photography has played a big part in my life. One of my first assignments for the American Museum of Natural History in New York was to study and photograph whales in Alaskan waters. That was in 1908.

I continued to work with aquatic mammals for eight years. The photographs I took of them helped me to start lecturing and writing. Later, on expeditions to the far corners of the world, I found photographs made records that were indispensable.

Naturally, then, I have had from the first a special liking for a magazine that gives me the sort of superb pictures that LIFE does.

Still, as an explorer myself, I can't help feeling a little jealous of LIFE for the way it makes explorers of all its readers. For, if you read LIFE regularly, it will take you everywhere eventually, and give you very much the same sharp perception of every scene as does a personal trip to the spot.

When I reached Urga in remote Mongolia on the expedition that first found dinosaur eggs in the heart of Asia, I said: "Some day there'll probably be a railroad in this place." I now read the Soviets are building one. I fully expect we'll all see that railroad in LIFE, though I have no idea how the trick of getting the pictures will be accomplished.

I think LIFE's standing as an explorer can be established by a story in the recently published book Seven Years in Tibet, by Heinrich Harrer. He tells us that in the forbidden city of Lhasa half a dozen copies of LIFE are received and read every week!

I would like to suggest that LIFE's series, "The World We Live In" be published in book form. It is extraordinarily well done, comprehensive and at the same time comprehensible—a great thing.

And what other magazine has anything like that wonderful color spread of the midnight sun around the clock?

In fact, you can be sure that any important event anywhere in the world—politics, science, entertainment, any phase of endeavor—will be reported in LIFE, the text done in an authoritative way, the pictures a thrilling education.

Montfleur. They should have come at night, for Chou's schedule is the same as that of his old master, Josef Stalin. The house lights at Montfleur, like those of the Kremlin, have burned through the night. In the early hours the teletype circuit connecting Montfleur with Berne and thence by radio with Shanghai has run hot with a load of coded European letters. Not until the time the Swiss milkman has delivered his eight quarts of milk at Wang's lodge has quiet returned. The Swiss guard has been ordered to keep it that way until noon.

From the front terrace at Montfleur there is a view across the turquoise waters of Lac Lemans with its swans and sailboats to snowcapped Mont Blanc. In the early afternoon Chou and his staff have strolled on the terrace. Except for the Swiss guards, who were entertained at dinner shortly after Chou's arrival (they were delighted with the jasmine tea), not more than half a dozen foreigners have seen Chou at home. Among the privileged were India's V. K. Krishna Menon and British Member of Parliament Harold Wilson, onetime Labor party president of Board of Trade. Write Wilson, "We were entertained with typical Chinese hospitality, with food flown over from China, chopsticks and all."

Later Wilson had a hour-long session with Chou on trade with China. "He obviously understood English and made no attempt to hide it, laughing at humorous references without waiting for the interpretation and occasionally expressing agreement. But he spoke only Chinese. We found him an extremely impressive personality. . . . He was entirely friendly and warm in all his dealings with us. . . . He had a quick sense of humor and seemed to delight in answering our questions with no attempt at evasion."

American diplomats who remember Chou in Chungking remember him exactly that way (they used to call him "Joe"). But they also remember how he led the Americans up the garden path, and they shake their heads sadly for the British. The garden path the British are treading is disguised as a "Hundred Million Dollar" trade order. How would moneyless China pay for the goods it wanted? A transfer of credit from Russia might be arranged. Chou suavely hinted. And then there was Red China's "substantial invisible income" (i.e., money extracted and extorted from Chinese living abroad).

Dining with British Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden at the Hotel Beau-Rivage a few days later, Chou wore Western dress for the first time in Geneva: an impeccable navy-blue suit, navy-blue tie and white shirt. An interpreter hovered at his shoulder throughout the meal and a phalanx of guards was lined up in the hotel foyer. But Western diplomats accustomed to dealing with Communist leaders have come to ignore these emblems of fear. "Very impressive," said Eden afterward, adding, as though there might have been some misapprehension, "I told him what side we were on."

Chou En-lai's strategy in Geneva has gone far beyond Indochina and Korea. More important to him than the overpopulated paddies of the Red River is the need to obtain a place in the United Nations and to drive Nationalist China out. Already his men have been studying such U.N. outfits in Geneva as the International Labor Organization and the World Health Organization, and have made tentative contacts with Nationalist Chinese who occupy jobs in those offices. Geneva is a more convenient place for contacts than Peking or Shanghai, and people from all over the world have been coming to Chou's Geneva office seeking favors, business contacts, permits for travel and shipping arrangements. To cope with this traffic Chou is negotiating the purchase of several buildings in Geneva for the establishment of a large consulate and commercial center.

In playing for recognition of Red China as one of the world's four great powers, Chou is also playing for recognition of himself as a world leader. One sees this in the rigid protocol observed by the Communist delegations at the conferences. At the 5 p.m. break in the Korean plenary sessions Molotov went first to Chou's side, then to the side of Communist North Korea's foreign minister, Nam Il. The order of the speechmaking on Korea was 1) Nam Il, 2) Chou En-lai, 3) Molotov, giving the Russian the most prominent place as diplomatic clean-up man. But for the Indochina sessions the batting order was changed: 1) the Vietnam representative Pham Van Dong, 2) Molotov, 3) Chou En-lai. At the close of meetings Molotov has left first, then Chou, then Nam II or Pham Van Dong.

Chou is still second to Molotov, but his stature among the Communists has grown during the Geneva talks. In the conference hall he has sat impassively, a bulky figure with graying hair. Though he read his pronouncements imperturbably, on occasion he has been an energetic speaker, his broad, coarse face full of animation, his heavy eyebrows raised in scorn or humor, his short thick arms gesticulating. Thirty-four years ago Chou En-lai was a coal miner in France, a worker in Paris' Renault auto plant. He is still young enough (55) to outlive both Mao and Molotov—perchance even Malenkov (the Russian casualty rate being what it is)—to become the world's No. 1 Communist.

The obstacle in Chou's path is the United States. He knows that his charm and good humor no longer count with Americans. Thus he reserves for the U.S. his most vituperative rhetoric. The policy of the U.S. delegation not to recognize or fraternize in any way with the Red Chinese delegation hurt Chou's vanity. He seeks reprisal. Through Humphrey Trevelyan, Britain's chargé d'affaires in Peiping who is currently in Geneva, the U.S. made tentative overtures for the exchange of Chinese prisoners for U.S. civilians interned in Red China. Chou let the talks develop to a hopeful stage, then had his press spokesman snarl, "If the U.S. wants to go on with this they must come to us direct." U.S. Ambassador to Czechoslovakia, U. Alexis Johnson, a member of the Geneva delegation, is currently negotiating directly with the Chinese for the release of 54 U.S. civilians and 29 U.S. military personnel now held in China. Since General Marshall's disillusioning experience, most American diplomats know Chou En-lai for what he is—a ruthless intriguer, a conscienceless liar, a saber-toothed political assassin. But he is new to Europe. If Europe wants to be fascinated he will fascinate Europe.

Chou had been in town only a few days when Chinese messengers came bearing gifts to the leaders of the other delegations. The gifts were Chinese art portfolios, books covered in silk brocade, bound with ivory clasps and made up of the finest handmade paper. One such book I examined held some 150 exquisite Chinese prints. The principal subject: flowers.

One evening a few weeks ago, long after the delegations had left the conference hall, a newsreel photographer noticed a man standing in the inner courtyard. The newsreel man stepped up with his camera whirring. It was Chou, quietly walking in the garden. He posed.

To Montreux's famed spring festival, the Fête des Narcisses, a few weeks ago went 70 members of Chou's delegation. Delarking from their buses they walked among the fields of narcissuses like figures in a Chinese scroll. And two weeks ago a young Chinese woman stopped off at Le Breuil's Geneva shop and bought 300 potted plants, mostly geraniums, begonias and salvia, to add to the philodendrons, cocos plants, maranta, kentia, ficus, dracaena and rubber plants already stuffing Grand Montfleuri. A Chinese proverb says, "In a lovely garden hides the tiger."

HEADING FOR HUNTING GROUNDS at 7 a.m., party walks out on wide mud flats of Discovery Bay. Geoducks live farther out than ordinary clams and can be hunted only at unusually low tides.

REACHING FOR A GEODUCK. CLARENCE EASTON

Life Goes on

PARTY DIGS IN OOZE TO GET GIANT CLAMS

Most edible bivalves weigh but a few ounces, lie only a few inches beneath the sand and, once located, are easily captured. But laying hands on the geoduck, a giant clam which is found around Puget Sound involves a formidable excavation procedure. The geoduck, locally pronounced "goey duck," lives in muddy tidal flats, lies three feet under the surface and weighs up to 12 pounds. Despite difficulties, digging for geoducks is a prime sport for hardy hunters who do not mind being up to their armpits in ooze when there is chance of coming up with several pounds of sweet clam meat.

Recently a hunting party of veterans, clad in hip boots, and teen-age neophytes, including two princesses from a local rhododendron festival clad in saddle shoes, set out near Port Townsend, Wash. They located geoducks by spurts of water shot through a two-foot neck, which the clams retract when danger threatens. In two hours, staking open-ended cans around the path of the withdrawn neck, the party soon bucketed a dozen geoducks. Grimy and soaked to the skin, the novices were eager to try again. "Only next time," exclaimed a rhododendron princess, "I'm gonna wear hip boots."

a Hunt for Geoducks

GALLANT GEODUCKER Duke Martin carries Kay Sany piggyback across the cold, crab-infested tidal pools of Puget Sound which had to be traversed by party in order to find the best geoduckling.

EAGER NOVICE Betsy McCurdy, legs held above water by a friend, goes headfirst after a geoduck.

GOING DEEPER into the metal caisson which surrounds her prey, Betsy kneels in the cold water.

WET BUT TRIUMPHANT, huntress holds up a five-pound geoduck, its long neck partly retracted.

Now you can cook Fresh Vegetables without boiling away that garden-fresh flavor

Spry makes the difference!

Here's All You Do!

For beans — melt 2 tablespoons of Spry in heavy saucepan. Add 1½ lbs. of sliced beans, salt, pepper, ¼ cup water. Mix lightly together. Cover and cook over medium heat 18 minutes, or until tender.

For carrots — melt 2 tablespoons Spry, add 3 cups of sliced carrots, salt, 2 tablespoons water. Cook as above for 13 minutes.

When you cook your vegetables this way, there's no liquid left to drain off... so the vitamins and garden-fresh flavor are in the vegetables. They'll taste wonderful, or Lever Brothers will return your money.

Spry makes just about everything you cook taste better!

BUMP ON RUMP AT JUMP

A winner of some 80 riding trophies, Jean Knappin at age 12 is a British horsewoman of proven ability and poise. This month at the annual Chester show she mounted her pony, Patch VIII, and set out after new honors. Patch fairly flew over the first six hurdles. But on the seventh he faltered, tripped the striped four-foot bar with his front hoofs and sat down hard on the turf with Jean standing stiffly in the stirrups. He stayed in this ponylike position long enough for Photographer John Walker to snap the picture above and for Jean to kick off the stirrups and jump clear. Patch was disqualified, and had to sit out the rest of the competition, but Jean, unharmed and unruffled, took another pony named Cinders and went on to win the Juvenile Jumping title.
